2. To make their altars very low, (v. 26.) so that they might not go up by steps to them. That the higher the altar was, and the nearer heaven, the more acceptable the sacrifice was, was a foolish fancy of the heathen, who therefore chose high places; in opposition to which, and to show that it is the elevation of the heart, not of the sacrifice, that God looks at, they were here ordered to make their altars low: we may suppose that the altars they reared in the wilderness, and other occasional altars, were designed only for the sacrifice of one beast at a time: but the altar in Solomon's temple, which was to be made much longer and broader, that it might contain many sacrifices at one time, made ten cubits high, that the height might bear a decent proportion to the length and breadth; and to that it was requisite they should go up by steps, which yet, no doubt, were so contrived as to prevent the inconvenience here spoken of, the discovery of their nakedness thereon.

III. They are here assured of God's gracious acceptance of their devotions, wherever they were paid according to his will; (v. 24.) In all places where I record my name, or where my name is recorded, that is, where I am worshipped in sincerity, I will come unto thee, and I will bless thee. Afterward, God chose one particular place wherein to record his name; but that being taken away now under the gospel, when men are encouraged to pray everywhere, this promise revives in its full extent, that, wherever God's people meet in his name to worship him, he will be in the midst of them: he will honour them with his presence, and reward them with the gifts of his grace; there he will come unto them, and will bless them, and more than this we need not desire for the beautifying of our solemn assemblies.
CHAP. XXI.

The laws recorded in this chapter relate to the fifth and sixth commandments; and though they are not accommodated to our constitution, especially in point of servitude, nor are the penalties annexed binding on us, yet they are of great use for the explanation of the moral law, and the rules of natural justice. Here are several enlargements. I. Upon the fifth commandment, which concerns particular relations. 1. The duty of masters toward their servants; their men-servants, (v. 2. 6.) and maid-servants, v. 7. 11. 2. The punishment of disobedient children, that striking their parents, (v. 15.) curse them, v. 17. II. Upon the sixth commandment, which forbids all violence offered to the person of a man. Here is, 1. Concerning murder, v. 12., 14. Man-stoning, v. 16. 3. Assault and battery, v. 18., 19. 4. Correcting a servant, v. 20., 21. 5. Hurting a woman with child, v. 22., 23. 6. The law of retaliation, v. 24., 25. 7. Maiming a servant, v. 26., 27. 8. An ox going, v. 25., 26. 9. Damage by opening a pit, v. 28., 34. 10. Cattle fighting, v. 35., 36.

NOW these are the judgments which thou shalt set before them. 2. If thou buy a Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve; and in the seventh he shall go out free for nothing, 3. If he came in by himself, he shall go out by himself: if he were married, then his wife shall go out with him. 4. If his master have given him a wife, and she have borne him sons or daughters; the wife and her children shall be her master's, and he shall go out by himself. 5. And if the servant shall plainly say, I love my master, my wife, and my children; I will not go out free: 6. Then his master shall bring him unto the judges; he shall also bring him to the door, or unto the door-post; and his master shall bore his ear through with an awl; and he shall serve him for ever. 7. And if a man sell his daughter to be a maid-servant, she shall not go out as the men-servants do. 8. If she please not her master, who hath betrothed her to himself, then shall he let her be redeemed: to sell her unto a strange nation he shall have no power, seeing he hath dealt deceitfully with her. 9. And if he hath betrothed her unto his son, he shall deal with her after the manner of daughters. 10. If he take another wife, her food, her raiment, and her duty of marriage, shall he not diminish. 11. And if he do not these unto her, then shall she go out free without money.

The first verse is the general title of the laws contained in this and the two following chapters; some of them relating to the religious worship of God, but most of them relating to matters between men, and among men, and the relations between the two. Of the latter, the Hebrews, by the Theocracy, that which in other states is to be settled by human prudence was directed among them by a divine appointment, so that the constitution of their government was peculiarly adapted to make them happy. These laws are called judgments, because they are framed in infinite wisdom and equity, and because their magistrates were to give judgment according to them. God delivered them privately to Moses, and he was to communicate them to the people. In the doubtful cases that had hitherto occurred, Moses had particularly inquired of God for them, as appeared, ch. 18. 15., but now God gave him statutes in general by which to determine particular cases, which likewise he must apply to other like cases that might happen, which, falling under the same reason, fell under the same rule.

He begins with the laws concerning servants, commanding mercy and moderation toward them. The Israelites had lately been servants themselves; and now that they were become, not only their own masters, but masters of servants too, lest they should abuse their servants, as they themselves had been abused, with rigour by the Egyptian task-masters, provision was made against these things for the mild and gentle usage of servants. Note, If those who have had power over us, have been injurious to us, that will not in the least excuse us if we be in like manner injurious to those who are under our power, but will rather aggravate our crime, because, in that case, we may the more easily put our souls into their souls' stead.

Here is, 1. A law concerning men-servants, sold, either by themselves, or their parents, through poverty, or by the judges, for their crimes; even those of the latter sort (if Hebrews) were to continue in slavery but seven years at the most, in which time it was taken for granted that they would sufficiently smart for their folly or offence. At seven years' end, the servant should either go out free, (v. 2., 3.) or his servitude should be extended from himself to his children, v. 5., 6. If he had a wife given him by his master, and children, he might either leave them and go out free himself, or, if he had such a kindness for them, that he would rather marry with them in bondage than go out at liberty with them, he was to have his ear bored through to the door-post, and serve till the death of his master, or the year of jubilee. By this law, God taught, (1.) The Hebrew servants' generosily, and a noble love of liberty, for they were the Lord's freemen; a mark of disgrace must be put upon him who refused liberty when he might have it, though he refused it upon considerations otherwise laudable enough. Thus Christians, being bought with a price, and called unto liberty, must not be the servants of men, nor of the lusts of men, 1 Cor. 7. 23. There is a free and princely spirit that much helps to uphold a Christian, Ps. 81. 2. And this law was made to show masters not to trample upon their poor servants, knowing, not only that they had been by birth upon a level with them, but that, in a few years, they would be so again. Thus Christian masters must look with respect on believing servants, Phil. 16. This law will be further useful to us, [1.] To illustrate the right God has to the children of believing parents, as such, and the place they have in his Church. He is by the law here put among his servants, because they are born in his house, for they are therefore born unto him, Ezek. 16. 20. David owns himself God's servant, as he was the son of his hand-maid, (Ps. 116. 16.) and therefore entitled to protection, Ps. 86. 16. [2.] To explain the obligation which the great Redeemer laid upon himself to prosecute the work of our salvation, for he says, (Heb. 4. 15.) He is the merciful and faithful high priest toward his servants, which seems to allude to this law. He loved his Father, and his captive-house, and the children that were given him, and would not go out free from his undertaking, but engaged to serve in it for ever, Isa. 42. 1, 4. Much more need we thus to engage ourselves to serve God for ever; we have all the reason in the world to love our Master and his work, and to have our ears bored by his post, or posts, as those who desire not to go out free from.
his service, but to be found more and more free to it, and in it, Ps. 84. 10.

2. Concerning maid-servants, whom their parents, through extreme poverty, had sold when they were very young, to such as they hoped would marry them when they grew up; if they did not, yet they must not sell them to strangers, but rather study how to make them amends for their disappoint- ment; if they did, they must maintain them handsomely, v. 7. 11. Thus did God provide for the comfort and reputation of the daughters of Israel, and has taught husbands to give honour to their wives, (be their extraction ever so mean,) as to the weaker vessels, 1 Pet. 3. 7.

12. He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall be surely put to death. 13. And if a man lie not in wait, but God deliver him into his hand; then I will appoint thee a place whither he shall flee. 14. But if a man come presumptuously upon his neighbour, to slay him with guile; thou shalt take him from mine altar, that he may die. 15. And he that smiteth his father, or his mother, shall surely be put to death. 16. And he that stealth a man, and selleth him, or if he be found in his hand, he shall surely be put to death. 17. And he that curseth his father, or his mother, shall surely be put to death. 18. And if men strive together, and one smite another with a stone, or with his fist, and he die not, but keepest his bed; 19. If he rise again, and walk abroad upon his staff, then shall he that smote him be quit: only he shall pay for the loss of his time, and shall cause him to be thoroughly healed. 20. And if a man smite his servant, or his maid, with a rod, and he die under his hand; he shall be surely punished. 21. Notwithstanding, if he continue a day or two, he shall not be punished: for he is his money.

Here is, 1. A law concerning murder; he had lately said, Thou shalt not kill; here he provides, (1.) For the case of the wilful murderer; (v. 12.) He that smiteth a man, whether upon a sudden passion, or in malice prepense, so that he die, the government must take care that the murderer be put to death, according to that ancient law, (Gen. 9. 6.) Whoso shed another man’s blood, by man shall his blood be shed. God, who, by his providence, gives and maintains life, thus, by his law, protects it: so that mercy showed to a wilful murderer is real cruelty to all mankind besides: such a one, God here says, shall be taken even from his altar, (v. 14.) to which he might flee for protection; and if God will not hear him, the same God, who makes the heaven to fall upon him, and make the earth to swallow him up. (3.) For the relief of such as were killed by accident, fier infortunium—by misfortune, as our law expresses it, or chance-medley, when a man, in doing a lawful act, without intent of hurt to any, happens to kill another, or, as it is here described, God delivers him into his hand; for nothing comes to pass by chance; what seems to us purely casual, is ordered by the Divine Providence, far wise and holy ends, secret to us. In this case, God provided cities of refuge for the protection of those whose inofficiency it was, but not their fault, to occasion the death of another, v. 13. With us, who know no avengers of blood but the magistrates, the law itself is a sufficient sanctuary for those whose minds are innocent, though their hands are guilty, and there needs no other.

2. Concerning rebellious children; it is here made a capital crime, to be punished with death, for children, either, (1.) To strike their parents, (v. 15.) so as either to draw blood, or to make the place struck, black and blue. Or, (2.) To curse their parents, (v. 17.) if they profaned any name of God in doing it, as the rabbins say. Note, The unprofitable behaviour of children toward their parents is a very great provocation to God our common Father; and if men do not punish it, he will. Those are perfectly lost to all virtue, and abandoned to all wickedness, that have broken through the bonds of filial reverence and duty to such a degree as in word or action to abuse their own parents. What yoke will they bear, that have shaken off this? Let children take heed of ente tainting in their minds any such thought or passions toward their parents as savour of unfaithfulness and contempt; for the righteous God searches the heart.

3. Here is a law against man-stealing; (v. 16.) He that steals a man, woman, or child, with a design to sell them to the Gentiles, (for no Israelites would buy them,) was adjudged to death by this statute; which is ratified by the apostle, (1 Tim. 1. 10.) where men-stealers are reckoned among those wicked ones against whom laws must be made by Christian princes.

4. Care is here taken, that satisfaction be made for hurt done to a person, though death do not ensue, v. 18, 19. He that did the hurt must be accountable for damages, and pay, not only for the cure, but for the loss of time: to which the Jews add, that he must likewise give some recompence, both for the pain and for the blemish, if there were any.

5. Direction is given what should be done, if a servant died by his master’s correction. This servant must not be an Israelite, but a Gentile slave, as the negroes to our planters; and it is supposed that he smite him with a rod, and not with any thing that was likely to give a mortal wound; yet, if he died under his hand, he should be punished for his cruelty, at the discretion of the judges, upon consideration of circumstances, v. 20. But if he continued a day or two after the consent given, the master was supposed to suffer enough by losing his servant, v. 21. Our law makes the death of a servant, by his master’s reasonable beating of him, but chance-medley. Yet let all masters take heed of tyrannizing over their servants; the gospel teaches them even to forbear, and moderate threatenings, (Eph. 6. 9.) considering, with holy Job, What shall I do, when God riseth up? Job 31. 13. 15.

22. If men strive, and hurt a woman with child, so that her fruit depart from her; and yet no mischief follow; he shall be surely punished, according as the woman’s husband will lay upon him; and he shall pay as the judges determine. 23. And if any mischief follow, then thou shalt give life for life, 24. Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot, 25. Burning for burning, wound for wound, stripe for stripe. 26. And if a man smite the eye of his servant, or the eye of his maid, that it perish; he shall let him g.
free for his eye's sake. 27. And if he smite out his man-servant's tooth, or his maidservant's tooth; he shall let him go free for his tooth's sake. 28. If an ox gore a man or a woman, that they die; then the ox shall be surely stoned, and his flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be quite: 29. But if the ox were wont to push with his horn in time past, and it hath been testified to his owner, and he hath not kept him in, but that he hath killed a man or a woman; the ox shall be stoned, and his owner also shall be put to death. 30. If there be laid on him a sum of money, then he shall give, for the ransom of his life, whatsoever is laid upon him. 31. Whether he have gored a son, or have gored a daughter, according to this judgment shall it be done unto him. 32. If the ox shall push a man-servant, or maid-servant; he shall give unto his master thirty shekels of silver, and the ox shall be stoned. 33. And if a man shall open a pit, or if a man shall dig a pit, and not cover it, and an ox or an ass fall therein; 34. The owner of the pit shall make it good, and give money unto the owner of them; and the dead beast shall be his. 35. And if one man's ox hurt another's, that he die, then they shall sell the live ox, and divide the money of it; and the dead ox also they shall divide. 36. Or if it be known that the ox hath used to push in time past, and his owner hath not kept him in; he shall surely pay ox for ox; and the dead shall be his own.

Observe here,
I. The particular case which the law took of women with child, that no hurt should be done them, which might occasion their miscarrying. The law of nature obliges us to be very tender in that case, lest the tree and fruit be destroyed together, v. 22, 23. Women with child, who were thus taken under the special protection of the law of God, if they live in his fear, may still believe themselves under the special protection of the providence of God, and hope that they shall be saved in child-bearing. On this occasion comes in that general law of retaliation, which our Saviour refers to, Matth. 5. 38, An eye for an eye. Now, 1. The execution of this law is not hereby put into the hands of private persons, as if every man might avenge himself; which would introduce universal confusion, and make men like the fishes of the sea. The tradition of the elders seems to have put this corrupt glass upon it; in opposition to which, our Saviour commands us to forgive injuries, and not to meditate revenge, Matth. 5. 39. 2. God often executes it in the course of his providence, making the punishment, in many cases, to answer to the sin, as Judg. 1. 7. Isa. 33. 1. Hab. 2. 13. Matth. 26. 52. 3. Magistrates ought to have an eye to this rule, in punishing offenders, and doing right to those that are injured. Correction must be had of the nature, quality, and degree, of the wrong done, that reparation may be made to the party injured, and others deferred from doing the like; either an eye shall go for an eye, or the forfeited eye shall be redeemed by a sum of money. Note, He that does wrong must expect, one way or other, to receive according to the wrong he has done, Col. 3. 25. God sometimes brings with his visible dealings upon their own heads; (Ps. 7. 16.) and magistrates are in this the ministers of his justice, that they are avengers, (Rom. 13. 4.) and they shall not bear the sword in vain.

II. The care God took of servants; if their masters maimed them, though it was only striking out a tooth, that should be their discharge, v. 26, 27. This was intended, 1. To prevent their being abused by masters, though they could not be hurt, which would bring them more injury than his masters that they should have their service. 2. To comfort them, if they were abused; the loss of a limb should be the gaining of their liberty, which would do something toward balancing both the pain and disgrace they underwent. Nay, III. Does God take care for oxen? Yes, it appears, by the following laws in this chapter, that he does, for our sakes, 1 Cor. 9. 9, 10. The Israelites are here directed what to do.

1. In case of hurt done by oxen, or any other brute-creature; for the law, doubtless, was designed to extend to all parallel cases. (1.) As an instance of God's care of the life of man, (though forfeited a thousand times into the hands of divine justice,) and in token of his detestation of the sin of murder; if an ox killed any man, woman, or child, the ox was to be stoned, v. 26. And because the greatest honour of the master created in a servant was reducible to man, the criminal is denied that honour, his flesh shall not be eaten. Thus God would keep up in the minds of his people, a rooted abhorrence of the sin of murder, and every thing that was barbarous. (2.) To make men careful that none of their cattle might do hurt, but that, by all means possible, mischief might be prevented; if the owner of the beast knew the same to be mischievous, he must answer for the hurt done, and according to the circumstances of the case proved him to be more or less accessory, he must either be put to death, or ransom his life with a sum of money, v. 29, 30. Some of our ancient books make this felony, by the common-law of England, and give this reason, "The owner, by suffering his beast to go at liberty, when he knew it to be mischievous, shows that he was very willing to hurt himself, the innocent. It is not enough for us not to do mischief ourselves, but we must take care that no mischief be done by those whom it is in our power to restrain, whether man or beast.

2. In case of hurt done to oxen, or other cattle If they fall into a pit, and perish there, he that opened the pit must make good the loss, v. 33, 34. Note, we must take heed, not only of doing that which will be hurtful to others, but also of that which may be so. It is not enough not to design and devise mischief, but we must contrive to prevent mischief; else we become accessory to our neighbours' damage; mischief done in malice is the great transgression; but mischief done through negligence, and for want of due care and consideration, is not without fault, but ought to be reflected upon with regret, according as the degree of the mischief is: especially, we must be careful that we do not consent to make ourselves accessory to the sins of others, by laying an occasional of offence in our brother's way, Rom. 14. 13.

If cattle fight, and one kill another, the owners shall equally share in the loss, v. 33. Only, if the beast that had done the harm was known to the owner to have been mischievous, he shall answer for the damage, because he ought either to have killed him, or kept him up, v. 36. The determinations of these cases carry with them the evidence of their own equity, and give such rules of justice as were then, and are still, in use, for the deciding of similar controversies that arise between man and man. But I conjecture that these cases might be specified, rather than others, (though some of them seem minute,) because they were then cases in fact actually depending before Moses; for, in the wilderness, where they lay closely encamped, and had their flocks and herds among them, such mischiefs as these last mentioned were likely enough to occur. Th' which we are taught by these laws, is, that we be very careful to do no wrong, either directly or indirectly; but that, if we have done wrong, we must be very willing to make satisfaction, and desire no man may lose by us.

CHAP. XXII.

The laws of this chapter relate, 1. To the eighth commandment, concerning theft; (v. 1 - 4.) Trespass by cattle; (v. 5.) Damage by fire; (v. 6.) Trusts (v. 7 - 13.) Borrowing cattle, (v. 14, 15.) or money, v. 25 - 27. II. To the seventh commandment. Against fornication; (v. 16, 17.) Bestiality, v. 19. III. To the first table, forbidding witchcraft, (v. 15.) Idolatry, v. 20. Commanding to offer the first fruits, v. 29, 30. IV. To the poor, v. 21 - 24. V. To the civil government, v. 28. VI. To the peculiarly of the Jewish nation, v. 31.

1. If a man steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep. 2. If a thief be found breaking up, and be smitten that he die, there shall no blood be shed for him. 3. If the sun be risen upon him, there shall be blood shed for him; for he should make full restitution: if he have nothing, then he shall be sold for his theft. 4. If the thief be certainly found in his hand alive, whether it be ox, or ass, or sheep, he shall restore double. 5. If a man shall cause a field or vineyard to be eaten, and shall put in his beast, and shall feed in another man's field; of the best of his own field, and of the best of his own vineyard, shall he make restitution. 6. If fire break out, and catch in thorns, so that the stacks of corn, or the standing corn, or the field, be consumed therewith; he that kindled the fire shall surely make restitution.

Here are the laws,

1. Concerning theft, which are these; (1.) If a man steal any cattle, (in which the wealth of these times chiefly consisted) and they be found in his custody, he must restore double, v. 4. Thus he must both satisfy for the wrong, and suffer for the crime. But it was afterward provided, that, if the thief were touched in conscience, and voluntarily confessed it, before it was discovered or inquired into by any other, then he should only make restitution of what he had stolen, and add to it a fifth part, Lev. 6. 4, 5. (2.) If he had sold or sold gone, but then, and thereby persisted in his crime, he must restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep; (v. 1.) more for an ox than for a sheep, because the owner, beside all the other profit, lost the daily labour of his ox. This law teaches us, that fraud and injustice, so far from enriching men, will impoverish them; if we unjustly get and keep that which is another's, it will not only waste itself, but it will consume that which is our own. (3.) If he was not able to make restitution, he must be sold for a slave, v. 3. The court of judgment was to do it, and it is probable that the person robbed had the money. Thus with us, in some cases, felons are transported into plantations where alone Englishmen know what slavery is. (4.) If a thief broke a house in the night, and was killed in the doing of it, his blood was upon his own head, and should not be required at the hand of him that shed it, v. 2. As he that does an unlawful act bears the blame of the mischief that follows to others, so likewise of that which follows to himself. A man's house is his castle, and God's law, as well as man's, sets a guard upon it; he that assaults it does it at his peril. Yet if it were in the day-time that the thief was killed, he that killed him must be accountable for it, (v. 3.) unless it were in the necessary defence of his own life. Note, We ought to be tender of the lives even of bad men; the magistrate must right us, and we must not avenge ourselves.

2. Concerning trespass, v. 5. He that wilfully puts his cattle into his neighbour's field, must make restitution of the best of his own. Our law makes a much greater difference between this and other thefts, than the law of Moses did. The Jews hence observed it as a general rule, that restitution must always be made of the best, and that no man should keep any cattle that were likely to trespass upon his neighbours, or do them any damage. We should be more careful not to do wrong, than not to suffer wrong, because to suffer wrong is only an afflication, but to do wrong is a sin, and sin is always worse than affliction.

3. Concerning damage done by fire, v. 6. He that designed only the burning of thorns, might become accessory to the burning of corn, and should not be held guiltless. Men of hot and eager spirits should take heed, lest, while they pretend only to pluck up the tares, they root out the wheat also. If the fire did mischief, he that kindled it made answer for it, though it could not be proved that he designed the mischief. Men must suffer for their carelessness, as well as for their malice. We must take heed of beginning strife; for though it seem but little, we know not how great a matter it may kindle, which we must bear the blame of; if, with the madman, we cast fire-brands, arrows, and death, and pretend we mean no harm. It will make us very careless, to imagine that we are accountable, not only for the hurt we do, but for the hurt we occasion, through inadvertency.

4. If a man shall deliver unto his neighbour money or stuff to keep, and it be stolen out of the man's house; if the thief be found, let him pay double. 3. If the thief be not found, then the master of the house shall be brought unto the judges, to see whether he have put his hand unto his neighbour's goods. 9. For all manner of trespass, whether it be for ox, for ass, for sheep, for raiment, or for any manner of lost thing, which another challengeth to be his, the cause of both parties shall come before the judges; and whom the judges shall condemn, he shall pay double unto his neighbour.

10. If a man deliver unto his neighbour an ass, or an ox, or a sheep, or any beast, to keep; and it die, or he be hurt, or driven away, no man seeing it: 11. Then shall an oath of the Lord be between them both, that he hath not put his hand unto his neighpunished; and the owner of it shall accept thereof, and he shall not make it good.

If it be torn in pieces, then let him bring it for witness, and he shall not make good that which was torn.

And if a man borrow aught of his neighbour, and it be hurt or die, the owner thereof being not with it; he shall surely make it good. But if the owner thereof be with it, he shall not make it good: if it be a hired thing, it came for his hire.

These laws are,

1. Concerning trusts, v. 7-13. If a man deliver goods, suppose to a carrier, to be conveyed, or to a warehouse-keeper, to be preserved, or cattle to a farmer, to be fed, upon a valuable consideration; and if a special confidence be repose in the person they are lodged with; in case these goods be stolen or lost, perish or be damaged, if it appear that it was not by the fault of the owner must stand to the loss; otherwise, he that has been false to his trust must be compelled to make satisfaction. The trustee must aver his innocence upon oath before the judges, if the case was such as afforded no other proof, and they were to determine the matter according as it appeared. This teaches us, (1.) That we ought to be very careful of every thing we are intrusted with; as careful of it, though it be another's, as if it were our own. It is unjust and base, and that which all the world cries shame on, to betray a trust. (2.) That there is such a general failing of truth and justice upon earth, as gives too much occasion to suspect men's honesty, whenever it is their interest to be dishonest.

2. That an oath for confirmation is an end of strife, Heb. 6. 16. It is called an oath for the Lord, (v. 11.) because to Him the appeal is made, not only as to a Witness of truth, but as to an Avenger of wrong and falsehood. Those that had offered injury to their neighbour by doing any unjust thing, yet, it might be hoped, had not so far debauched their consciences as to profane an oath of the Lord, and call the God of truth to be Witness to a lie: perjury is a sin which natural conscience startles at as much as any other. The religion of an oath is very ancient, and a plain indication of the universal belief of a God, and a providence, and a judgment to come. (4.) That magistracy is an ordinance of God, designed, among other intentions, to assist men both in discovering rights disputed, and recovering rights denied; and great respect ought to be paid to the determination of the judges.

3. That there is no reason why a man should suffer for that which he could not help; masters should consider this in dealing with their servants, and not resolve that at a fault which was a parricide, and which they themselves, had they been in their servants' places, could not have prevented.

2. Concerning loans, v. 14, 15. If a man (suppose) lent his team to his neighbour, if the owner was with it, or was to receive profit for the loan of it, whatever harm befell the cattle, the owner must stand to the loss of: but if the owner were so kind to the hired man, as it is hinted, an it had confidence in him, as to trust it from under his own eye, then, if any harm happened, the borrower must make it good. Let us learn hence to be very careful not to abuse any thing that is lent us; it is not only unjust, but base and disingenuous, inasmuch as it is rendering evil for good; we should much rather choose to lose ourselves, than that any should sustain loss by their kindness to us;

Alan! master, for it was borrowed, 2 Kings 6. 5.

16. And if a man entice a maid that is not betrothed, and lie with her, she shall surely en dow her to be his wife. 17. If her father utterly refuse to give her unto him, he shall pay money according to the dowry of virgins. 18. Thou shalt not suffer a witch to live. 19. Whoseover lieth with a beast shall surely be put to death. 20. He that sacrificeth unto any god, save unto the Lord only, he shall be utterly destroyed. 21. Thou shalt neither vex a stranger, nor oppress him: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt. 22. Ye shall not afflict any widow, or fatherless child. 23. If thou afflict them in any wise, and they cry at all unto me, I will surely hear their cry; 24. And my wrath shall wax hot, and I will kill you with the sword; and your wives shall be widows, and your children fatherless.

Here is,

1. A law, that he who debauched a young woman should be obliged to marry her, v. 16, 17. If she was betrothed to another, it was death to debauch her, (Deut. 22. 23, 24.) but the law here mentioned respects her as single. But if the father refused her to him, he was to give satisfaction in money for the injury and disgrace he had done her. This law puts an honour upon marriage, and shows likewise is it an imprisonment that it is, that cheating a man out of marriage without their parents' consent; even here, where the divine law appointed the marriage, both as a punishment to him that had done wrong, and a recompense to her that had suffered wrong, yet there was an express reservation for the father's power; if he denied his consent, it must be no marriage.

2. A law which makes witchcraft a capital crime, v. 18. Witchcraft not only gives that honour to the Devil which is due to God alone, but bids defiance to the Divine Providence, wages war with God's government, and puts his work into the Devil's hand, expecting him to do good and evil, and so making him, indeed, the God of this world; justly, therefore, was it punished with death, especially among a people that were blessed with a divine revelation, and cared for by Divine Providence above any people under the sun. By our law, consulting, covenanting with, employing, or employing, any evil spirit, to any intent whatsoever, and exercising any enchantment, charm, or sorcery, whereby hurt shall be done to any person whatsoever, is made felony, without benefit of clergy: also pretending to tell where goods lost or stolen may be found, or the like, is an iniquity punishable by the judge, and the second offence with death. The justice of our law herein, is supported by the law of God here.

3. Unnatural abominations are here made capital; such beasts in the shape of men as are guilty of them are unfit to live; v. 18. Whosoever lieth with a beast shall die.

4. Idolatry is also made capital, v. 20. God having declared himself jealous in this matter, the civil powers must be jealous in it too, and utterly destroy those persons, families, and places of Israel, that worshipped any god, save unto the Lord: this law might have prevented the woe of apostasies of the Jewish nation, in aftertimes, if these things should have executed it had not been ringleaders in the breach of it.
5. A caution against oppression; because those who were empowered to punish other crimes were themselves most in danger of this, God takes the punishment of it into his own hands.

(1.) Strangers must not be abused, (v. 21.) not wronged in judgment by the magistrates, nor imposed upon in contracts, nor must any advantage be taken of their ignorance or necessity; no, nor must they be taunted, trampled upon, treated with contumely, or upbraided with being strangers; for all these were vexatious, and would discourage strangers from coming to live among them, or would strengthen their prejudices against their religion, to which, by all kind and gentle methods, they should endeavour to proselyte them. The reason given why they should be kind to strangers, is, “Ye were strangers in Egypt, and knew what it was to be vexed and oppressed there.” Note, [1.] Humanity is one of the laws of religion, and obliges us particularly to be tender of those who lie most under disadvantages and discouragements, and to extend our compassionate concern to strangers, and those to whom we are not under the obligations of alliance or acquaintance. Those that are strangers to us are known to God, and he preserves them, Ps. 146. 9. [2.] True religion should study to oblige strangers, that they may thereby recommend religion to their good opinion, and take heed of doing any thing that may tempt them to think ill of it, or its professors, 1 Pet. 2. 12. [3.] Those that have themselves been in poverty and distress, if Providence enrich and enlarge them, ought to show a particular tenderness toward those that are now in such circumstances as they were in formerly, doing by them as they then wished to be done by.

(2.) Widows and fatherless must not be abused; (v. 22.) “Ye shall not afflict them,” that is, “Ye shall comfort and assist them, and be ready upon all occasions to show them kindness.” In making just demands from them, their condition must be considered, who have lost those that should deal for them, and protect them; they are supposed to be unversed in business, destitute of advice, timorous, and of a tender spirit, and therefore must be treated with kindness and compassion; no advantage must be taken against them, nor any hardship put upon them, which a husband or a father would have sheltered them from. For, [1.] God takes particular cognizance of their case, v. 23. Having no one else to complain and appeal to, they will cry unto God, and he will be sure to hear them; for his law and his providence are guards to the widows and fatherless, and if men do not pity them, and will not hear them, he will. Note, It is a great comfort for those who are injured and oppressed by men, that they have a God to go to, who will do more than give them the hearing; and it ought to be a terror to those who are oppressive, that they have the cry of the poor against them, which God will hear. [2.] He will severely reckon with those that do oppress them, though they escape punishment from men, God’s righteous judgments will pursue and overtake them, v. 24. Men that have a sense of justice and honour will eschew the injured case of the weak and helpless; and shall not the righteous God do it? Observe the equity of the sentence here passed upon those that oppress the widows and fatherless; their wives shall become widows, and their children fatherless; and the Lord is known by these judgments, which he sometimes executes still.

25. If thou lend money to any of my people that is poor by thee, thou shalt not be to him as a usurer, neither shalt thou lay upon him usury.

26. If thou at all take thy neighbour’s raiment to pledge, thou shalt deliver it unto him by that the sun goeth down:

27. For that is his covering only; it is his raiment for his skin: wherein shall he sleep? and it shall come to pass, when he crieth unto me, that I will hear: for I am gracious.

28. Thou shalt not revile the gods, nor curse the ruler of thy people.

29. Thou shalt not delay to offer the first of thy ripe fruits, and of thy liquors: the first-born of thy sons shalt thou give unto me.

30. Likewise shalt thou do with thine oxen, and with thy sheep, seven days it shall be with his dam; on the eighth day thou shalt give it me.

31. And ye shall be holy men unto me: neither shall ye eat any flesh that is torn of beasts in the field; ye shall cast it to the dogs.

Here is,

1. A law against extortion, in lending. (1.) They must not receive usury for money from any that borrowed for necessity, (v. 25.) as in that case, Neh. 5. 5, 7. And such provision the law made for the preserving of estates to their families by the year of jubilee, that a people who had little concern in trade could not be supposed to borrow money, but for necessity, and therefore it is generally forbidden among themselves; but to a stranger they were allowed to lend upon usury, whom yet they might not oppress: this law, therefore, in the strictness of it, seems to have been peculiar to the Jewish state; but, in the equity of it, it obliges us to show mercy to those of whom we might take, and to be content to share with those we lend to, in less, as well as profit, if Providence cross them; and, upon this condition, it seems as lawful to receive interest for my money, which another takes pains with, improves, and run the hazard of, in husbandry. (2.) They must not take a poor man’s bed-clothes in pawn; but, if they did, must restore them by bed-time, v. 26, 27. Those who lie soft and warm themselves, should consider the hard and cold lodging of many poor people, and not do any thing to make bad worse, or to add affliction to the afflicted.

2. A law against the contempt of authority; (v. 28.) Thou shalt not revile the gods, that is, the judges and magistrates, for their executing of these laws; they must do their duty, whoever suffer by it; magistrates ought not to fear the reproach of men, or their revilings, but to despise them so long as they keep a good conscience; but they that do revile them for their being a terror to evil works and workers, reflect upon God himself, and will have a great deal to answer for, another day. We find those under a black character, and a heavy doom, that despise dominion and speak evil of dignities, Jude 8. Princes and magistrates are our fathers, whom the fifth commandment obliges us to honour, and fords us to revile. St. Paul applies this law to himself, and owns that he ought not to speak evil of the ruler of his people; nor, though not the ruler was then himself, but an unrighteous persecutor, Acts 23. 3. See Exco. 10. 20.

3. A law concerning the offering of the first-fruits to God, v. 29, 30. It was appointed before, (ch. 13.) and it is here repeated; The first-born of thy sons shalt thou give unto me; and much more reason have we to give ourselves, and all we have, to God, who spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all. The first ripe of their corn they must not delay to offer; there is danger, if we delay our duty, lest we wholly omit it: and, by slipping the first opportunity, in expectation of another, we suffer Satan to cheat us of all our time. Let not young people delay to offer to God the first fruits of their time and strength, lest their delays come, at last, to be densities, through the deceitfulness of sin, and the more convenient season they promise themselves, never arrive. Yet it is provided, that the firstfruits of their cattle should not be dedicated to God, until they were past seven days old: for then they began to be good for something. Note, God is the first and best, and therefore must have the first and best.

4. A distinction put between the Jews and all other people; Ye shall be holy men unto me; and one mark of that honourable distinction is appointed in their diet, which was, that they should not eat any flesh that was torn of beasts, (v. 31.) not only, because it was unwholesome, but because it was partly, and base, and covetous, and a thing below those who were holy men unto God, to eat the leavings of the beasts of prey. We that are sanctified to God, must not be curious in our diet; but we must be conscientious, not feeding ourselves without fear, but eating and drinking by rule, the soberity, to the glory of God.

CHAP. XXIII.

This chapter continues and concludes the acts that passed in the first session (if I may so call it) upon mount Sinai. Here are, I. Some laws of universal obligation, relating especially to the ninth commandment, among which are numbered false witness, (v. 1.) and giving false judgment, v. 2. 3. 6. 8. Also a law of doing good to our enemies, (v. 4.) and not oppressing strangers, v. 9. II. Some laws peculiar to the Jews. The sabbatical year, (v. 10. 11.) the three annual feasts, (v. 14. 15.) with some laws pertaining thereto. III. Gracious promises of the completing of the mercy God had begun for them, upon condition of their obedience. That God would conduct them through the wilderness, (v. 20. 24.) That he would prosper all they had, (v. 25. 26.) That he would put them in possession of Canaan, v. 27. 31. But they must not mingle themselves with the nations, v. 32. 33.

1. Thou shalt not raise a false report: put not thine hand with the wicked to be an unrighteous witness. 2. Thou shalt not follow a multitude to do evil: neither shalt thou speak in a cause to decline after many to wrest judgment: 3. Neither shalt thou countenance a poor man in his cause. 4. If thou meet thine enemy's ox or his ass going astray, thou shalt surely bring it back to him again. 5. If thou see the ass of him that hateth thee lying under his burden, and wouldst forbear to help him; the shalt surely help with him. 6. Thou shalt not rest the judgment of thy poor in his cause. 7. Keep thee far from a false matter; and the innocent and righteous slay thou not: for I will not justify the wicked. 8. And thou shalt take no gift; for the gift blindest the wise, and perverteth the words of the righteous. 9. Also thou shalt oppress a stranger; for ye know the heart of a stranger, seeing ye were strangers in the land of Egypt.

Here are, I. Cautions concerning judicial proceedings; it was not enough that they had good laws, better than ever any nation had, but care must be taken for the due administration of justice according to those laws. 1. The witnesses are here cautioned, that they neither occasion an innocent man to be indicted, nor judging raising a false report of him, and setting common fame against him, nor assist in the prosecution of an innocent man, or one whom they do not know to be guilty, by putting their hand in swearing, as witnesses against him, v. 1. Bearing false witness against a man, in a matter that touches his life, has in it all the guilt of lying, perjury, malice, theft, murder, with the additional stains of colouring all with a prior determination of justice, since many others in the same guilt. There is scarcely any one act of wickedness that a man can possibly be guilty of, which has in it a greater complication of villainies than this has. Yet the former part of this caution is to be extended to common conversation, and not only to judicial proceedings; so that slandering and backbiting are a species of false-witness bearing falsely; a man's reputation lies as much at the mercy of every company, as his estate or life does at the mercy of a judge or jury; so that he who raises, or knowingly spreads, a false report against his neighbour, especially if the report be made to wise and good men, whose esteem one would desire to enjoy, is as much against the laws of truth, justice, and charity, as a false witness does—with this further mischief, that he leaves it not in the power of the man he wrongs, but may injure others. That which we translate, Thou shalt not raise, the margin reads, Thou shalt not receive, a false report; for sometimes the receiver, in this case, is as bad as the thief; and a backbiting tongue would not do so much mischief as it does, if it were not countenanced. Sometimes we cannot avoid hearing a false report, but we must not receive it, that is, we must not hear it with pleasure and delight, £s those that rejoice iniquity; nor give credit to it, as if there remains any cause to question the truth of it. This is charity to our neighbour's good name, and doing as we would be done by. 2. The judges are here cautioned not to pervert judgment. (1.) They must not be over-ruled, either by might or multitude, to go against their consciences in giving judgment, v. 2. With the Jews, causes were tried first by a bea judge, and then by a popular judge, given according to the majority of votes; in which case, every particular justice must go according to truth, as it appeared to him upon the strictest and most impartial inquiry, though the multitude of the people, and their outcries, or the sentence of the Rabbim, (we translate it many,) the more ancient and honourable of the justices, went the other way. Therefore (with as much reason) the Jews, the junior upon the bench voted first, that he might not be swayed or over-ruled by the authority of the seniors. Judges must not respect the persons either of the parties, or of their fellow-judges. The former part of this verse also gives a general rule for all, as well as judges, not to follow a multitude to do evil. General usage will never excuse us in a bad practice; nor is the broad way ever the better or safer, for its being crowded and crowded. We must inquire what we ought to do, not what the majority do; because we must be judged by our Master, not by our fellow-servants; and it is too great a compliment, to be willing to go to hell for company. (2.) They must not pervert judgment, no, not in favour of a poor man, v. 3. Right must in all cases take place, and wrong must be punished, and justice never be suppressed, nor mercy connived at, under pretence of charity and compassion. If a stranger be a bad man, and do a bad thing, it is foolish pity to let him fare the better for his poverty, Deut. 1. 16. 17.
(3.) Neither must they permit judgment, in prejudice to a poor man, nor suffer him to be wronged, because he had not wherewithal to right himself; in such cases, the judges themselves must become advocates for the poor, as far as their cause was good and honest; v. 6. Thou shalt not avenge the judgment of the poor; remember they are thy poor, bone of thy bone, thy poor brethren, let them not, therefore, fare the worse for being poor.

(4.) They must dread the thoughts of assisting or abetting a bad cause; v. 7. "Keep thee far from a false matter; do not only keep thee free from it, nor think it enough to say, thou art unconcerned in it, but keep thee far from it, for danger of the poor." The innocent and righteous thou wouldst not, for all the world, slay with thine own hands; keep thee therefore from a false matter, for thou knowest not but it may end in that; and the righteous God will not leave such wickedness to go unpunished. *I will not justify the wicked," that is, "I will condemn him that unjustly condemns others." Judges themselves are accountable to the Great Judge.

(5.) They must not take bribes, v. 8. They must not only not be swayed by a gift to give an unjust judgment, either to condemn the innocent, or acquit the guilty, or adjudge a man's right from him; but they must not so much as take a gift, lest it should have a bad influence upon them, and overrule them, contrary to their intentions, for it has a strange tendency to blind those that otherwise would do well.

(6.) They must not oppress a stranger, v. 9. Though aliens might not inherit lands among them, yet they must have justice done them, must peaceably enjoy their own, and be righted if they were wronged, though they were strangers to the commonwealth of Israel. It is an instance of the equity and goodness of our law, that, if an alien be tried for an offence except treason, the one hand of his jury, if he desire it, shall be foreigners; they call it a trial per mediatem linguam, a kind provision that strangers may not be oppressed. The reason here given is the same with that, (ch. 22. 21.) Ye were strangers; which is here elegantly enforced, Ye know the heart of a stranger; ye know something of the griefs and fears of a stranger, by sad experience, and therefore, being delivered, can the more readily put souls into their souls' steads.

II. Commands concerning neighbourly kindnesses; we must be ready to do all good offices, as there is occasion for any body, yea, even for those who have done us ill offices, v. 4, 5. The command of loving our enemies, and doing good to them that hate us, is not only a new, but an old, commandment, Prov. 25. 21, 22. Infer from hence, I. If we must do this kindness for an enemy, much more for a friend, though an enemy only is mentioned, because it is supposed that a man would not be unneighborly to any, unless such as he has a particular spleen against. 2. If it be wrong not to prevent our enemy's loss and damage, how much worse is it to occasion harm and loss to him, or any thing he has. 3. If we must bring back our neighbours' cattle when they go astray, much more must we endeavour, though an enemy only is mentioned, because it is supposed that a man would not be unneighborly to any, unless such as he has a particular spleen against. 4. And if we must endeavour to help up a fallen ass, much more should we endeavour, by comforts and encouragements, to help up a sinking spirit, saying to them that are of a fearful heart, Be strong. We must seek the relief and welfare of others as our own, Phil. 2. 4. If thou sayest, Behold, we know it not, doth not he that pondereth the heart consider it? See Prov. 24. 11, 12.

10. And six years thou shalt sow thy land, and shalt gather in the fruits thereof: 11. But the seventh year thou shalt let it rest and lie still; that the poor of thy people may eat: and what they leave, the beasts of the field shall eat. In like manner thou shalt deal with thy vineyard, and with thy olive-yard. 12. Six days thou shalt do thy work, and on the seventh day thou shalt rest; that thine ox and thine ass may rest, and the son of thy handmaid and the stranger may be refreshed. 13. And in all things that I have said unto you be circumspect: and make no mention of the names of other gods, neither let it be heard out of thy mouth. 14. Three times thou shalt keep a feast unto me in the year. 15. Thou shalt keep the feast of unleavened bread: (thou shalt eat unleavened bread seven days, as I commanded thee, in the time appointed of the month Abib; for in it thou camest out from Egypt; and none shall appear before me empty:) 16. And the feast of harvest, the first-fruits of thy labours, which thou hast sown in the field: and the feast of ingathering, which is in the end of the year, when thou hast gathered in thy labours out of the field. 17. Three times in the year all thy males shall appear before the LORD God. 18. Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leavened bread; neither shall the fat of my sacrifice remain until the morning. 19. The first of the first-fruits of thy land thou shalt bring into the house of the LORD thy God. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk.

I. The institution of the sabbatical year, v. 10, 11. Every seventh year the land was to rest; they must not plough for seven years, and the eighth year, and then they could not expect any great harvest at the end of the year; but what the earth did produce of itself should be eaten from hand to mouth, and not laid up. Now this was designed, 1. To show what a plentiful land that was into which God was bringing them—that so numerous a people could have rich maintenance out of the produce of so small a country, both without foreign trade, and yet could spare the increase of every seventh year. 2. To remind them of their dependence upon God, their great Landlord, and their obligation to use the fruit of the land as he should direct. Thus he would try their obedience in a matter that nearly touched their interest. Afterward we find that their disobedience to this command was a forfeiture to the promises, Jer. 8. 21. To teach them a confidence in the Divine Providence, while they did their duty; that, as the sixth day's manna served for two days' meat, so the sixth year's increase should serve for two years' subsistence. Thus they must learn not to take thought for their life, Matt. 6. 25. If we are prudent and diligent in our affairs, we may trust Providence to furnish us with the bread of the day in its day.

II. The repetition of the law of the fourth commandment concerning the weekly sabbath, v. 12.
Even in the year of rest, they must not think that the sabbath-day was laid in common with the other days, but, even that year, it must be religiously observed; yet thus some have endeavoured to take away the observation of the sabbath, by pretending that every day must be a sabbath-day.

III. All manner of respect to the gods of the heathen is here strictly forbidden, v. 13. A general caution is prefixed to this, which has reference to all these precepts; in all things that I have said unto you, be circumspect. We are in danger of missing our way on the right hand and on the left, and it is at our peril if we do, therefore we have need to look about us. A man must ruin himself through mere carelessness, but he cannot save himself without great care and circumspection: particularly, since idolatry was a sin which they were much addicted to, and would be greatly tempted to, they must endeavour to blot out the remembrance of the gods of the heathen, and must disuse and forget all their superstitious forms of speech, and never mention them but with detestation. In Christian schools and academies, (for it is in vain to think of reforming the play-houses,) it were to be wished that the names and stories of the heathen deities, or demons rather, were not so commonly and familiarly used as they are, even with intimations of respect, and sometimes with forms of invocation. Surely we have not so learned Christ.

IV. Their solemn religious attendance on God in that way in which he should choose, is here strictly required, v. 14.-17. 1. Thrice our Lord must come together in a holy convocation, that they might the better know and love one another, and keep up their communion as a dignified and peculiar people. 2. They must come together before the Lord, (v. 17,) to present themselves before him, looking toward the place where his honour dwelt; and to pay their homage to him and choose and bless him, and cheer and amuse them in their joint enjoyments. 3. They must feast together before the Lord, eating and drinking together, in token of their joy in God, and their grateful sense of his goodness to them; for a feast is made for laughter, Ex. 10. 19. Oh what a Master do we serve, who has made it our duty to rejoice before him, who feasts his servants when they are in waiting! Never let religion be called a melancholy thing! we are not admitted to our own feasts. 4. They must not appear before God empty, v. 15. Some free-will offering or other they must bring, in token of their respect and gratitude to their great Benefactor. As then they were not allowed to come empty-handed, so now we must not come to worship God empty-hearted; our souls must be filled with grace, with piety and devout affections; holy desires toward him, and dedications of ourselves to him; for without the sacrifice the sabbath before God is well-pleased. 5. The passover, pentecost, and feast of tabernacles, in spring, summer, and autumn, were the three times appointed for their attendance; not in the midst of their harvest, because then they were otherwise employed; so that they had no reason to say that he made them to serve with an offering, or wearied them with incense. Some particular directions are here given about the three feasts, though much more fully given afterward. 1. As to the passover, it was not to be offered with leavened bread, for at that feast all leaven was to be cast out, nor was the fat of it to remain until the morning, lest it should become offensive, v. 18. 2. At the feast of pentecost, when they were to begin their harvest, they must bring the first of their first-fruits to God, by the pious presenting of which the whole harvest was sanctified, v. 19. 3. At the feast of in-gathering, as it is called, (v. 16,) they must give God thanks for the harvest-mercies they had received, and must depend upon him for the next harvest, and must not think to receive benefit by that superstitious usage of some of the Gentiles, who, it is said, at the end of the harvest, see a kid in its own dam's milk and sprinkled that milk-pottage, in a magical way, upon their gardens and fields, to make them more fruitful next year. But Israel must abhor such foolish customs.

20. Behold, I send an Angel before thee, to keep thee in the way, and to bring thee into the place which I have prepared. 21. Beware of him, and obey his voice, provoke him not; for he will not pardon your transgressions: for my name is in him. 22. But if thou shalt indeed obey his voice, and do all that I speak, then I will be an enemy unto thine enemies, an adversary unto thine adversaries. 23. For mine Angel shall go before thee, and bring thee in unto the Amorites, and the Hittites, and the Perizzites, and the Canaanites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites; and I will cut them off. 24. Thou shalt not bow down to their gods, nor serve them, nor do after their works; but thou shalt utterly overthrow them, and quite break down their images. 25. And ye shall serve the Lord your God, and he shall bless thy bread and thy water, and I will take sickness away from the midst of thee. 26. There shall nothing cast their young, nor be barren, in thy land; the number of thy days I will fulfill. 27. I will send my fear before thee, and will destroy all the people to whom thou shalt come; and I will make all thine enemies turn their backs unto thee. 28. And I will send hornets before thee, which shall drive out the Hivite, the Canaanite, and the Hittite, from before thee. 29. I will not drive them out from before thee in one year; lest the land become desolate, and the beast of the field multiply against thee. 30. By little and little I will drive them out from before thee, until thou be increased, and inherit the land. 31. And I will set thy bounds from the Red Sea even unto the sea of the Philistines, and from the desert unto the river: for I will deliver the inhabitants of the land into your hand; and thou shalt drive them out before thee. 32. Thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor with their gods. 33. They shall not dwell in thy land, lest they make sin against me: for if thou serve their gods, it will surely be a snare unto thee.

Three gracious promises are here made to Israel, to engage them to their duty, and encourage them in it; and each of the promises has some needful precepts and cautions joined to it.

1. It is here promised that they should be guided and kept in their way through the wilderness to the land of promise, Behold, I send an Angel before thee.
thee, (v. 20.) mine Angel, (v. 23.) a created angel, say some, a minister of God's providence, employed in conducting and protecting the camp of Israel; that it might appear that God took a particular care of them, he appointed one of his chief servants to make it his business to attend them, and see that they went not astray. Observ. Of the Son of God, the Angel of the covenant; for the Israelites in the wilderness are said to tempt Christ; and we may as well suppose him God's Messenger, and the Church's Redeemer, before his incarnation, as the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world. And we may the rather think he was pleased to undertake the deliverance and conduct of Israel, because they were typical of his great undertaking. It was promised that this blessing should be sent in the way, though it lay through a wilderness first, and afterward through their enemies' country; thus God's spiritual Israel shall be kept through the wilderness of this earth, and from the insults of the gates of hell. It is also promised that he should bring them into the place which God had not only designed, but prepared for them: and thus Christ has prepared a place for his followers, and will present himself to it, for he is faithful to him that appointed him.

The precept joined with this promise, is, that they be observant of, and obedient to, this Angel whom God would send before them; (v. 21.) "Be ware of him, and obey his voice in every thing, provoke him not in any thing, for it is at your peri if you do, he will visit your iniquity." Note, 1. Christ is the Author of salvation to those only that obey him. The word of command is, Hear ye him, Matt. 17. 5. Observe what he hath commanded, Matt. 28. 20. 2. Our necessary dependence upon the divine power and goodness should awe us into obedience. We do well to take heed of provoking our Protector and Benefactor; because, if our Defence depart from us, and the streams of his goodness be cut off, we are undone. Therefore, "Be ware of him, and cury it toward him with all possible reverence and caution. Fear the Lord and his goodness." 3. Christ will be faithful to those who are faithful to him, and will espouse their cause who adhere to his; (v. 22.) I will be an Ad versary to thine adversaries. The league shall be offensive and defensive, like that with Abraham, I will bless him that blesseth thee, and curse him that curseth thee. Thus is God pleased to twist his interests and friendships with his people's. It is promised that he should have a comfortable settlement in the land of Canaan, which they hoped now, (though it proved otherwise,) within a few months, to be in the possession of; v. 24. 26. Observe, 1. How reasonable the conditions of this promise are—only that they should serve their own God, who was indeed the only true God, and not the gods of the nations, which were no gods at all, and which they had no right to serve at all; and they are not only not worship their gods, but they must utterly overthrow them, in token of their great abhorrence of idolatry, their resolution never to worship idols themselves, and their care to prevent any other from worshipping them; as the converted conjurers burnt their books, Acts 19. 19. 2. How rich the particulars of this promise are. (1.) The comfort of their food; He shall feed thee, and his bread shall be given thee, and he will make bread and water more refreshing and nourishing than a feast of fat things and wines on the lees, without that blessing. (2.) The continuance of their health; I will take sickness away, either prevent it, or remove it. The land shall not be visited with epidemical diseases, which are very dreadful, and sometimes have laid countries waste. (3.) The increase of their wealth; their cattle should not be barren, nor cast their young; which is mentioned as an instance of prosperity, Job 21. 10. (4.) The prolonging of their lives to old age; "The number of thy days I will fulfil, and they shall not be cut off in the midst by untimely deaths." Thus hath godliness the promise of the life that now is.

III. It is promised that they should conquer and subdue their enemies, the present occupants of the land of Canaan, who must be driven out to make room for them. This God would do, 1. Effectually by his power; (v. 27, 28.) not so much by the sword and bow of Israel, as by the terrors which he would strike into the Canaanites. Though they were so obstinate as not to be willing to submit to Israel, resign their country, and retire elsewhere, which they might have done; yet they were so dispirited, that they were not able to stand before them. This completed their ruin; such power had the Devil in them, that they would resist; but such power had God over them, that they could not. I will send my fear before thee; and they that fear will soon flee. Hosts of hornets made way for the hosts of Israel; such mean creatures can God make use of for the chastising of his people's enemies; as in the plagues of Egypt. When God pleases, hornets can drive out Canaanites as well as lions could, Josh. 24. 12. 2. He would do it gradually, in wisdom, (v. 29, 30.) not all at once, but by little and little. As the Canaanites had kept possession till Israel was grown into a people, so there should still be some remains of them, till Israel should grow so numerous as to replete the whole. The wisdom of God is to be observed in the gradual advances of the church's interests. It is in real kindness to the church, that its enemies are subdued by little and little, for thus we are kept upon our guard, and in a continual dependence upon God. Corruptions are thus driven out of the hearts of God's people; not all at once, but by little and little; the old man is crucified, and therefore dies slowly. God, in his providence, often delays mercy, because we are not ready for it. Canaan has room enough to receive Israel, but Israel is not numerous enough to occupy Canaan; we are not straitened in God; if we are straitened, it is in ourselves. The land of Canaan is promised them, (v. 31.) in its utmost extent, which yet they were not possessed of till the days of David; and by their sins they soon lost possession.

The precept annexed to this promise, is, that they should not make any friendship, nor have any familiarity, with idolaters, v. 32, 33. Idolaters must not so much as s•journ in their land, unless they renounced their idolatry. Thus they must avoid the reproach of intimacy with the worshippers of false gods, and the danger of being drawn to worship with them. By familiar converse with idolaters, their dread and detestation of the sin is nullified. They are to be in the utmost compliment to their friends, to pay some respect to their gods, and so by degrees would be drawn into the fatal snare. Note, Those that would be kept from bad courses must keep from bad company; it is dangerous living in a bad neighbourhood; others' sins will be our snares, if we look not well to ourselves. We must always look upon our greatest danger to be the thoughts of working against God. Whatever friendship is pretended, that is really our worst enemy, that draws us from our duty.

CHAP. XXIV.

Moses, as mediator between God and Israel, having received diver laws and ordinances from God privately, in the three foregoing chapters, in this chapter, I. Comes down to the people, acquaints them with the laws he had re-
A ND he said unto Moses, Come up unto the Lord, thou, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel; and worship ye afar off. 2. And Moses alone shall come near the Lord; but they shall not come nigh, neither shall the people go up with him. 3. And Moses came, and told the people all the words of the Lord, and all the judgments; and all the people answered with one voice, and said, All the words which the Lord hath said will we do. 4. And Moses wrote all the words of the Lord, and rose up early in the morning, and built an altar under the hill, and twelve pillars, according to the twelve tribes of Israel. 5. And he sent young men of the children of Israel, which offered burnt-offerings, and sacrificed peace-offerings of oxen unto the Lord. 6. And Moses took half of the blood, and put it in basons; and half of the blood he sprinkled on the altar. 7. And he took the book of the covenant, and read in the audience of the people: and they said, All that the Lord hath said will we do, and be obedient. 8. And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, Behold the blood of the covenant, which the Lord hath made with you concerning all these words.

The two first verses are the appointment of a second session upon mount Sinai, for the making of laws, when an end was put to the first. When a communion is begun between God and us, it shall never fail on his side, if it do not first fail on ours. Moses is directed to bring Aaron and his sons, and the seventy elders of Israel, that they might be witnesses of the glory of God, and that communion with God might lie imprinted upon their minds, and that their testimony might confirm the people's faith. In this approach, 1. They must all be very reverent; Worship ye afar off, v. 1. Before they came near, they must worship. Thus we must enter into God's gates with humble and solemn adorations, draw near as those that know our distance, and admire the condescensions of God's grace in admitting us to his near. Are great princes approached with the proper adoration of the body? And shall not the soul that draws near to God be bowed before him? 2. They must none of them come so near as Moses, v. 2. They must come up to the Lord, and Moses alone must come near; therein a type of Christ, who, as the High Priest, entered alone into the most holy place.

In the following verses, we have the solemn covenant made between God and Israel, and the expectation of the ratifications; and a very solemn transaction it was, typifying the covenant of grace between God and believers, through Christ.

I. Moses told the people the words of the Lord, v. 3. He did not lead them blindfold into the covenant, but told them the very deviation that was the daughter of ignorance; but laid before them all the precepts, general and particular, in the foregoing chapters; and fairly put it to them, Whether they were willing to submit to these laws or no.

II. The people unanimously consented to the terms proposed, without reservation or exception; All the words which the Lord hath said will we do. They hereby consented to be under God's government; (ch. 19. 8.) there was the consent in particular to these laws now given. Oh that there had been such a heart in them! How well were it if people would but be always in the same good mind that sometimes they seem to be in! Many consent to the law, and yet do not live up to it; they have nothing to except against it, and yet will not persuade themselves to be ruled by it. This is the tenor of the covenant. "That, if they would observe the foregoing precepts, God would perform the foregoing promises. 'Obey, and be happy.' Here is the bargain made. Observe, 1. How it was engrossed in the book of the covenant; Moses wrote the words of the Lord, (v. 4.) that there might be no mistake; probably, he had written them as God dictated them on the mount. As soon as ever God had separated to himself a peculiar people in the world, he governed them by a written word, as he has done ever since, and will do while the world stands, and the church in it. Moses, having engrossed the articles of agreement concluded upon between God and Israel, read them in the audience of the people, (v. 7.) that they might be perfectly apprized of the thing, and might try whether their second thoughts were the same with their first, upon the whole matter. And we may suppose Moses repeated these words so often, and to the same with what they were, (v. 3.) but something stronger: All that the Lord hath said (be it good, or be it evil, to flesh and blood, Jer. 42. 6.) we will do; so they had said before, but now they add, And will be obedient; not only we will do what has been commanded, but in every thing which shall be further ordained we will be obedient. Bravely resolved! if they had but stuck to the resolutions so given. See how the covenant and commands are so incontestably equitable in themselves, and so highly advantageous to us, that the more we think of them, and the more plainly and fully they are set before us, the more reason we shall see to comply with them. 2. How it was sealed by the blood of the covenant, that Israel might receive strong consolations from the ratifying of God's promises to them, and from the visible witness of the sealing-throngs of their promises to God. Thus has Infinite Wisdom devised means that we may be confirmed both in our faith and in our obedience; may be both encouraged in our duty, and engaged to it. The covenant must be made by sacrifice, (Ps. 50. 5.) because, since man has sinned, and forfeited his Creator's favour, there can be no fellowship by covenant, till there be first friendship and atonement by sacrifice.

1. In preparation, therefore, for the parties inter-changeably putting their seals to this covenant, [1.] Moses builds an altar, to the honour of God, which was principally intended in all the altars that were built, and which was the first thing to be looked at in the covenant, they were now to seal. No addition to the perfections of the divine nature can be made by any of God's dealings with the children of men, but in them his perfections are manifested and magnified, and his honour showed forth; therefore he will now be represented by an altar, to signify, that all he expected from them, was, that they should do him honour, and that, being his people, they could be his intercessors, and his praise.

[2.] He erects twelve pillars, according to the number of the tribes; these were to represent the people, the other party to the covenant; and we may suppose that they were set up over against the altar, and that Moses, as mediator, passed to and fro between them. Probably, each tribe set up and knew its own pillar, and their elders stood by it. [3.] He appointed sacrifices to be offered upon the altar, (comp. Lev. 8. 29.) he burnt offerings, peace-offerings, which yet were designed to be expiatory. We are not concerned to inquire who these young men were that were employed in offering these sacrifices; for Moses was himself the priest, and what they did was purely as his servants, by his order and appointment. No doubt, they were men who by their bodily strength were qualified for the service, and by their station among the people were fittest for the honour.

(2.) Preparations being thus made, their ratifications were very solemnly exchanged. [1.] The blood of the sacrifice which the people offered was (part of it) sprinkled upon the altar, (v. 6.) which signifies the people's dedicating of themselves, their lives, and beings, to God, and to his honour. In the blood (which is the life) of the dead sacrifices, all the Israelites were presented unto God as living sacrifices, Rev. 12. 1. [2.] The blood of the sacrifice which God had owned and accepted was (the remainder of it) sprinkled either upon the people themselves, (v. 8.) or upon the pillars that represented them; which signified God's gracious conferring of his favour upon them, and all the fruits of that favour, and his giving them all the gifts they could expect or desire from a God reconciled to them, and in covenant with them by sacrifice. This part of the ceremony was thus explained, "Hold the blood of the sacrifices; see here how God has sealed to you to be a God, and you seal to him to be to him a people; his promises to you, and your's to him, are both, yea, and amen."

Thus our Lord Jesus, the Mediator of the new covenant, (of whom Moses was a type,) having offered up himself a sacrifice upon the cross, that his blood might be indeed the blood of the covenant, secured to it upon the altar in his intercession, (Heb. 9. 12.) and his blood shed by his wounds, and ordinances, and the influences and operations of the Spirit of promise, by whom we are sealed. He himself seemed to allude to this solemnity, when, in the institution of the Lord's supper, he said, "This cup is the New Testament, (or Covenant,) in my blood. Compare with this, Heb. 9. 19, 20.

9. Then went up Moses, and Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, and seventy of the elders of Israel: 10. And they saw the God of Israel; and there was under his feet as it were a paved work of a sapphire stone, and as it were the body of heaven in his clearness. 11. And upon the nobles of the children of Israel he laid not his hand: also they saw God, and did eat and drink.

The people having, beside their submission to the ceremony of the sprinkling of blood, declared their well-pleasement in their God and his law, again and again, God here gives to their representatives some special tokens of his favour to them; for God meets him that rejoices and works righteousness, and admits them nearer to him than they could have expected. Thus, in the New Testament church, we find the four living creatures, and the four and twenty elders, honoured with places round the throne, being redeemed unto God, by the blood of the Lamb. Which is the blood of the covenant, by the blood of which Moses was consecrated, Exod. 4. 4, 6.—8, 9. Observe:

1. They saw the God of Israel, (v. 10.) that is, they had some glimpse of his glory, in light and fire, though they saw no manner of similitude, and his being no man hath seen or can see, 1 Tim. 6. 16.

They saw the place where the God of Israel stood, (so the LXX.) something that came near a similitude, but was not; whatever they saw, it was certainly something of which no image or picture could be made, and yet enough to satisfy them that God was with them of a truth.

Nothing is described but that which was under his feet: for our conceptions of God are all below him, and fall infinitely short of being adequate. They saw not so much as God's feet, but at the bottom of the brightness they saw (such as they never saw before or after, and, as the footstool or pedestal of it) a most rich and splendid pavement, as it had been of sapphires, azure, or sky-coloured. The heavens themselves are the pavement of God's palace, and his throne is above the firmament. See how much better Wisdom is than the precious onyx or the sapphires, for Wisdom was, from eternity, God's delight, (Prov. 8. 30.) and lay in his bosom, but the sapphires are the pavement under his feet; there let us put all the wealth of this world, and not in our hearts.

2. Upon the nobles, or elders, of Israel, he laid not his hand, v. 11. Though they were men, the dazzling splendour of his glory did not overwhelm them; but it was so moderated, (Job. 26. 9.) and they were so strengthened, (Dan. 10. 19.) that they were able to bear it. Nay, though they were sinful men, and obnoxious to God's justice, yet he did not lay his punishing avenging hand upon them, as they feared he would. When we consider what a concerning fire God is, and what trouble we are before him, we shall have reason to say, in all our approaches to him, It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed.

3. They saw God, and did eat and drink; they had not only their lives preserved, but their vigour, courage, and comfort; it cast no damp upon their joy, but rather increased and elevated it. They feasted when they were sacrifice, before God, in token of their being reconciled to the covenant now made, their grateful acceptance of the benefits of it, and their communion with God in pursuance of that covenant. Thus believers eat and drink with Christ at his table, Luke, 22. 30. Blessed are they that shall eat bread in the kingdom of our Father, and drink of the new wine there.

12. And the Lord said unto Moses, Come up, and bear the ark of the covenant upon your shoulders, and they shall carry it; and I will give thee tables of stone, and a law, and commandments which I have written; that thou mayest teach them. 13. And Moses rose up, and his minister Joshua; and Moses went up into the mount of God. 14. And he said unto the elders, Tarry ye here for us, until we come again unto you: and, behold, Aaron and Hur are with you; if any man have any matters to do, let him come unto them. 15. And Moses went up into the mount, and a cloud covered the mount. 16. And the glory of the Lord abode upon mount Sinai, and the cloud covered it six days: and the seventh. day he called unto Moses out of the midst of the cloud. 17. And the sight of the glory of the LORD was like devouring fire on the top of the mount in the eyes of the children of Israel. 18. And Moses went into the midst of the cloud, and gat him up into the mount; and Moses was in the mount forty days and forty nights.

The public ceremony of sealing the covenant being over, Moses is called up to receive further instructions, which we have in the following chapters.

1. He is called up into the cloud, and there he remained six days at some distance. Orders are given him, (v. 12.) Come up to the mount, and be there, that is, "Expect to continue there for some considerable time." Those that would have communion with God must not only come to ordinances, but they must abide by them. Blessed are they that dwell in his house, not that merely call there; "Come up, and I will give thee a law, that thou mayest teach them." Moses taught them nothing but what he had received from the Lord, and he received nothing from the Lord but what he taught them; for he was faithful both to God and Israel, and did neither add nor diminish, but kept close to his instructions.

Having received these orders, 1. He appointed Aaron and Hur to be as lords justices in his absence, to keep the peace and good order in the congregation, v. 14. The care of his government he would leave behind him when he went up into the mount, that he might not have that to distract his mind; and yet he would not leave the people as sheep having no shepherd, no, not for a few days. Good princes find their government a constant care, and then people find it a constant blessing. 2. He took Joshua up with him into the mount, v. 13. Joshua was his minister, and it would be a satisfaction to him to have him with him as a companion, during the six days that he tarried in the mount, before God called to him. Joshua was to be his successor, and therefore thus he was honoured before the people, above the rest of the elders, that they might afterward the more readily take him for their governor; and thus he was prepared for service, by being trained up in communion with God. Joshua was a type of Christ, and (as the learned Bishop Pearson well observes) Moses takes him with him into the mount, because, without Jesus, in whom are hid all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, there is no looking into the secrets of Heaven, nor approaching the glorious presence of God. 3. A cloud covered the mount six days; a visible token of God's special presence there, for he so shows himself to us, as, at the same time, to conceal himself from us. He lets us know so much as to assure us of his presence, power, and grace; but, as a mystery, he does not let us in upon us that we cannot find him out to perfection. During these six days, Moses staid waiting upon the mountain for a call into the presence-chamber, v. 15, 16. God thus tried the patience of Moses, and his obedience to that command, (v. 12.) Be there. If Moses had been tired before the seventh day, (as Saul, 1 Sam. 13. 8. 9.) and had said, What should I wait for the Lord any longer? He had got an entrance into his presence, and communion with God is worth waiting for. And it is fit we should address ourselves to solemn ordinances with a solemn pause, taking time to compose ourselves, Ps. 108. 1.

11. He is called up into the cloud, on the seventh day, probably on the sabbath-day, v. 16. Now the thick cloud opened in the sight of all Israel, and the glory of the Lord brake forth like devouring fire, v. 17. God, even our God, is a consuming fire, and so he was pleased to manifest himself in the giving of the law; that knowing the terrors of the Lord, we may be persuaded to obey, and may by them be prepared for the comforts of the gospel, and that the grace and truth which come by Jesus Christ may be more acceptable.

Now, 1. the entrance of Moses into the cloud was very wonderful; Moses went into the midst of the cloud, v. 8. It was an extraordinary presence of mind, which the grace of God enabled him with by six days' preparation, else he durst not have ventured into the cloud, especially when it broke out in devouring fire. Moses was sure that he who called him would protect him; and even those glorious attributes of God, which are most terrible to the wicked, the saints with a humble reverence rejoice in. He that walks righteously, and speaks uprightly, is able to dwell even with this devouring fire, as we are told, Isa. 33. 14. 15. There are persons and works that will abibe the fire, 1 Cor. 3. 12. &c. and some that will have confidence before God.

2. His continuance in the cloud was no less wonderful; he was there forty days and forty nights. It should seem, the six days (v. 16.) were not part of the forty; for, during those six days, Joshua was with Moses, who did not eat of the manna, and drink of the water mentioned, Deut. 9. 21. and, while they were together, it is probable that Moses did eat and drink with him; but when Moses was called into the midst of the cloud, he left Joshua without, and continued to eat and drink daily while he waited for Moses's return, but from henceforward Moses fasted. Doubtless, God could have said what he had now to say to Moses, in one day, but, for the greater solemnity of the thing, he kept him with him in the mount forty days and forty nights. We are hereby taught to spend much time in communion with God, and to think that time best spent which is so spent. They that would get the knowledge of God's will must meditate thereon day and night.

CHAP. XXV.

At this chapter begins an account of the orders and instructions God gave to Moses upon the mount, for the erecting and furnishing of a tabernacle to the honour of God. One thing more here. I Orders given for a collection to be made among the people for this purpose, v. 1. 9. II. Particular instructions, 1. Concerning the ark of the covenant, v. 10. 2. The table of shew-bread, v. 23. 3. The golden candlestick, v. 31. 40. 1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring me an offering: of every man that giveth it willingly with his heart ye shall take my offering. 3. And this is the offering which ye shall take of them; gold, and silver, and brass, 4. And blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair, 5. And rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins, and shittim-wood, 6. Oil for the light, spices for anointing oil, and for sweet incense, 7. Onyx stones, and stones to be set in the ephod, and in the breast-plate. 8. And let them make me a sanctuary; that I may dwell among them. 9. According to all that I show thee, after the pattern of the tabernacle, and the pattern of all the instruments thereof, even so shall ye make it.

We may suppose that when Moses went into the midst of the cloud and abode there so long, where unto the children of Israel, that they bring me an offering; and there was all the reason in the world that they should, for, 1. It was God himself that had not only enriched them, but enriched them with the spoils of the Egyptians; he had instructed them to borrow, and he had inclined the Egyptians to lend, so that from him they had their wealth, and therefore it was fit they should devote it to him, and use it for him, and thus make a grateful acknowledgment of the favours they had received. Note. (1.) The best use we can make of our earthly wealth is, to honor God with it in works of piety and charity. (2.) When we are blessed with some remarkable success in our affairs, and have had, as we say, a good turn, it may be justly expected that we should do something more than ordinary for the glory of God, consecrating our gain, in some reasonable proportion of it, to the Lord of the whole earth. Mic. 4. 13. 2. The sanctuary that was to be built was intended for their benefit and comfort, and therefore they must be at the expense of it. They had been unworthy of the privilege if they had grudged at the charge. They might well afford to offer liberally for the honour of God, while they lived at free quarters, having food for themselves and their families rained upon them daily from heaven. We also must own that we have our all from God's bounty, and therefore ought to use all for his glory. Since we live upon his bounty, we must return it to him. This offering must be given willingly, and with the heart, that is, (1.) It was not prescribed to them what or how much they must give, but it was left to their generosity, that they might show their good will to the house of God and the offices thereof, and might do it with a holy emulation, the zeal of a few provoking many, 2 Cor. 9. 2. We should ask not only, what I shall give for God? but, what shall I give? What they gave they must give it cheerfully, not grudgingly and with reluctance, for God loves a cheerful giver, 2 Cor. 9. 7. What is laid out in the service of God we must reckon well bestowed. The particulars are here mentioned which they must offer; (v. 3. 7.) all of them things that there would be occasion for in the tabernacle, or the service of it. The offerings here named were gold, silver, and brass, provided, but not woven; that is, not of military metal, and this was to be a house of peace. Every thing that was provided was very rich and fine, and the best of the sort; for God, who is the best, should have the best.

II. God himself would furnish him with the model; (v. 9.) According to all that I show thee. God showed him an exact plan of it in miniature, which he must conform to in all points. Thus Ezekiel saw in vision the form of the house and the fashion thereof, Ezek. 43. 11. Note, Whate'er is done in God's service must be done by his direction, and not otherwise. Yet God did not only show him the model, but gave him also directions how to frame the tabernacle, according to that model, in all the parts of it, which he goes over distinctly in this and the following chapters. When Moses, at the beginning of Genesis, was to describe the creation of the world, though it is such a stately and curious fabric, and made up of such a variety and vast number of particulars, yet he gave a very short and general account of it, and nothing compared with what the wisdom of this world would have desired and expected from one that wrote by divine revelation; but when he comes to describe the tabernacle, he does it with the greatest niceness and accuracy imaginable. He that gave us no account of the lines and circles of the globe, the diameter of the earth, or the height and magnitude of the stars, has told us particularly the measure... of every board and curtain of the tabernacle; for God's church and instituted religion are more precious to him and more considerable than all the rest of the world. And the very word thereof, not to describe to us the works of nature, a general view of which is sufficient to lead us to the knowledge and service of the Creator, but to acquaint us with the methods of grace, and those things which are purely matters of divine revelation. The blessedness of the future state is more fully represented under the notion of a new Jerusalem than under the notion of new heavens and a new earth.

10. And they shall make an ark of shittim-wood: two cubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a cubit and a half the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof. 11. And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold: within and without shalt thou overlay it, and shalt make upon it a crown of gold round about. 12. And thou shalt cast four rings of gold for it, and put them in the four corners thereof; and two rings shall be in the one side of it, and two rings in the other side of it. 13. And thou shalt make staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with gold. 14. And thou shalt put the staves into the rings by the sides of the ark, that the ark may be borne with them. 15. The staves shall be in the rings of the ark; they shall not be taken from it. 16. And thou shalt put into the ark the testimony, which I shall give thee. 17. And thou shalt make a mercy-seat of pure gold: two cubits and a half shall be the length thereof, and a cubit and a half the breadth thereof. 18. And thou shalt make two cherubims of gold, of beaten work shalt thou make them, in the two ends of the mercy-seat. 19. And make one cherub on the one end, and the other cherub on the other end; even of the mercy-seat shall ye make the cherubims on the two ends thereof. 20. And the cherubims shall stretch forth their wings on high, covering the mercy-seat with their wings, and their faces shall look one to another; toward the mercy-seat shall the faces of the cherubims be. 21. And thou shalt put the mercy-seat above upon the ark; and in the ark thou shalt put the testimony that I shall give thee. 22. And there I will meet with thee, and I will commune with thee from above the mercy-seat, from between the two cherubims which are upon the ark of the testimony, of all things which I will give thee in commandment unto the children of Israel.

The first thing which is here ordered to be made, is, the ark with its appurtenances, the furniture of the most holy place, and the special token of God's presence; the tabernacle was erected to be the receptacle of that.

VOl. 1.—28

I. The ark itself was a chest or coffer, in which the two tables of the law, written with the finger of God, were to be honourably deposited, and carefully kept. The dimensions of it are given, ver. 11; if the Jewish writers are to be believed, some learned men compute, three inches longer than our half-yard, (twenty-one inches in all;) the chest or cabinet was about fifty-two inches long, thirty-one broad, and thirty-one deep. It was overlaid within and without with thin plates of gold. It had a crown, or cornice, of gold, round it, with rings and staves to carry it with; and in it he must put the testimony, v. 10, 16. The tables of the law called the testimony, because God did in them testify his will: his giving them that law was a token of his favour to them; and their acceptance of it was in token of their subjection and obedience to him. This law was a testimony to them, to direct them in their duty, and would be a testimony against them, if they transgressed. The ark is called the ark of the testimony, (ch. 30. 6.) and the tabernacle, the tabernacle of the testimony, (Num. 10. 11.) or the innermost, Acts 7. 44. The glory of Christ is also called a testimony or witness, Matth. 24. 14. It is observable, 1. That the tables of the law were carefully preserved in an ark for the purpose; to teach us to make much of the word of God, and to hide it in our hearts, in our innermost thoughts, as the ark was placed in the holy of holies. It intimates likewise the care which Divine Providence ever did, and ever will, take, to preserve the records of divine revelation in the church, so that even in the latter days there shall be seen in his temple the ark of his testament. See Rev. 11. 19. 2. That this ark was the chief token of God's presence; which teaches us that the first and greatest evidence and assurance of God's favour is, the putting of his law in the heart. God dwells where that rule, Heb. 8. 10. 3. That provision was made for the ark not only to keep it safe in all its removes; which intimates to us, that wherever we go, we should take our religion along with us, always bearing about with us the love of the Lord Jesus and his law.

II. The mercy-seat was the covering of the ark or chest, made of solid gold, exactly to fit the dimensions of the ark, v. 17, 21. This proffatory covering, as it might well be translated, was a type of Christ, Propitiation, whose satisfaction, which sufficiently answers the demands of the law, covers our transgressions, and comes between us and the curse we deserve. Thus he's the end of the law for righteousness.

III. The cherubims of gold were fixed to the mercy-seat, and of a piece with it, and spread their wings over it, v. 18. It is supposed that these cherubims were designed to represent the holy angels, who, under the title of shechinah, or Divine Majesty, particularly at the giving of the law; not by any effigies of an angel, but some emblem of the angelical nature; probably some one of those four faces spoken of, Ezek. 1. 10. Whatever the faces were, they looked one towards another, and both downward toward the ark, while their wings were stretched out so as to touch one another. The apostle calls them the throne of glory shewing the presence of God, Heb. 9. 5. It denotes their attendance upon the Redeemer, to whom they were ministering spirits, their readiness to do his will, their special presence in the assemblies of saints, (Ps. 68. 17, 1 Cor. 11. 10,) and their desire to look into the mysteries of the gospel, which they diligently contemplate, 1 Pet. 1. 22. God is said to dwell, or sit, between the cherubims, on the mercy-seat, (Ps. 80. 1,) and from thence he bears promises, for the future, to meet with Moses, and to commune with him, v. 22. There he would give law, and there he would give audience, as a prince on his throne; and thus he manifests himself willing to be reconciled to us, and keep up communion with us, in and by the mediation of Christ. In allusion to this mercy-seat, we are said to come boldly to the throne of grace, (Heb. 4. 16.) for we are not under the law, that is covered, but under grace, that is displayed; its wings are stretched out, and we are invited to come under the shadow of them, Ruth 2. 12.

23. Thou shalt also make a table of shittim-wood: two cubits shall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof. 24. And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold, and make thereto a crown of gold round about. 25. And thou shalt make unto it a border of a hand-breadth round about, and thou shalt make a golden crown to the border thereof round about. 26. And thou shalt make for it four rings of gold, and put the rings in the four corners that are on the four feet thereof. 27. Over against the border shall the rings be for places of the staves to bear the table. 28. And thou shalt make the staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with gold, that the table may be borne with them. 29. And thou shalt make the dishes thereof, and spoons thereof, and covers thereof, and bowls thereof, to cover withal; of pure gold shalt thou make them. 30. And thou shalt set upon the table show-bread before me always.

1. A table ordered to be made of wood overlaid with gold, which was to stand, not in the holy of holies, (nothing was in that but the ark and its appurtenances,) but in the outer part of the tabernacle, called the sanctuary, or holy place, Heb. 9. 2. v. 23, &c. There must also be the usual furniture of the sideboard, dishes and spoons, &c. and all of gold, v. 29.

2. This table was to be always spread, and furnished with the show-bread, (v. 30.) or bread of faces, twelve loaves, one for each tribe, set in two rows, six in a row; see the law concerning them, Lev. 24. 5, &c. The tabernacle being God's house, in which he was pleased to say that he would dwell among them, he would show that he kept a good house. In the royal palace it was fit that there should be a royal table. Some make the twelve loaves to represent the twelve tribes, set before God as his people, and the corn of his floor, as they are called, Isa. 21. 10. As the ark signified God's being present with them, so the twelve loaves signified their being presented to God. This bread was designed to be, (1.) A thankful acknowledgment of God's goodness to them, in giving them their daily bread, manna in the wilderness, where he prepared a table for them, and, in Canaan, the corn of the land. Hereby they owned their dependence upon Providence, not only for the corn in the field, which they gave thanks for in offering the sheaf of first-fruits, but for the bread in their houses, that, when it was brought home, God did not blow upon it, Hag. 1. 9. Christ has taught us to pray every day for the bread of the day. (2.) A token of their communion with God; this bread on God's table being made of the same corn with the bread on their own tables, God and Israel did, as it were, eat together, as a pledge of friendship and fellowship; he supped with them, and they with him. (3.) A type of the spiritual provision which is made in the church, by the gospel of Christ, for all that are made priests to our God. In our father's house there is bread enough and to spare, a feast for every tribe. All that attend in God's house shall be abundantly satisfied with the goodness of it, Ps. 36. 8. Divine consolations are the continual feast of holy souls, notwithstanding there are those to whom the table of the Lord, and the meat thereof, (because it is plain bread,) are contemptible, Mal. 1. 12. Christ has a table in his kingdom, at which all his saints shall for ever eat and drink with him, Luke 22. 30.

31. And thou shalt make a candlestick of pure gold; of beaten work shall the candlestick be made: his shaft, and his branches, his bowls, his knops, and his flowers, shall be of the same. 32. And six branches shall come out of the sides of it; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side, and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side: 33. Three bowls made like unto almonds, with a knop and a flower in one branch; and three bowls made like almonds in the other branch, with a knop and a flower; so in the six branches that come out of the candlestick. 34. And in the candlestick shall be four bowls made like unto almonds, with their knops and their flowers. 35. And there shall be a knop under two branches of the same, and a knop under two branches of the same, according to the six branches that proceed out of the candlestick. 36. Their knops and their branches shall be of the same; all of it shall be one beaten work of pure gold. 37. And thou shalt make the seven lamps thereof; and they shall light the lamps thereof, that they may give light over against it. 38. And the tongs thereof, and the snuff-dishes thereof shall be of pure gold. 39. Of a talent of pure gold shall he make it, with all these vessels. 40. And look that thou make them after their pattern, which was showed thee in the mount.

The next thing ordered to be made for the furnishing of God's palace, was, a rich stately candlestick, all of pure gold, not hollow, but solid. The particular directions here given concerning it show,
1. That it was very magnificent, and a great ornament to the place; it had many branches drawn from the main shaft, which had not only their bowls, (to put the oil and the kindled wick in,) for necessity, but knobs and flowers, for ornament. 2. That it was very convenient, and admirably well contrived both to scatter the light and to keep the tabernacle clean from smoke and snuffs.
3. That it was very significant. The tabernacle had no windows by which to let in the light of the day, all its light was candle-light; which intimates the comparative darkness of that dispensation, while the Sun of righteousness was not as yet risen, nor had the day-
star from on high yet visited his church; yet God left not himself without witness, nor them without instruction; the commandment was a lamp, and the law a light, and the prophets were branches from that lamp, which gave light in their several ages to the Old-Testament church. The church is still dark, as the tabernacle was, in comparison with what it will be in heaven; but the word of God is the candlestick, a light shining in a dark place; (2 Pet. 1. 19.) and a dark place indeed the world would be without it. The Spirit of God, in his various gifts and graces, is compared to the seven lamps which burn before the throne, Rev. 4. 5. The churches are golden candlesticks, the lights of the world, holding forth the word of life, (Rev. 1. 20.) the candlestick does the light, (Phil. 2. 15, 16.) Ministers are to light the lamps and snuff them, (v. 37.) by opening the scriptures. The treasure of this light is now put into earthen vessels, 2 Cor. 4. 6, 7. The branches of the candlestick spread every way, to denote the diffusing of the light of the gospel into all parts by the Christian ministry, Matth. 5. 14, 15. There is a diversity of gifts, but the same Spirit gives to each to do work with. 4. Lastly, There is, in the midst of these instructions, an express caution given to Moses to take heed of varying from his model; (v. 40.) Make them after the pattern showed thee. Nothing was left to his own invention, or the fancy of the workmen, or the people’s humour; but the will of God must be religiously observed in every particular. Thus, (1.) All God’s providences are exactly according to his counsels, and the copy never varies from the original. Infinite Wisdom never changes its measures; whatever is purposeful shall undoubtedly be performed. (2.) All his ordinances must be administered according to his institutions. Christ’s instruction to his disciples, (Matth. 28. 20.) is like this here, Observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you.

CHAP. XXVI.

Moses here receives instructions. 1. Concerning the inner curtains of the tent or tabernacle, and the coupling of those curtains, v. 1, 6. 2. Concerning the outer curtains, which were of goats’ hair, to strengthen the former. 3. Concerning the case or cover which was to secure it from the weather, v. 14. 4. Concerning the boards which were to be reared up to support the curtains, with their bars and sockets, v. 15; 30; V. The partition between the holy place and the holy, v. 31; 35. VI. The vail for the door, v. 36, 37. These particulars, thus largely recorded, seem of little use to us now; yet having been of great use to Moses and Israel, and God having thought fit to preserve down to us the remembrance of them, we ought not to overlook them. Even the antiquity renders this account venerable.

1. Moreover, thou shalt make the tabernacle with ten curtains of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet: with cherubims of cunning work shalt thou make them. 2. The length of one curtain shall be eight and twenty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: and every one of the curtains shall have one measure. 3. The five curtains shall be coupled together one to another; and other five curtains shall be coupled one to another. 4. And thou shalt make loops of blue upon the edge of the one curtain, from the selvedge in the coupling; and likewise shalt thou make in the uttermost edge of another curtain in the coupling of the second. 5. Fifty loops shalt thou make in the one curtain, and fifty loops shalt thou make in the edge of the curtain that is in the coupling of the second, that the loops may take hold one of another. 6. And thou shalt make fifty taches of gold, and couple the curtains together with the taches; and it shall be one tabernacle...

The house must be a tabernacle or tent, such as soldiers now use in the camp, which was both a mean dwelling and a moveable one; and yet the ark of God had no better till Solomon built the temple, 480 years after this, 1 Kings, 6. 1. God manifested his presence among them thus in a tabernacle, 1. In compliance with their present condition in the wilderness, that they might have him with them whenever they went. Note, God suits the tokens of his favour, and the gifts of his grace, to his people’s wants and necessities, according as they are; accommodating his mercy to their state, prosperous or ad erce, settled or unsettled. When thou wast least among the nations of the earth, thou wast his deliverer, and will make thee as a city to be built, Isa. 61. 3. 2. That it might represent the state of God’s church in this world, it is a tabernacle state, Ps. 15. 1. We have here no continuing city; being strangers in this world, and travellers towards a better, we shall never be fixed till we come to heaven. Church-privileges are moveable goods from one place to another; the gospel is not tied to any place; the candlestick is in a tent, and may easily be taken away, Rev. 2. 2. If we make much of the tabernacle, and improve the privileges of wherever we go it will accompany us; but, if we neglect and disgrace it, wherever we stay it will forsake us; What hath my beloved to do in my house? Jer. 11. 15.

Note, (1.) The curtains of the tabernacle were to be very rich, the best of the kind, fine twined linen; and colours very pleasing, blue, and purple, and scarlet. (2.) They were to be embroidered with cherubims, (v. 15,) to intitle that the angels of God pitch their tents round about the church, Ps. 34. 7. As there were cherubims over the mercy-seat, so there were round the tabernacle; for we find the angels compassing, not only the throne, but the elders; see Rev. 5. 11. (3.) There were to be two hangings, five breadth each in one sewed together, and the two hangings coupled together with golden clasps, or tacks, so that it might be all one tabernacle, v. 6. Thus the churches of Christ and the saints, though they are many, yet they are one, being fitly joined together in holy love, and, by the unity of the Spirit, so growing into one holy temple in the Lord, Eph. 2. 21, 22.—4. 16. This tabernacle was very strait and narrow; but, at the preaching of the gospel, the church is bid to enlarge the place of her tent, and to stretch forth her curtains, Isa. 54. 2.

7. And thou shalt make curtains of goats’ hair, to be a covering upon the tabernacle: eleven curtains shalt thou make. 8. The length of one curtain shall be thirty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: and the eleven curtains shall be all of one measure. 9. And thou shalt couple five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves, and shalt double the sixth curtain in the forefront of the tabernacle. 10. And thou shalt make fifty loops on the edge of the one curtain that is outmost in the coupling, and fifty loops in the edge of the curtain which coupleth the second. 11. And thou shalt make fifty taches of brass, and put the taches into the loops, and couple the tent together, that it may be one. 12. And the remnant that remaineth of the curtains of the tent, the half-curtain, that remaineth, shall hang over the back side of the tabernacle. 13. And a cubit on the one side, and a cubit on the other side, of that which remaineth in the length of the curtains of the tent, it shall hang over the sides of the tabernacle on this side and on that side, to cover it. 14. And thou shalt make a covering for the tent of rams' skins dyed red, and a covering above of badgers' skins.

Moses is here ordered to make a double covering for the tabernacle, that it might not rain in, and that the beauty of those fine curtains might not be damaged.

1. There was to be a covering of hair camlet curtains, which were somewhat larger every way than the inner curtains, because they were to inclose them, and probably were stretched out at some little distance from them, v. 7. &c. These were coupled together with brass clasps. The stuff being less valuable, the tacks were so; but the brass tacks would answer the intention as effectually as the golden ones. The bonds of unity may be as strong between curtains of goat's hair as between those of purple and scarlet.

2. Over this there was to be another covering, and that a double one; (v. 14.) one of rams' skins dyed red, probably dressed with the wool on; another of badgers' skins, so we translate it; but it should rather seem to have been some strong sort of leather, (but very fine,) for we read of the best sort of shoes being made of it, Ezek. 16.10. Now observe here, (1.) That the outside of the tabernacle was coarse and rough, the beauty of it was in the inner curtains. Those in whom God dwells, must labour to be better than they seem to be. Hypocrites put the best side outward, like whitened sepulchres but the king's daughter is all glorious within; (Ps. 45. 13.) in the eye of the world, black as the tents of Kedar, but in the eye of God, coming as the curtains of Solomon, Cant. 1. 5. Let our adorning be that of the hidden man of the heart, which God values, 1 Pet. 3. 4. (2.) That where God places his glory, he will create a defence upon it; even upon the habitations of the righteous there shall be a covert, Isa. 6. 5, 6. The protection of Providence shall always be upon the beauty of holiness. God's tent will be a pavilion. Ps. 27. 5.

15. And thou shalt make boards for the tabernacle of shittim-wood standing up. 16. Ten cubits shall be the length of a board, and a cubit and a half shall be the breadth of one board. 17. Two tenons shall there be in one board, set in order one against another; thus shalt thou make for all the boards of the tabernacle. 18. And thou shalt make the boards for the tabernacle, twenty boards on the south side southward. 19. And thou shalt make forty sockets of silver under another board; two sockets under one board for his two tenons, and two sockets under another board for his two tenons. 20. And for the second side of the tabernacle, on the north side, there shall be twenty boards. 21. And their forty sockets of silver: two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board. 22. And for the sides of the tabernacle westward thou shalt make six boards. 23. And two boards shalt thou make for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides. 24. And they shall be coupled together beneath, and they shall be coupled together above the head of it unto one ring: thus shall it be for them both; they shall be for the two corners. 25. And they shall be eight boards, and their sockets of silver, sixteen sockets; two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board. 26. And thou shalt make bars of shittim-wood; five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle, 27. And five bars for the boards of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the side of the tabernacle, for the two sides westward. 28. And the middle bar in the midst of the boards shall reach from end to end. 29. And thou shalt overlay the boards with gold, and make their rings of gold for places for the bars: and thou shalt overlay the bars with gold. 30. And thou shalt rear up the tabernacle according to the fashion thereof which was shown thee in the mount.

Very particular directions are here given about the boards of the tabernacle, which were to bear up the curtains, as the stakes of a tent, which had need to be strong, Isa. 54. 2. These boards had tenons, which fell into the mortises, that were made for them in silver bases. God took care to have every thing strong, as well as fine, in his tabernacle. Curtains without boards would have been shaken by every wind; but it is a good thing to have the heart estab- lished with grace, which is as the boards to support the curtains of profession, which otherwise will not hold out long. The boards were coupled together with gold rings at top and bottom, (v. 24.) and kept firm with bars that ran through golden staples in every board; (v. 26.) and the boards and bars were all richly gilded, v. 29. Thus every thing in the tabernacle was very splendid, agreeable to that infant state of the church, when such showings were proper enough to please children, to possess the minds of the worshippers with a reverence of the divine glory, and to affect them with the greatness of that Prince who said, Here will I dwell; in allusion to this, the new Jerusalem is said to be of pure gold, Rev. 21. 18. But the builders of the gospel-church said, Silver and gold have we none; and yet the glory of their building far exceeded that of the tabernacle, 2 Cor. 3. 10, 11. How much better is wisdom than gold! No orders are given here about the floor of the tabernacle; probably, that also was boarded; for we cannot think that within all these fine curtains they trod upon the cold or wet ground; if it were so left, it may remind us of ch. 20. 24. An altar of earth shalt thou make unto me.

31. And thou shalt make a vail of blue and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, of cuning work: with cherubims shall it be made. 32. And thou shalt hang it upon four pillars of shittim-wood overlaid with gold: their hooks shall be of gold, upon the four sockets of silver. 33. And thou shalt hang up the vail under the taches, that thou mayest bring in thither within the vail the ark of the testimony: and the vail shall divide unto you between the holy place and the most holy.

And, 8. which and all II. 4. 8.

The apostle tells us, (Heb. 9. 8.) what was the meaning of this vail; it intimated that the ceremonial law could not make the corners thereunto perfect, nor would the observance of it bring men to heaven; the way into the holiest of all was not made manifest, while the first tabernacle was standing; life and immortality lay concealed, till they were brought to light by the gospel; which was therefore signified by the rending of this vail at the death of Christ, Matth. 27. 51, 52. We have now boldness to enter into the holiest, in all acts of devotion, by the blood of Jesus; yet such as obliges us to a holy regard, and a humble sense of our distance.

2. Another vail was for the outer door of the tabernacle, v. 36, 37. Through this first vail the priests went in every day to minister in the holy place, but not the people, Heb. 9. 6. This vail was all the defence the tabernacle had against thieves and robbers, which might easily be broken through, for it could be neither locked nor barred, and the abundance of wealth in the tabernacle, one would think, might be a temptation; but on leaving it thus exposed, (1.) The priests and Levites would be so much the more obliged to keep a strict watch upon it, and, (2.) God would show his care of his church on earth, though it is weak and defenceless, and continually exposed. A curtain shall be (if God please to make it so) as strong a defence to his house, as gates of brass and bars of iron.

CHAP. XXVII.

In this chapter, directions are given, 1. Concerning the brazen altar for burnt-offerings, v. 1. 8. 2. Concerning the court of the tabernacle, with the hangings of it, v. 9. 19. 3. Concerning oil for the lamp, v. 20. 21.

1. A

AND thou shalt make an altar of shittim-wood, five cubits long, and five cubits broad; the altar shall be foursquare, and the height thereof shall be three cubits.

2. And thou shalt make the horns of it upon the four corners thereof: his horns shall be of the same: and thou shalt overlay it with brass.

3. And thou shalt make his pans to receive his ashes, and his shovels, and his basons, and his flesh-hooks, and his fire-pans: all the vessels thereof thou shalt make of brass.

4. And thou shalt make for it a grate of net-work of brass; and upon the net shalt thou make four brazen rings in the four corners thereof.

5. And thou shalt put it under the compass of the altar beneath, that the net may be even to the midst of the altar.

6. And thou shalt make staves for the altar, staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with brass.

7. And the staves shall be put into the rings, and the staves shall be upon the two sides of the altar, to bear it.

8. Hollow with boards shalt thou make it: as it was showed thee in the mount, so shall they make it.

As God intended in the tabernacle to manifest his presence among his people, so there they were to pay their devotions to him, not in the tabernacle itself, (into that only the priests entered as God's devoted servants,) but in the court before the tabernacle, where, as common subjects, they attended. There an altar was ordered to be set up, to which they must bring their sacrifices, and on which their priests must offer them to God; and this altar was to sanctify their gifts; hence they were to present their services to God, as from the mercy-seat he gave his oracles to them; and thus a communion was settled between God and Israel. Moses is here directed about, 1. The dimensions of it; it was square, v. 1. 2. The horns of it, (v. 2.) which were for ornament and for use; the sacrifices were bound with cords to the horns of the altar, and to them malefactors fled for refuge. 3. The materials; it was of wood overlaid with brass, v. 1, 2. 4. The appendances of it, (v. 3.) which were all of brass. 5. The grate, which was let into the hollow of the altar, about the middle of it, in which the fire was kept, and the sacrifice burnt; it was made of net-work like a sieve, and hung hollow, that the fire might burn the better, and that the ashes might fall through into the hollow of the altar, v. 4, 5.

6. The staves with which it must be carried, v. 6, 7. And, lastly, He is referred to the pattern showed him, v. 8.

Now the brazen altar was a type of Christ dying to make atonement for our sins: the wood had been consumed by the fire from heaven, if it had not been secured by the brass; nor could the human nature of Christ have borne the wrath of God, if it had not been supported by a divine power. Christ sanctified himself for his church, as their altar, (John 17. 19.) and by his mediation sanctifies the daily services of his people, who also have a right to eat of this altar, (Heb. 13. 10.) for they serve it as spiritual priests. To the horns of this altar poor sinners fly for refuge when justice pursues them, and there they are safe in the virtue of the sacrifice there offered.

9. And thou shalt make the court of the tabernacle: for the south side southward there shall be hangings for the court of fine
EXODUS, XXVIII.

And thou shalt command the children of Israel, that they bring thee pure olive oil beaten for the light, to cause the lamp to burn always. In the tabernacle of the congregation without the vail, which is before the testimony, Aaron and his sons shall order it from evening to morning before the Lord. It shall be a statute for ever unto their generations on the behalf of the children of Israel.

We read of the candlestick in the twenty-fifth chapter; here is an order given for the keeping of the lamps constantly burning in it, else it was useless; in every candlestick there should be a burning and shining light; candlesticks without candles are as voids without water, or as clouds without rain. Now, 1. The people were to provide the oil; from them the Lord's ministers must have their maintenance. Or, rather, the pure oil signified the gifts and graces of the Spirit, which are communicated to all believers from Christ the good Olive, of whose fullness we receive, (Zech. 4. 11, 12.) and without which our light cannot shine before men. 2. The priests were to light the lamps, and to tend them; it was part of their daily service to cause the lamp to burn always, night and day; thus it is the work of ministers, by the preaching and expounding of the scriptures, (which are as a lamp,) to enlighten the church, God's tabernacle upon earth, and to direct the spiritual priests in his service. This is to be a statute for ever, that the lamps of the word be lighted as duly as the incense of prayer and praise is offered.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Orders being given for the fitting up of the place of worship, in this and the following chapter, care is taken about the priests that were to minister in this holy place, as the menial wants were in the land of Israel. He hired servants, as a token of his purpose to reside among them. In this chapter, I. He pitches upon the persons who should be his servants, v. 1. II. He appoints their lives, their work was holy, and so must their garments be; and answerable to the glory of the house which was now to be erected, v. 2-5. 1. He appoints the garments of his head servant, the high priest, which were very rich. (1.) An ephod and girdle, v. 6—14. (2.) A breast-plate of judgment, (v. 15—28.) in which must be put the Urim and Thummim, v. 30. (3.) The robe of the ephod, v. 31—35. (4.) The mitre, v. 36—39. 2. The garments of the inferior priests, v. 40—43. And these also were shadows of good things to come.

AND take thou unto thee Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him, from among the children of Israel, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office, even Aaron, Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar, Aaron's sons. 2. And thou shalt make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, for glory and for beauty. 3. And thou shalt speak unto all that are wise-hearted, whom I have filled with the spirit of wisdom, that they may make Aaron's garments to consecrate him, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office. 4. And these are the garments which they shall make; a breast-plate, and an ephod, and a robe, and a broidered coat, a mitre, and a girdle: and they shall make holy garments for Aaron thy brother, and his sons, that he may minister unto me in the priest's office. 5. And they shall take gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen.

We have here, 1. The priests nominated, Aaron and his sons, v. 1. Hitherto, every master of a family was priest to his own family, and offered, as he saw cause, upon altars of earth; but now that the families of Israel began to be incorporated into a nation, and a tabernacle of the congregation was to be erected, as a visible symbol of their unity, it was requisite there should be a public priesthood instituted. Moses, who had hitherto officiated, and is therefore reckoned among the priests of the Lord, (Ps. 99. 6.) had enough to do as their prophet to consult the oracle for them, and as their prince to judge among them; nor was he desirous to engross all the honours to himself, or to entail on that of the priesthood, which alone he had a right to wear. But the very well pleased to see his brother, brother Moses, and did not decline the office, (ch. 7. 1.) is now advanced to be a priest, a high priest, to God; for he will exalt those that abase themselves. Nor could any man have taken this honour to himself, but he that was called of God to it, Heb. 5. 4. God had said of Israel in general, that they should be to him a kingdom of priests, ch. 19. 6. But, because it was requisite that those who ministered in the ark also should give themselves wholly to the service, and because that which is every body's work will soon come to be nobody's work, God here chose from among them one to be a family of priests, the father and his four sons; and from Aaron's loins descended all the priests of the Jewish church, whom we read so often of, both in the Old Testament and in the New. A blessed thing it is, when real holiness goes, as this ceremonial holiness did, by succession in a family.

II. The priest's garments, appointed for glory and beauty, v. 2. Some of the richest materials were to be provided, (v. 5.) and the best artists employed in the making of them, whose skill God, by a special gift for this purpose, would improve to a very high degree, v. 3. Note, Eminence, even in common arts, is a gift of God; it comes from him, and, as there is occasion, it ought to be used for him. By the priest's girdle, when the husbandman discretion, teaches the tradesman also; both therefore ought to honour God with their gain. Human learning ought particularly to be consecrated to the service of the priesthood, and employed for the adorning of those that minister about holy things.

The garments appointed were, 1. Four, which both the high priest and the inferior priests wore, namely, the linen breeches, the linen coat, the linen girdle which fastened it to them, and the bonet or turban; that which the high priest wore is called a mitre. 2. Four more, which were peculiar to the high priest, namely, the ephod, with the curious girdle of it, the breast-plate of judgment, the long robe with the bells, and pomegranates at the bottom of it, and the golden plate on his forehead. These glorious garments were appointed for the priests themselves, in which they were reminded of the dignity of their office, and might behave themselves with due decorum. (2.) That the people might thereby be possessed with a holy reverence of that God whose ministers appeared in such grandeur. (3.) That the priests might be types of Christ, who should offer himself without spot to God, and of all Christians who have the beauty of holiness put upon them, in which they are consecrated to God. Our adorning, now under the gospel, both that of ministers and Christians, is not to be of gold, and pearl, and costly array, but the garments of salvation, and the robe of righteousness, Isa. 61. 10. Ps. 132. 9, 16. As the filthy garments, wherewith Joshua the high priest was clothed, signified the iniquity which cleaved to his priesthood, from which care was taken that it should be purged, (Zech. 3. 3, 4.) so these holy garments signified the perfect purity that there is in the priesthood of Christ; he is holy, harmless, and undefiled.

6. And they shall make the ephod of gold, of blue, and of purple, of scarlet, and fine twined linen, with cunning work. 7. It shall have the two shoulder-plates thereof joined at the two edges thereof; and so it shall be joined together. 8. And the curious girdle of the ephod, which is upon it, shall be of the same, according to the work thereof; even of gold, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen. 9. And thou shalt take two onyx-stones, and set them in their setting in the ephod, to be tokens of the children of Israel: thou shalt make them to set in ouches. 10. Six of their names on one stone, and the other six names of the rest on the other stone, according to their birth. 11. With the work of an engraver in stone, like the engravings of a signet, shalt thou engrave the two stones with the names of the children of Israel: thou shalt make them to be set in ouches of gold. 12. And thou shalt put the two stones upon the shoulders of the ephod, for stones of memorial unto the children of Israel. And Aaron shall bear their names before the LORD upon his shoulders for a memorial. 13. And thou shalt make ouches of gold; and two chains of pure gold at the ends; of wreathein-work shalt thou make them, and fasten the wreathein chains to the ouches.

Directions are here given concerning the ephod, which was the outmost garment of the high priest: linen ephods were worn by the inferior priests, 1 Sam. 22. 18. Samuel wore one, when he was a child, (1 Sam. 2. 18.) and David when he danced before the ark; (2 Sam. 6. 14.) but this, which the high priest only wore, was called a golden ephod, because there was a great deal of gold woven into it; it was a short coat without sleeves, butted close to him with a curious girdle of the same stuff; (v. 6, 8.) the shoulder pieces were buttoned together with two precious stones set in gold, one on each shoulder, on which were graven the names of the children of Israel, v. 9. 12. In allusion to this, 1. Christ, our High Priest, appeared to John, girt about the paps with a golden girdle, such as was the curious girdle of the ephod, Rev. 1. 13. His goodness is the girdle of his loins, (Isa. 11. 5.) and shall bind him, Eph. 6. 14. He is girt with strength for the work of our salvation, and is ready for it. 2. The government is said to be upon his shoulders, (Isa. 9. 6.) as Aaron had the names of all Israel upon his shoulders in precious stones. He presents to himself, and to his Father a glorious church, Eph. 5. 27. He has power to support them, interest to recommend them, and it is in him that they are remembered with honour and favour; he bears them before the Lord for a memorial, (v. 12.) in token of his appearing before God as the Representative of all Israel, and an Advocate for them.

15. And thou shalt make the breastplate of judgment with cunning work; after the work of the ephod thou shalt make it; of gold, of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine twined linen, shalt thou make it. 16. Foursquare it shall be, being doubled; a span shall be the length thereof, and a span shall be the breadth thereof. 17. And thou shalt set in it settings of stones, even four rows of stones: the first row shall be a sardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle: this shall be the first row. 18. And the second row shall be an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond. 19. And the third row a figure, an agate, and an amethyst. 20. And the fourth row a beryl, and an onyx, and a jasper: they shall be set in gold in their enclosings. 21. And the stones shall be with the names of the children of Israel, twelve, according to their names, like the engravings of a signet; every one with his name shall they be according to the twelve tribes. 22. And thou shalt make upon the breastplate chains at the ends of wraften-work of pure gold. 23. And thou shalt make upon the breastplate two rings of gold, and shalt put the two rings on the two ends of the breastplate. 24. And thou shalt put the two wraften chains of gold in the two rings which are on the ends of the breastplate. 25. And the other two ends of the two wraften chains thou shalt fasten in the twoouches, and put them on the shoulder-pieces of the ephod before it. 26. And thou shalt make two rings of gold, and thou shalt put them upon the two ends of the breastplate, in the border thereof, which is in the side of the ephod inward. 27. And two other rings of gold thou shalt make, and shalt put them on the two sides of the ephod underneath, toward the forepart thereof, over against the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod. 28. And they shall bind the breastplate by the rings thereof unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it may be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breastplate be not loosed from the ephod. 29. And Aaron shall bear the names of the children of Israel in the breastplate of judgment upon his heart, when he goeth in unto the holy place, for a memorial before the LORD continually. 30. And thou shalt put in the breastplate of judgment the Urim and the Thummim; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before the LORD: and Aaron shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart before the LORD continually.

The most considerable of the ornaments of the high priest was this breast-plate, a rich piece of cloth, curiously wrought with gold and purple, two spans long, and a span broad, so that, being doubled, it was a span square, v. 16. This was fastened to the ephod with wraften chains of gold, (v. 13, 14, 22, &c.) both for beauty and to prevent the breast-plate from being loosed from the ephod, v. 28. The ephod was the garment of service, the breast-plate of judgment an emblem of honour; these two must by no means be separated. If any man will minister unto the LORD, and do his will, he shall know his doctrine. In this breast-plate, 1. The tribes of Israel were recommended to God's favour in twelve precious stones, v. 17...21. Some question whether Levi had a precious stone with his name on or no. If not, Ephraim and Manasseh were reckoned distinct, as Jacob had said they should be, and the high priest himself, being head of the tribe of Levi, sufficiently represented that tribe. If there was a stone for Levi, as is intimated by that, that they were engrafted according to their birth, (v. 10.) Ephraim and Manasseh were one in Joseph. Aaron was to bear their names for a memorial before the Lord continually, being ordained for men, to represent them in things pertaining to God, herein typifying our great High Priest, who always appears in the presence of God for us. 1. Though the people were forbidden to come near, and obliged to keep their distance, yet, by the high priest, who had their names on his breast-plate, they entered into the holiest; so believers, even while they are here on this earth, not only enter before the throne of God, but by faith are admitted into Christ in heavenly places, Eph. 2. 6. 2. The name of each tribe was engrafted in a precious stone, to signify how precious, in God's sight, believers are, and how honourable, Isa. 43. 4. They shall be his in the day he makes up his jewels, Mal. 3. 17. How small and poor soever the tribe was, it was a precious stone in the breast-plate of the high-priest; thus are all the saints dear to Christ; and his delight is in them as the excellent ones of the earth, however men esteem them as earthen pitchers, Lam. 4. 2. 3. The high priest had the names of the tribes both on his shoulders and on his breast, intimating both the power and the love with which our Lord Jesus intercedes for those that are his. He not only bears them up in his arms with an almighty strength, but he bears them upon his heart, as the expression here is; (v. 29.) carries them in his bosom, (Isa. 40. 1.) with the most cordial affection. How should Christ's name be to our hearts, since he is pleased to lay our names so near his; and what a comfort is it to us, in all our addresses to God, that the great High Priest of our profession has the names of all his Israel upon his breast before the Lord, for a memorial, presenting them to God, as the people of his choice, who were to be made accepted in the beloved? Let not any good Christians fear that God has forgotten them, nor that his being mindful of them upon all occasions, when they are not only graven upon the palms of his hands, (Isa. 49. 16.) but graven upon the heart of the great Intercessor. See Cant. 8. 6.

II. The Urim and Thummim, by which the will of God was made known in doubtful cases, were put in this breast-plate, which is therefore called the breast-plate of judgment, v. 38. Urim and Thummim signify, without end; and though there are among the learned what they were; we have no reason to think they were anything that Moses was to make, more than what was before ordered; so that either God made them himself, and gave them to Moses, for him to put into the breast-plate, when other things were prepared, (Lev. 8.) or, no more is meant than a declaration of the further use of what was already ordered to be made. I think the words may be read thus: And thou shalt give, or add, or deliver, to the breast-plate of... judgment, the illumine visions and perfections, and they shall be upon the heart of Aaron; that is, "He shall be endued with the power of knowing and making known the mind of God in all difficult doubtful cases, relating either to the civil or ecclesiasticall state of the nation." Their government was a theocracy; God was their King, the high priest was, under God, their ruler, the Urin and Thummin were his cabinet council; probably Moses wrote upon the breast-plate, or wove into it, these words, Urin and Thummin, to signify that the high priest, having on him this breast-plate, and asking counsel of God in any emergency relating to the public, should be directed to take those measures, and give that advice, which God would own. If he was standing before the ark, (but without the vail,) probably he received instructions from off the mercy-seat, as Moses did; (ch. 25. 22.) thus, it should seem, Phineas did; Judg. 30. 27, 28. If he was at distance from the ark, as Abishar was when he inquired of the Lord for David, (1 Sam. 23. 6, &c.) then the answer was given either by a voice from heaven, or rather by an impulse upon the mind of the High Priest, which last is perhaps intimated in that expression, He shall bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart. This oracle was of great use to Israel; Joshua consulted it, (Num. 27. 21.) and, it is likely, the judges and other leaders of Israel, when they were in the captivity, and never regained after, though, it should seem, it was expected, Ezra 2. 63. But it was a shadow of good things to come, and the substance is Christ. He is our Oracle; by him God in these last days makes known himself and his mind to us, Heb. 1. 1. John 1. 18. Divine revelation centres in him, and comes to us through him; he is the Light, the true Light, the faithful Witness, the Truth itself, and from him we receive the deposit of truths in this dispensation. The joining of the breast-plate to the ephod denotes that his prophetical office was founded in his priesthood; and it was by the merit of his death that he purchased this honour for himself, and this favour for us. It was the Lamb that had been slain, that was worthy to take the book, and to open the seals, Rev. 5. 9.

31. And thou shalt make the robe of the ephod all of blue. 32. And there shall be a hole in the top of it, in the midst thereof: it shall have a binding of woven work round about the hole of it, as it were the hole of a habergeon, that it be not rent. 33. And beneath, upon the hem of it, thou shalt make pomegranates of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, round about the hem thereof; and bells of gold between them round about: 34. A golden bell and a pomegranate, a golden bell and a pomegranate, upon the hem of the robe round about. 35. And it shall be upon Aaron to minister; and his sound shall be heard when he goeth in unto the holy place before the Lord, and when he cometh out, that he die not. 36. And thou shalt make a plate of pure gold, and grave upon it, like the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD. 37. And thou shalt put it upon a blue lace, that it may be upon the mitre: upon the fore-front of the mitre it shall be. 38. And it shall be upon Aaron's forehead, that Aaron may bear the iniquity of the holy things which the children of Israel shall lay in all their holy gifts; and it shall be always upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before the Lord. 39. And thou shalt embroider the coat of fine linen, and thou shalt make the mitre of fine linen, and thou shalt make the girdle of needle-work.

Here is 1. Direction given concerning the robe of the ephod, v. 31...35. This was next under the ephod, and reached down to the knees, without sleeves, and was put on over their head, having holes on the sides to put the arms through, or, as Maimonides describes it, was not sewed together on the sides at all. The hole on the top, through which the head was put, was carefully bound about, that it might not tear in the putting on. In religious worship, care must be taken to prevent every thing that may distract the minds of the worshippers, or render the service despicable. Round the skirts of the robe were hung golden bells, and the representations of pomegranates made of yarn of divers colours. The pomegranates added to the beauty of the robe, and the sound of the bells gave notice to the people in the outer court, when he went in to the holy place to burn incense, that they might then apply themselves to their devotions at the same time. (Luke 1. 10.) In token of their converse with him in his offering, and their hopes of the ascent of their prayers to God in the virtue of the incense he offered. Aaron must come near, to minister in the garments that were appointed him, that he die not. It is at his peril if he attend otherwise than according to the institution. This intimates, that we must serve the Lord with fear and holy trembling; as those that know we deserve to die, and are in danger of making some fatal mistake. Some make the bells of the holy robe to typify the sound of the gospel of Christ in the world, giving notice of his entrance within the veil for us; Blessed are they that hear this joyful sound, Ps. 89. 15. The joining of the pomegranates, which are a fragrant fruit, denotes the sweet savour of the gospel, as well as the joyful sound of it, for it is a savour of life unto life. The church is called an orchard of pomegranates.

2. Concerning the golden plate fixed upon Aaron's forehead, on which must be engraven, Holiness to the Lord, (v. 36, 37.) or the Holiness of Jehovah. Aaron must hereby be reminded that God is holy, and that his priests must be holy; Holiness becomes his house and household. The High Priest must be sequestered from all pollution, and consecrated to God, and to his service and honour; and so must all his ministrations be. All that attend in God's house must have Holiness to the Lord engraven upon their foreheads, that is, they must be holy, devoted to the Lord, and designing his glory in all they do. This must appear in their forehead, in an open profession of their relation to God, as those that are not ashamed to own it, and in a conversation in the world answerable to it. It must likewise be engrav'd like the engravings of a signet, so deep, so durable, not painted to be washed off, but engraved and lastingly put to holiness to the Lord. Aaron must have this upon his forehead, that he may bear the iniquity of the holy things, (v. 38.) and that they may be accepted before the Lord. Herein he was a type of Christ, the great Mediator between God and man, through whom it is that we have to do with God. (i.) Through him what is amiss in our services is forgiven. The divine law is strict; in many things we come short of our duty, so that we cannot but be conscious to ourselves of much iniquity cleaving

even to our holy things; when we would do good, evil is present; even this would be our ruin if God should enter into judgment with us. But Christ, our High Priest, bears this iniquity, bears it for us, so as to bear it from us, and through him it is forgiven to us, and not laid to our charge. (2.) Through him, what is good is accepted; our persons, our performances, are pleasing to God upon the account of Christ's intercession, and not otherwise, 1 Pet. 2. 5. His being Holiness to the Lord, recommends all those to the divine favour that are interested in his righteousness, and clothed with his Spirit. And therefore he has said, it was for our sakes that he sanctified himself, John 17. 19.

Having such a High Priest, we come boldly to the throne of grace, Heb. 4. 14, 15. The rest of the garments are but named, (v. 39.) because there was nothing extraordinary in them. The embroidered coat of fine linen was the innermost of the priestly garments; it reached to the feet, and the sleeves to the wrists, and was bound to the body with a girdle or sash of needle-work. The mitre, or diadem, was of linen, such as kings anciently wore in the East, typifying the kingly office of Christ. He is a Priest upon a throne, 1 Pet. 2. 15. and a Priest with a crown. These two God has joined, and we must not think to separate them.

40. And for Aaron's sons thou shalt make coats, and thou shalt make for them girdles, and bonnets shalt thou make for them, for glory and for beauty. 41. And thou shalt put them upon Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him; and shalt anoint them, and consecrate them, and sanctify them, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office.

42. And thou shalt make them linen breeches to cover their nakedness; from the loins even unto the thighs they shall reach. 43. And they shall be upon Aaron, and upon his sons, when they come in unto the tabernacle of the congregation, or when they come near unto the altar to minister in the holy place; that they bear not iniquity, and die. It shall be a statute for ever unto him, and his seed after him.

We have here,

1. Particular orders about the vestments of the inferior priests. They were to have coats, and girdles, and bonnets, of the same materials with those of the high priest; but there was a difference in shape between their bonnets and his mitre. Theirs, as his, were to be for glory and beauty, (v. 40.) that they might look great in their ministration; yet all this glory was nothing compared with the glory of grace, this beauty nothing to the beauty of holiness, of which these holy garments were typical. They are particularly ordered, in their ministration, to wear linen breeches, v. 42.

This teaches us modesty and decency of garb and gesture, at all times, especially in public worship, in which a vail is becoming, 1 Cor. 11. 3, 6, 10. It also intimates what need our souls have of a covering when we come before God, that the shame of their nakedness may not appear.

2. A general rule concerning the garments both of the high priest, and of the inferior priests, that they were to be put upon them, at first, when they were consecrated, in token of their being invested in the office; (v. 41.) and then, they were to wear them in all their ministrations, but not at other times, (v. 43.) and this, at their peril, lest they bear iniquity, and die. Those who are guilty of omissions in duty, as well as omissions of duty, shall bear their iniquity. If the priests perform the instituted service, and do not do it in the appointed garments, it is (say the Jewish doctors) as if a stranger did it, and the stranger that comes high shall be put to death. Nor will God connive at the presumptions and irreverences even of those whom he causes to draw most near to him; if Aaron himself put a slight upon the divine institution, he shall bear iniquity, and die. To us these garments typify, (1.) The righteousness of Christ; if we appear not before God in that, we shall bear iniquity, and die. What have we to do at the wedding with a wedding-vesture? or at God's altar, without the array of his priests? Math. 22. 12, 13. (2.) The armour of God prescribed, Eph. 6. 13. If we venture without that armour, our spiritual enemies will be the death of our souls, and we shall bear the iniquity, our blood will be upon our own heads. Blessed is he therefore that watcheth, and keepeth his garments, Rev. 16. 15.

Lastly, This is said to be a statute for ever, that is, it is to continue as long as the priesthood continues. But it is to have its peremptory in the substance, of which these things were the shadows.

CHAP. XXIX.

Particular orders are given in this chapter, I. Concerning the consecration of the priests, and the sanctification of the altar, v. 1. 37. 2. Concerning the daily sacrifice, v. 38. 41. To which gracious promises are annexed, that God would own and bless them in all their services, v. 42. 46.

1. AND this is the thing that thou shalt do unto them, to hallow them, to minister unto me in the priest's office: Take one young bullock, and two rams without blemish, 2. And unleavened bread, and cakes unleavened tempered with oil, and wafers unleavened anointed with oil; of wheaten flour shalt thou make them. 3. And thou shalt put them into one basket, and bring them in the basket, with the bullock and the two rams. 4. And Aaron and his sons shalt thou bring unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and shalt wash them with water. 5. And thou shalt take the garments, and put upon Aaron the coat, and the ephod of the ephod, and the ephod, and the breastplate, and gird him with the curious girdle of the ephod: 6. And thou shalt put the mitre upon his head, and put the holy crown upon the mitre. 7. Then shalt thou take the anointing oil, and pour it upon his head, and anoint him. 8. And thou shalt bring his sons, and put coats upon them. 9. And thou shalt gird them with girdles, Aaron and his sons, and put the bonnets on them: and the priest's office shall be theirs for a perpetual statute: and thou shalt consecrate Aaron and his sons. 10. And thou shalt cause a bullock to be brought before the tabernacle of the congregation: and Aaron and his sons shall put his hand's upon the head of the bullock. 11. And thou shalt kill the bullock before the Lord, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. 12. And thou shalt take of the blood of the bullock, and put it upon the horns of the altar with thy finger, and pour all the blood beside the bottom of the altar. 13. And thou shalt take all the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul that is above the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and burn them upon the altar. 14. But the flesh of the bullock, and his skin, and his dung, shalt thou burn with fire without the camp: it is a sin-offering. 15. Thou shalt also take one ram; and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the ram. 16. And thou shalt slay the ram, and thou shalt take his blood, and sprinkle it round about upon the altar. 17. And thou shalt cut the ram in pieces, and wash the inwards of him, and his legs, and put them unto his pieces, and unto his head. 18. And thou shalt burn the whole ram upon the altar: it is a burnt-offering unto the Lord: it is a sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the Lord. 19. And thou shalt take the other ram; and Aaron and his sons shall put their hands upon the head of the ram. 20. Then shalt thou kill the ram, and take of his blood, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of Aaron, and upon the tip of the right ear of his sons, and upon the thumb of their right hand, and upon the great toe of their right foot, and sprinkle the blood upon the altar round about. 21. And thou shalt take of the blood that is upon the altar, and of the anointing oil, and sprinkle it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon the garments of his sons with him: and he shall be hallowed, and his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him. 22. Also thou shalt take of the ram the fat and the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, and the right shoulder; for it is a ram of consecration: 23. And one loaf of bread, and one cake of oiled bread, and one wafer out of the basket of the unleavened bread that is before the Lord: 24. And thou shalt put all in the hands of Aaron, and in the hands of his sons, and shalt wave them for a wave-offering before the Lord. 25. And thou shalt receive them of their hands, and burn them upon the altar for a burnt-offering, for a sweet savour before the Lord: it is an offering made by fire unto the Lord. 26. And thou shalt take the breast of the ram of Aaron's consecration, and wave it for a wave-offering before the Lord: and it shall be thy part. 27. And thou shalt sanctify the breast of the wave-offering, and the shoulder of the heave-offering, which is waved, and which is heaved up, of the ram of the consecration, even of that which is for Aaron, and of that which is for his sons: 28. And it shall be Aaron's and his sons' by a statute for ever from the children of Israel; for it is a heave-offering: and it shall be a heave-offering from the children of Israel of the sacrifice of their peace-offerings, even their heave-offering unto the Lord. 29. And the holy garments of Aaron shall be his sons' after him, to be anointed therein, and to be consecrated in them. 30. And that son that is priest in his stead shall put them on seven days, when he cometh into the tabernacle of the congregation, to minister in the holy place. 31. And thou shalt take the ram of the consecration, and seethe his flesh in the holy place. 32. And Aaron and his sons shall eat the flesh of the ram, and the bread that is in the basket, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. 33. And they shall eat those things wherewith the atonement was made to consecrate and to sanctify them: but a stranger shall not eat thereof, because they are holy. 34. And if aught of the flesh of the consecrations, or of the bread, remain unto the morning, then thou shalt burn the remainder with fire: it shall not be eaten, because it is holy. 35. And thus shalt thou do unto Aaron, and to his sons, according to all things which I have commanded thee: seven days shalt thou consecrate them. 36 And thou shalt offer every day a bullock for a sin-offering for atonement: and thou shalt cleanse the altar, when thou hast made an atonement for it, and thou shalt anoint it, to sanctify it. 37. Seven days thou shalt make an atonement for the altar, and sanctify it; and it shall be an altar most holy: whatsoever toucheth the altar shall be holy.

I. The law concerning the confirmation of Aaron and his sons to the priest's office, which was to be done with a great deal of ceremony and solemnity, that they themselves might be duly affected with the greatness of the work to which they were called, and that the people also might learn to magnify the office, and none might dare to invade it. The ceremonies wherewith it was to be done were very fully and particularly appointed, because nothing of this kind had been done before, and because it was to be a statute for ever, that the high priest should be thus inaugurated. Now,

1. The work to be done was the consecrating of the persons whom God had chosen to be priests; by which they devoted and gave up themselves to the service of God, and God declared his acceptance of them; and the people were made to know that they glorified not themselves to be made priests, but were elected of God.

This was thus distinguished from common men, sequestered from common services, and set apart for God and an immediate attendent on him.
Note, All that are to be employed for God are to be sanctified to him. The person must first be acccepted, and then the performance. The Hebrew phrase for consecrating, is, filling the hand; (v. 9.)
Thou shalt fill the hand of Aaron and of his sons with the gift of consecration is the ram of fillings,
v. 22. 26. The consecrating of them was the perfec ting of them; Christ is said to be perfected or sanctified for evermore; Heb. 7. 28. Probably, the phrase here is borrowed from the putting of the sacrifice into their hand, to be waved before the Lord, v. 24. But it intimates, (1.) That ministers have their hands full; they have no time to trifle, so great, so copious, so constant, is their work. (2.)
That they must have their hands filled. Of necessity, they must have something to offer, and they cannot find it in themselves, it must be given them from above. They cannot fill the people's hearts, unless God fill their hands; to him therefore they must go, and receive from his fulness.

2. The person to it was Moses, by God's appointment. Though he was ordained for men, yet the people were not to consecrate to him; Moses was the servant of God, and his hand was therefore, must do it. By God's special appointment he now did the priest's work, and the office that which was the priest's part of the sacrifice was here ordered to be

3. The place was at the door of the tabernacle of meeting, v. 4. God was pleased to dwell in the tabernacle, the people attending in the courts, so that the door between the court and the tabernacle was the fittest place for them to be consecrated in, who were to mediate between God and man, and so to stand between both, and lay their hands (as it were) upon both. They were consecrated at the door, for they were to be door-keepers.

4. It was done with many ceremonies. (1.) They were to be washed, (v. 4.) signifying that they must be clean who bear the vessels of the Lord, Isa. 52. 11. They that sin, and are not perfect holiness, must have themselves purified from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, 2 Cor. 7. 1. Isa. 1. 16. 18. They were now washed all over; but afterward, when they went in to minister, they washed only their hands and feet; (ch. 30. 19.) for he that is washed, needs no more, John 13. 10. (2.) They were to be clothed with the holy garments, (v. 5, 6, 8, 9.) to signify that it was not sufficient for them to put away the pollutions of sin, but they must put on the graces of the Spirit, be clothed with righteousness, Ps. 132. 9. They must be girded as men prepared and strengthened for their work; and they must be robed, and crowned, as men that counted their work and office their true honour. (3.) The high priest was to be anointed with the holy anointing oil, (v. 7.) that the church might be filled, and delighted, with the grace of God; for by the anointing and perfumes rejoice the heart, and in token of the pouring out of the Spirit upon him, to qualify him for his work. Brotherly love is compared to this oil with which Aaron was anointed, Ps. 133. 2. The inferior priests are said to be anointed, (ch. 30. 30.) not on their heads, as the high priest, (Lev. 21. 10.) the oil was only mined with the hand that was sprinkled upon them; (v. 4.) Sacrifices were to be offered for them. The covenant of priesthood, as all other co mans, must be made by sacrifice.

[1.] There must be a sin-offering to make atonement for them, v. 10. 14. The law made them priests, that had infirmity, and therefore they must first offer for their own sin, before they could make atone ment for the people's sins, v. 17. 27. They were to put their hand on the head of their sacrifices, (v. 10.) confessing that they deserved to die for their own sin, and desiring that the killing of the beast might expiate their guilt, and be accepted as a vicarious satisfaction. It was used as other sin-offerings were; only, whereas the flesh of other sin-offerings was eaten by the priests, (Lev. 10.
17.) the flesh and blood of these sacrifices was not eaten by the priests, that by the people, this was appointed to be all burnt with-out the camp, (v. 14.) to signify the imperfection of the legal dispensation; (as the learned Bishop Patrick notes;) for the sins of the priests themselves could not be taken away by those sacrifices, but they must expect a better high Priest, and a better sacrifice.

[2.] There must be a burnt-offering, a ram wholly burnt, to the honour of God, in token of the dedication of themselves wholly to God and to his service, as living sacrifices, kindled with the fire, and ascending in the flame, of holy love, v.
15. 18. The sin-offering must first be offered, and then the burnt-offering; for, till guilt be removed, no acceptable service can be performed, Isa. 6. 7.

[3.] There must be a peace-offering: it is called the ram of consecration, because there was more in this, peculiar to the occasion, than in the other two.
In the burnt-offering, God had the glory of their priesthood, in this, they had the comfort of it: and in token of a mutual covenant between God and them, First, The blood of the sacrifice was divided between God and them; (v. 20, 21.) part of the blood was sprinkled upon the altar round about, and part put upon them, upon their bodies, (v. 20.)
The Lord was to make himself a high priest to the people by the blood of the peace-offering.
The blood of the expiation made by the sacrifice was applied and assured to them, and their whole selves from head to foot sanctified to the service of God. The blood was put upon the extreme parts of the body, to signify that it was all, as it were, enclosed and taken in for God, the tip of the ear, and the great toe, not excepted. We reckon that the blood and the flesh of the sacrifice must be put upon them; yet the holy oil, and the blood of the sacrif-ce, sprinkled upon their garments, must be looked upon as the greatest atoning imaginable to them, for they signified the blood of Christ, and the graces of the Spirit, which constitute and complete the beauty of holiness, and recommend us to God:
we read of roes made white with the blood of the Lamb. Secondly, The flesh of the sacrifice, with the meat-offering annexed to it, was likewise divided between God and them, that (to speak with reverence) God and they might feast together, in token of friendship and fellowship.

1. Part of it was to be first waved before the Lord, and then burnt upon the altar; part of the flesh, (v. 22.) part of the bread, for bread and flesh must go together; (v. 23.) these were first brought into the hands of Aaron in his admistrative capacity; and in token of their being offered to God, (who, though unseen, yet compasses us round on every side, and then they were to be burnt upon the altar, (v. 24. 25.) for the altar was to devour God's part of the sacrifice. Thus God admitted Aaron and his sons to be his servants, and wait at his table, taking the meat of his altar from their hands. Here, in a parenthesis, as it were, comes in the last verse of this chapter, discharging the priests' part of the peace-offerings after-ward, the breast and shoulder, which were now divided; Moses had the breast, and the shoulder was burnt on the altar with God's part, v.
2. The other part, both of the flesh of the ram, and of the bread, Aaron and his sons were to eat at the door of the tabernacle, (v. 31...33;) to signify that he called them not only servants, but friends, John 15. 15. He suffused with them, and put this him. Their eating of the portion with the atonement was made, signifies their receiving the atonement, as the expression is, (Rom. 5. 11;) their thankful acceptance of the benefit of it, and their joyful communion with God thereupon, which was the true intent and meaning of a feast upon a sacrifice. If any of it were left, it must be burnt, that it might not be in any danger of putrefying, and to show that it was an extraordinary peace-offering.

Lastly, The time that was to be spent in this consecration: Seven days shalt thou consecrate them, v. 35. Though all the ceremonies were performed on the first day, yet, (1.) They were not to look upon their consecration as completed till the seven days’ end, which put a solemnity upon their admission, and a distance between this and their former state, and obliged them to enter upon their duties with a pause, giving them time to consider the weight and severity of it. This was then observed in after-ages, v. 30. He that was to succeed Aaron in the high priesthood must put on the holy garments seven days together, in token of a deliberate and gradual advance into his office, and that one sabbath might pass over him in his consecration. (2.) Every day of the seven, in this first consecration, a bullock was to be offered for a sin-offering, (v. 35;) which was to intimate to them, [1.] That it was of very great concern to them to get their sins pardoned, and that, though atonement was made, and they had had the comfort of it, yet they must still keep up a penitent sense of sin, and often repeat the confession of it. [2.] That those sacrifices, which were thus offered day by day to make atonement, could not make the compliers thereunto perfect, for then they would have ceased to be offered, as the apostle argues, Heb. 10. 1, 2. They must therefore expect the bringing in of a better hope.

Now this consecration of the priests was a shadow of good things to come. First, Our Lord Jesus is the great High Priest of our profession, called of God to be so, consecrated for evermore, anointed with the Spirit above his fellows, whence he is called Messiah, the Christ; clothed with the holy garments, even with glory and beauty: sanctified for his own blood, not that of bullocks and rams; (Heb. 9. 12;) made perfect, or consecrated, through sufferings, Heb. 2. 10. Thus in him this was a perpetual statute, v. 9. Secondly, All believers are spiritual priests, to offer spiritual sacrifices, (1 Pet. 2. 5;) washed in the blood of Christ, and so made to our God priests, Rev. 1. 5, 6. They also are clothed with the beauty of holiness, and have received the anointing, 1 John 2. 27. Their hands are filled with work which they must continually do; and it is through Christ, the Great Sacrifice, that they are dedicated to this service. His blood sprinkled upon the conscience, purged it from dead works, that they may, as priests, serve the living God. The Spirit of God (as Ainsworth notes) is called the finger of God, (Luke 11. 20. compared with Matth. 12. 28.) and by him the merit of Christ is effectually applied to our souls, as Moses with his finger was to put the blood upon Aaron. It is likewise intimated that gospel-ministers are to be solemnly set apart to the work of the ministry, with great deliberation and seriousness, both in the ordainers and in the ordained, as those that are to be employed in a great work, and intrusted with a great charge.

II. The consecration of the altar, which seems to have been coincident with that of the priests, and the sin-offerings which were offered every day for seven days together, had reference to the altar as well as the priests, v. 36, 37. An atonement was made for the altar. Though that was not a subject capable of sin, nor, having never yet been used, could it be said to be polluted with the sins of the people, yet, since the fall, there can be no sanctification to God, but there must first be an atonement for sin, which renders us both unworthy and unfit to be employed for God. The altar was also sanctified, not only set apart itself to a sacred use but made so holy as to sanctify the gifts which were offered upon it, Matth. 23. 19. Christ is our Altar; for our sakes he sanctified himself, that we and our performances might be sanctified and recommended to God, John 17. 19.

38. Now this is that which thou shalt offer upon the altar; two lambs of the first year, day by day continually. 39. And with the one lamb a tenth-deal of flour mingled with the fourth part of a hin of beaten oil; and the fourth part of a hin of wine for a drink-offering. 41. And the other lamb thou shalt offer at even, and shalt do thereto according to the meat-offering of the morning, and according to the drink-offering thereof, for a sweet savour, an offering made by fire unto the Lord. 42. This shall be a continual burnt-offering throughout your generations, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the Lord; where I will meet you, to speak there unto thee. 43. And there I will meet with the children of Israel, and the tabernacle shall be sanctified by my glory. 44. And I will sanctify the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar: I will sanctify also both Aaron and his sons, to minister to me in the priest’s office. 45. And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God. 46. And they shall know that I am the Lord their God, that brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them: I am the Lord their God.

1. The daily service appointed; a lamb was to be offered upon the altar every morning, and a lamb every evening, with a meat-offering, both made by fire, as a continual burnt-offering throughout their generations, v. 38...41. Whether there were any other sacrifices to be offered or not, these were sure to be offered, at the public charge, and for the benefit and comfort of all Israel, to make atonement for their daily sins, and to be an acknowledgment to God of their daily mercies. This was that which the daily of every day required. The taking away of this daily sacrifice by Antiochus, for so many evenings and mornings, was that great calamity of the church which was foretold, Dan. 8. 11. Now, (1.) This typified the continual intercession which Christ ever lives to make, in the virtue of his satisfaction, for the continual sanctification of his church: though he offer ed himself once for all, yet that one offering thus becomes a continual offering. (2.) This teaches us to offer up to God the spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise every day, morning and evening, in humble acknowledgment of our dependence upon him, and our obligations to him. Our daily devotions must be looked upon as the most needful of our daily works, and the most pleasant of our daily comforts: whatever business we have, this must never be omitted either morning or evening; prayer-time must be kept up as duly as meat-time: the daily sacrifices were as the daily meals in God’s house, and therefore they were always attended with bread and wine; those starve their own souls, that keep not up a constant attendance on the throne of grace.

2. Great and precious promises made of God’s favour to Israel, and the tokens of his special presence with them, while they thus kept up his institutions among them. He speaks as one well pleased with the appointment of the daily sacrifice; for, before he proceeds to the other appointments that follow, he interposes these promises. It is constancy in religion that brings in the comfort of it. He promises, (1.) That he would keep up communion with them; that he would not only meet Moses, and speak to him, but that he would meet the children of Israel, (v. 43.) to accept the daily sacrifices offered up on their behalf. Note, God will not fail to give those the meeting, who diligently and freqently attend up to his house in the ordinances of his own appointment. (2.) That he would own his own institutions, the tabernacle, the altar, the priesthood; (v. 43, 44.) he would take possession of that which was consecrated to him. Note, What is sanctified to the glory of God, shall be sanctified by his glory. If we do our part, God will do his, and will mark and fit that for himself which is in sincerity given in itself, and fit it for the use of God. (3.) That he would reside among them as a God in covenant with them, and would give them sure and comfortable tokens of his peculiar favour to them, and his special presence with them; (v. 45, 46.) I will dwell among the children of Israel. Note, Where God sets up the tabernacle of his ordinances, he will himself dwell: Lo, I am with you always, Matth. 28. 20. These that abide in God’s house shall have God to abide with them. I will be their God, and they shall know that I am so. Note, Those are truly happy, that have a covenant interest in God as theirs, and the comfortable evidence of that interest. If we have this we have enough, and need no more to make us happy.

CHAP. XXX.

Moses is, in this chapter, further instructed, I. Concerning the altar of incense, v. 4. 10. II. Concerning the ransom-money which the Israelites were to pay, when they were numbered, v. 11. 16. III. Concerning the layer of brass, which was set for the priests to wash in, v. 17. 21. IV. Concerning the making up of the anointing oil, and the use of it, v. 22. 33. V. Concerning the incense and perfume which were to be burned on the golden altar, v. 34. 38.

1. And thou shalt make an altar to burn incense upon; of shittim-wood shalt thou make it. 2. A cubit shall be the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof; foursquare shall it be: and two cubits shall be the height thereof: the horns thereof shall be of the same. 3. And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold, the top thereof, and the sides thereof round about, and the horns thereof; and thou shalt make unto it a crown of gold round about. 4. And two golden rings shalt thou make to it under the crown of it, by the two corners thereof; upon the two sides of it shalt thou make it; and they shall be for places for the staves to bear it withal. 5. And thou shalt make the staves of shittim-wood, and overlay them with gold. 6. And thou shalt put it before the vail that is by the ark of the testimony, before the mercy-seat that is over the testimony, where I will meet with thee. 7. And Aaron shall burn thereon sweet incense every morning: when he dresseth the lamps, he shall burn incense upon it. 8. And when Aaron lighteth the lamps at even, he shall burn incense upon it; a perpetual incense before the Lord throughout your generations. 9. Ye shall offer no strange incense thereon, nor burnt-sacrifice, nor meat-offering; neither shall ye pour drink-offering thereon. 10. And Aaron shall make an atonement upon the horns of it once in a year with the blood of the sin-offering of atonements: once in the year shall he make atonement upon it, throughout your generations: it is most holy unto the Lord.

The orders given concerning the altar of incense, are,

1. That it was to be made of wood, and covered with gold, pure gold, about a yard high, and half a yard square, with boards at the corners, a golden cornice round it, with rings and staves of gold, for the convenience of carrying it, v. 1... 5. It does not appear that there was any grate to this altar, for the ashes to fall into, that they might be taken away; but, when they burnt incense, a golden cen- ser was brought with coals in it, and placed upon the altar, and in that censer the incense was burnt, and with it all the coals were taken away, so that no coals or ashes fell upon the altar. The measure of the altar of incense, in Ezekiel’s temple, is double to what it is here; (Ezek. 41. 22.) and it is there called an altar of wood, and there is no mention of gold, to signify that the incense, in gospel-times, should be spiritual, the worship plain, and the service of God enlarged, for in every place incense should be offered, Mal. 1. 11.

2. That it was to be placed before the vail, on the outside of that partition, but before the mercy-seat which was within the vail, v. 6. For though he that ministered at the altar could not see the mercy-seat, the vail interposing, yet he must look towards it, and direct his incense that way, to teach us, that though we cannot with our bodily eyes see the throne of grace, that blessed mercy-seat, (for it is such a throne of glory, that God, in compassion to us, holds back the face of it, and spreads a cloud upon it,) yet we must in prayer by faith set ourselves before it, direct our prayer, and look up.

3. That Aaron was to burn sweet incense upon this altar, every morning and every evening, about half a pound at a time, which was intended, not only to take away the ill smell of the flesh that was burnt daily on the brazen altar, but for the honour of God, and to show the acceptableness of his people’s services to him, and the pleasure which they should take in ministering to him, v. 7, 8. As, by the offerings on the brazen altar, satisfaction was made for what had been done displeasing to God, so, by the offering on this, what they did well, was, as it were recommended to the divine acceptance; for our two great concerns with God are, to be acquitted from guilt, and accepted as righteous in his sight. 4. That nothing was to be offered upon it but incense, nor any incense but that which was appointed, v. 9. God will have his own service done according to his own appointment, and not otherwise. 5. That this altar should be punctured with the blood of the offering put upon the horns of it, every year, upon the day of atonement, v. 10. See Lev. 16. 18, 19. The high priest was to take this in his way, as he came out from the holy of holies. This was to intimate to them, that the sins of the priests who ministered at this altar, and of the people for whom they ministered, put a ceremonial impurity upon it, from which it must be cleansed by the blood of the atonement. This incense-altar typified, (1) The mediation of Christ. The brazen altar in the court was a type of Christ dying on earth; the golden altar in the sanctuary was a type of Christ interceding in heaven, in the virtue of his satisfaction. This altar was before the mercy-seat; for Christ always appears in the presence of God for us; he is our Advocate with the Father, (1 John 2. 1.) and his intercession is unto God of a sweet-smelling savour. This altar had a crown fixed to it; for Christ intercedes as a King, Father, I will, John 17. 24. (2) The devotions of the saints, whose prayers are said to be set forth before God as incense, Ps. 141. 2. As the smoke of the incense ascended, so must our desires toward God rise in prayer, being kindled with the fire of holy love and other pious affections. When the priest was burning incense, the people were praying (Luke 1. 10.) to signify that prayer is the true incense. This incense was offered daily, it was a perpetual incense; (v. 8.) for we must pray always, that is, we must keep up stated times for prayer every day, morning and evening, at least, and never omit it, but thus pray without ceasing. The lamps were dressed or lighted, at the same time that the incense was burnt, to teach us that the reading of the scriptures (which are our light and lamp) is a part of our daily work, and should ordinarily accompany our prayers and praises. When we speak to God, we must hear what God says to us, and thus the communion is complete. The devotions of sanctified souls are well pleasing to God, of a sweet-smelling savour; the prayers of saints are compared to sweet odours, (Rev. 5. 8.) but it is the incense which Christ adds to them that makes them acceptable, (Rev. 8. 3.) and his blood that atones for the guilt which cleaves to our best services. And if the heart and life be not holy, even incense is an abomination, (Isa. 1. 13.) and he that offers it is as if he blessed an idol, Isa. 66. 3. 11. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 12. When thou takest the sum of the children of Israel, after their number, then shall they give every man a ransom for his soul unto the Lord, when thou numberest them; that there be no plague among them when thou numberest them. 14. Every one that passeth among them that are numbered, half a shekel after the shekel of the sanctuary; (a shekel is twenty gerahs:) a half shekel shall be the offering of the Lord. 14. Every one that passeth among them that are numbered, from twenty years old and above, shall give an offering unto the Lord. 15. The rich shall not give more, and the poor shall not give less, than half a shekel, when they give an offering unto the Lord, to make an atonement for your souls. 16. And thou shalt take the atonement-money of the children of Israel, and shalt appoint it for the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; that it may be a memorial unto the children of Israel before the Lord, to make an atonement for your souls. Some observe, that the repetition of those words, The Lord spake unto Moses, here and afterward, (v. 17, 22, 34.) intimates that God did not deliver these precepts to Moses in the mount, in a continued discourse, but with many intermissions, giving him time either to write what was said to him, or, at least, to charge his memory with his instructions to his disciples, as they were able to hear them. He is here ordered to levy money upon the people by way of poll, so much a head, for the service of the tabernacle. This he must do when he numbered the people: some think that it refers only to the first numbering of them, now when the tabernacle was set up; and that this tax was to make up what was wanting in the voluntary contributions for the finishing of the work, or to provide for the keeping of the service of the tabernacle. Others think that it was afterward repeated upon any emergency, and always when the people were numbered; and that David offended in not demanding it when he numbered the people. But many of the Jewish writers, and others from them, are of opinion, that it was to be an annual tribute, only it was begun when Moses first numbered the people: this was that tribute-money which Christ paid for fear of offending his adversaries, Matth. 17. 24, when yet he showed good reason why he should have been excused. Men were appointed in every city to receive this payment yearly. Now, 1. The tribute to be paid was half a shekel, about fifteen pence of our money. The rich were not to give more, nor the poor less; (v. 15.) to intimate that the souls of the rich and poor are alike precious, and that God is no Respector of persons, Acts 10. 34. Job 34. 19. In other offerings, men were to give according to their ability, but this, which was a ransom of the soul, must be alike for all; for the rich have as much need of Christ as the poor, and the poor are as welcome to him as the rich. They both alike contributed to the maintenance of the temple-service, because both were to have a like interest in it, and benefit by it. In Christ and his ordinances, rich and poor meet together; the Lord is the Maker, the Lord Christ is the Redeemer of them both, Prov. 22. 2. The Jews say, "If a man refused to pay this tribute, he was not comprehended in the expiation." 2. This tribute was to be paid as a ransom of the soul, that there might be no plague among them. Hereby they acknowledged that they received their lives from God, that they had for their support only his gifts; and that they depended upon his power and patience for the continuance of them; and thus they did homage to the God of their lives, and depreciated those plagues which their sins had deserved. 3. This money that was raised was to be employed in the service of the tabernacle; (v. 16.) with it they bought sacrifices, flour, incense, wine, oil, fuel, salt, priests' garments, and all other things which the whole congregation was interested in. Note, Those that have the benefit of God's tabernacle among them, must be willing to defray the expenses of it, and not grudge the necessary charges of God's public worship. Thus we must honour the Lord with our substance, and reckon that best laid out, which is laid out in the service of God. Money, indeed, cannot make an atonement for the soul, but it may be used for the honour of him who has made the atonement, and for the maintenance of the gospel by which the atonement is applied.

17. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 18. Thou shalt also make a laver of brass, and his foot also of brass, to wash withal: and thou shalt put it between the tabernacle of the congregation and the altar, and thou shalt put water therein: 19. For Aaron and his sons shall wash their hands and their feet thereat. 20. When they go into the tabernacle of the congregation they shall wash with water, that they die not; or when they come near to the altar to minister, to burn offering made by fire unto the Lord: 21. So they shall wash their hands and their feet, that they die not: and it shall be a statute for ever to them, even to him and to his seed, throughout their generations.

Orders are here given, 1. For the making of a laver, or font, of brass, a large vessel, that would contain a good quantity of water, which was to be set near the door of the tabernacle, v. 18. The foot of brass, it is supposed, was so contriv'd as to receive the water, which was let into it out of the laver by spouts, or cocks. They then had a laver for the priests only to wash in, but to us now there is a fountain open for Judah and Jerusalem to wash in. (Zech. 13. 1.) an inexhaustible fountain of living water, so that it is our own fault if we remain in our pollution. 2. For the using of this laver; Aaron and his sons must wash their hands and feet at this laver, every time they went in to minister, every morning, at least, v. 19. 21. For this purpose, clean water was put into the laver fresh every day. Though they washed themselves ever so clean at their own houses, that would not serve, they must wash at the laver, because that was appointed for washing. 2 Kings, 5. 12. 14. This was designed, (1.) To teach them purity in all their ministrations, and to possess them with a reverence of God's holiness, and a dread of the pollutions of sin. They must not only wash and be made clean, when they were first consecrated, but they must wash and be kept clean, whenever they went in to minister. He only shall stand in God's holy place, that has clean hands and a pure heart, Ps. 24. 3. 4. And, (2.) It was to teach us, who are daily to attend upon God, daily to keep our purity for sin, and our believing application of the blood of Christ to our souls for remission; for in many things we daily offend and contract pollution, John 13. 8. 10. Jam. 3. 2. This is the preparation we are to make for solemn ordinances; Cleanse your hands, and purify your hearts, and then draw nigh to God, Jam. 4. 8. To this law David alludes, (Ps. 56. 6.) I will wash mine hands in innocency, so will I compass thine altar, O Lord.

22. Moreover, the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 23. Take thou also unto thee principal spices, of pure myrrh five hundred shekels, and of sweet cinnamon half so much, even two hundred and fifty shekels, and of sweet calamus two hundred and fifty shekels, and of cassia five hundred shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, and of oil-olive a hin: 25. And thou shalt make it an oil of holy ointment, an ointment compounded after the art of the apothecary: it shall be a holy anointing oil. 26. And thou shalt anoint the tabernacle of the congregation therewith, and the ark of the testimony, 27. And the table and all his vessels, and the candlestick and his vessels, and the altar of incense, 28. And the laver of burnt-offering with all his vessels, and the laver and his foot. 29. And thou shalt sanctify them, that they may be most holy: whatsoever toucheth them shall be holy. 30. And thou shalt anoint Aaron and his sons, and consecrate them, that they may minister unto me in the priest's office. 31. And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, This shall be a holy anointing oil unto me throughout your generations. 32. Upon man's flesh shall it not be poured; neither shall ye make any other like it, after the composition of it: it is holy, and it shall be holy unto you. 33. Whosoever compoundeth any like it, or whosoever putteth any of it upon a stranger, shall even be cut off from his people. 34. And the Lord said unto Moses, Take unto thee sweet spices, stacte, and onycha, and galbanum; these sweet spices, with pure frankincense: of each shall there be a like weight. 35. And thou shalt make it a perfume, a confection after the art of the apothecary, tempered together, pure and holy: 36. And thou shalt beat some of it very small, and put of it before the testimony in the tabernacle of the congregation, where I will meet with thee: it shall be unto you most holy. 37. And as for the perfume which thou shalt make, you shall not make to yourselves according to the composition thereof: it shall be unto thee holy for the Lord. 38. Whosoever shall make like unto that, to smell thereto shall even be cut off from his people.

Directions are here given for the composition of the holy anointing oil and the incense that were to be used in the service of the tabernacle; with these God was to be honoured, and therefore he would appoint the making of them; for nothing comes to God but what comes from him. 1. The holy anointing oil is here ordered to be made up the ingredients, and their quantities, are here prescribed, v. 23. 25. Interpreters are not agreed concerning them; we are sure, in general, they were the best and fittest for the purpose; they must needs be so, when the divine wisdom appointed them for the divine honour. It was to be compounded secundum artem—after the art of the apothecary; (v. 25.) the spices, which were in all near half a hundred weight, were to be infused in of timber, to work in all manner of workmanship. 6. And I, behold, I have given with him Acholiah the son of Ahasiacham, of the tribe of Dan: and in the hearts of all that are wise-hearted I have put wisdom, that they may make all that I have commanded thee; 7. The tabernacle of the congregation, and the ark of the testimony, and the mercy-seat that is thereupon, and all the furniture of the tabernacle, 8. And the table and his furniture, and the pure candlestick with all his furniture, and the altar of incense, 9. And the altar of burnt-offering with all his furniture, and the laver and his foot, 10. And the clothes of service, and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office, 11. And the anointing oil, and sweet incense for the holy place: according to all that I have commanded thee shall they do.

A great deal of fine work God had ordered to be done about the tabernacle; the materials the people were to provide, but who must put them into form? Moses himself was learned in all the learning of the Egyptians, and was instructed in the wisdom of Pharaoh's house; and yet he was well acquainted with the words of God, and the visions of the Almighty; but he knew not how to engrave or embroider; we may suppose that there were some very ingenious men among the Israelites; but they having lived all their days in bondage in Egypt, we cannot think they were any of them instructed in these curious arts. They knew how to make brick, and work in clay, but to work in gold, and cut diamonds, as what they had never been brought up to. How should the work be done with the neatness and exactness that were required, when they had no goldsmiths or jewellers but what must be made out of masons and bricklayers? We may suppose that there was a sufficient number, who would gladly be employed, and would do their best; but it would be hard to find out a proper person to preside in this work; Who was sufficient for these things? But God takes care of this matter also. 1. He nominates the persons that were to be employed, that there might be no contest about the prefferment, nor envy at those that were preferred, God himself having made the choice. (1.) Bezaleel was to be the architect, or master-workman, v. 2. He was of the tribe of Judah, a tribe that God delighted to honour; the grandson of Hur, probably that Hur who had helped to hold up Moses's rod, (Ex. 17. 12.) and was in commission with Aaron for the government of the people in the absence of Moses; (ch. 24. 14.) out of that family, which was of note in Israel, was this workman chosen; and it added no little honour to the family, that a branch of it was employed, though but as a mechanic, or handicraft-tradesman, for the service of the tabernacle. The Jews' tradition is, that Hur was the husband of Miriam, and then it was requisite that God should appoint him to this service, lest, if Moses himself had done it, he should have been thought partial to his own kindred, his brother Aaron also being advanced to the priesthood. God will put honour upon Moses's relations, and yet will make it to appear that he takes not the honour to himself or his own family, but that it is purely the Lord's doing. (2.) Aholiah, the son of the tribe of Dan, is appointed next to Bezaleel, and partner with him, v. 6. Two are better than one. Christ sent forth his disciples who were to bear the gospel-tabernacle, two and two, and we read of his two witnesses. Aholibab was of the tribe of Dan, which was one of the less honourable tribes, that the tribes of Judah and Levi might not be lifted up, as if they were to engross all the pre-ferments; to prevent this, so that none of the heads, and those heads too are under his eye, and in his hand; and those may cheerfully go about any service for God, and go on in it, who have reason to think that, one way or other, he has called them to it; for whom he calls, he will own and bear out.
2. He qualifies these persons for the service, (v.
3.) I have filled him with the Spirit of God; and,
(v. 6.) in the hearts of all that are wise-hearted I have put the Spirit, (Isa. 28. 29.) note, (3.) These men, in their several states and employments is the gift of God; from him are both the faculty and the improvement of the factulty. It is he that puts even this wisdom into the inward parts, Job, 38. 36. He teaches the husband-man-discretion, (Isa. 28. 26.) and the tradesman too; and he must have the praise of it. (2.) God dispenses his gifts variously, one gift to one, to another, and all for the good of the whole body, both of mankind and of the church. Moses was fittest of all to prove Israel, but Bezaleel was fitter than he to build the tabernacle. The common benefit is very much supported by the variety of men's faculties and inclinations; the genius of some leads them to be serviceable one way, of others another way, and all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit, 1 Cor. 12. 11. This forbids pride, envy, contempt, and carnal emulation, and strengthen-the bond of mutual love. (3.) These whom God calls to any service, he will either find or make fit for it. If God give the commission, he will in some measure give the qualifications, according to the service is. The work that was to be done here, was, to make the tabernacle, and the utensils of it,
which are here particularly reckoned up, v. 7, &c.
And for this the persons employed were enabled to work in gold, and silver, and brass. When Christ sent his apostles to rear the gospel tabernacle, he poured out his Spirit upon them, to enable them to speak with tongues the wonderful works of God:
not to work upon metal, but to work upon men; so much the more excellent were the gifts, as the ta-burnacle to be pitched was a greater and more perfect tabernacle, as the apostle calls it, Heb. 9. 11.
2. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 13. Speak thou also unto the children of Israel, saying, Verily my sabbaths ye shall keep; for it is a sign between me and you throughout your generations; that ye may know that I am the Lord that doth sanctify you. 14. Ye shall keep the sabbath therefore; for it is holy unto you:
every one that defileth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work therein, that soul shall be cut off from among his people. 15. Six days may work be done; but in the seventh is the sabbath of rest, holy to the Lord: whosoever doeth any work in the sabbath-day, he shall surely be put to death. 16. Where-before the children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, to observe the sabbath throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant.
17. It is a sign between me and the children of Israel for ever: for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, and on the seventh day he rested, and was refreshed.
18. And he gave unto Moses, when he had made an end of communing with him upon mount Sinai, two tables of testimony, tables of stone, written with the finger of God.
Here is, I. A strict command for the sanctification of the sabbath-day, v. 13. 17. The law of the sabbath had been given them, before any other law, by way of preparation; (ch. 16. 33.) it had been inserted in the body of the moral law, in the fourth commandment, and been attended to, and the sabbath kept, in the wilderness, and in the land of Egypt, (ch. 25. 12.) and here it is added to the first part of the ceremonial law, because the observation of the sabbath is indeed the hem and hedge of the whole law; where no conscience is made of that, farewell both godliness and honesty; for, in the moral law, it stands in the midst between the two tables. Some suggest that it comes in here; upon another account. Orders were now given that a table and ushers should be kept up and set apart to the service of God, and with all possible expedition, but lest they should think that the nature of the work, and the haste that was required, would justi fy them in working at it on sabbath-days, that they might get it done the sooner, this caution is reasonably inserted, Verily, or Nevertheless, my sabbaths ye shall keep. Though they must hasten the work, yet they must not make more haste than good speed; they must not break the law of the sabbath in their haste: even tabernacle-work must give way to the sabbath-rest; so jealous is God for the honour of his sabbaths. Observe what is here said concerning the sabbath-day.
1. The nature, meaning, and intention of the sabbath, by the declaration of which God puts an honour upon it, and teaches us to value it. Divers things are here said of the sabbath. (1.) It is a time both of rest and of work. 2. What the institution of the sabbath was a great instance of God's favour to them, and a sign that he had distinguished them from all other people; and their religious observance of the sabbath was a great instance of their duty and obedience to him, God, byparticularday among them, let them know that he sanctified them, and set them apart for himself and his service; otherwise they would not have support of religion among them. Or, it may refer to the law concerning the sabbath, Keep my sabbaths, that ye may know that I the Lord do sanctify you. Note, if God by his grace incline our hearts to keep the law of the fourth commandment, it will be an evidence of a good work wrought in us by his Spirit. If we sanctify God's day, it is a sign between us and him, and he has been pleased to set it aside for the character of the blessed man, that he kept the sabbath from polluting it, Isa. 56. 2. The Jews, by observing one day in seven, after six days' labour, testified and declared that they worshipped the God who made the world in six days, and rested the seventh; and so distinguished themselves from other nations, who, having first lost the sabbath, which was instituted to be a memorial of the creation, by degrees lost the knowledge of the Cre-EXODUS, XXXII.

It is a very lamentable intermission which the story of this chapter gives to the record of the establishment of the church and of religion among the Jews. Things went on admirably well toward that happy settlement; God had showed himself very favourable, and the people also had seemed to be truly tractable; Moses had now almost completed his forty days upon the mount, and, we may suppose, was pleasing himself with the thoughts of the very joyful welcome he should be brought to meet upon Israel at his return, and the speedy setting up of the tabernacle among them. But, behold, the measures are broken, the sin of Israel turns away those good things from them, and these men, to the number of two hundred, commit the sin that did the mischief, (would you think it?) was, worshipping a golden calf. The marriage was ready to be solemnized between God and Israel, but Israel plays the harlot, and so the match is broken, and it will be an easy matter to place it again. Here in 1. The sin of Israel, and of Aaron particularly, in making the golden calf for a god, (v. 1-4.) and worshipping it, v. 5, 6. II. The notice which God gave of this to Moses, who was now in the mount with him, (v. 7, 8.) and the sentence of his wrath against them, v. 9, 10. III. The intercession which Moses immediately made for them in the mount, (v. 11, 13.) and the prevalence of that intercession, v. 14. IV. His coming down from the mount, when he became an eye-witness of their idolatry, (v. 15, 19.) in abhorrence of which, and as an expression of just indignation, he brake the tables, (v. 19.) and burnt the golden calf, v. 20. The examination of Aaron about it, v. 21-24. VI. Execution done upon the ring-leaders in the idolatry, v. 25, 29. VII. The further intercession Moses made for them, to turn away the wrath of God against them, (v. 30. 32.) and a reprobate gracious covenant, reserving them for a further reckoning, v. 33-35.

1. And when the people saw that Moses delayed to come down out of the mount, the people gathered themselves together unto Aaron, and said unto him, Up, make us gods, which shall go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him. 2. And Aaron said unto them, Break off the golden earings, which are in the ears of your wives, your sons, and of your daughters, and bring them unto me. 3. And all the people brake off the golden earings which were in their ears, and brought them unto Aaron. 4. And he received them at their hand, and fashioned it with a graving tool, after he had made it a molten calf: and they said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt. 5. And when Aaron saw it, he built an altar before it; and Aaron made proclamation, and said, To-morrow is a feast to the Lord. 6. And they rose up... early on the morrow, and offered burnt-offerings, and brought peace-offerings: and the people sat down to eat and to drink, and rose up to play.

While Moses was in the mount, receiving the law from God, the people had time to meditate upon what had been delivered, and prepare themselves for what was further to be revealed, and forty days were little enough for that work; but, instead of that, there were those among them that were contriving how to break the laws they had already received, and to anticipate those which they were in expectation of. On the thirty-ninth day of the forty, the plot broke out of rebellion against the Lord.

Here is,

1. A tumultuous address which the people made to Aaron, who was intrusted with the government, in the absence of Moses; (v. 1.) Up, make us gods, which shall go before us. 1. See the ill effect of Moses's absence from them; if he had not had God's call both to go and stay, he had not been altogether free from blame. Those that have the charge of others, as magistrates, ministers, and masters of families, ought not, without just cause, to absent themselves from their charge, lest Satan get advantage thereby. 2. See the fury and violence of a multitude, when they are not restrained, and how easily his counsels lie in wait to deceive. Some few, it is likely, were at first possessed with this humour, while many, who would never have thought of it, if they had not put it into their hearts, were brought to follow their pernicious ways; and, presently, such a multitude were carried down this stream, that the few who abhorred the proposal durst not so much as enter their protestation against it. Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindles!

Now what was the matter with this giddy multitude?

(1.) They were weary of waiting for the promised land. They thought themselves detained too long at mount Sinai; though there they lay very safe and very easy, well-fed and well taught, yet they were impatient to be going forward; they had a God that stayed with them, and manifested his presence with them by the cloud; but that would not serve, they must have God to go before them; they are for hastening to the land flowing with milk and honey, and cannot stay to take their religion along with them. Note, Those that would anticipate God's counsels are commonly precipitate in their own. We must first wait for God's law before we catch at his promises. He that believeth doth not make haste; nor more haste than good speed.

(2.) They were weary of waiting for the return of Moses. When he went up into the mount, he had not told them, (for God had not told him,) how long he must stay; and therefore, when he had outstayed their time, though they were every way well provided for, in his absence, some bad people advanced I know not what surmises concerning his delay: As for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of Egypt, we are not sure for the moment of his return. 2. How suspiciously they speak of his person, this Moses. Thus ungrateful are they to Moses, who had showed such a tender concern for them, and thus do they walk contrary to God. While God delights to put honour upon them, they delight to put contempt upon him, and this to the face of Aaron his brother, and now his viceroy. Note, The greatest merits cannot secure men from the greatest indignities and affronts in this ungrateful world. 2. How suspiciously they speak of this delay: We wot not what is become of him. They thought he was either consumed by the devouring fire, or starved for want of food, as if that God, who kept and fed them that were so unworthy, would not take care for the protection and supply of Moses his favourite. Some of them, that were willing to think well of Moses, perhaps suggested that he was translated to heaven like Enoch; while others, that cared not how ill they thought of him, insinuated that he had outrun his understanding, as unable to go on with it, and was returned to his father-in-law to keep his flock. All these suggestions were perfectly groundless and absurd; nothing could be more so; it was easy to tell what was become of him: he was seen to go into the cloud, and the cloud he went into was still seen by all Israel upon the top of the mount; they had all the reason in the world to conclude that he was safe there; if the Lord had been pleased to kill him, he would not have shown him such favours as these. If he tarried long, it was because God made a special and full deal to say to him, for his good; he raised upon the mount as their ambassador, and he would certainly return, as soon as he had finished the business he went upon; and yet they make this the colour of their wicked proposal—We wot not what is become of him. Note, First, Those that are resolved to think ill, when they have ever so much reason to think well, commonly pretend that they know not what to think. Secondly, Misinterpretations and misapprehensions are the occasions of a great deal of wickedness. Our Lord Jesus is gone up into the mount of glory, where he is appearing in the presence of God for us, but out of our sight; the heavens must contain him, must conceal him, that we may live by faith. There he has been long there, he is yet; hence unbelievers suggest that they wot not what is become of him; and ask, Where is the promise of his coming? (2 Pet. 3. 4.) as if, because he did not come yet, he would not come at all. The wicked servants of sin fancy themselves in his impurities, with this consideration, My Lord delays his coming. Thirdly, Weariness in waiting betrays us to a great many temptations. This began Sini's ruin; he said for Samuel to the last hour of the time appointed, but had not patience to stay that hour; (1 Sam. 13. 8, &c.) so Israel here, if they could but have staid one day longer, they would have seen the presence of God. The Lord is a God of judgment, and must be waited for till he comes, waited for though he tarries; and then we shall not lose our labour, for he that shall come will come, and will not tarry.

(3.) They were weary of waiting for a divine institution of religious worship among them, for that was the thing they were now in expectation of. They were told that they must serve God in this manner; and fond enough they would be of the pomp and ceremony of it; but, because that was not appointed them so soon as they wished, they would set their own wits on work to devise signs of God's presence with them, and would glory in them, and have a worship of their own invention, probably, such as they had seen among the Egyptians; for Stephen says, that when they said unto Aaron, Make us gods, they did, in heart, turn back into Egypt, Acts 7. 39, 40. This was a very strange notion. Up, make us gods. If they wot not what was become of Moses, and thought him lost, it had been decent for them to have appointed a solemn mourning for him for certain days; but see how soon so great a benefactor is forgotten. If they had said, "Moses is lost, make us a governor," there had been some sense in it, though a great deal of ingratitude to the memory of Moses, and contempt of Aaron and Hur, who were the lords-justices in his absence; but to say, Moses is lost, make us a god, was the greatest absurdity imaginable. Was Moses their God? Had he ever pretended to be so? Whatever was become of Moses, was it not evident, beyond contradiction, that God was still with them? And had they any right, and yet, besides all this, and the strange occurrence of the day before, to treat it so well every day? Could they have any other god that would provide so well for them as he had done, nay as he now did? And yet, Make us gods, which shall go before us! Gods! How many would they have? Is not one sufficient? Make us gods; and what good would gods of their own making do them? They must have such gods to go before them as could not go themselves farther than they were carried! So wretchedly besotted, and intoxicated are idolaters: they are mad upon their idols, Jer. 50. 38.

II. Here is the demand which Aaron makes of their jewells therewith; (v. 2.) Bring me your golden ear-rings. We do not find that he said one word to disconcern their proposal; he did not reprove their insolence, did not reason with them to convince them of the sin and folly of it, but seemed to approve the motion, and showed himself not unwilling to humour them in it. One would hope he designed, at first, only to make a jest of it, and, by setting up a ridiculous image among them, to expose the notion, and show them the folly of it. But if so, it proved ill-jesting with sin, just as it is of dangerous consequence for the unruly fly to play about the candle. Some charitably suppose, that when Aaron bid them break off their ear-rings, and bring him those, he did it with design to crush the proposal; believing, that, though their covenants would have let them have lavish gold out of the bag to make an idol of, (Isa. 46. 6.) yet their pride would not have suffered them to part with their golden ear-rings. But it is not safe to try how far men's sinful lusts will carry them in a sinful way, and what expense they will be at; it proved here a dangerous experiment.

III. Here is the making of the golden calf, v. 4. 1. The people brought in their ear-rings. Aaron, whose demand of them, instead of discouraging the motion, perhaps did rather gratify their superstition, and beget in them a fancy that the gold taken from their ears would be the most acceptable, and would make the most valuable god. Let their readiness to part with their rings to make an idol of, shame us out of our niggardliness in the services of the true God. Did they not draw back from the charge of their idolatry? And shall we grudge the poor the gold they are religiously requested to give? It was a good cause? 2. Aaron melted down their rings, and, having a mould prepared for the purpose, poured the melted gold into it, and then produced it in the shape of an ox or calf, giving it some finishing strokes with a graving tool. Some think that Aaron chose this figure for a sign or token of the divine presence, because he thought the head and horns of an ox a proper emblem of the divine power, and that shall not be removed. But it is more probable that he hoped the people would not be so sottish as to worship it. But it is probable that they had learnt of the Egyptians thus to represent the Deity, for it is said, ( Ezek. 20. 8.) They did not forsake the idols of Egypt; and, (ch. 23. 8.) Neither left she her whoredoms brought from Egypt. Thus they changed their glory into the similitude of an ox, (Ps. 106. 20.) and proclaimed their own folly, before their idolaters, who worshipped the host of heaven.

IV. Having made the calf in Horeb, they worshipped the graven image, Ps. 106. 19. 1. Aaron, seeing the people fond of their calf, was willing yet further to humour them, and he built an altar before it, and proclaimed a feast to the honour of it, (v. 5.) a feast of dedication. Yet he calls it a feast to Jehovah; for, brutish as they were, they did not imagine that this image was itself a god, nor did they design to terminate their adoration in the image, but they made it for the representation of the true God, whom they intended to worship in and through the image; and yet this did not exclude them from gross idolatry, any more than it will excuse the Papists, whose plea it is, that they do not worship the image, but God by the image; so making themselves just such idolaters as the worshippers of the golden calf, whose feast was a feast to Jehovah, and proclaimed to be so, that the most ignorant and unthinking might not mistake it.

2. People were forward enough to celebrate this feast; (v. 6.) They rose up early in the morning, to show how well pleased they were with their deity, and, according to the ancient rites of worship, they offered sacrifice to this new-made deity, and then feasted upon the sacrifice; thus having, at the expense of their ear-rings, made their god, they endeavoured, at the expense of their beasts, to make this god propitious. Had they offered the sacrifices immediately to Jehovah, without the intervention of an image, they might (as I know) have been accepted, (ch. 20. 24.) but as they set up an image before them, as a symbol of God's presence, and so changed the truth of God into a lie, these sacrifices were an abomination, nothing could be more so. When this idolatry of their's is spoken of in the New Testament, the account of their feast upon the sacrifice is quoted and referred to; (1 Cor. 10. 7.) They sat down to eat and drink the remainder of what was sacrificed, and then rose up to play; to play the fool, to play the motion. Like god, like worship. They would not have made a calf of their god, if they had not first made their belly their god; but when the god was a jest, no marvel that the service was sport; being vain in their imaginations, they became vain in their worship, so great was this vanity.

Now, (1.) It was strange that any of the people, especially a great a number of them, should do such a thing. Had they not, but the other day, in this very place, heard the voice of the Lord God speaking to them out of the midst of the fire, Thou shalt not make unto thee any graven image? Had they not heard the thunder, seen the lightnings, and felt the earthquake, with the dreadful pomp of which this law was given? Had they not been particularly cautioned not to make gods of gold? ch. 20. 25. Nay, had they not themselves worshiped unto Cæstus with gold, and were informed that the law was no more able to sanctify, than it was to justify; by it is the knowledge of sin, but not the cure of it. This is intimated in the emphasis laid upon the place where this sin was committed; (Ps. 106. 19.) They made a calf in Horeb, the very place where the law was given. It was otherwise with those that received the gospel; they immediately turned from idols, 1 Thess. 1. 9.

(2.) It was as extraordinary that Aaron should be so deeply concerned in this sin, that he should make the calf and proclaim the feast! Is this Aaron, the saint of the Lord; the brother of Moses, whose prophet, that could speak so well, (ch. 4. 14.) and yet speaks not one word against this idolatry? Is this he that had not only seen, but had been employed in summoning, the plagues of Egypt, and the judgments executed upon the gods of the Egyptians? What! and yet himself copying out the abandoned idolatry of Egypt? With what face could they say, These are the gods that brought thee out of Egypt, when they thus bring the idolatry of Egypt (the worst thing there) along with them? Is this Aaron, who had been with Moses in the mount, (ch. 19. 24.—24. 9.) and knew that there was no manner of likeness in any thing by which they might make an image? Is this Aaron, who was intrusted with the care of the people, in the absence of Moses? Is he aiding and abetting in this religion against the Lord? How was it possible that he should ever do so sinful a thing? Either he was strangely surprised into it, and did it when he was half asleep; or he was frightened into it by the outrages of the rabbles. The Jews have a tradition, that his colleague Ham, opposing it, the people fell upon him and stoned him, (and therefore we never read of him after,) and that this frightened Aaron into a compliance. And God left him to himself, [1.] To teach us what the best of men are when they are so left, that we may cease from man, and that he who thinks he stands may take heed lest he fall. [2.] Aaron was, at this time, destined by the divine appointment to the great office of the priesthood, though he knew it not, Moses in the mount did now, lest he should be lifted up above measure with the honours that were to be put upon him, a messenger of Satan was suffered to prevail over him, that the remembrance thereof might keep him humble all his days. He who had once shamed himself so far as to build an altar to a golden calf, must own himself altogether unworthy of the honour of attending at the altar of God, and purely indebted to free grace for it. Thus pride and boasting were for ever silenced, and a good effect brought out of a bad cause. By this likewise it was showed that the law made them priests which had iniquity; and needed first to offer for their own sins.

7. And the Lord said unto Moses, Go, get thee down; for thy people, which thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt, have corrupted themselves: 3. They have turned aside quickly out of the way which I commanded them: they have made them a molten calf, and have worshipped it, and have sacrificed thereunto, and said, These be thy gods, O Israel, which have brought thee up out of the land of Egypt. 9. And the Lord said unto Moses, I have seen this people, and, behold, it is a stiff-necked people: 10. Now therefore let me alone, that my wrath may wax hot against them, and that I may consume them: and I will make of thee a great nation. 11. And Moses besought the Lord his God, and said, Lord, why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt with great power, and with a mighty hand? 12. Wherefore should the Egyptians speak and say, For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them in the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth? Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent of this evil against thy people: 13. Remember Abraham, Isaac, and Israel, thy servants, to whom thou swearest by thine own self, and saidst unto them, I will multiply your seed as the stars of heaven; and all this land that I have spoken of will I give unto your seed, and they shall inherit it for ever. 14. And the Lord repented of the evil which he thought to do unto his people.

Here, 1. God acquaints Moses with what was doing in the camp, while he was absent, v. 7, 8. He could have told him sooner, as soon as the first step was taken towards it, and have hastened him down to prevent it; but he suffered it to come to this height, for wise and holy ends, and then sent him down to punish the wrong. Note, It is no reproach to the holiness of God, that he suffers sin, if he suffers it in such a case, and for such a reason, as he knows, not only how to restrain it when he pleases, but how to make it serviceable to the designs of his own glory. Observe what God here says to Moses concerning this sin. 1. That they had corrupted themselves. Sin is the corruption or deprivation of the sinner, and it is a self-corruption; every man is tempted when he is drawn aside of his own lust. 2. That they had turned aside quickly; Sin begins when we fall out of the way of our duty into a by-path; when they promised to do all that God should command them, they set out as fair as could be; but now they missed their way, and turned aside. 3. That they had turned aside quickly; quickly after the law was given them, and they had promised to obey it; quickly after God had done such great things for them, and declared his kind intentions to do greater. They soon forgot his works. To fall into sin quickly after we have renewed our covenants with God, or received special mercy from him, is very provoking. 4. He tells him particularly what they had done; They have made a calf; and worshipped it. Note, Those sins which are concealed from our governors are naked and open before God. He sees that which they cannot discover, nor is any of the wickedness of the world hid from him. We could not bear to see the thousandth part of that provocation which God sees every day, and yet keeps silence. 5. He seems to disdain them, in saying to Moses, They are thy people which thou broughtest up out of the land of Egypt; as if he had said, "I will not own any relation to them, or concern for them; let it never be said that they are my people, or that I brought them out of Egypt." Note, Those that corrupt themselves, not only become sinners, since he knows not only how to restrain it when he pleases, but even make God himself ashamed of them, and of his kindness to them. 6. He sends him down to them with all speed; Go, get thee down. He must break off even his communion with God, to go and do his duty as a magistrate among the people; so must Joshua, ch. 7. 10. Every thing is beautiful in its season.

II. He expresses his displeasure against Israel for this sin, and the determination of his justice to cut them off, v. 9, 10. 1. He gives this people their true character; "It is a stiff-necked people, unapt to come under the yoke of the divine law, and governed, as it were, by a spirit of contradiction, averse to all good, and prone to evil; obstinate against the methods employed for their cure." Note, The righteous God sees, not only what we do, but what we are; not only the actions of our lives, but the dispositions of our spirits, and has an eye to them in all his proceedings. 2. He declares what was their just desert—that his wrath should wax hot against them, so as to consume them at once, and blot out their name from under heaven; (Deut. 9. 14.) nor only set them out of covenant, but chase them out of the world. Note, Sin exposes us to the wrath of God; and that wrath, if it be not alloyed by victory over them, will burst up in God against them, just as with God to let the law have its course against sinners, and to cut them off immediately in the very act of sin; and if he should do so, it would be neither less nor dishonour to him. 3. He desires Moses (though in a gentle manner) not to intercede for them; Therefore let me alone. What did Moses, or what could he do, to hinder God from concerning them? When he saith, a little while, it was a people, and the decree of ruin is gone forth, no intercession can prevent it, Ezek. 14. 14. Jer. 15. 1. But God would thus express the greatness of his just dispurse against them, after the manner of men who would have none to intercede for those they resolve to be severe with. Thus also he would put an honour upon prayer, intimating that nothing but the intercession of Moses could save them from ruin, that he might be a type of Christ, by whose mediation alone God would reconcile the world unto himself. That the intercession of Moses might appear the more illustrious, God fairly offers him, that if he would not interpose in this matter, he would make of him a great nation; that either, in process of time, he would raise up a people out of his loins, or that he would immediately, by some means or other, bring another great nation under his government, which might be used to save them from their ruin. Had Moses been of a narrow selfish spirit, he would have closed with this offer; but he prefers the salvation of Israel before the advancement of his own family: here was a man fit to be a governor.

III. Moses earnestly intercedes with God on their behalf; v. 11. 13.) he besought the Lord his God, according to the Lord's word, Jer. 20. 12.) he hoped he might address him as his own God. What interest we have at the throne of grace we should improve for the church of God, not for our friends.

Now Moses is standing in the gap to turn away the wrath of God, Ps. 106. 23. He wisely took the hint which God gave him, when he said, Let me alone; which, though it seemed to forbid his intercession before it, yet the refusal of his power the prayer of faith has with God. In such a case, God wonders if there be no intercessor, Isa. 59. 16.

Observe, 1. His prayer; (v. 12.) Turn from thy fierce wrath; not as if he thought God was not justly angry; but he begs that he would not be so greatly angry as to consume them. Let mercy rejoice against judgment; repent of this evil, change the sentence of destruction into that of correction.

2. His pleas. He fills his mouth with arguments, not to mover God, but to express his own faith, and to excite his own fervency in prayer. He urges,

(1.) God's interest in them, the great things he had already done for them, and the vast expense of favours and miracles he had been at upon them, v. 11. God had said to Moses, (v. 7.) They are thy people, which thou broughtest up out of Egypt; Moses humbly turns them back upon God again, "They are thy people, thou art their Lord and Owner, I am but their servant; thou broughtest them forth out of Egypt, I was but the instrument in thy hand; that was done in order to their deliverance, which thou only couldst do." Though their being his people was a reason why he should be angry with them for setting up another god, yet it was a reason why he should not be angry with them, so as to consume them. Nothing is more natural than for a father to correct his son, but nothing more unnatural than for a father to slay his son. And as the relation is a good plea, ("They are thy people,") so is the experience they had of his kindness to them; "Thou broughtest them out of Egypt, though they were unworthy, and had there served the gods of the Egyptians, Josh. 24. 15. If thou didst that for them, notwithstanding their sins in Egypt, wilt thou undo it for their sins of the same nature in the wilderness?"

(2.) He pleads the concern of God's glory; (v. 12.) Wherefore should the Egyptians say, For mischief did he bring them out? Israel is dear to Moses, as his kindred, as his charge; but it is the glory of God that he is most concerned for; that he would not let that be nearer his heart than any thing else. If Israel could perish without any reproach to God's name, Moses could persuade himself to sit down contented; but he cannot bear to hear God reflected on, and therefore this he insists upon, Lord what will the Egyptians say? Their eyes, and the eyes of all the neighbouring nations, were now upon Israel; from the wondrous beginnings of that people, they raised their expectations of something great in their latter end; but if a people, so strangely saved, should be suddenly ruined, what would the world say of it, especially the Egyptians, who have such an implacable hatred both to Israel and to the God of Israel? They will say, "God was either weak, and could not, or fickle, and would not, complete the salvation he began; he brought them forth to that mountain, not to sacrifice, (as was pretended,) but to show them what he could do to be saved. I shall therefore reproach God with his promises given by Israel to justify the proceeding, but will think it cause enough for triumph that God and his people could not agree, but that their God had done that which they (the Egyptians) wished to see done. Note, The glorifying of God's name, as it ought to be our first petition, (it is so in the Lord's prayer,) so it ought to be our great plea; (Ps. 79. 9.) Do not disgrace the throne of thy glory; (Jer. 14. 21.) and see Jer. 33. 8, 9. And if we would with comfort plead this with God, as a reason why he should not destroy us, we ought to plead it with ourselves as a reason why we should not offend him; What will the Egyptians say? We ought always to be very careful that the name of God and his doctrine be not blasphemed through us.

(3.) He pleads God's promise to the patriarchs that he would multiply their seed, and give them the land of Canaan for an inheritance, and this promise confirmed by an oath, an oath by himself, since he could swear by no greater, v. 13. God's promises are to be our pleas in prayer; for what he has promised he is able to perform, and the honour of his truth is engaged for the performance of it.

"Lord, if Israel be cut off, what will become of the promise? Shall their unbelief make that of no effect? God forbid." Thus we must take our encouragement in prayer from God only.

IV. God graciously abates of the rigour of the sentence, and repented of the evil he thought to do; (v. 14.) though he designed to punish them, yet he would not ruin them. See here, 1. The power of prayer; God suffers himself to be prevailed with by the humble believing importunity of one of his servants. The concern and conduct, so that he should be not less power to pardon sinners, and how ready he is to forgive. Thus he has given other proofs beside his own oath, that he has no pleasure in the death of them that die: for he not only pardons, upon the repentance of sinners, but spares and reprieves, upon the intercession of others for them.

15. And Moses turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of the testimony were in his hand: the tables were written on both their sides: on the one side and on the other were they written. 16. And the tables were the work of God, and the writing was the writing of God, graven upon the tables. 17. And when Joshua heard the noise of the people as they shouted, he said unto Moses, There is a noise of war in the camp. 18. And he said, It is not the voice of them that shout for mastery, neither is it the voice of them that cry for being overcome; but the noise of them that sing do I hear. 19. And it came to pass, as soon as he came nigh unto the camp, that he saw the calf, and the dancing: and Moses' anger waxed hot, and he cast the tables out of his hands, and brake them beneath the mount. 20. And he took the calf which they had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strewn it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink of it.

Here is, 1. The favour of God to Moses, in trusting him with the two tables of the testimony, though of common stone, yet far more valuable than all the precious stones that adorned the breast-plate of Aaron. The topaz of Ethiopia could not equal them, v. 15, 16. God himself, without the ministry either of man or angel, (for aught that appears,) wrote the ten commandments on these tables, on both their sides, some on one table and some on the other, so that they were always together, like a book, the closed in the ark.

II. The familiarity between Moses and Joshua. While Moses was in the cloud, as in the presence-chamber, Joshua continued as near as he might in the antechamber, (as it were,) writing till Moses came out, that he might be ready to attend him; and though he was all alone for forty days, (fed, it is likely, with manna,) yet he was not weary of writing, as the people were, but when Moses came down he came with him, and not till then. And here we are told what constructions they put upon the noise that they heard in the camp, v. 17, 18. Though Moses had been so long in immediate converse with God, yet he did not disdain to talk freely with his servant Joshua. Those whom God advances he preserves from being pulled up. Nor did he disdain to talk of the affairs of the camp. Blessed Paul was not the less mindful of the church on earth, for his having been in the third heavens, where he heard unspeakable words. Joshua, who was a military man, and had the command of the train-bands, feared there was a noise of war in the camp, and he then would be missing; but Moses, having received notice of it from God, better distinguished the sound, and was aware that it was the voice of them that sing; but it does not appear that he told Joshua what he knew of the occasion of their singing; for we should not be forward to proclaim men's faults, they will be known too soon.

III. The great and just displeasure of Moses against Israel for their idolatry. Knowing what to expect, he was presently aware of the golden calf, and the sport the people made with it: he saw how merry they could be in his absence, how soon he was forgotten among them, and what little thought they had of him and his return. He might justly take this ill, as an affront to himself, but that was the least part of the grievance: he presented it as an offence to God, and the scandal of his people. See what a change it is, to come down from the mount of communion with God to converse with a world that lives in wickedness; in God we see nothing but what is pure and pleasant, in the world nothing but pollution and provocation. Moses was the meekest man on the earth, and yet, when he saw the calf, and the dancing, his anger waxed hot. Note, It is no breach of the law of meekness to show our displeasure at the wickedness of the wicked. Those are angry who are interested, and aggravated sin is not as against themselves, but as against God. Ephesus is famous for patience, and yet cannot bear them which are evil, Rev. 2. 2. It becomes us to be cool in our own cause, but warm in God's.

Moses showed himself very angry, both by breaking the tables, and burning the calf, that he might, by these expressions of strong indignation, awaken the people to a sense of the greatness of the sin they had been guilty of, which they would have been ready to make light of, if he had not thus showed his resentments, as one in earnest for their convictions.

1. To convince them that they had forfeited and lost the favour of God, he brake the tables, v. 19. Though God knew of their sin before Moses came down, yet he did not order him to leave the tables behind him, but gave them to him, to take down in his hand, that the people might see how far God had taken them into covenant with himself, and that nothing but their own sin prevented it; but he put it into his heart, when the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered, (as the expression is, Hosea 7. 1.) to break their tables before their eyes, (as it is Deut. 9. 17.) that the sight of it might the more affect them, and fill them with confusion, when they saw what blessings they had lost. Thus by being guilty of so notorious an infraction of the treaty now before the people, that they were not ready to be reconciled.

Note, The greatest grief of God's displeasure, against any person or people, is his taking of his law from them. The breaking of the tables is the breaking of the staff of beauty and hand; (Zech. 11. 10, 14.) it leaves a people unchurched and undone. Some think that Moses sinned in breaking the tables, and observe, that, when men are angry, they are in danger of breaking all God's bonds, and are but as far from being an act of justice than of passion, and we do not find that he himself speaks of it afterward (Deut. 9. 17.) with any regret.

2. To convince them that they had betaken themselves to a god that could not help them, he burnt the calf, (v. 20.) melted it down, and then filled it to a dust; that the powder to which it was reduced might be taken notice of through out the camp, he strewn it over that water which they all drank of. That it might appear that an idol is nothing in the world, (1 Cor. 8.) he reduced this to atoms, that it might be as near nothing as could be. To show that false gods cannot help their worshippers, he here showed that this could not save itself. Isa. 46. 1, 2. And to teach us that all the relics of idolatry ought to be abolished, and that the names of Baalim should be taken away, the very dust to which it was ground was scattered. Filings of gold are precious, (we say,) and therefore are carefully gathered up; but the filings of the golden calf were odious, and must be scattered with detestation. Thus the idols of silver and gold must be cast to the moles and the bats, (Isa. 2. 20.—30. 22.) and Ephraim shall say, What have I to do any more with idols? His mixing this powder with their drink signified to them that the curse they had thereby brought upon themselves was now come, and a thousand judgments were pillars and emblems, and imbitber them; it would enter into their bowels like water, and like oil into their bones. The backslider in heart shall be filled with his own ways; he shall drink as he brews. These were in dead waters of Marah.
21. And Moses said unto Aaron, What did this people unto thee, that thou hast brought so great a sin upon them? 22. And Aaron said, Let not the anger of my lord wax hot: thou knowest the people, that they are set on mischief. 23. For they said unto me, Make us gods which shall go before us: for as for this Moses the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we wot not what is become of him. 24. And I said unto them, Whosoever hath any gold, let them break it off. So they gave it me: then I cast it into the fire, and there came out this calf. 25. And when Moses saw that the people were naked, (for Aaron had made them naked unto their shame, among their enemies,) 26. Then Moses stood in the gate of the camp, and said, Who is on the Lord's side? let him come unto me. 27. And all the sons of Levi gathered themselves together unto him. 28. And he said unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Put every man his sword by his side, and go in and out from gate to gate throughout the camp, and slay every man his brother, and every man his companion, and every man his neighbour. 29. And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses: and there fell of the people that day about three thousand men. 30. For Moses had said, Consecrate yourselves today to the Lord, even every man upon his son, and upon his brother; that he may bestow upon you a blessing this day.

Moses having showed his just indignation against the sin of Israel, by breaking the tables and burning the calf, now proceeds to reckon with the sinners, and to call them to an account; herein acting as God's representative, who is not only a holy God, and hates sin, but a just God, and is engaged in his own cause of revenge. 18. Now, I. He begins with Aaron, as God began with Adam, because he was the principal person, though not first in the transgression, but drawn into it. Observe here, 1. The just reproof Moses gives him, v. 21. He does not order him to be cut off as those (v. 27.) that had been the ring-leaders in the sin. Note, A great deal of difference will be made between those that presumptuously rush into sin, and those that through infirmity are surprised into it; between those that overtake the fault that flees from them, and those that are overtaken in the fault they flee from: see Gal. 6. 1. Not but that Aaron deserved to have been cut off for this sin, and had been so, if Moses had not interceded particularly for him, as appears Deut. 9. 20. And having prevailed with God for him, to save him from ruin, he here exposeth himself with him, to bring him to repentance. He puts Aaron upon considering, (1.) What he had done to his people; Thou hast brought so great a sin upon them. The sin of idolatry is a great sin, so great a sin, that the evil of it cannot be expressed; the people, as the first movers, might be said to bring the sin upon Aaron; but he, being a magistrate, who should have suppressed it, and yet aiding and abetting it, might truly be said to bring it upon them, because he hardened their hearts and strengthened their hands in it. It is a bad thing for governors to humour people in their sins, and give countenance to that which they should be a terror. Observe, in general, Those who bring sin upon others, by any means encourage them in it, do more mischief than they are aware of; we really hate those whom we either bring to suffer sin upon, Lev. 19. 17. Those that share in sin help to break their partners, and really ruin one another. (2.) What moved him to it; What did this people unto thee? He takes it for granted that it must needs be something more than ordinary that prevailed with Aaron to do such a thing as this; thus he brings home to him, that it was more than ordinary: he knew that his heart was upright; What did they? Did they accost thee fairly, and wheedle thee into it; and dost thou displease thy God to please the people? Did they overcome thee by importunity; and hadst thou so little resolution left as to yield to the stream of a popular clamour? Did they threaten to stone thee; and couldst not thou have opposed God's threatenings to their's, and frightened them? No, thou hast done it for the frighten thee? Note, We must never be drawn in by any thing that man can say or do to us, for it will not justify us to say that we were so drawn in. Men can but tempt us to sin, they cannot force us. Men can but frighten us; if we do not comply, they cannot hurt us.

2. The frivolous excuse Aaron makes for himself. We will hope that he testified his repentance in the sin, the better than he did now; for what he says here has little in it of the language of a penitent. If a just man fall, he shall rise again, but perhaps not quickly. (1.) He deprecates the anger of Moses only, whereas he should have deprecated God's anger in the first place; Let not the anger of my Lord wax hot, v. 22. (2.) He lays all the fault upon the people; They are set on mischief, and they said, Make us gods. It is natural to us to endeavour thus to transfer one's guilt; we have it in our kind, Adam and Eve did so; sin is a brat that nobody is willing to own. Aaron was now the chief magistrate, and had power over the people, and yet pleads that the people overpowered him: he that had authority to restrain them, yet had so little resolution as to yield to them. (3.) It is well if he did not intend a reflection upon Moses, as accessory to the sin, by staying so long on the mount, in repeating, without need, that invidious surprise of the people. As for this Moses, we say not what became of him, v. 23. (4.) He extenuates and conceals his own share in the sin, as if he had only bid them break off their gold that they had about them, intending to make a hasty assay for the present, and to try what he could make of the gold that was next at hand; and childishly insinuates, that, when he cast the gold into the fire, it came out, either by accident or by the magic art of some of the mixed multitude, (as the Jewish writers dream,) in this or that shape; but not a word of his graving and fashioning it, v. 24. But Moses relates to all ages what he did, (v. 4.) though he himself here would not own it. Note, He that covers his sins shall not prosper, for sooner or later it will be discovered. Well, this was all Aaron had to say for himself; and he had better have said nothing, for his defence did but aggravate his offence; and yet he is not only spared, but, by repenting as sin did abound, grace did much more abound.

II. The people are next to be judged for this sin. The approach of Moses soon spoiled their sport, and turned their dancing into trembling. They that hectored Aaron into a compliance with them in their sin durst not look Moses in the face, nor make the least opposition to the severity which he thought fit to use both against the idol and against the idolaters. Note, It is not impossible to make those sin which were committed with daring presumption appear contemptible, when the insolent perpetrators of them slik away overwhelmed in their own confusion. The king that sits upon the throne of judgment scatters away all evil from his eyes. Observe two things:

1. How there were exposed to shame by their sin; they were naked, (v. 25.) not so much because they had some of them lost their ear-rings, (that was inconsiderable, but because they had lost their integrity, and lay under the reproach of ingratitude to their best Benefactor, and a treacherous revolt from their rightful Lord. It was a shame to them, and a perpetual blot, that they changed their glory into the similitude of an ox. Other nations boasted that they were to be the dearest in the sight of God; and, as it were, found out a name well Israel blush for being false to the true God. Thus were they made naked, stripped of their ornaments, and exposed to contempt; stripped of their armour, and liable to insults. Thus our first parents, when they had sinned, became naked, to their shame. Note, Those that do dishonour to God really bring the greatest dishonour upon themselves; so Israel here did, and Moses was concerned to see it, though they themselves were not; he saw that they were naked.

2. The course that Moses took to roll away this reproach; not by concealing the sin, or putting any false colour upon it, but by pun shing it, and so bearing a public testimony against it; whenever it should be cast in their teeth that they had made a calf in Horeb, they might have this to say, in answer to them that reproach them, that, though it was true they were those that did so, yet, justly, were not them that cut them upon. The government disallowed the sin, and suffered not the sinners to go unpunished. They did so, but they did dear for it. Thus (said God) thou shalt put the evil away, Deut. 13. 5. Observe here,

(1.) By whom vengeance was taken; by the children of Levi; (v. 26. 28.) not by the immediate hand of God himself, as on Nadab and Abihu, but by the hand of his servant, whose sins had been an iniquity to be punished by the judge, being a denial of the God that is above, Job, 31. 28. Deut. 13. 9. It was to be done by the sword of their own brethren, that the execution of justice might redound more to the honour of the nation. And if they must fall now into the hands of man, better so than flee before their enemies. The innocent must be called out to be to the executioners, of the guilty, that it might be the more effectual warning to themselves that they did not the like another time; and the putting of them upon such an unpleasant service, and so much against the grain as this must needs be, to kill their next neighbours, was a punishment to them too, for not appearing sooner to prevent the sin, and make head against it. The Levites particularly were employed in doing this execution, but it should seem, there were more of the than of any other tribe that had kept themselves free from the contagion, which was the more laudable, because Aaron, the head of their tribe, was so deeply concerned in it. Now here we are told,

(1.) How the Levites were called out to this service; Moses stood in the gate of the camp, the place of judgment; there he displayed a banner, as it were, because the truth, to enlist soldiers for God, He proclaimed, Who is on the Lord's side? The idolaters had set up the golden calf for their standard, and now Moses set up his in opposition to them. Now Moses clad himself with zeal as with a robe, and summoned all those to appear forthwith, that were on God's side, against the golden calf. He does not proclaim, as Jehu, Who is on my side, (2 Kings 9. 32.) to avenge the indignity done to me? but, Who is on the Lord's side? It was God's cause that he espoused against the evil-doers, Ps. 94. 16. Note, First, There are two great interests on foot in the world, with the one or the other of which all the children of men are siding. The interest of sin and wickedness is the Devil's interest, and all wicked people side with that interest; the interest of truth and righteousness is God's interest, and all godly people side; and it is a case that will not admit a neutrality. Secondly, It concerns us all to inquire whether we are on the Lord's side or not.

Thirdly, Those that are on his side are, comparatively, but few, and sometimes seem fewer than really they are. Fourthly, God does sometimes call out those that are on his side, to appear for him as witnesses, as soldiers, as intercessors for sinners. Thus, for instance, a divine commission was given to the Levite, who was the dearest beloved of the Lord, to be the mediator for the people, and to intercede for them, and to offer up sacrifice for them. J. 27.) Say every man his brother, that is, Say all those that you know to have been active for the making and worshipping of the golden calf, though they were your own nearest relations or dearest friends. The crime was committed publicly, the Levites saw who of their acquaintance were concerned in it, and therefore needed no other direction than their own knowledge whom to say. And probably those that were greatest in the nation were the greatest in sin, and those that were the greatest in sin were the most guilty, and known to be so by some or other of the Levites who were employed in the execution. Yet, it should seem, they were to say those only whom they found abroad in the streets of the camp; for it might be hoped that those who were retired into their tents were ashamed of what they had done, and were upon their knees, repenting. Those are marked for ruin who persist in sin, and are not ashamed of the abominations they have committed, Jer. 8. 12. But how far the Levites encounter so great a body, who probably were much enraged by the burning of their calf? It is easy to account for this; sense of guilt disheartened the delinquents, and a divine commission animated the executioners. And one thing that put life into them was, that Moses had said, Consecrate yourselves to-day, to the Lord, that he may bestow a blessing upon you; whereby intimating to them that they now stood fair for preferment, and that, if they would but signalize themselves upon this occasion, it would be construed into such a consecration of themselves to God, and to his service, as would put upon their tribe a perpetual honour. Those that consecrate themselves to the Lord he will set apart for himself. Those that do the duty shall have the dignity; and if we do signal services for God, he will bestow special blessings upon us. There was a blessing designed for the tribe of Levi; now, says Moses, Consecrate yourselves to the Lord, that you may qualify yourselves to receive that blessing. The Levites were to assist in the offering of sacrifice to God; and now they must begin with the offering of these sacrifices to the honour of divine justice. Those that are consecrate to God must be not only sincere and serious, but warm and zealous, bold and courageous, for God and godliness. Thus all Christians, but especially ministers, must forsake father and mother, and prefer the service of Christ and his interest far before their nearest and dearest relations; for if we love them better than Christ, we are not worthy of him. See how the zeal of the Levites is applauded, (v. 23.) and how it was taken; There fell of the multitude that day about three thousand men; v. 28. Probably these were few, in comparison with the many that were guilty; but these were those that performed the rebellion, and were therefore picked out, to be made examples of, for terror to all others. They that in the morning were shouting and dancing, before night were dying in their
30. And it came to pass on the morrow, that Moses said unto the people, Ye have sinned a great sin: and now I will go up unto the Lord; peradventure I shall make an atonement for your sin. 31. And Moses returned unto the Lord, and said, Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made them gods of gold; 32. Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin: and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of thy book which thou hast written. 33. And the Lord said unto Moses, Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book. 34. Therefore now go, lead the people unto the place of which I have spoken unto thee: behold, mine angel shall go before thee: nevertheless, in the day when I visit, I will visit their sin upon them. 35. And the Lord plagued the people, because they made the calf, which Aaron made.

Moses, having executed justice upon the principal offenders, is here dealing both with the people and with God.

1. With the people, to bring them to repentance, v. 30. When some were slain, lest the rest should imagine, that, because they were exempt from the capital punishment, they were therefore looked upon as free from guilt, Moses here tells the survivors, Ye have sinned a great sin, and therefore, though ye have escaped this time, Except ye repent, ye shall all likewise perish. That they might not think lightly of the sin itself, he calls it a great sin; and that they might not think themselves innocent, because perhaps they were not all so deeply guilty as some of them that were put to death, he tells them all, Ye have sinned a great sin. The work of ministers is to show people their sins, and the greatness of the sins: Ye have sinned, and therefore you are undone if your sins be not pardoned, for ever undone without a Saviour. It is a great sin, and therefore calls for great sorrow, for it puts you in great danger. To affect them with the greatness of their sin, he intimates to them what a difficult thing it would be to make up the quarrel which God had with them for it. 1. It would not be done, unless he himself go up unto the Lord, on-purpose to be as long as and as solemn an atonement as he had done for the receiving of the law. And yet, 2. Even so, it was but a peradventure that he should make atonement for them: the case was extremely hazardous. This should convince us of the great evil there is in sin, that he who undertook to make atonement found it no easy thing to do it; he must go up to the Lord, with his own blood, to make an atonement. The malignity of sin appears in the price of pardons.
EXODUS, XXXIII.

1. AND the Lord said unto Moses, Depart, and go up hence, thou and the people which thou hast brought out up of the land of Egypt, unto the land which I sware unto Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, saying, Unto thy seed will I give it. And I will send an angel before thee; and I will drive out the Canaanite, the Amorite, and the Hittite, and the Perizzite, the Hivite, and the Jebusite: 3. Unto a land flowing with milk and honey; for I will not go up in the midst of thee; for thou art a stiff-necked people; lest I consume thee in the way. 4. And when the people heard these evil tidings, they mourned; and no man did put on him his ornaments. 5. For the Lord had said unto Moses, Say unto the children of Israel, Ye are a stiff-necked people: I will come up into the midst of thee in a moment, and consume thee: therefore now put off thy ornaments from thee, that I may know what to do unto thee. 6. And the children of Israel stripped themselves of their ornaments by the mount Horeb.

Here is, The message which God sent by Moses to the children of Israel, signifying the continuance of the displeasure against them, and the bad terms they yet stood upon with God. This he must let them know for their further mortification. I. He applies to them a mortifying name, by giving them their just character, a stiff-necked people; (v. 3, 5.) “Go,” says God to Moses, “go, tell them that they are so.” He that knows them better than they know themselves, says so of them. God would have brought them under the yoke of his law, and into the bond of his covenant, but their necks were too stiff to bow to them. God would have cured them of their corrupt and crooked dispositions, and have set them straight; but they were wilful and obstinate, and hated to be refinished, and would not have God to reign over them. Nete, God judges was not plagued, but the people; for this was a sin of infirmity, their’s a presumptuous sin, between which there is a great difference, not always discernible to us, but evident to God, whose judgment therefore, we are sure, is according to truth. Thus Moses prevailed for a reprieve, and a mitigation of the punishment, but could not wholly turn away the wrath of God; which (some think) speaks the impurity of the law of Moses to reconcile men to God, and to perfect our peace with him. That was reserved for Christ to do, in whom alone it is that God so pardons sin as to remember it no more.

CHAP. XXXIII.

In this chapter, we have a further account of the mediation of Moses between God and Israel, for the making up of the breach that sin had made between them. 1. He brings a very humbling message from God to them, (v. 1-3, 5.) which has a good effect upon them, and helps to prepare them for mercy, v. 4, 6. II. He settles a correspondence between God and them, and both God and the people signify their approbation of that correspondence; God, by descending in a cloudy pillar, and the people, by worshipping at the tent-doors, v. 7-11. III. He is earnest with God in prayer, and prevails, v. 12. 17. 2. For a sight of his glory for himself, v. 18, 23.
of men by the temper of their minds. We know what man does, God knows what he is; we know what proceeds from man, God knows what is in man: and nothing is more displeasing to him than stiff-neckedness; as nothing in children is more offensive to their parents and teachers than stubbornness. 2. He tells them what they deserved, that he may show to the world, and by them, and consume them, v. 5. Had he dealt with them according to their sins, he had taken them away with a swift destruction. Note, Those whom God pardons, must be made to know what their sin deserved, and how miserable they had been, if they had been unpardoned, that God's mercy may be the more magnified. 3. He bids them depart and go up hence to the land of Canaan, v. 1. This mount was, where neither no knaves, was the place appointed for the setting up of God's tabernacle and solemn worship among them: this was not yet done, so that, in bidding them depart hence, God intimates that it should not be done; ("Let them go forward as they are;") and so, it was very expressive of God's displeasure. 4. He turns them over to Moses, as the people which he had brought up out of the land of Egypt, and leaves it to him to lead them through Canaan, as a place for making good his covenant with Abraham, in giving them Canaan, yet he denies them the extraordinary tokens of his presence, such as they had hitlierto been blessed with, and leaves them under the common conduct of Moses their prince, and the common convey of a guardian angel. I will send an angel before thee, for thy protector, otherwise the evil angels would soon destroy thee; but I will not go up in the midst of thee, lest I consume thee, (v. 2, 3.) not as if an angel would be more patient, and compassionate than God, but their affronts given to an angel would not be so provoking as those given to the Shechinah, or Divine Majesty itself. Note, The greater privileges we enjoy, the greater is our danger, if we do not improve them, and live up to them. 6. He speaks as one that was at a loss what course to take with them; Justice said, "Cut them off, and consume them;" Mercy said, How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? Hos. 11. 8. Well, says God, put off thine ornaments, that I may know what to do with thee; that is, "Put thyself into the posture of a penitent, that the dispute may be determined in thy favour, and mercy may rejoice against judgment," v. 5. Note, Calls to repentance are plain indications of mercy designed. If the Lord, who kills, justice knows what to do with a stiff-necked people; but God has no pleasure in the death of them that die; let them return and repent, and then mercy, which is otherwise at a loss, knows what to do. II. The people's melancholy reception of this message; it was evil-tidings to them, to hear that they should not have God's special presence with them, and therefore, 1. They mourned, (v. 4.) mourned for their sin, which had procured God to withdraw from them, and mourned for this as the sorest punishment of their sin. When three thousand of them were at one time laid dead upon the spot by the Levite's sword, we do not find that they mourned for that; (hoping that would help to expiate the guilt;) but when God denied them his favourable presence, then they mourned and were in bitterness. Note, Of all the bitter fruits and consequences that come from sin, true penitents, in the remembrance, and dread most, is God's departure from them. God had promised that, notwithstanding their sin, he would give them the land flowing with milk and honey. But they could have small joy of that, if they had not God's presence with them. Canaan itself would be no pleasant land without that; therefore, if they want that, they mourn. 2. In token of great shame and humiliation, they that were undressed did not put on their ornaments; (v. 4.) and they that were dressed stripped themselves of their ornaments, by the mount; or, as some read it, at a distance from the mount, (v. 6.) standing afar off like the publican, Luke, 18. 13. God bid them lay aside their ornaments, (v. 5.) and they did so; both to show in general, the deep mourning, and, in particular, to take a holy re-engage in mourning for themselves for giving their ear-rings to make the golden calf of. They that would part with their ornaments, for the maintenance of their sin, could do no less than lay aside their ornaments, in token of their sorrow and shame for it. When the Lord God calls to weeping and mourning, we must comply with the call, and not only fast from pleasant bread, (Dan. 10. 3.) but lay aside our ornaments; even those that are decent enough at other times, are unseasonably worn on days of humiliation, or in times of public calamity, Isa. 3. 18.

7. And Moses took the tabernacle, and pitched it without the camp, afar off from the camp, and called it, The Tabernacle of the Congregation. And it came to pass, that every one which sought the Lord went out unto the tabernacle of the congregation, which was without the camp. 8. And it came to pass, when Moses went out unto the tabernacle, that all the people rose up, and stood every man at his tent-door, and looked after Moses, until he was gone into the tabernacle. 9. And it came to pass, as Moses entered into the tabernacle, the cloudy pillar descended, and stood at the door of the tabernacle, and the Lord talked with Moses. 10. And all the people saw the cloudy pillar stand at the tabernacle-door: and all the people rose up and worshipped, every man in his tent-door. 11. And the Lord spake unto Moses face to face, as a man speaketh unto his friend. And he turned again into the camp: but his servant Joshua, the son of Nun, a young man, departed not out of the tabernacle. Here is, I. One mark of displeasure put upon them, for their further humiliation. Moses took the tabernacle, not his own tent for his family, but the tent wherein he gave audience, heard causes, and inquired of God, the Guild-Hall (as it were) of their camp, and pitched it without, afar off from the camp, (v. 7.) to signify to them that they had rendered themselves unworthy of it, and that, unless peace was made, it would return to them no more. God would thus let them know that he was at variance with them; the Lord is far from the wicked. Thus the glory of the Lord departed from the temple, when it was polluted with sin, Ezek. 10. 4.—11. 23. Note, It is a sign that God is angry, when he removes his tabernacle, for his ordinances are fruits of his favour, and tokens of his presence; which we have better than we are acquainted with. Perhaps this tabernacle was a plan, or model rather, of the tabernacle that was afterwards to be erected, a hasty draft from the pattern showed him in the mount, designed for direction to the workmen, and used, in the meantime, as a tabernacle of meeting between God and Moses about public affairs. This was set up at a distance, to affect the people with the loss of that glorious structure, which, if they had not forsaken their own mercies for lying vanities, was to have been set up in the midst of them. Let them see what they have forfeited.

II. Many encouragements given them, notwithstanding, to hope that God would yet be reconciled to them.

1. Though the tabernacle was removed, yet every one that was disposed to seek the Lord was welcome to follow it, v. 7. Private persons, as well as Moses, were invited and encouraged to apply themselves to God, as intercessors upon this occasion. A place was appointed for them to go without the camp, to solicit God's return to them. Thus, when Ezra (a second Moses) interceded for Israel, they were man at his own door, v. 4. When God designs mercy, he stirs up prayer. He will be sought unto (Ezek. 36. 37.) and, thanks be to his name, he may be sought unto, and will not reject the poorest intercession. Every Israelite that sought the Lord was welcome to his tabernacle, as well as Moses the man of God.

2. Moses undertook to mediate between God and Israel, to the tabernacle, the place of treaty, probably, pitched between them and the mount, (v. 8.) and he entered into the tabernacle, v. 9. That cause could not but speed well, which had so good a manager; when their judge (under God) becomes their advocate, and he who was appointed to be their law-giver is an intercessor for them, there is hope in Israel concerning this thing.

3. The people seemed to be in a very good mind, and well disposed towards a reconciliation. (1.) When Moses went out to go to the tabernacle, the people looked after him, (v. 8.) in token of their respect to him whom before they had slighted, and their entire dependence upon his mediation. By this it appeared that they were very solicitous about this matter, desirous to be at peace with God, and concerned to know what would be the issue. Thus the disciples looked after our Lord Jesus, when he was about to enter into the holy place not made with hands, till a cloud received him out of their sight, as Moses here. And we must with an eye of faith follow him likewise thither, where he is appearing in the presence of God for us; then shall we have the benefit of his mediation. (2.) When they saw the cloudy pillar, that symbol of God's presence, give Moses the meeting, they all watched there were men at his own door; v. 9. Thereby they signified, [1.] Their humble adoration of the Divine Majesty which they will ever worship, and not gods of gold any more. [2.] Their joyful thankfulness to God, that he was pleased to show them this token for good, and give them hopes of a reconciliation; for, if he had been pleased to kill them, he would not have showed them such things as these, would not have raised them up such a mediator, nor given him such countenance. [3.] Their hearty concurrence with Moses as their advocate, in every thing he should promise for them, and their expectation of a comfortable and happy issue of this treaty. Thus must we worship God, in our tents, with an eye to Christ, as the Mediator. Their worshipping in their tent-doors, declared plainly that they were not ashamed publicly to own their respect to God and Moses, as they had publicly worshipped the calf.

4. God was, in Moses, reconciling Israel to himself, and manifested himself very willing to be at peace. (1.) God met Moses at the place of treaty, v. 9. The cloudy pillar which had withdrawn itself from the camp when it was polluted with idolatry, now returned to this tabernacle at some distance, coming back gradually. If our hearts go forth toward God, to meet him, he will graciously come down to meet us. (2.) God talked with Moses, (v. 9.) spoke to him face to face, as a man speaks to his friend, (v. 11.) which intimates that God revealed himself to Moses, not only with greater clearness and evidence of divine light, than to any other of the prophets, but also with greater expressions of particular kindness and grace. He spake, not as a prince to a subject, but as a man to his friend, whom he loves, and with whom he takes sweet counsel. This was great encouragement to Israel, to see their advocate so great a favourite; and, that they might be encouraged by it, Moses turned again into the camp, to tell the people what hopes he had of bringing this business to a good issue, and that they might not despair it he should be long absent. But because he intended speedily to return to the tabernacle of the congregation, he left Joshua there, for it was not fit that the place should be empty, so long as the cloud of glory stood at the door, (v. 9.) but if God had any thing to say out of that cloud while Moses was absent, Joshua was there ready to hear it.

12. And Moses said unto the Lord, See, thou sayest unto me, Bring up this people: and thou hast not let me know whom thou wilt send with me. Yet thou hast said, I know thee by name, and thou hast also found grace in my sight. 13. Now, therefore, I pray thee, if I have found grace in thy sight, show me now thy way, that I may know thee, that I may find grace in thy sight; and consider that this nation is thy people. 14. And he said, My presence shall go with thee, and I will give thee rest. 15. And he said unto him, If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence. 16. For whom shall it be known here that I and thy people have found grace in thy sight? Is it not in that thou goest with us? So shall we be separated, I and thy people, from all the people that are upon the face of the earth. 17. And the Lord said unto Moses, I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken: for thou hast found grace in my sight, and I know thee by name. 18. And he said, I beseech thee, show me thy glory. 19. And he said, I will make all my goodness pass before thee, and I will proclaim the name of the Lord before thee; and will be gracious to whom I will be gracious, and will show mercy on whom I will show mercy. 20. And he said, Thou canst not see my face: for there shall no man see me and live. 21. And the Lord said, Behold, there is a place by me, and thou shalt stand upon a rock: 22. And it shall come to pass, while my glory passeth by, that I will put thee in a cleft of the rock, and will cover thee with my hand while I pass by: 23. And I will take away mine hand, and thou shalt see my back parts; but my face shall not be seen.
Moses is now returned to the door of the tabernacle, an humble and importunate supplicant there for two very great favours; and, as a prince, he has power with God, and prevails for both; here he was a type of Christ, the great Intercessor, whom the Father heareth always.

I. He is here very earnest with God for a grant of his presence with Israel in the rest of their march to Canaan, notwithstanding their provocations. The people had by their sin deserved the wrath of God; and, for the turning away of that, Moses had already prevailed, ch. 32. 14. But they had like wise forfeited God's favourable presence, and all the benefit and comfort of that, and this, Moses is here begging for the return of. Thus, by the intercession of Christ, we obtain not only the removal of the curse, but an assurance of the blessing; we are not only saved from ruin, but become entitled to everlastling happiness.

Observe how admirably Moses orders this cause before God, and fills his mouth with arguments. What a value he expresses for God's favour, what a concern for God's glory, and the welfare of Israel. How he pleadeth, and how he speaks.

1. How he pleads.

(1.) He insists upon the commission God had given him to bring up his people, v. 12. This he begins with: "Lord, is it thou thyself that employest me; and wilt thou not own me? I am in the way that the people go to and fro with me in that way?" Whom God calls out to any service he will be sure to furnish with necessary assistances. "Now, Lord, thou hast ordered me a great work, and yet left me at a loss how to go about it, and to get through with it." Note, Those that sincerely design and endeavour to do their duty, may in faith beg of God direction and strength for the doing of it.

God here gives the interest the he himself had with God, and God's gracious expressions of kindness to him: Thou hast said, I know thee by name, as a particular friend and confidant, and thou hast also found grace in my sight, above any other. Now therefore, says Moses, if it be indeed so, that I have found grace in thy sight, show me thy way, v. 13. What favour God had expressed to the people, they had forfeited the benefit of, there was now no way but to ask for it, the strain of the stress of his plea upon what God had said to him, which though he owns himself unworthy of, yet he hopes he has not thrown himself out of the benefit of. By this therefore he takes hold on God, "Lord, if ever thou wilt do any thing for me, do this for the people." Thus our Lord Jesus, in his intercession, presents himself to the Father, as one in whom he is always well-pleased, and so obtains mercy for them with whom he is justly displeased; and we are accepted in the Beloved. Thus also men of public spirit love to improve their interest both with God and man for the public good. Observe what it is he is thus earnest for; Show me thy way, that I may know that I find grace in thy sight. Note, Divine direction is one of the best evidences of divine favour. By this we may know that we find grace in God's sight, if we find grace in our hearts to guide and quicken us in the way of our duty. God's good work in us is the surest discovery of his good-will towards us.

(2.) He intimates that the people also, though most unworthy, yet were in some relation to God; "Consider that this nation is thy people, a people that thou hast done great things for; redeemed to thyself, and taken into covenant with them; Lord, they are thy own, do not leave them." The offended father considers this; My child is foolish and froward, but he is my child, and I cannot aban don him.

4. He expresses the great value he had for the presence of God. When God said, My presence shall go with thee, he catched at the word, as that which he could not live and move without. ch. 33. 13. If thy presence go not with me, carry us not up hence. He speaks as one that dreaded the thought of going forward without God's presence, knowing that their march could not be safe, nor their encampments easy, if they had not God with them. Better he down and die here in the wilderness, than go forward to Canaan, without God's presence. Note, Those who have to wait God's favor are best prepared to receive them. Observe how earnest Moses is in this matter; he begs as one that would take no denial. "Here we will stay, till we obtain thy favour; like Jacob, I will not let thee go, except thou bless me." And observe how he grows upon God's concessions; kind intimations given him, make him yet more importunate. Thus God's gracious promises, and the advances of mercy towards us, should not only encourage our faith, but excite our fervency in prayer.

5. He concludes with an argument taken from God's glory; v. 16. "Wherein shall it be known to the nations that have their eyes upon us, that I and thy people (with whom my interests are all blended) have found grace in thy sight, distinguishing favour, so as to be separated from all people upon earth? How will it appear that we are in God's presence?" Note, The most dear ones of God are not to be found among his enemies, the best of things not to be joined with the worst. Nothing short of that can answer these characters: let it never be said that we are a peculiar people, and highly favoured, for we stand but upon a level with the rest of our neighbours, unless thou go with us; sending an angel with us will not serve." Doubtless, the mind of Moses adverted to the place, that wilderness, whither God had led him, and now, and therewith a certain thing shall be lost, if God left them alone. Note, God's special presence with us here in this wilderness, by his Spirit and grace, to direct, defend, and comfort us, is the surest pledge of his special love to us, and will redound to his glory as well as our benefit.

2. Observe how he speaks. He obtained an assurance of God's favour (1.) To himself; v. 14. I will give thee rest, I will take care to make the common way to Canaan pleasant; thou shalt have satisfaction." Moses never entered Canaan; and yet God did for him according to the promise which, long afterward, he gave Daniel; Go thou thy way till the end be, for thou shalt rest, Dan. 12. 13. (2.) To the people, for his sake. Moses was not content with that answer which bespeake favour to himself only, he must gain a promise, an express promise, for the people too; or he is not at rest; gracious generous souls think it not enough to get to heaven themselves, but would have all their friends go thither too. And in this also Moses prevailed; v. 17. I will do this thing also that thou hast spoken. Moses is not checked as an unreasonable beggar, whom no saying would serve, but he is encouraged: God grants as long as he asks; gives liberally, and does not upbraid him. See the power of prayer, and be quickened hereby to ask, and seek, and knock, and to continue instant in prayer; to pray always, and not to faint. See the riches of God's goodness: when he has done much, yet he is willing to do more; I will do this also—above what we are able to ask or think. See, in type, the prevalence of Christ's intercession, which he ever lives to make for all those that come to God by him, and the ground of that prevalence; It is truly his intercession whom he intercedes; it is because he has found grace in my sight. And now the matter is settled, God is perfectly reconciled to them, his presence in the pillar of cloud returns to them, and shall continue with them; all is well again, and henceforth we hear no more of the golden calf. Lord, who is a God like unto thee, pardoning iniquity? I. Having gained this point, he next begs a sight of God's glory, and is heard in the matter also. Observe,

1. The humble request Moses makes; (v. 18.) I beseech thee, show me thy glory. Moses had lately been in the mount with God, had continued there a great while, and had enjoyed as intimate communion with God as ever any man had on this side heaven; and yet he is still desiring a further acquaintance. All that are effectually called to the knowledge of God and fellowship with him, though they desire nothing more than God, yet they are still coveting more of him. More of God is his glory; and he will have us to know him by the glory of his mercy, more than by the glory of his majesty; for we must fear even the Lord and his goodness. Hos. 3. 5. That especially which is the glory of God's goodness, is, the sovereignty of it, that he will be gracious to whom he will be gracious; that, as an absolute Proprietor, he makes what difference he pleases, in bestowing his gifts, and is not Deutoronymous, as angels desire to know God. {y. 19.) also, that all his reasons of mercy are fetched from within himself, not from any merit in his creatures: as he has mercy on whom he will, so because he will. Even so, Father, because it seemed good in thy sight. It is never said, I will be angry at whom I will be angry, for his wrath is always just and holy; and I will show mercy on whom I will show mercy, for his grace is always full and free, and he never deals unjustly, or unprerogative he saves. The apostle quotes this, (Rom. 9. 15.) in answer to those who charged God with unrighteousness in giving that grace freely to some, which he withholds justly from others.

2. He should see what he could bear, and what would suffice him. The matter is concerted so as that Moses might be safe, and yet satisfied. First, Safe in a cliff of the rock; (v. 21, 22.) in that he was to be sheltered from the dazzling light and devouring fire of God's glory. This was the rock in Horeb, out of which water was brought, of which it is said, That rock was Christ, 1 Cor. 10. 4. It is in the cliffs of this rock that we are secured from the wrath of God, which otherwise would consume us; God himself will protect those that are thus hid. And it is only through Christ that we have the fellowship of the glory of God. Not to dwell on that to their comfort, but those who stand upon this rock, and take shelter in it. Secondly, He was satisfied with a sight of his back-parts, v. 23. He should see more of God than any ever saw on earth, but not so much as they see who are in heaven. The face, in man, is the seat of majesty, and men are known by their faces, in them we take a full view of men; that sight of God Moses might not have, but his back-face, that is, for the best part of his face, was such as he could see, and it was gone past us, so that we only see his back, and have (as we say) a blush of him. We cannot be said to look at God, but rather to look after him. Gen. 16. 13.) for we see through a glass darkly; when we see what God has done in his works, observe the goings of our God, our King, we see (as it were) his back-parts. The best thus know but in part, and we cannot order our speech concerning God, by ways of dark never so much, any more than we can describe a man whose face we never saw. Now Moses was allowed to see only the back-parts; but, long afterward, when he was a witness to Christ's transfiguration, he saw his face shine as the sun. If we faithfully improve the discoveries God gives us of himself while we are here, a brighter and more glorious scene will shortly be opened to us; for to him that hath shall be given.

CHAP. XXXIV.

God, having, in the foregoing chapter, intimated to Moses his reconciliation to Israel, here gives proof of it, proceeding to settle his covenant and communion with them. Four instances of the regard he has for the favour in which they stand in this chapter, v. 1. 4. II. His meeting him there, and the proclamation of his name, v. 5. 8. III. The instructions he gave him there, and his converse with him.
AND the Lord said unto Moses,
Hew thee two tables of stone like unto the first; and I will write upon these tables the words that were in the first tables, which thou brakest. 2. And be ready in the morning, and come up in the morning unto mount Sinai, and present thyself there to me in the top of the mount. 3. And no man shall come up with thee, neither let any man be seen throughout all the mount; neither let the flocks nor herds feed before that mount. 4. And he hewed two tables of stone, like unto the first: and Moses rose up early in the morning, and went up unto mount Sinai, as the Lord had commanded him, and took in his hand the two tables of stone.

The treaty that was on foot between God and Israel, being broken off abruptly by their worshiping the golden calf, when the presence of God was there, may best be compared with the time, when they were in the wilderness, before the tables were given. The tables, being hewn out, went up the mountain, and when Moses descended from Mount Sinai, they were broken, but not all at once. The first or upper tablet shows the kindness and mercy of God, which sinned against God, and had broken the covenant, especially that tablet which the Scribes and Pharisees have broken. The second or lower tablet displays the severity and power of God, but they whom that tablet was in strictest use of, were broken and defaced by sin, and the divine law was to be preserved in the scriptures, God therein made use of the ministry of man, and Moses first. But the prophets and apostles did only hew the tables, as it were; the writing was God’s; still for all scripture is given by inspiration of God. Observe, When God was reconciled to them, he ordered the tables to be renewed, and wrote his law in them; which plainly intimates to us, that even under the gospel of peace and reconciliation by Christ, (of which the intercession of Moses was typical,) the moral law should continue to bind believers. Though Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, yet not from the command of it, but still we are under the law to Christ; when our Saviour, in his sermon on the mount, expounded the moral law, and vindicated it from the current or corruptions of it, which the Scribes and Pharisees had broken it, (Matth. 5. 19.) he did, in effect, renew the tables, and make them like the first, that is, reduce the law to its primitive sense and intention.

That the best evidence of the pardon of sin and peace with God, is, the writing of the law in the heart. The first token God gave of his reconciliation to Israel, and vindicated it from the corruptions of it, was when the first article of the new covenant is, I will write my law in their hearts; (Heb. 8. 10.) and it follows, (v. 12.) for I will be merciful to their unrighteousness. That if we would have God to write the law in our hearts, we must prepare our hearts for the reception of it. The heart of stone must be hewn by conviction and humiliation for sin, (Hos. 6. 3.) the superfluity of naughtiness must be taken off, James, 1. 21. the heart made smooth, and laboured with, that the word may have a place in it. Moses did, accordingly, hew out the tables of stone, or slate, for they were so slight and thin, that Moses carried them both in his hand; and, for their dimensions, they must have been somewhat less, and perhaps not much, than the ark in which they were deposited, which was a yard and a quarter long, and three quarters broad. It should seem there was nothing particularly curious in the framing of them, for there was no great time taken, Moses had them ready presently, to take up with him, next morning. They were to receive their beauty, not from the art of man, but from theinger of God.

2. Moses must attend again on the top of mount Sinai, and present himself to God there, v. 2. Though the absence of Moses, and his continuing so long on the mount, had lately occasioned their making the golden calf; yet God did not therefore alter his measures, but he shall come up and tarry as long as he had done, to try whether they had learned to wait. To strike an awe upon the people, they are bid to keep their distance, none must come up with him, v. 3. They had said, (ch. 32. 1.) We know not what is become of him, and God did not let them know. Moses, accordingly, rose up early, (v. 4.) to go to the place appointed; to show how forward he was to present himself before God, and loth to lose time. It is good to be early at our devotions. The morning is, perhaps, as good a friend to the Graces as it is to the Muses.

5. And the Lord descended in the cloud, and stood with him there, and proclaimed the name of the Lord. 6. And the Lord passed by him, and proclaimed, The Lord, the Lord God, merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abundant in goodness and truth, 7. Keeping mercy for thousands, forgiving iniquity and transgression and sin, and that will by no means cleave the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children’s children, unto the third, and to the fourth generation. 8. And Moses made haste, and bowed his head toward the earth, and worshiped. 9. And he said, If now I have found grace in thy sight, O Lord, let my Lord, I pray thee, go among us; for it is a stiff-necked people; and pardon our iniquity and our sin, and take us for thine inheritance.

No sooner was Moses got to the top of the mount, than God gave him the meeting; (v. 5.) The Lord descended, by some sensible token of his presence, and manifestation of his glory. His descending be-speaks his condescension, he humbles himself to take cognizance of those that humble themselves to walk with him, Ps. 113. 6. Lord, what is man, that he should be thus visited? He descended in the cloud, probably, that pillar of cloud which had been before Israel, and had, the day before, met Moses at the door of the tabernacle. This cloud was to strike an awe upon Moses, that the familiarity he was admitted to might not breed contempt. The disciples feared, when they entered into the cloud. His making a cloud his pavilion, intimated, that though he made known much of himself; yet there was much more concealed. Now observe, I. How God proclaimed his name; (v. 6, 7.) he did it in transitum—as he passed by him. Fixed views of God are reserved for the future state; the best we have in this world are transient. God now was performing what he had promised Moses the day before, for his glory should pass by, ch. 33. 22. He proclaimed the name of the Lord, by which he would make himself known. He had made himself known to Moses in the glory of his self-existence and self-sufficiency, when he proclaimed that name, I am that I am; now he makes himself known in the glory of his grace and goodness and all-sufficiency. Now that God is about to publish a second edition of the law, he prefixes it with this proclamation; for it is God's grace and goodness that gives the law, especially the remedial law. The pardon of Israel's sin, in worshipping the calf, was now to pass the seals; and God, by his declaration, would let them know that he had pardoned, ex mero motu—merely out of his own good pleasure, not for their merit's sake, but from his own inclination to forgive. The proclaiming of it denotes both a universal and a gratuitous pardon. It is not only good to Israel, but good to all; let all take notice of it. He that hath an ear, let him hear, and know, and believe.

1. That the God with whom we have to do is a great God. He is Jehovah, the Lord, who has his being of himself, and is the Fountain of all being. Jehovah-el, the Lord, the strong God, a God of almighty power himself, and the original of all power. This is exhibited before the display of his mercy, to teach us to think and to speak, even of God's grace and goodness, with great seriousness and a holy awe, and to encourage us to depend upon these mercies; they are not the mercies of a man, that is frail and feeble, false and fickle, but the mercies of the Lord, the Lord God; therefore sure mercies, and sovereign mercies, mercies that may be trusted, but not tempted. The God is God. His greatness and goodness illustrate and set off each other. That the terror of his greatness may not make us afraid, we are told 'how good he is; and that we may not presume upon his goodness, we are told how great he is. Many words are here heaped up, to acquaint us with, and convince us of, God's goodness, and to show how much his goodness is both his glory and his delight, yet without any tinge of revolting自豪. (1.) The mercy which he shows his fathers and their posterity, he keeps not his anger for ever, but visits to the third and fourth generation only, while he keepeth mercy for thousands. Well, this is God's name for ever, and this is his memorial unto all generations.

1. How Moses received this declaration which God made of himself, and of his grace and mercy. It should seem as if Moses accepted this as a sufficient answer to his request, that God would show him his face, and not the frowardness of his anger; or, as he went into the cliff of the rock, whence to gain a sight of God's back-parts; perhaps this satisfied him, and he desired no more; as we read not that Thomas did thrust his hand into Christ's side, though Christ invited him to do it. God having thus proclaimed his name, Moses says, "It is enough, I expect no more till I come to heaven;" at least, he did not think fit to relate what he saw. Now we are here told, (2.) What impression it made upon him; (v. 8.) Moses made haste, and bowed his head. Thus he expressed, (1.) His humble reverence and adoration of God's glory, giving him the honour due to that name he had thus proclaimed. Even the goodness of God must be looked upon by us with a profound veneration and holy awe. (2.) His joy in this discovery which God had made of himself, and his face. He had thus exclaimed in Ps. 84. 10, "My soul shall be satisfied as with marrow and fatness;" (Gr. χορτάσατο, to feed and experience it. He is long-suffering, that is, he is slow to anger, and delays the execution of his justice; he waits to be gracious, and lengthens out the offers of his mercy. (4.) He is abundant in goodness and truth. This bespeaks plentiful goodness; it abounds above our deserts, above our conception and expression. The springs of mercy are always full, the streams of mercy always flowing; there is mercy enough in God, enough for all, enough for each, enough for ever. It bespeaks promised goodness, goodness and truth put together, goodness engaged by promise, and his faithfulness pawned for the security of it. He not only does good, but by his promise he raises our expectation of it, and even obliges himself to show mercy. (5.) He keepeth mercy for thousands. This denotes, (1.) Mercy extended to thousands of persons; when he gives to some, still he keeps for others, and is never exhausted; he has mercy enough for all the thousands of Israel, when they shall multiply as the sand. (2.) Mercy entailed upon thousands of generations, even those upon whom the ends of the world are come; nay, the limits of time and of eternity are both inscribed with this mercy. (6.) He forgiveth iniquity, transgression, and sin. Pardoning mercy is specified, because, in that, divine grace is most magnified, and because that is it which opens the door to all other gifts of his divine grace, and because of this he had lately given a very pregnant proof. He forgives offences of all sorts, iniquity, transgression and sin; multiplies his pardons, and with him is plenteous salvation.

2. What improvement he made of it. He immediately grounded a prayer upon it; (v. 9.) and a most earnest affectionate prayer it is, (1.) For the presence of God with his people Israel in the will derness. "I pray thee, go among us, for thy presence is all in all to our safety and success." (2.) For pardon of sin; "O pardon our iniquity and our sin, else we cannot expect thee to go among us." And, (3.) For the privileges of a peculiar people: "Take us for thine inheritance, which thou wilt have a particular eye to, and concern for, and delight in." These things Moses says to God, and given Moses assurances of, and yet he prays for them, not as doubting the sincerity of God's grants, but as one solicitous for the ratification of them. God's promises are intended, not to supersede, but to direct and encourage, prayer. Those who have some good hopes, through grace, that their sins are pardoned, must yet continue to pray for pardon, for the renewing of their pardon, and the clearing of it more and more to their souls. The more we see of God's goodness, the more ashamed we should be of our own sins, and the more earnest for an interest in it. God had said, in the close of the proclamation, that he would visit the iniquity upon the children; and Moses here deprecates that; Lord, do not only pardon it to them, but to their children, and let our covenant-relation to thee be entailed upon our posterity, as an inheritance. Thus Moses, like a man of a true public spirit, intercedes even for the children that should be born. But it is a strange plea he urges; for it is a stiff-necked people. God had given this as a reason why he would not go along with them; (ch. 33. 3.) "Yea," says Moses, "they rather go along with us; for the worse they are, the more need they have of thy presence and grace to make them better." Moses sees them so stiff-necked, that, for his part, he has neither patience nor power enough to deal with them; "Therefore, Lord, do thou go among us, else they will never be kept in awe. Thou wilt spare, and bear with them, for thou art God, and not man." Hos. 11. 9.

10. And He said, Behold, I make a covenant: before all thy people I will do marvels, such as have not been done in all the earth, nor in any nation: and all the people among whom thou art shall see the work of the Lord; for it is a terrible thing that I will do with thee. 11. Observe thou that which I command thee: we cannot expect the benefit of the promises, unless we make conscience of the precepts. The two great precepts are, (1.) Thou shalt worship no other gods, (v. 14.) God's holy and divine honour to any creature, or any name whatsoever, the creature of fancy. A good reason is annexed; it is at thy peril, if thou do; for the Lord whose name is Jealous, is a jealous God, as tender in the matters of his worship, as the husband is of the honour of the marriage-bed. Jealousy is called the rage of a man, (Prov. 6. 34.) but it is God's holy and just displeasure. The two, that precepts are, (2.) Thou shalt not worship him alone. (2.) "Thou shalt make thee no molten gods; (v. 17.) thou shalt not worship the true God by images." This was the sin they had lately fallen into, which, therefore, they are particularly cautioned against.

Fences are here erected about these two precepts by two others; [1.] That they might not be tempted to worship other gods, they must not join in affinity or friendship with those that did; (v. 12.) "Take heed to thyself, for thou art upon thy good behaviour; it is a sin that thou art prone to, and that will easily beset thee; and therefore be very cautious, and carefully abstain from all appearances of it, and advances towards it; make no covenant with the inhabitants of the land." If God, in kindness to them, drove out the Canaanites, they ought, in duty to God, not to harbour them. What could be insinuated on more reasonable than this? If God made war with the Canaanites, let not Israel make peace with them. If God take care that the Canaanites be not their lords, let them take care that they be not their slaves. It was for their civil interest to complete the conquest of the land; so much does God consult our benefit in the laws he gives us. They must particularly take heed of intermarrying with them, for they were their mother's children, and they espoused their children, they would be in danger of corrupting their gods; such is the corruption of nature, that the bad are much more likely to debauch the good, than the good to reform the bad. The way of sin is downhill; those that are in league with idolaters will come by degrees to be in love with idolatry; and these that are prevailed with to eat of the idolatrous sacrifice...
will come at length to offer it. Obsta principîpis—Nîth the mischief in the bud. [2.] That they might not be tempted to make molten gods, they must utterly destroy those they found, and all that belonged to them, the altars and groves, (v. 13.) lest, if they were left standing, they should be brought, in process of time, either to use them, or to take pattern by them, or to abate in their detestation and dread of idolatry. The relics of idolatry ought to be abbolished, as affronts to the holy God, and a great reproof to the human nature. Let it never be said, that men, who pretend to reason, were ever guilty of such absurdities, as to make gods of their own, and worship them.
18. The feast of unleavened bread shalt thou keep. Seven days thou shalt eat unleavened bread, as I commanded thee, in the time of the month Abib: for in the month Abib thou camest out from Egypt.
19. All that openeth the matrix is mine; and every firstling among thy cattle, whether ox or sheep, that is male. 20. But the first-ling of an ass thou shalt redeem with a lamb: and if thou redeem him not, then shalt thou break his neck. All the first-born of thy sons shalt thou redeem: and none shall appear before me empty. 21.
Six days thou shalt work; but on the seventh day thou shalt rest: in earing-time and in harvest thou shalt rest. 22. And thou shalt observe the feast of weeks, of the first-fruits of wheat-harvest, and the feast of in-gathering at the year's end. 23.
Thrice in the year shall all your men-children appear before the Lord God, the God of Israel. 24. For I will cast out the nations before thee, and enlarge thy borders:
neither shall any man desire thy land, when thou shalt go up to appear before the Lord thy God thrice in the year. 25. Thou shalt not offer the blood of my sacrifice with leaven; neither shall the sacrifice of the feast of the passover be left unto the morning. 26. The first of the first-fruits thy land thou shalt bring unto the house of the Lord thy God. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk. 27. And the Lord said unto Moses, Write thou these words: for after the tenor of these words I have made a covenant with thee and with Israel.
Here is a repetition of several appointments made before, especially relating to their solemn feasts:
when they had made the calf, they proclaimed a feast in honour of it; now, that they might never do so again, they are here charged with the observance of the feasts which God had instituted.
Note, Men need not be drawn from their religion by the temptation of mirth, for we solemnize that has abundantly provided for the joy of his servants: serious godliness is a continual feast, and joy in God always.
1. Once a week they must rest, (v. 21.) even in earing time and in harvest, the most busy times of the year. All worldly business must give way to that holy rest; harvest-work will prosper the better for the religious observation of the sabbath-day in harvest-time. Hereby we must show that we prefer our communion with God, and our duty to him, before either the business or the joy of harvest.
2. Thrice a year they must feast; (v. 23.) they must then appear before the Lord God, the God of Israel. In all our religious approaches to God, we must seek him, (1.) As the head of a family, infinitely blessed, gloriﬁed, and adored, that we may set him up with reverence and godly fear. (2.) As the God of Israel, a God in covenant with us, that we may be encouraged to trust him, and to serve him cheerfully. We always are before God; but, in holy duties, we present ourselves before him, as servants to receive commands, as petitioners to sue for favours, and we have reason to do both with joy.
But it must be observed, that within all the nations from every part of the country were gone up in worship to the place in which God should choose, the country would be left exposed to the insults of their neighbours; and what would become of the poor women and children, and sick and aged, that were
neither shall any man desire thy land, not only they shall not invade it, but they shall not so much as think the least thing of it." As to this also, God has in his hands, and under his check; he can lay a restraint, not only upon men's actions, but upon their desires. Canaan was a desirable land, and the surrounding nations were greedy enough; and yet God says, "They shall not desire it." Let us check all sinful desires in our own hearts against God and his glory, and then trust him to check all sinful desires in the hearts of others against us and our interest. [2.] The way of duty is the way of safety. If we serve God, he will preserve us; and those that venture for him shall never lose by him.
While we are employed in God's work, and are attending upon him, we are taken under special protection; as noblemen and members of parliament are privileged from arrests.

The three feasts here mentioned with their appendages. First, The passover, and the feast of unleavened bread, in remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt; and to this is annexed the law of the redemption of the first-born, v. 18... 20.
This feast was instituted, ch. 12. 13. and urged again, ch. 23. 15. Secondly, The feast of weeks, that is, that of pentecost, seven weeks after the passover; and to this is annexed the law of the firstfruits. Thirdly, The feast of in-gathering at the year's end, which was the feast of tabernacles; (v.
22.) of which also he had spoken before. As to those laws repeated here, (v. 25, 26.) that against levity relates to the passover, that of the firstfruits to the feast of pentecost, and therefore that against seething the kid in his mother's milk, in all probability, relates to the feast of in-gathering, at which God would not have them use that superstitious ceremony, which, probably, they had seen among the Egyptians, or some other nations. (18.) All the other neighboring nations, bless their harvests with.

With these laws here repeated, it is probable, all that was said to him, when he was before upon the mount, was repeated likewise, and the model of the tabernacle showed him again, lest the ruffle and discomposure which the golden calf had put him into should have bereaved him of the ideas he had in his mind of what he had seen and heard; also in taking a complete review of these laws, and, to add not one jot or tittle of the law should pass away, but that all should be carefully preserved by the great Mediator, who came, not to destroy, but to fulfil, Mat. 5. 17, 18. And in the close, 1. Moses is ordered to write these words, (v. 27.) that the people might be the better acquainted with them by a freculent perusal, and that they might be transmitted to the generations to come; we can never be enough

thankful to God for the written word. 1. He is told that, according to the tenor of these words, God would make a covenant with Moses and Israel, not with Israel immediately, but with them in Moses as mediator; thus the covenant of grace is with believers through Christ, who is given of a Covenant to the people, Isa. 49. 8. And as here the covenant was made according to the tenor of the commandment, so it is still; for we are by baptism brought into covenant, that we may be taught to observe all things whatsoever Christ has commanded us, Matth. 28. 19, 20.

23. And he was there with the Lord forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread nor drink water. And he wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments. 29. And it came to pass, when Moses came down from mount Sinai with the two tables of testimony in Moses' hand, when he came down from the mount, that Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone while He talked with him. 30. And when Aaron and all the children of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone: and they were afraid to come nigh him. 31. And Moses called unto them; and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned unto them: and Moses talked with them. 32. And afterward all the children of Israel came nigh: and he gave them in commandment all that the Lord had spoken with him in mount Sinai. 33. And till Moses had done speaking with them, he put a vail on his face. 34. But when Moses went in before the Lord, to speak with Him, he took the vail off until he came out. And he came out, and spake unto the children of Israel that which he was commanded. 35. And the children of Israel saw the face of Moses, that the skin of Moses' face shone: and Moses put the vail upon his face again, until he went in to speak with Him.

I. The continuance of Moses in the mount, where he was miraculously sustained, v. 28. He was there in very intimate communion with God, without interruption, forty days and forty nights; and did not think it long; when we are weary of an hour or two spent in attendance upon God, and in adoration of him, we should think how many days and nights Moses spent with him, and of the eternal day we hope to spend in praising him. During all this time, Moses did neither eat nor drink. Though he had, before, been kept so long fasting, yet he did not, this second time, take up so many days' provision along with him, but believed that man lives not by bread alone, and encouraged himself with the experience he had of the strength of it. So long he continued without meat and drink, and (probably, without sleep too,) for, 1. The power of God supported him, that he did not need it; he who made the body can nourish it without ordinary means, which he uses, but is not tied to; The life is more than meat. 2. His communion with God entertained him, so that he did not desire it. He had meat to eat, which the world knew not of, for it was his meat and drink to hear the word of God and pray. The abundant satisfaction his soul had in the word of God, and the visions of the Almighty, made him forget the body and the pleasures of it. When God would treat his favourite Moses, it was not with meat and drink, but with his light, law, and love; with his word of power and life, which he will; then man did indeed eat angels' food. See what we should value as the truest pleasure; the kingdom of God is not meat and drink, neither the plenty nor delicacy of that, but righteousness, and peace, and joy in the Holy Ghost. As Moses, so Elijah and Christ, fasted forty days and forty nights; the more dead we are to the delights of sense, the better prepared we are for the pleasures of heaven.

II. The coming down of Moses from the mount, greatly enriched, and miraculously adorned. 1. He came down enriched with the best treasure, for he brought in his hands the two tables of the law, written with the finger of God, v. 28, 29. It is a great favour to have the law given us; this favour was showed to Israel, Ps. 147. 19, 20. It is a great honour to be employed in delivering God's law to others, as Moses in作了 to the Israelites: through the glory of his angel, with tidings of peace and reconciliation. Then he came with a rod, now with the spirit of meekness. Now this may be looked upon, (1.) As a great honour done to Moses, that the people might never again question his mission, or think or speak slightly of him. He carried his credentials in his very countenance, which, some think, retained the long as he lived, some think, remainders of this glory, which perhaps contributed to the vigour of his old age; that eye could not wax dim which had seen God, nor that face become wrinkled which had shone with his glory; the Israelites could not look him in the face, but they must there read his commission; Thus was it done to the man whom the King of kings did delight to honour; yet, after this, they murmured against him; for the most sensible people are, sometimes, with the most obstinate infidelity. The shining of Moses's face was a great honour to him, yet that was no glory, in comparison with the glory which excelled; we read of our Lord Jesus, not only that his face shone as the sun, but his whole body also, for his raiment was white and glistening, Luke 9. 29. But, when he came down from the mount, he quite laid aside that glory, it being his will that we should walk by faith, not by sight. (2.) It was also a great favour to the people, and an encouragement to them, that God put this glory upon him who was their intercessor, thereby giving them assurance that he was accepted, and they through him. Thus the advance of Christ, our Advocate with the Father, is the great support of our faith. (3.) It was the effect of his sight of God. Communion with God,

1. Makes the face to shine with true honour. Seeing godliness has much to do with the lustre upon a man's countenance, such as commands esteem and affection.

2. It should make the face to shine in universal holiness; when we have been in the mount with God, we should let our light shine before men, in humility, meekness, and all the instances of a heavenly conversation; thus must the beauty of the Lord our God be upon us, even the beauty of holiness, that all we converse with may take know...
EXODUS, XXXV.

ledge of us, that we have been with Jesus, Acts 4. 13.

Now concerning the shining of Moses's face, observe here.

First, That Moses was not aware of it himself; (v. 29.) He was not that the skin of his face shone. Thus, 1. It is the infidelity of some, that their faces shine in true grace, and yet they do not know it, to take the comfort of it. Their friends see much of God in them, but they themselves are ready to think they have no grace. 2. It is the humility of others, that their faces shine in eminent gifts and usefulness, and yet they do not know it, to be puffed up with it; whatever beauty God puts upon us, we should still be filled with such a humble sense of our own unworthiness and manifold infirmities, as well make us even overlook and forget that which makes our faces shine.

Secondly, That Aaron and the children of Israel saw it, and were afraid, v. 30. The truth of it was attested by a multitude of witnesses, who were also conscious of the terror of it. It not only dazzled their eyes, but struck such an awe upon them, as obliged them to retire: probably, they doubted whether it were a token of God's favour, or of his displeasure; and though it seemed most likely to be a good omen, yet, being guilty, they feared the worst, especially remembering the posture Moses found them in when he came last down from the mount. Holiness will command reverence: but the sense of sin makes men afraid of their friends, and even of that which really is a favour to them.

Thirdly, That Moses put a veil upon his face, when he perceived that it shone, v. 33, 35. 1. This teaches us all a lesson of modesty and humility. We must be content to have our excellencies obscured, and a veil drawn over them, not coveting to make a fair show in the flesh. They that are truly desirous to be owned and accepted of God, will likewise desire not to be taken notice of or applauded by men, Qui bene latuit, bene vivit — There is a laudable concealment. 2. It teaches ministers to accommodate themselves to the capacities of the people, and to defer to them, as much as the art and learning of man can possibly bear it. Let all that art, and all that learning, be vailed, which tend to amusement rather than edification; and let the strong condescend to the infirmities of the weak. 3. This veil signified the darkness of that dispensation; the ceremonial institutions had in them much of Christ and the grace of the gospel, but a veil was drawn over it, so that the children of Israel could not distinctly and steadfastly see those good things to come, which the law had the shadow of. It was beauty vailed; gold in the mine; a pearl in the shell: but, thanks be to God, by the gospel, life and immortality are brought to light, the veil is taken away from off the Old Testament; yet still it remains upon the hearts of those who shut their eyes against the light. Thus the apostle expounds this passage, 2 Cor. 3. 13. 15.

Fourthly, That when he went in before the Lord, to speak with him in the tabernacle of meeting, he put off the veil, v. 34. Then there was no occasion for it, and, before God, every man does and must appear unveiled, for all things are naked and open before the eyes of him with whom we have to do, and it is folly for us to think of concealing or disguising anything. Every veil must be thrown aside, when we come to present ourselves unto the Lord. This was also the case here, (S. Ch. 3. 16.) that when a veil turns to the Lord, the veil shall be taken away, that with open face it may behold his glory. And when we shall come before the Lord in heaven, to be there for ever speaking with him, the veil shall not only be taken off from the divine glory, but from our hearts and eyes, that we may see as we are seen, and know as we are known.

CHAP. XXXV.

What should have been said and done upon Moses' coming down the first time from the mount, if the golden calf had not broken the measures, and put all into disorder, now at last, when with great difficulty reconciliation was made, begins to be said and done; and that great affair of the setting up of God's worship, is put into its former channel again, and goes on now without interruption. 1. Moses gives Israel those instructions, received from God, which required immediate observance. 1. Concerning the sabbath, v. 1. 3. 2. Concerning the contribution that was to be made for the erecting of the tabernacle, v. 9. 3. 3. Concerning the vessels of the tabernacle and the utensils of it, v. 10—19. II. The people bring in their contributions, v. 20—29. III. The head-workmen are nominated, v. 30—33.

1. And Moses gathered all the congregation of the children of Israel together, and said unto them, These are the words which the Lord hath commanded, that ye should do them. 2. Six days shall work be done; but on the seventh day there shall be to you a holy day, a sabbath, a sabbath of rest to the Lord: whosoever doeth work therein shall be put to death. 3. Ye shall kindle no fire throughout your habitations upon the sabbath-day. 4. And Moses spake unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the Lord commanded, saying, 5. Take ye from among you an offering unto the Lord: whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring it, an offering of the Lord; gold, and silver, and brass, 6. And blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair, 7. And rams' skins dyed red, and badgers' skins, and shittim-wood, 8. And oil for the light, and spices for anointing oil, and for the sweet incense, 9. And onyx-stones, and stones to be set, for the ephod, and for the breastplate. 10. And every wise-hearted among you shall come, and make all that the Lord hath commanded; 11. The tabernacle, his tent, and his covering, his taches, and his boards, his bars, his pillars, and his sockets, 12. The ark and the staves thereof, with the mercy-seat, and the vail of the covering, 13. The table and his staves, and all his vessels, and the show-bread, 14. The candlestick also for the light, and his furniture, and his lamps, with the oil for the light, 15. And the incense-altar, and his staves, and the anointing oil, and the sweet incense, and the hanging for the door at the entering in of the tabernacle, 16. The altar of burnt-offering, with his brazen grate, his staves, and all his vessels, the laver and his foot, 17. The hangings of the court, his pillars, and their sockets, and the hanging for the door of the court, 18. The pins of the tabernacle, and the pins of the court, and their cords,
The clothes of service, to do service in the holy place, the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office.

It was said in general, (ch. 34. 32.) Moses gave them in commandment all that the Lord had spoken with him. But the erecting and furnishing of the tabernacle being the work to which they were now immediately to apply themselves, here is particular mention of the orders given concerning that.

1. All the congregation is summoned to attend, (v. 1.) that is, the heads and rulers of the congregation, the representatives of the several tribes, who must receive instructions from Moses, as he had received them from the Lord, and must communicate them to the people. Thus St. John, being commanded to write to the seven churches what had been revealed to him, writes it to the angels, or ministers, of the churches.

2. Moses gave them in charge all that (and that only) which God had commanded him; thus he approved himself faithful both to God and Israel, between whom he was a messenger or mediator. If he had added, altered, or diminished, he had been false to both. But both sides having reposed a trust in him, he was true to the trust; yet he was faithful as a servant only, but Christ as a Son, Heb. 3. 5, 6.

3. He begins with the law of the sabbath, because it was most conspicuous and material to the former work he had received; (v. 2, 3.) Six days shall work be done, work for the tabernacle, the work of the day that was now to be done in its day; and they had little else to do here in the wilderness, where they had neither husbandry nor merchandise, neither food to get, nor clothes to make; but on the seventh day you must not strike a stroke, no, not at the tabernacle-work; the honour of the sabbath was above that of the sanctuary, more ancient, and more lasting; that must be to you a holy day, devoted to God, and not to be spent in common business, it is a sabbath of rests. It is a sabbath of sabbaths, so some read it; more honourable and excellent than any of the other feasts, and should survive them all. A sabbath of sabbatism, so others read it, being typical of that sabbatism or rest, both spiritual and eternal, which remains for the people of God.

4. He orders preparation to be made for the setting up of the tabernacle. Two things were to be done:

(1.) All that were able must contribute; Take ye from among you an offering, v. 5. The tabernacle was to be dedicated to the honour of God, and used in his service; and therefore what was brought for the setting up and furnishing of that, was an offering. The Lord extended not to God, but what is laid out for the support of his kingdom and interest among men, he is pleased to accept as an offering to himself; and he requires such acknowledgments of our receiving all from him, and such instances of our dedicating all to him. The rule is, Whosoever is of a willing heart, let him bring. It was not to be a imposition upon them, but a benevolence or voluntary contribution; to intimate to us, [1.] That God has not made our yoke heavy. He is a Prince that does not burthen his subjects with taxes, nor make them to serve with an offering, but draws with the cords of a man, and leaves it to ourselves to judge what is right; his is a government that there is no cause to complain of, for he does not rule with rigour.

[2.] That God loves a cheerful giver, and is best pleased with the free-will offerings. Those services are acceptable to him, that come from the willing heart of a willing people, Ps. 110. 3.

(2.) All that are skilful must work; (v. 10.) Every wise-hearted among you shall come, and make. See how God dispenses his gifts variously; and, as every man hath received the gift, so he must minister, 1. Pet. 4. 10. Those that were rich must bring in materials to work on; those that were ingenious must serve the tabernacle with their ingenuity; as they needed one another, so the tabernacle needed them both, 1 Cor. 12. 7, 21. The work was likely to go on, when some helped with their purses, others with their hands, and both with a willing heart. Moses, as he had told them what must be done, (v. 5-9.) so he gives them the general heads of what must be made; (v. 11., 19.) that, seeing how much work was before them, they might apply themselves to it the more vigorously, and every hand might be busy; and it gave them such an idea of the fabric designed, that they could not but long to see it finished.

20. And all the congregation of the children of Israel departed from the presence of Moses. 21. And they came, every one whose heart stirred him up, and every one whom his spirit made willing, and they brought the Lord's offering to the work of the tabernacle of the congregation, and for all his service, and for the holy garments. 22. And they came, both men and women, as many as were willing-hearted, and brought bracelets, and ear-rings, and rings, and tablets, all jewels of gold; and every man that offered, offered an offering of gold unto the Lord. 23. And every man with whom was found blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine linen, and goats' hair, and red skins of rams, and badgers' skins, brought them. 24. Every one that did offer an offering of silver and brass brought the Lord's offering; and every man with whom was found shittim-wood, for any work of the service, brought it. 25. And all the women that were wise-hearted did spin with their hands, and brought that which they had spun, both of blue, and of purple, and of scarlet, and of fine linen. 26. And all the women whose heart stirred them up in wisdom spun goats' hair. 27. And the rulers brought onyx-stones, and stones to be set, for the ephod, and for the breastplate: 28. And spice, and oil for the light, and for the anointing oil, and for the sweet incense.
29. The children of Israel brought a willing offering unto the Lord, every man and woman, whose heart made them willing to bring, for all manner of work which the Lord had commanded to be made by the hands of Moses.

Moses having made known to them the will of God, they went home, and immediately put in practice what they had heard, v. 20. 'Oh that every congregation would thus depart from the hearing of the word of God, with a full resolution to be doers of the same!' Observe here,

1. The offerings that were brought for the service of the tabernacle, v. 21, &c. Concerning which many things are noted.

1. It is intimated that they brought their offerings immediately: they departed to their tents immediately to fetch their offering, and did not desire time to consider of it, lest their zeal should be cooled by delays. What duty God convinces us of, and calls us to, we should set about speedily. No season will be more convenient than the present season.

2. It is said that their spirits made them willing, (v. 35.) and their hearts, v. 29. What they did, they did cheerfully, and from a good principle. They were willing, and it was not any external inducement that made them so, but their spirits. It was from a principle of love to God and his service; a desire of his presence with them in his ordinances; gratitude for the great things he had done for them; faith in his promise of what he would further do; or, at least, from the present consideration of these things, that they were willing to offer. What we give and do for God, is then acceptable when it comes from a good principle in the heart and spirit.

3. When it is said that as many as were willing-hearted brought their offerings, (v. 22.) it should seem as if there were some who were not, who loved their gold better than their God, and would not part with it, so not for the service of the tabernacle; such there are, who will be called Israelites, and yet will not be moved by the example of these, nor be convinced of the good examples of those about them, nor part with any thing for the interests of God's kingdom: they are for the true religion, provided it be cheap, and will cost them nothing.

4. The offerings were of divers kinds, according as they had; those that had gold and precious stones, brought them, not thinking any thing too good and too rich to part with for the honour of God. Those that had not precious stones to bring, brought goats' hair, and rams' skins: if we cannot do as much as others for God, we must not therefore sit still and do nothing; if the meaner offerings, which are according to our ability, gain us not such a reputation among men, yet they shall not fail of acceptance with God, who requires according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not, 2 Cor. 8. 12. Two mites from a pauper were more pleasing than so many talents from a Dives. God has an eye to the heart of the giver, more than the value of the gift.

5. Many of the things they offered were their ornaments, bracelets and rings, and tablets or leckets; (v. 22.) and even the women parted with these. Can a maid forget her ornaments? Thus far they forgot them, that they preferred the beautiful of the sanctuary before their own adorning. Let this teach us in general, to part with that for God when he calls for it, which is very dear to us, which we value, and value ourselves by; and particularly to lay aside our ornaments, and deny ourselves in them, when either they occasion offence to others, or feed our own pride. If we think these gospel-rules concerning our clothing too strict, (1 Tim. 2. 9, 10. 1 Pet. 3. 3, 4.) I fear we should scarcely have done as these Israelites did. If they thought their ornaments well-bestowed upon the tabernacle, shall not we think the want of ornaments was well made up by the graces of the Spirit? Prov. 1. 9.

6. These rich things that they offered, we may suppose, were mostly the spoils of the Egyptians; for the Israelites in Egypt were kept poor, till they borrowed at parting. And we may suppose the rulers had better things, (v. 27.) because, having more influence among the Egyptians, they borrowed larger sums. Who would have thought that the greatest part of Egypt should be improved by being employed; but thus God has often made the earth to help the woman, Rev. 12. 16. It was by a special providence and promise of God, that the Israelites got all that spoil, and therefore it was highly fit that they should devote a part of it to the service of that God to whom they owed it all. Let every man give according as God hath prospered him, 1 Cor. 16. 2. Extraordinary successes should be acknowledged by extraordinary offerings. Appointed contributions that are to be supplied as they are borrowed, as it were, from the Egyptians; those that are enriched with these must devote them to the service of God and his tabernacle: they may be used as helps to understand the scriptures, as ornaments or hand-maids to divinity. But then great care must be taken that Egypt's gods mingle not with Egypt's gold. Moses, though learned in all the learning of the Egyptians, did not therefore pretend, in the least instance, to correct the pattern of the tabernacle or the furniture of the tabernacle with the riches of Egypt, was perhaps a good omen to the Gentiles, who, in the fulness of time, should be brought into the gospel-tabernacle, and their silver and their gold with them. ( Isa. 60. 9.) and it should be said, Blessed be Egypt my people, Isa. 19. 25.

7. We may suppose that the remembrance of the offerings made for the golden calf made them the more forward in these: if those who were then parted with their ear-rings, would now testify their repentance by giving the rest of their jewels to the service of God: godly sorrow worketh such a revenge, 2 Cor. 7. 11. And those that had kept themselves pure from that idolatry, yet argued with themselves, "Were they so forward in contributing to an idol, and shall we be backward or sneaking in our offerings to the Lord?" Thus some good was brought even out of that evil.

II. The work that was done for the service of the tabernacle; (v. 25.) The women did spin with their hands; some spun fine work, of blue and purple, others coarse work, of goats' hair, and yet their's also is said to be done in wisdom, v. 26. As it is not only rich gifts, so it is not only fine work, that God accepts. Notice is here taken of the good women's work for God, as well as of Bezaleel and Aholibah. The meanest hand employed, the meanest service performed, for the honour of God, shall have an honourable recompense; Mary's anointing of Christ's head shall be told for a memorial, (Matth. 26. 13.) and a record is kept of the women that laboured in the gospel tabernacle, (Phil. 4. 3.) and were helpers to Paul in Christ Jesus, Rom. 16. 3. It is part of the character of the virtuous woman, that she layeth her hand to the plodding, Prov. 31. 13. Here turned to a prison use, as it may be still (though we have no hangings to make for the tabernacle) by the imitation of the charity of Dorcas, who made coats and garments for poor widows, Acts 9.
31. Even those that are not in a capacity to give in charity, may yet work in charity; and thus the poor may relieve the poor, and those that have nothing but their limbs and senses may be very charitable in the labour of love.

30. And Moses said unto the children of Israel, See, the Lord hath called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah; 31. And he hath filled him with the spirit of God, in wisdom, in understanding, and in knowledge, and in all manner of workmanship; 32. And to devise curious works, to work in gold, and in silver, and in brass, 33. And in the cutting of stones to set them, and in carving of wood, to make any manner of cunning work. 34. And he hath put in his heart that he may teach, both he and Aholiab the son of Ahisamach of the tribe of Dan. 35. Them hath he filled with wisdom of heart, to work all manner of work, of the engraver, and of the cunning workman, and of the embroiderer, in blue, and in purple, in scarlet, and in fine linen, and of the weaver, even of them that do any work, and of those that devise cunning work.

Here is the divine appointment of the master-workmen, that there might be no strife for the office, and that all who were employed in the work might take direction from, and give account to, these general inspectors; for God is the God of order, and not of confusion.

Observe, 1. Those whom God called by name to this service, he filled with the Spirit of God, to qualify them for it, v. 30, 31. Skill in secular employments is God's gift, and comes from above, Jam. 1. 17. From him the faculty is, and the improvement of it. To his honour therefore all knowledge must be devoted, and we must study how to serve him with it. The work was extraordinary which Bezaleel was designed for, and therefore he was qualified in an extraordinary manner for it; thus, when the apostles were appointed to be master-builders in setting up the gospel-tabernacle, they were filled with the Spirit of God in wisdom and understanding. 2. They were appointed, not only to devise, but to work, (v. 32,) to work all manner of work; v. 35. Those of eminient gifts, that are capable of directing others, must not think that that will excuse them in idleness: many are ingenious enough in cutting out work for other people, and can tell what this man and that man should do, but the burthen they bind on others they themselves will not touch with one of their fingers. These will fall under the character of slothful servants. 3. They were not only to devise the work themselves, but they were to teach others, v. 34. Not only had Bezaleel power to command, but he was to take pains to instruct. Those that rule should teach; and those to whom God has given knowledge should be willing to communicate it for the benefit of others, not coveting to monopolize it.

selves a free-will offering to the Lord, for his service, (Rom. 15. 16.) and they are then committed to the care of his ministers, as builders, to be framed and wrought upon for their edification and increase in holiness, till they all come, like the curtains of the tabernacle, in the unity of the faith to be a holy temple, Eph. 2. 21, 22.

1. The honesty of the workmen. When they had cut out their work, and found how their stuff held out, and that the people were still forward to bring in more, they went in a body to Moses to tell him that there needed no more contributions, v. 4, 5. Had they sought their own things, they had now a fair opportunity of enriching themselves by the people's gifts: for they might have made up their work, and converted the surplus to their own use, as perquisites of their place. But they were men of integrity, that scorned to do so mean a thing as to spunge upon the people, and enrich themselves with that which was offered to the Lord. Those are the greatest cheats that cheat the public. If to murder many is worse than to murder one, by the same rule, to defraud communities, and to rob the church or state, is a much greater crime than to pick the pocket of a single person. But these workmen were not only ready to account for all they received, but were not willing to receive more than they had occasion for, lest they should come either into the temptation, or under the suspicion, of taking it to themselves. These were men that knew when they had enough.

2. The liberality of the people; though they saw what an abundance was contributed, yet they continued to offer, till they were forbidden by a proclamation, v. 6, 7. A rare instance! Most need a spur to quicken their charity; few need a bridle to check it; yet these did. Had Moses aimed to enrich himself, he might have suffered them still to bring in their offerings; and, when the work was finished, might have taken the remainder to himself: but he also preferred the public before his own private interest, and was therein a good example to all in public trusts. It is said, (v. 6.) The people were restrained from bringing; they looked upon it as a restraint upon them, not to be allowed to do more for the tabernacle; so was the spirit of those that would have been pleased with their flowers, 6, and beyond their flower, praying the collectors with much entreaty to receive the gift, 2 Cor. 8. 3, 4. These were the fruits of a first love; in these last days charity is grown so cold for us to expect such things from it.

8. And every wise-hearted man among them that wrought the work of the tabernacle, made ten curtains of fine twined linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet: with cherubims of cunning work made he them. 9. The length of one curtain was twenty and eight cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits: the curtains were all of one size. 10. And he coupled the five curtains one unto another; and the other five curtains he coupled one unto another. 11. And he made loops of blue on the edge of one curtain, from the selvedge in the coupling: likewise he made in the uttermost side of another curtain, in the coupling of the second. 12. Fifty loops made he in one curtain, and fifty loops made he in the edge of the curtain which was in the coupling of the second: the loops held one curtain to another. 13. And he made fifty taches of gold, and coupled the curtains one unto another with the taches: so it became one tabernacle.

The first work they set about was the framing of the house; that must be done before the furniture of it was prepared. This house was not made of timber or stone, but of curtains curiously embroidered and coupled together. This serves to typify the state of the church in this world, the palace of God's kingdom among men. 1. Though it is upon the earth, yet its foundation is not in the earth, as that of a house is; no, Christ's kingdom is not of this world, nor founded in it. 2. It is mean and matable, and in a militant state; shepherds dwell in tents, and God is the Shepherd of Israel; soldiers dwell in tents, and the Lord is a Man of war, and his church marches through an enemy's country, and must fight its way. The kings of the earth close themselves in cedar, (Jer. 22. 15.) but the ark of God was lodged in curtains only. 3. Yet there is a beauty in holy curtains: the curtains were embroidered, so is the church adorned with the gifts and graces of the Spirit, that raiment of needle work, Ps. 45. 14. 4. The several societies of believers are united in one, and, as here, all become one tabernacle; for there is one Lord, one faith, and one baptism.

14. And he made curtains of goats' hair for the tent over the tabernacle; eleven curtains he made them. 15. The length of one curtain was thirty cubits, and four cubits was the breadth of one curtain: the eleven curtains were of one size. 16. And he coupled five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves. 17. And he made fifty loops upon the uttermost edge of the curtain in the coupling, and fifty loops made he upon the edge of the curtain which coupled the second. 18. And he made fifty taches of brass to couple the tent together, that it might be one. 19. And he made a covering for the tent of rams' skins dyed red, and a covering of badgers' skins above that. 20. And he made boards for the tabernacle of shittimwood, standing up. 21. The length of a board was ten cubits, and the breadth of a board one cubit and a half. 22. One board had two tenons, equally distant one from another: thus did he make for all the boards of the tabernacle. 23. And he made boards for the tabernacle: twenty boards for the south side, southward. 24. And forty sockets of silver he made under the twenty boards: two sockets under one board for his two tenons, and two sockets under another board for his two tenons. 25. And for the other side of the tabernacle, which is toward the north corner, he made twenty boards, 26. And their forty sockets of silver: two sockets under one board, and two sockets under another board. 27. And for the sides of the tabernacle westward he made six boards. 28. And two boards made he for the corners of the tabernacle in the two sides. 29. And they were coupled beneath, and coupled together at the head thereof, to one ring: thus did he to both of them in both the corners. 30. And there were eight boards; and their sockets were sixteen sockets of silver, under every board two sockets. 31. And he made bars of shittim-wood: five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle, 32. And five bars for the boards of the other side of the tabernacle, and five bars for the boards of the tabernacle for the sides westward. 33. And he made the middle bar to shoot through the boards from the one end to the other. 34. And he overlaid the boards with gold, and made their rings of gold to be places for the bars, and overlaid the bars with gold.

Here, 1. The shelter and special protection that the church is under, are signified by the curtains of h ir-cloth, which were spread over the tabernacle, and the covering of rams' skins and badgers' skins over them, v. 14. 19. God has provided for his people a shadow, a covert from storm and rain; (Isa. 4. 6.) they are armed against all weather; the sun and moon shall not smite them; and they are protected from the storm of divine wrath, that half which will sweep away the refuge of lies, Isa. 28. 17. Those that dwell in God's house shall find, be the tempest ever so violent, or the dropping ever so continual, it does not rain in. 2. The strength and stability of the church, though it is but a tabernacle, are signified by the boards and bars with which the curtains were borne up, v. 26. 34. The boards were coupled together and joined by the bars that shot through them; for the union of the church, and the hearty agreement of those that are its stays and supporters, contribute abundantly to its strength and establishment.

35. And he made a vail of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen: with cherubims made he it of cunning work. 36. And he made thereunto four pillars of shittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold: their hooks were of gold; and he cast for them four sockets of silver. 37. And he made a hanging for the tabernacle-door, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen, of needle-work; 38. And the five pillars of it, with their hooks: and he overlaid their chapiters and their fillets with gold; but their five sockets were of brass.

In the building of a house there is a great deal of work about the doors and partitions; in the tabernacle they were answerable to the rest of the fabric; there were curtains for doors, and vails for partitions. 1. There was a vail made for a partition between the holy place and the most holy, v. 33. 36. This signifies the darkness and distance of that dispensation, compared with the New Testament, which shows us the glory of God more clearly, and invites us to draw near to it; and the darkness and distance of our present state, in comparison with heaven, where we shall be ever with the Lord, and see him as he is. 2. There was a vail made for the door of the tabernacle, v. 37. 38. At this door the people assembled, though forbidden to enter; for, while we are in this present state, we must get as near God as we can.

CHAP. XXXVII.

Bezaleel and his workmen are still busy, making, I. The ark with the mercy-seat and the cherubims, v. 1. 9. II. The table with its vessels, v. 10. 16. III. The candle-stick with its appurtenances, v. 17. 24. IV. The golden altar for incense, v. 25. 28. V. The holy oil and incense, v. 29. The particular appointment concerning each of which we had before in the 25th and 30th chapters.

1. And Bezaleel made the ark of shittim-wood: two cubits and a half was the length of it, and a cubit and a half the breadth of it, and a cubit and a half the height of it. 2. And he overlaid it with pure gold within and without, and made a crown of gold to it round about. 3. And he cast for it four rings of gold, to be set by the four corners of it; even two rings upon the one side of it and two rings upon the other side of it. 4. And he made staves of shittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold. 5. And he put the staves into the rings by the sides of the ark, to bear the ark. 6. And he made the mercy-seat of pure gold: two cubits and a half was the length thereof, and one cubit and a half the breadth thereof. 7. And he made two cherubims of gold, beaten out of one piece made he them, on the two ends of the mercy-seat; 8. One cherub on the end on this side, and another cherub on the other end on that side: out of the mercy-seat made he the cherubims, on the two ends thereof. 9. And the cherubims spread out their wings on high, and covered with their wings over the mercy-seat, with their faces one to another; even to the mercy-seat-ward were the faces of the cherubims.

It may be thought strange that Moses, when he had recorded so fully the instructions given him upon the mount for the making of all these things, should here record as particularly the making of them; when it might have sufficed only to have said, in a few words, that each of these things was made exactly according to the directions before recited. We are sure that Moses, when he wrote by divine inspiration, used no vain repetitions; there are no idle words in scripture. Why then are so many chapters taken up with this narrative, which we are tempted to think needless and tedious? But we must consider that these chapters were primarily for the people of Israel, to whom it would be of great use to read and hear often of these divine and sacred treasures with which they were intrusted. These several ornaments wherewith the tabernacle was furnished, they were not admitted to see, but the priests only, and therefore it was requisite that they should be thus largely described particularly to them. That which they ought to have heard by heart, (says St. Paul,) to be not grievous, but for you it is safe, Phil. 3. 17. Moses well knew these things were to be of great use to the future posterity, by which he and his workmen took, to make every thing exactly according to the pattern showed him in the mount. Having before given us the original, he here gives us the copy, that we may compare them, and observe how exactly they agree. Thus he appeals to every reader concerning his fidelity to him that appointed him, in all his house, and in all the particulars of it, Heb. 3. 5. And thus he teaches us to have respect to all God's commandments, even to every iota and tittle of them. 3. It is intimated hereby, that God takes delight in the sincere obedience of his people, and keeps an exact account of it, which shall be produced to their honour in the resurrection of the just. None can be so punctual in their duty, but God will be as punctual in his notices of it. He is not unrighteous to forget the work and labour of love, in any instance of it, Heb. 6. 10. 4. The spiritual riches and beauties of the gospel-tabernacle are hereby recommended to our frequent and serious consideration. Go walk about this Zion, view it and review it: the more you contemplate the glories of the church, the more you will admire them and be in love with them. The charter of its privileges, and the account of its constitution, will very well bear a second reading.

In what we have an account of the making of the ark, with its glorious and most significant appurtenances, the mercy-seat and the cherubims. Consider these three together, and they represent the glory of a holy God, the sincerity of a holy heart, and the communion that is between them, in and by a Mediator. 1. It is the glory of a holy God, that dwells between the cherubims, that is, in continually stated mediations, and the more we are shut up to God, whose presence was signified by the wings of the cherubims, while their unanimity and joint concurrence in their services were signified by their faces being one towards another. 2. It is the character of an upright heart, that, like the ark of the testimony, it is the law of God hid and kept in it. 3. By Jesus Christ, the great Propitiation, there is reconciliation made, and a communion set up between God and man, in which the intercession of the mercy-seat is signified. 4. There is a blessed harmony between us and God's displeasure: and not only so, but through him we become entitled to God's favour. If he write his law in our heart, he will be to us a God, and we shall be to him a people; from the mercy-seat he will teach us, there he will accept us, and show himself merciful to our unrighteousness; and under the shadow of his wings we shall be safe and easy.

10. And he made the table of shittim-wood: two cubits was the length thereof, and a cubit the breadth thereof, and a cubit and a half the height thereof. 11. And he overlaid it with pure gold, and made thereunto a crown of gold round about. 12. Also he made thereunto a border of a handbreadth round about; and made a crown of gold for the border thereof round about. 13. And he cast for it four rings of gold, and put the rings upon the four corners that were in the four feet thereof. 14. Over against the border were the rings, the places for the staves, to bear the table. 15. And he made the staves of shittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold, to bear the table. 16. And he made the vessels which were upon the table, his dishes, and his spoons, and his bowls, and his covers, to cover withal, of pure gold. 17. And he made the candlestick of pure gold: of beaten work made he the candlestick; his shaft, and his branch, his bowls, his knops, and his flowers, were of the same. 18. And six branches going out of the sides thereof; three branches of the candlestick out of the one side thereof and three branches of the candlestick out of the other side thereof. 19. Three bowls made he after the fashion of almonds in one branch, a knob and a flower; and three bowls made like almonds in another branch a knob and a flower; so throughout the six branches going out of the candlestick. 20. And in the candlestick were four bowls made like almonds, his knobs, and his flowers: 21. And a knob under two branches of the same, and a knob under two branches of the same, and a knob under two branches of the same, according to the six branches going out of it. 22. Their knobs and their branches were of the same: all of it was one beaten work of pure gold. 23. And he made his seven lamps, and his snuffers, and his snuff-dishes of pure gold. 24. Of a talent of pure gold made he it, and all the vessels thereof.

Here is, 1. The making of the table on which the show-bread was to be continually placed. God is a good Householder, that always keeps a plentiful table. Is the world his tabernacle? His providence in it spreads a table for all the creatures: he provides food for all flesh. Is the church his tabernacle? His grace in it spreads a table for all believers, furnished with the bread of life. But observe his internal dispensation of the gospel exceeds that of the law. Though here was a table furnished, it was only with show-bread, bread to be looked upon, not to be fed upon, while it was on this table, and afterward only by the priests; but to the table which Christ has spread in the new covenant all real Christians are invited guests: and to them it is said, Eat, O friends, come eat of my bread; what the law gave but a sight of at a distance, the gospel gives the enjoyment of, and a hearty welcome to.

2. The making of the candlestick, which was nct of wood overlaid with gold, but all beaten work of pure gold only, v. 17, 22. This signified that light of divine revelation with which God's church upon earth (which is his tabernacle among men) has always been enlightened, being always supplied with fresh oil from Christ the good Olive, Zech. 4.

3. God's manifestations of himself in this world are but candle-light, compared with the day-light of the future state. The Bible is a golden candlestick, it is of pure gold; (Ps. 19. 10.) from it light is diffused to every part of God's tabernacle, that by it his spiritual priests may see to minister unto the Lord, and to do the service of his sanctuary. This candlestick has not only its bowls for necessary use, but its knobs and flowers for ornament; there are many things which God saw fit to beautify his word with, which we can no more give a reason for than for these knobs and flowers, and yet we are sure that they were added for good purpose. Let us bless God for this candlestick, have an eye to it continually, and dread the removal of it out of its place.

25. And he made the incense altar of shittim-wood: the length of it was a cubit, and the breadth of it a cubit, (it was foursquare,) and two cubits was the height of it; the horns thereof were of the same. 26. And he overlaid it with pure gold, both the top of it, and the sides thereof round about, and the horns of it: also he made unto it a crown of gold round about. 27. And he made two rings of gold for it under the crown thereof, by the two corners of it, upon the two sides thereof, to be places for the staves, to bear it withal. 28. And he made the staves of shittim-wood, and overlaid them with gold. 29. And he made the holy anointing oil, and the pure incense of sweet spices according to the work of the apothecary.

Here is, 1. The making of the golden altar, on which incense was to be burnt daily; which signified both the prayers of saints, and the intercession of Christ, to which are owing the acceptableness and success of those prayers. The rings and staves, and all the appurtenances of this altar, were overlaid with gold, as all the vessels of the table and candlestick were of gold, for these were used in the holy place. God is the Best, and we must serve him with the best we have; so that best we can serve him with, in his courts on earth, is but as brass, compared with the gold, the sinless and spotless perfection, with which his saints shall serve him in his holy place above. 2. The preparing of the incense, which was to be burnt upon this altar, and with it the holy anointing oil, (v. 29.) according to that dispensatory, ch. 30. 22, &c. God taught Bezaleel this art also; so that best he can serve him with, in his courts on earth, is but as brass, compared with the gold, the sinless and spotless perfection, with which his saints shall serve him in his holy place above. 2. The preparing of the incense, which was to be burnt upon this altar, and with it the holy anointing oil, (v. 29.) according to that dispensatory, ch. 30. 22, &c. God taught Bezaleel this art also; so that best he can serve him with, in his courts on earth, is but as brass, compared with the gold, the sinless and spotless perfection, with which his saints shall serve him in his holy place above. 2. The preparing of the incense, which was to be burnt upon this altar, and with it the holy anointing oil, (v. 29.) according to that dispensatory, ch. 30. 22, &c. God taught Bezaleel this art also; so that best he can serve him with, in his courts on earth, is but as brass, compared with the gold, the sinless and spotless perfection, with which his saints shall serve him in his holy place above. 2. The preparing of the incense, which was to be burnt upon this altar, and with it the holy anointing oil, (v. 29.) according to that dispensatory, ch. 30. 22, &c. God taught Bezaleel this art also; so that best he can serve him with, in his courts on earth, is but as brass, compared with the gold, the sinless and spotless perfection, with which his saints shall serve him in his holy place above. 2. The preparing of the incense, which was to be burnt upon this altar, and with it the holy anointing oil, (v. 29.) according to that dispensatory, ch. 30. 22, &c. God taught Bezaleel this art also; so that best he can serve him with, in his courts on earth, is but as brass, compared with the gold, the sinless and spotless perfection, with which his saints shall serve him in his holy place above. 2. The preparing of the incense, which was to be burnt upon this altar, and with it the holy anointing oil, (v. 29.) according to that dispensatory, ch. 30. 22, &c. God taught Bezaleel this art also; so that best he can serve him with, in his courts on earth, is but as brass, compared with the gold, the sinless and spotless perfection, with which his saints shall serve him in his holy place above. 2. The preparing of the showed their zeal upon this occasion, by assisting in the work that was now going on for the service of the tabernacle. They assembled by troops, so the word is; a blessed sight! to see so many, and those so zealous, and so unanimous, in this good work. (2.) These women parted with their looking-glasses (one of the best, burnished for that purpose) for the use of the tabernacle. Those women that admire their own beauty, are in love with their own shadow, and make the putting on of apparel their chief adorning, by which they value and recommend themselves, can but ill spare their looking-glasses; yet these women offered them to God: Esther, [1.] In token of their repentance for the former abuse of them, to the support of their pride and vanity; but that they were convinced of their folly, and had devoted themselves to the service of God at the door of the tabernacle, they thus threw away that which, though lawful and useful in itself, yet had been an occasion of sin to them. Thus Mary Magdalene, who had been a sinner, when she became a penitent, wiped Christ's feet with her hair. Or, [2.] In token of their great zeal for the work of the tabernacle; rather than the workmen should want brass, or not have of the best, they would part with their looking-glasses, though they could not well be without them. God's service and glory must always be preferred by us before any satisfactions or accommodations of our own. Let us never complain of the want of that which we may honour God by parting with. (3.) These looking-glasses were used for the making of the laver. Either they were artfully joined together, or else thrown down and cast anew; but it is probable that the laver was so brightly burnished, that the sides of it still served for looking-glasses, that the priests, when they came to wash, might there see their faces, and so discover the spots and wash them clean. Note, In the washing of repentance, there is need of the looking-glass of self-examination. The word of God is a glass, in which we may see our faces; (see Jam. 1. 23.) and with it we must compare our own hearts and lives, that, finding out our blemishes, we may wash with particular sorrow, and application of the blood of Christ to our souls. Usually, the more particular we are in the confession of sin, the more comfort we have in the sense of the pardon.

9. And he made the court: on the south side southward, the hangings of the court were of fine twined linen, a hundred cubits: 10. Their pillars were twenty, and their brazen sockets twenty: the hooks of the pillars and their fillets were of silver. 11. And for the north side the hangings were a hundred cubits, their pillars were twenty, and their sockets of brass twenty: the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver. 12. And for the west side were hangings of fifty cubits, their pillars ten, and their sockets ten; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver. 13. And for the east side eastward, fifty cubits. 14. The hangings of the one side of the gate were fifteen cubits; their pillars three, and their sockets three. 15. And for the other side of the court-gate, on this hand and that hand, were hangings of fifteen cubits; their pillars three, and their sockets three. 16. All the hangings of the court round about were of fine twined linen. 17. And the sockets for the pillars were of brass; the hooks of the pillars and their fillets of silver; and the overlaying of their chapiters of silver: and all the pillars of the court were filleted with silver. 18. And the hanging for the gate of the court was needle-work, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen; and twenty cubits was the length, and the height in the breadth was five cubits, answerable to the hangings of the court. 19. And their pillars were four, and their sockets of brass four; their hooks of silver, and the overlaying of their chapiters and their fillets of silver. 20. And all the pins of the tabernacle, and of the court round about, were of brass.

The walls of the court, or church-yard, were like the rest, curtains or hangings, made according to the appointment, ch. 27. 9, &c. This represented the state of the Old Testament church; it was a garden enclosed: the worshippers were then confined to a little compass. But the enclosure being of curtains only, intimated that the confinement of the church to one particular nation was not to be perpetual. The dispensation itself was a tabernacle dispensation, moveable and mutable, and in due time to be taken down and folded up, when the place of the tent should be enlarged and its cords lengthened, to make room for the Gentile world, as is foretold, Isa. 54. 2, 3. The church here on earth is but the court of God's house, and happy they who tread these courts, and flourish in them; but through these courts we are passing to the holy place above; Blessed are they that dwell in that house of God, they will be still praising him. The enclosing of a court before the tabernacle, teaches us a gradual approach to God. The priests that ministered must pass through the holy court, before they entered the holy house. Thus before solemn ordinances, there ought to be the separated and enclosed court of a solemn preparation, in which we must wash our hands, and so draw near with a true heart.

21. This is the sum of the tabernacle, even of the tabernacle of testimony, as it was counted, according to the commandment of Moses, for the service of the Levites, by the hand of Ithamar, son to Aaron the priest. 22. And Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, made all that the Lord commanded Moses. 23. And with him was Aholiah, son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan, an engraver, and a cunning workman, and an embroiderer in blue, and in purple, and in scarlet, and fine linen. 24. All the gold that was occupied for the work, in all the work of the holy place, even the gold of the offering, was twenty and nine talents and seven hundred and thirty shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary. 25. And the silver of them that were numbered of the congregation was a hundred talents, and a thousand seven hundred and threescore and five-teen shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary: 26. A bekah for every man, that is, half a shekel, after the shekel of the sanctuary, for every one that went to be numbered, from twenty years old and upward, for six hundred thousand and three thousand five hundred and fifty men. 27. And of the hundred talents of silver were cast the sockets of the sanctuary, and the sockets of the vail; a hundred sockets of the hundred talents, a talent for a socket. 28. And of the thousand seven hundred seventy and five shekels he made hooks for the pillars, and overlaid their chapiters, and filleted them. 29. And the brass of the offering was seventy talents, and two thousand four hundred shekels. 30. And therewith he made the sockets to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the brazen altar, and the brazen grate for it, and all the vessels of the altar, 31. And the sockets of the court round about, and the sockets of the court-gate, and all the pins of the tabernacle, and all the pins of the court round about.

Here we have a breviet of the account, which, by Moses's appointment, the Levites took and kept of the gold, silver, and brass, that was brought in for the tabernacle's use, and how it was employed. Ithamar the son of Aaron was appointed to draw up this account, who was thus by lesser services trained up, and fitted for greater, v. 21. Bezaleel and Aholiab must bring in the account, (v. 22, 23,) and Ithamar must audit it, and give it in to Moses. And it was thus:

1. All the gold was a free-offering; every man brought as he could and would, and it amounted to twenty-nine talents, and seven hundred and thirty shekels over, which some compute to be about one hundred and fifty thousand pounds worth of gold, according to the present value of it. Of this were made all the golden furniture and vessels.

2. The silver was levied by way of tax; every man was assessed half a shekel, a kind of poll-money, which amounted in the whole to a hundred talents and five thousand shekels over, v. 25, 26. Of this they made the sockets, into which the boards of the tabernacle were let, and on which they rested; so that they were as the foundation of the tabernacle, v. 27. The silver amounted to about thirty-four thousand pounds of our money. The raising of the gold by voluntary contribution, and of the silver by way of tribute, shows that either way may be taken for the defraying of public expenses; provided that nothing be done with partiality.

3. The brass, though less valuable, was of use not only for the brazen altar, but for the sockets of the court, which, probably, in other tents were of wood; but it is promised, (Isa. 60. 17.) For wood I will bring brass. See how liberal the people were, and how faithful the workmen were; their good examples ought to be followed.

CHAP. XXXIX.

This chapter gives us an account of the finishing of the work of the tabernacle. 1. The last things prepared were the holy garments. The ephod and its seventy-five shekels over, v. 25, 26. Of this they made the sockets, into which the boards of the tabernacle were let, and on which they rested; so that they were as the foundation of the tabernacle, v. 27. The silver amounted to about thirty-four thousand pounds of our money. The raising of the gold by voluntary contribution, and of the silver by way of tribute, shows that either way may be taken for the defraying of public expenses; provided that nothing be done with partiality. The brass, though less valuable, was of use not only for the brazen altar, but for the sockets of the court, which, probably, in other tents were of wood; but it is promised, (Isa. 60. 17.) For wood I will bring brass. See how liberal the people were, and how faithful the workmen were; their good examples ought to be followed.

1. And of the blue, and purple, and scarlet, they made clothes of service, to do service in the holy place, and made the holy garments for Aaron; as the Lord commanded Moses. 2. And he made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen. 3. And they did beat the gold into thin plates, and cut it into wires, to work it in the blue, and in the purple, and in the scarlet, and in the fine linen, with cunning work. 4. They made shoulder-pieces for it, to couple it together: by the two edges was it coupled together. 5. And the curious girdle of his ephod, that was upon it, was of the same, according to the work thereof; of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen; as the Lord commanded Moses. 6. And they wrought onyx-stones inclosed in ouches of gold, graven, as signets are graven, with the names of the children of Israel. 7. And he put them on the shoulders of the ephod, that they should be stones for a memorial to the children of Israel; as the Lord commanded Moses. 8. And he made the breastplate of cunning work, like the work of the ephod; of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen. 9. It was foursquare: they made the breastplate double: a span was the length thereof, and a span the breadth thereof, being doubled. 10. And they sat in it four rows of stones: the first row was a sardius, a topaz, and a carbuncle: this was the first row. 11. And the second row, an emerald, a sapphire, and a diamond. 12. And the third row, a ruby, an onyx, and a jasper: they were inclosed in ouches of gold in their inclosings. 13. And the stones were according to the names of the children of Israel, twelve, according to their names, like the engravings of a signet, every one with his name, according to the twelve tribes. 14. And they made upon the breastplate chains at the ends, of wrenneth work of pure gold. 15. And they made two ouches of gold, and two gold rings; and put the two rings in the two ends of the breastplate. 16. And they put the two wrenneth chains of gold in the two rings on the ends of the breastplate. 17. And they put the two wrenneth chains they fastened in the two ouches, and put them on the shoulder-pieces of the ephod before it. 18. And they made two rings of gold, and put them on the two ends of the breastplate, upon the border of it, which was on the side of the ephod inward. 20. And they made two other golden rings, and put them on the two sides of the ephod underneath, toward the forepart of it, over against the other coupling thereof, above the curious girdle of the ephod. 21. And they did bind the breastplate by his rings unto the rings of the ephod with a lace of blue, that it might be above the curious girdle of the ephod, and that the breastplate might not be loosed from the ephod: as the Lord commanded Moses. 22. And he made the robe of the ephod of woven work, all of blue. 23. And there was a hole in the midst of the robe, as the hole of a habergeon, with a band round about the hole, that it should not rend. 24. And they made upon the hems of the robe pomegranates of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and tissued linen. 25. And they made bells of pure gold, and put the bells between the pomegranates, upon the hem of the robe, round about between the pomegranates: 26. A bell and a pomegranate, a bell and a pomegranate, round about the hem of the robe to minister in; as the Lord commanded Moses. 27. And they made coats of fine linen, of woven work, for Aaron and for his sons; 28. And a mitre of fine linen, and goodly bonnets of fine linen, and linen breeches of fine tissued linen; 29. And a girdle of fine tissued linen, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, of needle-work; as the Lord commanded Moses. 30. And they made the plate of the holy crown of pure gold, and wrote upon it a writing, like to the engravings of a signet, HOLINESS TO THE LORD. 31. And they tied unto it a lace of blue, to fasten it on high upon the mitre; as the Lord commanded Moses. In this account of the making the priests' garments, according to the instructions given, (ch. 28.) we may observe, 1. That the priests' garments are called here clothes of service, v. 1. Note. Those that wear robes of honour must look upon them as clothes of service; for those upon whom honour is put, from them service is expected. It is said of those that are arrayed in white robes, that they are before the throne of God, and serve him day and night in his temple, Rev. 7. 13, 15. Holy garments were not made for men to sleep in, or to strut in, but to do service in; and then they are indeed for glory and beauty. 2. The making these holy garments was ministered unto, but to minister. 2. That all the six paragraphs here, which give a distinct account of the making of these holy garments, conclude with those words, as the Lord commanded Moses, v. 5, 7, 21, 26, 29, 31. The like is not in any of the foregoing accounts, as if in these, more than any other of the appurtenances of the tabernacle, they had a particular regard to the divine appointment, both for warrant and for direction. It is an intimation to all the Lord's ministers, to make the word of God their rule in all their ministrations, and to act in observance of, and obedience to, the command of God. 3. That these garments, in conformity to the rest of the furniture of the tabernacle, were very rich and splendid; the church in its infancy was thus taught, thus pleased, with the adornments of this world; but now under the gospel, which is the ministration of the spirit, to affect and impose such pompous habits as the church of Rome does, under pretence of decency and instruction, is to betray the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and to entangle the church again in the bondage of those carnal ordinances, which were imposed only till the time of reformation. 4. That they were all shadows of good things to come. But the substance is Christ, and the grace of the gospel: when therefore the substance is come, it is a jest to be fond of the shadow. (1.) Christ is our great high priest; when he undertook the work of our redemption, he put on the clothes of service—he arrayed himself with the gifts and graces of the Spirit, which he received not by measure—girded himself with the curious girdle of resolution, to go through with his undertaking—to array himself with all God's spiritual Israel, bare them on his shoulders, carried them in his bosom, laid them near his heart, embroidered them on the palms of his hands, and presented them in the breast-plate of judgment unto his Father. And (lastly) he crowned himself with holiness to the Lord, consecrating his whole undertaking to the honour of his Father's holiness; now consider how great this man is. (2.) True believers are spiritual priests. The clean linen with which all their clothes of service must be made, is the righteousness of saints; (Rev. 19. 8.) and Holiness to the Lord must be so written upon their foreheads, that all who converse with them may see, and say, that they bear the image of God's holiness, and are devoted to the praise of it. 32. Thus was all the work of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation finished: and the children of Israel did according to all that the Lord commanded Moses, so did they. 33. And they brought the tabernacle unto Moses, the tent and all his furniture, his taches, his boards, his bars, and his pillars, and his sockets, 34. And the covering of rams' skins, dyed red, and the covering of badgers' skins, and the vail of the covering, 35. The ark of the testimony, the staves thereof, and the mercy-seat, 36. The table and all the vessels thereof, and the show-bread, 37. The pure candlestick, with the lamps thereof, even with the lamps to be set in order, and all the vessels thereof, and the oil for light, 38. And the golden altar, and the anointing oil, and the sweet incense, and the hanging for the tabernacle-door, 39. The brazen altar, and his grate of brass, his staves, and all his vessels, the laver and his foot, 40. The hangings of the court, his pillars, and his sockets, and the hanging for the court-gate, his cords, and his pins, and all the vessels of the service of the tabernacle, for the tent of the congregation, 41. The clothes of service to do service in the holy place, and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and his sons' garments, to minister in the priest's office. 42. According to all that the Lord commanded Moses, so the children of Israel made all the work. 43. And Moses did look upon all the work, and, behold, they had done it as the Lord had commanded, even so had they done it: and Moses blessed them.

Observe here, 1. That the builders of the tabernacle made very good despatch. It was not much more than five months from the beginning to the finishing of it. Though there was a great deal of fine work about it, such as is usually the work of time, embroidering and engraving, not only in gold, but in precious stones, yet the work was set with it in little time. Church-work is usually slow work, but they made quick work of this, and yet did it with the greatest exactness imaginable. For, 1. Many hands were employed, all unanimous, and not striving with each other. This expedited the business, and made it easy. 2. The workmen were taught of God, and so were kept from making blunders, which would have retarded them. 3. The people were heartily and zealously in the work, and impatient that it was finished. God had prepared their hearts, and then the thing was done suddenly, 2 Chron. 29. 36. Resolution and industry, and a cheerful application of mind, will, by the grace of God, bring a great deal of good work to pass in a little time; less than one would expect.

II. That they punctually observe their orders, and did not in the least vary from them. They did it according to all that the Lord commanded Moses, v. 32, 42. Note, God's work must be done, in every thing, according to his own will. His institutions neither need nor admit men's inventions to make them either more beautiful, or more likely to answer the intention of them. Add thou not unto his words; God is pleased with willing worship, but not with will-worship.

III. That they brought all their work to Moses, and submitted it to his inspection and censure, v. 38. He knew what he had ordered them to make: and now, the particulars were called over, and all produced, that Moses might see both that they had made all, omitting nothing, that they had made all according to the instructions given them, and that, if they had made a mistake in anything, it might be forthwith rectified. Thus they showed respect to Moses, who was set over them in the Lord; not objecting that Moses did not understand such work, and therefore that there was no reason for submitting it to his judgment; No, that God, who gave them so much knowledge as to do the work, gave them also so much humility as to be willing to have it examined, and compared with the model. Moses was in authority, and they would pay a deference to him as the deliverer, and prince of the prophets. And besides, they knew how to do the work better than Moses, Moses had a better and more exact idea of the model than they had, and therefore they could not be well-pleased with their own work, unless they had his approbation. Thus, in all the services of religion, we should always be willing to be corrected by the Lord.

IV. Moses, in his inspection, found all done according to the rule, v. 43. Moses, both for their satisfaction and for his own, did look upon all the work, piece by piece, and, behold, they had done it according to the pattern showed him, for the same Being that showed him the pattern guided their hand in the work. All the copies of God's grace exactly agree with the original of his counsels: what God works in us, and by us, is the fulfilling of the good pleasure of his own goodness; and when the mystery of God shall be finished, and all his performances come to be compared with his purposes, it will appear, that, behold, all is done according to the counsel of his own will, not one iota or tittle of which shall fall to the ground, or be varied from.

V. That Moses blessed them. 1. He commenced them, and signified his approbation of all they had done. He did not find fault where there was none, as some do, who think they disparage their own judgment, for they do not find something amiss in the best and most accomplished workmanship. In all this work it is probable there might have been found here and there a stitch amiss, and a stroke awry, which would have served for an over-curious and censorious critic to animadvert upon; but Moses was too candid to notice small faults, where there were no great ones. Note, All governors must be ready to praise them that do well, as well as to terrify evil-doers. Why should any take a pride in being hard to be pleased? 2. He not only praised them, but prayed for them. He blessed them as one having authority, for the less is blessed of the better. We read not of any wages that Moses paid them for their work, but this blessing he gave them. For through, ordinarily, the labourer be worthy of his hire, yet, in this case, 1. They wrought for themselves; others done, and comfort of God's tabernacle among them would be recompense enough. If thou be wise, thou shalt be wise for thyself. 2. They had their meat from heaven on free cost, for themselves and their families, and their raiment waxed not old upon them, so that they neither needed wages, nor had reason to expect any. Freely ye have received, freely give. The obligations we lie under, both in duty and interest, to serve God, are sufficient to quicken us to our work, though we had not a reward in prospect. But, 3. This blessing, in the name of the Lord, was wages enough for all their work. Those whom God employs, he will bless, and those whom he blesses, they are blessed indeed. The blessing he commands is life forever more.

CHAP. XL.

In this chapter, I. Orders are given for the setting-up of the tabernacle, and the fixing of all the appurtenances of it in their proper places, (v. 1-8.) and the consecrating of it, (v. 9-11) and of the priests, v. 12-15. II. Care is taken to set over the priests, and to appoint them to do, v. 16, 18, 33. III. God takes possession of it by the cloud, v. 34-38.

1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. On the first day of the first month shalt thou set up the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation. 3. And thou shalt put therein the ark of the testimony, and cover the ark with the vail. 4. And thou shalt bring in the table, and set in order the things that are to be set in order upon it; and thou shalt bring in the candlestick, and light the lamps thereof. 5. And thou shalt set the altar of gold for the incense before the ark of the testimony, and put the hanging of the door to the tabernacle. 6. And thou shalt set the altar of the burnt-offering before the door to the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation. 7. And thou shalt set the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and shalt put water therein. 8. And thou shalt set up the court round about, and hang up the hanging at the court-gate. 9. And thou shalt take the anointing oil, and anoint the tabernacle, and all that is therein, and shalt hallow it, and all the vessels thereof: and it shall be holy. 10. And thou shalt anoint the altar of the burnt-offering, and all his vessels, and sanctify the altar: and it shall be an altar most holy. 11. And thou shalt anoint the laver and his foot, and sanctify it. 12. And thou shalt bring Aaron and his sons unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and wash them with water. 13. And thou shalt put upon Aaron the holy garments, and anoint him, and sanctify him; that he may minister unto me in the priest’s office. 14. And thou shalt bring his sons, and clothe them with coats: 15. And thou shalt anoint them, as thou didst anoint their father, that they may minister unto me in the priest’s office: for their anointing shall surely be an everlasting priesthood, throughout their generations.

The materials and furniture of the tabernacle had been viewed severally, and approved, and now they must be put together.

16. Thus did Moses: according to all that the Lord commanded him, so did he. 17. And it came to pass in the first month in the second year, on the first day of the month, that the tabernacle was reared up. 18. And Moses reared up the tabernacle, and fastened his sockets, and set up the boards thereof, and put in the bars thereof, and reared up his pillars. 19. And he spread abroad the tent over the tabernacle, and put the covering of the tent above upon it; as the Lord commanded Moses. 20. And he took and put the testimony into the ark, and set the staves on the ark, and put the mercy-seat above upon the ark. 21. And he brought the ark into the tabernacle, and set up the vail of the covering, and covered the ark of the testimony; as the Lord commanded Moses. 22. And he put the table in the tent of the congregation, upon the side of the tabernacle northward, without the vail. 23. And he set the bread in order upon it before the Lord; as the Lord had commanded Moses. 24. And he put the candlestick in the tent of the congregation, over against the table, on the side of the tabernacle southward. 25. And he lighted the lamps before the Lord; as the Lord commanded Moses. 26. And he put the golden altar in the tent of the congregation, before the vail: 27. And he burnt sweet incense thereon; as the Lord commanded Moses. 28. And he set up the hanging at the door of the tabernacle. 29. And he put the altar of burnt-offering by the door of the tabernacle of the tent of the congregation, and offered upon it the burnt-offering and the meat-offering; as the Lord commanded Moses. 30. And he set the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and put water there, to wash withal. 31. And Moses, and Aaron, and his sons, washed their hands and their feet thereat: 32. When they went into the tent of the congregation, and when they came near unto the altar, they washed; as the Lord commanded Moses. 33. And he reared up the court round about the tabernacle and the altar, and set up the hanging of the court-gate. So Moses finished the work.

When the tabernacle and the furniture of it were prepared, they did not put off the rearing of it till they came to Canaan, though they now hoped to be there very shortly; but, he obedient to the will of God, they set it up in the midst of their camp, while they were in the wilderness. Those that are unsettled in the world must not think that that will excuse them in their continued irreligion; as if it were enough to begin to serve God when they begin to be settled in the world: No; a tabernacle for God is a very needful and profitable companion even in a wilderness; especially considering that our cages may fall that which we may be fixed in another world before we come to fix in this.

The razing of the tabernacle was a good day’s work; the consecrating of it, and of the priests, was attended to some days after. Here we have an account only of that new-year’s day’s work. 1. Moses not only did all that God directed him to do, but in the order that God appointed; for God will be thought in it. Though there is, as we have seen, there is an added express reference to the divine appointment, which Moses governed himself by as carefully and conscientiously as the workmen did; and therefore, as before, so here it is repeated, as the Lord commanded Moses, seven times in less than fourteen verses. Moses himself, as great a man as he was, would not pretend to vary from the institution, neither to add to it, nor diminish from it, in the least punctilio. They that command others must remember that their Master also is in heaven, and they must do as they are commanded. 3. That which was to be vailed, he vailed, (v. 21) and that which was to be used, he used immediately, for the instruction of the priests, that, by seeing him do the several offices, they might learn to do them; there were diversities. Though Moses was not properly a priest, yet he was nominated among the priests, and the priest and the Jewish worship were both in the priest of the priests; what he did he did by special warrant and direction from God, rather as a prophet, or lawgiver, than as a priest. He set the wheels a going, and then left the work in the hands of the appointed ministers. (1.) When he had placed the tabernacle in its place, he set the show-bread in order upon it; (v. 23) for God will never have his table unfurnished. (2.) As soon as he had fixed the candlestick, he lighted the lamps before the Lord, v. 25. Even that dark dispensation would not admit of unlighted candles. (3.) The golden altar being put in its place, immediately he burnt sweet incense thereon; (v. 27) for God’s altar must be a smoking altar. (4.) The altar of burnt-offering was no sooner set up in the court of the tabernacle, than he had a burnt-offering, and a meat-offering, ready to offer upon it, v. 28. Some think, though this be not mentioned here, it was not done till some time after; but it seems to me that he immediately began the ceremony of its consecration, though it was not completed for seven days. (5.) At the laver likewise, when he had fixed that, Moses himself washed his hands and feet. Thus, in all these instances, he not only showed the priests how to do their duty, but has taught us that God’s gifts are intended for use, and not barely for show. Though the altars, and table, and candlestick, were fresh and new, he did not say it was a pity to sully them; no, he handselled them immediately. Talents were given to be occupied, not to be buried.

34. Then a cloud covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. 35. And Moses was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, because the cloud abode thereon, and the glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle. 36. And when the cloud was taken up from over the tabernacle, the children of Israel went onward in all their journeys: 37. But if the cloud were not taken up, then they journeyed not till the day that it was taken up. 38. For the cloud of the Lord was upon the tabernacle by day, and fire was on it by night, in the sight of all the house of Israel, throughout all their journeys.

As when, in the creation, God had finished this earth, which he designed for man’s habitation, he made man, and put him in possession of it: so, when Moses had finished the tabernacle, which was designed for God’s dwelling-place among men, God came and took possession of it. The Shechinah, the divine presence and power, was not yet, as a prelude to that event, came and dwelt among them, John 1. 14. This was henceforward the place of his throne, and the place of the soles of his feet; (Ex. 43. 7) here he resided, here he ruled. By the visible tokens of God’s coming among them to take possession of the tabernacle, he testified both the return of his favour to them, which they had forfeited by the golden calf, (ch. 33. 7) and his gracious acceptance of all the expense they had been at, and all the care and pains they had taken about the tabernacle. Thus God owned them, showing himself well-pleased with what they had done, and abundantly rewarded them. Note, God will dwell with those that prepare him a habitation. The broken and contrite heart, the clean and holy heart, that is furnished for his service, and devoted to his honour, shall be his rest for ever. Here, Ch. 33. 11. Eph. 3. 17. Where God has a throne and an altar in the soul, there is a living temple. And God will be sure to own and crown the operations of his own grace, and the observance of his own appointments. As God had manifested himself upon mount Sinai, so he did now in this newly-erected tabernacle. We read (ch. 24. 16.) that the glory of the Lord abode upon mount Sinai, which is said to be like devouring fire, (v. 17.) and that the cloud covered that glory. Accordingly, when God descended to take possession of his house, the cloud covered it on the outside, and the glory of the Lord filled it within; to which probably there is an allusion, Zech. 2. 5. where God promises to be a wall of fire round about Jerusalem, (and the pillar of cloud was by night a pillar of fire,) and the glory in the midst of her.

1. The cloud covered the tent; that same cloud, which, as the chariot or pavilion of the Shechinah, had come up before them out of Egypt, and led them hither, now settled upon the tabernacle, and hovered over it, even in the hottest and clearest day; for it was none of those clouds which the sun scatters. This cloud was intended to be, 1. A token of God’s presence, constantly visible day and night (v. 38.) to all Israel, even to those that lay in the remotest corners of the camp, that they might never again make a question of it, Is the Lord among us, or is he not? That very cloud, which had already been so pregnant with wonders in the Red sea, and on mount Sinai, sufficient to prove God in it of a truth, was continually in sight of all the house of Israel, throughout all their journeys; so that they were inexusable if they believed not their own eyes. 2. A concealment of the tabernacle, and the glory of God in it. God did indeed dwell among them, but he dwelt in a cloud; Verily, thou art a God that hidest thyself. Blessed be God for the gospel of Christ, in which we all with open face behold, as in a glass, not in a cloud, the glory of the Lord. 3. A protection of the tabernacle. They had sheltered it with one covering upon another, but, after all, the cloud that covered it was its best guard. Those that dwell in the house of the Lord are hidden there, and are safe under the divine protection, Ps. 27. 4, 5. Yet this, which was then a peculiar favour to the tabernacle, is promised to every dwelling place of mount Zion; (Isa. 4. 5.) for upon all the glory shall be a defence. 4. A guide to the camp of Israel in their march through the wilderness, v. 36, 37. While the cloud continued on the tabernacle, they rested; when it removed, they removed and followed it, as being purely under a divine conduct. This is spoken of more fully, Num. 9. 15, &c. and mentioned with thankfulness, to the glory of God, long afterward, Neh. 9. 19. Ps. 78. 14.—105. 39. As, before the tabernacle was set up, the Israelites had the cloud for their guide, which appeared sometimes in one place and sometimes in another, but from henceforward rested on the tabernacle, and was to be found there only; so the church had divine revelation for its guide from the first, before the scriptures were written; but since the making up of that canon, it rests in that as its tabernacle, and there only it is to be found; as, in the creation, the light which was made the first day centered in the sun the fourth day. Blessed be God for the law and the testimony!

II. The glory of the Lord filled the tabernacle, v. 34, 35. The Shechinah now made an awful and pompous entry into the tabernacle, through the outer part of which it passed into the most holy place, as the presence-chamber, and there seated itself between the cherubins. It was in light and fire, and (for aught we know) no otherwise, that the Shechinah made itself visible; for God is Light: our God is a consuming Fire; with these the tabernacle was now filled, yet, as before, the bush was not consumed, so, now, the curtains were not so much as singed by this fire; for to those that have received the anointing, the terrible majesty of God is not destroying. Yet so dazzling was the light, and so dreadful was the fire, that Moses was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, at the door of which he attended, till the splendour was a little abated, and the glory of the Lord retired within the vail, v. 35. This shows how terrible the glory and majesty of God are, and how unable the greatest and best of men are to stand before him. The divine light and fire, let forth in their full strength, will overpower the strongest heads and the purest hearts. But what Moses could not do, in that he was weak through the flesh, our Lord Jesus has done, whom God caused to draw near and approach, and who, as the Forerunner, is for us entered, and has invited us to come boldly even to the mercy-seat. He was able to enter into the holy place not made with hands, (Heb. 9. 24.) say, he is himself the true Tabernacle, filled with the glory of God, (John 1. 14.) even with the divine grace and truth prefigured by this fire and light. In him the Shechinah took up its rest for ever, for in him dwells all the fulness of the Godhead bodily. Blessed be God for Jesus Christ.

EXPOSITION,

WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,

OF THE THIRD BOOK OF MOSES, CALLED LEVITICUS.

There is nothing historical in all this book of Leviticus, except the account which it gives us, ch. 8, 9. of the consecration of the priesthood; ch. 10. of the punishment of Nadab and Abihu, by the hand of God, for offering strange fire; and ch. 24. of Shelomith's son, by the hand of the magistrate, for blasphemy. All the rest of the book is taken up with the laws, chiefly the ecclesiastical laws, which God gave to Israel by Moses, concerning their sacrifices and offerings, their meats and drinks, and divers washings, and the other peculiarities, by which God set that people apart for himself, and distinguished them from other nations; all which were shadows of good things to come, which are realized and superseded by the gospel of Christ.—We call the book Leviticus, from the Septuagint, because it contains the laws and ordinances of the Levitical priesthood, (as it is called, Heb. 7. 11.) and the ministrations of it. The Levites were principally charged with these institutions, both to do their part, and to teach the people their's.—We read, in the close of the foregoing book, of the setting up of the tabernacle, which was to be the place of worship; and as that was framed according to the pattern, so must the ordinances of worship be, which were there to be administered.
In these the divine appointment was as particular as in the former, and must be as punctually observed. The remaining record of the abrogated law is of use to us, for the strengthening of our faith in Jesus Christ, as the Lamb slain from the foundation of the world; and for the increase of our thankfulness to God, that by him we are freed from the yoke of the ceremonial law, and live in the times of reformation.

LEVITICUS, I.

CHAP. I.

This book begins with the laws concerning sacrifices, of which the most ancient were the burnt-offerings, about which God gives Moses instructions in this chapter. Orders are here given how that sort of sacrifice must be managed. 1. If it were a bullock out of the herd, v. 3—9. 2. If it were a sheep or goat, a lamb or kid, out of the flock, v. 14—17. And, whether the offering were more or less valuable in itself, if it was offered with an upright heart, according to these laws, it was accepted of God.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, and spake unto him out of the tabernacle of the congregation, saying, 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man of you bring an offering unto the Lord, ye shall bring your offering of the cattle, even of the herd, and of the flock.

Observe here, 1. It is taken for granted that people would be inclined to bring offerings to the Lord. The very light of nature directs man, some way or other, to do honour to his Maker, and pay him homage as his Lord. Revealed religion supposes natural religion to be an analogue to the early instance, since the fall had directed man to glorify God by sacrifice, which was an implicit acknowledgment of their having received all from God as creatures, and their having forfeited all to him as sinners. A conscience thoroughly convinced of dependence and guilt, would be willing to come before God with thousands of rams, Mic. 6. 6. 2. Provision is made that men should not indulge their own fancies, nor become vain in their imaginations and inventions about their sacrifices, lest, while they pretended to honour God, they should really dishonour him, and do that which was unworthy of him. Every thing therefore is directed to be done with a due decorum, by a certain rule, and so as that the sacrifices might be most significant, both of the great sacrifice of atonement which Christ was to offer in the fulness of time, and of the spiritual sacrifices of acknowledgment which believers should offer daily. 3. God gave those laws to Israel by Moses; nothing is more frequently repeated than this, The Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel. God could have spoken it to the children of Israel himself, as he did the ten commandments; but he chose to deliver it to them by Moses, because they had desired he would no more speak to them himself, and he had designed that Moses should, above all the prophets, be a type of Christ, by whom God would in these last days speak to us, Heb. 1. 1. By other prophets God sent messages to his people, but by Moses he gave them laws; and therefore he was fit to typify him to whom the Father has given all judgment. And besides, the treasure of divine revelation was always to be put into earthen vessels, that our faith might be tried, and that the excellency of the power might be of God. 4. God spake to him out of the tabernacle. As soon as ever the Shechinah had taken possession of its new habitation, in token of the acceptance of what was done, God talked with Moses from the mercy-seat, while he attended without the vail, or rather at the door, hearing a voice only; and it is probable that he wrote what he heard at that time, to prevent any mistake, or slip of memory, in the rehearsal of it. The tabernacle was set up to be a place of communion between God and Israel; there, where they performed their services to God, God revealed his will to them; thus, by the word and by prayer, we now have fellowship with the Father, and with his Son Jesus Christ, Acts. 6. 4. When we speak to God, we must desire to hear from him, and reckon it a great favour that he is pleased to speak to us. The Lord spake to Moses, not to come near, (under that dispensation, even Moses must keep his distance,) but to attend and hearken to what should be said. A letter less than ordinary in the Hebrew word for called, the Jewish critics tell us, intimates that God spake in a still small voice. The moral law was given with terror from a burning mountain, in thunder and lightning; but the remedial law of sacrifice was given more gently from a mercy-seat, because that was typical of the grace of the gospel, which is the ministration of life and peace.

3. If his offering be a burnt-sacrifice of the herd, let him offer a male without blemish: he shall offer it of his own voluntary will, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the Lord. 4. And he shall put his hand upon the head of the burnt-offering; and it shall be accepted for him, to make atonement for him. 5. And he shall kill the bullock before the Lord: and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall bring the blood, and sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar that is by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. 6. And he shall slay the burnt-offering, and cut it into his pieces. 7. And the sons of Aaron the priest shall put fire upon the altar, and lay the wood in order upon the fire: 8. And the priests, Aaron's sons, shall lay the parts, the head, and the fat, in order upon the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar: 9. But the inwards and his legs shall he wash in water: and the priest shall burn all on the altar, to be a burnt-sacrifice, an offering made by fire of a sweet savour unto the Lord.

If a man were rich, and could afford it, it is supposed that he would bring his burnt-sacrifice, with which he designed to honour God, out of his herd of larger cattle. He that could not, but God is the Best that is, will resolve to give him the best he has; else he gives him not the glory due unto his name. Now, if a man determined to kill a bullock, not for LEVITICUS.

1. The beast to be offered must be a male, and without blemish, and the best he had in his pasture; being designed purely for the honour of him that is infinitely perfect, it ought to be the most perfect beast. This signified the complete strength and purity that were in Christ, the dying Sacrifice, and the sincerity of heart and unblamableness of life that should be in Christians, who are presented to God as living sacrifices. But literally, in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female; nor is any natural blemish in the body a bar to our acceptance with God, but only the moral defects and deformities introduced by sin into the soul.

2. The owner must offer it of his voluntary will. What is done in religion, so as to please God, must be done by no other constraint than that of love. God accepts the willing people, and the cheerful giver. Ainsworth and others read it, not as the principle, but as the end, of offering; "Let him offer it for his favourable acceptation before the Lord." Let him propose this to himself, as his end in bringing his sacrifice, and let his eye be fixed steadily upon the way in which he may be here accepted in the Lord." Those only shall find acceptance who sincerely desire and design it in all their religious services.

3. It must be offered at the door of the tabernacle, where the brazen altar of burnt-offering stood, which sanctified the gift, and not elsewhere; he must offer it at the door, as one unworthy to enter, and acknowledging that there is no admission for a sinner into covenant and communion with God, but by sacrifice; but he must offer it at the tabernacle of the congregation, in token of his communion with the whole church of Israel, even in this personal service.

4. The offerer must put his hand upon the head of his offering, v. 4. "He must put both his hands," says the Jewish doctors, "with all his might between the horns of the beast," signifying thereby, (1.) The transfer of all his right to, and interest in, the beast, to God; actually, and by manual delivery, resigning it to his service. (2.) An acknowledgment that he desired to die, and would have been willing to die, if God had required it, for the serving of his honour, and the obtaining of his favour. (3.) A dependence upon the sacrifice, as an instituted type of the great Sacrifice, on which the iniquity of us all was to be laid. The mystical signification of the sacrifices, and especially this rite, some think the apostle means by the doctrine of laying on of hands, (Heb. 6. 2.) which typified evangelical faith. The offerer's putting his hand on the head of the offering was to signify his desire and hope that it might be accepted from him to make atonement for him. The burnt-offerings had not respect to any particular sin, as the sin-offering had, but were to make atonement for sin in general; and he that laid his hand on the head of a burnt-offering was to confess that he had left undone what he ought to have done, and had done that which he ought not to have done; and to pray, that, though he deserved to die himself, the death of his sacrifice might be accepted for the expiating of his guilt.

5. The sacrifice was to be killed by the priests or Levites, before the Lord, that is, in a devout, religious manner, and with an eye to God and his honour, and with that view that our Lord Jesus Christ, by the death of a beast, makes his soul, or life, an offering for sin. Messiah the Prince must be cut off as a sacrifice, but not for himself, Dan. 9. 26. It signified also, that in Christians, who are living sacrifices, the brutal part must be mortified or killed, the flesh crucified, with its corrupt affections and lusts, and all the appetites of the mere animal life.

6. The priests were to sprinkle the blood upon the altar; (v. 5.) for the blood being the life, that was it that made atonement for the soul. This signified the direct and actual regard which our Lord Jesus had to the satisfaction of his Father's justice, and the securing of his injured honour, in the shedding of his blood; he offered himself without spot to God. It also signified the purifying of our consciences by the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus Christ upon them by faith, 1 Pet. 1. 2. Heb. 10. 22.

7. The beast was to be flayed and decently cut up, and divided into its several joints or pieces, according to the art of the butcher; and then all the pieces, with the head and the fat, (the legs and inwards being burnt first to be burnt together upon the altar, v. 6.) "But to what end?" would some say, "was this waste? Why should all this good meat, which might have been given to the poor, and have served their hungry families for food a great while, be burnt together to ashes?" So was the will of God; and it is not for us to object or find fault with it. When it was burnt, for the honour of God, in obedience to his command, it signified spiritual blessings, it was really better bestowed, and better answered the end of its creation, than when it was used as food for man. We must never reckon that lost that is laid out for God. The burning of the sacrifice signified the sharp sufferings of Christ, and the devout affections with which, as a holy fire, Christians must offer up themselves, their whole spirit, soul, and body, unto God.

Lastly. This is said to be an offering of a sweet savour, or savour of rest, unto the Lord. The burning of flesh is unsavoury in itself; but this, as an act of obedience to a divine command, and a type of Christ, was well pleasing to God; he was reconciled to the offerer, and did himself take a complacency in that reconciliation. He rested, and was refreshed with these institutions of his grace, as, at first, with his works of creation, (Exod. 31. 17.) rejoining therein, Ps. 104. 41. Christ's offering of himself to God is said to be of a sweet smelling savour; (Eph. 5. 2.) and the spiritual sacrifices of Christians are said to be acceptable to God, through Christ, 1 Pet. 2. 5.

10. And if his offering be of the flocks, namely, of the sheep, or of the goats, for a burnt-sacrifice; he shall bring it a male without blemish. 11. And he shall kill it on the side of the altar northward before the Lord: and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall sprinkle his blood round about upon the altar: 12. And he shall cut it into his pieces, with his head and his fat; and the priest shall lay them in order on the wood that is on the fire which is upon the altar. 13. But he shall wash the inward parts and the legs with water: and the priests shall bring it all, and burn it upon the altar: it is a burnt-sacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord. 14. And if the burnt-sacrifice for his offering to the Lord be of fowls, then he shall bring his offering of turtle-doves, or of young pigeons. 15. And the priest shall bring it unto the altar, and wring off his head, and burn it on the altar; and the blood thereof shall be wrung out at the side of the altar: 16. And he shall pluck away his crop with his feathers, and cast it beside the altar, on the east part, by the place of the ashes: 17. And he shall cleave it with the wings thereof, but shall not divide it asunder: and the priest shall burn it upon the altar, upon the wood that is upon the fire: it is a burnt-sacrifice, an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord.

Here we have the laws concerning the burnt-offerings, which were of the flock, or of the fowls. This of the middle-rank, that could not well ill, shall be burnt without a bullock, and with a bullock, and should be accepted of God, if they brought a turtle-dove, or a pigeon. For God, in his law, and in his gospel, as well as in his providence, considers the poor. It is observable, that those creatures were chosen for sacrifice which were most mild and gentle, harmless and inoffensive; to typify the innocence and meekness that were in Christ, and to teach the innocence and meekness that should be in Christians. Directions are here given, 1. Concerning the burnt-offering of the flock, v. 10. The method of managing these is much the same with that of the bullocks; only it is ordered here that the sacrifice should be killed on the side of the altar northward; which, though mentioned here only, probably was to be observed concerning the former and other sacrifices. Perhaps, on that side of the altar there was the largest vacant space, and room for the priests to turn them in. It was of old observed, that fair weather comes out of the north, and that the north wind drives away rain; and by these sacrifices the storms of God’s wrath are scattered, and the light of God’s countenance is obtained, which is more pleasant than the brightest, fairest weather. 2. Concerning those of the fowls, They must be either turtle-doves, and if so, “They must be old turtles; (say the Jews;) or pigeons, and if so, they must be young pigeons. What was most acceptable at men’s tables must be brought to God’s altar. In the offering of these fowls, (1.) The head must be wrung off, “quite off,” say some; others think, only pinched so as to kill the bird, and yet leave the head hanging to the body. But it seems more likely that it was to be quite separated, for it was to be burnt. The bowels were to be burnt out at the side of the altar. (3.) The garments with the feathers were to be thrown by upon the dunghill. (4.) The body must be opened, sprinkled with salt, and then burnt upon the altar. “This sacrifice of birds,” the Jews say, “was one of the most difficult services the priests had to do;” to teach those that minister in holy things, to be as solicitous for the salvation of the souls of the poor as of the rich; for their services were accepted of God, if they came from an upright heart, as the sacrifices of the rich; for he expects according to what a man hath, and not according to what he hath not, 2 Cor. 8. 12. The poor man’s turtle-doves, or young pigeons, are here said to be an offering of a sweet savour, as much as that of an ox or bullock that hath horns and hoofs. Yet, after all, to love God with all our heart, and to love our neighbour as ourselves, is better than all burnt-offerings and sacrifices, Mark 12. 33.

CHAP. II.

In this chapter, we have the law concerning the meat-offerings. 1. The matter of it; whether of raw flour with oil and incense, (v. 1.) or baked in the oven, (v. 4.) or upon a plate, (v. 5, 6.) or in a frying pan, v. 7. II. The management of it; of the flour, (v. 2, 3.) of the cakes, v. 8, 10.

III. Some particular rules concerning it, That leaven and honey must never be admitted, (v. 11, 12.) and salt never omitted in the meat-offering, v. 13. IV. The law concerning the offering of first-fruits in the ear, v. 14, 15.

1. A ND when any will offer a meat-offering unto the Lord, his offering shall be of fine flour; and he shall pour oil upon it, and put frankincense thereon: 2. And he shall bring it to Aaron’s sons, the priests: and he shall take thereof his handful of the flour thereof, and of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof; and the priest shall burn the memorial of it upon the altar, to be an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord: 3. And the remnant of the meat-offering shall be Aaron’s and his sons': it is a thing most holy of the offerings of the Lord made by fire. 4. And if thou bring an oblation of a meat-offering baked in the oven, it shall be an unleavened cake of fine flour mingled with oil, or unleavened wafers anointed with oil. 5. And if thy oblation be a meat-offering baked in a pan, it shall be of fine flour unleavened, mingled with oil. 6. Thou shalt part it in pieces, and pour oil thereon: it is a meat-offering. 7. And if thy oblation be a meat-offering baked in the frying-pan, it shall be made of fine flour with oil. 8. And thou shalt bring the meat-offering that is made of these things unto the Lord: and when it is presented unto the priest, he shall bring it unto the altar. 9. And the priest shall take from the meat-offering a memorial thereof, and shall burn it upon the altar: it is an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord. 10. And that which is left of the meat-offering shall be Aaron’s and his sons': it is a thing most holy of the offerings of the Lord made by fire.

There were some meat-offerings that were only appendixes to the burnt-offerings; as that which was offered with the daily sacrifice, (Exod. 29. 38, 39.) and with the peace-offerings; these had drink-offerings joined with them, (see Num. 15. 4. 7, 9, 10.) and in these the quantity was appointed. But the law of this chapter concerns those meat-offerings that were offered by themselves, whenever a man saw cause thus to express his devotion. The first offering we read of in scripture was of this kind; (Gen. 4. 3.) Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering. This sort of offering was appointed, I. In condescension to the poor and their ability; that they who themselves lived only upon bread and cakes, might offer an acceptable offering to God out of that which was their own coarse and homely fare, and by making for God’s altar, as the widow of Seropea for his prophet, a little cake first, might procure such a blessing upon the handful of meal in the barrel, and the oil in the cruse, as that it should not fail. II. As a proper acknowledgment of the mercy of God to them in their food; this was like a quittance, by which they testified their dependence upon God, their thankfulness to him, and their expectations from him as their Owner and Benefactor, who giveth to all life, and breath, and food convenient. Thus must they honour their Lord with their substance, and, in token of their eating and drinking to his glory, must consecrate some of their meat and drink to his immediate service. They that now, with a grateful charitable heart, deal out their bread to the hungry, and provide for the necessities of those that are in want of daily food, and when they eat the fat, and drink the sweet themselves, send portions to them for whom nothing is prepared, they offer unto God an acceptable meat-offering. The prophet lamenteth it as one of the direful effects of famine, that thereby the meat-offering and drink-offering were cut off from the house of the Lord; (Joel 1. 9.) and reckoned it the greatest blessing of plenty, that it would be the revival of them, Joel 2. 14.

Now the laws of the meat-offering were these: 1. The ingredients must always be fine flower and oil, two staple commodities of the land of Canaan, Deut. 8. 8. Oil was to them then in their food, what butter is now to us. If it was undressed, the oil must be poured upon the flour; (v. 1.) if cooked, it must be mingled with the flour; v. 4, &c. 2. If it was flour unbaked, beside the oil, it must have frankincense put upon it, which was to be burnt with it, as an incense offering, in allusion to which, gospel ministers are said to be a sweet savour unto God, 2 Cor. 2. 15. 3. If it was prepared, they might do it various ways, either bake it or fry it, or mix the flour and oil upon a plate; for the doing of each of which, conveniences were provided about the tabernacle. The law was very exact even about those offerings that were least costly; to intimate the cognisance God takes of the religious services performed with a devotional mind, even by the poor of his people. 4. It was to be presented by the offerer to the priest, which is called bringing it to the Lord, (v. 8.) for the priests were God's receivers, and were ordained to offer gifts. 5. Part of it was to be burnt upon the altar, for a memorial, that is, in token of their mindfulness of God's bounty to them, in giving them all things richly to enjoy. It was an offering made by fire, v. 2. 9. The consuming of it by fire might remind them that they desired to have all the fruits of the earth thus burnt up, and that it was of the Lord's mercies that they were not. They might also learn, that as meats are for the belly, and the belly for meats, so God shall destroy both it and them, (1 Cor. 6. 13.) and that man lives not by bread alone. This offering made by fire is here said to be of a sweet savour unto the Lord; and so are our spiritual offerings, which are made by the fire of holy love, particularly that of almsgiving, which is said to be an odour of a sweet smell, a sacrifice acceptable, well-pleasing to God, (Phil. 4. 18.) and (Heb. 13. 16.) With such sacrifices God is well-pleased. 6. The remainder of the meat-offering was to be given to the priests, v. 3. 10. It is a thing most holy, not to be eaten by the offerers, as the peace-offerings, (which, through holy, were not most holy,) but by the priests only and their families. Thus God provided that they who served at the altar, should live upon the altar, and live comfortably.

11. No meat-offering, which ye shall bring unto the Lord, shall be made with leaven: for ye shall burn no leaven, nor any honey, in any offering of the Lord made by fire. 12. As for the oblation of the first-fruits, ye shall offer them unto the Lord; but they shall not be burnt on the altar for a sweet savour. 13. And every oblation of thy meat-offering shalt thou season with salt; neither shalt thou suffer the salt of the covenant of thy God to be lacking from thy meat-offering: with all thine offerings thou shalt offer salt. 14. And if thou offer a meat-offering of thy first-fruits unto the Lord, thou shalt offer, for the meat-offering of thy first-fruits, green ears of corn dried by the fire, even corn beaten out of full ears. 15. And thou shalt put oil upon it, and lay frankincense thereon: it is a meat-offering. 16. And the priest shall burn the memorial of it, part of the beaten-corn thereof, and part of the oil thereof, with all the frankincense thereof: it is an offering made by fire unto the Lord.

Here,

I. Leaven and honey are forbidden to be put in any of their meat-offerings, (v. 12.) No leaven, nor any honey, in any offering made by fire. I. The leaven was forbidden in remembrance of the hardness of Egypt, and the ills which the Israelites suffered there, so that the Lord cut off Egypt. So much despatch was required in the offerings they made, that it was not convenient they should stay for the leavening of them. The New Testament comparing pride and hypocrisy to leaven, because they swell like leaven, comparing also malice and wickedness to leaven, because they sour like leaven; we are to understand and improve this as a caution to take heed of those sins which will corrupt and poll the acceptableness of our spiritual sacrifices. Pure hands must be lifted up without wrath; and all our gospel-feasts kept with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. 2. Honey was forbidden, though Canaan flowed with it, because to eat much honey is not good, (Prov. 25. 16, 27.) it turns to choler and bitterness in the stomach, though delicious to the taste. Some think the chief reason why these two things, leaven and honey, were forbidden, was, because the Gentiles used them very much in their sacrifices; and God's people must not learn or use the way of the heathen, but his services must be the reverse of their idolatrous services; see Deut. 12. 30. 31. Some make this application of this double prohibition; Leaven signifies grief and sadness of spirit, (Ps. 73. 21.) My heart was leavened: Honey signifies sensual pleasure and mirth. In our service of God both these must be avoided, and a mean observed between those extremes; for the sorrow of the world worketh death, and a love to the delights of sense is a great enemy to holy love.

II. Salt is required in all their offerings, v. 13. The altar was the table of the Lord; and therefore, salt being always set on our tables, God would have it always used at his. It is called the salt of the covenant, because, as men confirmed their covenants with each other, by eating and drinking together, at all which collations salt was used; so God, by accepting his people's gifts, and feasting them upon his sacrifices, supping with them, and they with him, (Rev. 3. 20.) did confirm his covenant with them. Among the ancients salt was a symbol of friendship. The salt for the sacrifice was not brought by the offerers, but was provided for certainty, in the sanctuary, as the wood was, Lev. 7. 7, 8. And there was a chamber in the court of the temple called the chamber of salt, in which they laid it up. Can that which is unsavoury be eaten without salt? God would hereby intimate to them that their sacrifices in themselves were unsavoury. The saints, who are living sacrifices to God, must have salt in themselves, for every sacrifice must be salted with salt, (Mark 9. 49, 50,) and our speech must always be with grace; (Col. 4. 6,) so must all our religious performances be seasoned with that salt. Christ is the salt of the earth.

III. Directions are given about the first-fruits.
1. The oblation of their first-fruits at harvest, of which we read, Deut. 26. 2. These were offered to the Lord, not to be burnt upon the altar, but to be given to the priests as perquisites of their office, v. 12. And ye shall offer them, (that is, leaven and honey,) in the oblation of the first-fruits, though they were not included in other meat-offerings; for they were proper enough to be eaten by the priests, though not to be burnt upon the altar. The leaves of the first-fruits are particularly ordered to be baked with leaven, Lev. 23. 17. And we read of the first-fruits of honey, brought to the house of God, 2 Chron. 31. 5.

2. A meat-offering of their first-fruits. The former was required by the law, this was a free will offering, v. 14. If a man, with a thankful sense of God's goodness to him, in giving him hopes of a plentiful crop, was disposed to bring an offering in kind, immediately out of his field, and present it to God, owning thereby his dependence upon God, and obligations to him, (1.) Let him be sure to bring the first ripe and full ears, not such as were small and half-withered. Whatever was brought to God, and offerings God must take as his in kind, though it were but green ears of corn. We mock God, and deceive ourselves, if we think to put him off with a corrupt thing, while we have in our flock a mule, Mal. 1. 14. (2.) These green ears must be dried by the fire, that the corn, such as it was, might be beaten out of them. That is not expected from green ears, which one may justly look for from those that have been left to grow full ripe. If those that are young do God's work as well as they can, they shall be accepted, though they cannot do it so well as those that are aged and experienced. God makes the best of green ears of corn, and so must we. (3.) Oil and frankincense must be put upon it. Thus (as some allude to this) wisdom and humidity must soften and sweeten the spirits and services of young people, and then their green ears of corn shall be acceptable. God takes a part in the concern of his friends; and part by part he greats them in the expressions of early piety and devotion. Those that can but think and speak as children, yet if they think and speak well, God will be well pleased with their buds and blossoms, and will never forget the kindness of their youth. (4.) It must be used as other meat-offerings; v. 16, compare v. 9. He shall offer all the frankincense, it is an offering made by fire. The fire and the frankincense have to have had a special significance. [1] The fire denotes the fervency of spirit which ought to be in all our religious services. In every good thing we must be zealously affected. Holy love to God is the fire by which all our offerings must be made; else they are not of a sweet savour to God. [2] The frankincense denotes the mediation and intercession of Christ, by which all our services gain an argument to God's gracious acceptance. Blessed be God that we have the substance which all these observances were but shadows of; the fruit that was hid under these leaves.

CHAP. III.

In this chapter we have the law concerning the peace-offerings, whether they were, I. of the herd, a bullock or a heifer, v. 1. 5. Or, II. Of the flock, either a lamb, v. 6. 11. Or a goat, v. 12. 17. The ordinances concerning each of these are much the same, yet they are repeated, to show the care we ought to take that all our services be done according to the appointment, and the pleasure God takes in the services that are so performed. It is likelier to intimate, what we have of precept upon precept, and line upon line.

1. And if his oblation be a sacrifice of peace-offering, if he offer it of the herd, whether it be a male or female, he shall offer it without blemish before the Lord. 2. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of his offering, and kill it at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; and Aaron's sons, the priests, shall sprinkle the blood upon the altar round about. 3. And he shall offer of the sacrifice of the peace-offering, an offering made by fire unto the Lord; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards, 4. And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away. 5. And Aaron's sons shall burn it on the altar upon the burnt-sacrifice, which is upon the fire that is on the fire: it is an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord.

The burnt-offerings had regard to God, as in himself the best of beings, most perfect and excellent; were purely expressive of adoration, and therefore were wholly burnt. But the peace-offerings had regard to God as a Benefactor to his creatures, and the giver of all good things to us; and therefore these were divided between the altar, the priest, and the owner. Peace signifies, 1. Reconciliation, concord, and communion. And so those were called peace-offerings, because in them God and his people did, as it were, feast together in token of friendship. The priest, who was ordained for men in things pertaining to God, gave part of this peace-offering to God, (that part which he required, and it was fit he should be first served,) burning it upon God's altar; part he gave to the offerer, to be eaten by him with his family and friends, and part be留给 the priests, as the day man that laid his hand upon them both. They could not thus eat together, unless they were agreed; so that it was a symbol of friendship and fellowship between God and man, and a confirmation of the covenant of peace. 2. It signifies prosperity and all happiness: Peace be to you, was as much as All good be to you; and so the peace-offerings were offered, either, (1.) By way of supplication or request for some good that was wanted and desired. If a man were in the pursuit or expectation of any mercy, he would back his prayer for it with a peace-offering, and, probably, put up the prayer when he laid his hand upon the head of the offering. Christ is our Peace, our Peace-Offering; for through him alone it is that we can expect to obtain mercy, and an answer of peace himself; and part by part be留给 shall be acceptable and successful, though we bring not a peace-offering. The less costly our devotions are, the more lively and serious they should be. Or, (2.) By way of thanksgiving for some particular mercy received; it is called a peace-offering of thanksgiving, for so it was sometimes; as in other cases a vow, ch. 7. 15, 16. And some make the original word to signify a contribution they had received of special mercy, and were inquiring what they should render, this they were directed to render to the God of their mercies as a grateful acknowledgment of the benefit done to them, Ps. 116. 12. And we must offer to God the sacrifice of praise continually, by Christ our Peace; and then this shall please the Lord better than an ox or bullock.

Now,

I. As to the matter of the peace-offering. Suppose it were of the herd, it must be without blemish; and, if it was so, it was indifferent whether it was male or female. 1. In our spiritual offerings, it is not the sex, but the heart that God looks at, Gal. 3. 28.

II. As to the management of it.

1. The offerer was, by a solemn manumission, to transfer his interest in it to God, (v. 2.) and, with his hand on the head of the sacrifice, to acknowledge the particular mercies for which he designed this a thank-offering; or, if it were a vow, to make his prayer.

2. It must be killed; and though that might be done in any part of the court, yet it is said to be at the door of tabernacle, because the mercies received or expected were acknowledged to come from God, and the prayers or praises were directed to him, and both, as it were, through that door. Our Lord Jesus has said, I am the Door, for he is indeed the Door of the tabernacle.

3. The priest must sprinkle the blood upon the altar, for it was the blood that made atonement for the soul; and though this was not a sin-offering, yet we must be taught that in all our offerings we must have an eye to Christ as the Propitiation for sin, as those who know that the best of our services cannot be accepted, unless through him our sins be pardoned. Penitent confessions must always go along with our thankful acknowledgments; and, whatever mercy we pray for, in order to it, we must pray for the removal of guilt, as that which keeps good things from us. First, take away all iniquity, and then receive us graciously; or, give good, Hos. 14. 2.

4. All the fat of the inwards, that which we call the tail, &c., with the caul that encloses it, and the kidneys in the midst of it, were to be taken away, and burnt upon the altar, as an offering made by fire, v. 3. 5. And that was all that was sacrificed to the Lord out of the peace-offering; how the rest was to be disposed of, we shall find, ch. 7. 11, &c. It is ordered to be burnt upon the burnt sacrifice, that is, the daily burnt-offering, the lamb which was offered every morning before any other sacrifice was offered; so that the fat of the peace-offerings was an addition to that, and a continuation of it. The great sacrifice of peace, that of the Lamb of God which takes away the sins of the world, prepares the altar for our sacrifices of praise, which are not accepted till we are reconciled. Now the burning of this fat is supposed to signify, (1.) The offering up of our good affections to God in all our prayers and praises. God must have the inwards, for we must pour out our souls, and lift up our hearts, in prayer, and must bless his name with all that is within us. It is required that we be inward with God in every thing wherein we have to do with him. The fat denotes the best and choicest, which must always be devoted to God, who has made for us a feast of fat things. 2. The mortifying of our corrupt affections and lusts, and the burning of them first by the fire of divine grace, Col. 3. 5. Then we are truly thankful for former mercies, and prepared to receive further mercy, when we part with our sins, and have our minds cleared from all sensuality, by the spirit of judgment, and the spirit of burning, Isa. 4. 4.

6. And if his offering for a sacrifice of peace-offering unto the Lord be of the flock, male or female, he shall offer it with-out blemish. 7. If he offer a lamb for his offering, then shall he offer it before the Lord. 8. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of his offering, and kill it before the tabernacle of the congregation: and Aaron's sons shall sprinkle the blood thereof round about upon the altar. 9. And he shall offer of the sacrifice of the peace-offering, an offering made by fire unto the Lord: the fat thereof, and the whole rump, it shall he take off hard by the backbone; and the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards. 10. And the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away. 11. And the priest shall burn it upon the altar; it is the food of the offering made by fire unto the Lord. 12. And if his offering be a goat, then shall he offer it before the Lord. 13. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of it, and kill it before the tabernacle of the congregation: and the sons of Aaron shall sprinkle the blood thereof upon the altar round about. 14. And he shall offer thereof his offering, even an offering made by fire unto the Lord; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards. 15. And the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away. 16. And the priest shall burn them upon the altar: it is the food of the offering made by fire, for a sweet savour. All the fat is the Lord's. 17. It shall be a perpetual statute for your generations, throughout all your dwellings, that ye eat neither fat nor blood.

Directions are here given concerning the peace-offering, if it were a sheep or a goat. Turtle-doves or young pigeons, which might be brought for whole burnt-offerings, were not allowed for peace-offerings, because they have no fat considerable enough to be burnt upon the altar; and they would be next to nothing, if they were to be divided according to the law of the peace-offerings. The laws concerning a lamb or goat, offered for a peace-offering, are much the same with those concerning a bullock, and a little now occurs here; but, 1. That the rump of the mutton was to be burnt with the fat of the inwards upon the altar; the whole rump, (v. 9.) because in those countries it was very fat and large. Some observe from this, that, be a thing ever so contemptible, God can make it honourable, by applying it to his service. Thus God is said to give more abundant honour to that part which lacked, 1 Cor. 12. 23, 24. 2. That that which was burnt upon the altar is called the food of the offering, v. 11, 16. It fed the holy fire; it was acceptable to God as our food is to us; and since in the tabernacle God did, as it were, keep house among them, by the offerings on the altar he kept a good table, as Solomon in his court, 1 Kings. 4. 22, &c.
3. Here is a general rule laid down, that all the fat is the Lord's, (v. 16.) and a law made there-upon, that they should eat neither fat nor blood, nor any part of their private houses, v. 17. (1.) As for the fat it is not meant of that which is interlarded with the meat, that they might eat; (Neh. 8. 10.) but the fat of the inwards, the suet, which was always God's part out of the sacrificed beasts; and therefore they must not eat of it, no not out of the beasts that they killed for their common use. Thus would God preserve the honour of that which was sacred to himself. They must not only not feed upon that very fat which was to be the food of the altar, but not upon any like it, lest the table of the Lord, (as the altar is called,) if something were not reserved peculiar to it, should become contemnible, and the fruit thereof, even its meat, contemptible, Mal. 1. 7, 12. (2.) The blood was universally forbidden likewise, for the same reason that the fat was, because it was God's part of every sacrifice. The heathen drank the blood of their sacrifices; hence we read of their drink-offerings of blood, Ps. 16. 4. But God would not permit the blood that made atonement to be used as a common thing, (Heb. 10. 29.) nor will he allow us, though we have the comfort of the atonement made, to assume to ourselves any share in the honour of making it. He that glories, let him glory in the Lord, and to his praise let all the blood be poured out.

CHAP. IV.

This chapter is concerning the sin-offering, which was properly intended to make atonement for a sin committed through ignorance; either, I. By the priest himself, v. 1-12. Or, II. By the whole congregation, v. 13-21. Or, III. By a ruler, v. 22-26. Or, IV. By a private person, v. 27-35.

I. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a soul shall sin through ignorance against any of the commandments of the Lord, concerning things which ought not to be done, and shall do against any of them: 3. If the priest that is anointed do sin according to the sin of the people; then let him bring, for his sin which he hath sinned, a young bullock without blemish unto the Lord for a sin-offering. 4. And he shall bring the bullock unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation before the Lord; and shall lay his hand upon the bullock's head, and kill the bullock before the Lord. 5. And the priest that is anointed shall take of the bullock's blood, and bring it to the tabernacle of the congregation: 6. And the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle the blood seven times before the Lord, before the vail of the sanctuary. 7. And the priest shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense before the Lord, which is in the tabernacle of the congregation: and shall pour all the blood of the bullock at the bottom of the altar of the burnt-offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. 8. And he shall take off from it all the fat of the bullock for the sin-offering; the fat that covereth the inwards, and all the fat that is upon the inwards, 9. And the two kidneys, and the fat that is upon them, which is by the flanks, and the caul above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall he take away. 10. As it was taken off from the bullock of the sacrifice of peace-offerings; and the priest shall burn them upon the altar of the burnt-offering. 11. And the skin of the bullock, and all his flesh, with his head, and with his legs, and his inwards, and his dung, 12. Even the whole bullock shall be carried forth without the camp unto a clean place, where the ashes are poured out, and burn him on the wood with fire: where the ashes are poured out shall he be burned.

The laws contained in the three first chapters seem to have been delivered to Moses at one time. Here begin the statutes of another session, another day. From the throne of glory between the cherubims God delivered these orders. And he entereth now upon a subject more strictly new than those before. Burnt-offerings, meat-offerings, and peace-offerings, it should seem, had been offered before the giving of the law upon mount Sinai; these sacrifices the patriarchs had not been altogether unacquainted with, (Gen. 8. 20. Exod. 20. 24.) and in those they had respect to sin, to make atonement for it, Job. 1. 5. But the law being now added be cause of transgressions, (Gal. 3. 19.) and having entered, that eventually the offence might abound, (Rom. 5. 20.) they were put into a way of making atonement for sin more particularly by sacrifice, which was (more than any of the ceremonial institutions,) a shadow of good things to come; but they were not offered in a manner, by which he put away sin, and perfected for ever them which are sanctified.

I. The general case supposed, we have, v. 2. We observe, 1. Concerning sin in general, That it is described to be against any of the commandments of the Lord; for sin is the transgression of the law, the divine law. The wits or wills of men, their inventions, or their imaginations, cannot make that be a sin, to which the law of God has not made to be so. It is said likewise, if a soul sin, for it is not sin, if it be not some way or other the soul's act; hence it is called the sin of the soul, (Mic. 6. 7.) and it is the soul that is injured by it, Prov. 8. 36. 2. Concerning the sins for which those offerings were appointed. (1.) They are supposed to be overt-acts; for had they been to bring a sacrifice for every sinful thought or word, it had been endless. Atonement was made for those in the case, on the day of expiration, once a year; but these are said to be done against the commandments. (2.) They are supposed to be sins of commission, things which ought not to be done. Omissions are sins, and must come into judgment; but what had been omitted at one time might be done at another, and so, to obey was better than sacrifice; but a commission was past recall. (3.) They are supposed to be sins of ignorance. If they were done pre sumptuously, and with an avowed contempt of the law, and the Law-Maker, the offender was to be cut off, and there remained no sacrifice for the sin, Heb. 10. 26, 27. Numb. 15. 30. But if the offender were either ignorant of the law, as in divers instances, we may suppose many were, (so numerous and various were the prohibitions,) they were comprised into the sin unawares, the circumstances being such as made it evident that his resolution... against the sin was sincere, but that he was overtaken in it, as the expression is, (Gal. 6. 1.) in this case, relief was provided by the remedial law of the sin-offering. And the Jews say, "Those crimes only were to be expiated by sacrifice, if committed ignorantly, i.e., for which the criminal was to have been cut off, if they had been committed presumptuously.

II. The law begins with the case of the anointed priest, that is, the high priest, provided he should sin through ignorance; for the law made men priests which had infirmity; though his ignorance was of all others least excusable, yet he is allowed to bring his offering. His office did not so far excuse his offence, as that it should be forgiven him without a sacrifice; yet it did not so far aggravate it, but that it could be forgiven him. There was no sin to be brought to his sacrifice. If he sin according to the sin of the people, (so the case is put, v. 3.) which supposes him in this matter to stand upon the level with other Israelites, and to have no benefit of his clergy at all. Now the law concerning the sin-offering for the high priest is,

1. That he must bring a bullock without blemish for a sin-offering, (v. 3.) as valuable an offering as the burnt for the congregation; (v. 14.) whereas for any other ruler, or a common person, a kid of the goats should serve, v. 23, 28. This intimated the greatness of the guilt connected with the sin of a high priest. The eminency of his station, and his relation both to God and to the people, greatly aggravated his offences; see Rom. 2. 21.

2. The hands of the offerer must be laid upon the head of the offering, (v. 4.) with a solemn penitent confession of the sin he had committed, putting it upon the head of the sin-offering, ch. 26. 21. No remission without confession, Ps. 32. 5. Prov. 28. 13. It signified also a confidence in this instituted way of expiating guilt, as a figure of something better yet to come, which they could not steadfastly discern. He that laid his hand on the head of the beast, thereby owned that he deserved to die himself; and that it was God's great mercy, that he would please to accept the offering of this beast to die for him. The Jewish writers themselves say, that neither the sin-offering nor the trespass-offering made atonement, except for those that repent, and believe in their atonement.

3. The bullock must be killed, and a great deal of solemnity there must be in disposing of the blood; for it was the blood that made atonement, and without shedding of blood there is no remission, v. 5. 7. Some of the blood of the high priest's sin-offering was to be sprinkled seven times before the vail, with an eye toward the mercy-seat, though it was vailed; some of it was to be put upon the horns of the golden altar, because at that altar the priest himself ministered; and thus was signified the putting away of that pollution, which from his sins did cleave to his services. Itlikewise serves to illus- trate the love with which Christ's satisfaction has upon the prevalency of his intercession. The blood of his sacrifice is put upon the altar of his incense, and sprinkled before the Lord. When this was done, the remainder of the blood was poured at the foot of the brazen altar. By this rite, the sinner acknowledged that he deserved to have his blood thus poured out like water; it likewise signifies pouring it out of the soul before God a true repentance; and typified our Saviour's pouring out his soul unto death.

4. The fat of the inward was to be burnt upon the altar of burnt-offering, v. 8. 10. By this, the intention of the offering and of the atonement made by it was directed to the glory of God, who having been dishonoured by the sin, was thus honoured by the sacrifice. It signified the sharp sufferings of our Lord Jesus, when he was made sin, that is, a Sin-offering for us, especially the sorrows of his soul and his inward agonies. It likewise teaches us, in conformity to the death of Christ, to crucify the flesh.

5. The head and body of the beast, skin and all, were to be carried without the camp, to a certain place appointed for that purpose, and there burnt to ashes, v. 11, 12. This was very significant, (1.) Of the duty of repentance, which is the putting away of sin as a detestable thing, which our soul hates. True penitents say to their idols, "Get you hence; What have we to do any more with idols?" The sin-offering is called sin. What they did to that, we must do to our sins; the body of sin must be destroyed, Rom. 6. 6. (2.) Of the privilege of remission. When God pardons sin, he quite abolishes it, casts it behind his back; The iniquity of Judah shall be sought for, and not found. The apostle takes particular notice of this ceremony, and applies it to Christ, (Heb. 13. 11. 13.) who suffered without the gate, in the place of a skull, where the ashes of dead men, as those of the altar, were poured out.

13. And if the whole congregation of Israel sin through ignorance, and the thing be hid from the eyes of the assembly, and they have done somewhat against any of the commandments of the Lord, concerning things which should not be done, and are guilty; 14. When the sin which they have sinned against it is known, then the congregation shall offer a young bullock for the sin, and bring him before the tabernacle of the congregation. 15. And the elders of the congregation shall lay their hands upon the head of the bullock before the Lord; and the bullock shall be killed before the Lord. 16. And the priest that is anointed shall bring of the bullock's blood to the tabernacle of the congregation: 17. And the priest shall dip his finger in some of the blood, and sprinkle it seven times before the Lord, even before the vail. 18. And he shall put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar which is before the Lord, that is in the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall pour out all the blood at the bottom of the altar of the burnt-offering, which is at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. 19. And he shall take all his fat from him, and burn it upon the altar. 20. And he shall do with the bullock as he did with the bullock for a sin-offering, so shall he do with this: and the priest shall make an atonement for them, and it shall be forgiven them. 21. And he shall carry forth the bullock without the camp, and burn him as he burned the first bullock: it is a sin-offering for the congregation.

This is the law for the expiating the guilt of a national sin by a sin-offering. If the leaders of the people, through mistake concerning the law, caused them to err, when the mistake was discovered, an offering must be brought, that wrath might not come upon the whole congregation. Observe
1. It is possible the church may err, and that her guides may mislead her. It is here supposed, that the whole congregation may sin, and sin through ignorance. God will always have a church on earth; but he never said it should be infallible, or perfectly pure from corruption, on this side heaven.

2. When a sacrifice was to be offered for the whole congregation, the elders were to lay their hands upon the head of it, three of them at least, as representatives of the people, and agents for them. The sin we suppose to have been some common custom, taken up and used by the generality of the people, upon presumption of its being lawful, which afterward, upon search, appeared to be otherwise. In this case, the commonness of the usage, received perhaps by tradition from their fathers, and the vulgar opinion of its being lawful, would not so far excuse them from sin, but that they must bring a sacrifice to make atonement for it. There are many bad customs, and forms of solemn oaths, which are thought to have no harm in them, and yet may bring guilt and wrath upon a land, which therefore it concerns the elders both to reform, and to intercede with God for the pardon of, Joel 2, 16.

3. The blood of this sin-offering, as of the former, was to be sprinkled seven times before the Lord, v. 17. It was not to be poured out there, but sprinkled only; for the cleansing virtue of the blood of Christ was then and is still sufficient, as is signified and represented by sprinkling, Isa. 52, 15. It was to be sprinkled seven times; seven is a number of perfection, because when God had made the world in six days, he rested the seventh; so this signified the perfect satisfaction Christ made, and the complete cleansing of the souls of the faithful by it; see Heb. 10: 14. The blood was likewise to be put upon the horns of the incense-altar, to which there seems to be an allusion, (Iam. 17, 1.) wherein the king of Judah is said to be gra

24. J'hat somewhat of the kingdom is put upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out his blood at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering. 26. And he shall burn all his fat upon the altar, as the fat of the sacrifice of peace-offerings: and the priest shall make an atonement for him as concerning his sin, and it shall be forgiven him.

Observe here, 1. That God takes notice of, and is displeased with, the sins of rulers. They who have power to call others to account, are themselves accountable to the Ruler of rulers, for, as high as they are, there is a higher than they. This is intimated, in that here only the commandment transgressed is said to be the commandment of the Lord his God, v. 22. He is a prince to others, but let him know the Lord is a God to him. 2. The sin of the ruler, which he committed through ignorance, is supposed afterward to come to his knowledge, (v. 25.) which must be either by the check of his own conscience, or by the reproach of his friends, both which we should all, even the best and greatest, not only submit to, but be thankful for. What we have done amiss, we should be very desirous to come to the knowledge of. That which we see not, teach thou me, and when we wherein we have erred, are prayers we should put up to God every day; that though through ignorance we fall into sin, we may not through ignorance lie still in it. 3. The sin-offering for a ruler was to be a kid of the goats, not a bullock, as for the priest, and the whole congregation; nor was the blood of his sin-offering to be brought into the tabernacle, as of the other two, but it was all bestowed upon the brazen altar; (v. 25.) nor was the flesh of it to be burned as that of the other two, without the camp, which intimated that the sin of a ruler, though worse than that of a common person, yet was not so heinous, nor of such pernicious consequence, as the sin of the high priest, or of the whole congregation. A kid of the goats was sufficient to be offered for a ruler, but a bullock for a tribe; to intimate that the ruler, though superior to all in the publick service, was yet more, or minor, universis—less than the whole. It is no

27. And if any one of the common people sin through ignorance, while he doth somewhat against any of the commandments of the Lord concerning things which ought not to be done, and be guilty; 28. Or if his sin, which he hath sinned, come to his knowledge; then he shall bring his offering, a kid of the goats, a female without blemish, for his sin which he hath sinned. 29. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the goat, and kill it in the place where they kill the burnt-offering before the Lord: it is a sin-offering. 25. And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out all the blood thereof at the bottom of the altar. 31. And he shall take away all the fat thereof, as the fat is taken away from off the sacrifice of peace-offerings; and the priest shall burn it upon the altar, for a sweet savour unto the Lord: and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and it shall be forgiven him. 32. And if he bring a lamb for a sin-offering, he shall bring it a female without blemish. 33. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the sin-offering, and slay it for a sin-offering, in the place where they kill the burnt-offering. 34. And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out all the blood thereof at the bottom of the altar. 35. And he shall take away all the fat thereof, as the fat of the lamb is taken away from the sacrifice of the peace-offerings; and the priest shall burn them upon the altar, according to the offerings made by fire unto the Lord: and the priest shall make an atonement for his sin that he hath committed, and it shall be forgiven him.

Here is the law of the sin-offering for a common person, which differs from that for a ruler only in this, that a private person might bring either a kid or a lamb, a ruler only a kid; and that for a ruler must be a male, for the other a female: in all the circumstances of the management of the offering they agreed. Observe, 1. The case supposed, If any one of the common people sin through ignorance, v. 27. The prophet supposes that they were not so likely as the great men to know the way of the Lord, and the judgment of their God, (Jer. 3. 4.) and yet, if they sin through ignorance, they must bring a sin-offering. Note, Even sins of ignorance need to be atoned for by sacrifice. To be able to plead, when we are charged with sin, that we did it ignorantly, and through the surprise of temptation, will not bring us off, if we be not interested in that great plea, Christ hath pleased himself to. And carnal things, we have all need to pray, with David, (and he was a ruler,) to be cleansed from secret faults, the errors which we ourselves do not understand, or are not aware of, Ps. 19. 12. 2. That the sins of ignorance committed by a single person, a common, obscure, person, did require a sacrifice; for, as the greatest are not above the censure, so the meanest are not below the cognizance, of the divine justice. None of the common people, if offenders, were overlooked in a crowd. 3. That a sin-offering was not admitted only, but accepted, even from one of the common people, and an atonement made by it, v. 31, 35. Here rich and poor, prince and peasant, meet together; they are both alike welcome to Christ, and to an interest in his sacrifice, upon the same terms. See Job 34. 19.

From all these laws concerning the sin-offerings we may learn, (1.) To hate sin, and to watch against it. This is certainly a very bad thing, to make atonement for which so many innocent and useful creatures must be slain and mangled thus. (2.) To value Christ, the great and true Sin-offering, whose blood cleanses from all sin, which it was not possible that the blood of bulls and goats should take away. Now if any man sin, Christ is the Propitiation, (1 John 2. 1, 2,) not for Jews only, but for Gentiles. And perhaps there was some allusion to this law concerning sacrifices for sins of ignorance, in that prayer of Christ's, just when he was offering up himself a sacrifice, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.

CHAP. V.

This chapter, and part of the next, concerns the trespass-offering. The difference between this and the sin-offering lay not so much in the sacrifices themselves, and the management of them, as in the occasions of the offering of them. They were both intended to make atonement for sin; but the former was more general, this applied to some particular instances. Observe what is here said, 1. Concerning the trespass. If a man sin, 1. In concealing his knowledge, when he is adjudged, v. 1. 2. In touching an unclean thing, v. 2. 3. In eating embezzeled things, such as things, 13. 14. 16. 5. In any sin of infirmity, v. 17. Other some other cases there are, in which these offerings were to be offered, ch. 5. 2. 5. 14. 15. 19. 21. Numb. 6. 12. 11. Concerning the trespass-offering, 1. Of the flock, v. 5. 6. 2. Of fowls, v. 7. 13. 3. Of flour, v. 11. 12, but chiefly a ram without blemish, v. 15. 19.

1. And if a soul sin, and hear the voice of swearing, and is a witness, whether he had seen or known of it; if he do not utter it, then he shall bear his iniquity: 2. Or if a soul touch any unclean thing, whether it be a carcase of an unclean beast, or a carcase of unclean cattle, or the carcase of unclean creeping things, and if it be hidden from him; he also shall be unclean, and guilty: 3. Or if he touch the uncleanness of man, whatsoever uncleanness it be that a man shall be defiled withal, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty: 4. Or if a soul swear, pronouncing with his lips to do evil, or todo good, whatsoever it be that a man shall pronounce with an oath, and it be hid from him; when he knoweth of it, then he shall be guilty in one of these. 5. And it shall be, when he shall be guilty in one of these things, that he shall confess that he hath sinned in that thing. 6. And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the Lord, for his sin which he hath sinned, a female from the flock, a lamb or a kid of the goats, for a sin-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his sin.

The offences here supposed are, 1. A man's concealing the truth, when he was sworn as a witness to speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Judges among the Jews had power to adjure, not only the witnesses, as with us, but the person suspected, (contrary to a rule of our law, that no man is bound to accuse himself,) as appears by the high priest's adjuring our Saviour, who thereupon answered, though before he stood silent, Matth. 26. 63, 64. Now, (v. 1.) If a soul sin, that is, a person, (for the soul is the man,) if he hear the voice of swearing, that is, if he be adjudged to testify what he knows, by an oath of the Lord upon him, (1 Kings 8. 31.) if in such a case, for fear of offending one that either has been his friend or may be his enemy, he refuses to give evidence, or gives it but in part, he shall bear his iniquity. And that is a heavy burden, which, if some course be not taken to get it removed, will sink a man to the lowest hell. He that heareth
2. A man’s touching any thing that was ceremonially unclean, v. 2, 3. If a man, polluted by such touch, came into the sanctuary inconsiderately, or if he neglected to wash himself according to the law, then he was to look upon himself as under guilt, and must bring his offering. Though his touching of the unclean thing contracted only a ceremonial uncleanness, and, yet his neglect to wash himself according to the law, was such an instance either of carelessness or contempt, as contracted a moral guilt. If at first it be hid from him, yet when he knows it, he shall be guilty. Note, As soon as ever God by his Spirit convinces our consciences of any sin or duty, we must immediately set in with the conviction, and prosecute it, as those that are not ashamed to own our former mistake.

3. Rash swearing: that a man will do or not do such a thing; if the performance of his oath afterward prove either unlawful or impracticable, by which he is discharged from the obligation; yet he must bring an offering to:one for his folly in swearing so rashly, as David that he would kill Nahash. And then it was, that he must say before the angel, that it was an error; (Eccl. 5. 5.) He shall be guilty in one of these: (ch. 5. 4.) guilty if he do not perform his oath; and yet, if the matter of it were evil, guilty if he do. Such wretched dilemmas as these do some men bring themselves into by their own rashness and folly; go which way they will, their consciences are wounded; sin stares them in the face, so sadly are they enrailed in the words of their mouth. A more sad dilemma this is than that of the lepers, ‘If we sit still, we die; if we stir, we die.’ Wisdom and watchfulness beforehand would prevent these straits.

Now in these cases, (1.) The offender must confess his sin, and bring his offering; (v. 5, 6.) and the offering was not accepted, unless it was accompanied with a penitential confession, and a humble prayer for pardon. Observe, the confession must be particular, that he hath sinned in that thing; such was David’s confession, (Ps. 51. 4.) I have done that which was evil in thy sight; and I have done that which is wrong in thine eyes. Thus as he has thus have I done. Deceit lies in generals; many will own in general they have sinned, for that all must own, so that it is not any particular reproach to them; but that they have sinned in this thing, they stand too much upon their honour to acknowledge; but the way to be well assured of pardon, and to be well armed against sin for the future, is to be manly and candid, and to lay open every particular defect of their consciences. (2.) The priest must make an atonement for him; And such atonement was not accepted without his repentance, so his repentance would not justify him without the atonement. Thus in our reconciliation to God, Christ’s part and our’s are both needful.

7. And if he be not able to bring a lamb, then he shall bring, for his trespass which he hath committed, two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, unto the Lord: one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering. 8. And he shall bring them unto the priest, who shall offer that which is for the sin-offering first, and wring off his head from his neck, but shall not divide it asunder: 9. And he shall sprinkle of the blood of the sin-offering upon the side of the altar, and the rest of the blood shall be wrung out at the bottom of the altar: it is a sin-offering. 10. And he shall offer the second for a burnt-offering, according to the manner: and the priest shall make an atonement for him, for his sin which he hath sinned, and it shall be forgiven him. 11. But if he be not able to bring two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, then he that sinned shall bring for his offering the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour, for a sin-offering: he shall put no oil upon it, neither shall he put any frankincense thereon; for it is a sin-offering. 12. Then shall he bring it to the priest, and the priest shall take his handful of it, even a memorial thereof, and burn it on the altar, according to the offerings made by fire unto the Lord: it is a sin-offering. 13. And the priest shall make an atonement for him, as touching his sin that he hath sinned in one of these, and it shall be forgiven him: and the remnant shall be the priest’s as a meat-offering.

Provision is here made for the poor of God’s people, and the pacifying of their consciences under the sense of guilt. Those that were not able to bring a lamb, might bring for a sin-offering a pair of turtle-doves, or two young pigeons; or, if any who were so extremely poor, that they were not able to procure those so often as they would have occasion, they might bring a bottle of fine flour, and that should be accepted. Thus the expense of the sin-offering was brought lower than that of any other offering; to teach us that no man’s poverty shall ever be a bar in the way of his pardon. The poorest of all may have atonement made for them, if it be not their own fault. Thus the poor are evangelized; and no man shall say that he had not wherewithal to bear the charges of a journey to heaven.

Now, 1. If the sinner brought two doves, one was to be offered for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, v. 7. Observe, (1.) Before he offered the burnt-offering, which was for the honour and praise of God, he must offer the sin-offering. 2. That if he brought fine flour, a handful of it was to be offered, but without either oil or frankincense; (v. 11.) not only because that would make it too costly for the poor, for whose comfort this sacrifice was appointed, but because it was a sin-offering; and therefore, to show the loathsomeness of the sin for which it was offered, it must not be made grateful either to the taste by oil, or to the smell by frankincense. The unsavouriness of the offering was to intimate that the sinner must never relish his sin again as he had done. God by these sacrifices did speak, (1.) Comfort to those that had offended, that they might not despair, or pine away in their iniquity; but peace being thus made for them with God, they might have peace in him. (2.) Caution likewise not to offend any more, remembering what an expensive troublesome thing it was to make atone-

14. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 15. If a soul commit a trespass, and sin through ignorance, in the holy things of the Lord: then he shall bring, for his trespass unto the Lord, a ram without blemish out of the flocks, with thy estimation by shekels of silver, after the shekel of the sanctuary, for a trespass-offering: 16. And he shall make amends for the harm that he hath done in the holy thing, and shall add the fifth part thereto, and give it unto the priest: and the priest shall make an atonement for him with the ram of the trespass-offering, and it shall be forgiven him. 17. And if a soul sin, and commit any of these things which are forbidden to be done by the commandments of the Lord; though he wist it not, yet is he guilty, and shall bear his iniquity. 18. And he shall bring a ram without blemish out of the flock, with thy estimation, for a trespass-offering unto the priest: and the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his ignorance wherein he erred, and wist it not; and it shall be forgiven him. 19. It is a trespass-offering: he hath certainly trespassed against the Lord.

Hitherto in this chapter orders were given concerning those sacrifices that were both sin-offerings and trespass-offerings, for they go by both names, v. 6. Here we have the law concerning those that were properly and peculiarly trespass-offerings, which were offered to atone for trespasses done against a neighbour; these sins we commonly call trespasses. Now injuries done to another may be either in holy things, or in common things; of the former we have the law in these verses; of the latter, in the beginning of the next chapter. If a man did harm (as it is, v. 16.) in the holy things of the Lord, he thereby committed a trespass against the priests, the Lord's ministers, who were intrusted with the care of these holy things, and had the benefit of them. Now if a man did alienate or convert to his own use any thing that was dedicated to God, unwittingly, he was to bring this sacrifice; as suppose he had ignorantly made use of the tithes, or first-fruits, or first-born of his cattle, or (which, it should seem by ch. 22. 14. 16. is principally meant here) had eaten any of those parts of the sacrifices which were appropriated to the priests; this was a trespass. It is supposed to be done through mistake, or forgetfulness, for want either of care or zeal; for if it was done presumptuously, and in contempt of the law, the offender died without mercy, Heb. 10. 28. But in case of negligence and ignorance this sacrifice was appointed; and Moses is told,

1. What must be done in case the trespass was performed to be certain. The trespasser must, 1. Bring an offering to the Lord, which in all these that were purely trespass-offerings, must be a ram without blemish, “of the second year,” say the Jewish doctors. 2. He must likewise make restitution to the priest according to a just estimation of the thing which he had soalienated; adding a fifth part to it, that he might learn to take more heed next time of embezzecling what was sacred to God, finding to his cost that there was nothing got by it, and that he paid dear for his oversights.

2. What must be done in case it were doubtful whether he had trespassed or no; he had cause to suspect it, but he said it not, (v. 17.) that is, he was not very certain; in this case, because it is good to be sure, he must bring his trespass-offering, and the value of that which he feared he had embezzeled; only he was not to add the fifth part to it. Now this was designed to show the very great evil there is in sacrilege; Achan, that was guilty of it presumptuously, died for it; so did Ananias and Sapphira. But this goes further to show the evil of it, that it is not man, through malice, or iniquity, or negligence, or ignorance, or any sin, that has done it, but if he did but suspect that he had done so, he must be at the expense, not only of a full restitution with interest, but of an offering, with the trouble of bringing it, and must take shame to himself, by making confession of it; so bad a thing is it to invade God's property, and so cautious should we be to abstain from all appearances of this evil. We are also taught here to be jealous over ourselves with a godly jealousy, to ask pardon for the sin, and make satisfaction for the wrong, which we do but suspect ourselves guilty of. In doubtful cases we should take and keep the safer side.

CHAP. VI.

The seven first verses of this chapter would nicely have been added to the foregoing chapter, being a continuation of the law of the trespass-offering, and the putting of other cases in which it was to be offered; and with this end the instructions God gave concerning the several kinds of sacrifices that should be offered: and then at v. 8. (which in the original begins a new section of the law,) he comes to appoint the several rites and ceremonies concerning these sacrifices, which had not been mentioned before. 1. The burnt-offering, v. 8. 13. II. The meat-offering, (v. 14. 18.) particularly that at the consecration of the priest, v. 19. 23. III. The sin-offering, v. 24. 30.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. If a soul sin, and commit a trespass against the Lord, and lie unto his neighbour in that which was delivered him to keep, or in fellowship, or in a thing taken away by violence, or hath deceived his neighbour; 3. Or have found that which was lost, and lieth concerning it, and sweareth falsely; in any of these that a man doeth, sinning therein: 4. Then it shall be, because he hath sinned, and is guilty, that he shall restore that which he took violently away, or the thing which he hath deceitfully gotten, or that which was delivered him to keep, or the lost thing which he found. 5. Or all that about which he hath sworn falsely; he shall even restore it in the principal, and shall add the fifth part more thereto, and give it unto him to whom it appertaineth, in the day of his trespass-offering. 6. And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the Lord, a ram without blemish out of the flock, with thy estimation, for a trespass-offering unto the priest: 7. And the priest shall make an atonement for him before the Lord: and it shall be forgiven him for any thing of all that he hath done in trespassing therein.

This is the latter part of the law of the trespass-offering: the former part, which concerned trespasses about holy things, we had in the close of the foregoing chapter; this concerns trespasses in common things.

1. The trespass supposed, v. 2, 3. Though all the instances relate to our neighbour, yet it is called a trespass against the Lord; because, though the injury be done immediately to our neighbour, yet an affront is thereby given to his Maker, and our Master. He that speaks evil of his brother, is said to speak evil of the law, and consequently of the Law-Maker, Is. 4. 11. Though the person injured be ever so mean and despicable, and every way our inferior, yet if what is due, or extorting what is not. (2.) Depraving a partner; if a man lie in fellowship, claiming a sole interest in that wherein he has but a joint-interest. (3.) Disowning a manifest wrong; If a man has the front to lie in a thing taken away by violence, which ordinarily cannot be hid. (4.) Deceiving in commerce; or, as some think, by false accusation; if a man have deceitfully oppressed his neighbour, as some read it, either with his goods, what is due, or extorting what is not. (5.) Detaining what is found, and denying it; (v. 3.) if a man have found that which was lost, he must not call it his own presently, but endeavour to find out the owner, to whom it must be returned; this is doing as we would be done by: but he that lies concerning it, that says he knows nothing of it, when he does, especially if he back that he with a false oath, he trespasseth against the Lord, who to every thing that is said is a Witness; but in an oath he is called by God the most high, and highly affronted when he is called to witness to a lie.

2. The trespass-offering appointed. (1.) In the day of his trespass-offering he must make satisfaction to his brother. This must be first done; if thy brother hath ought against thee, (v. 4, 5.) Because he hath sinned and is guilty, that is, is convicted of his guilt by his own conscience, and is touched with remorse for it; seeing himself guilty before God, let him faithfully restore all that he has got by fraud or oppression, with a fifth part added, to make amends to the owner for the less and trouble he had sustained in the meantime; let him account both for debt and damages. Note, Where wrong has been done, restitution must be made; and till it is made to the utmost of our power, or an equivalent accepted by the person wronged, we cannot have the comfort of the forgiveness of the sin; for the keeping of what is unjustly got, is the source of taking, and the consuming of the continued sin of the unrighteousness. To repent is to undo what we have done amiss, which (whatever we pretend) we cannot be said to do, till we restore what has been got by it, as Zaccheus, (Luke 19. 8.) and make satisfaction for the wrong done. (2.) He must then come and offer his gift, must bring his trespass-offering to the Lord, whom he had offended; and the priest must make an atonement for him, v. 6, 7. This trespass-offering could not, of itself, make satisfaction for sin, or reconciliation between God and the sinner, but as it signified the atonement that was to be made by our Lord Jesus, when he should make his soul an offering for sin, a trespass-offering; it is the same word that is here used, Isa. 53. 10. The trespasses here mentioned are trespasses still against the law of Christ, which insists as much upon justice and truth as ever the law of nature or the law of Moses did; and though now we may have them pardoned without a trespass-offering yet, not without true repentance, restitution, reformation, and a due sense of the righteousness of Christ; and if any make the more bold with their sins, because they are not now put to the expense of a trespass-offering for them, they turn the grace of God into vanity, and so bring upon themselves a swift destruction. The Lord is the avenger of all such, 1 Thess. 4. 6.

3. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 9. Command Aaron and his sons, saying, This is the law of the burnt-offering: (it is the burnt-offering, because of the burning upon the altar all night unto the morning; and the fire of the altar shall be burning in it.) 10. And the priest shall put on his linen garment, and his linen breeches shall he put upon his flesh, and take up the ashes which the fire hath consumed with the burnt-offering, on the altar, and he shall put them beside the altar. 11. And he shall put of his garments, and put on other garments, and carry forth the ashes without the camp, unto a clean place. 12. And the fire upon the altar shall be burning in it; it shall not be put out; and the priest shall burn wood on it every morning, and lay the burnt-offering in order upon it, and he shall burn thereon the fat of the peace-offerings.

13. The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar: it shall never go out.

Hitherto, Moses had given the preceal instructions concerning the sacrifices; but here begin the instructions he was to give to the priests: he must command Aaron and his sons, v. 9. The priests were rulers in the house of God, but these rulers must be ruled; and they that had the command of others must themselves be commanded. Let ministers remember, that not only commissions, but commands, were given to Aaron and his sons, who must be in subjection to them.

In these verses we have the law of the burnt-offering, as far as it was the peculiar care of the priests. The daily sacrifice of a lamb, which was offered morning and evening for the whole congregation, is here chiefly referred to.

1. The priest must take care of the ashes of the burnt-offering, that they be decently disposed of, v. 10, 11. He must clear the altar of them every morning, and put them on the east-side of the altar, and which was taken from the sanctuary; this he must do in his linen garment, which he always wore when he did any service at the altar; and then he must shift himself, and put on other garments, either such as were his common wear, or (as some think) other priestly garments less honourable, and must carry the ashes unto a clean place without the camp. Now, (1.) God would have this done, for the honour of his altar, and the sacrifices that were burnt upon it. Even the ashes of the sacrifice must be preserved, to testify the regard God had to it; by the burnt-offering he was honoured, and therefore thus it was honoured. And some think That this case, which was taken of the ashes of the sacrifice, typified the burial of our Saviour; his dead body (the ashes of his sacrifice) was carefully laid up in a garden, in a new sepulchre, which was a clean place. It was also requisite that the altar should be kept as clean as might be; for, if the fire upon it would burn the better; and it is decent in a house to have a clean fire-side. (2.) God would have the priests themselves to keep it so, to teach them and us to stoop to the meanest services for the honour of God and of his altar. The priest himself must not only kindle the fire, but cleanse the hearth, and carry out the ashes. God's servants must think nothing below them but sin.

2. The priest must take care of the fire upon the altar, that that should be kept always burning. This is much insisted on here, (v. 9, 12.) and this express law is given, (v. 13.) The fire shall ever be burning upon the altar, it shall never go out. We may suppose that no day passed without some extraordinary sacrifices, which were always offered between the morning and evening lamb; so that from morning to night the fire on the altar was kept up of course. But to preserve it all night unto the morning, (v. 9.) required some care. Those that keep good houses never let their kitchen-fire go out; therefore God would thus give an instance of his good house-keeping. The first fire upon the altar came from heaven, (ch. 9. 24.) so that by keeping that up continually with constant supply of fuel, all their sacrifices throughout all their days in Jerusalem was to be taken care of, with that fire from heaven, in token of God's acceptance. If, through carelessness, they should ever let it go out, they could not expect to have it so kindled again. Accordingly, the Jews tell us, that the fire never did go out upon the altar, till the captivity in Babylon. This is referred to, Isa. 31. 9, where God is said to have his fire in Zion, and his furnance in Jerusalem. By this law we are taught to keep up in our minds a constant disposition to all acts of piety and devotion, an habitual affection to divine things, so as to be always ready to every good word and work. We must not only quench the Spirit, but we must stir up the gift that is in us. Though we be not always sacrificing, yet we must keep the fire of holy love always burning; and thus we must pray always.

14. And this is the law of the meat-offering: the sons of Aaron shall offer it before the Lord, before the altar. 15. And he shall take of it his handful, of the flour of the meat-offering, and of the oil thereof, and all the frankincense which is upon the meat-offering, and shall burn it upon the altar, for a sweet savour, even the memorial of it unto the Lord. 16. And the remainder thereof shall Aaron and his sons eat: with unleavened bread shall it be eaten in the holy place; in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation they shall eat it. 17. It shall not be baken with leaven. I have given it unto them for their portion of my offerings made by fire: it is most holy, as is the sin-offering, and as the trespass-offering.

18. All the males among the children of Aaron shall eat of it: it shall be a statute for ever in your generations, concerning the offerings of the Lord made by fire: every one that toucheth them shall be holy. 19. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 20. This is the offering of Aaron and of his sons, which they shall offer unto the Lord in the day when he is anointed; the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a meat-offering perpetual, half of it in the morning, and half thereof at night. 21. In a pan it shall be made with oil; and when it is baked thou shalt bring it in: and the baken pieces of the meat-offering shalt thou offer for a sweet savour unto the Lord. 22. And the priest of his sons that is anointed in his stead shall offer it: it is a statute for ever unto the Lord; it shall be wholly burnt.

The meat-offering was either that which was offered by the people, or that by the priests at their own charge. 1. As to the common meat-offering; only a handful of it was to be burnt upon the altar, all the rest was allowed to the priests for their food. The law of the burnt-offerings was such as imposed upon the priests a great deal of care and work, but allowed them little profit; for the flesh was wholly burnt, and the priests had nothing but the skin. But, to make them amends, the greatest part of the meat-offering was the fat, which was taken away from all but the burnt offering. 2. All Christians, being spiritual priests, do themselves share in the spiritual sacrifices they offer. It is not God that is the Gainer by them; the handful burnt upon the altar was not worth speaking of, in comparison with the priest's share; we ourselves are the gainers by our religious services. Let God have all the frankincense, and the priests shall have the flour and the oil; what we give to God the praise and glory, we may take to ourselves the comfort and benefit of it. The laws concerning the eating of it were, [1.] That it must be eaten unleavened, v. 16. What was offered to God must have no leaven in it, and the priests must have it as the altar had it, and no otherwise. Thus must we keep the feasts of the Lord with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth. [2.] It must be eaten in the court of the tabernacle, (here called the holy place,) in some room prepared by the side of the court for this purpose. It was a great crime to carry any of it out of the court. The very eating of it was a sacred rite by which they were to honour God; and therefore it must be done in a religious manner, and with a holy reverence, which was preserved by confining it to the holy place. [3.] The males only might eat of it, v. 15. Of other things, as the first-fruits and tithes, and the shoulder and breasts of the peace-offerings, the daughters of the priests might eat, for they might be carried out of the court; but this was of the most holy things, which being to be eaten only in the tabernacle, the sons of Aaron only might eat of it. [4.] The priests only, that were clean, might eat of it; Every one that toucheth them shall be clean, v. 18. Holy things for holy persons. Some read, Every thing that toucheth it shall be holy; al
the furniture of the table on which these holy things were eaten, must be appropriated to that use only, and never after used as common things.

2. As to the consecration meat-offering, which was offered for the priests themselves, it was to be wholly burnt and none of it eaten, v. 23. It comes in here as an exception to the foregoing law. It should seem that this law concerning the meat-offering of initiation did not only oblige the high priest to offer it, and on that day only that he was anointed, and so for his successors in the day they were anointed; but the Jewish writers say, that, by this law, every priest, on the day he first entered upon his ministry, was bound to offer this meat-offering; and that the high priest was bound to offer it every day of his life, from the day in which he was anointed; and that it was to be offered beside the meat-offering that attended the morning and evening sacrifice, because it is said here to be a meat-offering perpetual, v. 20. Josephus says, "The high priest sacrificed twice every day at his own charges, and this was his sacrifice." Note, Those whom God has advanced above others in dignity and power, ought to consider that he expects more from them than from others, and should take every intimation of service to be done for him. The meat-offering of the priest was to be baked, and neither to be eaten, and yet it must be wholly burnt. Though the priest that ministered was to be paid for serving the people, yet there was no reason that he should be paid for serving the high priest, who was the father of the family of the priests, and whom, therefore, every priest should take a pleasure in serving gratis. Nor was it fit that the priests should eat of the offerings of a priest; for as the sins of the people were typically transferred to the priests, which was signified by their eating of their offerings, (Hos. 4. 8.) so the sins of the priests must be typically transferred to the altar, which therefore must eat up all their offerings. We are all undone, both ministers and people, if we must bear our own iniquity; nor could we have had any comfort or hope, if God had not laid on his dear Son the iniquity of us all, and he is both the Priest and the Altar.

24. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 25. Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, saying, This is the law of the sin-offering: In the place where the burnt-offering is killed shall the sin-offering be killed before the Lord: it is most holy. 26. The priest that offereth it for sin shall eat it: in the holy place shall it be eaten, in the court of the tabernacle of the congregation. 27. WHATSOEVER shall touch the flesh thereof shall be holy: and when there is sprinkled of the blood thereof upon any garment, thou shalt wash that whereon it was sprinkled in the holy place. 28. But the earthen vessel wherein it is sodden shall be broken; and if it be sodden in a brazen pot, it shall be both scoured, and rinsed in water. 29. All the males among the priests shall eat thereof: it is most holy. 30. And no sin-offering, whereof any of the blood is brought into the tabernacle of the congregation, to reconcile withal in the holy place, shall be eaten: it shall be burnt in the fire.

We have here so much of the law of the sin-offering as did peculiarly concern the priests that offered it. As, 1. That it must be killed, in the place where the burnt-offering was killed, (v. 23.) that was on the north side of the altar, (ch. 1. 11.) which some think typified the crucifying of Christ on mount Calvary, which was on the north side of Jerusalem. 2. That the priest who offered it for the sinner, was, (with his sons, or other priests, v. 22.) to eat the flesh of it, after the blood and fat had been offered to God, in the court of the tabernacle, v. 26. Hereby they were to bear the iniquity of the congregation, as it is explained, ch. 16. 17. 3. The blood of the sin-offering was with great reverence to be washed out of the clothes on which it happened to light, (v. 27.) which signified the awful regard we ought to have to the blood of Christ, not counting it a common thing; that blood must be sprinkled on the conscience, not on the raiment. 4. The vessel in which the flesh of the sin-offering was boiled, must be broken, if it were an earthen one; and, if a brazen one, well-washed, v. 28. This intimated, that the defilement was not wholly taken away by the offering, but did rather cleave to it, such was the weakness and deficiency of these sacrifices; but the blood of Christ thoroughly cleanses from all sin, and after it there needs no cleansing. 5. That all this must be understood of the common sin-offerings, not of those for the priest, or the body of the congregation, either occasional, or stated, when the day of atonement: for it had been before ordained, and was now ratified, that if the blood of the offering was brought into the holy place, as it was in those extraordinary cases, the flesh was not to be eaten, but burnt without the camp, v. 30. Hence the apostle infers the advantage we have under the gospel, above what they had under the law; for though the blood of the offering was brought into the tabernacle, to reconcile within the holy place, yet we have a right by faith to eat of the altar, (Heb. 13. 10. 12.) and so to take the comfort of the great Propitiation.

CHAP. VII.

Here is, 1. The law of the trespass-offering, (v. 1. 7.) with some further directions concerning the burnt-offering and the meat-offering, v. 8. 9. And the law of the peace-offering. The eating of it, (v. 11. 21.) on which occasion the prohibition of eating fat or blood is repeated, (v. 22. 27.) and the priest's share of it, v. 28. 34. III. The conclusion of these institutions, v. 35. 38.

1. LIKEWISE is this the law of the trespass-offering: it is most holy. 2. In the place where they kill the burnt-offering shall they kill the trespass-offering; and the blood thereof shall be sprinkled round about upon the altar. 3. And he shall offer of all the fat thereof; the rump, and the fat that covereth the inwards, 4. And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the caul that is above the liver, with the kidneys, it shall be taken away: 5. And the priest shall burn them upon the altar for an offering made by fire unto the Lord: it is a trespass-offering. 6. Every male among the priests shall eat thereof: it shall be eaten in the holy place: it is most holy. 7. As the sin-offering is, so is the trespass-offering: there is one law for them: the priest that maketh atonement therewith shall have it. 8. And the priest that offereth any man's burnt-offering, even the priest shall have to himself the skin of the burnt-offering which
10. is of the peace-offerings, the blood have longed round the dance were, with of the clothing they contained being of the altar exactly in the middle, and the blood of the burnt-offerings was sprinkled round about above the line, but that of the trespass-offerings and peace-offerings round about below the line.” As to the flesh of the trespass-offering, the right to it belonged to the priest that offered it, v. 7. He that did the work must have the wages; this was an encouragement to the priests to give diligent attendance on the altar; the more ready and busy they were, the more they got.

11. And this is the law of the sacrifice of peace-offerings, which he shall offer to the LORD. 12. If he offer it for a thanks-giving, then he shall offer with the sacrifice of thanksgiving unleavened cakes mingled with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil, and cakes mingled with oil, of fine flour, fried. 13. Besides the cakes, he shall offer for his offering leavened bread with the sacrifice of thanksgiving of his peace-offerings. 14. And of it he shall offer one out of the whole oblation for a heave-offering unto the LORD, and it shall be the priest’s that sprinkleth the blood of the peace-offerings. 15. And the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings for thanksgiving shall be eaten the same day that it is offered; he shall not leave any of it until the morning. 16. But if the sacrifice of his offering be a vow, or a voluntary offering, it shall be eaten the same day that he offereth the sacrifice: and on the morrow also the remainder of it shall be eaten: 17. But the remainder of the flesh of the sacrifice on the third day shall be burnt with fire. 18. And if any of the flesh of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings be eaten at all on the third day, it shall not be accepted, neither shall it be imputed unto him that offereth it: it shall be an abomination, and the soul that eateth of it shall bear his iniquity. 19. And the flesh that toucheth any unclean thing shall not be eaten; it shall be burnt with fire: and as for the flesh, all that be clean shall eat thereof. 20. But the soul that eateth of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings that pertain unto the LORD, having his uncleanness upon him, even that soul shall be cut off from his people. 21. Moreover, the soul that shall touch any unclean thing, as the uncleanness of man, or any unclean beast, or any abominable unclean thing, and eat of the flesh of the sacrifice of peace-offerings which pertain unto the LORD, even that soul shall be cut off from his people. 22. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 23. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, Ye shall eat no manner of fat, of ox, or of sheep, or of goat. 24. And the fat of the beast that dieth of itself, and the fat of that which is torn with beasts, may be used in any other use; but ye shall in no wise eat of it. 25. For whatsoever eateth the fat of the beast, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the LORD, even the soul that eateth it shall be cut off from his people. 26. Moreover, ye shall eat no manner of blood, whether it be of fowl, or of beast, in any of your dwellings. 27. Whosoever soul it be that eateth any manner of blood, even that soul shall be cut off from his people. 28. And the LORD spake unto Moses, saying, 29. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, He that offereth the sacrifice of his peace-offerings unto the Lord, shall bring his oblation unto the Lord of the sacrifice of his peace-offerings. 30. His own hands shall bring the offerings of the Lord made by fire; the fat with the breast, it shall he bring, that the breast may be waved for a wave-offering before the Lord. 31. And the priest shall burn the fat upon the altar; but the breast shall be Aaron's and his sons'. 32. And the right shoulder shall ye give unto the priest for a heave-offering of the sacrifices of your peace-offerings. 33. He among the sons of Aaron, that offereth the blood of the peace-offerings, and the fat, shall have the right shoulder for his part. 34. For the wave-breast and the heave-shoulder have I taken of the children of Israel from off the sacrifices of their peace-offerings, and have given them unto Aaron the priest and unto his sons, by a statute for ever from among the children of Israel.

All this relates to the peace-offerings; it is the repetition and explication of what we had before, with divers additions.

I. The nature and intention of the peace-offerings are here more distinctly opened. They were offered, either, 1. In thankfulness for some special mercy received, such as recovery from sickness, preservation in a journey, deliverance at sea, redemption out of captivity, all which are specified in Ps. 107, and for them men are called upon to offer the sacrifice of thanksgiving, v. 22. Or, 2. In performance of some vow, which a man made when he was in distress, (v. 16.) and this was less honourable than the former, though the omission of it would have been more culpable. Or, 3. In supplication for some special mercy which a man was in the pursuit and expectation of, here called a voluntary offering. This accompanied a man's prayers, as the former did his praises. We do not find that men were bound by the law, unless they had bound themselves by vow, to offer these peace-offerings, upon such occasions as those on which they were to bring their sacrifices of atonement, in case of sin committed. Not but that prayer and praise are as much our duty as repentance is; but here, in the expressions of their sense of mercy, God left them more to their liberty, than in the expressions of their sense of sin—to try the generosity of their devotion, and that their sacrifices, being free-will offerings, might be the more laudable and acceptable; and, by obliging them to bring the sacrifices of atonement, God will show the necessity of the great Propitiation.

II. The rites and ceremonies about the peace-offerings are enlarged upon.

1. If it was offered for a thanksgiving, a meat-offering must be offered with it, cakes of several sorts, (v. 12.) which was peculiar to the peace-offerings; leavened bread must be offered, not to be burnt upon the altar, that was forbidden, (ch. 2. 11.) but to be eaten with the flesh of the sacrifice, that nothing might be wanting to make it a complete and pleasant feast; for unleavened bread was less grateful to the taste; and therefore, though enjoined in the passover for a particular reason, yet in other festivals, leavened bread, which was lighter and more pleasant, was appointed, that men might feast at God's table as well as at their own. And some think that a meat-offering is required to be brought with every peace-offering, as with that of thanksgiving, by that law here, (v. 29.) which requires an oblation with it, that the table might be as well-furnish'd as the altar.

2. The flesh of the peace-offerings, both that which was the priest's share, and that which was the offerer's, must be eaten quickly, and not kept long, either raw or dressed, cold. If it was a peace-offering for thanksgiving, it must be all eaten the same day; in the case of a votive or voluntary offering, it must be eaten either the same day or the day after, v. 16. If any was left beyond the time limited, it was to be burnt; (v. 17.) and if any person ate of it, it should be animadverted upon as a very high misdemeanor, v. 18. Though they were not obliged to eat it in the holy place as those offerings that are called most holy, but might take it to their own tents, and feast upon it there, yet God would make them to know a difference between that which was offered and the offerer, and obser-of Christ and his grace; feeding and feasting thereupon by faith, till day, while it is called to day, (Heb. 3. 13.) If law will be too late shortly.

3. Both the flesh and those that eat it must be pure. (1) The flesh must touch no unclean thing; if it did, it must not be eaten, but burnt, v. 19. If, in carrying it from the altar to the place where it was eaten, a dog touched it, or it touched a dead body or any other unclean thing, it was then unfit to be used in a religious feast. Every thing we honor the holy God with must be pure, and cannot be kept from all pollution. It is a case adjudged, (Hag. 2. 12.) that the holy flesh could not by its touch communicate holiness to what was common; but by this law it is determined, that, by the touch of that which was unclean, it received pollution from it; which intimates that the infection of sin is more easily and more frequently communicated, than the savour of grace. (2.) It must not be eaten by ignorantly, v. 7. If a necromancer was upon any account ceremonially unclean, it was at his peril, if he presumed to eat of the flesh of the peace-offerings, v. 20. 21. Holy things are only for holy persons; the holiness of the food being ceremonial, those were incapacitated to partake of it who lay under any ceremonial uncleanness; but we are hereby taught to preserve ourselves pure from all the pollutions of sin, that we may have the benefit and comfort of Christ's sacrifice, I Pet. 2. 1, 2, Our consciences must be purged from dead works, that we may be fit to serve the living God, Heb. 9. 14. But if any dare to partake of the table of the Lord, under the pollution of sin unrepented of; and so profane sacred things, they eat and drink judgment to themselves, as those did that ate of the peace-offerings in their uncleanness, 1 Cor. 11. 29. A good reason for the strictness of this law is intimated in the last clause of the law of the peace-offerings, (v. 20.) and again, (v. 21.) that they pertain unto the Lord: whatever pertains to the Lord, is sacred, and must be used with great reverence, and not with unhallowed hands. Be ye holy, for God is holy, and ye pertain to him.

4. The eating of blood and the fat of the inwards is here again prohibited; and the prohibition is annexed to the law of the peace-offerings, ch. 3. 17. (1) The prohibition of the fat seems to be confined to those beasts which were used for sacrifice, the beeves, sheep, and goats; but of the roe-buck, the hart, and other clean beasts, they might eat the fat; for those only, of which offerings were brought, are mentioned here, v. 23. 25. This was to preserve in their minds a reverence for God's altar, on which the fat of the inwards was burnt. Then pass y. "If a man eat of the flesh of these beasts, and it be an olive of forbidden fat—if he do it presumptuously, he is in danger of being cut off by the hand of God—if ignorantly, he is to bring a sin-offering, and so to pay dear for his carelessness." To eat of the flesh of that which died of itself, or was torn of beasts, was unlawful; but to eat of the fat of such was doubly unlawful, v. 24. (2.) The prohibition of blood is more general, (v. 20.) because the fat was offered to God only by way of acknowledgment; but the blood made atonement for the soul, and so typified Christ's sacrifice much more than the burning of the fat did; to this, therefore, a greater reverence must be paid, till these types had their accomplishment in the offering up of the body of Christ once for all. The Jews rightly expand this law, as forbidding only the blood of the life, as they express it, not that which we call the gravy, for of that they supposed it was lawful to eat.

5. The priest's share of the peace-offerings is here cut out for himself; out of every beast that was offered for a peace-offering, the priest that offered it was to have to himself the breast and the right shoulder, v. 30. 34. Observe here, (1.) That when the sacrifice was killed, the offerer himself must, with his own hand, take the breast part of it, that he might signify thereby his cheerful offering it up to God, and his desire that it might be accepted. He was with his own hands to lift it up, in token of his regard to God as the God of heaven; and then to wave it and fro, in token of his regard to God, as the Lord of the whole earth; to whom thus, as far as he could reach, he offered it, showing his readiness and wish to do him honour. Now, that which was thus heaved and waved, was the fat, and the breast, and the right shoulder, it was all offered to God; and then he ordered the fat to his altar, and the breast and shoulder to his priest, both being his receivers. (2.) That, when the fat was burnt, the priest took his part, on which he and his family were to feast, as well as the offerer and his family. In holy joy and thanksgiving, let us exhort our ministers to go before us, and to be our mouth to God. The melody is then sweet, when he that sows and they that reap rejoice together. Some observe a significance in the parts assigned to the priests: the breast and the shoulder intimate the affections and the actions, which must be devoted to the honour of God by all his people, and to the service also of the church by all his priests. Christ, our great Peace-offering, feasts all the church with his breast and shoulder, with the dearest love, and the strongest supports; for he is the Wisdom of God, and the Power of God. When Saul was designed for a king, Samuel ordered the shoulder of the peace-offering to be set before him, (1 Sam. 9. 24.) which gave him a hint of something great and sacred intended him. Jesus Christ is our great Peace-offering; for he made himself a Sacrifice not only to the Father, but he also presents the curset, but to purchase a blessing for us, and all generations. By our joyful partaking of the benefits of redemption, we feast upon the sacrifice; to signify which, the Lord's supper was instituted.

35. This is the portion of the anointing of Aaron, and of the anointing of his sons, out of the offerings of the Lord made by fire, in the day when he presented them to minister unto the Lord in the priest's office; 36. Which the Lord commanded to be given them of the children of Israel, in the day that he anointed them, by a statute for ever throughout their generations. 37. This is the law of the burnt-offering, of the meat-offering, and of the sin-offering, and of the trespass-offering, and of the consecrations, and of the sacrifice of the peace-offerings; 38. Which the Lord commanded Moses it mount Sinai, in the day that he commanded the children of Israel to offer their oblations unto the Lord, in the wilderness of Sinai.

Here is the conclusion of these laws concerning the sacrifices, though some of them are afterward repeated and explained. They are to be considered, 1. As a gift to the priests, v. 35. 36. In the day they were ordained to that work and office, this provision was made for their comfortable maintenance and income. Note, God will take care that those who are employed for him be well paid and well provided for. They that receive the anointing of the Spirit to minister unto the Lord, shall have their portion, and it shall be a worthy portion, out of the offerings of the Lord for G'ds work is its own wages, and there is a present reward of obedience in obedience. 2. As a statute for ever to the people, that they should bring these offerings according to the rules prescribed, and cheerfully give the priests their share out of them. God commanded the children of Israel to offer their oblations, v. 38. Note, The solemn acts of religious worship are commanded. They are not the things that we are left to our liberty in, and which we may do or not do at our pleasure; but we are under indispensable obligations to perform them in their season; and it is at our peril, if we omit them. The observance of the laws of Christ cannot be less necessary than the observance of the laws of Moses was.

CHAP. VIII.

This chapter gives us an account of the solemn consecration of Aaron and his sons to the priest's office. 1. It was done publicly, and the congregation was called together to be witnesses of it, v. 1, 4. II. It was done exactly according to God's appointment, v. 5. 1. They were washed and dressed, v. 1-9. 2. The tabernacle and the utensils of it were anointed, and then the priests, v. 10, 12. 3. A sin-offering was offered for them, v. 14. 4. A burnt-offering, v. 18, 31. 5. The ram of consecration, v. 22, 30, 36. The continuance of this solemnity for seven days, v. 31, 36.

And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Take Aaron, and his sons with him, and the garments, and the anointing oil, and a bullock for the sin-offering, and two rams, and a basket of unleavened bread; 3. And gather thou all the congregation together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. 4. And Moses did as the Lord commanded him; and the assembly was gathered together unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. 5. And Moses said unto the congregation, This is the thing which the Lord commanded to be done. 6. And Moses brought Aaron and his sons, and washed them with water. 7. And he put upon him the coat, and girded him with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, and put the ephod upon him, and he girded him with the curious girdle of the ephod, and bound it upon him therewith. 8. And he put the breastplate upon him; also he put in the breastplate the Urim and the Thummim. 9. And he put the mitre upon his head; also upon the mitre, even upon his fore-front, did he put the golden plate, the holy crown; as the Lord commanded Moses. 10. And Moses took the anointing oil, and anointed the tabernacle, and all that was therein, and sanctified them. 11. And he sprinkled thereof upon the altar seven times, and anointed the altar, and all his vessels, both the laver and his foot, to sanctify them. 12. And he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head, and anointed him, to sanctify him. 13. And Moses brought Aaron's sons, and put coats upon them, and girded them with girdles, and put bonnets upon them; as the Lord commanded Moses.

God had given Moses orders to consecrate Aaron and his sons to the priest's office, when he was with him the first time upon Mount Sinai; (Exod. 28, and 29,) where we have also the particular instructions he had to do it. Now here we have, 1. The orders repeated; what was there commanded to be done, is here commanded to be done now, v. 2, 3. The tabernacle was newly set up, which, without the priests, would be as a candle stick without a candle, and how concerning sacrifices was newly given, but could not be observed without priests; for through Aaron and his sons had been nominated to the office, they could not officiate till they were consecrated; which yet must not be done till the place of their ministration was prepared, and the ordinances instituted, that they might apply themselves to work as soon as ever they were consecrated, and might know that they were ordained, not only to the honour and profit, but to the business of the priesthood. Aaron and his sons were near relations to Moses, and therefore he would not consecrate them till he had further orders, lest he should seem too forward to bring honour into his family.

II. The congregation called together at the door, that is, in the court of the tabernacle, v. 4. The elders and all the chief men of Israel, who represented the body of the people, were summoned to attend; for the court would hold but a few of the many thousands of Israel. It was done thus publicly, 1. Because it was a solemn transaction between God and Israel; the priests were to be ordained for men in things pertaining to God, for the maintaining of a settled correspondence, and the negotiating of all affairs between the people and God; and therefore it was fit that both sides should appear to own the appointment, at the door of the tabernacle of meeting. 2. The spectators of the solemnity could not but be possessed, by the sight of it, with a great veneration for the priests and their office, which was necessary among a people so wretchedly prone as these were to envy and discontent. It was strange, that any of those who were witnesses of what was here done, should afterward say, as some of them did, Ye take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi; but what would they have said, if it had been done clandestinely? Note, It is very fit, and good use, that ministers should be ordained publicly, fide present. in the presence of the common people, according to the usage of the primitive church.

III. The commission read, v. 5. Moses, who was God's representative, this solemnity produced his orders before the congregation, This is the thing which the Lord commanded to be done. Though God had crowned him king in Jeshurun, when he made his face to shine in the sight of all Israel; yet he did not institute or appoint anything in God's worship but what God himself had commanded. The priesthood he delivered to them, was that which he had received from the Lord. All his ministers, both holy and civil, must have an eye to God's command, as their rule and warrant; for it is only in the observance of that, that they can expect to be owned and accepted of God. Thus we must be able to say, in all acts of religious worship, This is the thing which the Lord commanded to be done.

IV. The ceremony performed according to the divine rule, v. 6. Aaron, and his sons were washed with water, (v. 6.) to signify that they ought now to purify themselves from all sinful dispositions and inclinations, and ever after to keep themselves pure. Christ washes those from their sins in his own blood, whom he makes to our God kings and priests; (Rev. 1, 5, 6.) and those that draw near to God must be washed in pure water, Heb. 10, 22. Though they were ever so clean before, and as holy as the filth was to be seen upon them, yet they must be washed, to signify their purification from sin, with which their sons were polluted, how clean soever their bodies were. 2. They were clothed with the holy garments; Aaron with him, (v. 7-9.) which typified the dignity of Christ, our great High Priest; and his sons with theirs, (v. 13.) which typified the decency of Christians, who are spiritual priests. Christ wears the breast-plate of judgment, and the holy crown; for the church's High Priest is her Prophet and King. All believers are clothed with the robe of righteousness, and gird with the girdle of truth, resolution, and close application; and their heads are bound, as the word here is, with the bonnet or diadem of beauty, the beauty of holiness. 3. The high priest was anointed, and, it should seem, the holy things were anointed at the same time; some think they were anointed before, but that it is mentioned here, because Aaron was anointed with the same oil that they were anointed with; but the manner of relating it here it makes more probable that it was done at the same time, and that the seven days employed in consecrating the altar were coincident with the seven days of the priests' consecration. The tabernacle, and all its utensils, had some of the anointing oil put upon them with Moses' finger, (v. 10.) so had the altar: (v. 11.) these were to sanctify the gold and the gift, (Mat. 28.17. 19.) and therefore must themselves be thus sanctified, but he poured it out more plentifully upon the head of Aaron, (v. 12.) so that it ran down to the skirts of his garments, because his unction was to typify the anointing of Christ with the spirit, which was not given in measure to him. Yet all believers also have received the anointing, which puts an indelible character upon them, 1 John 2.27.

14. And he brought the bullock for the sin-offering; and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the bullock for the sin-offering. 15. And he slew it; and Moses took the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about with his finger, and purified the altar, and poured the blood at the bottom of the altar, and sanctified it, to make reconciliation upon it. 16. And he took all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and Moses burned it upon the altar. 17. But the bullock and his hide, his flesh and his dung, he burnt with fire without the camp, as the Lord commanded Moses. 18. And he brought the ram for the burnt-offering: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram. 19. And he killed it; and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about. 20. And he cut the ram into pieces, and Moses burnt the head, and the pieces, and the fat. 21. And he washed the inwards and the legs in water; and Moses burnt the whole ram upon the altar: it was a burnt-sacrifice for a sweet savour, and an offering made by fire unto the Lord; as the Lord commanded Moses. 22. And he brought the other ram, the ram of consecration: and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram. 23. And he slew it; and Moses took of the blood of it, and put it upon the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot. 24. And he brought Aaron's sons, and Moses put of the blood upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet; and Moses sprinkled the blood upon the altar round about. 25. And he took the fat, and the rump, and all the fat that was upon the inwards, and the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and the right shoulder: 26. And out of the basket of unleavened bread, that was before the Lord, he took one unleavened cake, and a cake of oiled bread, and one wafer, and put them on the fat, and upon the right shoulder: 27. And he put all upon Aaron's hands, and upon his sons' hands, and waved them for a wave-offering before the Lord. 28. And Moses took them from off their hands, and burnt them on the altar upon the burnt-offering: they were consecrations for a sweet savour: it is an offering made by fire unto the Lord. 29. And Moses took the breast, and waved it for a wave-offering before the Lord: for of the ram of consecration it was Moses' part; as the Lord commanded Moses. 30. And Moses took of the anointing oil, and of the blood which was upon the altar, and sprinkled it upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon his sons' garments with him; and sanctified Aaron, and his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him.

The covenant of priesthood must be made by sacrifice, as well as other covenants, Ps. 50. 5. and thus Christ was consecrated by the sacrifice of himself, once for all. Sacrifices of each kind must be offered for the priests, that they might with the more tenderness and concern offer the gifts and sacrifices of the people, with compassion on the ignorant, and on them that were out of the way, not insolting over those for whom sacrifices were offered, remembering that they themselves had had sacrifices offered for them, being surrounded with infirmity. 1. A bullock, the largest sacrifice, was offered for a sin-offering, (v. 14.) that hereby atonement might be made, and they might not bring any of the guilt of the sins of their former state into the new character they were now to put on. When Isaiah was sent to be a prophet, he was told to his comfort, Thine iniquity is taken away, Isa. 6. 7. Ministers, that are to declare the remission of sins to others, should give diligence to get it made sure to themselves in the first place, that their own sins are pardoned. Those to whom is committed the ministry of reconciliation, must first be reconciled to God themselves, that they may deal for the souls of others as for their own. 2. A ram was offered for a burnt-offering, v. 18.. 21. By this they gave to God the glory of this great honour which was now put upon them, and returned him praise for it, as Paul thanked Christ.
And they confessed; and the Levites, 1 Tim. 1. 12. They also signified the devoting of themselves and all their sacrifices to the honour of God.

3. And Moses, called the ram of consecration, was offered for a peace-offering, v. 22, &c. The blood of it was put on the priests, on their ears, thumbs, and toes, and part sprinkled upon the altar, and part upon the side thereof; and in their hands, the altar which they must all their days give attendance upon. All the ceremonies about this offering, as those before, were appointed by the express command of God; and, if we compare this chapter with Exod. 29, we shall find that the performance of the solemnity exactly agrees with the precept there, and in nothing varies. Here therefore, as in the account we had of the tabernacle and its vessels, it is again and again repeated, As the Lord commanded Moses. And thus Christ, when he sanctified himself with his own blood, had an eye to his Father's will in it, As the Father gave me commandment, so I do, John 14. 31.—10. 18.—6. 38.

34. And Moses said unto Aaron, and to his sons, Boil the flesh at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; and there eat it with the bread that is in the basket of consecrations, as I commanded, saying, Aaron and his sons shall eat it. 32. And that which remaineth of the flesh and of the bread shall ye burn with fire. 33. And ye shall not go out of the door of the tabernacle of the congregation in seven days, until the days of your consecration be at an end: for seven days shall he consecrate you. 34. As he hath done this day, so the Lord hath commanded to do, to make an atonement for you. 35. Therefore shall ye abide at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation day and night, seven days, and keep the charge of the Lord, that ye die not: for so I am commanded. 36. So Aaron and his sons did all things which the Lord commanded by the hand of Moses.

I. They must boil the flesh of their peace-offering, and eat it in the court of the tabernacle, and what remained they must burn with fire, v. 31, 32. This signified their thankful consent to the consecration: when God gave Ezekiel his commission, he bid him eat the roll, Ezek. 3. 1, 2.

II. They must not stir out of the court of the tabernacle for seven days, v. 33. The priesthood being a good warfare, they must thus learn to endure hardness, and to disentangle themselves from the affairs of this life, 2 Tim. 2. 3, 4. Being consecrated to their service, they must give themselves wholly to it, and attend continually to this very thing. Thus Christ's apostles were appointed to wait for the promise of the Father, Acts. 1. 4. During this time appointed for their consecration, they were daily to repeat the same sacrifices which were offered the first day, v. 34. This shows the imperfection of the legal sacrifices, which, because they could not take away sin, were often repeated, (Heb. 10. 1, 2.) but were here repeated seventimes, (a number of perfection,) because they typified that one offering, which perfected for ever them that were sanctified. The work lasted seven days; for it was a kind of creation: and this time was appointed in honour of the sabbath, which, probably, was the last day of the seven; for which they were to prepare during the six days. Thus the time of our life, like the six days, must be our preparation for the perfection of our consecration to God in the ever lasting sabbath; they attended day and night, v. 33. and constant should we be in our meditation on God's law, v. 32. The Lord attended on his day's charge, to keep the charge of the Lord; we have to rely on him to keep a charge to keep, an eternal God to glorify, an immortal soul to provide for, needful duty to be done, our generation to serve; and it must be our daily care to keep this charge, for it is the charge of the Lord our Master, who will shortly call us to an account about it, and it is at our utmost peril if we neglect it. Keep it, that ye die not; it is death, eternal death, to betray the trust we are charged with; by the consideration of this we hold on in love. Lastly, We are told, (v. 36.) that Aaron and his sons did all that was commanded. Thus their consecration was completed; and thus they set an example, before the people, of an exact obedience to the laws of sacrifices now newly given, and then they could with the better grace teach the people.

Thus the covenant of peace, (Num. 25. 12.) of life and peace, (Mal. 4. 5.) was made with Aaron and his sons; but, after all the ceremonies that were used in their consecration, there was one point of ratification which was reserved to be the honour and establishment of Christ's priesthood, which was this, that they were made priests without an oath, but Christ with an oath, (Heb. 7. 21.) for neither such priests nor their priesthood could continue, yet Christ's is a perpetual and unchangeable priesthood.

Gospel-ministers are compared to them who served at the altar, for they minister about holy things, (1. Cor. 9. 13.) they are God's mouth to the people, and the people's to God, the pastors and teachers Christ has appointed to continue in the church to the end of the world: they seem to be meant in that promise which points at gospel-times, (Acts. 20. 28.) I will take of them for priests and for Levites. Not that they may take, but he who upon trial is found to be clothed and anointed by the Spirit of God with gifts and graces to qualify him for it; and who with purpose of heart devotes himself entirely to the service; and is then by the word and prayer, (for so every thing is sanctified,) and the imposition of the hands of those that give themselves to the word and prayer, set apart to the office, and recommended to Christ as a servant, and to the church as a steward and governor. And they that are thus solemnly dedicated to God, ought not to depart from his service, but faithfully to abide in it all their days; and they that do so, and continue labouring in the word and doctrine, are to be accounted worthy of double honour, double to that of the Old-Testament priests.

CHAP. IX.

Aaron and his sons, having been solemnly consecrated to the priesthood, are in this chapter entering upon the execution of their office, the very next day after their consecration was completed. 1. Moses (no doubt by direction from God) appoints a meeting between God and his priests, as the representatives of his people, ordering them to attend him, and assuring them that he would appear to them, v. 1-7. II. The meeting is held according to the appointment: 1. Aaron attends on God's sacrifice, offering a sin-offering and a burnt-offering for himself, (v. 8-14.) and then the offerings for the people, whom he blessed in the name of the Lord, v. 15-22. 2. God glorifies his acceptance, (1.) Of their person by showing them his glory, v. 23. (2.) Of their sacrifices, by consuming them with fire from heaven, v. 24.
1. A ND it came to pass, on the eighth day, that Moses called Aaron and his sons, and the elders of Israel; 2. And he said unto Aaron, Take thee a young calf for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, without blemish, and offer them before the LORD. 3. And unto the children of Israel thou shalt speak, saying, Take ye a kid of the goats for a sin-offering; and a calf, and a lamb, both of the first year, without blemish, for a burnt-offering; 4. Also a bullock and a ram for peace-offerings, to sacrifice before the LORD; and a meat-offering mingled with oil: for to-day the LORD will appear unto you. 5. And they brought that which Moses commanded before the tabernacle of the congregation: and all the congregation drew near, and stood before the LORD. 6. And Moses said, This is the thing which the LORD commanded that ye should do; and the glory of the LORD shall appear unto you. 7. And Moses said unto Aaron, Go unto the altar, and offer thy sin-offering, and thy burnt-offering, and make an atonement for thyself and for the people: and offer the offering of the people, and make an atonement for them; as the LORD commanded.

Orders are here given for another solemnity upon the eighth day; for the newly-ordained priests were set to work immediately after the days of their consecration were finished, to let them know that they were not ordained to be idle: He that desires the office of a bishop, desires a good work, which must be looked at with desire, more than the honour and benefit. The priests had not so much as one day's respite from service allowed them, that they might divert themselves, and receive the compliances of their friends, for to-day their elevation, but were busy engaged the very next day after; for their consecration was the filling of their hands. God's spiritual priests have constant work cut out for them, which the duty of every day requires; and they that would give up their account with joy must redeem time; see Ezek. 43. 26, 27.

Now, 1. Moses raises their expectation of a glorious appearance of God to them this day; (v. 4.) To-day the Lord will appear to you, that are the priests. And when all the congregation are gathered together, and stand before the Lord, he tells them, (v. 6.) The glory of the Lord shall appear to you. Though they had reason enough to believe God's acceptance of all that which they had done according to his appointment, upon the general assurance we have, that he is the Rewarder of them that seek him, (notwithstanding he had not given them any sensible token of it,) yet, that if possible they and theirs might be effectually obliged to the service and worship of God, and might never turn aside to idols, the glory of God appeared to them, and visibly owned what they had done. We are not now to expect such appearances; we Christians walk more by faith, and not by sight, than they did. But we may be sure that God does draw nigh to those who draw nigh to him, and that the offerings of faith are really acceptable to him; though, the sacrifices being spiritual, the tokens of the acceptance are, as it is fit they should be, spiritual likewise. To them who are duly consecrated to God he will undoubtedly manifest himself.

2. He put both priests and people upon preparing to receive this favour which God designed them. Aaron and his sons, and the elders of Israel, are all summoned to attend, v. 1. Note, God will manifest himself in the solemn assemblies of his people and ministers; and these that would have the benefit and comfort of God's appearances, must in them go to their attendance.

(1.) Aaron is here ordered to prepare his offerings; (v. 2) A young calf for a sin-offering. The Jewish writers suggest, that a calf was appointed for a sin-offering, to remind him of his sin in making the golden calf, by which he had rendered himself for ever unworthy of the honour of the priesthood, and which he had reason to reflect upon with sorrow and shame, in all the atonements he made.

(2.) Aaron must direct the people to get their ready. Hitherto Moses had told the people what they must do; but now Aaron, as high priest over the house of God, must be the teacher in things pertaining to God; (v. 3) Unto the children of Israel thou shalt speak. Now that he was to speak from them to God in the sacrifices, (the language of which he that appointed them very well understood,) he must speak from God to them concerning the sacrifices.

Thus Moses would engage the people's respect and obedience to him, as one that was set over them in the Lord, to admonish them.

(3.) Aaron must offer his own first, and then the people's. v. 7. Aaron must now go to the altar, Moses having showed him the way to it; and there, [1.] He must make an atonement for himself; for the high priest, being compassed with infirmity, must, as for the people, so also for himself, offer for sins, (Heb. 5. 2, 3,) and for himself first; for how can we expect to be accepted in our prayers for others, if we ourselves be not reconciled to God? Nor is any service pleasing to God, till the guilt of sin be removed by our interest in the great Propitiation. Those that have the care of the souls of others, are also hereby taught to look to their own first place; this charity must begin at home, though it must not end there. It is the charge to Timothy, to take care to save himself first, and then those that heard him, 1 Tim. 4. 16. The high priest made atonement for himself, as one that was joined with sinners; but we have a High Priest that was separated from sinners, and needed it not; when Messiah the Prince was cut off as a sacrifice, it was not for himself; for he knew no sin. [2.] He must make an atonement for the people, by offering their sacrifices. Now that he was made a high priest, he must lay to heart the concerns of the people, and this as their great concern, their reconciliation to God, and the putting away of sin which had separated between them and God, He must make atonement as the Lord commanded. So here the wonders of God's mercy, that he not only allows an atonement to be made, but commands it; not only admits, but requires us to be reconciled to him. No room therefore is left to doubt, but that the atonement which is commanded will be accepted.

8. Aaron therefore went unto the altar, and slew the calf of the sin-offering, which was for himself. 9. And the sons of Aaron brought the blood unto him; and he dipped his finger in the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar, and poured out the blood at the bottom of the altar. 10. But the fat, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver of the sin-offering, he burnt upon the altar; as the Lord commanded Moses.

11. And the flesh and the hide he burnt with fire without the camp.
12. And he slew the burnt-offering; and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood, which he sprinkled round about upon the altar.
13. And they presented the burnt-offering unto him, with the pieces thereof, and the head; and he burnt them upon the altar.
14. And he did wash the inwards and the legs, and burnt them upon the burnt-offering on the altar.
15. And he brought the people's offering, and took the goat, which was the sin-offering for the people, and slew it, and offered it for sin, as the first.
16. And he brought the burnt-offering, and offered it according to the manner.
17. And he brought the meat-offering, and took a handful thereof, and burnt it upon the altar, beside the burnt-sacrifice of the morning.
18. He slew also the bullock and the ram, for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, which was for the people: and Aaron's sons presented unto him the blood, which he sprinkled upon the altar round about.
19. And the fat of the bullock and of the ram, the rump, and that which covereth the inwards, and the kidneys, and the caul above the liver:
20. And they put the fat upon the breasts, and he burnt the fat upon the altar:
21. And the breasts and the right shoulder Aaron waved for a wave-offering before the Lord; as Moses commanded.
22. And Aaron lift up his hand toward the people, and blessed them; and came down from offering of the sin-offering, and the burnt-offering, and peace-offerings.

These being the first offerings that ever were offered by the levitical priesthood, according to the newly-enacted law of sacrifices, the manner of offering them is particularly related, that it might appear how exactly they agreed with the institution.

1. Aaron with his own hands slew the offering, (v. 8.) and did the work of the inferior priests; for, great as he was, he must not think any service below him which he could do for the honour of God: and as Moses had showed him how to do this work decently and dexterously, so he showed his sons, that they might do likewise: for that is the best way of teaching; and thus parents should instruct their children by example. Therefore as Moses before, so Aaron now, offered some of each of the several sorts of sacrifices that were appointed, whose rites differed, that they might be thoroughly furnished for every good work.
2. He offered these beside the burnt-sacrifice of the morning, which was every day offered first, v. 17. Note, Our accustomed devotions morning and evening, alone, and in our families, must not be omitted upon any pretence whatsoever, no, not when extraordinary services are to be performed; whatever is added, those must not be diminished.
3. It is not clear, whether, when it is said that he burnt such and such parts of the sacrifices upon the altar, (v. 10. 20.) the meaning is that he burnt them immediately with ordinary fire, as formerly, or that he laid them upon the altar ready to be burnt with the fire from heaven, which they expected; (v. 24.) or whether, as Bishop Patrick thinks, he burnt the offerings for himself with ordinary fire, but, when they were burnt out, he laid the people's sacrifices upon the altar, which were kindled and consumed by the fire from heaven.

This, because it is said of all these sacrifices, that he burnt them, (except the burnt-offering for the people, of which it is said that he offered it according to the manner, (v. 16.) which seems to be equivalent,) that he did not kindle the fire to burn them, but that then the fire from the Lord fastened upon them, put out the fire that he had kindled, (as we say) and suddenly consumed the remainder, which the fire he had kindled would have consumed slowly.

4. When Aaron had done all that in his part was to be done about the sacrifices, he lifted up his hands toward the people, and blessed them, v. 22. This was one part of the priest's work, in which he was a type of Christ, who came into the world to bless us; and when he was parted from his disciples at his ascension, lifted up his hands and blessed them, and in them his whole church, of which they were the elders and representatives, as the great High Priest of our profession. Aaron lifted up his hands, in blessing them, to intimate whence he desired and expected the blessing to come, even from heaven, which is God's throne; Aaron could but crave a blessing, it is God's prerogative to command it.

5. When Moses and Aaron entered into the tabernacle of the congregation, and came out, and blessed the people: and the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the people.

23. And there came a fire out from before the Lord, and consumed upon the altar the burnt-offering and the fat: which when all the people saw, they shouted, and fell on their faces.

We are not told what Moses and Aaron went into the tabernacle to do, v. 23. Some of the Jewish writers say, "They went in to pray for the appearance of the divine glory;" most probably, they went in, that Moses might instruct Aaron how to do the service that was to be done there—burn incense, light the lamps, set the show-bread, &c. that he might instruct his sons in it. But when they came out, they both joined in blessing the people, who stood expecting the promised appearance of the divine glory: and it was now (when Moses and Aaron condescended in praying) that they had what they waited for. Note, God's manifestations of himself and his glory and grace are commonly given in answer to prayer.

When Christ was praying, the heavens were opened, Luke 3. 21. The glory of God appeared, not while the sacrifices were in offering, but when the priests prayed, (as 2 Chron. 5. 13.) when they praised God; which intimates that the prayers and praises of God's spiritual priests are more pleasing to God than all burnt-offerings and sacrifices.

When the solemnity was finished, the blessing pronounced, and the congregation ready to be dismissed, in the close of the day, then God testified his acceptance, which gave them such satisfaction as was well worth waiting for.

1. The glory of the Lord appeared unto all the people, v. 23. What the appearance of it was we are not told; no doubt, it was such as carried its own evidence along with it. The glory which filled the tabernacle, (Exod. 40. 34.) now showed itself at the door of the tabernacle to those that attended there, as a prince shows himself to the expecting crowd to gratify them. God hereby testified of their gifts, and showed them that he was worthy for whom they should do all this. Note, Those that diligently attend upon God in the way he has appointed, shall have such a sight of his glory as he should be ready to show by their acceptance. They that dwell in God’s house, with an eye of faith, may behold the beauty of the Lord.

2. There came a fire out from before the Lord, and consumed the sacrifice, v. 24. Here the learned Bishop Patrick has a very probable conjecture, that Moses and Aaron stood in the tabernacle, till it was time to offer the evening sacrifice, which Aaron did, both with a just regard to its due time, and to the honour of God; and that was what the fire came out from the Lord consumed. Whether this fire came from heaven, or out of the most holy place, or from that visible appearance of the glory of God which all the people saw, it was a manifest token of God’s acceptance of their service, as, afterward, of Solomon’s sacrifice, 2 Chron. 7. 1. and Elijah’s, 1 Kings. 18. 38. This fire did, (1.) Consume (or, as they were called) the present sacrifice. And two days this was a testimony of acceptance. [1.] It signified the turning away of God’s wrath from them. God’s wrath is a consuming fire; this fire might justly have fastened upon the people, and consumed them for their sins; but its fastening upon the sacrifice, and consuming that, signified God’s acceptance of that, as an atonement for the sinner. [2.] It signified God’s taking into himself and consuming with him all their part of the sacrifice, and the fire of the Lord ate up his part; and thus he did, as it were, suffer with them, and they with him, Rev. 3. 20. (2.) This fire did, as it were, take possession of the altar. The fire was thus kindled in God’s house, which was to continue as long as the house stood, as we read before, ch. 6. 13. This also was a figure of good things to come: The Spirit of God was to be upon them, (Exod. 29. 30.) so ratifying their commission, as this spoken of here did the priests. And the descent of this holy fire into our souls, to kindle in them piety and devout affections toward God, and such a holy zeal as burns up the flesh and the lusts of it, is a certain token of God’s gracious acceptance of our persons and performances. That redounds to God’s glory, which is the work of his own grace in us. Here we may see that we dwell in God, and God in us, because he hath thus given us of his Spirit, 1 John 4. 13. Now from henceforward, [1.] All their sacrifices and incense must be offered with this fire. Note, Nothing goes to God but what comes from him. We must have grace, that holy fire, from the God of grace, else we cannot serve him acceptably, Heb. 12. 28. (2.) The priests must keep it burning with a constant supply of the fire, and must heap wood, the cleanest of fuel. Thus those to whom God has given grace, must take heed of quenching the Spirit.

Lastly, We are here told how the people were affected, with this discovery of God’s glory and grace; they received it, (1.) With the highest joy, they shouted; so stirring up themselves, and one another in a holy triumph, with joy and gladness, nor must be, wood, the cleanest of fuel. Thus those to whom God has given grace, must take heed of quenching the Spirit.

And Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either of them his censer, and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not. And there went out fire from the Lord, and devoured them; and they died before the Lord.

Here is, 1. The great sin that Nadab and Abihu were guilty of: and a great sin we must call it, how little soever it appears in our eye; because it is evident, by the punishment of it, that it was highly provoking to the God of heaven, whose judgment, we are sure, is according to truth. But what was their sin? All the account here given of it, is, that they offered strange fire before the Lord, which he commanded them not, (v. 1.) and the same, Numb. 3. 1. It does not appear that they had any orders to burn incense at all at this time. It is true, their consecration was completed the day before, and it was part of their work, as priests, to serve at the altar of incense; but, it should seem, the whole service of this solemn day of inauguration was to be performed by Aaron himself, for he slew the sacrifices, (ch. 9. 15.) and his sons were only to attend him, (v. 9, 12, 18.) therefore Moses and Aaron only went into the tabernacle, v. 23. But Nadab and Abihu were so proud of the honour they were newly advanced to, and so ambitious of doing the highest and most honourable part of their work immediately, that though the service of this day was extraordinary, and all the priests were about to be incense, yet without receiving orders, or so much as asking leave from him, they took their censers, and they would enter into the tabernacle, at the door of which they thought they had attend¬ed long enough, and would burn incense. And then their offering strange fire is the same with offering strange incense, which is expressly forbidden, Exod. 30. 9. Moses, we may suppose, did not allow the incense which was prepared for the purpose, (Exod. 39. 38.) and they, doing this without his leave, had none of the incense which should have been offered, but common incense, so that the smoke of their incense came from a strange fire. God had indeed required the priests to burn incense, but, at this time, it was what he commanded them not; and so their crime was like that of Uzziah the king, 2 Chron. 26. 16. The priests were to burn incense, only when it was their lot, (Luke 1. 9.) and, at this time it was not theirs. 2. Presuming thus to burn incense of their own without order, no marvel that they made a further blunder, and instead of taking of the fire from the altar, which was newly kindled from before the Lord, and which from henceforward must be used in offering both sacrifice and incense, (Rev. 8. 5.) they took common fire, probably, from that with which the flesh of the peace-offerings was boiled, and this they made use of in burning incense; not being holy fire, it is called strange fire; and though not expressly forbidden, it was crime enough that God commanded it not. For, (as Bishop Hall well observes here,) "It is a dangerous thing in the service of God, to decline from his own institutions; we have to do with a God who is wise to prescribe his own worship, just to require what he has prescribed, and powerful to revenge what he has not prescribed." 3 Incense was always to be burned by only one priest at a time, but here they would both go in together to do it. 4. They did it rashly, and with precipitation; some read it, in a light careless way, without due reverence and seriousness: when all the people fell upon their faces, before the glory of the Lord, they thought the dignity of their office was such as to exempt them from such abasements. The familiarity they were admitted to, bred a contempt of the divine Majesty; and now that they were priests, they thought they might do what they pleased, and make themselves wonderful, when drunken when they did it, because of the law which was given upon this occasion, v. 8. They had been feasting upon the peace-offerings, and the drink-offerings that attended them, and so their heads were light, or, at least, their hearts were merry with wine, they drank and forgot the law, (Prov. 31. 5.) and were guilty of this fatal miscarriage. 6. No doubt, it was done presumptuously; for it had been done through ignorance, and had not been allowed the benefit of the law lately made, even for the priests, that they should bring a sacrifice, ch. 4. 2, 3. But the soul that doth thus presumptuously, and in contempt of God's majesty, authority, and justice, that soul shall be cut off, Numb. 15. 30. 11. The dreadful punishment of this sin, v. 2. They burnt out fire from the Lord, and deserved them. This fire, which consumed the sacrificers, came the same way with that which had consumed the sacrifices, (ch. 9. 24.) which showed what justice would have done to all the guilty people, if infinite mercy had not found and accepted a ransom; and if that fire struck such an awe upon the people, much more would this, Observe, 1. They died. Might it not have sufficed, if they had been only sufficiently terrified with the punishment which was at that time inflicted upon the Lord's prophets, as Zechariah, and both by the altar of incense? No; they were both struck dead. The wages of this sin was death. 2. They died suddenly, in the very act of their sin, and had not time so much as to cry, "Lord, have mercy upon us!" Though God is long-suffering to us,ward, yet sometimes he makes quick work with sinners; sentence is executed speedily; presumptuous sinners bring upon themselves such penalties, as if they lived in a necessary, even space to repent. 3. They died before the Lord; that is, before the vail that covered the mercy-seat; for even mercy itself will not suffer its own glory to be affronted. They that sinned before the Lord, died before him. Damned sinners are said to be tormented in the presence of the Lamb, intimating that he does not interpose in their behalf, (Rev. 15. 3.) but, as Zechariah, in this case, they sinned. They slighted the fire that came from before the Lord to consume the sacrifices, and thought other fire would do every jot as well; and now God justly made them feel the power of that fire which they did not reverence. Thus they that hate to be refined by the fire of divine grace, will undoubtedly be ruined by the fire of divine wrath. The fire did not burn them to ashes, as it had done the sacrificers, nor so much as singe their coats, (v. 5.) but, like lightning, struck them dead in an instant: by these different effects of the same fire, God would show that it was no common fire, but kindled by the breath of the Almighty, Isa. 30. 33. 5. It is twice taken notice of in scripture, that they died childless, Numb. 3. 4, and 1 Chron. 24. 2. By their presumption they had reproached God's name, and God justly blotted out their names, and kept that honour in the dust which they were proud of. But why did the Lord deal thus severely with them? Were they not the sons of Aaron, the saint of the Lord, nephews to Moses, the great favourite of Heaven? Was not the holy anointing oil sprinkled upon them, as men whom God had set apart for himself? Had they not diligently attended during the seven years of Moses' seclusion, and kept the charge of the Lord, and might not that alone for this sinfulness? Would it not excuse them, that they were young men, as yet unexperienced in these services; that it was the first offence, and done in a transport of joy for their elevation? And besides, never could men be worse spared; a great deal of work was now lately cut out for the priests to do, and the priesthood was considered as a glory of God and his church. If two of them die, there will not be hands enough to do the service of the tabernacle: if they die childless, the house of Aaron will become weak and little, and the priesthood will be in danger of being lost for want of heirs. But none of all these considerations shall serve either to excuse the offence, or bring off the offenders. (1.) The sin was greatly aggravated. It was a manifest contempt of Moses, and the divine law that was given by Moses. Hitherto it had been expressly observed concerning every thing that was done, that they did it as the Lord commanded Moses; in opposition to which it is here said, they did that which the Lord commanded them not, but they did it of their own heads. God was now teaching his people obedience, and to do every thing by rule, and become servants; for priests therefore to break rules, and disobey, was such a provocation as must by no means go unpunished. Their character made their sin more exceeding sinful; for the sons of Aaron, his eldest sons, whom God had chosen to be immediate attendants upon him, for them to be guilty of such a piece of presumption, it cannot be suffered. There was in their sin a contempt of God's glory, which had now nearly approached to the, as if that were needless, they had as good of their own before. (2.) Their punishment was a piece of necessary justice, now at the first settling of the ceremonial institutions. It is often threatened in the law, that such and such offenders should be cut off from the people; and here God explained the threatening with a witness. Now that the laws concerning sacrifices were newly made, let they should be tempted to think lightly of them, because they descended to many circumstances which seemed very minute, these that were the first transgressors were thus punished, for warning to others, and to show how jealous God is in the matters of his worship: Thus he magnified the law, and made it honourable: and let his priests know that the caution which so often occurs in the sacred writings concerning one transgression not showed the imperfection of that priesthood from the very beginning, and its inability to shelter any from the fire of God's wrath, otherwise than as it was typical of Christ's priesthood, in the execution of which there never was, nor can be, any irregularity or false step taken.

3. Then Moses said unto Aaron, This is it that the Lord spake, saying, I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, and before all the people I will be glorified. And Aaron held his peace. 4. And Moses called Miashael and Elzaphan, the sons of Uzziel the uncle of Aaron, and said unto them, Come near, carry your brethren from before the sanctuary out of the camp. 5. So they went near, and carried them in their coats out of the camp; as Moses had said. 6. And Moses said unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar, and unto Ithamar, his sons, Uncover not your heads, neither rend your clothes; lest you die, and lest wrath come upon all the people: but let your brethren, the whole house of Israel, bewail the burning which the Lord hath kindled. 7. And ye shall not go out from the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, lest you die: for the anointing oil of the Lord is upon you. And they did according to the word of Moses.

We may well think, when Nadab and Abihu were struck with death, all about them were struck with horror, and every face, as well as their's, gathered blackness: consternation, no doubt, seized them, and they were all full of confusion; but, whatever the rest were, Moses was composed, and knew what he said and did, not being displeased, as David was in like case, 2 Sam. 6. 8. But though it touched him in a very tender part, and was a dreadful damp to one of the greatest joys he ever knew, yet he kept possession of his own soul, and took care to keep good order, and a due decorum in the sanctuary.

1. He endeavours to pacify Aaron, and to keep him in a good frame under this sad dispensation; 7.
2. Moses was a brother that was born for adversity, and has taught us, by his example, with seasonable counsels and comforts, to support the weak, and strengthen the feeble-minded.

Observe here, 1. What it was that Moses suggested to his poor brother upon this occasion, This is it that the Lord spake. Note, (1.) The most quieting considerations under affliction are those that take in the word of God. So and says the Lord hath said, and it is not for us to gainsay it. (2.) In all God's providences it is good to observe the fulfilling of scripture, and to compare God's word and his works together; which if we do, we shall find an admirable harmony and agreement between them, and that they mutually explain and illustrate each other. But, [1.] Where did God speak this? We do not find the very words; but to this purport he had said, (Exod. 19. 22.) Let the priests which come near to the Lord sanctify themselves, lest the Lord break forth upon them. Indeed the whole scope and tenor of his law spake this, that being a holy God, and a sovereign Lord, he must always be worshipped with holiness and reverence, and exactly according to his own appointment; and if any jest with him, it is at their peril. Much had been said to this purport, as Exod. 29. 43, 44.—34. 14. ch. 8. 35. [2.] What is it that God spake? It is this, (the Lord by his grace spake it to all our hearts!) I will be sanctified in them that come nigh me, whoever they are, and before all the people I will be glorified. Note, First, Whenever we worship God, we come nigh to him in spiritual priests. This consideration ought to make us very reverent and serious in all acts of devotion, that in them we approach to God, and present ourselves before him. Secondly, It concerns us all, when we come nigh to God, to sanctify him, that is, to give him the praise of his holiness, to perform every religious exercise, as those that believe that the God with whom we have to do is a holy God, a God of spotless purity and transcendent perfection. Then, When we sanctify God, we glorify him, for his holiness is his glory; and when we sanctify him in our solemn assemblies, we glorify him before all the people, confessing our own belief of his glory, and desiring that others also may be affected with it. Fourthly, If God be not sanctified and glorified by us, he will be sanctified and glorified upon us. He will take vengeance on those that profane his sacred house. We do not find the very words; but if not paid, it shall be straitly exacted. [3.] But what was this to the present case? What was there in this to quiet Aaron? Two things. First, This must silence him, that his sons deserved their death; for they were thus cut off from their people, because they did not sanctify and glorify God. The acts of necessary justice, how hard soever they may seem to bear upon the persons concerned, are not to be complained of, but submitted to. Secondly, It must satisfy him, that the death of his sons reciprocated to the honour of God, and his impartial justice would for it be adored through all ages.

2. What good effects they had upon him; Aaron held his peace, that is, he patiently submitted to the holy will of God in this sad providence, was dumb, and opened not his mouth, because God did it. Something he was ready to say by way of complaint, (as losers think they may have leave to speak,) but he wisely suppressed it, laid his hand upon his mouth, and said nothing, for fear lest he should offend with his tongue, now that his heart was hot within him. Note, (1.) When God corrects us or our's for our sin, it is our duty to be silent under the correction, not to quarrel with God, arraign his justice, or charge him with folly, but to acquiesce in all that God does to his children, whether just or unjust, but accepting, the punishment of iniquity, and saying, as Eli, in a case not much unlike this here, It is the Lord, let him do what seemeth him good, 1 Sam. 3. 18. If our children have sinned against God, (as Bildad puts the case, Job 8. 4.) and he have cast them away for their transgression, though it must needs be grievous to think that the children of our love should be the children of God's wrath, yet we must not take God to task, but accept of God's disposition of his children, and make no exceptions against its processes.

The most effectual arguments to quiet a gracious spirit under afflictions, are those that are fetched from God's glory; this silenced Aaron. It is true, he is a loser in his comforts by this severe execution, but Moses has shown him that God is a Gainer in his glory; and therefore he has not a word to say against it, and so this was the effect of the execution, that God's glory satisfied. Far be it from him that he should honour his sons more than God, or wish that God's name, or house, or law, should be exposed to reproach, or contempt, for the preserving of the reputation of his family. No; now, as well as in the matter of the golden calf, Levi does not acknowledge his brethren, nor know his own children; and therefore they shall teach Jacob thy judgments, and Israel
II. Moses gives orders about the dead bodies. It was not fit that they should be left to lie where they fell; yet their own father and brethren, the amazed spectators of this dismal tragedy, durst not offer to lift them up, nor to see whether there were any life left in them; they must neither be diverted from, nor united for, the great work that was now upon their hands. Let the dead bury their dead, (Matt. 12:32.)

"Rather let the dead be unburied, if there be nobody close to do it, than that work for God should be left undone by those whom he has called to it." But Moses takes care of this matter, that though they died by the hand of justice, in the act of sin, yet they should be decently buried, and they were so, v. 4, 5. 1. Some of their nearest relations were carried upon their shoulders, who were cousins or kinsmen to their father, and are here named, who would perform this office with tenderness and respect. They were Levites only, and might not have come into the sanctuary, no not upon such an occasion as this, if they had not had a special command for it. 2. They carried them out of the camp to be buried, so far were they from burying them in the place of worship, or the court of it, according to our modern usages; their bodies were not only not carried out of the camp, but there did not bury them, nor any of their dead, within the lines of their camp; as afterward their burying places were out of their cities. The tabernacle was pitched in the midst of the camp, so that they could not carry these dead priests to their graves, without carrying them through one of the squadrons of the camp; and doubtless it was a very awful and affecting sight to the people. The names of Nadab and Abihu were become very great and honourable among them; none more talked of, none more expected to appear abroad after the days of their consecration, to receive the honours and casualties of the crowd, whose manner it is to adore the rising sun; and, next to Moses and Aaron, who were old and going off, Nadab and Abihu (who had been in the mount with God, Exod. 24. 1.) were looked upon as the great favourites of Heaven, and the hopes of the people; and when, in their prime, when the tides of the event had scarcely reached their ears, to see them both carried out dead, with the visible marks of divine vengeance upon them, as sacrifices to the justice of God, they could not choose but cry out, Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God? 1 Sam. 6. 20. 3. They carried them out (and, probably, buried them) in their coats, the garments of their office, which they had lately put on, and perhaps were too proud of. Thus the impartiality of God's justice was pr claimed, and all the people were made to know that even priests' garments would not protect an offender from the wrath of God. And it was easy to argue, "If they escape not when they transgress, can we expect to go unpunished? And the priests' clothes being so sacredly and so solemnly worn, must intimate both that the law was broken and the priests themselves fell in process of time that priesthood itself should be abolished, and buried in the grave of the Lord Jesus.

III. He gives directions about the mourning: 1. That the priests must not mourn; Aaron and his two surviving sons, though sad in spirit, must not use any outward expressions of sorrow upon this sad occasion, nor so much as follow the corpse one step from the door of the tabernacle, v. 7. It was afterward forbidden to the high priest to use the ceremonies of mourning for the death of any friend whatsoever, though it were a father or mother; (ch. 21. 11.) yet it was allowed at the same time to the interior priests to mourn for their near relations, v. 2, 3. But here it was forbidden both to Aaron and his sons, because, (1.) They were now as truly in a state of divine grace, which must by no means cease; (Neh. 6. 3.) and it was very much for the honour of God that their attendance on him should take place of their respects to their nearest relations, and that all services should give way to those of their ministry. By this they must make it to appear that they had a greater value and affection for their God and their work, than for the best friend they had in the world; as true priests did, (v. 7.) who were taught, when we are serving God in holy duties, to keep our minds, as much as may be, intent and engaged, and not to suffer them to be diverted by any worldly thoughts, or cares, or passions. Let us always attend upon the Lord without distraction. (2.) Their brethren were cut off for their transgression by the immediate hand of God, and therefore they must not mourn for them, lest they should seem to countenance the sin, the murderer, and the cause of the punishment. Instead of lamenting their own loss, they must be wholly taken up in applauding the sentence, and subscribing to the equity of it. Note. The public concerns of God's glory ought to lie nearer our hearts than any private affections of our own. Observe how Moses frightens them into this submission, and holds the rod over them to still their crying, (v. 6.) Let ye die likewise, and lest wrath come upon all the people, who may be in danger of suffering for your irreverence, and disobedience, and ungoverned passions; and again, (v. 7.) lest ye die. See here what use we are to make of the judgments of God upon others, we must double our guard over ourselves, lest we likewise perish. The death, especially the sudden death, of others, instead of moving our compassion, should compulse us into a holy reverence of God, a cautious separation from all sin, and a serious expectation of our own death. The reason given them is, because the anointing oil of your God is upon you, the honour of which must be carefully preserved by your doing the duty of your office with cheerfulness. Note, Those that through grace have received the anointing, ought not to disobey themselves with the sorrow of the world, which worketh death. It was a solemn and momentous charge, for Aaron and his sons, to restrain themselves, upon such an extraordinary occasion, from inordinate grief, but reason and grace mastered the passion, and they bore the affliction with an obedient patience, they did according to the word of Moses, because they knew it to be the word of God. Happy they who thus are themselves under God's government, and do not have their passions under their own government.

2. The people must mourn. Let the whole house of Israel bewail the burning which the Lord has kindled. The congregation must lament, not only the loss of their priests, but especially the displeasure of God which appeared in it. They must bewail the burning that was kindled, that it might not burn further. Aaron and his sons were in danger of being consumed by the fire, and by that time, and therefore they are forbidden to mourn; the house of Israel were in danger of being too little affected with it, and therefore they are commanded to lament. Thus nature must always be governed by grace, according as it needs to be either constrained or restrained.

3. And the Lord spake unto Aaron, saying, 9. Do not drink wine, nor strong drink, thou, nor thy sons with thee, when ye go into the tabernacle of the congregation, lest ye die: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations; 10. And that ye may put difference between holy and unholy, and between unclean and clean; 11. And that ye may teach the children of Israel all the statutes which the Lord hath spoken unto them by the hand of Moses.

Aaron having been very observant of what God said to him by Moses, now God does him the honour to speak to him immediately; (v. 8.) The Lord spake unto Aaron, and the rather because what was new to be said, Aaron might perhaps have taken amiss, from Moses, as if he had suspected him to have been a gluttonous man and a wine-bibber; so apt are we to resent cautions as accusations; therefore God saith it himself to him. Do not drink wine nor strong drink, when ye go into the tabernacle, and this at their peril, lest ye die, v. 9. Probably they had seen the ill effect of it in Nadab and Abihu, and therefore must take warning by them.

Observe here, 1. The prohibition itself, Do not drink wine nor strong drink. At other times they were allowed it, (it was not expected that every priest should be a Nazarite,) but during the time of their ministration they were forbidden it. This was one of the laws in Ezekiel’s temple, (Ezek. 44. 21,) and so it is required of gospel-ministers, that they be not given to wine, 1 Tim. 3. 3. Note, Drunkenness is bad in any, but it is especially scandalous and pernicious in ministers, who of all men ought to have the clearest heads and the cleanest hearts.

2. The penalty annexed to the prohibition, Lest ye die, lest ye die when ye are in drink, and so that day come upon you unawares, Luke 21. 34. Or, "Lest ye do that which will make you liable to be cut off by the hand of God." The danger of death we are continually in, should engage us to be sober, 1 Pet. 4. 7. It is pithy that it should ever be used for the support of licentiousness, as it is by those who argue, Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die.

3. The reasons assigned for this prohibition. They must needs be sober, else they could not duly discharge their office; they will be in danger of erring through wine, Isa. 28. 7. They must be sure to keep sober, (1.) That they might be able to distinguish themselves, in their ministrations, between that which was sacred and that which was common, and might never confound them, v. 10. It concerns the Lord’s ministers to put a difference between holy and unholy, between things clean and unclean, and persons, that they may separate between the precious and the vile, Jer. 15. 12. (2.) That they might be able to teach the people, (v. 11.) for that was a part of the priests’ work, (Deut. 33. 10,) and those that are addicted to drunkenness are very unfit to teach people God’s statutes both because they that live after the flesh can have no experimental acquaintance with the things of the Spirit, and because such teachers pull down with one hand what they build up with the other.

12. And Moses spake unto Aaron, and unto Eleazar, and unto Ithamar, his sons that were left, Take the meat-offering that remaineth of the offerings of the Lord made by fire, and eat it without leaven beside the altar; for it is most holy. 13. And ye shall eat it in the holy place, because it is thy due, and thy sons’ due, of the sacrifices of the Lord made by fire: for so I am commanded. 14. And the wave-breast and heave-shoulder shall ye eat in a clean place; thou, and thy sons, and thy daughters with thee: for they be thy due, and thy sons’ due, which are given out of the sacrifice of peace-offerings of the children of Israel. 15. The heave-shoulder and the wave-breast shall they bring, with the offerings made by fire of the fat, to wave it for a wave-offering before the Lord; and it shall be thine, and thy sons’ with thee, by a statute for ever, as the Lord hath commanded. 16. And Moses diligently sought the goat of the sin-offering, and, behold, it was burnt: and he was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, the sons of Aaron which were left alive, saying, 17. Wherefore have ye not eaten the sin-offering in the holy place, seeing it is most holy, and God hath given it you to bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before the Lord? 18. Behold, the blood of it was not brought in within the holy place: ye should indeed have eaten it in the holy place, as I commanded. 19. And Aaron said unto Moses, Behold, this day have they offered their sin-offering and their burnt-offering before the Lord; and such things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the sin-offering to-day, should it have been accepted in the sight of the Lord? 20. And when Moses heard that, he was content.
in any decent place out of the courts of the tabernacle, and by the daughters of their families. The meat-offerings, being annexed to the burnt-offerings, were intended only and wholly for the glory of God; but the peace-offerings were ordained for the furtherance of men’s joy and comfort; the former therefore were the more sacred, and to be had more in the sight of God. Moses was careful not to give any blunders. Moses does not pretend to give any reason for this difference, but refers himself to his instructions; for so am I commanded, v. 13. That was reason enough: he had received of the Lord all that he delivered unto them, 1 Cor. 11. 23.

II. He inquires concerning one deviation from the appointment, which, it seems, had happened upon this occasion, which was this; there was a goat to be sacrificed as a sin-offering for the people, ch. 9. 15. Now the law of the sin-offering was, that if the blood of them was brought into the holy place, as that of the sin-offering for the priest was, then the flesh was to be burnt without the camp; otherwise it was to be eaten by the priest in the holy place, ch. 6. 30. The meaning of which is here explained, (v. 17.) that the priests did hereby bear the iniquity of the congregation, that they might be a type of him who was to be made sin for us, and on whom God would lay the iniquity of us all. Now the blood of this goat was not brought into the holy place, and yet, it seems, it was burnt without the camp.

Now observe here, 1. The gentle reproof Moses gives to Aaron and his sons, for this irregularity. Here again Aaron’s sons are said to be those that were left alive, (v. 16.) who therefore ought to take care to avoid any mistake; and Moses was angry with them. Though he was the meekest man in the world, it seems he could be angry; and when he thought God was disobeyed and dishonoured, and the priesthood endangered, he would be angry. Yet observe how very mildly he deals with Aaron and his sons, considering their present affliction. He only tells them, They sinned not in purpose to have eaten it in the holy place, but is willing to hear what they have to say for themselves, being loath to speak to the grief of those whom God had wounded.

2. The plausible excuse which Aaron makes for this mistake. Moses charged the fault upon Eleazar and Ithamar, (v. 16.) but it is probable that what they did was by Aaron’s direction, and therefore he apologized for it. He might have pleaded this was a sin-offering for the congregation, and if it had been a bullock it must have been wholly burnt, (ch. 4. 21.) and therefore why not now that it was a goat? But it seems it was otherwise ordered at this time, and therefore he makes his affliction his excuse, v. 19. Observe, (1.) How he speaks of affliction, Such things have befallen me, such sad things, which could not but go near his heart, and make it very heavy. He was a high priest, and he apprehends that God put off natural affection when he put on the holy emblems. He held his peace, (v. 3.) yet his sorrow was stirred, as David’s, Ps. 39. 2. Note, There may be a deep sense of affliction even where there is a sincere resignation to the will of God in the affliction. Such things as never befell me before, and as I little expected now. My spirits cannot but sink, when I see my family sinking; I must need look to God, and I am angry with him for not saying a great deal to aggravate an affliction, but it is better to say little. (2.) How he makes that an excuse for his varyimg from the appointment about the sin-offering. He could not have eaten it but in his mourning, and with a sorrowful spirit; and would that have been accepted? He does not plead that his heart was so full of grief that he had no stomach to it, but that he feared it would not be accepted. Note, [1.] Acceptance with God is the great thing we should desire and aim at in all our religious services, particularly in the Lord’s supper, which is our eating of the sin-offering. [2.] The sorrow of the world is a very great hinderance to our acceptable performance of holy duties; as it is dishonest to ourselves, to take off our chariot wheels, and makes us drive heavily, (1 Sam. 1. 7, 8.) and as it is displeasing to God, whose will it is that we should serve him cheerfully, Deut. 12. 7.

Mourners’ bread was polluted, Hos. 9. 4. See Mal. 2. 14.

3. Moses acquiesces in the excuse, (v. 20.) He was content. Perhaps he thought it justified what he had done. God had provided that what could not be eaten might be burnt. Our unfaithfulness, when it is natural and not sinful, will have great allowances made for it; and God will have mercy and not sacrifice. At least he thought it did very much extenuate the fault; the spirit indeed was willing, but the flesh was weak. God by Moses showed that he considered his frame. It appeared that Aaron sincerely aimed at God’s acceptance; and though he had said an unfruitful word, he finds he is not extreme to mark what they do amiss. Nor must we be severe in our animadversions upon every mistake concerning ourselves, lest we also be tempted.

CHAP. XI.

The ceremonial law is described by the apostle (Heb. 9. 9. 10.) to consist, not only in gifts and sacrifices, which hitherto have been treated of in this book, but in meats, and drinks, and divers washings from ceremonial uncleanness: the laws concerning which begin with this chapter, which puts a different complexion upon many sorts of flesh-meat and others, allowing some to be eaten as clean, and forbidding others as unclean. There is one kind of flesh of men. Nature startles at the thought of eating that, and none do it but such as are arrived at the highest degree of barbarity, and are become but one remove from brutes; therefore there needed no law against that. But there is another kind of flesh of beasts, concerning which the law directs here, (v. 1. 8.) another of fishes, (v. 9. 12.) another of birds, (v. 13. 10.) and another of creeping things, which are distinguished into two sorts, flying creeping things, (v. 29. 28.) and creeping things upon the earth, v. 29. 43. And the law concludes with the general rule of holiness, and reasons for it, v. 44. 47.

1. A ND the Lord spake unto Moses, and to Aaron, saying unto them, 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, These are the beasts which ye shall eat among all the beasts that are on the earth. 3. Whosoever parteth the hoof, and is cloven-footed, and cheweth the cud among the beasts, that shall ye eat. 4. Nevertheless, these shall ye not eat, of them that chew the cud, or of them that divide the hoof: as the camel, because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof; he is unclean unto you. 5. And the coney, because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof; he is unclean unto you. 6. And the hare, because he cheweth the cud, but divideth not the hoof; he is unclean unto you. 7. And the swine, though he divide the hoof, and be cloven-footed; yet he cheweth not the cud; he is unclean to you. 8. Of their flesh shall ye not eat, and their carcasse shall ye not touch: they are unclean to you.
Now that Aaron was consecrated a high priest over the house of God, God spake to him with Moses, and appointed unto him the priestly office, and bade him instruct all the elders of Israel; and he spake both to the people. He spake both to Moses and to Aaron about this matter; for it was particularly required of the priests, that they should put a difference between clean and unclean, and teach the people to do so. After the flood, God entered into covenant with Noah and his sons, he allowed them to eat flesh, (Gen. 9. 3.) whereas before they were confined to the productions of the earth. But the liberty allowed to the sons of Noah, is strictly limited to the sons of Israel. They might eat flesh, but not all kinds of flesh; some they must look upon as unclean and forbidden to them, others as clean and allowed them. The law in this matter is both very particular and very strict. But what reason can be given for this law? Why may not God’s people have as free a use of all the creatures as other people?

1. It is reason enough, that God would have it so; his will, as it is law sufficient, so it is reason sufficient; for his will is wisdom. He saw good thus to try and exercise the obedience of his people, not only in the solemnities of his altar, but in matters of daily occurrence at their own table, that there they might remember they were under authority. Thus God had tried the obedience of man in innocency, by forbidding him to eat of one particular tree.

2. Most of the meats forbidden as unclean are such as were really unwholesome, and not fit to be eaten; and those of them that we think wholesome enough, and use accordingly, as the cony, the hare, and the swine, perhaps in those countries, and to their bodies, might be hurtful. And then God in this law did by them but as a wise and loving father does by his children, whom he restrains from eating some things, that might be hurtful. But it is the Lord for the body, and it is not only folly, but sin against God, to prejudice our health for the pleasing of our appetite.

3. God would thus teach his people to distinguish themselves from other people, not only in their religious worship, but in the common actions of life. Thus he would show them that they must not be numbered among the nations. It should seem, that before this, some difference between the Hebrews and other nations in their food, kept up by tradition, for the Egyptians and they would not eat together, Gen. 43. 42. And even before the flood there was a distinction of beasts into clean and not clean, (Gen. 7. 2.) which distinction was quite lost, with many other instances of religion, among the Gentiles. But by this law it was reduced to a certainty, and ordered to be kept up among the Jews; that thus, by having a diet peculiar to themselves, they might be kept from familiar conversation with their idolatrous neighbours, and might typify God’s spiritual Israel, who, not in these little things, but in the temper of their spirits, and the course of their lives, should be governed by a sober singularity, and not be conformed to this world. The learned observe further, That most of these things which by this law were distinguished as unclean, were such as were had in high veneration among the heathen, not so much for food, as for divination and sacrifice to their gods; and therefore those are here emonished as unclean, and an abomination, which yet they would not be in any temptation to eat, that they might keep up a religious loathing of that which the Gentiles had a superstitious value for. The swine, with the later Gentiles, was, as the goat and mule in Mines, the eagle to Jupiter, the dog to Hecate, &c. and all these are here made unclean.

That these beasts which both part the hoof and chew the cud were clean, and those c.n.y. they are particularly mentioned in the repetition of this law, (Deut. 14. 4, 5.) where it appears that they had variety enough allowed them, and needed not to complain of the confinement they were under. Those beasts that did not both chew the cud and divide the hoof were unclean; by which rule the flesh of swine, and of hares, and of rabbits, was prohibited to them, though commonly used among us. Therefore, particularly at the eating of any thing, which the Jews would give thanks for the liberty granted us in this matter by the gospel, which teaches us that every creature of God is good, and we are to call nothing common or unclean. Some observe a significance in the rule laid down here for them to distinguish by, or, at least, think it may be alluded to. Meditation, and other acts of devotion done by the hidden man of the heart, may be signified by the chewing of the cud, digesting our spiritual food; justice and charity toward men, and the acts of a good conversation, may be signified by the dividing of the hoof. Now either of these, without the other, will not serve to recommend us to God, but both must go together; good affections in the heart, and good works in the life: if either be wanting, we are not clean, surely we are not clean. Of all the creatures here forbidden as unclean, none has been more dreaded and detested by the pious Jews than swine; for they supposed the fear of God was put to death by Antiochus, because they would not eat it. Th’s, probably, they were most in danger of being tempted to, and therefore possessed themselves and their children with a particular antipathy to it, calling it not by its proper name, but a strange thing. It should seem the Gentiles used it superstitiously, (Isa. 65. 4.) they eat swine’s flesh; and therefore God forbids all use of it to his people, lest they should keep forever their neighbours, in making a break in the use of it. Some suggest that the prohibition of these beasts as unclean was intended to be a caution to the people against the bad qualities of these creatures. We must not be filthy, nor wallow in the mire as swine, nor be timorous and faint-hearted as hares, nor dwell in the earth as rabbits; let not man, that is in honour, make himself like these beasts that perish. The law forbade, not only the eating of their flesh, but all use of them. Many were put to death by Antiochus, because they would not keep from any sin must be careful to avoid all temptations to it, and every thing that looks towards it, or leads to it.

9. These shall ye eat, of all that are in the waters, whatsoever hath fins and scales in the waters, in the seas, and in the rivers, them shall ye eat. 10. And all that have not fins nor scales in the waters, and in the rivers, of all that move in the waters, and of any living thing which is in the waters, shall they be an abomination unto you. 11. They shall be even an abomination unto you; ye shall not eat of their flesh, but ye shall have their carcasses in abomination. 12. Whosoever hath no fins nor scales in the waters, that shall be an abomination unto you. 13. And these are they which ye shall have in abomination among the fowls; they shall not be eaten, they are an abomination; the eagle, and the ossifrage, and the ospray. 14. And the vulture, and the kite, after his kind; 15. Every raven after his kind; 16. And the owl, and the nighthawk, and the cuckoo, and the hawk after his kind, 17. And the little owl, and the coromant, and the great owl, 18. And the swan, and the pelican, and the gireagle. 19. And the stork, the heron after her kind, and the lapwing, and the bat.

1. A general rule concerning fishes, which were clean, and which not. All that had fins and scales they might eat, and were forbidden only those odd sort of water-animals that have not, v. 9, 10. The ancients accounted fish the most clean of all fishes, and therefore God did not lay much restraint upon his people in them; for he is a Master that allows his servants not only for necessity but for delight. Concerning the prohibited fish, it is said, They shall be an abomination to you, (v. 10. 12.) that is, "Ye shall count them unclean, and not only eat of them, but regard them as dirt to be stamped upon." Note, Whatever is unclean should be to us an abomination; touch not the unclean thing. But observe, it was to be an abomination only to Jews; the neighbouring nations were under none of these obligations, nor are they to be an abomination to us Christians. The Jews were honoured with peculiar privileges, and therefore, lest they should be proud of those, Transcendent can omn. They were likewise laid under peculiar restraints. Thus God's spiritual Israel, as they are dignified above others by the gospel-covenant of adoption and friendship, so they must be testified more than others by the gospel-commands of self-denial and bearing the cross.

2. Concerning fowls here is no general rule given, but a particular enumeration of these fowls that they must abstain from as unclean, which implies an allowance of all the rest. The fowls here have their hands full, to find out what is the true significance of the Hebrew words here used, some of which still remain uncertain; some sort of fowls being particular to some countries. Were the law in force now, we should be concerned to know for certain what are prohibited by it; and perhaps if we did, and were better acquainted with the nature of the fowls here names expres.

sive of their natures, Gen. 2. 20. But the law being repealed, and the learning in a great measure lost, it is sufficient for us to observe, that of the fowls here forbidden, (1.) Some are birds of prey, as the eagle, vulture, &c. and God would have his people to abhor every thing that is barbarous and cruel, and not to live by blood and rapine. Doves, they were preyed upon, but fit to be food for man, and offerings to God; but kites and hawks, that prey upon them, must be looked upon as an abomination to God and man; for the condition of those that are persecuted for righteousness' sake, appears to an eye of faith every way better than that of their persecutors. (2.) Others of them are solitary birds, that abide in dark and desolate places, as the owl and the pelican, (Ps. 102. 6.) and the coromant and raven; (Isa. 34. 11.) for God's Israel should not be a melancholy people, nor affect sadness and constant solitude. (3.) Others of them feed upon that which is impure, as the stork on serpents, others of them on worms; and we must not only abstain from all impurity ourselves, but from connexion with those that allow themselves in it. (4.) Others of them were used by the Egyptians and other Gentiles in their divinations. Some birds were reckoned fortunate, others ominous; and their soothsayers had great regard to the flight of these birds, all which therefore must be an abomination to God's people, who must not learn the way of the heathen.

20. All fowls that creep, going upon all four, shall be an abomination unto you. 21. Yet these may ye eat, of every flying creeping thing that goeth upon all four, which have legs above their feet, to leap withal upon the earth; 22. Even these of them ye may eat: the locust after his kind, and the baid locust after his kind, and the beetle after his kind, and the grasshopper after his kind. 23. But all other flying creeping things, which have four feet, shall be an abomination unto you. 24. And for these ye shall be unclean: whosoever toucheth the carcase of them shall be unclean until the even. 25. And whosoever beareth aught of the carcase of them shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even. 26. The carcases of every beast which divideth the hoof, and is not cloven-footed, nor cheweth the cud, are unclean unto you: every one that toucheth them shall be unclean. 27. And whatsoever goeth upon his paws, among all manner of beasts that go on all four, those are unclean unto you: whoso toucheth their carcase shall be unclean until the even. 28. And he that beareth the carcase of them shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: they are unclean unto you. 29. These also shall be unclean unto you among the creeping things that creep upon the earth; the weasel, and the mouse, and the tortoise after his kind, 30. And the ferret, and the chameleon, and the lizard, and the snail, and the mole. 31. These are unclean to you among all that creep: whosoever doth touch them, when they are dead, shall be unclean until the even. 32. And upon whatsoever any of them, when they are dead, doth fall, it shall be unclean; whether it be any vessel of wood, or raiment, or skin, or sack, whatsoever vessel it be, wherein any work is done, it must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until the even; so it shall be cleansed. 33. And every earthen vessel, wherewith any of them falleth, whatsoever is in it shall be unclean; and ye shall break it. 34. Of all meat which may be eaten, that on which such water cometh shall be unclean: and all drink that may be drunk in every such vesi-

s shall be unclean. 35. And every thing whereupon any part of their carcase falleth shall be unclean; whether it be oven, or ranges for pots, they shall be broken down: for they are unclean, and shall be unclean unto you. 36. Nevertheless, a fountain or pit, wherein there is plenty of water, shall be clean: but that which toucheth their carcase shall be unclean. 37. And if any part of their carcase fall upon any sowing seed which is to be sown, it shall be clean. 38. But if any water be put upon the seed, and any part of their carcase fall thereon, it shall be unclean unto you. 39. And if any beast, of which ye may eat, die; he that toucheth the carcase thereof shall be unclean until the even. 40. And be that eateth of the carcase of it shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even: he also that beareth the carcase of it shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the even. 41. And every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth shall be an abomination; it shall not be eaten. 42. Whosoever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever goeth upon all four, or whatsoever hath more feet among all creeping things that creep upon the earth, them ye shall not eat; for they are an abomination.

Here is the law, 1. Concerning flying insects, as flies, wasps, bees, &c. these they might not eat, (v. 20.) nor indeed are they fit to be eaten; but there were several sorts of locusts, which in those countries were very good meat, and much used; John Baptist lived upon them in the desert, and they are here allowed them, v. 21, 22. 2. Concerning the creeping things on the earth, these were all forbidden, (v. 29, 30, and again, v. 41, 42;) for it was the curse of the serpent, not a foot his belly he should go, and therefore between him and man there was an enmity put, (Gen. 3. 15.) which was preserved by this law. Dust is the meat of the creeping things, and therefore they are not fit to be man's meat. 3. Concerning the dead carcasses of all these unclean animals: (1.) Every one that touched them was to be unclean until the even, v. 24, 28. This law is often repeated, to possess them with a dread of every thing that was prohibited, though no particular reason for the prohibition did appear, but only the will of the Law-Maker. Not that they were to be looked upon as defiling to the conscience, or that it was a sin against God to touch them, unless done in contempt of the law: in many cases, somebody must, of necessity, touch them, to remove them; but it was a ceremonial uncleaness they contracted, which for the time forbad them to come into the tabernacle, or to eat of any of the holy things, or so much as to converse familiarly with their neighbours. But the uncleaness continued only till the even, to signify that all ceremonial pollutions were to come to an end, by the death of Christ, in the evening of the world. And we must learn, by daily renewing our repentance every night for the sins of the day, to cleanse ourselves from the pollution we contracted by them, that we may not lie down in our uncleaness. Even unclean animals they might touch while they were alive, without contracting any ceremonial uncleanness by it, as horses and dogs, because they were allowed to use them for service; but they might not touch them when they were dead, because they might not eat them. 43. Ye shall not make yourselves abominable with any creeping thing that creepeth, neither shall ye make yourselves unclean with them, that ye should be defiled thereby. 44. For I am the Lord your God; ye shall therefore sanctify yourselves, and ye shall be holy; for I am holy; neither shall ye defile yourselves with any manner of creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth. 45. For I am the Lord that bringeth you up out of the land of Egypt, to be your God; ye shall therefore be holy, for I am holy. 46. This is the law of the beasts, and of the fowl, and of every living creature that moveth in the waters, and of every creature that creepeth upon the earth; 47. To make a difference between the unclean and the clean, and between the beast that may be eaten and the beast that may not be eaten.

1. The exposition of this law, or a key to let us into the meaning of it. It was not intended merely for a bill of fare, or as the directions of a physician about their diet, but God would hereby teach them to sanctify themselves, and to be holy, v. 44. That is, (1.) They must hereby learn to put a difference between good and evil, and to reckon it could not be all alike what they did, when it was not all alike what they ate. (2.) To maintain a constant observance of the divine law, and to govern themselves by that in all their actions, even those that are common, which ought to be performed after a godly sort, 3 John 6. Even eating and drinking must be by rule, and to the glory of God, 1 Cor. 10. 31. (3.) To distinguish themselves all their neighbour as a people set apart for God, and obliged not to walk as other Gentiles: and all this is holiness. Thus these rudiments of the world were their tutors and governors, (Gal. 4. 2, 3.) to bring them to that which is the revival of our first state in Adam, and the earnest of our best state with Christ, that is holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord. This is indeed the great design of all the ordinances, that by them we may sanctify ourselves, and learn to be holy. Even this law concerning their food, which seemed to stoop so very low, aimed thus high, for it was the statute-law of heaven under the Old Testament as well as the New, that without holiness no man shall see the Lord. The caution therefore, (v. 43.) is, Ye shall not make yourselves abominable. Note, By having fellowship with sin, which is abominable, we make ourselves abominable. That man is truly miserable who is in the sight of God abominable; and none are more so than those who make themselves so. The Jewish writers themselves suggest, that the intention of this law was to forbid them all communion by marriage, or otherwise, with the heathen, Deut. 7. 2, 3. And thus the moral of it is obligatory on us, forbidding us to have fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness; and, without this real holiness of the heart and life, he that offereth an oblation is as if he offered swine's blood; (Isa. 66. 3.) and, if it were such a provocation for a man to eat swine's flesh himself, much more it must be so to offer swine's blood at God's altar: see Prov. 15. 8.

2. The reasons of this law; and they are all taken from the Law-Maker himself, to whom we must have respect in all acts of obedience. (1.) I am the Lord your God, (v. 44.) “Therefore you are bound to do thus, in pure obedience.” God’s sovereignty over us, and propriety in us, obliges us to do whatever he has commanded us, however contrary our inclinations. (2.) I am holy, (v. 44.) and again, v. 45. If God be holy, we must be so, else we cannot expect to be accepted of him. His holiness is his glory, (Exod. 15. 11.) and therefore it becomes his house for ever, Ps. 93. 5. This great precept, thus enforced, though it comes in here in the midst of abrogated laws, is quoted and stamped for a gospel-precept, (1 Pet. 1. 16.) where it is intended, that all these ceremonial restraints were designed to teach us that we must not fashion ourselves according to our former lusts in our ignorance, v. 14. (3.) I am the Lord that bringeth you out of the land of Egypt, v. 45. This was a reason why they should cheerfully submit to distinguishing laws, who had of late been so wonderfully dignified with distinguishing favours. He that had done more for them than for any other people, might justly expect more from them than they.

The conclusion of this statute, (v. 46, 47.) This is the law of the beasts, and of the foul, &c. This was a law to them a statute for ever, that is, as long as that economy lasted; but under the gospel we find it expressly repealed by a voice from heaven to Peter, (Acts 10. 15.) as it had before been virtually set aside by the death of Christ, with the other ordinances that perished in the using; Touch not, taste not, handle not, Col. 2. 21, 22. And now we are sure that meat commends us not to God, (1 Cor. 8. 8.) and that nothing is unclean of itself, (Rom. 14. 14.) nor does that defile a man which goes into his mouth, but that which comes out from the heart, Matt. 15. 11.

Let us therefore, (1.) Give thanks to God that we are not under this yoke, but that to us every creature of God is allowed as good, and nothing to be refused. (2.) Be strict in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free, and take heed of those doctrines which command to abstain from meats, and so would revive Moses again, 1 Tim. 4. 3, 4. (3.) Be strictly and conscientiously temperate in the use of the good creatures. God has allowed us. If God's law has given us liberty, let us lay restraints upon ourselves, and never feed ourselves without fear, lest our table be a snare. Set a knife to thy throat, if thou art a glutton; and although not desirous of dainties or varieties, Prov. 25. 2, 3. Nature is content with a little, grace with less, but lust with nothing.

CHAP. XII.

After the laws concerning clean and unclean food, come the laws concerning clean and unclean persons; and the first in this chapter concerning the ceremonial uncleanness of women in child-birth, v. 1-5. And concerning their purification from that uncleanness, v. 6-8.

1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a woman have conceived seed, and borne a man-child, then she shall be unclean seven days; according to the days of the separation for her infirmity shall she be unclean. 3. And in the eighth day the flesh of his foreskin shall be circumcised. 4. And she shall then continue in the blood of her purifying three and thirty days: she shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary, until the days of her purifying be fulfilled. 5. But if she bear a maid-child, then she shall be unclean two weeks, as in her separation: and she shall continue in the blood of her purifying threescore and six days.

The law here pronounces women lying-in ceremonially unclean. The Jews say, “The law extended even to an abortion, if the child was so formed as that the sex was distinguishable.” 1. There was some time of strict separation immediately after the birth, which continued seven days for a son, and fourteen days for a daughter, v. 2, 5. During these days she was separated from her husband and friends, and those that necessarily attended her were ceremonially unclean; which was one reason why the males were not circumcised till the eighth day, because they participated of the mother’s pollution, during the days of her separation. 2. There was also a longer time appointed for their purifying, thirty-three days more, forty in all, if the birth were a male, and double that time if a female, v. 4, 5. During this time, they were only separated from the sanctuary, and forbidden to eat of the passover, or peace-offerings, or, if a priest’s wife, to eat of any thing that was holy to the Lord. Why the time of both those was double for a female to what it was for a male, I can assign no reason but that of the Law-Maker; in Christ Jesus no difference is made of male and female, Gal. 2. 28. Col. 3. 11. But this ceremonial uncleanness, which the law laid women in childbed under, was to signify the pollution of sin, which we are all conceived and born in, Ps. 51. 5. For if the root be impure, so is the branch, Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean? If sin had not entered, nothing but purity and honour had attended all the productions of that great blessing. Be fruitful and multiply; but now that the nature of man is degenerated, the propagation of that nature is laid under these marks of disgrace, because of the sin and corruption that are propagated with it, and in remembrance of the curse upon the woman that was first in the transgression, That in sorrow (to which it is here further added, in shame) she should bring forth children. And the exclusion of the woman for so many years from the sanctuary, and from participation of the holy things, signified that our original corruption (that sinning sin which we brought into the world with us) would have excluded us for ever from the enjoyment of God and his favours, if he had not graciously provided for our purifying.

6. And when the days of their purifying are fulfilled, for a son, or for a daughter, she shall bring a lamb of the first year for a burnt-offering, and a young pigeon, or a turtle-dove for a sin-offering, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, unto the priest; 7. Who shall offer it before the Lord, and make an atonement for her, and she shall be cleansed from the issue of her blood.

This is the law of her that hath borne a male or a female. 8. And if she be not able to bring a lamb, then she shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons; the one for the burnt-offering, and the other for a sin-offering: and the priest shall make an atonement for her, and she shall be clean.

A woman that had lain-in, when the time set for her return to the sanctuary was come, was not to attend there empty, but must bring her offerings, v. 6. 1. A burnt-offering; a lamb, if she was able; if poor, a pigeon. This she was to offer in thankfulness to God for his mercy to her, in bringing her safely through the pains of child-bearing, and all the perils of child-bed; and in desire and hopes of God's further favour both to her and to the child. When a child is born, there is joy and there is hope, and therefore it was proper to bring this offering, which was of a general nature; for what we rejoice in we must give thanks for, and what we are in hopes of we must pray for. But beside this, 2. She must offer a sin-offering, which must be the same for poor and rich, a turtle-dove, or a young pigeon; for whatever difference there may be between rich and poor in the sacrifices of acknowledgment, that of atonement is the same for both. This sin-offering was intended, either, (1.) To complete her purification from that ceremonial uncleanness, which, though it was not in itself sinful, yet was typical of moral pollution: or, (2.) To make atonement for that which was really sin, her unexpressed desire of the blessing of children, or discontent or impatience under the pains of child-bearing. It is only by Christ, the great Sin-Offerer, that the corruption of our nature is done away, and to that it is owing that we are not for ever excluded by it from the sanctuary, and from eating the holy things.

According to this law, we find that the mother of our blessed Lord, though he was not conceived in sin, as others were, yet was delivered through the purificative means of purification, and then presented her son to the Lord, being a first-born, and brought her own offering, a pair of turtle-doves. Luke 2. 22. 24. So poor were Christ's parents, that they were not able to bring a lamb for a burnt-offering; and so early was Christ made under the law to redeem them that were under it. The mortality of this law obliges those women that have received mercy from God in child-bearing, with all thankfulness to own God's goodness to them, and acknowledging themselves unworthy of it, and (which is the best purification of women that have been saved in child-bearing, 1 Tim. 2. 15.) to continue in faith, and charity, and holiness, with sobriety; for this shall please the Lord better than the turtle-doves, or the young pigeons.

СИАР. XIII.

The next ceremonial uncleanness is that of the leprosy; concerning which the law was very large and particular, the discovery of it in this chapter, and the cleansing of the leper in the next. Scrutiny any one thing in all the several laws that is so very much room as this: 1. Rules are here given, by which the priest must judge whether a man had the leprosy or no, as the symptom was that appeared. 1. If it was a swelling, a scab, or a bright spot, v. 1. 2. If it was a boil, v. 18. 26. 3. If it was an inflammation, v. 21. 23. 4. If it was in the head or beard, v. 29. 37. 5. If it was a bright spot, v. 38.
And the priest shall see him: and, behold, if the plague be turned into white, then the priest shall pronounce him clean that hath the plague: he is clean.

Concerning the plague of leprosy we may observe in general,

1. That it was rather an uncleanness than a disease; or, at least, so the law considered it; and therefore employed not the physicians but the priests about it. Christ is said to cleanse lepers, not to cure them. We do not read of any that died of the leprosy, but it rather buried them alive, by rendering them unfit for conversation with any but such as were infected like themselves. Yet there is a tradition that Pharaoh, who sought to kill Moses, was the first that ever was struck with this disease, and that he died of it. It is said to have begun first in Egypt, from whence it spread into Syria. It was very well known to Moses, when he put his own hand into his bosom, and took it out leprous.

2. That it was a plague inflicted immediately by the hand of God, and came not from natural causes, as other diseases; and therefore must be managed according to a divine law. Miriam's leprosy, and Gehazi's, and king Uzziah's, were all the punishments of particular sins: and if generally it was so, no marvel there was so much care taken to distinguish it from a common distemper, that none might be looked upon as lying under this extraordinary token of divine displeasure, but those that really were so.

3. That it is a plague: now not known in the world, which is commonly called the leprosy, is of quite a different name from the same: it was reserved as a most capital scourge for the sinners of those times and places: the Jews retained the idolatrous customs they had learnt in Egypt, and therefore God justly caused this with some other of the diseases of Egypt to follow them. Yet we read of Naaman the Syrian, who was a leper, 2 Kings 5. 1.

4. That there were other breakings-out in the body, which did very much resemble the leprosy, but according to v. 4, which might be called leprous bodies, and loathsome, and yet not ceremonially unclean. Justly are our bodies called vile bodies, which have in them the seeds of so many diseases, by which the lives of so many are made bitter to them.

5. That the judgment of it was referred to the priests. Lepers were looked upon as stigmatized by the justice of God, and therefore it was left to his servants the priests, who might be presumed to know his mark best, to pronounce who were lepers and who were not. And the Jews say, "Any priest, though disabled by a blemish to attend the sanctuary, might be judge of the leprosy, provided the blemish were not in his eye. And he might" (they say) "take a common person to assist him in the search, but the priest only must pronounce the judgment."

6. That it was a figure of the moral pollutions of men's minds by sin, which is the leprosy of the soul, destroying the conscience, and from which Christ alone can cleanse us: for herein the power of his grace infinitely transcends that of the legal priesthood, that the priest could only convict the leper, (for by the law is the knowledge of sin,) but Christ can cure the leper, he can take away sin; Lord, if thou wilt, thou canst make me clean; which was more than the priests could do, Matt. 8. 2. Some think that the leprosy signified, not so much sin in general, as a state of sin, by which men are separated from God, their spot not being the spot of God's children; and scandalous sin, for which men are to be shut out from the communion of the faithful. It is a work of great importance, but of great difficulty, to judge of our spiritual state: we have all cause to suspect ourselves, being conscious to ourselves of sores and spots, but whether clean or unclean, is the question. A man might have a scab, (v. 6.) and yet be clean; the best have their infirmities; but as there were certain marks by which to know it was leprosy, so there are characters of such as are in the gall of bitterness; and that the work of ministers is to declare the judgment of leprosy, and to assist those that suspect themselves, in the trial of their spiritual state, remitting or retaining sin. And hence the keys of the kingdom of heaven are said to be given them, because they are to separate between the precious and the vile, and to judge who are fit, as clean, to partake of the holy things, and who, as unclean, to be debarred them.

And it was deeper than the skin, the man must be pronounced unclean, v. 3. The infirmities that consist with grace, do not sink deep into the soul, but the mind still serves the law of God, and the inward man delights in it, Rom. 7. 22, 25. But if the matter be very near the skin, and the inward man infected, the case is dangerous. [2.] If he cannot be at a stay, and do not spread, it is no leprosy, v. 5, 6. But if it spread much abroad, and continue to do so after several inspections, the case is bad, v. 7, 8. If men do not grow worse, but a step be put to the course of their sins, and their corruptions be checked, it is to be hoped they will grow better; but if sin get ground, and they become worse every day, they are going down-hill. [3.] If there were internal infirmities, yet in the external things that he waited upon to wait any longer, it was certainly a leprosy, v. 10, 11. Nor is there any surer indication of the badness of a man's spiritual state, than the heart's rising in self-conceit, confidence in the flesh, and restance of the reproofs of the word, and strivings of the spirit. [4.] If the emotion, whatever it was, covered all the skin from head to foot, it was no leprosy, (v. 12, 13.) for it was an evidence that the view was very blind and strong, and nature hereby helped itself, throwing out what was burlernose and pernicious. There is hope in the small-pox when they come out well; so if men freely confess their sins, and hide them not; there is no danger comparable to their sin of that cover their sins. Some gather this from it, that there is more hope of the profane than the hypocrites. The Publicans and Harlots went into the kingdom of heaven before Scribes and Pharisees. In one respect, the sudden breakings-out of passion, though bad enough, are not so dangerous as malice concealed. Others gather this, That if we judge ourselves, we shall not be judged; if we see and own that there is no health in us, no soundness in our flesh, by reason of sin, we shall find grace in the eyes of the Lord.

(2.) The priest must take time in making his judgment, and not give it rashly. If the matter looked suspicious, he must shut up the patient seven days, and enquire into it more exactly, and after, might be according to truth. This teaches all, both ministers and people, not to be hasty in their censures, nor to judge any thing before the time. If some men's sins go before unto judgment, the sins of others follow after, and so men's good works; therefore let nothing be done suddenly, 1 Tim. 5. 22, 24, 25.

(3.) If the person suspected were to be clean, yet he must wash his clothes, (v. 6.) because he had been under the suspicion, and there had been in him which gave ground for the suspicion. Even the prisoner that is acquited must go... down on his knees. We have need to be washed in the blood of Christ from our spots, though they be not leprosy spots; for who can say, I am pure from sin; though there are those who through grace are innocent from the great transgression.

18. The flesh also, in which, even in the skin thereof, was a boil, and is healed; 19. And in the place of the boil there be a white rising, or a bright spot, white, and somewhat reddish, and it be showed to the priest; 20. And if, when the priest seeth it, behold, it be in sight lower than the skin, and the hair thereof be turned white; the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a plague of leprosy broken out of the boil. 21. But if the priest look on it, and, behold, there be no white hairs therein, and if it be not lower than the skin, but be somewhat dark, then the priest shall shut him up seven days: 22. And if it spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a plague. 23. But if the bright spot stay in his place, and spread not, it is a burning boil; and the priest shall pronounce him clean. 24. Or if there be any flesh, in the skin whereof there is a hot burning, and the quick flesh that burneth have a white bright spot, somewhat reddish or white. 25. Then the priest shall look upon it: and, behold, if the hair in the bright spot be turned white, and it be in sight deeper than the skin, it is a leprosy broken out of the burning; wherefore the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy. 26. But if the priest look on it, and, behold, there be no white hair in the bright spot, and it be no lower than the other skin, but be somewhat dark, then the priest shall shut him up seven days: 27. And the priest shall look upon him the seventh day; and if it be spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the plague of leprosy. 28. And if the bright spot stay in his place, and spread not in the skin, but it be somewhat dark, it is a rising of the burning, and the priest shall pronounce him clean; for it is an inflammation of the burning. 29. If a man or woman hath a plague upon the head or the beard. 30. Then the priest shall see the plague: and, behold, if it be in sight deeper than the skin, and there be in it a yellow thin hair, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean; it is a dry scall, even a leprosy upon the head or beard. 31. And if the priest look on the plague of the scall, and, behold, it be not in sight deeper than the skin, and that there is no black hair in it, then the priest shall shut up him that hath the plague of the scall seven days: 32. And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the plague: and, behold, if the scall spread not, and there be in it no yellow hair, and the scall be not in sight deeper than the skin, 33. He shall be shaven, but the scall shall be not shaven; and the priest shall shut up him that hath the scall seven days more: 34. And in the seventh day the priest shall look on the scall; and, behold, if the scall be not spread in the skin, nor be in sight deeper than the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him clean; and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean. 35. But if the scall spread much in the skin after his cleansing, 36. Then the priest shall look on him: and, behold, if the scall be spread in the skin, the priest shall not seek for yellow hair; he is unclean. 37. But if the scall be in his sight at a stay, and that there is black hair grown up therein, the scall is healed, he is clean; and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

The priest is here instructed which judgment to make if there were any appearance of a leprosy, either, 1. In an old ulcer, or boil, that has been healed, v. 18. &c. When old sores, that seemed to have been cured, break out again, it is to be feared there is a leprosy in them; such is the danger of those who, having escaped the pollutions of the world, are again entangled therein, and overcome. Or, 2. In a burn by accident, for that seems to be meant, v. 24. &c. The burning of strife and contention often proves the occasion of the rising up and breaking out of that corruption, which witnesses to men's faces that they are unclean. 3. In a scallhead. And in this commonly the judgment turned upon a very small matter. If the hair in the scall was black, it was a sign of soundness; if yellow, it was an indication of a leprosy, v. 30. &c. The other rules in these cases are the same with those mentioned before. In reading these several sorts of ailments, it will be good for us, (1.) To lament the calamitous state of human life, which lies exposed to so many grievances. What troops of diseases are we beset with on every side; and they all entered by sin. (2.) To give thanks to God, if he has never afflicted us with any of these sores; if the constitution is healthful, and the body lively and easy, we are bound to glorify God with our bodies.

38. If a man also or a woman have in the skin of their flesh, bright spots, even white bright spots. 39. Then the priest shall look: and, behold, if the bright spots in the skin of their flesh be darkish white, it is a freckled spot that growseth in the skin; he is clean. 40. And the man whose hair is fallen off his head, he is bald; yet is he clean. 41. And he that hath his hair fallen off from the part of his head toward his face, he is forehead-bald; yet is he clean. 42. And if there be in the bald head, or bald forehead, a white reddish sore; it is a leprosy sprung up in his bald head, or his bald forehead. 43. Then the priest shall look upon it: and, behold, if the rising of the sore be white reddish in his bald head, or in his bald forehead, as the leprosy appeareth in the skin of the flesh, 44. He is a leprous man, he is unclean: the priest shall pronounce him utterly unclean; his plague is in his head. 45. And the leper in whom the plague is, his clothes shall be rent, and his head bare, and he shall put a covering upon his upper lip, and shall cry, Unclean, unclean. 46. All the days wherein the plague shall be in him he shall be defiled; he is unclean: he shall dwell alone, without the camp shall his habitation be.

We have,

1. Proviso, that neither a freckled skin nor a bald head should be mistaken for a leprosy, v. 38. 41. Every deformity must not forthwith be made a ceremonial defilement. Elisha was jeered for his bald head, (2 Kings 2. 23.) but they were the children of Bethel who turned it to his reproach, that knew not the judgments of their God. 2. A particularbrand set upon the leprosy, if at any time it did appear in a bald head, v. 44. The plague is in his head, he is utterly unclean. If the leprosy of sin have seized the head, if the judgment be corrupted, and wicked principles, which countenance and support wicked practices, be embraced, it is an utter uncleanness, from which few are ever cleansed. Soundness in the faith keeps the leprosy from the head, and saves conscience from being shipwrecked.

3. Directions what must be done with the convicted leper. When the priest, upon mature deliberation, had solemnly pronounced him unclean, 1.) he must pronounce himself so, v. 45. He must put himself into the posture of a mourner, and cry Unclean, unclean. The leprosy was not itself a sin, but it was a sad token of God's displeasure, and a sore affliction to him that was under it. It was a reproach to his name, put a full stop to his business in the world, cut him off from conversation with his friends and relations, condemned him to banishment till he was cleansed, shut him out from the sanctuary, and was, in effect, the ruin of all the comfort he could have in this world. Heman, it would seem, either was a leper, or alludes to the melancholy condition of a leper, Ps. 88. 8, &c. He must therefore (1.) Humble himself under the mighty hand of God; insisting his uncleanness, when the priest had pronounced him unclean, but justifying God, and accepting the punishment of his iniquity. He must signify this, by rending his clothes, uncovering his head, and covering his upper lip; all tokens of shame and confusion of face, and very significant of that self-loathing and self-abasement which should fill the hearts of penitents, the language of which is self-judging. This must we take to ourselves the shame that befals us, and with broken hearts call ourselves by our own name, unclean, unclean; heart unclean, life unclean; unclean by original corruption, unclean by actual transgression; unclean, and therefore worthy to be for ever excluded from communion with God, and all hope of happiness in him. "We are all day broken things;" (Isa. 64. 6.) unclean, and therefore unclean, if we do not repent. 2.) He must give warning to others to take heed of coming near him. Wherever he went, he must cry to those he saw at a distance, "I am unclean, unclean, ake head of touching me." Not that the leprosy was catching, but by the touch of a leper ceremonial uncleanness was contracted. Every one therefore was concerned to avoid it; and the leper himself must give notice of the danger. And this was all the law could do, that it was weak through the flesh; it taught the leper to cry, Unclean, unclean, but the gospel has put another cry into the lepers' mouths, (Luke 17. 12, 13.) where we find ten lepers crying with a loud voice, Jesus, Master, have mercy on us. The law only shows us our disease, the gospel shows us our help in Christ. (2.) He must then be shut out of the camp, and afterward, when they came to Canaan, out of the city, town, or village, where he lived, and dwell alone, (v. 46.) associating with none but those that were lepers like himself. When king Uzziah became a leper, he was banished his palace, and dwelt in a several house, 2 Chron. 26. 21. And see 2 Kings 7. 3. This typified the purity which ought to be preserved in the gospel-church, by the solemn and authoritative exclusion of scandalous sinners, that sin be banished, from the communion of the faithful; Put away from among yourselves that wicked person, 1 Cor. 5. 13.

47. The garment also that the plague of leprosy is in, whether it be a woollen garment or a linen garment, 48. Whether it be in the warp or woof, or linen, or of woollen; whether in a skin, or in any thing made of skin; 49. And if the plague be greenish or reddish in the garment, or in the skin, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing of skin; it is a plague of leprosy, and shall be shewed unto the priest: 50. And the priest shall look upon the plague, and shut up it that hath the plague seven days: 51. And he shall look on the plague on the seventh day: if the plague be spread in the garment, either in the warp or in the woof, or in a skin, or in any work that is made of skin, the plague is a fretting leprosy; it is unclean. 52. He shall therefore burn that garment, whether warp or woof, in woollen or in linen, or any thing of skin, wherein the plague is: for it is a fretting leprosy; it shall be burnt in the fire. 53. And if the priest shall look, and behold, the plague be not spread in the garment, either in the warp or in the woof, or in any thing of skin; 54. Then the priest shall command that they wash the thing wherein the plague is, and he shall shut it up seven days more: 55. And the priest shall look on the plague after that it is washed: and, behold, if the plague have not changed his colour, and the plague be not spread, it is unclean; thou shalt burn it in the fire; it is fret inward, whether it be bare within or without. 56. And if the priest look, and behold, the plague be somewhat dark after the washing of it, then he shall rend it out of the garment, or out of the skin, or out of the warp, or out of the woof: 57. And if it appear still in the garment, either in the warp or in the woof, or in any thing of skin, it is a spreading plague; thou shalt burn that wherein the plague is with fire. 58. And the garment, either warp or woof, or whatsoever thing of skin it be which thou shalt wash, if the plague be departed from them, then it shall be washed the second time, and shall be clean. 59. This is the law of the plague of leprosy in a garment of woolen or linen, either in the warp or woof, or any thing of skins, to pronounce it clean, or to pronounce it unclean.

This is the law concerning the plague of leprosy in a garment, whether linen or woollen. A leprosy in a garment, with discernible indications of it, the colour changed by it, the garment fretted, the nap worn off, and this in some particular part of the garment, and increasing when it was shut up, and not to be got out by washing, is a thing which to us now is altogether unaccountable. The learned confess that it was a sign and a miracle in Israel, an extraordinary punishment inflicted by the divine power, as a token of great displeasure against a person or family. 1. The process was much the same with that concerning a leprous person. The garment suspected to be tainted was not to be burnt immediately, though, it may be, there would have been no great loss of it; for in no case must sentence be given merely upon a surmise, but it must be showed to the priest. If, upon search, it was found that there was a leprous spot, (the Jews say, no bigger than a bean,) it must be burnt, or, at least, that part of the garment in which the spot was, v. 52, 57. If the cause of the suspicion was gone, it must be washed, and then might be used, v. 58. 2. The signification also was much the same, to intimiate the great malignity there is in sin: it not only defiles the sinner's conscience, but it brings a stain upon all his employments and enjoyments, all he has, and all he does. To them that are defiled and unbelieving is nothing pure, Tit. 1. 15. And we are taught hereby to hate even the garments spotted with the flesh, Jude, v. 23. Those that make their clothes servants to their pride and lust, may see them thereby tainted with a leprosy, and doomed to the fire, Isa. 3. 18. 24. But the ornament of the hidden man of the heart is incorruptible, 1 Pet. 3. 4. The robes of righteousness never fret, nor are moth-eaten.

CHAP. XIV.

The former chapter directed the priests how to convict a leper of ceremonial uncleanness; no prescriptions are given for his cure: but, when God had cured him, the priests are in this chapter directed how to cleanse him. The remedy here is only adapted to the ceremonial part of his disease; but the authority Christ gave to his ministers, was, to cure the lepers, and so to cleanse them. We have here, 1. The solemn declaration of the leper's being clean, with the significant ceremony attending it, v. 1. 9. II. The sacrifices which he was to offer to God eight days after, v. 10. 52. III. The management of a house in which appeared signs of a leprosy, v. 53. 55. And the conclusion and summary of this whole matter, v. 54. 57.

1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. This shall be the law of the leper in the day of his cleansing: he shall be brought unto the priest: 3. And the priest shall go forth out of the camp; and the priest shall look, and behold, if the plague of leprosy be healed in the leper, 4. Then shall the priest command to take for him that is to be cleansed two birds alive and clean, and cedar-wood, and scarlet, and hyssop: 5. And the priest shall command that one of the birds be killed in an earthen vessel over running water: 6. As for the living bird, he shall take it, and the cedar-wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip them and the living bird in the blood of the bird that was killed over the running water: 7. And he shall sprinkle upon him that is to be cleansed from the leprosy seven times, and shall pronounce him clean, and shall let the living bird loose into the open field. 8. And he that is to be cleansed shall wash his clothes, and shave off all his hair, and wash himself in water, that he may be clean; and after that he shall come into the camp, and shall tarry abroad out of his tent seven days. 9. But it shall be on the seventh day, that he shall shave all his hair off his head, and his beard, and his eyebrows, even all his hair he shall shave off: and he shall wash his clothes, also he shall wash his flesh in water, and he shall be clean.

1. It is supposed that the plague of leprosy was not an incurable disease. Uzziah's indeed continued to the day of his death, and Gehazi's was entailed upon his seed; but Miriam's lasted only seven days: we may suppose that it often wore off in process of time; though God contend long, he will not contend for ever.

The application of the cure, as well as that of the disease, was referred to the priest. He must go out of the camp to the leper, to see whether his leprosy was healed, v. 3. And we may suppose the priest did not contract any ceremonial uncleanness by coming near the leper, as another person would. It was in mercy to the poor lepers that the priests particularly had orders to attend them, for the priests' lips should keep knowledge; and those in affliction must not be left uncared for, both how to bear their afflictions, and how to reap benefit by them; had need of the word in concurrence with the rod to bring them to repentance: therefore it is well for those that are sick, if they have these messengers of the Lord of Hosts with them, these interpreters, to show unto them God's uprightness, Job 33. 23. When the leper was shut out, and could not go to the priests, it was well that the priests might come to him. Is any sick? Let him send for the elders, the ministers, Jam. 5. 14. If we apply it to the spiritual leprosy of sin, it intimates, that, when we withdraw from those who walk disorderly, that they may be ashamed, we must not count them as enemies, but admonish them as brethren, 2 Thess. 3. 15; and also that when God by his grace has brought those to repentance who were shut out of communion for scandal, they ought, with tenderness, and joy, and sincere affection, to be received in again. Thus Paul orders concerning the excommunicated Corinthian, that, when he had given evidences of his repentance, they should forgive him, and comfort him, and confirm their love towards him, 2 Cor. 7. 7, 8. And ministers are intrusted by our Master with the declarative power of loosening as well as binding. It must be done with great caution and deliberation, impartially and without respect of persons, with earnest prayer to God for direction, and a sincere regard to the edification of the body of Christ; due care being always taken that sinners may not be encouraged by an excess of lenity, nor penitents discouraged by an excess of severity. Wisdom and sincerity are profitable to direct in this case.

III. If it were found that the leprosy was healed, the priest must declare it with a particular solemnity. The leper or his friends were to get ready two birds caught for this purpose, (any sort of wild birds that were clean,) and cedar-wood, and scarlet, and hyssop; for all these were to be used in the ceremony.

A preparation was to be made of blood and water, with which the leper must be sprinkled. One of the birds (and the Jews say, if there was any difference, it must be the larger and better of the two) was to be killed over an earthen cup of spring water, so that the blood of the bird might discolor the water. This (as some other types) had its accomplishment in the death of Christ, when out of his pierced side there came water and blood, John 19. 34. Thus Christ comes into the sanctuary for its cure and cleansing, not by water only, but by water and blood, 1 John 5. 6.

2. The living bird, with a little scarlet wool, and a bunch of hyssop, must be fastened to a cedar-stick, dipped in the water and blood, which must be so sprinkled upon him that was to be cleansed, v. 6, 7. The cedar-wood signified the restoring of the leper to his strength and soundness, for that is a type of regeneration. The scarlet wool signified his recovering a floral colour again, for the leprosy made him white as snow. And the hyssop intimated the removing of the disagreeable scent which commonly attended the leprosy. The cedar the statelyst plant, and hyssop the meanest, are here used together in this service: (see 1 Kings 4. 38.) for those of the lowest rank in the church may be of use in their place, as well as those that are most eminent, 1 Cor. 12. 21. Some make the slain bird to typify Christ dying for our sins, and the living bird Christ rising again for our justification. The dipping of the living bird in the blood of the slain bird intimated that the merit of Christ's death was that which made his resurrection effectual for our justification. He took his blood into the holy place, and there appeared a lamb as it had been slain. The cedar, scarlet, and hyssop, must all be dipped in the blood; for by this word are signified all the operations of the Spirit, receive their efficacy for our cleansing from the blood of Christ. The leper must be sprinkled seven times, to signify a complete purification; in allusion to which David prays, Wash me thoroughly, Ps. 51. 2. Naaman was bid to wash seven times, 2 Kings 5. 10.

3. The living bird was then to be let loose in the open field, to signify that the leper, being cleansed, was now no longer under restraint and confinement, but might take his liberty to go where he pleased. But this being signified by the flight of a bird toward heaven, was an intimation to him henceforth to seek the things that are above, and not to spend this new life, to which God had restored him, merely in the pursuit of earthly things. This typified that glorious liberty of the children of God, which they are advanced to who through grace are sprinkled with Christ's pure blood. They were to call those souls before bowed down to the dust, (Ps. 44. 25.) in grief and fear, now fly in the open firmament of heaven, and soar upwards upon the wings of faith and hope, and holy love and joy.

4. The priest must, upon this, pronounce him clean. It was requisite that this should be done with solemnity, that the leper might himself be the more affected with the mercy of God to him in his recovery, and that others might be satisfied to converse with him. Christ is our Priest, to whom the Father has committed all judgment, and particularly the judgment of the leprosy. By his definitive sentence impotent sinners will have their everlasting portion assigned them with the unclean, (Job 36. 14.) out of the holy city; and all that by his grace are cured and cleansed, shall be received into the camp of his saints, into which no unclean thing shall enter. Those are clean indeed whom Christ pronounces so, and they need not regard what men say of them. But though Christ was the End of this law for righteousness, yet being in the days of his flesh made under the law, which as yet stood unrepealed, he ordered those lepers whom he had cleansed miraculously, to go and show themselves to the priest, and offer for their cleansing according to the law, Matth. 8. 4. Luke 17. 14. The type must be kept up till it was answered by its antitype.

Lastly, When the leper was pronounced clean, he must wash his body and his clothes, and shave off all his hair, (v. 8.) must still tarry seven days out of the camp, and on the seventh day must do it again, v. 9. The priest having pronounced him clean from the disease, he must make himself as clean as ever he could from all the remains of it, and from all other defilements, and he must take time to do this. Thus they who have the comfort of the remission of their sins, by the sprinkling of the blood of Christ upon their consciences, must with the utmost care and caution cleanse themselves from all filthiness both of flesh and spirit, and thoroughly purge themselves from their old sins: for every one that hath this hope in him will be concerned to purify himself.

10. And on the eighth day he shall take two he-lambs without blemish, and one ewe-lamb of the first year without blemish, and three tenth deals of fine flour for a meat-offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil. 11. And the priest that maketh him clean shall present the man that is to be made clean, and those things, before the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: 12. And the priest shall take one he-lamb, and offer him for a trespass-offering, and the log of oil, and wave them for a wave-offering before the Lord: 13. And he shall slay the lamb in the place where he shall kill the sin-offering and the burnt-offering, in the holy place: for as the sin-offering is the priest's, so is the trespass-offering: it is most holy. 14. And the priest shall take some of the blood of the trespass-offering, and the priest shall put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot: 15. And the priest shall take some of the log of oil, and pour it into the palm of his own left hand: 16. And the priest shall dip his right finger in the oil that is in his left hand, and shall sprinkle of the oil with his finger seven times before the Lord: 17. And of the rest of the oil that is in his hand shall the priest put upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the blood of the trespass-offering: 18. And the remnant of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall pour upon the head of him that is to be cleansed; and the priest shall make an atonement for him before the Lord. 19. And the priest shall offer the sin-offering, and make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed from his uncleanness; and afterward he shall kill the burnt-offering. 20. And the priest shall offer the burnt-offering, and the meat-offering, upon the altar: and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and he shall be clean.

To complete the purification of the leper, on the eighth day, after the former solemnity performed without the camp, and, as it should seem, before he returned to his own habitation, he was to attend at the door of the tabernacle, and was there to be presented to the Lord, with his offerings. Observe here, 1. That the mercies of God oblige us to present ourselves to him, Rom. 12. 1. 2. When God has restored us to the liberty of ordinances again, after restraint by sickness, distance, or otherwise, we should take the first opportunity of testifying our respect to God, and our affection to his sanctuary, by a diligent improvement of the liberty we are restored to. When Christ had healed the impotent man, he soon after found him in the temple, John 5. 14. When Hezekiah asks, What is the sign that I shall go up to the house of the Lord? He means, What is the sign of my restoration? Intimating, that, if God restored him his health, so that he should be able to go abroad, the house of the Lord should be the first place he would go to. 3. When we present ourselves before the Lord, we must present our offerings, devoting to God with ourselves all we have and can do. 4. Both we and our offerings must be presented before the Lord, by the Priest that made us clean, even our Lord Jesus, else neither we nor they can be accepted.

Three lambs the cleansed leper was to bring, with a meat-offering, and a log of oil, which was about half a pint.

Now, (1.) Most of the ceremony peculiar to this case was about the trespass-offering, the Lamb for which was offered first, v. 12. And, beside the usual rites with which the trespass-offering was offered, some of the blood was to be put upon the ear, and thumb, and great toe of the leper that was to be cleansed, v. 14. The very same ceremony that was used in the consecration of the priests, ch. 8. 23. 24. It was a mortification to them to see the same purification necessary for them that was for a leper. The Jews say, that the leper stood without the gate of the tabernacle, and the priest within, and thus the ceremony was performed through the gate, signifying that now he was admitted with other Israelites to attend in the courts of the Lord's house again, and was as welcome as ever; though he had been a leper, and though perhaps the name might stick by him as long as he lived, (as we read of one who, probably, was cleansed by our Lord Jesus, who yet afterward is called Simon the leper, Matth. 26. 6.) yet he was as freely admitted as ever to communion with God and fellowship with his people. The blood of the trespass-offering had been put with the priest's finger upon the extremities of the body, to include the whole, some of the oil that he brought, which was first waved, and then sprinkled before the Lord, was in like manner put in the same places upon the blood.

"The blood" (says the learned Bishop Patrick) "seems to have been a token of forgiveness; the oil, of healing;" for God first forgiveth our iniquities, and then healeth our diseases, Ps. 103. 3. See Isa. 38. 17. Whenever the blood of Christ is applied for justification, the oil of the Spirit is applied for sanctification. But for these two we are made capable, and both necessary to our acceptance with God. Nor shall our former leprosy, if it be healed by repentance, be any bar to these glorious privileges. Cleansed lepers are as welcome to the blood and the oil as consecrated priests. Such were some of you, but ye are washed. When the leper was sprinkled, the water must have blood in it; (v. 5.) when he was anointed, the oil must have blood under it, that all the graces and comforts of the Spirit, all his purifying, dignifying influences, are owing to the death of Christ: it is by his blood alone that we are sanctified.

(2.) Beside this, there must be a sin-offering and a burnt-offering, a lamb for each, v. 19, 20. By each of these offerings, it is said, the priest shall make an atonement for him. [1.] His moral guilt shall be removed; the sin for which the leprosy was sent shall be pardoned, and all the sins he had been guilty of in his afflicted state. Note, The removal of any outward trouble is then doubly comfortable to us, when at the same time God gives us some assurance of the forgiveness of our sins. If we receive the atonement, we have reason to rejoice, Rom. 5. 11. [2.] His ceremonial pollution shall be removed, which had kept him from the participation of the holy things. And this is called making an atonement for him, because our restoration to the privileges of God's children, typified hereby, is owing purely to the great Propitiation. When the atonement is made for him, he shall be clean, both to his own satisfaction, and to his reputation among his neighbours; he shall retrieve both his credit and his comfort; and both these true penitents become entitled to, both case and honour, by their interest in the atonement. The burnt-offering, beside the atonement that was made by it, was a thankful acknowledgment of God's mercy to him; and the more immediate the hand of God was both in the sickness and in the cure, the more reason he had thus to give glory to him: and thus, as our Saviour speaks, (Mark, 1. 44.) to offer for his cleansing all those things which Moses commanded for a testimony unto them.

21. And if he be poor, and cannot get so much; then he shall take one lamb for a trespass-offering to be waved, to make an atonement for him, and one tenth deal of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering, and a log of oil; 22. And two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, such as he is able to get; and the one shall be a sin-offering, and the other a burnt-offering. 23. And he shall bring them on the eighth day, for his cleansing, unto the priest, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, before the Lord. 24. And the priest shall take the lamb of the trespass-offering, and the log of oil, and the priest shall wave them for a wave-offering before the Lord. 25. And he shall kill the lamb of the trespass-offering, and the priest shall take some of the blood of the trespass-offering, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot: 26. And the priest shall pour of the oil into the palm of his own left hand.

27. And the priest shall sprinkle with his right finger some of the oil that is in his left hand, seven times before the Lord: 28. And the priest shall put of the oil that is in his hand upon the tip of the right ear of him that is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, upon the place of the blood of the trespass-offering: 29. And the rest of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall put upon the head of him that is to be cleansed, to make an atonement for him before the Lord.

30. And he shall offer the one of the turtle-doves, or of the young pigeons, such as he can get; 31. Even such as he is able to get, the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, with the meat-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for him that is to be cleansed before the Lord. 32. This is the law of him in whom is the plague of leprosy, whose hand is not able to get that which pertaineth to his cleansing.

We have here the gracious provision which the law made for the cleansing of poor lepers. If they were not able to bring three lambs, and three tenth-deals of flour, they must bring one lamb, and one tenth-deal of flour; and, instead of the other two lambs, two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons. v. 21, 22. Here see, 1. That the poverty of the person concerned would not excuse him, if he brought no offering at all. Let none think that, because they are poor, God requires no service from them, since he has considered them, and demands that which it is in the power of the poorest to give. “My son, give me thy heart, and with that the calves of thy beasts shall be accepted instead of the calves of the stall.” 2. That God expected from those who were able, according to their ability, as is expressed, his commandments are not grievous, nor does he make us to serve with an offering. The poor are as welcome to God's altar as the rich; and if there be first a willing mind, and an honest heart, two pigeons, when they are the utmost a man is able to get, are as acceptable to God as two lambs; for he requires according to what a man has, and not according to what he has not. But it is observable, that though a meaner sacrifice was accepted from the poor, yet the very same ceremony was used for them as was for the rich; for their souls are as precious, and Christ and his gospel are the same to both. Let us therefore have the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ with respect of persons, Jam. 2. 1.

33. And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying, 34. When ye be come into the land of Canaan, which I give to you for a possession, and I put the plague of leprosy in a house of the land of your possession; 35. And he that owneth the house shall come, and tell the priest, saying, It seemeth to me there is as it were a plague in the house; 36. Then the priest shall command that they empty the house, before the priest go into it to see the plague, that all that is in the house be not made unclean; and afterward the priest shall go in to see the house: 37. And he shall look on the plague, and, behold, if the plague be in the walls of the house, with hollow strakes, greenish or reddish, which in sight are lower than the wall; 38. Then the priest shall go out of the house, to the door of the house, and shut up the house seven days: 39. And the priest shall come again the seventh day, and shall look: and, behold, if the plague be spread in the walls of the house, 40. Then the priest shall command that they take away the stones in which the plague is, and they shall cast them into an unclean place without the city: 41. And he shall cause the house to be scraped within round about, and they shall pour out the dust that they scrape off without the city, into an unclean place: 42. And they shall take other stones, and put them in the place of those stones; and he shall take other mortar, and shall plaster the house. 43. And if the plague come again, and break out in the house, after that he hath taken away the stones, and after he hath scraped the house, and after it is plastered; 44. Then the priest shall come and look, and, behold, if the plague be spread in the house, it is a fretting leprosy in the house: it is unclean. 45. And he shall break down the house, the stones of it, and the timber thereof, and all the mortar of the house; and he shall carry them forth out of the city, into an unclean place. 46. Moreover, he that goeth into the house, all the while that it is shut up, shall be unclean until the even. 47. And he that lieth in the house shall wash his clothes; and he that eateth in the house shall wash his clothes. 48. And if the priest shall come in, and look upon it, and, behold, the plague hath not spread in the house, after the house was plastered; then the priest shall pronounce the house clean, because the plague is healed. 49. And he shall take to cleanse the house two birds, and cedar-wood, and scarlet, and hyssop: 50. And he shall kill the one of the birds in an earthen vessel over running water: 51. And he shall take the cedar-wood, and the hyssop, and the scarlet, and the living bird, and dip them in the blood of the slain bird, and in the running water, and sprinkle the house seven times: 52. And he shall cleanse the house with the blood of the bird, and with the running water, and with the living bird, and with the cedar-wood, and with the hyssop, and with the scarlet: 53. But he shall let go the living bird out of the city into the open fields, and make an atonement for the house: and it shall be clean.

This is the law concerning the leprosy in a house. Now that they were in the wilderness, they dwelt in houses; and had no houses; and therefore this is made only an appendix to the former laws concerning the leprosy, because it related, not to their present state, but to their future settlement.

The leprosy in a house is as unaccountable as the leprosy in a garment; but, if we see not what natural causes of it can be assigned, we may resolve it into the power of the God of nature, who here says, I put the leprosy in a house, (v. 34.) as his curse is said to enter into a house, and consume it with the thunder, and smoke, and pestilence, Zech. 5. 4.

Now, 1. It is supposed, that, even in Canaan itself, the land of promise, their houses might be infected with a leprosy. Though it was a holy land, that would not secure them from this plague, while the inhabitants were many of them so unholy. Thus, a place and a name in the visible church will not secure wicked people from God's judgments.

2. It is likewise taken for granted that the owner of the house will make the priest acquainted with it, as soon as he sees the least cause to suspect the leprosy in his house; (v. 35.) It seemed to me there was as it were a plague in the house. Sin, where that reigns in a house, is a plague there as it is in a heart. And masters of families should be aware and afraid of the first appearance of gross sin in their families, and put away the iniquity, whatever it is, far from their tabernacles, Job 22. 23. They should be jealous with a godly jealousy concerning those under their charge, lest they be drawn into sin, and take early advice, if it but seem that there is a plague in the house, lest the contagion spread, and many be by it defiled and destroyed.

3. If the priest, upon search, find that the leprosy is got into the house, he must try to cure it, by taking out that part of the building that was infected, v. 40, 41. This was like cutting off a gangrened limb, for the preservation of the rest of the body. Corruption should be purged out in time, before it spread; for a little leaven leavens the whole lump. If thy right hand offend thee, cut it off.

4. If yet it remained in the house, the whole house must be pulled down, and all the materials carried to the dunghill, v. 44, 45. The owner had better be without a dwelling, than live in one that was infected. Note, The leprosy of sin, if it be obstatute under the methods of cure, will at last be the ruin of families and churches. If Babylon will not be healed, she shall be forsaken and abandoned, and (according to the law respecting the leprous house) they shall not take of her a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations, Jer. 51. 9, 26. The remainders of sin and corruption in our mortal bodies are like this leprosy in the house: after all our pains in scraping and plastering, we shall never be quite clear of it till the earthly house of this tabernacle be dissolved and taken down; when we are dead, we shall be free from sin, and not till then, Rom. 6. 7.

5. If the taking out of the infected stones cured the house, and the leprosy did not spread any further, then the house must be cleansed; not only aired, that it might be healthful, but purified from the ceremonial pollution, that it might be fit to be the habitation of an Israelite. The ceremony of its cleansing was much that same with that of cleansing a leprous person, v. 49, 50. This intimated that the house was smitten for the man's sake, (as Bishop Patrick expresses it,) and he was to look upon himself as preserved by divine mercy. The houses of Israelites are said to be dedicated, (Deut. 20. 5.) for they were a holy nation, and therefore they ought to keep their houses pure from all ceremonial pollutions, that they might be fit for the service of that God to whom they were devoted. And the same care should be taken to reform whatever is amiss in our families, that we and our houses may serve the Lord.

Some have thought the leprosy in the house was typical of the idolatry of the Jewish church, which did strangely cleave to it; for, though some of the reformed kings took away the infected stones, yet still it broke out again, till, by the captivity of Babylon, God took down the house, and carried it to an unclean land; and that proved an effectual cure of their inclination to idols and idolatrous worship.

54. This is the law for all manner of plague of leprosy, and scall, 55. And for the leprosy of a garment, and of a house, 56. And for a rising, and for a scab, and for a bright spot; 57. To teach when it is unclean, and when it is clean: this is the law of leprosy.

This is the conclusion of this law concerning the leprosy. There is no repetition of it in Deuteronomy, only a general memorandum given, (Deut. 24. 8.) Take heed in the plague of leprosy. We may see in this law, 1. The gracious care God took of his people Israel, for to them only his law pertaining, and not to the Gentiles. When Naaman the Syrian was cured of his leprosy, he was not bidden to show himself to the priest, though he was cured in Jordan, as the Jews that were cured by our Saviour were. Thus they who are intrusted with the key of discipline in the church, judge them only that are within; but them that are without, God judgeth, 1 Cor. 5. 12, 13. 2. The religious care we ought to take of ourselves, to keep our minds from the dominion of all sinful affections and dispositions, which are both their disease and their defilement, that we may be fit for the service of God. We ought also to avoid all bad company, and, as much as may be, to avoid coming within the danger of being infected by it. Touch not the unclean thing, saith the Lord, and I will receive you, 2 Cor. 6. 17.

CHAP. XV.

In this chapter, we have laws concerning other ceremonial uncleannesses contracted, either by bodily disease like that of the leper, or some natural incidents; and this either, 1. In men, v. 1. 18. Or, 2. In women, v. 19. 33. We need not be at all curious in explaining these antiquated laws, it is enough if we observe the general intention; but we have need to be very cautious, lest sin take occasion by the commandment to become more exceeding sinful; and exceeding sinful it is, when lust is kindled by sparks of fire from God's altar. The case is bad with the soul when it is putrefied by that which should purify it.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses and to Aaron, saying, 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When any man hath a running issue out of his flesh, because of his issue he is unclean. 3. And this shall be his uncleanness in his issue: whether his flesh run with his issue, or his flesh be stopped from his issue, it is his uncleanness. 4. Every bed whereon he lieth that hath the issue is unclean: and every thing wherein he sitteth shall be unclean. 5. And whosoever toucheth his bed shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 6. And he that sitteth on any thing wherein he sat that hath the issue shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 7. And he that toucheth the flesh of him that hath the issue shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 8. And if he that hath the issue spitt upon him that is clean, then he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 9. And what saddle soever he rideth upon that hath the issue shall be unclean. 10. And whosoever toucheth any thing that was under him shall be unclean until the even: and he that beareth any of those things shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 11. And whomsoever he toucheth that hath the issue, and hath not rinsed his hands in water, he shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 12. And the vessel of earth that he toucheth which hath the issue shall be broken: and every vessel of wood shall be rinsed in water. 13. And when he that hath an issue is cleansed of his issue, then he shall number to himself seven days for his cleansing, and wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in running water, and shall be clean. 14. And on the eighth day he shall take to him two turtle-doves, or two young pigeons, and come before the Lord unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and give them unto the priest: 15. And the priest shall offer them, the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for him before the Lord for his issue. 16. And if any man's seed of copulation go out from him, then he shall wash all his flesh in water, and be unclean until the even. 17. And every garment, and every skin, whereon is the seed of copulation, shall be washed with water, and be unclean until the even. 18. The woman also with whom man shall lie with seed of copulation, they shall both bathe themselves in water, and be unclean until the even.

We have here the law concerning the ceremonial uncleanness that was Contracted by running issues in men. It is called in the margin, (v. 2.) the running of the reins: a very grievous and loathsome disease, which was, 1. Usually the effect and consequent of wantonness and uncleanness, and a disolute course of life, filling men's bones with the sins of their youth, and leaving them to mourn at the last, when all the pleasures of their wickedness are vanished and gone, and nothing remains but the pain and anguish of a rotten carcass, and a wound-even. 24. And if any man lie with her at all, and her flowers be upon him, he shall be unclean seven days; and all the bed whereon he lieth shall be unclean. 25. And if a woman have an issue of her blood many days out of the time of her separation, or if it run beyond the time of her separation; all the days of the issue of her uncleanness shall be as the days of her separation; she shall be unclean. 26. Every bed whereon she lieth all the days of her issue shall be unto her as the bed of her separation; and whatsoever she sitteth upon shall be unclean, as the uncleanness of her separation. 27. And whosoever toucheth those things shall be unclean, and shall wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even. 28. But if she be cleansed of her issue, then she shall number to herself seven days, and after that she shall be clean. 29. And on the eighth day she shall take unto her two turtles, or two young pigeons, and bring them unto the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. 30. And the priest shall offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for her before the Lord, for the issue of her uncleanness. 31. Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel from their uncleanness, that they die not in their uncleanness, when they defile my tabernacle that is among them. 32. This is the law of him that hath an issue, and of him whose seed goeth from him, and is defiled therewith; 33. And of her that is sick of her flowers, and of him that hath an issue of the man, and of the woman, and of him that lieth with her which is unclean.

This is concerning the ceremonial uncleanness which women lay under from their issues, both those that were regular and healthful, and according to the course of nature, (v. 19. 24.) and those that were unseasonable, excessive, and the disease of the body; such was the bloody issue of that poor woman who was suddenly cured by touching the hem of Christ's garment, after she had lain twelve years under her distemper, and had spent her estate upon physicians and physic in vain. This made the woman that was afflicted with it unclean, (v. 25.) and every thing she touched unclean, v. 26. 27. And if she was cured, and found, by seven days' trial, that she was perfectly free from her issue of blood, she was to be cleansed by the offering of two turtle doves, or two young pigeons, to make an atonement for her. 28. 29. All wickednesses, particularly idolaetries, are compared to the uncleanness of a removed woman, (Ezek. 36. 17.) and, in allusion to this, it is said of Jerusalem, (Lam. 1. 9.) Her filthiness is in her skirts, so that (as it follows, v. 17.) she was shunned as a menstruous woman.

The reasons given for all these laws (which, we are ready to think, might very well have been spared) we have, v. 31.

1. Thus shall ye separate the children of Israel (for to them only, and their servants and proselytes, these laws pertained) from their uncleanness: that is, (1.) By these laws they were taught their privilege and honour, that they were purified unto God a peculiar people, and were intended by the holiness of God, for a kingdom of priests, a holy nation; for that was the element in which they were not sent to others. (2.) They were also taught their duty, which was to preserve the honour of their purity, and to keep themselves from all sinful pollutions. It was easy for them to argue, that, if those pollutions which were natural, unavoidable, involuntary, their affliction and not their sin, rendered them for the time so odious, that they were not fit for communion with God; then those things were odious and filthy were they, if they sinned against the light and law of nature, by drunkenness, adultery, fraud, and the like sins, which defile the very mind and conscience. And if these ceremonial pollutions could not be done away but by sacrifice and offering, something greater and much more valuable must be expected and depended upon for the purifying of the soul from the uncleanness of sin.

3. In all these laws there seems to be a special regard had to the honour of the tabernacle, which none must approach to in their uncleanness, that they defile not my tabernacle. Infinite Wisdom took this course to preserve in the minds of that careless people a continual dread of, and veneration for, the manifestations of God's glory and presence among them in his sanctuary. Now that the tabernacle of God was with men, familiarity would be apt to breed contempt, and therefore the law made so many things of frequent incidence to be ceremonial pollutions, and to involve an incapacity of drawing near to the sanctuary, (making death the penalty,) that so they might approach with great caution and reverence, and serious preparation, and fear of being found unfit. Thus they were taught never to be defile themselves with an awful sense of their distance and danger, and an exact observance of every thing that was required, in order to their safety and acceptance.

And what duty must we learn from all this? (1.) Let us bless God that we are not under the yoke of those carnal ordinances; that, as nothing can destroy us, so nothing can defile us, but sin. They may now partake of the Lord's supper who are not under uncleanliness; and the defilement we contract by our sins of daily iniquity, we may be cleansed from in secret by the renewed acts of repentance and faith, without bathing in water, or bringing an offering to the door of the tabernacle. (2.) Let us carefully abstain from all sin, as defiling to the conscience, and particularly from all fleshly lusts; possessing our vessel in sanctification and true holiness, which not only pollute the soul, but war against it, and threaten its ruin. (3.) Let us all see how indispensably necessary real holiness is to our future happiness, and get our hearts purified by faith, that we may see God. Perhaps it is in allusion to these laws, which forbade the unclean to approach the sanctuary, that, when it is asked, Who shall stand in God's holy place? it is answered, He that hath clean hands and a pure heart; (Ps. 24. 3. 4.) for without holiness no man shall see the Lord.
CHAP. XVI.

In this chapter, we have the institution of the annual solemnity of the day of atonement, an expression which had as much gospel in it as perhaps any of the appointments of the ceremonial law, as appears by the reference the apostle makes to it, Heb. 9. 7, &c. We had, before, divers laws concerning sin-offerings for particular persons, and to be offered upon particular occasions; but this is concerning the stated sacrifice, in which the whole nation was interested. The whole service of the day is connected to be put in practice. 1. He must enter into the most holy place but upon this day, v. 1, 2. If he must come dressed in linen garments, v. 4. III. He must bring a sin-offering and a burnt-offering for himself, (v. 3.) offer his sin-offering, (v. 6. 11.) then go within the vail with the blood of oxen and bulls of burnt-offerings; and sprinkle the blood before the mercy-seat, v. 12. 14. IV. Two goats must be provided for the people, lots cast upon them, and, 1. One of them must be a sin-offering for the people, (v. 3. 7. 8.) and the blood of it must be sprinkled before the mercy-seat; (v. 15. 17.) and then some of the blood of both the sin-offerings must be sprinkled upon the altar, v. 18. 19. 2. The other must be a scapegoat, (v. 10.) the sins of Israel must be confessed over him, and then he must be sent away into the wilderness, (v. 20. 22.) and he that brought him away must be ceremonially unclean, v. 26. V. The burnt-offerings burnt upon the altar, and their flesh burnt without the camp, v. 23. 23, 27, 28. VI. The people were to observe the day religiously by a holy rest, and holy mourning for sin; and this was to be a statute for ever, v. 29. 34.

1. And the Lord spake unto Moses after the death of the two sons of Aaron, when they offered before the Lord, and died; 2. And the Lord said unto Moses, Speak unto Aaron thy brother, that he come not at all times into the holy place within the vail, before the mercy-seat which is upon the ark, that he die not: for I will appear in the cloud upon the mercy-seat. 3. Thus shall Aaron come into the holy place; With a young bullock for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering. 4. He shall put on the holy linen coat, and he shall have the linen breeches upon his flesh, and shall be girded with a linen girdle, and with the linen mitre shall he be attired: these are holy garments; therefore shall he wash his flesh in water, and so put them on.

Here is, The date of this law concerning the day of atonement: it was after the death of the two sons of Aaron, (v. 1.) which we read, ch. 10. 1. (1.) Lest Aaron should fear that any remaining guilt of that sin should cleave to his family, or (seeing the priests were divided into two branches, sons of Aaron and sons of his other sons should be the ruin of his family, he is directed how to make atonement for his house, that it might keep in with God; for the atonement for it would be the establishment of it, and preserve the entail of the blessing upon it. (2.) The priests being warned, by the death of Nadab and Abihu, to approach God with reverence and godly fear, (with which they came at their ordination) lest they be here given now the nearest approach might be made, not only without peril, but to unspeakable advantage and comfort, if the directions were observed. When they were cut off for an undue approach, the rest must not say, "Then we will not draw near at all," but, "Then we will do it by rule." They died for their sin, therefore God graciously provides for the rest, that they die not. Thus God's judgments on some should be instructions to others.

2. The design of this law. One intention of it was to preserve a veneration for the most holy place, within the vail, where the Shechinah, or divine glory, was pleased to dwell between the cherubims; (v. 2.) Speak unto Aaron that he come not at all times into the holy place. Before the vail some of the priests came every day to burn incense upon the golden altar, but within the vail none must ever come but the high priest on one day in the year, and with great ceremony and caution. That place where God manifested his special presence must not be made common. If none must come into the presence-chamber of an earthly king uncalled, no, not the queen herself, upon pain of death, (Esth. 4. 11.) was it not requisite that the same sacred respect should be paid to the King of kings? But see what a blessed change is made by the gospel of Christ; all good Christians have now boldness to enter into the holiest, through the vail, every day; (Heb. 10. 19, 20.) and we come boldly (not as Aaron must, with fear and trembling) to the throne of grace, or mercy-seat, Heb. 4. 16. While the manifestations of God's presence and grace were sensible, it was requisite that they should thus be defined, and upon the reserve, because the objects of sense, the more familiar they are made, the less awful or delightful they become; but now that they are purely spiritual, it is otherwise; for the objects of faith, the more they are conversed with, the more do they manifest of their greatness and goodness: now, therefore, we are welcome to come at all times into the holy place not made with hands, for we are made to sit together with Christ in heavenly places by faith, Eph. 2. 6. Then Aaron must not come near at all times, lest he die: we now must come near at all times, that we may live: it is distance only that is our death. Then God appeared in the cloud upon the mercy-seat, but now with open face we behold, not in a dark cloud, but in a clear glass, the glory of the Lord, 2 Cor. 3. 18.

3. The person to whom the work of this day was committed; and that was the high priest only; (v. 3.) Thus shall Aaron come into the holy place. He was to do all himself upon the day of atonement; only there was a second provided to be his substitute or supporter, in case any thing should befall him, either of sickness or ceremonial uncleanness, that he could not perform the service of the day. All Christians are spiritual priests, but Christ only is the High Priest, and he alone it is that makes atonement, nor needed he either assistant or substitute.

4. The attire of the high priest in this service: he was not to be dressed up in his rich garments, that were peculiar to himself: he was not to put on the ephod, with the precious stones in it, but only the linen clothes, which he wore in common with the inferior priests; v. 4. That meaner dress did best become him on this day of humiliation; and, being so provided, he would be the more expedient for the work and service of the day, which were all to go through his hands. Christ, our High Priest, made atonement for sin in our nature; not in the robes of his own peculiar glory, but the linen garments of our mortality, clean indeed, but mean.

5. And he shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel two kids of the goats for a sin-offering, and one ram for a burnt-offering. 6. And Aaron shall offer his bullock of the sin-offering which is for himself, and make an atonement for himself, and for his house. 7. And he shall take the two goats, and present them before the Lord at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation.
6. And Aaron shall cast lots upon the two goats; one lot for the Lord, and the other lot for the scape-goat. 9. And Aaron shall bring the goat upon which the Lord's lot fell, and offer him for a sin-offering: 10. But the goat, on which the lot fell to be the scape-goat, shall be presented alive before the Lord, to make an atonement with him, and to let him go for a scape-goat into the wilderness. 11. And Aaron shall bring the bullock of the sin-offering which is for himself, and shall make an atonement for himself, and for his house, and shall kill the bullock of the sin-offering which is for himself. 12. And he shall take a censer full of burning coals of fire from off the altar before the Lord, and his hands full of sweet incense beaten small, and bring it within the vail. 13. And he shall put the incense upon the fire before the Lord, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy-seat that is upon the testimony, that he die not: 14. And he shall take of the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it with his finger upon the mercy-seat eastward: and before the mercy-seat shall he sprinkle of the blood with his finger seven times.

The Jewish writers say, that, for seven days before the day of expiation, the high priest was to retire from his own house, and to dwell in a chamber of the temple, that he might prepare himself for the service of this great day. During those seven days, he himself did the work of the inferior priests about the sacrifices, incense, &c. that he might have his hand in for this day; he must have the institution read to him again and again, that he might be fully apprized of the whole method. 1. He was to begin the service of the day very early, with the usual morning sacrifice, after he had first washed his whole body before he dressed him, and his hands and feet again after. He then burned the daily incense, dressed the lamps, and offered the extraordinary sacrifice appointed for this day, (not here, but Numb. 29. 6,) a bullock, a ram, and seven lambs, all for burnt-offerings. This he is supposed to have done, in his high priest's garments. 2. He must now put off his rich robes, bathe himself, put on the linen garments, and present unto the Lord his own bullock, which was to be a sin-offering for himself and his house, v. 6. The bullock was set between the temple and the altar, and the offering of him mentioned in this verse was the making of a solemn confession of his sins and the sins of his house, earnestly praying for the forgiveness of them, and this with his hands on the head of the bullock. 3. He must then cast lots upon the two goats, which were to make (both together) one sin-offering for the congregation. One of these goats must be slain, in token of a satisfaction to be made to God's justice for sin, the other must be sent away, in token of the remission or discharge of sin by the mercy of God. Both must be presented together to God, (v. 7,) before the lot was cast upon them, and afterward the scape-goat by itself, v. 10. Some think that goats were chosen for the sin-offering, because, by the disagreeableness of their smell, the offensiveness of sin is represented; others think, because it was said that the demons which the heathens then worshipped, often appeared to their worshippers in the form of goats, God therefore obliged his people to sacrifice goats, that they might never be tempted to sacrifice to goats. 4. The next thing to be done, was, to kill the bullock for the sin-offering, for himself and his house, v. 11. "Now," say the Jews, "he must again put his hand on the head of the bullock, and repeat the confession and supplication, that he might sacrifice it, and then, 5. He took a censer of burning coals (that would not smoke) in one hand, and a dish full of the sweet incense in the other, and then went into the holy of holies through the vail, went up toward the ark, set the coals down upon the floor, and scattered the incense upon them, so that the room was immediately filled with smoke. The Jews say that he was to go in one-way, that he might not meet the face of the Divine Glory, till it was covered with smoke; that then he must come out backward, out of reverence to the Divine Majesty; and, after a short prayer, he was to hasten out of the sanctuary, to show himself to the people, that they might not suspect that he had misbehaved himself, and died before the Lord. 6. He then fetched the blood of the bullock from the priest whom he had left stirring it, and took that in with him the second time into the holy of holies, which was now filled with the smoke of the incense, and sprinkled with his finger of that blood upon, or rather toward, the mercy-seat, once over against the top of it, and then seven times toward the lower part of it, v. 14. But the drops of blood (as the Jews expound it) all fell upon the ground, and none touched the mercy-seat. Having done this, he came out of the most holy place, set the basin of blood down in the sanctuary, and went out. 15. Then shall he kill the goat of the sin-offering, that is for the people, and bring his blood within the vail, and do with that blood as he did with the blood of the bullock, and sprinkle it upon the mercy-seat, and before the mercy-seat. 16. And he shall make an atonement for the holy place, because of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and because of their transgressions in all their sins: and so shall he do for the tabernacle of the congregation that remaineth among them in the midst of their uncleanness. 17. And there shall be no man in the tabernacle of the congregation when he goeth in to make an atonement in the holy place, until he come out, and have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for all the congregation of Israel. 18. And he shall go out unto the altar that is before the Lord, and make an atonement for it; and shall take of the blood of the bullock, and of the blood of the goat, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about. 19. And he shall sprinkle of the blood upon it with his finger seven...

When the priest was come out from sprinkling the blood of the bullock before the mercy-seat, 1. He must next kill the goat which was the sin-offering for the people, (v. 15.) and go the third time into the holy of holies, to sprinkle the blood of the goat, as he had done that of the bullock; and thus he was to make atonement for the sins of the people, (v. 16,) that is, whereas the people by their sins had provoked God to take away those tokens of his favourable presence with them, and rendered even that holy place unfit to be the habitation of the holy God, atonement was hereby made for sin, that God, being reconciled to them, might continue with them. 2. He must then do the same for the outward part of the tabernacle, that he had done for the inner room; by sprinkling the blood of the bullock first, and then of the goat, without the vail, there where the table and incense-altar stood, eight times each, as before. The reason intimated is, because the tabernacle remained among them in the midst of their uncleanliness, v. 16. God would hereby show them how much their hearts needed to be purified, when even the tabernacle, only standing in the midst of such an impure and sinful people, needed this expiation and also that even their devotions and religious performances had much amiss in them, for which it was necessary that atonement should be made. During this solemnity, none of the inferior priests must come into the tabernacle, (v. 17.) but, by standing without, must own themselves unworthy and unfit to minister there, because their follies, and defects, and manifold impurities in their ministry, had made this expiation of the tabernacle necessary. 3. He must then put some of the blood, both of the bullock and of the goat, mixed together, upon the horns of the altar that is before the Lord, v. 18, 19. It is certain that the altar of incense had this blood put upon it, for so it is expressly ordered; (Exod. 30. 10.) but some think that this directs the high priest to the altar of burnt-offerings, for that also is here called the altar, v. 12.) (v. 19.) and said to go out to it, and because it may be presumed, that also had need of an expiation; for to that the gifts and offerings of the children of Israel were all brought, from whose uncleanness the altar is here said to be hallowed.

20. And when he hath made an end of reconciling the holy place, and the tabernacle of the congregation, and the altar, he shall bring the live goat: 21. And Aaron shall lay both his hands upon the head of the live goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their transgressions in all their sins, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness. 22. And the goat shall bear upon him all their iniquities unto a land not inhabited: and he shall let go the goat in the wilderness. 23. And Aaron shall come into the tabernacle of the congregation, and shall put off the linen garments which he put on when he went into the holy place, and shall leave them there: 24. And he shall wash his flesh with water in the holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering, and the burnt-offering of the people, and make an atonement for himself, and for the people. 25. And the fat of the sin-offering shall he burn upon the altar. 26. And he that let go the goat for the scape-goat, shall wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in water, and afterward come into the camp. 27. And the bullock for the sin-offering, and the goat for the sin-offering, whose blood was brought in to make atonement in the holy place, shall one carry forth without the camp; and they shall burn in the fire their skins, and their flesh, and their dung. 28. And he that burneth them shall wash his clothes, and bathe his flesh in water, and afterward he shall come into the camp.

The high priest having presented unto the Lord the expiatory sacrifices, by the sprinkling of their blood, the remainder of which, it is probable, he poured out at the foot of the brazen altar,

1. He is next to confess the sins of Israel, with both his hands upon the head of the scape-goat; (v. 20, 21.) and whenever hands were imposed upon the head of any sacrifice, it was always done with confession, where the goat was brought, and they confessed, as it were, that this being a sin-offering, it must be a confession of sin. In the latter and more degenerate ages of the Jewish church, they had a set form of confession prepared for the high priest, but God here prescribed none; for it might be supposed that the high priest was so well acquainted with the state of the people, and had such a tender concern for them, that he needed not any form. The confession must be as particular as he could make it, not only of all the iniquities of the children of Israel, but all their transgressions in all their sins; in one sin there may be many transgressions from the several aggravating circumstances of it: and in our confessions we should take notice of them; and not only say, I have sinned, but, with Achan, Thus and thus have I done. By this confession, he must put the sins of Israel upon the head of the goat; that is, setting his face against the divine appointment, which constituted such a translation, he must transfer the punishment incurred from the sinners to the sacrifice: which had been but a jest, nay, an affront to God, if he himself had not ordained it.

2. The goat was then to be sent away immediately by the hand of a fit person, pitched upon for the purpose, into a wilderness, a land not inhabited; and God allowed them to make this construction of it, that the sending away of the goat was the sending away of their sins by a free and full remission; (v. 22.) He shall bear upon him all their iniquities.

The losing of the goat was a sign to them, that the sins of Israel should be sought for, and not found, Jer. 50. 20. The later Jews had a custom to tie one shred of scarlet cloth to the horns of the goat, and another to the gate of the temple, or to the top of the rock where the goat was let, and the people concluded that if they turned white, as it saw it usually did, the sins of Israel were forgiven, as it is written, Though your sins have been as scarlet, they shall be as wool: and they add, that, for forty years before the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, the scarlet cloth never changed colour at all; which is a fair confession, that, having rejected the substance, the shadow stood them in no stead.

3. The high priest must then put off his linen garments in the tabernacle, and leave them there, the Jews say, never to be worn more by himself or any other, for they made new ones every year; and he must bathe himself in water, put on his rich clothes, and then offer both his own and the people's burnt-offerings, v. 23, 24. When we have the comfort of our pardon, God must have the glory of it. If we have the benefit of the sacrifice of atonement, we must not grudge the sacrifices of acknowledgment. And it should seem the burning of the fat of the sin-offering was deferred till now (v. 25.) that it might be consumed with the burnt-offerings.

4. The flesh of both those sin-offerings, whose blood was taken within the vail, was to be all burnt, not upon the altar, but at a distance without the camp, to signify both our putting away of sin by true repentance, and the spirit of burning, and God's putting it away by a full remission, so that it shall never rise up in judgment against us.

5. He that took the scape-goat into the wilderness, and that burned the sin-offerings, were to be looked upon as ceremonially unclean, and must not come into the camp till they had washed their clothes, and bathed their flesh in water. Which signified the defiling nature of sin; even the sacrifice, which was but made sin, was defiling: also the imperfection of the legal sacrifices; they were so far from taking away sin, that even they left some stain upon those that touched them.

6. But this was done, the high priest went again into the most holy place to fetch his censer, and so returned to his own house with joy, because he had done his duty, and died not.

29. And this shall be a statute for ever unto you, that in the seventh month, on the tenth day of the month, ye shall afflict your souls, and do no work at all, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger that sojourneth among you. 30. For on that day shall the priest make an atonement for you, to cleanse you, that ye may be clean from all your sins before the Lord. 31. It shall be a sabbath of rest unto you, and ye shall afflict your souls, by a statute for ever.

32. And the priest, whom ye shall anoint, and whom he shall consecrate to minister in the priest's office in his father's stead, shall make the atonement, and shall put on the linen clothes, even the holy garments:

33. And he shall make an atonement for the holy sanctuary, and he shall make an atonement for the tabernacle of the congregation, and for the altar; and he shall make an atonement for the priests, and for all the people of the congregation. 34. And this shall be an everlasting statute unto you, to make an atonement for the children of Israel, for all their sins, once a year. And he did as the Lord commanded Moses.

Here is, 1. The day appointed for this solemnity. It must be observed yearly on the tenth day of the seventh month, v. 29. The seventh had been reckoned the first month, till God appointed that the month in which the children of Israel came out of Egypt, should from thenceforward be accounted and called the first month. Some have fancied that this tenth day of the seventh month was the day of the year on which our first parents fell, and that it was kept as a fast in remembrance of that. Dr. Lightfoot computes that this was the day on which Moses came the last time down from the mount, when he brought with him the renewed tables, and the assurances of God's being reconciled to Israel, and his face shone: that day must be a day of atonement throughout their generations; for the remembrance of God's forgiving them their sin about the golden calf might encourage them to hope that, upon their repentance, he would forgive them all trespasses. 2. The duty of the people on this day. (1.) They must rest from all their labours: It shall be a sabbath of rest, v. 31. The work of the day was itself spiritual, and a good day was done well, therefore they must do no other work at all. The work of humiliation for sin requires such a close application of mind, and such a fixed engagement of the whole man, as will not allow us to turn aside to any other work. The day of atonement seems to be that sabbath spoken of by the prophet, (Isa. 58. 13.) for it is the same with the fast spoken of in the verses before (2.) They must afflict their souls. They must refrain from all bodily refreshments and delights, in token of inward humiliation and contrition of soul for their sins. They all fasted on this day from food, (except the sick and children,) and laid aside their ornaments, and did anoint themselves, as Daniel, ch. 10. 3, 12. David chastened his soul with fasting, Ps. 35. 13. And it signified the mortifying of sin, and turning from it, losing that satisfaction in the ordinances and worship of God, which the sinner might otherwise have derived from them. Doctors advised that they should not on that day read those portions of Scripture which were proper to affect them with delight and joy, because it was a day to afflict their souls. 3. The perpetuity of this institution; It shall be a statute for ever, v. 29, 34. It must not be intermitted any year, nor ever let fall till that constitution should be dissolved, and the type should be superseded by the antitype. As long as we are continually sinning, we must be continually repenting, and receiving the atonement. The law of affliction, our sins for sin, is a statute for ever, which will continue in force till we arrive there where all tears, even those of repentance, will be wiped from our eyes. The apostle observes it as an evidence of the insufficiency of the legal sacrifices to take away sin, and purge the conscience from it, that in them there was a remembrance year after year. Heb. 10. 1, 2. The annual repetition of the sacrifices showed that there was in them only a faint and feeble effort toward making atonement, it could be done effectually only by offering up of the body of Christ once for all, and that once was sufficient; that sacrifice needed not to be repeated.

Let us therefore see what there was of gospel in all this.

I. Here are typified the two great gospel-privileges, of the remission of sin, and access to God, both which we owe to the mediation of our Lord Jesus. Here then let us see, 1. The expiation of guilt which Christ made for us. He is himself both the Maker and the Matter of the atonement; for he is, (1.) The Priest, the High Priest, that makes reconciliation for the sins of the people. Heb. 4. 14. He, and he only, far more fit for the work, was worthy of the honour: he is appointed by the Father to do it, who sanctified him, and sent him into the world for this purpose, that God might in him reconcile the world to himself. He undertook it, and for our sakes sanctified himself, and set himself apart for it, John 17. 19. The high priest's frequent bathing himself on this day, and performing the service of it in the most clean and white, signified the holiness of the Lord Jesus, his perfect freedom from all sin, and his being beautified and adorned with all grace. No man was to be with the high priest when he made atonement, (v. 17.) for our Lord Jesus was to tread the wine-press alone, and of the people there must be none with him; (Isa. 63. 5.) therefore, when he entered upon his sufferings, all his disciples forsook him and fled; for, though the very elect of all his spiritual Israel, and through the vail of his flesh, which was rent for that purpose, Heb. 10. 20. (3.) That he entered by his own blood, (Heb. 9. 12.) taking with him to heaven the virtues of the sacrifice he offered on earth, and so sprinkling his blood, as it were, before the mercy-seat, where it speaks better things than the blood of bulls and goats could do. Hence he is said to appear in the midst of the throne as a lamb that hath been slain, Rev. 5. 6. And though he had no sin of his own to expiate, yet it was by his own merit that he obtained for himself a restoration to his own ancient glory, (John 17. 4, 5,) as well as an eternal redemption for us, Heb. 9. 12. (4.) The high priest in the holy place burned incense, which typified the intercession that Christ ever lives to make for us within the vail, in the virtue of his satisfaction. And we could not expect to live, nor before the mercy-seat, if it were not covered with the cloud of this incense. Mere mercy itself will not save us, without the interposals of a Mediator. The intercession of Christ is there set forth before God as incense, as this incense. And as the high priest interceded for himself first, then for his household, and then for all Israel, so our Lord Jesus, in the 17th of St John, (which was a specimen of the intercession he makes in heaven,) recommends himself first to his father, then his disciples who were his household, and then all such as should believe on him through their word, as all Israel; and having thus advertised to the uses and intentions of his offering, he was immediately seized and crucified, pursuant to these intentions. (5.) Herein the entry Christ made far exceeded Aaron's, that Aaron could not gain admission, no act for his own sons, into the most holy place; but our Lord has come to the holy place, and there has gone a way into the holiest, so that we also have boldness to enter, Heb. 10. 19, 20. And, lastly, The high priest was to come out again, but our Lord Jesus ever lives, making intercession, and always appears in the presence of God for us, whither as the Fore-runner he is for us entered, and where as Agent he continues for us to reside.

II. Here are likewise specified the two great graces of sinfulness, repentance, by which we are qualified for the atonement, and come to be entitled to the benefit of it. 1. By faith we must put our hands upon the head of the Offering, relying on Christ as the Lord our Righteousness, pleading his satisfaction, as that which was alone able to atone for our sins, and procure us a pardon; "Thou shalt answer Lord, for me. This is all I have to say for myself, Christ has died, yea, rather has risen again; to this grace and government it is only我自己, and in him I receive the atonement," Rom. 5. 11. 2. By repentance we must afflict our souls; not only fasting for a time from the delights of the body, but inwardly sorrowing for our sins, and living a life of self-denial and mortification. We must also make a penitent confession of sin, and this with an eye to Christ, whom we have pierced, not only for himself, but for him; and with a hand of faith upon the atonement, going to the throne of grace, if we confess our sins, God is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness. Lastly, In the year of jubilee, the trumpet which proclaimed the liberty, was ordered to be sounded in the close of the day of atonement, ch. 25. 9. For, the remission of our debt, release from our bondage, and our return to our inheritance, are all owing to the mediation and intercession of Jesus Christ. By the atonement we obtain rest for our souls, and all the glorious liberties of the children of God.
CHAP. XVII.

After the law concerning the atonement to be made for all Israel by the high priest, at the tabernacle, with the blood of bulls and goats; in this chapter we have two prohibitions necessary for the preservation of the honour of that atonement. 1. That no sacrifices should be offered by any other than the priests; nor any where but at the door of the tabernacle, and this upon pain of death, v. 1, 9. II. That no blood should be eaten, and this under the same penalty, v. 10, 16.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Speak unto Aaron, and unto his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them, This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded, saying, 3. What man soever there be of the house of Israel that killeth an ox, or lamb, or goat, in the camp, or that killeth it out of the camp, 4. And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer an offering unto the Lord, before the tabernacle of the Lord, blood shall be imputed unto that man; he hath shed blood; and that man shall be cut off from among his people: 5. To the end that the children of Israel may bring their sacrifices, which they offer in the open field, even that they may bring them unto the Lord, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer an offering for peace-offerings unto the Lord. 6. And the priest shall sprinkle the blood upon the altar of the Lord, at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and burn the fat for a sweet savour unto the Lord. 7. And they shall no more offer their sacrifices unto devils, after whom they have gone a whoring. This shall be a statute for ever unto them throughout their generations. 8. And thou shalt say unto them, Whosoever man there be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers which sojourn among you, that offereth a burnt-offering or sacrifice, 9. And bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer it unto the Lord, even that man shall be cut off from among his people.

This statute obliged all the people of Israel to bring all their sacrifices to God's altar, to be offered there. And as to this matter we must consider, that it was a decided breach of the law for a people to build altars, and offer sacrifices to God, where they pleased. Wherever Abraham had a tent, he built an altar, and every master of a family was a priest to his own family, as Job, ch. 1. 5. 2. This liberty had been an occasion of idolatry. When every man was his own priest, and had an altar of his own, by degrees, as they became vain in their imaginations, they invented Gods of their own, and offered their sacrifices unto demons, v. 7. The word signifies rough or hairy goats, because it is probable that in that shape the evil spirits often appeared to them, to invite their sacrifices, and to signify their acceptance of them. For the Devil, ever since he became a revoler from God, and a rebel against him, and coveted to have divine honours paid him; he had the impudence to solicit our blessed Saviour to fall down and worship him. The Israelites themselves had learnt in Egypt to sacrifice to demons. And some of them, it should seem, practised it even since the God of Israel had so gloriously appeared for them, and with them. They are said to go a whoring after these demons; for it was such a breach of their covenant with God, as adultery is of the marriage covenant; and they were all addicted to their idolatrous worship, and as hardly reclaimed from them, as these that have given themselves over to fornication, to work all uncleanness with greediness; and therefore it is with reference to this that God calls himself a jealous God.

II. How this law settled it. 1. Some think that the children of Israel were by this law forbidden, while they were in the wilderness, to kill any beast, that the man should slay, or let them be slain; and when they had the tabernacle in the midst of their camp, they ate no flesh but what had first been offered to God; but that, when they were entering Canaan, this constitution was altered, (Deut. 12. 21.) and they were allowed to kill their beasts of the flock and herd at home, as well as the roebuck and the hart; only three years a year they were to see God at his tabernacle, and to eat and drink before him there. And it is probable, in this instance, of other parts of the law, the children of Israel, beside the tabernacle and temple, and other places of public worship, where sacrifices were offered, had no place that had such a name of a temple, as that of the Lord, but that of their peace-offerings, preserving what cattle they had, for breed, against they came to Canaan; therefore they murmured for flesh, being weary of manna; and Moses on this occasion speaks as if they were very sparing of the flocks and herds, Numb. 11. 4, 22. Yet it is hard to construe this as a temporary law, when it is expressly said to be a statute for ever. 7. And therefore, 2. It should seem rather to forbid only the killing of beasts for sacrifice any where but at God's altar. They must not offer sacrifice, as they had done, in the open fields, (v. 5.) nor to the true God, but it must be offered to the priest, to be offered on the altar of the Lord; and the solemnity they had lately witnessed of consecrating both the priests and the altar, would serve for a good reason why they should offer themselves; both these, that God had so signally appointed and owned. This law obliged not only the Israelites themselves, but the proselytes, or strangers that were circumcised and sojourned among them, who were in danger of retaining an affection to their old ways of worship. If any should transgress this law, and offer sacrifice any where but at the tabernacle, (1.) The guilt was great; blood shall be required, and the soul of the man thereof. "Though it was but a beast he had killed, yet, killing it otherwise than God had appointed, he was looked upon as a murderer. It is by the divine grant that we have liberty to kill the inferior creatures, which we are not entitled to the benefit of, unless we submit to the limitations of it, which are, that it be done either with cruelty or with superstition, Gen. 9. 3, 4. Nor was there ever any greater abuse done to the inferior creatures, than when they were made either false gods, or sacrifices to false gods, which the apostle perhaps has special reference to, when he speaks of the vanity and bondage of corruption which the creature was made subject to, Rom. 8. 20, 21, compare ch. 1.23, 25. Idolatrous sacrifices were ooked upon, not only as adultery, but as murder; he that offereth them is as if he slew a man, Isa. 66. 3. (2.) The punishment should be severe, That man shall be cut off from among his people. Either the magistrate must do it, if it were manifest and notorious, or, if not, God would take the work into his own hands, and the offerer should be cut off by some immediate stroke of divine justice. The reasons why God thus strictly ordered all these sacrifices to be offered at one place were, [1.] For the preventing of idolatry and superstition: that sacrifices might be offered to God, and according to the rule, and without innovations, they must always be offered by the hands of the priests, who were servants in God's house, and under the eye of the high priest, who was ruler of the house, and took care to see every thing done according to God's ordinance. [2.] For the seasons of the honour of God's temple and altar; the peculiar dignity of which would be endangered, if they might offer their sacrifices any where else as well as there. [3.] For the preserving of unity and brotherly love among the Israelites; that, meeting at all one altar, as all the children of the family meet daily at one table, they might live and love as brethren, and be one man, of one mind in the Lord. 11. How this law was observed. While the Israelites kept their integrity, they had a tender and very jealous regard to this law, as appears by their zeal against the altar which was erected by the two tribes and a half, which they would by no means have left standing, if they had not been satisfied that it was never designed, nor should ever be used, for sacrifice or offering, Josh. 22. 12, &c. 2. The breach of this law was for many ages the scandalous and incurable corruption of the Jewish church; witness that complaint which so often occurs in the history even of the good kings, Howbeit the high places were not taken away; and it was an inequity to the grossest idolatries. Yet this law was, in extraordinary cases, dispensed with. Gideon's sacrifice, (Judg. 6. 26.) Manoah's, (Judg. 13. 19.) Samuel's, (1 Sam. 7. 9. - 13.) David's, (2 Sam. 24. 18.) and Elijah's, (1 Kings 18. 30.) were offered at the sanctuary, or at such a place; but these were all either ordered by angels, or offered by prophets; and some think, that, after the desolation of Shiloh, and before the building of the temple, while the ark and altar were unsettled, it was more allowable to offer sacrifice elsewhere. 12. Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, No soul of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood. 13. And whatsoever man there be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, that eateth any manner of blood, I will even set my face against that soul that eateth blood, and will cut him off from among his people. 11. For the life of the flesh is in the blood; and I have given it to you upon the altar, to make an atonement for your souls: for it is the blood that maketh an atonement for the soul. 12. Therefore I said unto the children of Israel, No soul of you shall eat blood, neither shall any stranger that sojourneth among you eat blood. 13. And whatsoever man there be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn among you, which hunteth, and catcheth any beast or fowl that may be eaten; he shall even pour out the blood thereof, and cover it with dust. 14. For it is the life of all flesh; the blood of it is for the life thereof: therefore I said unto the children of Israel, Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh: for the life of all flesh is the blood thereof; whosoever eateth it shall be cut off. 15. And every soul that eateth that which died of itself, or that which was torn with beasts, whether it be one of your own country, or a stranger, he shall both wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and be unclean until the even; then shall he be clean. 16. But if he wash them not, nor bathe his flesh, then he shall bear his iniquity. 17. We have here, A repetition and confirmation of the law against eating blood. We have met with this prohibition twice before here in the leviitical law, (ch. 3. 17. - 21.)beside the place it had in the precepts of Noah, Gen. 9. 4. But here, 1. The prohibition is repeated again and again, and reference had to the former laws to this purport; (v. 12.) I said to the children of Israel, No soul of you shall eat blood; and again, (v. 14.) Ye shall eat the blood of no manner of flesh. A great stress is laid upon it, as a law which has more in it than, at first view, one would think. 2. It is made binding, not only on the house of Israel, but on the strangers that sojourned among them, (v. 10.) which perhaps was one reason why it was thought advisable, for a time, to forbid blood to the Gentile converts, Acts 15. 29. 3. The penalty annexed to this law is very severe, (v. 10.) He shall set my face against that soul that eateth blood, if he do it presumptuously, and will cut him off; and again, (v. 14.) He shall be cut off. Note, God's wrath will be the sinner's ruin. Write that man undone, for ever undone, against whom God sets his face; for what creature is able to confront the Creator? 4. A reason is given for this law, (v. 11.) because it is the blood that maketh atonement for the soul; and therefore it was appointed to make atonement with, because the life of the flesh is the blood; the sinner deserved to die, therefore the sacrifice must die; now the blood being so the life, that ordinarily beasts were killed for man's use by the drawing out of all their blood, God appointed the sprinkling or pouring out of the blood of the sacrifice upon the altar, to signify that the life of the sacrifice was given to God instead of the sinner's life, and as a ransom or counter-price for it; therefore without shedding of blood there was no remission, Heb. 9. 22. For this reason they must eat no blood, and, 1. It was then a very good reason; for God would by this means preserve the honour of that way of atonement which he had instituted, and keep up in the minds of the people a reverence and awe of it. The blood of the covenant being then a sensible object, no blood must be either eaten, or trodden under foot as a common thing; as they must have no ointment or perfume like that which God ordered them to make for himself. But, (2.) This reason is now superseded, which intimates that the law itself was ceremonial, and is now no longer in force: the blood of Christ, who is come, (and we are to look for no other atonement which makes atonement for the soul, and of which the blood of the sacrifices was an imperfect type: the coming of the substance does away the shadow. The blood of beasts is no longer the ransom, but Christ's blood only; and therefore there is not now that reason for abstaining from blood that was then; and we cannot suppose it was the will of God, that the law should survive the reason of it. The blood, provided it be so prepared and sprinkled as necessary, was now allowed for the nourishment of our bodies, because it is no longer appointed to make an atonement for the soul. (3.) Yet it has still a useful significancy: the life is in the blood; it is the vehicle of the animal spirits, and God would have his people to regard the life even of their beasts, and not to be cruel and hard-hearted, nor to take delight in any thing that is barabrous. They must not be a blood-thirsty people. The blood then made atonement effectually; now, the blood of Christ makes atonement really and effectually; to that therefore we must have a reverent regard, and not use it as a common thing; for he will set his face against those that do so, and they shall be cut off, Heb. 10. 29.

5. Some other precepts are here given as appendages to this law, and hedges about it. (1.) They must cover the blood of that which they look in hunting, v. 13. They must not only not eat it, but give it a decent burial, in token of some mystery which they must believe lay hid in this constitution. The Jews look upon this as a very weighty precept, and appoint that the blood should be covered with these words, Blessed be he that hath sanctified us by his precepts, and commanded us to cover blood. (2.) They must not eat that which died of itself, or that which died of wounds; for (v. 14.) the blood was either not at all, or not regularly drawn out of them. God would have them to be curious in their diet, not with the curiosity that gratifies the sensual appetite, but with that which checks and restrains it. God would not allow his children to eat every thing that came in their way with greediness, but to consider diligently what was before them; that they might learn in other things, and ask questions for the sake of their instruction. They that fell up on the spoil, said, i Sam. 14. 32, 33. If a man did, through ignorance or inconsideration, eat the flesh of any beast not duly slain, he must wash himself and his clothes, else he bore his guiltiness, v. 15, 16. The pollution was ceremonial, so was the purification from it; but if a man slighted the prescribed method of cleansing, or would not submit to it, he thereby courted ceremonial guilt. Such an one had cast away the benefit of a remedial law; he that obeys it, has the benefit of it; he that does not, not only remains under his former guilt, but adds to that the guilt of contemning the provisions made by divine grace for his relief, and sins against the remedy.

Chap. XVIII.

Here is, 1. A general law against all conformity to the corrupt usages of the heathen, v. 1. 5. II. Particular laws, 1. Against incest, v. 6. 18. 2. Against beastly lusts, and barbarous idolatries, v. 19. 22. III. The enforcement of these laws from the ruin of the Canaanites, v. 24. 30.

1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, I am the Lord your God. 3. After the doings of the land of Egypt, wherein ye dwelt, shall ye not do; and after the doings of the land of Canaan, whither I bring you, shall ye not do; neither shall ye walk in their ordinances. 4. Ye shall do my judgments, and keep mine ordinances, to walk therein: I am the Lord your God. 5. Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments, which if a man do, he shall live in them: I am the Lord.

After divers ceremonial institutions, God here returns to give them moral precepts. The former are still of use to us as types, the latter still binding as laws. We have here,

1. The same authority by which these laws are enacted; I am the Lord your God, (v. 1, 4, 30.) and I am the Lord, v. 5, 6, 21. The Lord who has a right to rule all, your God who has a peculiar right to rule you. Jehovah is the Fountain of being, and therefore the Fountain of power, whose we are, whom we are bound to serve, and who is able to punish all disobedience. Your God, to whom you have consented, in whom you are happy, to whom you are under the highest obligations imaginable, and to whom you are accountable.

2. A strict caution to take heed of retaining the relics of the idolatries of Egypt, where they had dwelt, and of receiving the infection of the idolatries of Canaan, whither they were now going, v. 3. Now that God was by Moses teaching them his ordinances, there was a quid pro quod—something to be unlearned, which they had sucked in with their milk in Egypt, a country noted for idolatry; Ye shall not do after the doings of the land of Egypt. It would be the greatest absurdity in itself, to retain such an affection for their house of bondage, as to be governed in their devotions by the Usages of it; and the greatest ingratitude to God, who had so wonderfully and graciously delivered them. Nay, being governed by a spirit of contradiction, even after they had received these ordinances of God, they would be in danger of admitting the wicked usages of the Canaanites, and of inheriting their vices with their land. Of this danger they are here warned, Ye shall not walk in their ordinances. Such a tyrant is custom, that their practices are called ordinances, and they became rivals even with God's ordinances, and God's prescribing people were in danger of receiving law from them.

3. A solemn charge to them to keep God's judgments, statutes, and ordinances, v. 4, 5. To this charge, and many similar ones, David seems to refer, in the many prayers and professions he makes relating to God's laws in the 119th Psalm. Observe here, (1.) The great rule of our obedience; they that keep God's statutes and ordinances, those we must keep to walk therein. We must keep them in our books, and keep them in our hands, that we may practise them in our hearts and lives. Remember God's commandments to do them; (Ps. 103. 18.) we must keep them in, as our way to travel in; keep to them, as our rule to work by; keep them as our treasure, as the apple of our eye, with the utmost care and value. (2.) The great advantage of our obedience: Which if a man do, he shall live in them, that is, "he shall be happy here and hereafter." We have reason to thank God, [1.] That this is still in force as a promise, with a very favourable construction of the condition. If we keep God's commandments in sincerity, though we come short of a sinless perfection, we shall find that the way of duty is the way of comfort, and will be the way of happiness. Wisdom has said, Keep my commandments, and live; and if through the Spirit we mortify the deeds of the body, (which are to us as the usages of Egypt were to Israel,) we shall live. [2.] That it is not so in force 'the nature of a covenant, that the least transgression shall for ever exclude us from this life. The apostle quotes this twice, as opposite to the faith which the gospel reveals. It is the description of the righteousness which is by the law, the man that doeth them shall live in zerus—in them, (Rom. 10. 5.) and is urged to prove, that the law is not of faith, Gal. 3. 12. The alteration which the gospel has made, is in the last word; still the man that doeth them shall live, but not live in them: for the law could not give life, because we could not perfectly keep it: it was weak through the flesh, not in itself; but now the man that doeth them shall live in the faith of Christ. He shall owe his life to the grace of Christ, and not to the merit of his works; see Gal. 3. 21, 22. The just shall live, but they shall live by faith, by virtue of their union with Christ, who is their Life.

6. None of you shall approach to any that is near of kin to him, to uncover their nakedness: I am the Lord. 7. The nakedness of thy father, or the nakedness of thy mother, shalt thou not uncover: she is thy mother; thou shalt not uncover her nakedness. 8. The nakedness of thy father's wife shalt thou not uncover: it is thy father's nakedness. 9. The nakedness of thy sister, the daughter of thy father, or daughter of thy mother, whether she be born at home, or born abroad, even their nakedness shalt thou not uncover. 10. The nakedness of thy son's daughter, or of thy daughter's daughter, even their nakedness thou shalt not uncover: for theirs is thine own nakedness. 11. The nakedness of thy father's wife's daughter, begotten of thy father, (she is thy sister,) thou shalt not uncover her nakedness. 12. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's sister: she is thy father's near kinswoman. 13. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister: for she is thy mother's near kinswoman. 14. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy father's brother, thou shalt not approach to his wife: she is thine aunt. 15. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy daughter-in-law: she is thy son's wife; thou shalt not uncover her nakedness. 16. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy brother's wife: it is thy brother's nakedness. 17. Thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of a woman and her daughter, neither shalt thou take her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter, to uncover her nakedness; for they are her near kinswomen: it is wickedness. 18. Neither shalt thou take a wife to her sister, to vex her, to uncover her nakedness, besides the other in her life-time.

These laws relate to the seventh commandment, and, no doubt, are obligatory on us under the gospel, for they are in congruity with the great law of nature: one of the articles, that of a man's having his father's wife, the apostle speaks of as a sin not so much named among the Gentiles, 1 Cor. 5. 1. Though some of the incests here forbidden were practised by some particular persons among the heathen, yet they were disallowed and detested, unless among those nations who were become barbarous, and were quite given up to vile affections.

Observe, 1. That which is forbidden us to the relations here specified, is approaching to them to uncover their nakedness, v. 6. (1.) It is chiefly intended to forbid the marrying of any of these relations. Marriage is a divine institution; that, and the sabbath, the eldest of all others, of equal standing with man upon the earth: it is intended for the comfort of human life, and the decent and honourable propagation of the human race, such as became the dignity of man's nature, above that of the beasts. It is honourable in all, and these laws are for the support of the honour of it. It was requisite that a divine ordinance should be subject to divine rules and restraints, especially because it concerns a thing wherein the corrupt nature of man is as apt as in any thing to be wilful and impetuous in its desires, and impatient of check. Yet these prohibitions, besides their being enacted by an uncontrollable authority, and in themselves highly reasonable and equitable. [1.] By marrying one woman to another, one flesh, therefore those that before were in a sense one flesh by nature, could not, without the greatest absurdity, become one flesh by institution, for the institution was designed to unite those who before were not united. [2.] Marriage puts an equality between husband and wife; "Is she not thy companion taken out of thy side? Therefore if these be two, they are one flesh;* neither can this man put asunder what God hath put together, v. 9. But in the case of the instances here laid down, the order of nature would be taken away by a positive institution, which must by no means be allowed. The inequality between master and servant, noble and ignoble, is founded in consent and custom, and there is no harm done if that be taken away by the equality of marriage; but the inequality between parents and children, uncles and nieces, aunts and nephews, either by blood or marriage, is founded in nature, and is therefore perpetual, and cannot without confusion be taken away by the equality of marriage, the institution of which, though ancient, is subsequent to the order of nature. [3.] No relations that are equal are forbidden, except brothers and sisters, either by the whole blood, or half blood, or by marriage; and in this there is not the same natural absurdity as in the former, for Adam's sons must of necessity have married their sisters, their near kinswomen; it was made by a positive law unlawful and detestable, for the preventing of sinful familiarities between those that in the days of their youth are supposed to live in a house together, and yet cannot intermarry without defeating one of the intentions of marriage, which is the enlargement of friendship and interest. If every man married his own sister, (as they were apt to do from generation to generation,) if it were lawful,) each family would be a world to itself, and it would be forgotten that we are members one of another. It is certain that this... has always been looked upon by the more sober heathen as a most infamous and abominable thing; and they who had not this law, yet were herein a law to themselves. The making use of the ordinance of marriage for the patronising of incestuous mixtures, is so far from justifying them or extenuating their guilt, that it adds the guilt of profaning an ordinance of God, and prostituting that to the vilest purposes, which was instituted for the noblest ends. But, (2.) Uncleanness, committed with any of these relations out of marriage, is likewise, without doubt, forbidden here, and no less intended than the former: as also, all lascivious carriage, wanton dalliance, and every thing that has the appearance of this evil. Relations must love one another, and are to be free and familiar converse with each other, but it must be with all purity; and the less it is suspected of evil by others, the more care ought the persons themselves to take, that Satan do not get advantage against them, for he is a very subtle enemy, and seeks all occasions against us.

2. The relations forbidden are most of them plainly described; and it is generally laid down as a rule, that what relations of a man's own he is bound up from marrying with, the same relations of his wife he is likewise forbidden to marry with, for they two are one. That law which forbids marrying a brother's wife, (v. 16.) had an exception peculiar to the Jewish state, that if a man died without issue, his brother, or next of kin, should marry the widow, and raise up seed to the deceased, (Deut. 25. 5.) for reasons which held good only in that commonwealth; and therefore now that these reasons have ceased, the exception ceases, and the law is in force, that a man must in no case marry his brother's widow. That article, (v. 18.) which forbids a man to take a wife to her sister, supposes a connivance at polygamy, as some other laws there did, (Exod. 21. 10. Deut. 21. 15.) but forbids a man's marrying two sisters, as Jacob did, because between them who had before been equal, there would be apt to arise greater jealousies and animosities than between wives that were not so nearly related. If the sister of the wife be taken for the concubine, or secondary wife, nothing can be more vexing in her life, or as long as she lives.

19. Also, thou shalt not approach unto a woman, to uncover her nakedness, as long as she is put apart for her uncleanness. 20. Moreover, thou shalt not lie carnally with thy neighbour's wife, to defile thyself with her. 21. And thou shalt not let any of thy seed pass through the fire to Moloch, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the Lord. 22. Thou shalt not lie with mankind as with womankind: it is abomination. 23. Neither shalt thou lie with any beast, to defile thyself therewith; neither shalt any woman stand before a beast to lie down thereto: it is confusion. 24. Defile not you yourselves in any of these things: for in all these the nations are defiled which I cast out before you: 25. And the land is defiled: therefore I do visit the iniquity thereof upon it, and the land itself vomiteth out her inhabitants. 26. Ye shall therefore keep my statutes and my judgments, and shall not commit any of these abominations; neither any of your own nation, nor any stranger that sojourneth among you; 27. (For all these abominations have the men of the land done which were before you, and the land is defiled:) 28. That the land spue not you out also, when ye defile it, as it spued out the nations that were before you. 29. For whatsoever shall commit any of these abominations, even the souls that commit them shall be cut off from among their people. 30. Therefore shall ye keep mine ordinance, that ye commit not any one of these abominations, which were committed before you, and that ye defile not yourselves therein: I am the Lord your God.

I. A law to preserve the honour of the marriage-bed, that it should not be unseasonably used, (v. 19.) nor invaded by an adulterer, v. 20.

II. A law against that which was the unnatural idolatry, causing their children to pass through the fire to Moloch, v. 21.

Moloch (as some think) was the idol in and by which they worshipped the sun, that great fire of the world; and therefore in the worship of it, they made their own children either sacrifices to this idol, burning them to death before it; or devotees to it, causing them to pass between two fires, as some think, or to be thrown through one, to the honour of this pretended deity; imagining that the conse- cration of but one of their children in this manner to Moloch would procure good fortune for all the rest of their children. Did idolaters thus give their own children to false gods, and shall we think any thing too dear to be dedicated to, or to be parted with for, the true God? See how this sin of Israel (which they were afterward guilty of, notwithstanding this law) is aggravated by the relation which they and their children stood in to God, (Exek. 16. 29.) Thou hast taken thy sons and thy daughters, whom thou hast born unto me, and these thou hast sacrificed. Therefore it is here called profaning the name of their God; for it looked as if they thought they were under greater obligations to Moloch than to Jehovah; for to him they offered their cattle only, but to Moloch their children.

III. A law against unnatural lusts, sodomy, and bestiality, sins not to be named or thought of without the most abhorrence imaginable, v. 22, 23. Other sins level men with the beasts, but these sink them much lower. That ever there should have been occasion for the making of these laws, and that, since they are published, they should ever have been broken, is the perpetual reproach and scandal of the human nature; the giving of men up to these vile affections was frequently the punish- ment of their idolatries; so the apostle shows, Rom. 1. 24.

IV. Arguments against these and the like abom- inable wickednesses. He that has an indisputable right to command us, yet because he will deal with us as men, and draws with the cords of a man, con- descends to reason with us. 1. Sinners defile themselves with these abominations, (v. 24.) Defile not yourselves with these abominations; they do defile the conscience, and these are sins that have a particular turpitude in them. Our heavenly Fa- ther, in kindness to us, requires of us that we keep ourselves clean, and do not wallow in the dirt. 2. The souls that commit them shall be cut off, v. 29. And justly; for, If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy, 1 Cor. 3. 17. Fleshy lusts war against the soul, and will certainly be the ruin of it, if God's mercy and grace prevent not. 3. The land is defiled, v. 25. If such wickednesses as these be practised and connived at, the land is thereby made unfit to have God's tabernacle in it, and the pure and holy God will withdraw the tokens of his gracious presence from it. It is also rendered unwholesome to the inhabitants, who are hereby infected with removing sins; and as these things are really nauseous and loathsome to all good men in it, as the wickedness of Sodom was to the soul of righteous Lot. 4. These have been the abominations of the former inhabitants, v. 24, 27. Therefore it was necessary that these laws should be made, as antedates and preservatives from the plague are then necessary, when we go into an infected place. And therefore they should not practise any such things; because the nations that had practised them now lay under the curse of God, and were shortly to fall by the sword of Israel. They could not but be sensible how odious these people had made themselves, who wallowed in this mire, and how they stank in the nostrils of all good men; and shall a people, sanctified and dignified as Israel was, make themselves thus vile? When we observe how ill s'n looks in others, we should use that as an argument with ourselves to use our utmost care and caution to preserve our purity. 5. For these and the like sins, the Canaanites were to be destroyed: these filled the measure of the Amorites' iniquity, (Gen. 15. 16.) and brought down that destruction of so many populous kingdoms, which the Israelites were now shortly to be not only the spectators, but the instruments of; Therefore I do visit the iniquity thereof upon it, v. 25. Note, The two thousand years of captivity, or the two kingdoms of the Canaanites, were an instance of God's vengeance on those that are durably profane and atheistical, and were intended as warnings to those who profess religion, to take heed of every thing that has the least appearance of, or tendency toward, profaneness or atheism. Even the ruin of the Canaanites is an admonition to the Israelites, not to do like them. Nay, to show that not only the Creator is provoked, but the creation burreathed, by such abominations as these, he smitteth out her inhabitants. The very ground they walked upon did, as it were, groan under them, and was sick of them, and not easy till it had discharged itself of these enemies of the Lord, Isa. 1. 24. This bespeaks the extreme loathsomeness of sin; sinful man indeed drinks in iniquity like water, but the harmless part of the creation even heaves at it, and rises against it. Many a house and many a town have spued out the wicked inhabitants, as it were, with abhorrence, Rev. 3. 16. Therefore take heed, saith God, that the land spue not you out also, v. 28. It was secured to them, and entailed upon them, and yet they must expect that if they made the vices of the Canaanites their own, with their land their fate would be the same. Note, Wicked Israelites are as abominable to God as wicked Canaanites, and more so, and will be as soon spued out, or sooner. Such a warning as this, hereby given to the Israelites, is given by the apostle to the Gentiles, with reference to the converted Jews, in whom their way were substituted, (Rom. 11. 19, &c.) they must take heed of falling by the same example of unbelief, Heb. 4. 11. Apply it more generally; and let it deter us effectually from all sinful courses, to consider how many they have been the ruin of. If we cast our eyes to the gates of the bottomless pit, and hear the doleful shrill cries and outcries of damned sinners, whom earth has spued out, and hell has swallowed, that find themselves undone, for, ever undone, by sin; and tremble lest this be your portion at last. God's threatenings and judgments should frighten us from sin.

Lastly, The chapter concludes with a sovereignty: against this infection, (v. 30.) Therefore ye shall keep mine ordinance, that ye commit not any one of these abominable customs. This is the remedy prescribed. Note, 1. Sinful customs are abominable customs, and their being common and fashionable does not make them at all the less abominable, nor shall we be the less abominable them more; because the more customary they are, the more odious they are, and the more ruinous the fatal consequence to admit and allow of any one sinful custom, because one will make way for many. Une abruso doa, miles sequantor.—Admit but a single absurdity, you invite a thousand. The way of sin is downhill. 3. A close and constant adherence to God's ordinances is the most effectual preservative from the infection of gross sin. The more we taste the pungency, and feel of the power, of holy ordinances, the less attachment we shall have to the forbidden pleasures of sinners' abominable customs. It is the grace of God only that will secure us, and that grace is to be expected only in the use of the means of grace. Nor does God ever leave any to their own hearts' lusts, till they have first left him and his institutions.

CHAP. XIX.

Some ceremonial precepts there are in this chapter, but most of them are moral: One would wonder, that, when some of the lighter matters of the law are so greatly enlarged on, (see especially concerning the leprosy,) many of the weightier matters are in the present chapter little compassed: divers of the single verses of this chapter contain whole laws concerning judgment and mercy; for there are things which are manifest in every man's conscience, and may be laid down for a common rule, and to comment upon them. 1. The laws of this chapter, which were peculiar to the Jews, are, 1. Concerning their peace-offerings, v. 5. 8. 2. Concerning the cleanliness of their persons, v. 9. 10. 3. Against mixtures of their cattle, seed, and cloth, v. 19. 4. Concerning their trees, v. 23. 25. 5. Against some superstitious usages, v. 26. 28. But, II. Most of these precepts are obligatory only on the Jews, and are expositions of most of the ten commandments. 1. Here is the preface to the ten commandments, I am the Lord, repeated here fifteen times. 2. A sum of the ten commandments. All the first table in that, Be ye holy, v. 2. All the second table in that, Thou shalt love thy neighbour, (v. 18.) and an answer to that question, Who is my neighbour? v. 33. 34. 3. Something of each commandment. (1.) The first commandment indeed, which is so often repeated here, I am your God. And here is a problem, v. 26. (2.) Idolatry, against the second commandment, is forbidden, v. 4. (3.) Profanation of God's name, against the third, v. 17. (4.) Sabbath sanctification is required, v. 3. 30. (5.) Children are required to honour their parents, (v. 3.) and the aged, v. 32. (6.) Hatred and revenge are here forbidden, against the sixth commandment, v. 17. (7.) Adultery is expressly forbidden, v. 20. (8.) Justice is here required in judgment, (v. 15.) theft forbidden, (v. 11.) fraud, and withholding dues, (v. 15.) and false weights, v. 35. 36. (9.) Lying is here expressly forbidden, v. 19. (10.) Slanderer, v. 16. (11.) False-bearing, v. 18. (12.) And whatsoever laying a restraint upon the heart, so does that, (v. 17.) Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thy heart. And here is a solemn charge to observe all these statutes, v. 37. Now observe, these are the God's laws; not much help for the understanding of them, but require constant care and watchfulness for the observing of them. I good understanding have all they that do these commandments.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Speak unto all the congregation of the children of Israel, and say unto them, Ye shall be holy: for I the Lord your God am holy. 3. Ye shall fear every man his father, and his mother, and keep my sabbaths: I am the Lord your God. 4. Turn ye not unto idols, nor make to yourselves molten gods: I am the Lord your God. 5. And if you offer a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the Lord, ye shall offer it at your own will. 6. It shall be eaten the same day ye offer it, and on the morrow: and if aught remain until the third day, it shall be burnt in the fire. 7. And if it be eaten at all on the third day, it is abominable; it shall not be accepted. 8. Therefore every one that eateth it shall bear his iniquity, because he hath profaned the hallowed thing of the Lord; and that soul shall be cut off from among his people.

And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not wholly reap the corners of thy field, neither shalt thou gather the gleanings of thy harvest. 10. And thou shalt not glean thy vineyard, neither shalt thou gather every grape of thy vineyard; thou shalt leave them for the poor and stranger: I am the Lord your God.

Moses is ordered to deliver the summary of the laws to all the congregation of the children of Israel; (v. 2) not to Aaron and his sons only, but to all the people, for they were all concerned to know their duty. Even in the darker ages of the law, that religion could not be of God which boasted of ignorance as its mother. Moses must make known God's statutes to all the congregation, and proclaim them through the camp. These laws, it is probable, he delivered himself to as many of the people as could be within hearing at once, and so by degrees at several times to them all. Many of the precepts here given they had received before, but it was requisite that they should be repeated, that they might be remembered; precept must be upon precept, and line upon line, and all little enough.

In these verses,

1. It is required that Israel be a holy people, because the God of Israel is a holy God; v. 2. The being distinguished from all other people by peculiar laws and customs, was intended to teach them a real separation from the world and the flesh, and an entire devotedness to God. And this is now the law of Christ, (The Lord brings in to light within this chapter:) Ye shall be holy for I am holy, 1 Pet. 1. 15, 16. We are the followers of the holy Jesus, and therefore must be, according to our capacity, consecrated to God's honour, and conformed to his nature and will. Israel was sanctified by the types and shadows, (ch. 20. 8.) but we are sanctified by the truth, or substance of all those shadows, John 17. 17. Tit. 2. 13.

11. That children be obedient to their parents, (v. 3.) Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father. 1. The fear here required is the same with the honour commanded by the fifth commandment; see Mal. 1. 6. It includes inward reverence and esteem, outward expressions of respect, obedience to the lawful commands of parents, care and endeavour to please them and make them easy, and to use small expense in order to oblige them and incur their displeasure. The Jewish doctors ask, "What is this fear that is owing to a father?" And they answer, "It is not to stand in his way, nor to sit in his place, not to contradict what he says, or to carp at it, not to call him by his name, either living or dead, but "My Father," or "Sir;" it is to provide for him if he be poor, and the like." 2. Children, when they grow up to be men, must not think themselves discharged from this duty: every man, though he is a wise man and a great man, yet must reverence his parents, because they are his parents. 3. The mother is put first, which is not usual, to show that the duty is equally owing to both; if the mother survive the father, still she must be revered and obeyed. 4. It is added, and keep my sabbaths. If God provides by his law for the preserving of the honour of his parents, parents must use their authority over their children for the preserving of the honour of God, particularly the honour of his sabbaths, the custody of which is very much committed to parents by the fourth commandment, Thou, and thy son, and thy daughter. The ruin of young people has often been observed to begin in the contempt of their parents, and the profanation of the sabbath. In these two precepts here put together in the beginning of this abridgment of the statutes, Ye shall fear every man his mother and his father, and keep my sabbaths. Those are hopeful children, and likely to do well, that make conscience of honouring their parents, and keeping holy the sabbath-day. 5. The reason added to both these precepts is, "I am the Lord your God; the Lord of the sabbath, and the Lord of your father." III. That God only be worshipped, and not by images, (v. 4.) "Turn ye not to idols; to Moloch, to vanities, things of no power, no value, gods that are no gods. Turn not from the true God to false ones, from the mighty God to impotent ones, from the God that will make you holy and happy to those that will deceive you, debase you, ruin you, and cause you to be ever miserable. Turn not your eye to them, much less your heart. Make not yourselves gods, the creatures of your own fancy, nor think to worship the Creator by molten gods. You are the work of God's hands, be not so absurd as to worship gods the work of your own hands." Molten gods are specified for the sake of the molten calf.

V. That the sacrifices of their peace-offerings should always be offered, and taken, according to the law, v. 5. 8. There was some particular reason, it is likely, for the repetition of this law, rather than any other relating to the sacrifices. The eating of the peace-offerings was the people's part, and was done from under the eye of the priests, and perhaps some of them had kept the cold meat of their peace-offerings, as they had done the manna, (Exod. 26. 16.) longer than was required, which occasioned the mention; see the law itself before ch. 7. 16. 18. God will have his own work done in his own time. Though the sacrifice was offered according to the law, if it was not eaten according to the law, it was not accepted. Though ministers do their part, what the better, if people do not theirs? There is work to be done after our spiritual sacrifices, in a due improvement of them; if this be neglected, all else is worth nothing.

V. That they should leave the gleanings of their harvest and vintage for the poor, v. 9. 10. Note, Works of piety must be always attended with works of charity, according as our ability is. When they gathered in their corn, they must leave some standing in the corner of the field; the Jewish doctors say, "It should be a sixtieth part of the field;" and they must, all is in value the gleanings and the small clusters of their grapes, which at first were overlooked. This law, though not binding now in the letter of it, yet teaches us, 1. That we must not be covetous and grudging, and greedy of every thing we can lay any claim to; nor insist upon our right in things small and trivial. 2. That we must be well-pleased to see the poor supplied and refreshed with the fruit of our labours. We must not think every thing lost that goes beside ourselves, nor any thing wasted that goes to the poor. 3. That times of joy, such as harvest-time is, are proper times for charity; that when we rejoice, the poor may rejoice with us, and when our hearts are blessing God, their loins may bless us.

11. Ye shall not steal, neither deal falsely, neither lie one to another. 12. And ye shall not swear by my name falsely, neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God: I am the Lord. 13. Thou shalt not defraud thy neighbour, neither rob him: the wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night until the morning. 14. Thou shalt not curse the dead, nor put a stumbling-block before the blind, but shalt fear thy God: I am the Lord. 15. Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment: thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, nor honour the person of the mighty: but in righteousness shall thou judge thy neighbour. 16. Thou shalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer among thy people; neither shalt thou stand against the blood of thy neighbour: I am the Lord. 17. Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart: thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbour, and not suffer sin upon him. 18. Thou shalt not avenge, nor bear any grudge against the children of thy people, but thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself: I am the Lord.

We are taught here,

I. To be honest and true in all our dealings, v. 11.

1. God, who has appointed every man's property by his providence, forbids by his law the invading of that appointment, either by downright theft, Ye shall not steal, or by fraudulent dealing, Ye shall not cheat, or deal falsely. Whatever we have in the world, we must see to it that he honestly come by, for we cannot be truly rich, nor long rich, with that which is not. The God of truth, who requires truth in the heart, (Ps. 51 6,) requires it also in the tongue, Neither lie one to another, either in bargaining or common converse. This is one of the laws of Christianity, (Col. 3 9.) Lie not one to another. Thou that doest not speak truth, do not deserve to be told truth; they that sin by lying, justly suffer by it; therefore we are forbid to lie one to another; for if we lie to others, we teach them to lie to us.

II. To maintain a very serious regard to the sacred name of God, (v. 12,) and not to call him to witness either, 1. To a lie, Ye shall not swear falsely. It is bad to tell a lie, but it is much worse to swear a lie. To a lie, and every impernience, Neither shalt thou profane the name of thy God, by alienating it to any other purpose than that for which it is to be religiously used.

III. Neither to take nor keep any one's right from them, v. 13. We must not take that which is none of our own, either by fraud or robbery; nor detain that which belongs to another, particularly the wages of the hireling, let it not abide with thee all night. Let the day-labourer have his wages, as soon as he has done his day's work, if he have done nothing amiss. It is a great sin to deny the payment of it, nay, to defer it to his damage, a sin that cries to heaven for vengeance, Jam. 5 4.

IV. To be particularly tender of the credit and safety of those that cannot help themselves, v. 14.

1. The credit of the dead, Thou shalt not curse the dead; neither those that are naturally deaf, that cannot hear at all, nor those that are absent, and at present out of hearing of the curse, and so that cannot show their resentment, return the affront, or right themselves; nor those that are patient, that judge as they have not heard, and are not willing to take notice of it, as Deut. 32 45. Do not therefore injure any, because they are unwilling or unable, to avenge themselves, for God sees and hears, though they do not. 2. The safety of the blind we must likewise be tender of, and not put a stumbling-block before them; for this is to add affliction to the afflicted, and to make God's providence a servant to our malice. This prohibition contains a precept to help the blind, and remove stumbling-blocks out of their way. The Jewish writers, thinking it possible that any should be so barbarous as to put a stumbling-block in the way of the blind, understood it figuratively, that it forbids giving bad counsel to those that are simple and easily imposed upon, by which they may be led to do something to their own prejudice. We ought to take heed of doing any thing which may occasion us to be weak brother to fail, Rom. 14. 13. 1 Cor. 8, 9. It is also a preservative from these sins, but fear thou God. The fear of God will make the blind, they cannot right themselves; but remember it is the glory of God to help the helpless, and he will plead their cause. Note, The fear of God will restrain us from doing that which will not expose us to men's resentments.

V. Judges and all in authority are here commanded to give verdict and judgment without partiality; (v. 13,) whether they were constituted judges by commission, or in a particular case, by the consent of both parties, as judges or arbitrators, they must do no wrong to either side, but, to the utmost of their skill, must go according to the rules of equity, having respect purely to the merits of the cause, and not to the characters of the person. Justice must never be perverted, either, 1. In pity to the poor, Thou shalt not respect the person of the poor, Exod. 23. 3. Whatever may be given to a poor man as alms, yet let nothing be awarded him as his right, but what has been truly entitled to, nor let his poverty excuse him from any just punishment for a fault. Or, 2. In veneration or fear of the mighty, in whose favour judges would be most frequently biased. The Jews say, "Judges were obliged by this law to be so impartial, as not to let one of the contending parties sit while the other stood; nor permit one to say what he pleased, and bid the other be short;" see James 2 1, 3.

VI. We are all forbidden to do any thing injurious to our neighbour's good name, (v. 16,) either in common conversation; Thou shalt not go up and down as a tale-bearer. It is as bad an office as a man can put himself into, to be the publisher of every man's faults, divulging what was secret, aggravating crimes, and making the worst of every thing that was amiss, with design to blast and ruin men's reputation, and to sow discord among neighbours. They are commonly used as teller-bears or pedlar or petty chapman, the interlopers of trade: for tale-bearers pick up ill-natured stories at one house, and utter them at another, and commonly barter slanderers by way of exchange. See this sin condemned, Prov. 11. 13.—20. 19. Jer. 9. 4, 5. Ezek. 22. 9. Or. 2. In witness-bearing; Neither shalt thou stand as a witness against the blood of thy neighbour; no man should be innocent, nor join in complicity, or confer with such blood, if he can do it. This is the breach of trust;" Prov. 1. 11. 12. The Jewish doctors put this further sense upon it, Thou shalt not stand by and see thy brother in danger, but thou shalt come in to his relief and succour, though it be with the peril of thy own life and limb;" they add, "He that can by his testimony clear one that is accused, is obliged by this law to do it," see Prov. 24. 11, 12.

VII. We are commanded to rebuke our neighbour in love, (v. 17.) Thou shalt in any wise rebuke thy neighbour, (8. 22.) but lest we wound his conscience with the meekness of our words, we must endeavour to convince our brother of the injury, reason the case fairly with him, and so put an end to the disgust conceived: this is the rule our Saviour gives in this case, Luke 17. 3. 2. Therefore rebuke him for his sin against God, because thou lovest him; endeavour to bring him to repentance, that his sin may be pardoned, and he may turn from it, and it may not be suffered to lie upon him. Note, Friendly reproof is a duty we owe to one another, and we ought both to give it and take it in love. Let the righteous smite me, and it shall be a kindness, Ps. 141. 5. Faithful and useful are those wounds of a friend, Prov. 27. 5, 6. It is here strictly commanded, "Thou shalt in any wise do it, and not omit it under any pretence." Consider, (1.) The guilt we incur by not reproving; it is construed here into a biting of our brother. We are required to love one another, and a love that will not make us uneasy by telling him of his faults; but we should rather say, "therefore will do him the kindness to tell him of them." Love covers sins from others, but not from the sinner himself. (2.) The mischief we do by not reproving; we suffer sin upon him; and must we help the assault of an enemy that is fallen under his burlen, and shall we not help his soul of a friend? Exod. 23. 5. And by suffering sin upon him, we are in danger of bearing sin for him, as the margin reads it. If we reprove not the unfruitful works of darkness, we have fellowship with them, and become accessories ex post facto—after the fact, Eph. 5. 11. It is thy brother, thy neighbour, that is concerned; and he was a Cain that said, Am I my brother's keeper?

VIII. We are here required to put off all malice, and to bear the brother's love: "Thou shalt bear ill-affected to none; Thou shalt not avenge nor bear any grudge; to the same purport with that, (v. 17.) Thou shalt not hate thy brother in thine heart; for malice is murder begun. If our brother has done us an injury, we must not return it upon him, that is avenging; we must not upon every occasion upbraid him with it, that is bearing a grudge; but we must both forgive it and forget it, for thus we are forgiven the same ill-natured thing, and the bane of friendship, to retain the resentment of affronts and injuries, and to let that sword devour for ever. 2. We must be well affected to all: Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself. We often wrong ourselves, but we soon forgive ourselves those wrongs, and they do not at all lessen our love to ourselves; and in like manner we must forgive our neighbour that has offended us in this the second great commandment of the law, (Matth. 22. 39.) and the apostle shows how it is the summary of all the laws of the second table, Rom. 13. 9, 10. Gal. 5. 14. We must love our neighbour as truly as we love ourselves, and without dissimulation; we must evidence our love to our neighbour in the same way as that by which we evidence our love to ourselves, preventing his hurt, and doing all we can for his good. We must do to our neighbour as we would be done to ourselves, (Matth. 7. 12.) putting our souls into the soul's stead, Job 16. 4, 5. Nay, we must in many cases deny ourselves for the good of our neighbour, as St. Paul, I Cor. 9. 19. &c. Herein the gospel goes beyond even that excellent precept of the law, for Christ, by laying down his life for us, has taught us even to lay down our lives for the brethren, in some cases, (1 John 3. 16.) and so to love our neighbour better than ourselves.

19. Ye shall keep my statutes. Thou shalt not let thy cattle gender with a diverse kind. Thou shalt not sow thy field with mingled seed; neither shall a garment mingled of linen and woollen come upon thee. 20. And whosoever lieth carnally with a woman that is a bondmaid, betrothed to a husband, and not at all redeemed, nor freedom given her, she shall be scoured: they shall not be put to death, because she was not free. 21. And he shall bring his trespass-offering unto the Lord, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, even a ram for a trespass-offering. 22. And the priest shall make an atonement for him, with the ram of the trespass-offering, before the Lord, for his sin which he hath done; and the sin which he hath done shall be for given him. 23. And when ye shall come into the land, and shall have planted all manner of trees for food, then ye shall count the fruit thereof as uncircumcised: three years shall it be as uncircumcised unto you; it shall not be eaten of. 24. But in the fourth year all the fruit thereof shall be holy, to praise the Lord withal. 25. And in the fifth year shall ye eat of the fruit thereof, that it may yield unto you the increase thereof: I am the Lord your God. 26. Ye shall not eat any thing with the blood; neither shall ye use enchantment, nor observe times. 27. Ye shall not round the corners of your heads, neither shall thou mar the corners of thy beard. 28. Ye shall not make any cuttings in your flesh for the dead, nor print any marks upon you: I am the Lord. 29. Do not prostitute thy daughter, to cause her to be a whore; lest the land fall to whoredom, and the land become full of wickedness.

I. A law against mixtures, v. 19. God in the beginning made the cattle after their kind, (Gen. 1. 25.) and we must acquiesce in the order of nature God hath established, believing that is best and sufficient, and not covet monsters. Add thou not unto his works, lest he reprove thee; for it is the excellency of the work of God, that nothing can, without making it worse, be either put to it or taken from it, Eccl. 3. 14. As what God has joined, we must not separate; so what he has separated, we must not join. The sowing of mingled corn and the weaving of linsey-woolsey garments are forbidden, either as nothing but profane customs of the heathen, or to intimate how careful they should be not to mingle themselves with the heathen, nor to weave any of the usages of the Gentiles into God's ordinances.
Aimsworth suggests, that it was to lead Israel to the simplicity and sincerity of religion, and to all the parts and doctrines of the law and gospel in their distinct kinds. As faith is necessary, good works are necessary, but he entirely mingles these together in the cause of our justification before God, is forbidden, Gal. 2. 16.

II. A law for punishing adultery committed with one that was a bondmaid that was espoused, v. 20. 22. If she had not been espoused, the law appointed no punishment at all; being espoused, if she had not been a bondmaid, the punishment had been no less than death; but being, as yet a bondmaid, (though before the completing of her espousals she must have been made free,) the capital punishment is remitted, and they shall both be scourged; or, as some think, the woman only, and the man to bring a sacrifice. It was for the honour of marriage, though but begun by betrothing, that the crime should be punished; but it was for the honour of freed m, that it should not be punished s as the debauching of a free woman, was; so great was the difference then made between bond and free, (Gal. 4. 30,) but the gospel of Christ knows no such distinction, Col. 3. 11.

III. A law concerning fruit trees, that for the three first years after they were planted, if they should happen to be so forward as to bear in that time, yet no use should be made of the fruit, v. 23. 25. It was therefore the practice of the Jews to plant them, even when they perceived it knit, from their young trees, as gardeners still do now, because their early bearing hinders their growing. If any did come to pefection, it was not to be used in the service either of God or man; but what they bore the fourth year, was to be holy to the Lord, either given to the priests, or eaten before the Lord with joy, as their second title was, and thenceforward it was all their own. Now, 1. Some think this was necessary for the propagation of the heathen, when, they, say, consecrated the very first productions of their fruit-trees to their idols, saying, that otherwise all the fruits would be blasted. 2. This law in the case of fruit-trees seems to be parallel with that in the case of animals, that no creature should be accepted as an offering till it was past eight days old, nor till that day were children to be circumcised; see ch. 22. 27. God would have his first fruits of their trees, but would not have the first three years they were as inconsiderable so lamb or a calf under eight days old, therefore God would not have them, for it is fit he should have every thing at its best; and yet he would not allow them to use them, because his first-fruits were not as yet offered; they must therefore be accounted as uncircumcised, that is, as an animal under eight days old, not fit for any use. 3. We are hereby taught not to be over-hasty in cutting off any comfort, but to be willing with patience to wait the time for the enjoyment of it, and particularly to acknowledge ourselves unworthy of the increase of the earth, our right to the fruits of which was forfeited by our first parents eating forbidden fruit, and we are restored to it only by the word of God and answer, 1 Tim. 4. 5.

IV. A law against the superstitious usages of the heathen, ch. 26. 21. Eating upon the blood, as the Gentiles did, who gathered the blood of their sacrifices into a vessel for their demons (as they fancied) to drink, and then sat about it, eating the flesh themselves, signifying their communion with devils by their feasting with them. Let not this custom be used, for the blood of God's sacrifices was to be sprinkled on the altar, and then poured at the foot of it, and consecrated away. 2. Enchantment and divination, and a superstitious observation of times, some days and hours lucky, and others unlucky. Curious arts of this kind, it is likely, had been of late invented by the Egyptian priests, to amuse the people, and support their vain credit. The Israelites had seen them practised, but must by no means imitate them. It would be unparдонable in them to attempt to commit the oracles of God, to ask council of the Devil, and to make experiments in these things, to whom the son of man is manifest, who has destroyed the works of the Devil. For Christians to have their natures cast, and then fortunes told, to use spells and charms for the cure of diseases and the driving away of evil spirits, to be affected with the falling of the salt, a here begotten and begotten, six days, or the like, is an intolerable affront to the Lord, to the support of superstitious and idolatry, and a reproach both to themselves, and to that worthy name by which they are called: and they must be grossly ignorant, both of the law and the gospel, that ask, "What harm is there in these things?" Is it no harm for those that have fellowship with Christ, to have fellowship with devils, or to learn the ways of those that have? Surely we have not so learned Christ. 3. There was a superstitious dressing, trimming themselves, used by the heathen, which is not to be imitated by the people of God. Ye shall not round the corners of your heads. They that worship the hosts of heaven, in honour of them, cut their hair, so as that their heads might resemble the celestial globe; but as the custom was foolish in itself, so, being done with respect to their false gods, was revolting idolatry: the rite, and ceremonies by which they expressed their worship at their dead friends, Christ by his sufferings has interred the property of death, and made it a true friend to every true Israelite; and now as there is need of nothing to make death propitious to us, (if God be so, death is so of course,) so we sorrow not as those that have no hope. Those whom the God of Israel had set apart for himself, must not receive the image and superscription of these dunghill deities. Lastly, The prostituting of their daughters to uncleanness, which is here forbidden, (v. 29,) seems to have been practised by the heathen in their idolatrous worship, for with such abominations those uncivil spirits which they invoked, were well pleased. And when lewdness obtained a place in the rites, and was committed in their temples, no marvel that the land became full of that wickedness, which, when it entered at the temple-doors, overspread the land like a mighty torrent, and bore down all the fences of virtue and modesty. The Devil himself could not have brought such abominations into their lives, if he had not first brought them into himself. And justly were they given up to vile affections, who forsook the holy God, and gave divine honours to impure spirits. Those that dishonour God are thus suffered to dishonour themselves and their families.

30. Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am the Lord. 31. Regard not them that have familiar spirits, neither seek after wizards, to be declared by them: I am the Lord your God. 32. Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man, and fear thy God: I am the Lord. 33. And if a stranger sojourn with thee in your land, ye shall not vex him. 34. But the stranger that dwelleth with you shall be unto you as one born among you, and thou shalt love him as thyself; for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God. 35. Ye shall do no unrighteousness in judgment, in mete-yard, in weight, or in measure. 36. Just balances, just weights, a just ephah, and a just hin, shall ye have: I am the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt. 37. Therefore shall ye observe all my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them: I am the Lord. 38. Ye shall therefore observe the statutes of the Lord, and do them; that ye may be his people, and he may be your God. 39. The Lord was slow to wrath, and great in mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression, and not remembering evil. 40. According to his mercies he did not put away his people; for he feared their destruction by the nations. 41. As he feared their destruction, so he saved them; he was zealous for his name, 42. And stretched out his hand in truth; he was merciful, he was good. 43. The Lord is long-suffering toward his people, and he is full of compassions. 44. The Lord will not give his people up to destruction for ever; he will have compassion upon them, and will not destroy them utterly. 45. But when they shall have sinned against him, in the day that he shall turn away from them in anger, and forsake them, 46. Then the Lord will hide his face against them, and will search their iniquities, and will not remember their good deeds; for all their iniquities the Lord will bring on them. 47. Ye shall therefore observe my statutes, and my judgments, and do them; and ye shall dwell in the land of Egypt. 48. And ye shall know that I am the Lord your God, that I may bring you into the land of Israel, where ye shall dwell in the land of Egypt. 49. Then the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 50. Speak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Israel is my son, even my firstborn. 51. Speak, I beseech thee, unto the king of Egypt, saying, Thus saith the Lord, What, shall I come unto Pharaoh to speak unto him? 52. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Say unto the children of Israel, Ye are a stiff-necked people; if only ye had but hearkened to my voice! 53. For now will I stretch out mine hand, that mine anger may consume you, and I will lay you waste, as I consumed the Egyptians. 54. And I will make of you a people as the sand of the sea; and if a man can number the sand of the sea, then shall the children of Israel be numbered. 55. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 56. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, The Lord shall give you a Sabbath the sabbath of rest, a holy Sabbath to the Lord. 57. Ye shall rest from all your work, in order that ye may be refreshed. 58. And it shall be a sign between me and you, that I am the Lord your God. 59. Ye shall therefore keep the sabbath, and it shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God. 60. Ye shall therefore keep the sabbath, as the Lord commanded your fathers, 61. That ye should have a Sabbath in all your habitations. 62. That ye may keep the sabbath, and not carry out burdens on the sabbath, neither carry into your habitations. 63. Ye shall keep the sabbath, and it shall be a sign between me and you, that I am the Lord your God. 64. 7. The law which before were made, are in this chapter repeated, and penalties annexed to them; that they would not be deterred from sin by the fear of God, might be deterred from it by the fear of punishment. If we will not avoid such and such practices because the law has made them sin, (and it is most acceptable when we insist on that principle of religion,) surely we shall avoid them when the law has made them death, from a prin
LEVITICUS, XX

AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Again, thou shalt say to the children of Israel, Whosoever he be of the children of Israel, or of the strangers that sojourn in Israel, that giveth any of his seed unto Moloch, he shall surely be put to death: the people of the land shall stone him with stones.

And I will set my face against that man, and will cut him off among his people; because he hath given of his seed unto Moloch, to defile my sanctuary, and to profane my holy name. 4. And if the people of the land do any ways hide their eyes from the man, when he giveth of his seed unto Moloch, and kill him not; 5. Then I will set my face against that man, and against his family, and will cut him off, and all that go a whoring after him, to commit whoredom with Moloch, from among their people. 6. And the soul that turneth after such as have familiar spirits, and after wizards, to go a whoring after them, I will even set my face against that soul, and will cut him off among his people. 7. Sanctify yourselves, therefore, and be ye holy: for I am the Lord your God. 8. And ye shall keep my statutes, and do them: I am the Lord which sanctify you. 9. For every one that curseth his father or his mother shall be surely put to death: he hath cursed his father or his mother; his blood shall be upon him.

Moses is here directed to say that again to the children of Israel, which he had in effect said before, v. 2. We are sure it was no vain repetition, but very necessary, that they might give the more earnest heed to the things that were spoken, and might believe them to be of great consequence, being so often inculcated. God spakeeth once, yea, twain, and what he orders to be said again, we must be willing to hear again, because for us it is safe, Phil. 3. 1.

Three sins are in these verses threatened with death.

1. Parents abusing of their children, by sacrificing them to Moloch, v. 2. 3. There is the grossest absurdity that can be in all the rites of idolatry, and they are all new reproaches of men's reason must none trampled upon all the honours of the human nature so as this did, the burning of children in the fire to the honour of a dunghill-god. It was a plain evidence that their gods were devils, which desired and delighted in the misery and ruin of mankind, and that the worshippers were worse than the beasts that perish, perfectly stripped, not only of reason, but of natural affection. Abraham's offering of Isaac could not give countenance, much less could it give rise, to this barbarous practice; since, though that was commanded, it was immediately countermanded. Yet such was the power of the God of this world over the children of disobedience, that this monstrous piece of inhumanity was generally practised; and even the Israelites were in danger of being drawn into it, which made it necessary that they were here solemnly warned against it. It was not enough to tell them they might spare their children, (the fruit of their body should never be accepted for the sin of their soul,) but they must be told,

1. That the criminal himself should be put to death, as a murderer. The people of the land shall stone him with stones, (v. 2.) which was looked upon as the common mode of capital punishment among the Jews. If the children were sacrificed to the devil in the name of Moloch, the parents must be sacrificed to the justice of God. And if either the fact could not be proved, or the magistrates did not do their duty, God would take the work into his own hands, (v. 3.) I will cut him off. Note, Those that escape punishment from men, yet shall not escape the righteous judgments of God; so wretchedly do they deceive themselves that promise themselves impunity in sin. How can they escape, against whom God sets his face, that is, whom he frowns upon, meets as an enemy, and fights against? The heinousness of the crime is here set forth to justify the doom; it defiles the sanctuary, and provokes the holy name of God, for the honour of both which he is jealous. Observe, The malignity of the sin is laid upon that which is peculiar to Israel, when the Gentiles sacrificed their children to the devil in the practice of murder and idolatry; but, if the Israelites did it, they incurred the additional guilt of defiling the sanctuary, which they attended upon even when they lay under this guilt, as if there might be an agreement between the temple of God and idols; they were guilty too of provoking the holy name of God, by which they were called, as if he allowed his children to do such things, Rom. 2. 23, 24.

2. That all his aiding and abetting should be put off likewise by the righteous hand of God. If his neighbours concealed him, and would not come in as witnesses against him; if the magistrates connived, and would not pass sentence upon him, rather pitying his folly than hating his impiety; God himself would reckon with them, v. 4. 5. Misprison of idolatry is a crime cognizable in the court of heaven; or which shall be go unpunished. I will set my face against that man, (that means, Jer. 5. 1.) and against his family. Note, (1.) The wickedness of the master of a family often brings ruin upon a family; and he that should be the housekeeper, proves the house-breaker. (2.) If magistrates will not do justice upon offenders, God will do justice upon them; because there is danger that many will go a whoring after them, who do but contemn justice by winking at it. And if the sins of leaders be leading sins, it is fit that their punishments should be exemplary punishments.

II. Children's abusing of their parents, by cursing them, v. 9. If children either speak ill of their parents, or wish ill to them, or carry it scornfully or spitefully toward them, it was an iniquity to be punished by the judges, who were employed as conservators both of God's honour and of the public peace, which were both attempted by this unnatural insolence; (see Prov. 30. 17.) The eye that mocks at his father, the ravens of the valley shall pick it out; which intimates that such wicked children were in a fair way to be not only hanged, but hanged in chains. This law of Moses, Christ quotes and confirms, (Matt. 15. 4.) for it is as direct a breach of the fifth commandment as willful murder is of the first. The same law, which the kindness of the tender of their children, requires children to be respectful to their parents. He that despitably uses his parents, the instruments of his being, flies in the face of God himself, The Author of his being, who will not see the paternal dignity and authority insulted and triumphed upon.

III. Persons abusing of themselves by consulting such as have familiar spirits, v. 6. By this, as much as any thing; a man diminishes, disparages, and deceives himself, and so abuses himself. What greater madness can there be, than for a man to go to a liar for information, and to an enemy for advice? They do so, who turn after them that deal in the black art, and know the depths of Satan. This is spiritual adultery as much as idolatry is, giving that honour to the Devil which is due to God only; and the jealous God will give a bill of divorce to those that thus go a whoring from him, and will cut them off; they having first cut themselves off from him.

In the midst of these particular laws comes in that general charge, (v. 7, 8,) where we have, 1. The duties required; and they are two. (1.) That, in our principles, affections, and aims, we be holy: Sanctify yourselves, and be ye holy. We must cleanse ourselves from all the pollutions of sin, consecrate ourselves to the service and honour of God, and conform ourselves in every thing to his holy will and image: this is to sanctify ourselves. (2.) That, in all our actions, and in the whole course of our conversation, we be obedient to the laws of God; Ye shall keep my statutes. By this only we can make it to appear that we have sanctified ourselves and are holy, even by our keeping God's commandments; the tree is known by its fruit. Nor can we keep God's statutes as we ought, unless we first sanctify ourselves, and be holy. Make the tree good, and the fruit will be good. The reasons to enforce these duties are, (1.) "I am the Lord your God. Therefore be holy, that ye may resemble him whose people ye are, and may be pleasing to him. Holiness becomes his house and household." (2.) I am the Lord which sanctify you. God sanctified them by peculiar privileges, laws, and favours, which distinguished them from all other nations, and dignified them as a people set apart for God. He gave them his word and ordinances to be means of their sanctification, and his good Spirit to instruct them: therefore they must be holy, else they received the grace of God herein in vain. Note, [1.] God's people are, and must be, persons of distinction. God has distinguished them by his holy covenant, and therefore they ought to distinguish themselves by their holy conversations. [2.] God's sanctifying us is a good reason, why we should sanctify ourselves, that we may comply with the designs of his grace, and not walk contrary to them. If it be the Lord that sanctifies us, we may hope the work shall be done, though it be difficult: the manner of expression is like that, (2 Cor. 5. 5.) He that hath wrought us for the self-same thing, is God. And his grace is so far from superseding our care and endeavour, that it most strongly engages and encourages them. Work out your salvation, for it is God that worketh in you.

10. And the man that committeth adultery with another man's wife, even he that committeth adultery with his neighbour's wife, the adulterer and the adulteress shall surely be put to death. 11. And the man that lieth with his father's wife hath uncovered his father's nakedness; both of them shall be put to death; their blood shall be upon them. 12. And if a man lie with his daughter-in-law, both of them shall surely be put to death: they have wrought confusion; their blood shall be upon them. 13. If a man also lie with mankind as he lieth with a woman, both of them have committed an abomination: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them. 14. And if a man take a wife and her mother, it is wickedness: they shall be burnt with fire, both he and they; that there be no wickedness among you. 15. And if a man lie with a beast, he shall surely be put to death; and ye shall slay the beast. 16. And if a woman approach unto any beast, and lie down thereto, thou shalt kill the woman and the beast: they shall surely be put to death; their blood shall be upon them. 17. And if a man shall take his sister, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter, and see her nakedness, and she see his nakedness, it is a wicked thing; and they shall be cut off in the sight of their people: he hath uncovered his sister's nakedness; he shall bear his iniquity. 18. And if a man shall lie with a woman having her sickness, and shall uncover her nakedness, he hath discovered her fountain, and she hath uncovered the fountain of her blood; and both of them shall be cut off from among their people. 19. And thou shalt not uncover the nakedness of thy mother's sister, nor of thy father's sister; for he uncovereth his near kin: they shall bear their iniquity. 20. And if a man shall lie with his uncle's wife, he hath uncovered his uncle's nakedness: they shall bear their sin; they shall die childless. 21. And if a man shall take his brother's wife, it is an unclean thing; he hath uncovered his brother's nakedness: they shall be childless.

Sins against the seventh commandment are here ordered to be severely punished. These are sins, which, of all others, fools are most apt to make a mock at; but God would teach those the horridness of the guilt by the extremity of the punishment, that would not otherwise be taught it.

1. Lying with another man's wife was made a capital crime; the adulterer and the adulteress that had joined in the sin must fall alike under the sentence, they shall both be put to death, v. 10. Long before this, even in Job's time, this was reputed a heinous crime, and an instance to be punished by the judges, Job 31. 11. It is a presumptuous contempt of an ordinance of God, and a violation of his covenant, Prov. 2. 17. It is an irreparable wrong to the injured husband, and debauches the mind and conscience of both the offenders as much as any thing. It is a sin which headstrong and unbridled lusts hurry men violently to, and therefore it needs such a powerful restraint as this: it is a sin which defies a law, and brings down God's judgments upon it, which disquiets families, and tends to the ruin of all virtue and religion, and therefore is fit to be animadverted upon by the conservators of the public peace: but see John 8. 1-11.

II. Incestuous connexions, whether by marriage or not.

1. Some of them were to be punished with death, as a man's lying with his father's wife, v. 11. Rennan would have been put to death for his crime, (Gen. 35. 22.) if this law had been then made. It was the sin of the incestuous Corinthian, for which he was to be delivered unto Satan, 1 Cor. 5. 1, 5. A man's debauching his daughter-in-law, or his mother-in-law, or his sister, was likewise to be punished with death, v. 12, 14, 17.

2. Others of them God would punish with the curse of barrenness, as a man's defiling his aunt, or his brother's wife, (v. 19...21.) they shall die childless. Those that keep not within the divine rules of marriage, forfeit the blessings of marriage; They shall commit whoredom, and shall not increase, Hos. 4. 10. Nay, it is said, They shall bear their iniquity, that is, though they be not immediately cut off either by the hand of God or man for this sin, yet the guilt of it shall lie upon them, to be reckoned for another day, and not to be purged with sacrifice or offering.

III. The unnatural lusts of sodomy and bestiality (sins not to be mentioned without horror) were to be punished with death, as they are at this day by our law, v. 13, 15, 16. Even the beast that was thus abused was to be killed with the sinner, who was thereby openly put to the greater shame: and the villany was thus represented as in the highest degree execrable and abominable, all occasions of the remembrance or mention of it being to be taken away. Even the unseasonable use of the marriage-bed, if presumptuous, and in contempt of the law, would expose the offenders to the just judgment of God, they shall be cut off, v. 18. For this is the will of God, that every man should possess his vessel (and the wife is called the weaker vessel) in sanctification and honour, as becomes saints.

22. Ye shall therefore keep all my statutes, and all my judgments, and do them: that the land, whither I bring you to dwell therein, spue you not out. 23. And ye shall not walk in the manners of the nations which I cast out before you: for they committed all these things, and therefore I abhorred them. 24. But I have said unto you, Ye shall inherit their land, and I will give it unto you to possess it, a land that floweth with milk and honey: I am the Lord your God, which have separated you from other people. 25. Ye shall therefore put difference between clean beasts and unclean, and between unclean fowls and clean: and ye shall not make your souls abominable by beast, or by fowl, or by any manner of living thing that creepeth on the ground, which I have separated from you as unclean. 26. And ye shall be holy unto me: for I the Lord am holy, and have severed you from other people, that ye should be mine. 27. A man also, or woman, that hath a familiar spirit, or that is a wizard, shall surely be put to death: they shall stone them with stones; their blood shall be upon them.

The last verse is a particular law, which comes in after the general conclusion, as if omitted in its proper place; it is for the putting of those to death that dealt with familiar spirits, v. 27. It would be a great affront to God, and to his lively oracles, a scandal to the country, and a temptation to ignorant bad people, to consult them, if such were known and suffered to live among them. Those that are in league with the Devil have in effect made a covenant with death, and an agreement with hell, and so shall their doom be.

The rest of these verses repeat and inculcate what had been said before; for to that unthinking forgetful people it was requisite that there should be line upon line, and that general rules, with their reasons, should be frequently insisted on, for the enforcement of particular laws, and making them more effectual. Three things we are here reminded of:

1. Their dignity. (1) They had the Lord for their God, v. 24. They were his, his care, his choice, his treasure, his jewels, his kingdom of priests; (v. 26.) that ye should be mine. Happy the people, and truly great, that is in such a case. (2) Their god was a (1) Then, ye were going into, advanced above all others. His holiness is his glory, and it was their honour to be related to him, while their neighbours were the infamous worshipers of impure and filthy spirits. (3) The great God had separated them from other people, (v. 24.) and again, v. 26. Other nations were the common, they were the enclosure, beautified and enriched with peculiar privileges, and designed for peculiar offices, and therefore, according to the law, they should, for the statutes were their honour, and obedience to them would be their lasting comfort. (2) Ye shall not walk in the manners of the nation, v. 23. Being separated from them, they must not associate with them, nor learn their ways. The manners of the nation were bad enough in them, but would be much worse in God's people. (3) They shall not be influenced by the nations, v. 25. This is holiness, to discern between things that differ, not to live at large, as if we might say and do anything, but to speak and act with caution. (4) Ye shall not make your souls abominate, v. 25. Our constant care must be to preserve the honour, by preserving the purity, of our own souls, and never to do any thing to make them abominable to God and to our own consciences.

The Canaanites were to be expelled for these very sins; they committed all these things, and therefore I abhorred them, v. 23. See what an evil thing sin is, it provokes God to abhor his own creatures, whereas otherwise he delights in the works of his hands. And if the Israelites trod in the steps of their impiety, they must expect that the land would spue them out, (v. 22.) as he had told them before, ch. 18. 28. If God spared not the natural branches, but broke them off, neither would he spare those who were grafted in, if they degenerated. Thus the rejection of the Jews stands for a warning to all Christian churches, to take head lest the kingdom of God be taken from them. Those that sin like others, must expect to smart like them; and their profession of relation to God will be no security to them.

CHAP. XXI.

This chapter might borrow its title from, Mal. 2. 1. And now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you. It is a law obliging priests with the utmost care and jealousy to preserve the dignity of their priesthood. 1. The inferior priests are here charged both concerning their mourning, and concerning their marriages, and their children, v. 1.-9. II. The high priest is restrained more than any of them, v. 10.-15. III. Neither the one nor the other must have any blemish, v. 16.-24.

1. And the Lord said unto Moses, Speak unto the priests the sons of Aaron, and say unto them, There shall none be defiled for the dead among his people: 2. But for his kin that is near unto him, that is, for his mother, and for his father, and for his son, and for his daughter, and for his brother; 3. And for his sister a virgin, that is nigh unto him, which hath had no husband, for her may he be defiled. 4. But he shall not defile himself, being a chief man among his people, to profane himself. 5. They shall not make baldness upon their head; neither shall they shave off the corner of their beard, nor make any cuttings in their flesh. 6. They shall be holy unto their God, and not profane the name of their God: for the offerings of the Lord made by fire, and the bread of their God, they do offer; therefore they shall be holy. 7. They shall not take a wife that is a whore, or profane; neither shall they take a woman put away from her husband: for he is holy unto his God. 8. Thou shalt sanctify him therefore; for he offereth the bread of thy God: he shall be holy unto thee: for I the Lord, which sanctify you, am holy. 9. And the daughter of any priest, if she profane herself by playing the whore, she profaneth her father: she shall be burnt with fire.

It was before appointed that the priests should teach the people the statutes God had given concerning the difference between clean and unclean, ch. 10. 10. 11. Now, here it is provided that they should observe themselves what they were to teach the people. Note, They whose office it is to instruct, must do it by example as well as precept, 1 Tim. 4. 12. The priests were to draw nearer to God than any of the people, and to be more intimately conversant with sacred things, and therefore it was required of them that they should keep at a greater distance than others from every thing that was defiling, and might diminish the honour of their priesthood.

1. They must take care not to disfigure themselves in their mourning for the dead. All that mourned for the dead were supposed to come near to the body, if not to touch it: and, the Jews say, "It made a man ceremonially unclean to come within the feet of a dead corpse," nay, it is declared, Num. 19. 14.) that all who come into the tent, where the dead body lies shall be unclean seven days. Therefore all the mourners that attended the funeral could not but defile themselves, so as not to be fit to come into the sanctuary for seven days: for this reason, it is ordered,

1. That the priests should never put themselves under this incapacity of coming into the sanctuary, unless it were for one of their nearest relations, v. 1.-3. He was permitted to do it for a parent or a child, for a brother or an unmarried sister, and therefore, no doubt, (though this is not mentioned,) for the wife of his bosom; for Ezekiel, a priest, should have been allowed for this reason, the test of service being particularly prohibited, Ezek. 24. 17. By this allowance, God put an honour upon natural affection, and favoured it so far as to dispense with the attendance of his servants for seven days, while they indulged themselves in their sorrow for the death of their dear relations; but, beyond this period, weeping must not hinder seeing, nor their affection to their relations, must not be a barrier to the sanctuary. Nor was it at all allowed for the death of any other, no, not of a chief man among the people, as some read it, v. 4. They must not defile themselves, no, not for the high priest himself, unless thus akin to them. Though there is a friend that is nearer than a brother, yet the priests must not pay this respect to the best friend they had, except he were a relation, lest, if it were allowed for them, they should be too superstitious; and it should be frequently taken off from their work: and it is hereby intimated that there is a particular affection to be reserved for those that are thus near akin to us; and when any such are removed by death, we ought to be affected with it, and lay it to heart, as the near approach of death to ourselves, and an alarm to us to prepare to follow.

2. That they must not be extravagant in the expressions of their mourning, nor for their dearest relations, v. 5. Their mourning must not be either, (1.) Superstitious, according to the manner of the heathen, who cut off the hair, and let out their blood, in honour of the imaginary deities which presided (as they thought) in the congregation of the dead, that they might engage them to be propitious to their departed friends. Even the superstitious rites used of old at funerals, are an indication of the ancient state of things, and of the existence of the soul and its existence in a separate state: and though the rites themselves were forbidden by the divine law, because they were performed to false gods, yet the decent respect which nature teaches, and the law allows, to be paid to the remains of our deceased friends, shows that we are not to look upon them as lost. Nor, (2.) Must it be passionate or severe, it is said, v. 10. The mourners must be examples to others of patience under affliction, particularly that which touches in a very tender part, the death of their near relations. They are supposed to know more than others of the reasons why we must not sorrow, as those that have no hope, (1 Thess. 4. 13.) and therefore they ought to be eminently calm and composed, that they may be able to comfort others with the same comforts they are themselves comforted by God. The people were forbidden to mourn for the dead with superstitious rites; (ch. 19. 27, 28.) and what was unlawful to them was much more unlawful to the priest. The reason given for their peculiar care not to defile themselves, we have, (v. 6.) because they offered the bread of their God, even the offerings of the Lord made by fire, which were the provisions of God’s house and table. They are highly honoured, and therefore must not stain their honour by making themselves slaves to their passions; they are continually employed in sacred service, and therefore must not be either diverted from, or disfitted for, the services they were called to. If they pollute themselves, they profane the name of their God on whom they attend: if the servants are rude, and of ill behaviour, it is a reflection upon the master, as if he kept a loose and disorderly house. Note, All that either offer or eat the bread of our God must be holy in all manner of conversation, or else they profane that name which they pretend to sanctify.

II. They must take care not to degrade themselves in their marriage, v. 7. A priest must not marry a woman of ill fame, that either had been guilty, or was suspected to have been guilty, of uncleanness. He must not only not marry a harlot, though never so great a penitent for her former whoredoms, but he must not marry one that was profane, that is, of a light carriage or indecent behaviour. Nay, he must not marry one that was divorced, because there was reason to think it was for some fault she was divorced. The priests were forbidden to undervalue themselves by such marriages as these, which were allowed to others.

1. Lest it should bring a present reproach upon their ministry, harsh the profane in their profaneness, and grieve the hearts of a serious people: the New Testament gives laws to ministers' wives, 1 Tim. 3. 11.) that they be grave and sober, that the ministry be not blamed. 2. Lest it should entail a reproach upon their families; for the work and honour of the prophet, of all others and as an inheritance to their children after them. Those do not consult the good of their posterity as they ought, who do not take care to marry those that are of good report and character. He that would seek a godly seed, (as the expression is, Mal. 2. 15.) must first seek a godly wife, and take heed of a corrupt of blood.

It is added here, (v. 8.) Thou shalt sanctify him, and he shall be holy unto thee. "Not only thou, O Moses, by taking care that these laws be observed, but thou, O Israel, by all endeavours possible to keep up the reputation of the priesthood, which the priests themselves must do nothing to expose or forfeit. He is holy to his God, (v. 7.) therefore he shall be holy unto thee." Note, We must honour those whom our God puts honour upon. Gospel-ministers, by this rule, are to be esteemed very highly in their services; 1 Thess. 5. 13.) and every Christian must look upon himself as concerned to be the guardian of their honour.

III. Their children must be afraid of doing any thing to disparage them: (v. 9.) If the daughter of any priest play the whore, her crime is great; she not only pollutes but profaneth herself; other women have not that honour to lose that she has, who, as one of a priest's family, has eaten of the holy things, and is supposed to have been better educated than others. Nay, she profaneth her father, he is reflected upon, and every body will be ready to ask, "Why did not he teach her better?" And the sinners in Zion will insult, and say, "Here is your priest's daughter:" her punishment therefore must be peculiar, She shall be burnt with fire, for a terror to all priests' daughters. Note, The children of ministers ought, of all others, to take heed of doing any thing that is scandalous; because in them it is doubly scandalous, and will be punished accordingly by him whose name is Jealous.

10. And he that is the high priest among his brethren, upon whose head the anointing oil was poured, and that is consecrated to put on the garments, shall not uncover his head, nor rend his clothes; 11. Neither shall he go in to any dead body, nor defile himself for his father, or for his mother; 12. Neither shall he go out of the sanctuary, nor profane the sanctuary of his God; for the crown of the anointing oil of his God is upon him: I am the Lord. 13. And he shall take a wife in her virginity. 14. A widow, or a divorced woman, or profane, or a harlot, these shall he not take: but he shall take a virgin of his own people to wife. 15. Neither shall he profane his seed among his people; for I the Lord do sanctify him.

More was expected from a priest than from other people, but more from the high priest than from other priests, because upon his head the anointing oil was poured, and he was consecrated to put on the garments, (v. 10.) both which were typical of the anointing and adorning of the Lord Jesus, with the graces and graces of the Holy Spirit, which he received without measure. It is called the crown of the anointing oil of his God, (v. 12.) for the anointing of the Spirit is, to all that have it, a crown of glory, and a diadem of beauty. The high priest being thus dignified,

I. He must not defile himself at all for the dead, no, not for his nearest relations, his father or his mother, much less his child or brother. 11. He must not use the common expressions of sorrow on the occasion of death; much as it must be rending his clothes, (v. 10.) so perfectly unconcerned must he show himself in all the crosses and comforts of this life: even his natural affection must be swallowed up in compassion to the ignorant, and a feeling of their infirmities, and a tender concern for the household of God, which he was made the ruler of. Thus, being the holy one that was intrusted with the things of God, he must not know father or mother, Deut. 33. 8. 9. He must not go to any dead body, v. 11. If any of the inferior priests were under a ceremonial pollution, there were other priests that might supply their places; but if the high priest were defiled, there would be a greater mis of him. And the forbidding of him to go to any house of mourning, or attend any funeral, would be an indication to the people of the greatness of that dignity to which he was advanced. Our Lord Jesus, the great High Priest of our profession, touched the dead body of Jairus's daughter, the bier of the widow's son, and the grave of Lazarus, to show th. the came to alter the property of death, and to take off the terror of it, by breaking the power of it. Now that it cannot destroy, it does not defile. 3. He must not go out of the sanctuary, (v. 12.) that is, whenever he was attending officiating in the sanctuary, where usually he carried in his own apartment all day, he must not go out upon any occasion whatsoever, nor cut short his attendance on the living God, no, not to pay his last respects to a dying relation. It was a profanation of the sanctuary to leave it while his presence was requisite there, upon any such occasion, for thereby he preferred some other business before the service of God and the business of his profession, to which he ought to give every thing else, not putting himself to speak with his mother and brethren, Matth. 12. 48. 14. He might not marry a widow, (as other priests might,) much less one divorced, or a harlot, v. 13. 14. The reason of this was, to put a difference between him and other priests in this matter, and (as some suggest) that he might be a type of Christ, to whom the Minion was to be presented a chaste virgin, 2 Cor. 11. 2. see Ezek. 44. 22. Thus, we have our first love, our pure love, our entire love; thus the virgin love thee, (Cant. 1. 5.) and such only are fit to follow the Lamb, Rev. 14. 4. 3. He might not profane his seed among his people, v. 15. Some understand it as forbidding him to marry any of an inferior rank, which would be a disappuragement to his family. Jehohada, indeed, married out of his own tribe, but then it was into the royal family, 2. Chron. 22. 11. This was not to teach him to be proud, but to teach him to be pure, and to do nothing unbecoming his office and that worthy name by which he was called. Or it may be a caution to him in disposing of his children: he must not profane his seed, by marrying them unsuitably. Ministers' children are profaned, if they be unequally yoked with unbelievers.

16. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 17. Speak unto Aaron, saying, Whosoever he be of thy seed in their generations that hath any blemish, let him not approach to offer the bread of his God: 18. For whatsoever man he be that hath a blemish, he shall not approach: a blind man, or a lame, or he that hath a flat nose, or any thing superfluous. 19. Or a man that is broken-footed, or broken-handed, 20. Or crook-backed, or a dwarf, or that hath a blemish in his eye, or be scurvyr or scabbed, or hath his stones broken: 21. No man that hath a blemish of the seed of Aaron on the priest shall come nigh to offer the offerings of the Lord made by fire: he hath a blemish; he shall not come nigh to offer the bread of his God. 22. He shall eat the bread of his God, both of the most holy, and of the holy; 23. Only he shall not go in unto the vail, nor come nigh unto the altar, because he hath a blemish; that he profane not my sanctuaries: for I the Lord do sanctify them. 24. And Moses told it unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel.

The priesthood being confined to one particular family, and entailed upon all the issue-male of that family throughout their generations, it was very likely that some or other in after-ages, that were born to the priesthood, would have natural blemishes and deformities: the honour of the priesthood would not secure them from any of those calamities which are common to men. Divers blemishes are here specified; some that were, ordinarily, for life, as blindness; others that might be for a time, as a scurf or scab, and, when they were gone, the disability ceased.

Now, the law concerning priests that had blemishes was,

1. That they might live upon the altar; (v. 22.) He shall eat of the sacrifices with the other priests, even the most holy things, such as the tithes and first-fruits, and the priests' share of the peace-offerings. The blemishes were such as they could not help, and, therefore, though they might not work they must not starve. Note, None must be abused for their natural infirmities. Even the deformed child in the family must have its child's part.

2. Yet they must not serve at the altar, at either of the altars, nor be admitted to attend or assist the other priests in offering sacrifice or burning incense; v. 17; 21; 23. Great men choose to have such servants about them as are slightly, and it was fit that the great God should have such in his house, then when he was pleased to manifest his glory in external indications of it. But it was especially requisite that comely men should be chosen to minister about holy things, for the sake of the people, who were apt to judge according to outward appearance, and to think meanly of the service, if the honourable seer or minister it was made by the divine institution, if those that performed it looked despicably, or went about it awkwardly. This provision God made for the preserving of the reputation of his altar, that it might not at any time fall under contempt. It was for the credit of the sanctuary that none should appear there that were any way disfigured, either by nature or accident.

Now, under the gospel, (1.) Those that labour under any such blemishes as these have reason to thank God that they are not thereby excluded from offering spiritual sacrifices to God, nor, if otherwise qualified for it, from the office of the ministry. There is many a healthful beautiful soul lodged in a crazy deformed body. (2.) We ought to infer from hence how incapable those are to serve God acceptably whose minds are blemished and deformed by any reigning vice. Those are unworthy to be called Christians, and unfit to be employed as ministers, that are spiritually blind, and lame, and crooked; whose sins render them scandalous and deformed, so as that the offerings of the Lord are abhorred for their sakes. The deformities of Hophni and Phinehas were worse than any of the blemishes here mentioned. Let such, therefore, as are openly vicious be put out of the priesthood, according to this law, and all that are made to our God spiritual priests, be before him holy and without blemish, and comfort themselves with this, that though, in this imperfect state, they have spots that are the spots of God's children, yet they shall shortly appear before the throne of God without spot or blemish, or any such thing.

CHAP. XXII.

In this chapter, we have divers laws concerning the priests and sacrifices, all for the preserving of the honour of the sanctuary. I. That the priests should not eat of the holy things in their uncleaness, v. 1. 9. II. That no stranger who did not belong to some family of the priests, should eat of the holy things, v. 10. III. That all that would eat of our God spiritual priests, be before him holy and without blemish, and comfort themselves with this, that though, in this imperfect state, they have spots that are the spots of God's children, yet they shall shortly appear before the throne of God without spot or blemish, or any such thing.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Speak unto Aaron and to his sons, that they separate themselves from the holy things of the children of Israel, and that they profane not my holy name in those things which they hallow unto me: I am the Lord. 3. Say unto them, Whosoever he be of all your seed, among your generations, that goeth unto the holy things, which the children of Israel hallow unto the Lord, having his uncleanness upon him, that soul shall be cut off from my presence: I am the Lord. 4. What man soever of the seed of Aaron is a leper, or hath a running issue, he shall not eat of the holy things until he be clean. And whoso toucheth any thing that is unclean by the dead, or a man whose seed goeth from him; 5. Or whosoever toucheth any creeping thing, whereby he may be made unclean, or a man of whom he may take uncleanness, whatsoever uncleanness he hath; 6. The soul which hath touched any such shall be unclean until even, and shall not eat of the holy things, unless he wash his flesh with water. 7. And when the sun is down he shall be clean, and shall afterward eat of the holy things, because it is his food. 8. That which dieth of itself, or is torn with beasts, he shall not eat, to defile himself therewith: I am the Lord. 9. They shall therefore keep mine ordinance, lest they bear sin for it, and die therefore, if they profane it: I the Lord do sanctify them.

Those that had a natural blash, though they were forbidden to do the priests’ work, yet they were allowed to eat of the holy things; and the Jewish writers say, that, “to keep them from idleness, they were employed in the wood-room, to pick out that which was worn-eaten, that it might not be used in the fire upon the altar; they might also be employed in the judgment of leprosy:” but those that were under any ceremonial uncleanness, which possibly they contracted by their own fault, might not eat of the holy things while they continued in their pollution.

1. Some pollutions were permanent, as a leprosy or a running issue, v. 4. These separated the people from the sanctuary, and God would show that they were so far from being less objectionable, that really they were more so, in a priest. 2. Others were more transient, as the touching of a dead body, or anything else that was unclean, from which, after a certain time, a man was cleansed, by washing his flesh in water, v. 6. But whoever was thus defiled might not eat of the holy things, under pain of God’s highest displeasure, who said it, and ratified the saying, That soul shall be cut off from my presence, v. 3. Our being in the presence of God, and attending upon him, will be so far from securing us, that it will but the more expose us to God’s wrath, if we dare to draw nigh to him in uncleanliness. Thus destruction shall come from the presence of the Lord; (2 Thess. 1. 9.) as the fire by which Nadab and Abihu died came from before the Lord. Thus they who profane the holy word of God will be cut off by that word which they make so light of; it shall condemn them. They are again warned of their danger, if they eat the holy thing in their uncleanness, (v. 9.) lest they bear sin, and die therefore. Note, (1.) Those contract great guilt who profane sacred things, by touching them with unhallowed hands. Eating the holy things signified an interest in the atonement; but if they ate of them in their uncleanness, they were so far from lessening their guilt, that they increased it: they shall bear sin. (2.) Sin is a burthen which, if infinite mercy prevent not, will certainly sink those that bear it; they shall die therefore. Even priests may be ruined by their pollutions, and their guilts.

Now, [1.] This obliged the priests carefully to preserve their purity, and to dread every thing that would defile them. The holy things were their livelihood; if they might not eat of them, how must they subsist? The more we have to lose of comfort and honour by our defilement, the more careful we should be to preserve our purity. [2.] This possessed the people with a reverence for the holy things, when they saw the priests themselves separated from them, (as the expression is, v. 2.) so long as they were in their uncleanness. He is, doubtless, a God of infinite purity who kept his immediate attendants under so strict a discipline. [3.] This teaches us carefully to watch against all moral pollutions, because by them we are unfitted to receive the comfort of God’s sanctuary. Though we labour under habitual defilements, yet actual defilements deprive us of the pleasure of communion with God: and therefore he that is washed needeth to wash his feet; (John 13. 10.) to wash his hands, and so to compass the altar, Ps. 26. 6. Herein we have need to be jealously over ourselves, lest (as it is observably expressed here) we profane God’s holy name in those things which we hallow unto him, v. 2. If we offend God in those very performances wherein we pretend to honour him, and provoke him instead of pleasing him, we shall make up but a bad account shortly; yet thus we do, if we profane God’s name, by doing that in our uncleanness which pretends to be hallowed to him.

10. There shall no stranger eat of the holy thing: a sojourner of the priest’s, or a hired servant, shall not eat of the holy thing. 11. But if the priest buy any soul with his money, he shall eat of it, and he that is born in his house; they shall eat of his meat. 12. If the priest’s daughter also be married unto a stranger, she may not eat of an offering of the holy things. 13. But if the priest’s daughter be a widow, or divorced, and have no child, and is returned unto her father’s house, as in her youth, she shall eat of her father’s meat; but there shall no stranger eat thereof. 14. And if a man eat of the holy thing unwittingly, then he shall put the fifth part thereof unto it, and shall give it unto the priest with the holy thing. 15. And they shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel, which they offer unto the Lord; 16. Or suffer them to bear the iniquity of trespass, when they eat their holy things: for I the Lord do sanctify them.

The holy things were to be eaten by the priests and their families. Now, 1. Here is a law that no stranger should eat of them, that is, no person whatsoever but the priests only, and those that pertained to them, v. 10. The priests are charged with this care, not to profane the holy things, by permitting the strangers to eat of them, (v. 15.) or suffer them to bear the iniquity of trespass; (v. 16.) that is, suffer them to bring guilt upon themselves, by meddling with that which they have no right to do. Thus it is commonly understood. Note, We must not only be careful that we do not bear iniquity ourselves, but we must do what we can to prevent others bearing it. We must not only suffer sin to lie upon our brother, but, if we can help it, we must not suffer it to come upon him. But perhaps there is another meaning of the words: the priests, eating of the sin-offerings is said to signify that they bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make an atonement for them, ch. 10. 17. Let not a stranger, therefore, eat of that holy thing particularly, and so pretend to bear the iniquity of trespass; for it is daring presumption for any to do that but such as are appointed to do it. Those that set up to be mediators beside Christ our Priest, to bear the iniquity of trespass, sacrilegiously rob Christ of his honour, and violate his rights. When we warn people not to trust to their own righteousness, nor dare to appear before God.
in it, but to rely on Christ's righteousness only for peace and pardon, it is because we dare not suffer them to bear the iniquity of trespass, for we know it is too heavy for them.

2. Here is an explanation of the law, showing who were to be looked upon as belonging to the priest's family, and who not. (1.) Sojourners and hired servants abode not in the house for ever; they were in the family, but not of it; and therefore they might not eat of the holy things; (v. 10.) but the servant that was born in the house, or right with money, heavy for them, to the priest's family, though servants yet might eat of the holy things, v. 11. Note, Those only are entitled to the comforts of God's house who make it their rest for ever, and resolve to dwell in it all the days of their life. As for those who for a time only believe, to serve a present turn, they are looked upon as sojourners and mercenaries, and have no part or lot in the matter.

(2.) As to the children of the family, concerning the sons there could be no dispute, they were themselves priests, but concerning the daughters there was a distinction. While they continued in their father's house, they might eat of the holy things; but if they married such as were not priests, they lost their right, (v. 12.) for now they were cut off from the family of the priests. Yet, if a priest's daughter became a widow, and had no children in whom she might preserve a distinct family, and returned to her father's house again, being neither wife nor mother, she shall again be looked upon as a daughter, and shall eat of the holy things. If those whom providence has made sorrowful widows, and who are dislodged from the rest they had in the house of a husband, yet find it again in a father's house, they have reason to be thankful to the widows' God, who does not leave them comfortless.

(3.) Here is a demand of restitution to be made by him that had no right to the holy things, and yet should eat of them unwittingly, v. 14. If he did it presumptuously, and in contempt of the divine institution, he was liable to be cut off by the hand of God, and to be beaten by the magistrate; but if he did it through weakness and inconsideration, he was to restore the value, adding a fifth part to it; beside which, he was to bring an offering to atone for the trespass, see ch. 5. 15.

Now, [1.] This law might be dispensed with in a case of necessity, as it was when David and his men ate of the show-bread, 1 Sam. 21. 6. And our Saviour justifies them, and gives a reason for it, which furnishes us with a lasting rule in all such cases, that God will have mercy, and not sacrifice, Matth. 12. 3, 4, 7. Rituals must give way to morals.

[2.] It is an instruction to gospel-ministers, who are stewards of the mysteries of God, not to admit all, without distinction, to eat of the holy things, but to take out the precious from the vile. Those that are scandalously ignorant or profane are strangers and aliens to the family of the Lord's priests; and it is not meet to take the children's bread and to cast it to such. Holy things are for holy persons, for those who are holy, at least, in profession, Matth. 7. 6.

17. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 18. Speak unto Aaron, and to his sons, and unto all the children of Israel, and say unto them, Whatsoever he be of the house of Israel, or of the strangers in Israel, that will offer his oblation for all his vows, and for all his free-will-offerings, which they will offer unto the Lord for a burnt-offering; 19. Ye shall offer at your own will a male without blemish, of the beeves, of the sheep, or of the goats. 20. But what soever hath a blemish, that ye not offer for it; for it shall not be acceptable for you. 21. And whosoever offereth a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the Lord to accomplish his vow, or a free-will-offering in beoves or sheep, it shall be perfect, to be accepted; there shall be no blemish therein.

22. Blind, or broken, or maimed, or having a wen, or scurvy, or scabbed, ye shall not offer these unto the Lord, nor make an offering by fire of them upon the altar unto the Lord. 23. Either a bullock or a lamb that hath any thing superfluous or lacking in his parts, that mayest thou offer for a free-will offering; but for a vow it shall not be accepted. 24. Ye shall not offer unto the Lord that which is bruised, or crushed, or broken, or cut; neither shall you make any offering thereof in your land.

25. Neither from a stranger's hand shall ye offer the bread of your God of any of these; because their corruption is in them, and blemishes be in them; they shall not be accepted for you. 26. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying. 27. When a bullock, or a sheep, or a goat is brought forth, then it shall be seven days under the dam; and from the eighth day, and thenceforth, it shall be accepted for an offering made by fire unto the Lord. 28. And whether it be cow or ewe, ye shall not kill it and her young both in one day. 29. And when ye shall offer a sacrifice of thanksgiving unto the Lord, offer it at your own will. 30. On the same day it shall be eaten up; ye shall leave none of it until the morrow: I am the Lord. 31. Therefore shall ye keep my commandments, and do them: I am the Lord. 32. Neither shall ye profane my holy name; but I will be hallowed among the children of Israel: I am the Lord which hallow you. 33. That brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am the Lord.

1. That whatever was offered in sacrifice to God should be without blemish, otherwise it should not be accepted. This had often been mentioned in the particular institutions of the several sorts of offering. Now here, 1. They are told what was to be accounted a blemish which rendered a beast unfit for sacrifice; if it was blind, or lame, had a wen, or the mangle; (v. 22.) if it was bruised, or crushed, or broken, or cut; (v. 24.) that is, as the Jewish writers understand it, if it was, any of these ways, castrated: if bulls and rams were made into oxen and wethers, they might not be offered. 2. A difference is made between what was brought as a free-will offering, and what was brought as a vow, v. 25. And though none of the former mentioned blemishes might be brought for either, yet if a beast had any thing superfluous or lacking, that is, as the Jews understand it, if there was a disproportion or inequality between those parts that are pairs, when one eye, or ear, or leg, is bigger than it should be, or less than it should be; if there was no other blemish than this, it might be accepted for a free-will offering, which a man had not before laid himself, nor had the divine law laid him, under any particular obligation to; but for a vow it might not be accepted. Thus God would teach us to make conscience of performing our promises to him very exactly, and not afterward to abide in quantity or value of what we had solemnly engaged to devote to him. What was, before the vow, in our own power, as in the case of a free-will offering, afterward is not.

Acts 5, 4. 3. It is again and again declared, that no sacrifice should be accepted, if it was thus blemished, v. 29, 30. According to this law great care is to be taken in selecting the beasts that were brought to be sacrificed, that there might, to a certainty, be no blemish in them. A blemished sacrifice might not be accepted even from the hand of a stranger, though to such all possible encouragement should be given to do honor to the God of Israel, v. 25. By this it appears that strangers were expected to come to the house of God from a far country, (1 Kings 8, 5. ) to see in what manner that they might come, and their offerings accepted, as those of Darius, Ezra 6, 9, 10. Isa. 56, 6, 7. The heathen priests were many of them not so strict in this matter, but would receive sacrifices for their gods that were never so scandalous; but let strangers know, that the God of Israel would not be so served.

Now, (1.) This law was then necessary for the preserving of the honour of the sanctuary, and of the God that was there worshipped. It was fit that every thing that was employed for his honour should be the best of the kind; for as he is the greatest and brightest, so he is the best of Beings; and he that is the best, must have the best. See how greatly and justly displeasing the breach of this law was to the holy God; Mal. 1, 8, 13, 14. (2.) This law made all the legal sacrifices the fitter to be types of Christ, the great Sacrifice, from which all these derived their virtue. In allusion to this law, he is said to be a Lamb without blemish, and without spot, 1 Pet. 1, 19. As such a Priest, so such a Sacrifice, became us, who was harmless and undefiled. When Pilate declared, I find no fault in this man, he did thereby in effect pronounce the sacrifice without blemish. The Jews say, it was the work of the sages, or sages, and their high priest, to view the sacrifices, and see whether they were without blemish. And when Christ suffered, Annas was in that office; but little did they who brought Christ to Annas first, by whom he was sent bound to Caiphas, as a Sacrifice fit to be offered, (John 18, 13, 24.) think that they were answering the type of this law. (3.) It is an instruction to us to offer to God the best we have in our spiritual sacrifices. If our duties are ignorant and cold, and not the fruit of love and faith, the Lamb is blind, and the lamb is not a sacrifice; but cursed be the deceiver that does so, for, while he thinks to put a cheat upon God, he puts a damning cheat upon his own soul.

II. That no beast should be offered in sacrifice before it was eight days old, v. 26, 27. It was provided before, that the firstlings of their cattle, which were to be dedicated to God, should not be young before eight days old, v. 29. Here it is provided, that no creature should be offered in sacrifice till it was eight days old complete. Sooner than that, it was not fit to be used at men's tables, and therefore not at God's altar. The Jews say, It was because the sabbath sanctifies all things, and nothing should be offered to God till at least one sabbath had passed over it. It was in conformity to the law of circumcision, which children were to receive on the eighth day. Christ was sacrificed for us, not in his infancy, though then Herod sought to slay him, but in the prime of his time.

III. That the dam and her young should not both be killed in one day, whether in sacrifice, or for common use, v. 28. There is such a law as this concerning birds, Deut. 22, 6. This was forbidden, not as evil in itself, but because it looked barbarous and cruel to the brute creatures; like the tyranny of the king of Babylon, that slew Zedekiah's sons before his eyes, and then put out his eyes. It looked ill-natured toward the species to kill two generations at once, as if one designed the ruin of the kind.

IV. That the flesh of their thank-offerings should be eaten on the same day that they were sacrificed, v. 29, 30. This is a repetition of what we had before, ch. 7, 15. — 19. 6, 7. The chapter concludes with such a general charge as we have often met with, to keep God's commandments, and not to profane his holy name, v. 31, 32. Those that profess God's name, if they do not make conscience of keeping his commandments, do profane his name. The general reasons are added: God's authority over them, I am the Lord: His interest in them, I am your God: The title he had to them by redemp- tion, I brought you out of the land of Egypt, on purpose that I might be your God: The designs of his grace concerning them, I am the Lord that hallow you: And the resolutions of his justice, if he had not honour from them, to get him honour upon them. I will kill the fowls of heaven over their head. God will be a Lozier in his glory by no man at last; but sooner or later will recover his right, either in the repentance of sinners, or in their ruin.

CHAP. XXIII.

Hitherto the Levitical law has been chiefly conversant about holy persons, holy things, and holy places; in this chapter we have the institution of holy times; many of which have been mentioned occasionally before, but here they are all put together: only the new moons are not mentioned; all the rest of the feasts of the Lord are; 1. The weekly feast of the sabbath, v. 3. II. The yearly feasts. 1. The passover, and the feast of unleavened bread, (v. 4. 8.) to which was annexed the offering of the sheaf of first fruits, v. 9. 14. 2. Pentecost, v. 15. 22, 3. The solemnities of the seventh month. The feast of trumpets was then the first day, (v. 23. 24.) the day of atonement on the tenth day; (v. 26. 32.) and the feast of tabernacles on the fifteenth, v. 33. 44.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, Concerning the feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, even these are my feasts. 3. Six days shall work be done; but the seventh day is the sabbath of rest, a holy convocation; ye shall do no work therein: it is the sabbath of the Lord in all your dwellings.

Here is, 1. A general account of the holy times which God appointed, (v. 2.) and it is only his appointment that can make time holy; for he is the Lord of time; and as far as he has set it, that is a golden time. It was he that sanctified and blessed one day above the rest, Gen. 2, 3. Man may by his appointment make a good day, (Esth. 9, 19.) but it is God's prerogative to make a holy day; nor is any thing sanctified but by the stamp of his institution. As all inherent holiness comes from his special grace, so all adherent holiness from his special gift of int- ent. Now, concerning the holy times here ord-ained, observe, (1.) They are called feasts. The day of atonement, which was one of them, was a fast; yet, because most of them were appointed for joy and rejoicing, they are in the general called feasts. Some read it, These are my assemblies, but that is evidently a wrong; no, nor could I rather read it, These are my solemnities; so the word here used is translated, (Isa. 33. 20.) where Zion is called the city of our solemnities: and, reading it so here, the day of atonement was as great a solemnity as any of them. (2.) They are the feasts of the Lord; (my feasts,) observed to the honour of his name, and in obedience to his command. (3.) They were public and public; they were not observed by the priests only that attended the sanctuary, but by all the people. And this proclamation was the joyful sound, concerning which we read, Blessed are the people that know it, Ps. 89. 15. (4.) They were to be sanctified and solemnized with holy convocations, that the services of these feasts might appear me more honourable and august, and the people more unanimous in the performance of them. It was for the honour of God, and his institutions, which sought not corners, and the purity of which would be best preserved by the public administration of them, it was also for the edification of the people in love, that the feasts were to be observed as holy convocations.

2. A repetition of the law of the sabbath in the first place. Though the annual feasts were more remarkable by their general attendance at the sanctuary, yet these last must eclipse the brightness of the sabbath. v. 3. They are here told, (1.) That on that day they must withdraw themselves from all the affairs and business of the world. It is a sabbath of rest, typifying our spiritual rest from sin, and in God; Ye shall do no work therein. On other holy days they were forbidden to do any service work; (v. 7.) but on the sabbath, and the day of atonement, (which is also called a sabbath,) they were to do no work at all, no dressing of meat. (2.) On that day they must employ themselves in the service of God. [1.] It is a holy convocation, that is, "If it lie within your reach, you shall sanctify it in a religious assembly: let as many as can come to the door of the tabernacle, and let others meet elsewhere for prayer, and praise, and the reading of the law," as in the schools of the prophets, while prophecy continued, and afterward in the synagogues. Christ, not the Law, was the object of that Testament sabbath to be a holy convocation, by meeting his disciples once and again, (and perhaps often,) on the first day of the week. [2.] Whether you have opportunity of sanctifying it in a holy convocation or not, yet let it be the sabbath of the Lord in all your dwellings. Put a difference between that day and other days in your families. It is the sabbath of the Lord, the day on which he rested from the work of creation, and on which he has appointed us to rest: let it be observed in all your dwellings, even now that you dwell in tents. Note, God's sabbaths are to be religiously observed in every private house, by every family apart, as well as by many families together, in holy convocations. The sabbath of the Lord in our dwellings will be their beauty, strength, and safety; it will sanctify, edify, and glorify them.

4. These are the feasts of the Lord, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons. 5. In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord's passover. 6. And on the fifteenth day of the same month, is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord: seven days ye must eat unleavened bread. 7. In the first day ye shall have a holy convocation: ye shall do no servile work therein. 8. But ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord seven days: in the seventh day is a holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work within. 9. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 10. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land which I give unto you, and shall reap the harvest thereof, then ye shall bring a sheaf of the first-fruits of your harvest unto the priest; 11. And he shall wave the sheaf before the Lord, to be accepted for you: on the morrow after the sabbath the priest shall wave it. 12. And ye shall offer that day, when ye wave the sheaf, a he-lamb without blemish of the first year, for a burnt-offering unto the Lord. 13. And the meat-offering thereof shall be two tenth deals of fine flour mingled with oil, an offering made by fire unto the Lord for a sweet savour: and the drink-offering thereof shall be of wine, the fourth part of a hin. 14. And ye shall eat neither bread, nor parched corn, nor green ears, until the self-same day that ye have brought an offering unto your God: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, in all your dwellings.

Here again the feasts are called the feasts of the Lord, because he appointed them. Jerobam's feast, which he devised of his own heart, (1 Kings 12. 33.) was an affront to God, and a reproach upon the people. These feasts were to be proclaimed in their seasons; (v. 4.) and the seasons God chose for them were in March, May, and September, (according to our present computation,) not in winter, because travelling would then be uncomfortable, when the days were short and the ways foul; not in the middle of summer, because then in those countries they were gathering in their harvest and vintage, and could not be spared from their country business. Thus graciously does God consult our comfort in his appointments, obliging us thereby religiously to regard his glory in our observance of them, and not to complain of them as a burthen. The solemnities appointed them were, 1. Many, and returned frequently; which was intended to preserve in them a deep sense of God and religion, and to prevent their inclining to the superstitions of the heathen. God kept them fully employed in his service, that they might not have time to hearken to the temptations of the idolatrous neighbourhood they lived in. 2. They were most of them times of joy and rejoicing. The weekly sabbath is so, and all their yearly solemnities, except the day of atonement. God would thus teach them that wisdom's ways are pleasantness, and engage them to his service, by encouraging them to be cheerful in it, and to sing at their work. Seven days were days of strict rest and holy convocations: The first day and the seventh of the feast of unleavened bread; the day of Pentecost; the day of the feast of trumpets; the first day and the eighth of the feast of tabernacles; and the day of atonement. Here were six for holy joy, and one only for holy mourning. We are commanded to rejoice evermore, but not to be evermore weeping.

Here is, (1.) A repetition of the law of the passover, which was to be observed on the fourteenth day of the first month, in remembrance of their deliverance out of Egypt, and the distinguishing preservation of their first-born; mercy never to be forgotten. This feast was to begin with the killing of the paschal lamb, v. 5. It was to continue seven days, during all which time they were to eat sad bread, that was unleavened, (v. 6.) and the first and last day of the seven were to be days of rest, holy convocations, v. 7. 8. They were not idle days; spent in sport and recreation, (as many as that are called Christians spend their holy days,) but offerings were made by fire unto the Lord at his altar; and we have reason to think that the people were taught to employ their time in prayer, and praise, and godly meditation.

(2.) An order for the offering of a sheaf of the first-fruits upon the second day of the feast of unleavened bread: the first is called the sabbath, because it was observed as a sabbath, (v. 11.) and on the morrow after, they had this solemnity. A sheaf or handful of new corn was brought to the priest, who was to heave it up, in token of his presenting it to the God of heaven, and to wave it to and fro before the Lord, as the Lord of the whole earth, and this should be a thank-offering, that bread and flesh might be set together on God's table. They are forbidden to eat of their new corn, till this handful was offered to God; for it was fit, if God and Israel feast together, that he should be served first. And the offering of this sheaf of first-fruits in the name of the whole congregation, did, as it were, sanctify to them their whole harvest, and give them a comfortable use of all the rest; for then we may eat our bread with joy, when we have, in some measure, performed our duty to God, and God has accepted our works, for thus all our enjoyments become clean to us.

Now, [1.] This law was given now, though there was no occasion for putting it in execution till they came to Canaan: in the wilderness they sowed no corn; but God's feeding them there with bread from heaven obliged them hereafter not to grudge him half a bushel of any fruit of the land. We find that when they came into Canaan, the manna ceased upon the very day that the sheaf of first-fruits was offered; they had eaten of the old corn the day before, (Josh. 5. 11.) and then on this day they offered the first-fruits, by which they became entitled to the new corn too, (v. 12.) so that there was no more occasion for manna. [2.] This sheaf of first-fruits was typical of our Lord Jesus Christ, who is named the first-fruits of those that slept, 1 Cor. 15. 20. That branch of the Lord (Isa. 4. 2.) was then presented to him, in the virtue of the sacrifice of himself the Lamb of God, and it was accepted for us. It is very observable, that our Lord Jesus rose from the dead on the very day that the first-fruits were offered, to show that he was the Substance of this shadow. [3.] We are taught by this law, that we should give our substance, and with the first-fruits of all our increase, Prov. 3. 9. They were not to eat of their new corn, till God's part was offered to him out of it, (v. 14.) for we must always begin with God; begin our lives with him, begin every day with him, begin every meal with him, begin every affair and business with him; seek first the kingdom of God.

15. And ye shall count unto you from the morrow after the sabbath, from that day ye brought the sheaf of the wave-offering; seven sabbaths shall be complete: 16. Even unto the morrow after the seventh sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer a new meat-offering unto the Lord. 17. Ye shall bring out of your habitations two wave-offerings, of two tenth deals: they shall be of fine flour; they shall be baked with leaven; they are the first-fruits unto the Lord. 18. And ye shall offer with the bread seven lambs without blemish, of the first year, and one young bullock, and two rams: they shall be for a burnt-offering unto the Lord, with their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, even an offering made by fire of sweet savour unto the Lord. 19. Then ye shall sacrifice one kid of the goats for a sin-offering, and two lambs of the first year for a sacrifice of peace-offerings. 20. And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the first-fruits for a wave-offering before the Lord, with the two lambs: they shall be holy to the Lord for the priests. 21. And ye shall proclaim on the selfsame day, that it may be a holy convocation unto you; ye shall do no servile work therein: it shall be a statute for ever in all your dwellings throughout your generations. 22. And when ye reap the harvest of your land, thou shalt not make clean riddance of the corners of thy field when thou reapest, neither shalt thou gather any gleanings of thy harvest; thou shalt leave them unto the poor, and to the stranger: I am the Lord your God.
1. 9. These were the only peace-offerings that were offered on behalf of the whole congregation, and they were reckoned most holy offerings, whereas other peace-offerings were but holy. All these offerings are here appointed, v. 18...20. 3. That one day was to be kept with a holy convocation, v. 21. It was one of the days on which all Israel was to meet God and one another, at the place which the Lord should choose. Some suggest, that whereas seven days were to make up the feast of unleavened bread, there was only one day appointed for the feast of pentecost, because this was a busy time of the year with them, and God allowed them speedily to return to their work in the country. This annual feast was instituted in remembrance of the giving of the law upon Mount Sinai, the fifteenth day after they came out of Egypt. That was the feast which, they were told in Egypt, must be observed to God in the wilderness, as a memorial of which ever after they kept this feast. But the period and perfection of this feast was the purging out of the Spirit upon the apostles on the day of this feast, (Acts 2, 1.) in which the law of Faith was given, fifty days after Christ our Passover was sacrificed for us. And on that day (as Bishop Patrick well expresses it) the apostles, having themselves received the first-fruits of the Spirit, begat three thousand souls, through the word of truth, and presented them, as the first-fruits of the Christian church, to God and the Lamb.

To the institution of the feast of Pentecost is annexed a repetition of that law, which we had before,(ch. 19. 9.) by which they were required to leave the gleanings of their fields, and the corn that grew on the ends of the butts, for the poor, v. 22. Probably, it comes in here as a thing which the priests must take occasion to remind the people of, when they brought their first-fruits, intimating to them, That to obey, even in this small matter, was better than to sacrifice; and that unless they were obedient, their offerings should not be accepted. It also taught them that the joy of harvest should express itself in charity to the poor, who must have their due out of what we have, as well as God his. They that are truly sensible of the mercy they receive from God, will without grudging show mercy to the poor.

23. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 24. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the seventh month, in the first day of the month, shall ye have a sabbath, a memorial of blowing of trumpets, a holy convocation. 25. Ye shall do no servile work therein; but ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord. 26. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 27. Also on the tenth day of this seventh month there shall be a day of atonement: it shall be a holy convocation unto you; and ye shall afflict your souls, and offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord. 28. And ye shall do no work in that same day; for it is a day of atonement, to make an atonement for you before the Lord your God. 29. For whatsoever soul it be that shall not be afflicted in that same day, he shall be cut off from among his people. 30. And whatsoever soul it be that doth any work in that same day, the same soul will I destroy from among his people. 31. Ye shall do no manner of work: it shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, in all your dwellings. 32. It shall be unto you a sabbath of rest, and ye shall afflict your souls: in the ninth day of the month at even, from even unto even, shall ye celebrate your sabbath.

Here is, 1. The institution of the feast of trumpets, on the first day of the seventh month, v. 24, 25. That which was now the seventh month had been reckoned the first month, and the year of jubilee was still to begin without it. It was so that Moses, who was their new-year's day. It was to be as their other yearly sabbaths, a day of holy rest, Ye shall do no servile work therein; and a day of holy work, Ye shall offer an offering to the Lord; concerning which particular directions were afterward given, Numb. 29. 1. That which is here made peculiar to this festival, is, that it was a memorial of blowing of trumpets. They blew the trumpet every year on this day, (Ps. 81. 3.) but in the new-year of the seventh month it was to be done with more than ordinary solemnity; for they began to blow at sun-rise, and continued till sun-set. Now, (1.) This is here said to be a memorial, perhaps, of the sound of the trumpet upon Mount Sinai when the law was given, which must never be forgotten. Some think that it was a memorial of the creation of the world, which is supposed to be the Jewish reason for the trumpet, which reason this was, till now, the first month. The mighty word by which God made the world is called the voice of his thunder; (Ps. 104. 7.) fitly therefore was it commemorated by blowing of trumpets; or a memorial of shouting, as the Chaldee renders it; for when the foundations of the earth were fastened, all the sons of God shouted for joy, Job 38. 6, 7. (2.) The Jewish writers suppose it to have a spiritual signification. Now, at the beginning of the year, they were called by this sound of trumpet to shake off their spiritual drowsiness; to search and try their ways, and to amend them; the day of atonement was the ninth day after this; and thus they were awakened to prepare for that day, by sincere and serious repentance, that it might be indeed to them a day of atonement. And they say, The devout Jews exercised themselves more in good works between the feast of trumpets and the day of expiation than at any other time of the year.

(3.) It was typical of the preaching of the gospel, by which joyful sound souls were called in to serve God, and keep a spiritual feast with him. The conversion of the nations to the faith of Christ is said to be by the blowing of a great trumpet, Isa. 27. 13.

A repetition of the law of the day of atonement, that is, so much of it as concerned the people. (1.) They must on this day rest from all manner of work; and not only from servile works, as on other annual festivals; it must be as strict a rest as that of the weekly sabbath, v. 29, 30, 31. The reason is, For it is a day of atonement. Note, The humbling of our souls for sin, and the making of our peace with God, is work that requires the whole man, and the closest application of mind imaginable, and all little enough. He that would do the work of a day of atonement in its day, as it should be done, had needs lay aside the thoughts of every thing else. On that day, God shall hence unto his profile, and unto his saints; and therefore they must lay aside all their worldly business, that they might think more deeply of the most sacred things, and of the voice of joy and gladness. Fasting days should be days of rest. (2.) They must afflict their souls, and this upon pain of being cut off by the hand of God, v. 27, 29, 32. They must mortify the body, and deny the appetites of it, in token of their sorrow for the sins they had committed, and the mortifying of their in-dwelling corruptions. Every soul must be afflicted, because every soul was polluted, and guilty before God: while none have fulfilled the laws of innocency, none are exempt from the law of repentance. Beside that, every man must sigh and cry for the abominations of the land. (3.) This day must be observed from even to even; (v. 32.) ye shall afflict your souls, that is, "Ye shall begin your fast, and the expressions of your humiliation, in the ninth day of the month at even." They were to leave off all their worldly labour, and compose themselves to the work of the day approaching, some time before it was yet the ninth day, and not to take any food, (except children and sick people,) till after sun-set on the tenth day. Note, The eves of solemn days ought to be employed in solemn preparation. When work for God and our souls is to be done, we should not strain ourselves in time for the doing of it; for how can we spend our time better? Of this sabbath the rule here is to be understood, From even unto even shall ye celebrate your sabbath. 33. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 34. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, The fifteenth day of this seventh month shall be the feast of tabernacles for seven days unto the Lord. 35. On the first day shall be a holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work therein. 36. Seven days ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord: on the eighth day shall be a holy convocation unto you, and ye shall offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord: it is a solemn assembly; and ye shall do no servile work therein. 37. These are the feasts of the Lord, which ye shall proclaim to be holy convocations, to offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, a burnt-offering, and a meat-offering, a sacrifice, and drink-offerings, every thing upon his day: 38. Besides the sabbaths of the Lord, and besides your gifts, and besides all your vows, and besides all your free-will-offerings, which ye give unto the Lord. 39. Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month, when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast unto the Lord seven days: on the first day shall be a sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be a sabbath. 40. And ye shall take you on the first day the boughs of goodly trees, branches of palm-trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; and ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God seven days. 41. And ye shall keep it a feast unto the Lord seven days in the year: it shall be a statute for ever in your generations; ye shall celebrate it in the seventh month. 42. Ye shall dwell in booths seven days: all that are Israelites born shall dwell in booths; 43. That your generations may know that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God. 44. And Moses declared unto the children of Israel the feasts of the Lord.

We have here the institution of the feast of tabernacles, which was one of the three great feasts at which all the males were bound to attend, and celebrated with more expressions of joy than any of them.

I. It was to be observed on the fifteenth day of the seventh month, (v. 34.) but five days after the day of atonement. We may suppose, though they were not bound to attend on the day of atonement, as on the three great festivals, yet that many of the devout Jews came up so many days before the feast of tabernacles, as to enjoy the opportunity of attending on the day of atonement. Now, 1. The afflicting of their souls on the day of atonement prepared them for the joy of the feast of tabernacles. The more we are grieved and humbled for sin, the better qualified we are for the comforts of the Holy Ghost. 2. The joy of this feast reimbursed them for the sorrow of that fast; for they that sow in tears shall reap in joy.

II. It was to continue eight days, the first and last of which were to be observed as sabbaths, days of holy rest, and holy convocations, v. 35, 36, 39. The sacrifices to be offered on these eight days, we have a very large appointment of, Num. 29. 12. &c.

III. During the first seven days of this feast, all the people were to leave their houses, and dwell in booths made of the boughs of thick trees, particularly palm-trees, v. 40, 42. The Jews make the taking of the branches to be a distinct ceremony from the making of the booths. It is said, indeed, (Neh. 8. 15.) that they made their booths of the branches of trees, which they might do, and yet use that further expression of joy, the carrying of palm branches in their hands, which appears to have been a token of triumph upon other occasions, (John 12. 13.) and is alluded to, Rev. 7. 9. The eighth day some make a distinct feast of itself, but it is called (John 7. 37.) that great day of the feast; it was the day on which they returned from their booths, to settle again in their own houses.

IV. They were to rejoice before the Lord God during all the time of this feast, v. 40. The tradition of this feast is, that joy was to be made the great event of their joy by dancing, and singing hymns of praise to God, with musical instruments: and not the common people only, but the wise men of Israel, and their elders, were to do it in the court of the sanctuary; for (say they) the joy with which a man rejoices in doing a commandment, is really a great service.

Now, 1. This feast was to be kept in remembrance of their dwelling in tents in the wilderness. Thus is it expounded here, (v. 43.) That your generations may know, not only by the written history, but by this ocular tradition, that I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths. Thus it kept in perpetual remembrance, (1.) The meaness of their beginning, and the low and desolate state out of which God advanced that people. Note, Those who are comfortably fixed, ought often to call to mind their former unsettled state, when they were but little in their own eyes. (2.) The mercy of God to them, that, when they dwelt in tabernacles, God not only set up a tabernacle for himself among them, but, with the utmost care and tenderness imaginable, hung a canopy over them, even the cloud that sheltered them from the heat of the sun. God's former mercies to us and our fathers ought to be kept in everlasting remembrance. The eighth day was the great day of this feast, because then they were returned to their own houses again; and remembered how, after they had long dwelt in tents in the wilderness, at length they came to a happy settlement in the land of promise, where they dwelt in goodly houses. And they would the more sensibly value and be thankful for the comforts and conveniences of their houses, when they had been seven days dwelling in booths. It is good for those that have ease and plenty, sometimes to learn what it is to endure hardships. 2. It was a feast of in-gathering, so it is called, Exod. 23. 16. When they had gathered in the firstfruits of the land (v. 10.) the vintage as well as the harvest, then they were to keep this feast in thankfulness to God for all the increase of the year; and some think that the eighth day of the feast had special reference to this ground of the institution. Note, The joy of harvest ought to be improved for the furtherance of our joy in God. The earth is the Lord’s, and the fullness thereof, and therefore whatever we have the glory of, especially when any mercy is perfected. 3. It was a typical feast. It is supposed by many that our blessed Saviour was born much about the time of this feast; then he left his mansions of light above to tabernacle among us, (John 1. 14.) and dwelt in booths. And the worship of God under the New Testament is prophesied of under the notion of keeping the feast of tabernacles, Zech. 14. 16. For, (1.) The gospel of Christ teaches us to dwell in tabernacles, to sit loose in this world, as those that have here no continuing city, but, by faith and hope, and a holy contempt of present things, to go out to Christ without the camp, Heb. 13. 13, 14. (2.) It teaches us to rejoice before the Lord our God. Those are the circumcision, Israelites indeed, that always rejoice in Christ Jesus. Phil. 3. 3. And the more we are taken off from this world, the less liable we are to the interruption of holy joys. Lastly, We have here the summary and conclusion of these institutions. 1. God appointed these feasts, (v. 27. 38.) Beside the Sabbaths and your free-will offerings. This teaches us, (1.) That calls to extraordinary services will not excuse us from our constant stated performances. Within the days of the feast of tabernacles there must fall an annual observation, which must be strictly and punctually observed as any other. (2.) That God’s institutions leave room for free-will offerings. Not that we may invent what he never instituted, but we may repeat what he has instituted, ordinarily, the often the better. God is well pleased with a willing people. 2. Moses declared them to the children of Israel, v. 44. He let them know what God appointed, and neither more nor less. Thus St. Paul does in the Epistle to the Romans, in what he had received from the Lord. We have reason to be thankful that the feasts of the Lord, declared unto us, are not so numerous, nor the observance of them so burdensome and costly, as their then were, but more spiritual and significant, and sure, sweeter, earnest of the everlasting feast, at the last ingathering, which we hope to be celebrating to eternity.

CHAP. XXIV.

In this chapter we have, 1. A repetition of the laws concerning the sacrifices and the show-bread, v. 1–5. 2. The violation of the law against blasphemy, with the imprisonment, trial, condemnation, and execution of the blasphemer, v. 10. 14., with v. 23. 3. The law against blasphemy reinforced, (v. 15. 16.) with sundry other laws, v. 17. 22.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Command the children of Israel, that they bring unto thee pure oil-olive, beaten, for the light, to cause the lamps to burn continually. 3. Without the vail of the testimony, in the tabernacle of the congregation, shall Aaron order it from the evening unto the morning, before the Lord continually: it shall be a statute for ever in your generations. 4. He shall order the lamps upon the pure candlestick before the Lord continually. 5. And thou shalt take fine flour, and bake twelve cakes thereof: two tenth deals shall be in one cake. 6. And thou shalt set them in two rows, six on a row, upon the pure table before the Lord. 7. And thou shalt put pure frankincense upon each row, that it may be on the bread for a memorial, even an offering made by fire unto the Lord. 8. Every sabbath he shall set it in order before the Lord continually, being taken from the children of Israel by an everlasting covenant. 9. And it shall be Aaron’s and his sons’: and they shall eat it in the holy place: for it is most holy unto him of the offerings of the Lord made by fire, by a perpetual statute.

Care is here taken, and orders given, for the decent furnishing of the candlestick and table in God’s house.

1. The lamps must always be kept burning. This was the law we had before, Exod. 27. 29, 30. It is here repeated, probably, because it now began to be put in execution, when other things were settled. (1.) The people were to provide oil, (v. 2.) and this, as every thing else that was to be used in God’s service, must be of the best pure oil-olive beaten, probably it was double strained. This was to cause the lamps to burn; all our English copies read it lamps, but in the original it is singular, (v. 2.) to cause the lamp to burn: but plural, (v. 4.) He shall order the lamps. The seven lamps in all one lamp; in allusion to which, the blessed Spirit of grace is represented by seven lamps of fire before the throne, (Rev. 4. 5.) for there are diversities of gifts, but one Spirit, 1 Cor. 12. 4. Ministers are as burning and shining lights in Christ’s church, but it is the duty of people to provide comfortably for them, as Israel for the lamps. Scandalous maintenance makes a scandalous ministry. (2.) The priests were to tend the lamps; they must snuff them, clean the candlestick, and supply them with oil, morning and evening, v. 3, 4. Thus, it is the work of the ministers of the gospel to hold forth that word of life, not to set up new light, but, by expounding and preaching the word, to make the light of it more clear and extensive. This was the ordinary way of keeping the lamps burning: but when the church was poor, and in distress, we find its lamps fed constantly with oil from the good olives immediately, without the ministry of priest or people; (Zech. 4. 2, 3.) for, though God has tied us to means, he has not tied himself to them, but will take effectual care that his lamps never go out in the world for want of oil.

2. The table must always be kept spread. This was appointed before, Exod. 25. 30. And here also, (1.) The table was furnished with bread; not dainties or varieties to gratify a luxurious palate, but twelve loaves, or cakes, of bread, v. 5, 6.
Where there is plenty of bread, there is no famine; and where bread is not, there is no feast. There was a loaf for every tribe, for in our Father's house there is bread enough. They were all provided for by the divine bounty, and were all welcome to the divine grace. Even after the twelfth year of the ten tribes, this number of loaves was continued, (2 Chron. 13. 11.) for the sake of those few of each tribe that retained their affection to the temple, and continued their attendance on it. (2.) A handful of frankincense was put in a gold saucer, upon or by each row, (v. 7.) When the bread was removed, and given to the priests, this frankincense was burnt upon the golden altar, (I suppose) ever and above the daily incense: and this was for a memorial instead of the bread, an offering made by fire. As the handful of the meat-offering, which was burnt upon the altar, is called the memorial thereof, ch. 2. 2. Thus a little was accepted as an humble acknowledgment, and all the loaves were consigned to the priests. All God's spiritual Israel, typified by the twelve loaves, are made through Christ a sweet savour to him, and their prayers are said to come up before God for a memorial, Acts 10. 4. The word is borrowed from the ceremonial law. (3.) Every sabbath it was renewed. When the loaves had stood there a week, the priests had them to eat with other holy things that were to be eaten in the holy place, (v. 9.) and new ones were provided at the public charge, and put in the room of them, Israel's law says, (v. 10.) that the priests that put them on, were mixed with them that took off, that the table might be never empty, but the bread might be before the Lord continually.” God is never unprovided for the entertainment of those that visit him, as men often are, Luke 11. 5. Every one of those cakes contained two tenth deals, that is, two ounces of fine flour; just so much manner every Israel the gathered on the sixth day for the sabbath, Exod. 16. 22. Whencesome infer that this show-bread, which was set on the table on the sabbath, was intended as a memorial of the manna wherewith they were fed in the wilderness. Christ's ministers should provide new bread for his house every sabbath-day, the production of their fresh studies in the scripture, that their proficiency may appear to all, 1 Tim. 4. 1, 5.

10. And the son of an Israelitish woman, whose father was an Egyptian, went out among the children of Israel; and this son of the Israelitish woman, and a man of Israel strove together in the camp; 11. And the Israelitish woman's son blasphemed the name of the Lord, and cursed. And they brought him unto Moses; (and his mother's name was Shelomith, the daughter of Dibri, of the tribe of Dan;) 12. And they put him in ward, that the mind of the Lord might be showed them. 13. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 14. Bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp; and let all that heard him lay their hands upon his head, and let all the congregation stone him. 15. And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, Whosoever curseth God shall bear his sin. 16. And he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death, and all the congregation shall certainly stone him: as well the stranger, as he that is born in the land, when he blasphemeth the name of the Lord, shall be put to death. 17. And he that killeth any man shall surely be put to death. 18. And he that killeth a beast shall make it good; beast for beast. 19. And if a man cause a blemish in his neighbour; as he hath done, so shall it be done to him; 20. Breach for breach, eye for eye, tooth for tooth; as he hath caused a blemish in a man, so shall it be done to him again. 21. And he that killeth a beast, he shall restore it: and he that killeth a man, he shall be put to death. 22. Ye shall have one manner of law, as well for the stranger as for one of your own country: for I am the Lord your God. 23. And Moses spake to the children of Israel, that they should bring forth him that had chased out of the camp, and stone him with stones: And the children of Israel did as the Lord commanded Moses.

Evil manners, we say, beget good laws. We have here an account of the evil manners of a certain nameless mongrel Israelite, and the good laws occasioned thereby. 1. The offender was the son of an Egyptian father, and an Israelitish mother; (v. 10.) his mother was of the tribe of Dan; (v. 11.) neither he nor his father is named, but his mother only who was an Israelite. This notice is taken of his parentage, either, 1. To intimate what occasioned the quarrel he was engaged in. The Jews say, “He offered to set up his tent among the Danites in the night of his master, but was justly opposed by some or other of that tribe, and informed, that, his father being an Egyptian, he had no part or lot in the matter, but must look upon himself as a stranger.” Or, 2. To show the common ill effect of such mixt marriages. When a daughter of Israel would marry an idolatrous malignant Egyptian, what could be the production of such a marriage but a blasphemer? For the children will be apt to take after the worst side, whichever it is; and will sooner learn of an Egyptian father to blaspheme, than of an Israelitish mother to pray and praise. 11. The occasion of the offence was contention; he strove with a man of Israel. The mixt multitude of Egyptians that came up with Israel, (Exod. 12. 38.) were many ways hurtful to them, and this was one, they were often the authors of strife. The way to preserve the peace of the church, is to preserve the peace of it. In this strife he was cast into ill language. Note, When quarrels begin, we know not what mischief they will make before they end, nor how great a matter a little fire may kindle. When men's passion is up, they are apt to forget both their reason and their religion; which is a good reason why we should not be apt either to give or to resent provocation, but leave off strife before it be meddled with, because the beginning of it is as the letting forth of water.

11. The offence itself was blasphemy and cursing, v. 11. It is supposed that his cause came to be heard before the judges, who determined that he had no right to the privileges of an Israelite, his father being an Egyptian; and that, being enraged at the sentence, 1. He blasphemed the name of the Lord. He blasphemed the name, that is, God; who is known by his name only, not by his nature, or any similitude. Not as if God were a mere name, but his is a name above every name. The translators add of the Lord, which is implied, but not expressed, in the original, for the greater reverence of the Divine Majesty: It should be found on record, that the very name of Jehovah should be blasphemed; tell it not in Gath. It is a fond conceit of the superstitious Jews, that his blasphemy was in pronouncing the name of Jehovah, which they call ineffable; he that made himself known by that name never forbade the calling of him by that name. It is probable, that, finding himself aggrieved by the divine approbation which was given to the Hebrews as a people, and strangers, he impudently reproached both the law and the Law-Maker, and set him at defiance. 2. He cursed either God himself, and (then his cursing was the same with blasphemy,) or the person with whom he strove; imprecations of mischief are the heathen language of hasty passion, as well as of rooted malice: or perhaps he cursed the judges that gave sentence against him; he flew in the face of the court, and ridiculed the process of it: thus he added sin to sin.

IV. The caution with which he was proceeded against for this sin. The witnesses or inferior judges brought him and his case (which was somewhat extraordinary) unto Moses, (v. 11.) according to the order settled; (Exod. 28. 22.) and Moses himself would not give judgment hastily, but committed the offender to custody, till he had told them all that was in his case. Note, Judges must deliberate; both those that give the verdict, and those that give the sentence, must consider diligently what they do, and do nothing rashly, for the judgment is God's, (Deut. 1. 17.) and before him there will be a rehearing of the cause. They waited to know what was the mind of the Lord, whether he was to be put to death by the hand of the magistrate, or to be left to the judgment of God; or whether, they wanted to know whether he should be stoned, as those were to be that only cursed their parents, (ch. 20. 9.) or whether the crime, being so much greater, some sorer punishment should be inflicted on him. Note, Those that sit in judgment should sincerely desire, and by prayer and the use of all good means should endeavour, to know the mind of the Lord, because they judge for him, (2 Chron. 19. 6.) and to him they must give an account.

V. Sentence past upon this offender by the righteous Judge of heaven and earth himself; (v. 14.) Let all the congregation stone him. God could have cut him off by an immediate stroke from heaven, but he would put this honour upon the institution of magistracy, to make use of it for the supporting and vindicating of his own glory in the world. Observe, 1. The place of execution appointed, The congregation without the camp; to signify their detestation of the crime, they must thus cast out the criminal as an abominable branch, and separate him from them as an unclean thing, and unworthy a place in the camp of Israel. 2. The executioners; Let all the congregation do it, to show their zeal for the honour of God's name. Every man should have a share in the place of execution that blasphemed. God concerning himself nearly concerned in the reproaches cast on God, Ps. 69. 9. Thus also the greater terror would be cast upon the congregation; that once helped to stone a blasphemer would ever after dread every thing that bordered upon blasphemy, that looked like it, or looked towards it. 3. The solemnity of the execution; before the congregation standing; those witnesses were to lay their hands upon his head. The Jews say that this was used in the execution of no criminals but blasphemers only; and that it was done with words to this purport, Thy blood be upon thine own head, for thou thyselh hast occasioned it. Let no blame be laid on the law, judges, juries, or witnesses; if thou wernest, thou alone shall bear it.

VI. A standing law made upon this occasion for the substance of blasphemy, v. 15. 16. Magistrates are the guardians of both tables, and ought to be as jealous for the honour of God against those that speak contemptuously of his being and government, as for the public peace and safety against the disturbers of them. 1. A great stress is laid upon this law, as in no case to be dispensed with. He shall surely be put to death; they shall certainly stone him; thus let none say, God honoureth might think it hard to make a mercy; for if for a word; (words are but wind;) but God would let them know that such words as these were not to be made light of, which come from malice against God in the heart of him that speaks, and must occasion either great guilt or great grief to those that hear. 2. It is made to extend to the strangers that sojourned among them, as well as those that were born in the land. God never made any law to compel strangers to be circumcised, and embrace the Jewish religion, (proslytes made by force would be no honour to the God of Israel,) but he made a law to restrain strangers from speaking evil of the God of Israel. 3. He that was put to death for blasphemy, is said to bear his sin, in the punishment of it; no sacrifice being appointed, on the head of which the sin might be transferred, he himself was the sacrifice. So did it in the case of the man of God, to divine justice. So his own tongue fell upon him, (Ps. 64. 8.) and the tongue of a blasphemer will fall heavy.

VII. A repetition of some other laws annexed to this new law. 1. That murder should be punished with death, (v. 17. and again v. 21.) according to an ancient law in Noah's time, (Gen. 9. 6.) and the very laws of Moses, (Deut. 19. 21.) The judges should in like manner be punished by the law of retaliation, v. 19. 20. Not that men might in these cases be their own avengers, but they might appeal to the civil magistrate, who should award suffering to the injurious, and satisfaction to the injured, as should be thought fit, in proportion to the hurt done. This law we had before, Exod. 22. 4, 5. and it was more agreeable to that dispensation in which we were included, than to the dispensation of law. 6. Not to restrain magistrates from executing public justice, but to restrain us all from returning personal injuries, and to oblige us to forgive, as we are and hope to be forgiven. 3. That hurt done willingly to a neighbour's cattle should be punished, by making good the damage, v. 18. 21. Thus the divine law took not only their lives, but their good also, under its protection. Those beasts which be longed to no particular person, but were, as our laws speak, ferre naturae—of a wild nature, it was lawful for them to kill; but not those which any man had a property in. Does God take care for oxen? Yes; for he gives them laws. This, as well as native Israelites, should be both entitled to the benefit of this law, so as not to suffer wrong, and should be liable to the penalty of this law, in case they did wrong. And it should seem this is it that brings in these laws here, to show how equitable it was, that strangers as well as Israelites should be punished for blasphemy, because strangers as well as Israelites were punishable for other crimes, and there may be this further reason for the recognition of these laws here; God would hereby show what provision he had made for man's safety, in punishing those that were injurious to him; which should be an argument with magistrates to be jealous for his honour, and to punish those that blaspheme his name. If God took care for their comfort, they ought to take care for his glory.

VIII. The execution of the blasphemer; Moses did, as it were, sign the warrant for it, he smote unto the children of Israel to do it, and they did as the Lord commanded Moses, v. 23. This teaches that death is the wages of sin; and that blasphemy in particular is an iniquity to be punished by the judges. But if those who thus profane the name of God escape punishment from men, yet the Lord our God will not suffer them to escape his righteous judgments. This blasphemer was the first that died by the hand of the Lord (v. 23.) And he was the first that died for the gospel, died by the abuse of this law; the martyr and the malefactor suffered the same death; but how vast the difference between them!

CHAP. XXV. The law of this chapter concerns the lands and estates of the Israelites in Canaan, the occupying another转让ing of which were to be under the divine direction, as well as the management of religious worship; for as the tabernacle was a holy house, so Canaan was a holy land; and upon this account, what was the glory of all lands. In token of a peculiar title which God had to this land, and a right to dispose of it, he appointed, 1. That every seventh year should be a year of rest, a sabbatical year, a sabbatical land. 1. In this God expected from them extraordinary instances of faith and obedience, and they might expect from God extraordinary instances of power and goodness in providing for them. 2. The every fiftieth year should be a year of jubilee, that is, 1. A year of release of debts and mortgages, and return to the possession of their alienated lands, v. 8–17. Particular directions are given, 1. For the sale and distribution of lands, v. 29–32. 2. Of houses in cities and villages, with provision for Levite cities, v. 29–34. 2. A year of release of servants and bond slaves. (1.) Here is inserted a law for the kind usage of poor debtors, v. 35–38. (2.) Then comes the law for the discharge of all Israelites that were sold for servants, in the year of jubilee, if they were not redeemed before. (1.) If they were sold to the Israelites, v. 39–46. And, (2.) If sold to proselytes, v. 47–55. All the land of Israel should be debarred, and of perpetual obligation in them, though in the letter of them they were not only peculiar to the Jews, but to them only while they were in Canaan.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses in mount Sinai, saying, 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them. When ye come into the land which I give you, then shall the land keep a sabbath unto the Lord. 3. Six years thou shalt sow thy field, and six years thou shalt prune thy vineyard, and gather in the fruit thereof; 4. But in the seventh year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land, a sabbath for the Lord: thou shalt neither sow thy field, nor prune thy vineyard. 5. That which growth of its own accord of thy harvest thou shalt not reap, neither gather the grapes of thy vine undressed: for it is a year of rest unto the land. 6. And the sabbath of the land shall be meat for you; for thee, and for thy servant, and for thy maid, and for thy hired servant, and for the stranger that sojourneth with thee. And for thy cattle, and for the beasts that are in thy land, shall all the increase thereof be meat.

The law of Moses laid a great deal of stress upon the Sabbath, the sanctification of which was the earliest and most ancient of all divine institutions, designed for the keeping up of the knowledge and worship of the Creator among men; that law not only observed the observance of sabbath-days every week, but, for the further advancement of the honour of them, added the institution of a sabbatical year; v. 4. In the sabbatical year shall be a sabbath of rest unto the land. And hence the Jews collected that vulgar tradition, that after the world has stood six thousand years, (a thousand years being to God as one day,) it shall cease, and the eternal sabbath shall succeed. A weak foundation on which to build the fixing of that day and hour which is God’s prerogative to know. This sabbatical year began in the eighth month, and was to be the seventh month of their ecclesiastical year. 1. That at the seed-time, which immediately followed the end of their in-gathering, they should sow no corn in their land, and that they should not in the spring dress their vineyard, and consequently that they should not expect either harvest or vintage the next year. 2. That what their ground did produce of itself, they should not claim any property in or unto it, but should only cultivate it otherwise than from hand to mouth, but leave it for the poor and for the stranger and for the hired servant, and for the beasts of the field, v. 5–7. It must be a sabbath of rest to the land; they must neither do any work about it, nor expect any fruit from it; all annual labours must be intermitted in the seventh year, as much as daily labours on the seventh day. The Jews say, "They began not to reckon for the sabbatical year till they had completed the conquest of Canaan, which was in the eighth year of Joshua;" the seventh year after that was the first sabbatical year, and so the fifteenth year was the jubilee." This year there was to be a general release of debts, (Deut. 15. 1, 2.) and a public reading of the law in the feast, (Deut. 31. 10, 11.) to make it the more solemn.

Now, (1.) God would hereby show them that he was their Landlord, and that they were tenants at will under the Lord; the landlords are wont to stipulate with their tenants, when they shall break up their ground, how long they shall till it, and when they shall let it rest: God would thus give, grant, and convey, that good land to them, under such pro visos and limitations, as should let them know that they were not proprietors, but dependents on their Lord. (2.) It was a kindness to their land to let it rest sometimes, and would keep it in heart (as our husbands and masters do,) for the profit of it; hence the Jews say, "If God would forgive their sins, in the gifts of God’s bounty, which the earth brought forth of itself. (5.) They were brought to live in a constant dependence upon the Divine Providence, finding that as man lives not by bread alone, so he has bread, not by his own industry alone, but, if God pleases, by the word of blessing from the mouth of God, without labours or toil. (6.) They were made mindful of their fall, and that man lived in paradise, when he ate of every good thing not, as since, in the sweat of his face. Labour and toil came in with sin. (7.) They were taught to consider how the poor lived, that did neither sow nor reap, even by the blessing of God upon a little. Lastly, This year of rest typified the spiritual rest which all believers enter into through Christ, our true Noah, who giveth us comfort and rest concerning our work, and the toil of our hands, because of the ground which the Lord hath cursed, Gen. 5. 29.
Through him we are eased of the burthen of worldly care and labour, both being sanctified and sweetened to us, and we are enabled and encouraged to live by faith. And as the fruits of this sabbath of the land were enjoyed in common, so the salvation wrought out by Christ is a common salvation; and this sabbatical year seemed to have been revived in the Christian church, when the believers had all things common, Acts 2. 44.

3. And thou shalt number seven sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years; and the space of the seven sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. 9. Then shalt thou cause the trumpet of the jubilee to sound, on the tenth day of the seventh month; in the day of atonement shall ye make the trumpet sound throughout all your land. 10. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof: it shall be a jubilee unto you; and ye shall return every man unto his possession, and ye shall return every man unto his family. 11. A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be unto you: ye shall not sow, neither reap that which groweth of itself in it, nor gather the grapes in it of thy vine undressed. 12. For it is the jubilee; it shall be holy unto you: ye shall eat the increase thereof out of the field. 13. In the year of this jubilee ye shall return every man unto his possession. 14. And if thou sell aught unto thy neighbour, or buyest aught of thy neighbour's hand, ye shall not oppress one another: 15. According to the number of years after the jubilee thou shalt buy of thy neighbour, and according unto the number of years of the fruits he shall sell unto thee: 16. According to the multitude of years thou shalt increase the price thereof, and according to the fewness of years thou shalt diminish the price of it: for according to the number of the years of the fruits doth he sell unto thee. 17. Ye shall not therefore oppress one another; but thou shalt fear thy God: for I am the Lord your God.

Wherefore ye shall do my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; and ye shall dwell in the land in safety. 19. And the land shall yield her fruit, and ye shall eat your fill, and dwell therein in safety. 20. And if ye shall say, What shall we eat the seventh year? behold, we shall not sow, nor gather in our increase: 21. Then I will command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years. 22. And ye shall sow the eighth year, and eat yet of old fruit until the ninth year; until her fruits come in ye shall eat of the old store.

7. The jubilee was a year of liberty to all the servants, v. 15, &c.
8. The jubilee was a year of liberty to all the debtors, v. 16, &c.
9. The jubilee was a year of liberty to all the borrowers, v. 17, &c.

* The reasoning of Mr. Poole, in his Annotations on the passage, will probably induce the generality of readers to adopt a different opinion. —Ep. their own possessions. Yet it is agreed in the books, that if the king grant lands to a man in fee upon condition he shall not alienate, the condition is good.
Now God would show his people Israel that their land was his, and they were his tenants; and therefore he ties them up that they shall not have power to sell, but only to make leases for any term of years, not going beyond the next jubilee. By this means it was provided, [1. 1.] That their generations should be carefully preserved, which would be of use for clearing our Saviour's pedigree. [2.] That the distinction of tribes should be kept up; for though a man might purchase lands in another tribe, yet he could not retain them longer than till the year of jubilee, and then they would revert of course. [3.]
That none should grow exorbitantly rich, by laying house to house and field to field, (Isa. 5: 8.) but should rather apply themselves to the cultivating of what they had, than the enlarging of their possessions. The wisdom of the Roman commonwealth sometimes provided that no man should be master of above five hundred acres. [4.] That no family should be sunk and ruined, and condemned to perpetual poverty. This particular care God took for the support of the honour of that people, and for the perpetuity of that good land to which the nation in general, but of every man's share to his family in particular, for a perpetual inheritance; that it might the better typify that good part which shall never be taken away from those that have it.
(2.) The liberty which every man was born to,
if it were sold or forfeited, should likewise return at the year of jubilee; (v. 15.) Ye shall return every man to his family. Those that were sold into other families, thereby became strangers to their own land, but in this year of redemption they were to return.
This was typical of our redemption by Christ from the slavery of sin and Satan, and our restoration to the glorious liberty of the children of God. Some compute that the very year in which Christ died was a year of jubilee, and the last that ever was kept. But however that be, we are sure it is the Son that makes us free, and then we are free indeed.

II. A law upon this occasion against oppression in buying and selling of land; neither the buyer nor the seller must over-reach, v. 14+ 17. In short, the buyer must not give less, nor the seller take more than the just value of the thing, considered as necessarily returning at the year of jubilee. It must be settled what the clear yearly value of the land was, and then how many years' purchase it was to be paid for. The land should not be reckon only the years of the fruits, (v. 15.) and therefore must discount for the sabbatical years.
It is easy to observe, that the nearer the jubilee was, the less must the value of the land be; according to the fewness of the years thou shalt diminish the price. But we do not find it so easy practically to infer thence, that the nearer the world comes to it the less our way to be surveyed upon the things of it: because the time is short, and in fashion of the world passeth away, let those that buy, be as though they possessed not. One would put little value on an old house, that is ready to drop down.

All bargains ought to be made by this rule, Ye shall not oppress one another, not take advantage of one man's misfortune, but thou shalt fear me, yea God. Note, The fear of God reigning in the heart would effectually restrain us from doing anything wrong to our neighbour in word or deed; for, though man be not, God is, the Avenger of those that go beyond or defraud their brethren, 1 Thess.
4. 6. Perhaps Nehemiah refers to this very law,
(ch. 5. 15.) where he tells us, that he did not oppress those he had under his power, because of the fear of God.

III. Assurance given them that they should be no losers, but great gainers, by observing these years of
est. It is promised, 1. That they should be safe; (v. 18.) Ye shall dwell all the time in safety.
And again, (v. 19.) the word signifies both outward safety, and inward security and confidence of spirit, that they should be quiet both from evil, and from the fear of evil. 2. That they should be rich; Ye shall eat your fill. Note, If we be careful to do our duty, we may cheerfully trust God with our comfort. 3. That they should not want food convenient that year in which they did neither sow nor reap; (v. 21.) I will command my blessing in the sixth year, and it shall bring forth fruit for three years. This was, (1.) A standing miracle, that whereas at other times one year did but serve toring in another, the productions of the sixth year should serve to bring in the ninth. Note, The blessing of God upon our provision will make a little go a great way, and satisfy even the poor with bread, Ps. 132. 15. It was, (2.) A lasting memorial of the manna, which was given double on the sixth day for two days. And, (3.) It was intended for an encouragement to all God's people, in all ages, to trust him in the way of duty, and to cast their care upon him. There is nothing lost by faith and self-denial in our obedience.

23. The land shall not be sold for ever:
for the land is mine; for ye were strangers and sojourners with me. 24. And in all the land of your possession ye shall grant a redemption for the land. 25. If thy brother be waxen poor, and hath sold some of his possession, and if of his kin come to redeem it, then shall he redeem that which his brother sold. 26. And if the man have none to redeem it, and himself be able to redeem it; 27. Then let him count the years of the sale thereof, and restore the overplus unto the man to whom he sold it, that he may return unto his possession.
28. But if he be not able to restore it to him, then that which is sold shall remain in the hand of that him that hath bought it until the year of jubilee: and in the jubilee it shall go out, and he shall return unto his possession. 29. And if a man sell a dwell-house in a walled city, then he may re-deein it within a whole year after it is sold; within a full year may he redeem it. 30. And if it be not redeemed within the space of a full year, then the house that is in the walled city shall be established for ever to him that bought it, throughout his generations: it shall not go out in the jubilee. 31.
But the houses of the villages which have no walls round about them shall be counted as the fields of the country; they may be redeemed, and they shall go out in the jubilee. 32. Notwithstanding, the cities of the Levites, and the houses of the cities of their possession, may the Levites redeem at any time. 33. And if a man purchase of the Levites, then the house that was sold, and the city of his possession, shall go out in the year of jubilee: for the houses of the cities of the Levites are their possession among the children of Israel. 34. But the field of the suburbs of their cities may not be sold; for it is their perpetual possession. 35. And if thy brother be waxen poor, and fallen in decay with thee, then shalt thou relieve him; yea, though he be a stranger, or a sojourner; that he may live with thee. 36. Take thou no usury of him, or increase: but fear thy God; that thy brother may live with thee. 37. Thou shalt not give him thy money upon usury, nor lend him thy victuals for increase. 38. I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, to give thee the land of Canaan, and to be thy God.

Here is, 1. A law concerning the real estates of the Israelites in the land of Canaan, and the transferring of the mansions therein. 2. That no land should be sold, for ever from the family to whose lot it fell in the division of the land. And the reason given is, The land is mine, and ye are strangers and sojourners with me, v. 23 (1.) God having a particular propriety in this land, he would by this restraint keep them sensible of it. The possessions of good people, who, having given up themselves to God, have therewith given up all they have to him, are in a particular manner at his disposal, and his disposal of them must be submitted to. (2.) They being strangers and sojourners with him in that land, and having their tabernacle among them, to alienate their part of that land would be in effect to put themselves off from their fellowship and communion with God, which that was a token and symbol of. For which reason, Naboth would rather incur the wrath of a king, than part with the inheritance of his fathers, 1 Kings 21. 3.

2. That if a man was constrained through poverty to sell his land for the subsistence of his family, yet, if afterward he was able, he might redeem it before the year of jubilee, (v. 24, 26, 27.) and the price must be settled according to the number of years since the sale, and before the jubilee. 3. That if the person himself was not able to redeem it, his next kinsman might, v. 25. The redeemer thereof, he that is near unto him shall come and shall redeem, so it might be read. The kinsman is called Goel, the redeemer, (Numb. 5. 8. Ruth 3. 9.) to whom belonged the right of redeeming the land. And this typified Christ, who assumed our nature, that he might be our Kinsman, bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh, and being the only Kinsman we have that is able to do it, to him belonged the right of redemption. As for our other Kinsmen, their share must be plucked off, (Ruth 4. 6, 7.) they cannot redeem; but Christ can, and hath redeemed the inheritance which we by sin had forfeited and alienated, and made a new settlement of it upon all that by faith became allied to him. We know that this Redeemer liveth, Job 19. 25. And some make this duty of the kinsman to signify the brotherly love that should be among Christians, including them in the comfort of those that are fallen, and to restore them with the spirit of meekness.

4. That if the land was not redeemed before the year of jubilee, then it should return of course to him that had sold or mortgaged it; (v. 28.) In the jubilee it shall go out. This was a figure of the free grace of God toward us in Christ, by which, and not by any price or merit of our own, we are restored to the favour of God, and become entitled to paradise, from which our first parents, and we in them, are expelled for disobedience.

5. A difference was made between houses in walled cities and lands in the country, or houses in country-villages. Houses in walled cities were more the fruits of their own industry than land in the country, which was the immediate gift of God's bounty; and therefore, if a man sold a house in a city, he might redeem it any time within a year after the sale, but otherwise it was confirmed to the purchaser for ever, and should not return, no not at the year of jubilee, v. 29, 30. This provision was made to encourage strangers and proselytes to come and settle among them. Though they could not purchase, yet they might purchase houses in walled cities, which would be most convenient for them who were supposed to live by trade. But country-houses could be disposed of no otherwise than as lands might.

6. A clause is added in favour of the Levites, by way of exception from these rules. (1.) Dwelling-houses in the cities of the Levites might be redeemed and purchased of Jews, if not redeemed, but the price must be paid before the year of jubilee, (v. 32, 33.) because the Levites had no other possessions than cities and their suburbs, and God would show that the Levites were his peculiar care; and it was for the interest of the public that they should not be impoverished, or wormed out of their inheritances. (2.) The fields adjoining to their cities (Numb. 35. 4. 5.) might not be sold at any time, for they belonged not to particular Levites, but to the city of the Levites, as a corporation, who could not alienate, without a wrong to their tribe; therefore, if any of those fields were sold, the bargain was void, v. 34. Even the Egyptians took care to preserve the land of the priests, Gen. 47. 22. And there is no less reason for the taking of the maintenance of the gospel-ministry under the special protection of Christian governments.

II. A law for the relief of the poor, and the tender usage of poor debtors; and these are of more general and perpetual obligation than the former.

1. The poor must be relieved, v. 35. Here is, (1.) Our brother's poverty and distress supposed; If thy brother be waxen poor, not only thy brother by nation as a Jew, but thy brother by nature as a man, for it follows, though be he a stranger or a sojourner. All men are to be looked upon and treated as brethren, for we have all one Father, Mir. 2. 10. Though he is poor, yet still he is thy brother, and is to be loved and owned as a brother. Poverty does not destroy the relation. Though a son of Abraham, yet he may wax poor and fall into decay. Note, Poverty and decay are great grievances, and very common; The poor we have always with us. (2.) Our brother's poverty, however distressing, must be relieved. By pitying, pitying the poor; by service, doing for them; and by supply, giving to them according to their necessity and thine ability. 2. Poor debtors must not be oppressed. If thy brother be waxen poor, and have occasion to borrow money of thee for the necessary support of his family, Take thou no usury of him, either for money or victuals, v. 35. 36. Thus Elisha did not charge his steward with the debt of him that would not be thought to bind where money is borrowed for purchase of lands, trade, or other improvements; for there it is reasonable that the lender share with the borrower in the profit. The law here is plainly intended for the relief of the poor, to whom it is sometimes as great a charity to lend freely as to give. Observe the arguments here used against extortion. (I.) God patronizes the poor; "Fear thy God, who will reckon with thee.
for all injuries done to the poor: thou fearest not them, but fear him.” (2.) Relieve the poor, that they may live with thee, and some way or other they may be serviceable to thee. The rich can as ill spare the hands of the poor, as the poor can the purses of the rich. (3.) The same argument is used to enforce this precept that prefaces all the ten commandments; (v. 38.) I am the Lord your God, which brought you out of Egypt. Note, It becomes those that have received mercy to show mercy. If God has been gracious to us, we ought not to be rigorous with our brethren.

39. And if thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond-servant: 40. But as a hired servant, and as a sojourner, he shall be with thee, and shall serve thee unto the year of jubilee: 41. And then shall he depart from thee, both he and his children with him, and shall return unto his own family, and unto the possession of his fathers shall he return. 42. For they are my servants, which I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: they shall not be sold as bondmen. 43. Thou shalt not rule over him with rigour, but shalt fear thy God. 44. Both thy bondmen, and thy bondmaids, which thou shalt have, shall be of the heathen that are round about you; of them shall ye buy bondmen and bondmaids.

45. Moreover, of the children of the strangers that do sojourn among you, of them shall ye buy, and of their families that are with you, which they begat in your land: and they shall be your possession. 46. And ye shall take them as an inheritance for your children after you, to inherit them for a possession; they shall be your bondmen for ever: but over your brethren, the children of Israel, ye shall not rule one over another with rigour. 47. And if a sojourner or stranger wax rich by thee, and thy brother that dwelleth by him wax poor, and sell himself unto the stranger or sojourner by thee, or to the stock of the stranger's family: 48. After that he is sold he may be redeemed again; one of his brethren may redeem him: 49. Either his uncle, or his uncle's son, may redeem him, or any that is nigh of kin unto him of his family may redeem him; or, if he be able, he may redeem himself. 50. And he shall reckon with him that bought him from the year that he was sold to him unto the year of jubilee: and the price of his sale shall be according unto the number of years; according to the time of a hired servant shall it be with him. 51. If there be yet many years behind, according unto them shall he give again the price of his redemption out of the money that he was bought for. 52. And if there remain but few years unto the year of jubilee, then he shall count with him, and according unto his years shall he give him again the price of his redemption. 53. And as a yearly hired servant shall he be with him: and the other shall not rule with rigour over him in thy sight. 54. And if he be not redeemed in these years, then he shall go out in the year of jubilee, both he, and his children with him. 55. For unto me the children of Israel are servants; they are my servants, whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt: I am the Lord your God.

We have here the laws concerning servitude, designed to preserve the honour of the Jewish nation as a free people, and rescued, by a divine power, out of the house of bondage, into the glorious liberty of God's sons, his first born. Now the law is, I. That a native Israelite should never be made a bondman for perpetuity. If he was sold for debt, or for a crime, by the house of judgment, he was to serve but six years, and to go out the seventh; that was appointed, Exod. 21. 2. But if he sold himself, through extreme poverty, having nothing at all left him to preserve his life, and if it was to one of his own nation that he sold himself, in such a case it here provided, 1. That he should not serve as a bond servant more than six years (39.) He that is bought of thee shall serve thee a bondman; (v. 42.) That is, “It must not be looked upon that his master that bought him had as absolute a property in him as in a captive taken in war, that might be used, sold, and bequeathed, at pleasure, as much as a man's cattle; no, he shall serve thee as a hired servant, whom the master has the use of only, but not a despotic power over.” And the reason is, They are my servants, v. 42. God does not make his servants slaves, and therefore his brethren must not. God had redeemed them out of Egypt, and therefore they must never be exposed to sale as bondmen. The apostle applies this spiritually, (1 Cor. 7. 23.) Ye are bought with a price, be not ye the servants of men, that is, “of the lusts of men; no, nor of your own lusts,” for being become the servants of God, we must not return, in our mortal bodies, Rom. 6. 12, 22. 2. That they should not be sold with rigour, as the Israelites were in Egypt, v. 45. Both his work and his usage must be such as were fitting for a son of Abraham. Masters are still required to give to their servants that which is just and equal, Col. 4. 1. They may be used, but must not be abused. Those masters that are always hectoring and domineering over their servants, taunting them, and trumpuling upon them, that are unreasonable in exacting work, and giving rebukes, and that rule them with a high hand, forget that their Master is in heaven; and what will they do when he rises up? as holy Job reasons with himself, Job 31. 13, 14. 3. That at the year of jubilee he should go out free, he and his children, and should return to his own family, v. 31. This typified our redemption, from the service of sin and Satan, by the grace of God in Christ, v. 31. (v. 30.) We are made free with the same freedom. The Jewish writers say, that for ten days before the jubilee-trumpet sounded, the servants that were to be discharged by it did express their great joy by feasting, and wearing garlands on their heads: it is therefore called the joyful sound, Ps. 89. 15. And we are thus to rejoice in the liberty we have by Christ.

II. They might purchase bondmen of the heathen nations that were round about them, or of those strangers that sojourned among them, (except of those seven nations that were to be destroyed,) and might claim a dominion over them, and entail them upon their families, as an inheritance, for the year of jubilee should give no discharge to them. v. 44., 46. Thus, in our English plantations, the negroes only are used as slaves; how much to the credit of Chritianity, I shall not say. Now, 1. This authority which they had over the bondmen they purchased from the neighbouring nations, was in pursuance of the blessing of Jacob, (Gen. 27. 29.) Let people serve thee. 2. It figured the bringing in of the Gentiles to the service of Christ and his church. For, "I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance," Ps. 2. 9. And it is promised, (Isa. 61. 5.) Strangers shall stand and feed your flocks, and the sons of the alien be your vine-dressers; see Rev. 2. 26, 27. The uprightness shall have the dominion in the morning, Ps. 49. 14. 3. It intimates, that none shall have the benefit of the gosspel-jubilee, but those only that are Israelites indeed, and the children of Abraham by faith; as for those by nature, or if they be converted bondmen, See this turned upon the unbelieving Jews themselves, (Gal. 4. 25.) where Jerusalem, when she had rejected Christ, is said to be in bondage with her children. Let me only add here, that, though they are not forbidden to rule their bondmen with rigour, yet the Jewish doctors say, "It is the property of mercy, and way of wisdom, that a man should be compassionate, and not make his yoke hard upon any servant that he has, or servant bondman.

III. That if an Israelite sold himself for a servant to a wealthy proselyte that sojourned among them, care should be taken that he should have the same advantages as if he had sold himself to an Israelite, and in some respects greater. 1. That he should have the same advantages, for instance, not to serve as a bondman, but as a hired servant, and not to be ruled with rigour, (v. 53.) in his might, which intimated that the Jewish magistrates should particularly have an eye to him, and if he were abused, should take cognizance of it, and redress his grievances, though the injured servant did not himself complain. Also, he was to go free at the year of jubilee, v. 54. Though the sons of strangers might serve them for ever, yet the sons of Israel might not serve strangers for ever; yet the servant here, having made himself a slave by his own act, and deed, could not go out in the seventh year of release but in the jubilee only. 2. That he should have this further advantage, that he might be redeemed again before the year of jubilee, v. 48, 49. He that had sold himself to an Israelite, might, if ever he were able, redeem himself, but his relations had no right to redeem him: "But if a man sold himself to a stranger, "the Jews say, "his relations were urged to redeem him; and yet they did not; and if this case then should be redeemed at the public charge," which we find done, Neh. 5. 8. The price of his ransom was to be computed according to the prospect of the year of jubilee, (v. 50, 52.) as in the redemption of land, v. 15, 16. The learned Bishop Patrick quotes one of the Jewish rabbins for an evangelical exposition of that appointment, (v. 48.) One of his brethren shall redeem him; His Redeemer, says the Rabbi, "is the Messiah, the son of David." They expected this Messiah to be their Redeemer out of their captivity, and to restore them to their own land again; but we welcome him as the Redeemer who shall come to Zion, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob, for he shall save his people from their sins; and under this notion there were those that looked for redemption in Jerusalem.

CHAP. XXVI.

This chapter is a solemn conclusion of the main body of the levitical law. The precepts that follow in this and the following book, either relate to some particular matters, or are repetitions and explications of the foregoing institutions. Now this chapter contains a general enforcement of all those laws, by promises of reward in case of obedience on the one hand, and threatenings of punishment for disobedience on the other hand; the former to work upon hope, the latter on fear; those two handles of the soul, by which it is taken hold of and managed. Hence, 1. A repetition of two or three of the principal of the commandments, v. 1, 2, 11. An inviting promise of all good things, if they would but keep God's commandments, v. 3-13. III. A terrible threatening of ruining judgments which would be brought upon them, if they were refractory and disobedient, v. 14-39. IV. A gracious promise of the return of mercy to those of them that would repent and reform, v. 40, &c. Deut. 28, is parallel to this.

1. YE shall make you no idols nor graven image, neither rear you up a standing image, neither shall ye set up any image of stone in your land, to bow down unto it: for I am the Lord your God. 2. Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sancury: I am the Lord. 3. If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them; 4. Then I will give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield her increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruit. 5. And your threshing shall reach unto the vintage, and the vintage shall reach unto the sowing-time; and ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell in your land safely. 6. And I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid: and I will rid evil beasts out of the land, neither shall the sword go through your land. 7. And ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall before you by the sword. 8. And five of you shall chase a hundred, and a hundred of you shall put ten thousand to flight: and your enemies shall fall before you by the sword. 9. For I will have respect unto you, and make you fruitful, and multiply you, and establish my covenant with you. 10. And ye shall eat old store, and bring forth the old because of the new. 11. And I will set my tabernacle among you: and my soul shall not abhor you. 12. And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be my people. 13. I am the Lord your God, which brought you forth out of the land of Egypt, that ye should not be their bondmen; and I have broken the bands of your yoke, and made you go upright.

Here is, 1. The inculcation of these precepts of the law which were of the greatest consequence, and by which especially their obedience would be tried, v. 1, 2. They are the abstract of the second and fourth commandments; which, as they are by much the largest in the decalogue, so they are most frequently insisted on in other parts of the law. As, when a master has given many things in charge to his servant, he concludes with the repetition of these things which were of the greatest importance, and which the servant was most in danger of neglecting, bidding him, whatever he did, be sure to remember those; so here, God by Moses, after many precepts, closes all with a special charge to observe these two great commandments. 1. Be sure you never worship images, nor ever make any sort of images or pictures for a religious use," v. 1. No sin was more provoking to God than this, and yet there was none that they were more addicted to, and which afterward proved of more pernicious consequence to them. Next to God's being, unity, and universal influence, it is necessary that we know and believe that he is an infinite Spirit; and therefore to represent him by an image is in their making of it, to corrupt religion than the use of images in devotion, so nothing contributes more to the support of it than keeping the sabbaths, and reverencing the sanctuary. These make up much of the instrumental part of religion, by which the essentials of it are kept up. Therefore we find in the prophets, that, next to the sin of idolatry, there is no sin for which the Jews are more frequently reproved and threatened, than the profanation of the sabbath-day.

II. Great encouragements given to them to live in constant obedience to all God's commandments. By this law they were not only strictly taught to their duty, but were put under the public national concerns of that people, were typical of the spiritual blessings entitled by the covenant of grace upon all believers through Christ.

1. Plenty and abundance of the fruits of the earth. They should have seasonable rain, neither too little nor too much, but what was requisite for their land, which was watered with the dew of heaven, (Deut. 11. 10. 11.) that it might yield its increase, v. 3. The drought and barrenness which the fruitlessness of the earth beneath has upon the influences of heaven above, is a sensible intimation to us, that every good and perfect gift must be expected from above, from the Father of lights. It is promised that the earth should produce its fruits in such great abundance, that they would be kept in full employment, during both the harvest and the vintage, to gather it in, v. 5. Before they had reaped their corn, and threshed it, the vintage would be ready, and before they had finished their vintage, it would be high time to begin their sowing. Long harvests are often with us the consequences of bad weather, but with them, they should be the effects of a great increase. This signified the plenty of grace which should be poured out in gospel-times, when the ploughman should overtake the reaper, (Amos 9. 18.) and a great harvest of souls should be gathered in. The plenty should be so great, that they should bring forth the old to be given away to the poor, because of the new, to make room for it in their barns, which yet they would not fill down to build greater, as that rich fool, (Luke 12. 18.) for God gave them this abundance to be laid out, not to be hoarded up from one year to another. He that winnoweth corn, the people shall curse him, Prov. 11. 26. 27. The people were blessed with plenty, all of them, v. 10. And that which crowns this blessing of plenty, is, that intimates that they should have, not only abundant dance, but content and satisfaction in it. They should have enough, and should know when they had enough. Thus the neck shall eat and be satisfied, Ps. 22. 26.

2. Peace under the divine protection, v. 5. "Ye shall dwell in your land safely; both really safe, and safe in your own apprehensions; ye shall lie down to rest in the power and promise of God, and not only shall not hurt your fellow men much, but make you afraid," v. 6. See Ps. 4. 8. They should not be infested with wild beasts, those should be rid out of the land, or, as it is promised, (Job 5. 23.) should be at peace with them; nor should they be terrified with the alarms of war, neither shall the sword go through your land. This holy security is promised to all the faithful, Ps. 91. 1, &c. These must needs dwell in safety that dwell in God, Job 9. 18, 19.

3. Victory and success in their wars abroad, while they had peace and tranquillity at home, v. 7. They are also assured that the hand of God should so signal appear with them in their conquests, that no disproportion of numbers should make against them: Five of you shall have courage to attack, and strength to chase and defeat, a hundred, as Jonathan did, (1 Sam. 14. 12.) experiencing the truth of his maxim, (1 Sam. 20.) that it is all one with the Lord to save by many or by few.

4. The increase of their people. I will make you fruitful and multiply you, v. 9. Thus the promise made to Abraham must be fulfilled, that his seed should be as the dust of the earth; and much more numerous they would have been, if they had not by their sin cut themselves short. It is promised to the gospel-church, that it shall be fruitful, John 15. 6.

5. The favour of God, which is the fountain of all good. I will have respect unto you, v. 9. If the eye of our faith be unto God, the eye of his favour will be unto us. More is implied than is expressed in that promise, My soul shall not abhor you, (v. 11.) as there is in that threatening, My soul shall have no pleasure in him, Heb. 10. 38. Though there was that among them which might justly have abhorred him, for they were not closely adhered to his institutions, he would not abhor them.

6. Tokens of his presence in and by his ordinances; I will set my tabernacle among you, v. 11. It was their honour and advantage, that God's tabernacle was lately erected among them; but here he lets them know that the continuance and establishment of it depended upon their good behaviour. The tabernacle that was now set up was settled, if they would be obedient, else not. Note, The way to have God's ordinances fix among us, as a nail in a sure place, is to cleave closely to the institution of them. It is added, (v. 12.) I will walk among you, with delight and satisfaction, as a man in his garden; I will keep up communion with you, as a man walking with his friend. This seems to be alluded to, (Rev. 2. 5.) where Christ is said to walk in the midst of the golden candlesticks.

7. The grace of the covenant, as the fountain and foundation, the sweetness and security, of all these blessings; I will establish my covenant with you, v. 9. Let them perform their part of the covenant, and God would not fail to perform his. All covenant-blessings are summed up in the covenant-relation, (v. 12.) I will be your God, and ye shall be my people. And they are all grounded upon their covenant, (v. 13.) I am your God, because I brought you forth out of the land of Egypt. Having purchased them, he would own them, and never cast them off till they cast him off. He broke their yoke, and made them go upright; that is, Theirde
14. But if ye will not hearken unto me, and will not do all these commandments, and if ye despise my statutes, or if your soul abhor my judgments, so that ye will not do all my commandments, but that ye break my covenant: 15. I also will do this unto you; I will even appoint over you terror, consumption, and the burning ague, that shall consume the eyes, and cause sorrow of heart: and ye shall sow your seed in vain, for your enemies shall eat it. 16. And I will set my face against you, and ye shall be slain before your enemies: they that hate you shall reign over you; and ye shall flee when none pursueth you. 17. And if ye will not yet for all this hearken unto me, then I will punish you seven times more for your sins. 18. And I will break the pride of your power; and I will make your heaven as iron, and your earth as brass. 19. And your strength shall be spent in vain: for your land shall not yield her increase, neither shall the trees of the land yield their fruits. 20. And if ye walk contrary unto me, and will not hearken unto me; I will bring seven times more plagues upon you, according to your sins. 21. I will also send wild beasts among you, which shall rob you of your children, and destroy your cattle, and make you few in number; and your high-ways shall be desolate. 22. And if ye will not walk contrary unto me, I will bring seven times more plagues upon you, according to your sins. 23. I will also walk contrary unto you, and will punish you yet seven times for your sins. 24. And I will bring a sword upon you, that shall avenge the quarrel of my covenant: and, when ye are gathered together within your cities, I will send the pestilence among you; and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy. 25. And when I have broken the staff of your bread, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and they shall deliver you your bread again by weight: and ye shall eat, and not be satisfied. 26. And I will walk contrary unto you also in fury; and I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins. 27. And ye shall eat the flesh of your sons, and the flesh of your daughters shall ye eat. 30. And I will destroy your high places and cut down your images, and cast your carcases upon the carcases of your idols, and my soul shall abhor you. 31. And I will make your cities waste, and bring your sanctuaries unto desolation, and I will not smell the savour of your sweet odours. 32. And I will bring the land into desolation; and your enemies which dwell therein shall be astonished at it. 33. And I will scatter you among the heathen, and will draw out a sword after you; and your land shall be desolate, and your cities waste. 34. Then shall the land enjoy her sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye be in your enemies’ land; even then shall the land rest, and enjoy her sabbaths. 35. As long as it lieth desolate it shall rest; because it did not rest in your sabbaths, when ye dwelt upon it. 36. And upon them that are left alive of you I will send a faintness into their hearts in the lands of their enemies; and the sound of a shaken leaf shall chase them; and they shall flee, as fleeing from a sword; and they shall fall when none pursueth: and ye shall have no power to stand before your enemies. 37. And if they fall one upon another, as it were before a sword, when none pursueth: 38. And ye shall perish among the heathen, and the land of your enemies shall eat you up. 39. And they that are left of you shall pine away in their iniquity in your enemies’ lands; and also in the iniquities of their fathers shall they pine away with them.

After God had set the blessing before them, (the life and good which would make them a happy people if they would be obedient,) he here sets the curse before them, the death and evil which would make them as miserable, if they were disobedient. Let them not think themselves so deeply rooted as that God’s power could not ruin them, or so highly favoured as that his justice would not ruin them, if they revolted from him, and rebelled against him; no, You only have I known, therefore I will punish you soonest and sorest, Amos 5. 2.

Observe,

1. How their sin is described, which would bring all this misery upon them. Not sins of ignorance and infirmity, God had provided sacrifices for those; not the sins they repented of and forsook; but the sins that were presumptuously committed, and obstinately persisted in.

2. Two things would certainly bring this ruin upon them.

1. A contempt of God’s commandments; (v. 14.) If ye will not hearken to me speaking to you by the law, nor do all these commandments, that is, desire and endeavour to do them, and, wherein you miss it, make use of the prescribed remedies. Thus their sin is supposed to begin in mere carelessness, and neglect, and omission. These are bad enough, but they make way for worse: for the people are brought in, (v. 15.) as (1.) Despising God’s statutes, both the duties enjoined, and the authority enjoining them, thinking meanly of the law and the Law-Maker. Note, These are hastening apace to their own ruin, who begin to think it below them to be religious. (2.) Abhorring his judgments, their very souls abhorring them. Note, They that begin to despise religion, will come by degrees to loathe it; and mean thoughts of it will ripen into ill thoughts of it; they that turn from it will turn against it, and their hearts rise at it. (3.) Breaking his covenant. Though overthrown, the commandment does not amount to a breach of the covenant, (we are undone if it did,) yet, when men are come to such a pitch of impertinency as to despise and abhor the commandment, the next step will be to disown God, and all relation to him. They that reject the precept will come at last to renounce the covenant. Observe, It is God's covenant which they break: he made it, but they break it. Note, If a covenant be made and kept between God and man, God must have all the honour: but if ever it be broken, man must bear all the blame; on him shall this break be.

2. A contempt of his corrections. Even their disobedience would not have been their destruction, if they had not been obstinate and impenitent in it, notwithstanding the methods God took to reclaim them. Their contempt of God's word would not have brought them to ruin, if they had not added to the enormity of breaking the commandment, an abhorrence of it. Three ways this is expressed. (1.) If ye will not for all this hearken to me, v. 18, 21, 27. If ye will not learn obedience by the things which ye suffer, but be as deaf to the loud alarms of God's judgments as ye have been to the close reasonings of his word, and the secret whispers of your own consciences, ye shall be incensed. (2.) If ye will walk contrary to me, v. 21, 23, 27. This is walking contrary to God, taking his precept to be a burden, and his commandment to be a reproach. Observe, Truths, laws, and counsels; but those especially that are incorrigible under his judgments. The design of the rod is to humble them, and soften them, and bring them to repentance; but, instead of this, their hearts are more hardened and exasperated against God, and in their distress they tryst praise yet more against him, 2 Chron. 22. 23. This is walking contrary to God. Some read it, If ye walk at all adversity, they resist not his wisdom, as if ye heeded not either what ye do, whether it be right or wrong, or what God does with you, whether it be for you or against you, blundering on in wilful ignorance. (3.) If ye will not be reformed by these things. God's design in punishing is to reform, by giving men sensible convictions of the evil of sin, and obliging them to seek unto him for relief: this is the primary intention; but those that will not be reformed by the judgments of God must expect to be ruined by them. Those have a great deal to answer for, that have been long and often under God's correcting hand, and yet go on forwardly in a sinful way; sick and in pain, and yet not reformed; crossed and impoverished, and yet not reformed; broken with breach upon breach, yet not returning to the Lord, Amos 5. 6, &c.

11. How the misery is described, which their sin would bring upon them, under two heads. 1. God himself would be against them; and this is the root and cause of all their misery. (1.) I will set my face against you; (v. 17.) that is, I will set my face against you, set myself to ruining you. These proud sinners God will resist, and face those down that confront his authority. Or, the face is put for the anger; I will show myself highly displeased, (v. 18.) I will even smite you with the rod. (v. 24, 28.) with the forehead he will sorely, Ps. 28. 26. [marginal reading.] When God in his providence thwarts the designs of a people, which they thought well laid, crosses their purposes, breaks their measures, Blastas their endeavours, and disappoints their expectations, then he walks contrary to them. Note, There is nothing got by striving with God Almighty, for he will break either the heart or the neck of those that contend with him; will bring them either to repentance or ruin. "I will walk at all adventures with you," so some read; "all covenant loving-kindness shall be forgotten, and I will leave you to common providence." Note, When God is pleased thus to break off, deserve that he should cast them off. (2.) As they continued obstinate, the judgments should increase yet more upon them. If the first sensible tokens of God's displeasure do not attain their end, to humble and reform them, then (v. 18.) I will punish you seven times more, and again, (v. 21.) I will bring seven times more plagues, and (v. 24.) I will punish you yet seven times, and (v. 29.) I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins. Note, If lesser judgments do not do their work, God will send greater; for when he judges, he will overcome. If true repentance do not stay process, it will go on till execution be taken out. Those that are obstinate and incorrigible, when they have weathered one storm, must expect another more violent; and how severely soever they are punished, till they are in hell, they must still say, "There is worse behind," unless they repent. His fountain have hitherunto melted in vain, (Jer. 2. 31.) that is, "The fountain of the earth is broken up, (a proverbial expression, used Dan. 3. 19.) and again and again seven times hotter;" and who among us can dwell with such devouring fire? God does not begin with the sorest judgments, to show that he is patient, and delights not in the death of sinners; but, if they repent not, he will proceed to the sorest, to show that he is righteous, and that he will not be mocked or set at defiance. (4.) *Their misery is con-" (1.) I will punish you seven times more, and again, (v. 21.) I will bring seven times more plagues, and (v. 24.) I will punish you yet seven times, and (v. 29.) I, even I, will chastise you seven times for your sins. Note, If lesser judgments do not do their work, God will send greater; for when he judges, he will overcome. If true repentance do not stay process, it will go on till execution be taken out. Those that are obstinate and incorrigible, when they have weathered one storm, must expect another more violent; and how severely soever they are punished, till they are in hell, they must still say, "There is worse behind," unless they repent. His fountain have hitherunto melted in vain, (Jer. 2. 31.) that is, "The fountain of the earth is broken up, (a proverbial expression, used Dan. 3. 19.) and again and again seven times hotter;" and who among us can dwell with such devouring fire? God does not begin with the sorest judgments, to show that he is patient, and delights not in the death of sinners; but, if they repent not, he will proceed to the sorest, to show that he is righteous, and that he will not be mocked or set at defiance. (4.) *Their misery is con-plunder, v. 16. Your enemies shall eat it up, and carry it off, as the Midianites did, Judg. 6, 5, 6. Secondly, By unseasonable weather, especially the want of rain; (v. 19.) I will make your heaven as iron, letting fall no rain, but reflecting heat, and then the earth would of course be as dry and hard as brass; and their labour in ploughing and sowing would be in vain, v. 20. For the increase of the earth depends upon God's good providence more than upon man's good husbandry. This should be the bringing of the staff of bread, (v. 26,) which life leans upon, and is supported by, on which perhaps they had leaned more than upon God's blessing. There should be so great a dearth of corn, that, whereas every family used to fill an oven of their own with household-bread, now ten families should have to fill but one oven; which would bring themselves, and their children, and servants, to short allowance, so that they should eat and not be satisfied. The less they had, the more craving should their appetites be. Thirdly, By the besieging of their cities; for that certainly would reduce them to such an extremity, that they should eat the flesh of their sons and daughters, v. 29.

[3.] War, and the prevalency of their enemies over them; "Ye shall be slain before your enemies, v. 17. Your choice men shall die in battle, and they that remain shall be consumed, and not be willing that the God that loved you should reign over you," 2 Chron. 12, 8. Miserable is that people whose enemies are their rulers, and have got dominion over them; or whose rulers are become their enemies, and under-hand seek the ruin of their interests. Thus God would break the pride of their power, v. 19. God had given them power over the nations; but when they, instead of being like ministers of God, to rule them for his name's sake, took it to themselves, and exercised it for their own aggrandizement, and not for the good of the people, their own power was broken, and God's dominion prevailed. But, Fourthly, Wild beasts, lions, and bears, and wolves, which should increase upon them, and tear in pieces all that came in their way, (v. 22,) as we read of two bears that in an instant killed forty-two children, 2 Kings 2, 24. This is one of the four sore judgments threatened, (Ezek. 14, 21,) which plainly refers to this chapter. Man was made to have dominion over the creatures, and though many of them are stronger than he, yet none could have hurt him, nay all of them should have served him, if he had not first shaken off God's dominion, and so lost his own; and now the creatures are in rebellion against him that is in rebellion against his Maker, and, when the Lord of those hosts pleases, they are the executioners of his wrath, and ministers of his justice.

[5.] Captivity, or dispersion; I will scatter you among the heathen, (v. 33,) in your enemies' land, v. 34. Never were more people so incorporated and united among themselves as they were; but for their sin God would scatter them, so that they should be lost among the heathen from whom God had graciously distinguished them; but with whom they had wickeder mingled themselves. Yet, when they were scattered, Divine Justice had not done with them, but would visit them after them, which would find them out, and follow them wherever they were. God's judgments, as they cannot be outfaced, so they cannot be outrun.

[6.] The utter ruin and desolation of their land; which should be so remarkable, that their very enemies themselves, who had helped it forward, should in the review be astonished at it, v. 32. First, Their cities should be waste, forsaken, uninhabited, and all the buildings destroyed; those that escaped the desolations of war, should fall to decay of themselves. Secondly, Their sanctuaries should be a desolation, that is, their synagogues, where they met for religious worship every sabbath, as well as their tabernacle, where they met thrice a year. Thirdly, The country itself should be desolate, not only for iu inhabited, but lie desolate. (v. 34,) then the land should enjoy its sabbaths, because they had not religiously observed the sabbatical years which God appointed them. They filled their ground when God would have them let it rest, justly there fore were they driven out of it; and the expression intimates that the ground itself was pleased and easy, when it was rid of the burthen of such sinners, under which it had groaned, Rom. 8, 20, &c. They carried in Babylon, after having as long as so long the land enjoyed her sabbaths, as is said, (2 Chron. 36, 21,) with reference to this here.

[7.] The destruction of their idols, though rather a mercy than a judgment, yet being a necessary piece of justice, is here mentioned, to show what would be the sin that would bring all these miseries upon them; (v. 36,) I will destroy your high-places. Those that will not be parted from their sins by the command of God, shall be parted from them by his judgments; since they would not destroy their high-places, God would. And, to up-brain them with the unreasonably fondness they had showed for their idols, it is foretold that their carcases should be cast upon the carcases of their idols. They that are wedded to their lusts, sooner or later will have enough of them. Their idols would not be able to help either themselves or their worshippers; but they that made them being like unto them, both should perish alike, and fall together as blind into the ditch.

(2.) Spiritual judgments are here threatened, which should seize the mind; for he that made that, can, when he pleases, make his sword approach to it.

It is here threatened, [1.] That they should find no reconciliation with God; (v. 31,) I will not smell the savour of your sweet odours. Though the judgments of God upon them did not part between them and their sins, yet they extorted incentive from them; but in vain, even their incentive was an abomination. Isa. 1, 13.

[2.] That they should have no courage in their wars, but should be quite dispirited and disheartened. They should not only fear and flee, (v. 17,) but fear and fall, when needed sin versatility, v. 35, an evil city would be their continual terror, so that not only the sound of a trumpet, but the very sound of a leaf should chase them. Note, Those that cast off the fear of God expose themselves to the fear of every thing else, Prov. 28, 1. Their very fears should dash them one against another, v. 37, 38. And they that had increased one another's guilt, would now increase one another's fears.

[3.] That they should have no hope of the forgiveness of their sins; (v. 39,) They shall pine away in their iniquity, and how should they then live? Ezek. 33, 10. Note, It is a righteous thing with God to leave those to despair of pardon that have presumed to sin; and it is owing to free grace, if we are not abandoned to pine away in the iniquity we were born in, and have lived in.

40. If they shall confess their iniquity, and the iniquity of their fathers, with their trespass pass which they trespassed against me, and that also they have walked contrary unto
And that I also have walked contrary unto them, and have brought them into the land of their enemies; if then their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, and they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity;

42. Then will I remember my covenant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac, and also my covenant with Abraham will I remember; and I will remember the land. 43. The land also shall be left of them, and shall enjoy their sabbaths, while she lieth desolate without them: and they shall accept of the punishment of their iniquity; because, even because they despised my judgments, and because their soul abhorred my statutes.

Yet for all that, when they be in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away, neither will I abhor them, to destroy them utterly, and to break my covenant with them: for I am the Lord their God. 45. But I will for their sakes remember the covenant of their ancestors, whom I brought forth out of the land of Egypt in the sight of the heathen, that I might be their God: I am the Lord.

These are the statutes and judgments and laws which the Lord made between him and the children of Israel in mount Sinai, by the hand of Moses.

Here the chapter concludes with gracious promises of the return of God's favour to them upon their repentance, that they might not (unless it were their own fault) pine away in their iniquity. Behold, with wonder, the riches of God's mercy to a people that had obstinately stood it out against the judgments of God, and would never think of surrendering till they were reduced to the last extremity. Yet turn you to the strong-hold, ye prisoners of hope, Zech. 9. 12. As bad as things are, they may be mended. Yet there is hope in Israel.

Observe,

How the repentance is described which would qualify them for this mercy, v. 40, 41. The instances of it are three. 1. Confession, by which they must give glory to God, and take shame to themselves. There must be a confession of sin; their own, and their fathers', which they must lament the guilt of, because they feel the smart of it; that thus they may cut off the end of wrath: they must, in their confession put sin under its worst character, walking contrary to God; that is, the fulness of sin, the worst thing in it, and which in our repentance we should especially bewail. There must also be a confession of wrath; they must overlook the instruments of their trouble and the second causes, and confess that God has walked contrary to them, and so dealt with them according to their sins.

Such a confession as this we find made by Daniel just before the deliverance, (ch. 9.) and the like, Ezra 9. and Neh. 9. 2. Remorse and godly sorrow for sin; If their uncircumcised heart be humbled. An impenitent, unbelieving, unhumbled heart, is called an uncircumcised heart, the heart of a Gentile, that is a stranger to God, rather than the heart of an Israelite in covenant with him. True circumcisions is of the heart, (Rom. 2. 28.) without which the circumcision of the flesh availeth nothing, Jer. 9. 26.

Now in repentance this uncircumcised heart was humbled, that is, it was truly broken and contrite for sin. Note, An humble heart under humbling providences prepares for deliverance and true comfort. 3. Submission to the justice of God in all his dealings; if they then accept of the punishment of their iniquity, (v. 41. and again, v. 43.) that is, if they justify God and condemn themselves, patiently bear the punishment as that which they have well-deserved as the fruits and effects of sin; and they shall recognize the will of God as that which God has well designed, accept it as a kindness, take it as physic, and improve it, then they are penitents indeed.

II. How the mercy is described, which they should obtain upon their repentance. 1. They should not be abandoned; Though they have despised my judgments, yet for all that I will not cast them away, v. 43. He speaks as a tender Father that cannot find in his heart to disinherit a son that has been very provoking, How shall I do it? Hos. 11. 8. 9. Till he had laid the foundations of a church for himself in the Gentile world, the Jewish church was not quite forsaken, nor cast away. 2. They should be remembered: I will remember the land with favour, which is grounded upon the earnest desire of it before; I will remember my covenant, (v. 42.) which God's Gentiles are said to remember the covenant, when he performs the promises of it, purely for his faithfulness' sake; not because there is any thing in us to recommend us to his favour, but because he will be as good as his word. This is the church's plea; (Ps. 74. 20.) Have respect unto the covenant. He will remember the constitution of the covenant, which is such as leaves room for repentance, and promises pardon in repentance; and the Mediator of the covenant, who was promised to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and was sent, when the fulness of time came, in remembrance of that holy covenant. The word covenant is thrice repeated, to intimate that God is ever mindful of it, and would have us to be so. The persons also with whom the covenant was made are mentioned in an unusual manner, for modum ascensus—in the ascending line, beginning with Jacob, to lead them gradually to the most ancient promise, which was made to the father of the faithful; thus (Mic. 7. 20.) he is said to perform the truth to Jacob, and the mercy to Abraham. He will for their sakes, (v. 43.) not their merit's sake, but their benefit's sake, remember the covenant of their ancestors, and upon that score show kindness to them, though they returned to sin unwarily, as it were, as if it were said to be, as touching the election, beloved for the fathers' sakes, Rom. 11. 28. Note, When those that have walked contrary to God in a way of sin, return to him by sincere repentance, though he has walked contrary to them in a way of judgment, he will return to them in a way of special mercy, pursuant to the covenant of redemption and grace. None are so ready to repent as God is to forgive, upon repentance as the beginning of those who truly believe the Covenants.

Lastly, These are said to be the laws which the Lord made between him and the children of Israel, v. 46. His communion with his church is kept up by his law. He manifests not only his dominion over them, but his favour to them, by giving them his law; and they manifest not only their holy fear, but their holy love, by the observance of it, and thus is made to be the bond of them rather as a covenant than a law; for he draws with the cords of a man.

CHAP. XXVII.

The last verse of the foregoing chapter seemed to close up that statute-book; but let this chapter break into it, in the sixth: having given laws concerning instituted services, here he directs concerning vows and voluntary services, the free will-offerings of their mouth. Perhaps some devout serious people among them might be so affected with what Moses had delivered to them in the foregoing chapter, as in a pang of zeal to concertrate themselves or their children or estates to him; this, because honestly nourished, and children of God, but because men are and to repent of such vows, he leaves room for the redemption of what had been so concertrated, at a certain rate. Here is 1. The law concerning what was sanctified to God; persons, v. 2-8. Cattle, clean or unclean, v. 9-13. Houses and lands, v. 14-25. With an exception of firstlings, v. 26, 27. II. Concerning what was devoted, v. 28, 29. Concerning tithes, v. 30, 34.

1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When a man shall make a singular vow, the persons shall be for the Lord by thy estimation. 3. And the estimation shall be, of the male from twenty years old even unto sixty years old, even thy estimation shall be fifty shekels of silver, after the shekel of the sanctuary. 4. And if it be a female, then thy estimation shall be thirty shekels. 5. And if it be from five years old even unto twenty years old, then thy estimation shall be of the male twenty shekels, and for the female ten shekels. 6. And if it be from a month old even unto five years old, then thy estimation shall be of the male five shekels of silver, and for the female thy estimation shall be three shekels of silver. 7. And if it be from sixty years old and above; if it be a male, then thy estimation shall be fifteen shekels, and for the female ten shekels. 8. But if he be poorer than thy estimation, then he shall present himself before the priest, and the priest shall value him; according to his ability that vowed shall the priest value him. 9. And if it be a beast, whereof men bring an offering unto the Lord, all that any man giveth of such unto the Lord shall be holy. 10. He shall not alter it, nor change it, a good for a bad, or a bad for a good; and if he shall at all change beast for beast, then it and the exchange thereof shall be holy. 11. And if it be any unclean beast, of which they do not offer a sacrifice unto the Lord, then shall he present the beast before the priest: 12. And the priest shall value it, whether it be good or bad; as thou valuest it, so valuest the priest, so shall it be. 13. But if he will at all redeem it, then shall he add a fifth part thereof unto thy estimation.

This is part of the law concerning singular vows, extraordinary ones, which though God did not expressly insist on, yet if they were consistent with, and conformable to, the general precepts, he would be well pleased with. Note, We should not only ask What must we do, but, What may we do, for the glory and honour of God? As the liberal devises liberal things, (Isa. 32. 8.) so the pious devises pious things, and the enlarged heart would willingly do something extraordinary in the service of God. 2. A singular vow is a offer for God, (v. 9, 10.) it shall be holy, (v. 9, 10.) if it be not to put to any common use, nor changed upon second thoughts; but it must either be offered upon the altar, or, if through any blame it was not to meet to be offered, he that vowed it should not take advantage of that, but the priests should have it for their own use, (for they were God's receivers,) or it should be sold for the service of the sanctuary. This teaches caution in making vows, and constancy in keeping them when they are made; for it is a snare to a man to devour that which is holy, and after vows to make inquiry, a singular vow, v. 2. If a man consecrated himself, or a child, to the service of the tabernacle, to be employed there in some inferior office, as sweeping the floor, carrying out ashes, running of errands, or the like, the person so consecrated shall be for the Lord, that is, "God will graciously accept the good-will," that is, Thou didst well that it was in thine heart; (2 Chron. 6. 8.) but, forasmuch as he had no occasion to use their services about the tabernacle, a whole tribe being appropriated to the use of it, those that were thus vowed were to be redeemed, and the money paid for their redemption was employed for the repair of the sanctuary, or other uses of it; as appears by 2 Kings 12. 4, where it is called, in the margin, the money of the souls of his estimation. 3. A book of the estimation is accustomed to be kept by which the priests were to go in their estimation. Here is, 1. The rate of the middle-aged between twenty and threescore, these were valued highest, because most serviceable; a male fifty shekels, and the female thirty, v. 3, 4. The females were then less esteemed, but not so in Christ; for in Christ Jesus there is neither male nor female, Gal. 3. 28. 2. The females are in this time, must look upon themselves as obliged to do more in the service of God and their generation, than can be expected either from minors that are not yet arrived to their usefulness, or from the aged that have survived it. 2. The rate of the youth between five years old and twenty, was less, because they were then less capable of doing service, v. 5. 3. Infants under five years old were capable of being vowed as the Lord's, as their parents were, and born, as Samuel was, but not to be presented and redeemed till a month old; that, as one sabbath passed over them before they were circumcised, so one new moon might pass over them before they were estimated; and their valuation was but small, v. 6. Samuel, who was thus vowed to God, was not redeemed, because he was a Levite, and a particular vow, and therefore was immovably in his childhood in the service of the tabernacle. 4. The aged are valued less than youth, but more than children, v. 7. And the Hebrews observe, that the rate of an aged woman is two parts to three of that of an aged man, so that in that age the female came nearest to the value of a male, which occasioned (as Bishop Patrick quotes it here) this saying among them, That an old woman in a house is a treasure greater to be esteemed than a new one. St. Paul compares the body of the old woman unto the aged woman, when he makes them teachers of good things, Tit. 2. 3. 5. The poor shall be valued according to their ability, v. 8. Something they must pay, that they might learn not to be rash in vowing to God, for he hath no pleasure in fools, Ecle. 5. 4. Yet not more than their ability, but secundum tenementum—according to their possessions, that they might pay them themselves and their families by their zeal. Note, God expects and requires from men according to what they have, and not according to what they have not, Luke 21. 4. 11. The case is put of beasts vowed to God. 1. If it was a clean beast, such as was offered in sacrifice, it must not be redeemed, nor any equivalent given for it; it shall be holy, (v. 9, 10.) if it be not to put to any common use, nor changed upon second thoughts; but it must either be offered upon the altar, or, if through any blame it was not to meet to be offered, he that vowed it should not take advantage of that, but the priests should have it for their own use, (for they were God's receivers,) or it should be sold for the service of the sanctuary. This teaches caution in making vows, and constancy in keeping them when they are made; for it is a snare to a man to devour that which is holy, and after vows to make inquiry.
And to this that rule of charity seems to allude, (2 Cor. 9. 7.) Every man according as he purposed in his heart, so let him give. 24. If it was an unclean beast, it should go to the use of the priest at such a value; but that he vowed it, upon paying that value in money, and adding a fifth part more to it, might redeem it, if he pleased, v. 11. 13. It was fit that men should smart for their inconstancy. God has let us know his mind concerning his service, and he is not pleased, if we do not know our own. God expects that those that deal with him should be at a point, and say what they will stand to. 14. And when a man shall sanctify his house to be holy unto the Lord, then the priest shall estimate it, whether it be good or bad: as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand. 15. And if he that sanctified it will redeem his house, then he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy estimation unto it, and it shall be his. 16. And if a man shall sanctify unto the Lord some part of a field of his possession, then thy estimation shall be according to the seed thereof: a homer of barley seed shall be valued at fifty shekels of silver. 17. If he sanctify his field from the year of jubilee, according to thy estimation it shall stand. 18. But if he sanctify his field after the jubilee, then the priest shall reckon unto him the money according to the years that remain, even unto the year of the jubilee, and it shall be abated from thy estimation. 19. And if he that sanctified the field will in any wise redeem it, then he shall add the fifth part of the money of thy estimation unto it, and it shall be assured to him. 20. And if he will not redeem the field, or if he have sold the field to another man, it shall not be redeemed any more; 21. But the field, when it goeth out in the jubilee, shall be holy unto the Lord, as a field devoted; the possession thereof shall be the priest's. 22. And if a man sanctify unto the Lord a field which he hath bought, which is not of the fields of his possession; 23. Then the priest shall reckon unto him the worth of thy estimation, even unto the year of the jubilee: and he shall give thine estimation in that day, as a holy thing unto the Lord. 24. In the year of the jubilee the field shall return unto him of whom it was bought, even to him to whom the possession of the land did belong. 25. And all thy estimations shall be according to the shekel of the sanctuary: twenty gerahs shall be the shekel.

Here is the law concerning real estates dedicated to the service of God by a singular vow.

1. Suppose a man, in his zeal for the honour of God, sanctify his house to God, (v. 14.) the house must be valued by the priest, and the money get by the sale of it was to be converted to the use of the sanctuary, which by degrees came to be greatly enriched with dedicated things, 1 Kings 15. 15. But, if the owner be minded to redeem it himself, he must not have it so cheap as another, but must add a fifth part to the price, for he should have considered before he had vowed it, v. 15. To him that was necessitous, God would abate of the estimation of himself; (v. 8.) but to him that was fickle and humourous, and whose second thoughts inclined more to the world and his secular interest than his first, God would rise in the price. Blessed be God, there is a way of sanctifying our houses to be holy unto the Lord, without either selling them or giving them. If we and our houses serve the Lord, if religion rule in them, and we put away iniquity far from them, and have a church in our house, holiness to the Lord is written upon it, it is his, and he will dwell with us in it.

11. Suppose a man sanctify some part of his land to the Lord, giving it to pious uses, then a different mode is to be used: he must come to the donor by descent, and that which came by purchase, and, accordingly the case altered.

1. It was the inheritance of his fathers, here called the field of his possession, which pertained to his family from the first division of Canaan, he might not give it all, no not to the sanctuary; God would not admit such a degree of zeal as ruined a man's family. But he might sanctify or dedicate of it, v. 10, 11. 12. (v. 7.)

The land was to be valued (as our countrymen commonly compute land) by so many measures' sowing of barley. So much land as would take a homer, or homer, of barley, which contained ten ephahs, Ezek. 45. 11. (not, as some have here mistaken it, an oner, which was but a tenth part of an ephah, Exod. 16. 36.) was valued at fifty shekels, a moderate price, (v. 15.) and that, if it were sanctified immediately after the year of jubilee, v. 7. But if some years after, there was to be a discount accordingly, even of that price, v. 18. And, (2.) When the value was fixed, the donor might, if he pleased, redeem it for sixty shekels, the homer's sowing, which was with the addition of a fifth part: the money then went to the sanctuary, and the land reverted to him that had sanctified it, v. 19. But if he should not redeem it, and the priest sold it to another, then at the year of jubilee, beyond which the sale could not go, the land came to the priests, and was theirs for ever, v. 20, 21. Note, What is given to the Lord ought not to be given with a power of revocation: what is devoted to the Lord must be his for ever by a perpetual covenant.

2. If the land was his own purchase, and came not to him from his ancestors, then not the land itself, but the value of it, was to be given to the priests for pious uses, v. 22... 24. It was supposed that those who, by the blessing of God, were grown so rich as to become purchasers, would think themselves obliged in gratitude to sanctify some part of the purchase, at least, (and here they are not limited, but they might, if they pleased, sanctify the whole,) to the service of God. For we ought to give our God freely. And the purchasers are in a special manner bound to be charitable. Never, forasmuch as purchased lands were by a former law to return at the year of jubilee to the family from whom they were purchased, God would not have that law and the intentions of it defeated, by making the lands Corban, a gift, Mark 7. 11. But it was to be computed how much the land was worth for so many years as were from the vow to the jubilee, for only so long it was his own; and God hates robbery, for burnt-offerings, and we can never acceptably serve God with that which we have wronged our neighbour of. And so much money he was to give for the present, and keep the land in his own hands till the year of jubilee, when it was to return free of all encumbrances, even that of its being dedicated to him of whom it was bought. The value of the shekel, by which all these estimations were to be made, is here ascertained, (v. 25.) it shall be twenty gerahs, and every gerah was sixteen barley-corns. This was fixed before, (Exod. 30. 13.) and whereas there had been some alterations, it is again fixed in the laws of Ezekiel's visionary temple, (Ezek. 45. 12.) to denote that the gospel should reduce things to their ancient standard.

26. Only the firstling of the beasts, which should be the Lord's firstling, no man shall sanctify it; whether it be ox or sheep; it is the Lord's. 27. And if it be of an unclean beast, then he shall redeem it according to thine estimation, and shall add a fifth part of it thereto: or if it be not redeemed, then it shall be sold according to thy estimation.

28. Notwithstanding, no devoted thing that a man shall devote unto the Lord of all that he hath, both of man and beast, and of the field of his possession, shall be sold or redeemed: every devoted thing is most holy unto the Lord. 29. None devoted, which shall be devoted of men, shall be redeemed; but shall surely be put to death. 30. And all the tithe of the land, whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, is the Lord's: it is holy unto the Lord. 31. And if a man will at all redeem aught of his tithes, he shall add thereto the fifth part thereof. 32. And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the flock, even of whatsoever pasheth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord. 33. He shall not search whether it be good or bad, neither shall he change it: and if he change it at all, then both it and the change thereof shall be holy; it shall not be redeemed. 34. These are the commandments which the Lord commanded Moses for the children of Israel, in mount Sinai.

I. A caution given that no man should make such a jest of sanctifying things to the Lord, as to sanctify any firstling to him, for that was his already by the law, v. 26. Though the matter of a general vow be that which we were before obliged to, as of our sacramental covenant; yet a singular vow should be of that which we were not, in such circumstances and proportions, antecedently bound to. The law concerning the firstlings of unclean beasts (v. 27.) is the same with that before, v. 11, 12.

II. Things or persons devoted are here distinguished from things or persons that were only sanctified. 1. Devoted things were most holy to the Lord, and could neither revert, nor be abated, v. 28. They were of the same nature with those sacrifices which were called most holy, which none might touch but only the priests themselves. The difference between these and other sanctified things arose from the different expression of the vow. If a man dedicated any thing to God, binding himself with a solemn curse never to alienate it to any other purpose, then it was a thing devoted. 2. Devoted persons were to be put to death, v. 29. Not that it was in the power of any parent or master thus to devote a child or a servant to death; but it must be meant of the public enemies of Israel, who, either by the appointment of God, or by the sentence of the congregation, were devoted, as the seven nations with which they must make no league. The city of Jericho in particular was thus devoted, Josh. 6. 23. The inhabitants of Jericho were put to death for violating the curse pronounced upon those that came not up to Mizzpeh, Judg. 21. 9, 10. Some think it was for want of being rightly informed of the true intent and meaning of this law, that Jephtha sacrificed his daughter as one devoted, which might not be redeemed.

III. A law concerning tithes, which were paid for the Lord's use, and God blessed Abraham's payment of them, (Gen. 14. 19.) and Jacob's promise of them, Gen. 28. 22. It is here appointed, 1. That they should pay tithie of all their increase, their corn, trees, and cattle, v. 30, 32. Whosoever productions they had the benefit of, God must be honoured with the tithie of, if it were titheable. Thus they acknowledge God to be the Owner of their land, the Giver of its fruits, and themselves to be his tenants, and dependents upon him. Thus they gave him thanks for the plenty they enjoyed, and supplicated his favour in the continuance of it. And we are taught in general to honour the Lord with our substance, (Prov. 3. 9.) and in particular to support and maintain his ministers, and to be ready to communicate to them, Gal. 6. 6. 1 Cor. 9. 11. And this may be done in a fixed and equal proportion to that of the tenth, which God hath appointed, Heb. 7. 9, 10. I cannot see 2. That which was once marked for tithie should not be altered, nor for a better, (v. 33.) for Providence directed the rod that marked them. God would accept it though it were not the best, and they must not grudge it though it was, for it was what passed under the rod. 3. That it should not be redeemed, unless the owner would give a fifth part more for its ransom, v. 31. If men had any curiosity to prefer what was marked for tithie before any other part of their increase, it was fit that they should pay for their curiosity.

The last verse seems to have reference to this whole book, which it is the conclusion of; These are the commandments which the Lord commanded Moses, for the children of Israel. Many of these commandments are moral, and of perpetual obligation; others of them ceremonial, and peculiar to the Jewish economy, which yet have a spiritual signification, and are instructive to us who are furnished with a key to let us into the mysteries contained in them; for unto us, by those institutions, is the gospel preached as well as unto them, Heb. 4. 2. And, upon the whole matter, we may see cause to bless God that we are not come to mount Sinai, Heb. 12. 18. (1.) That we are not under the dark shadows of the law, but enjoy the clear light of the gospel, which shows us Christ the end of the law for righteousness, Rom. 10. 4. The doctrine of our reconciliation to God by a Mediator is not clouded with the smoke of burning sacrifices, but cleared by the knowledge of Christ and him crucified. (2.) That we are not under the heavy yoke of the law, in the which things that are not such as are written in the law, no man enquired, Heb. 9. 10.) opposed till the time of reformation, a yoke which neither they nor their fathers were able to bear, (Acts 15. 10.) but under the sweet and easy institutions of the gospel, which pronounce those the true worshipers that worship the Father in spirit and truth, by Christ only, and in his name, who is our Priest, Temple, Altar, Sacrifices, Purity, Peace, and all the rest. We must think, that, because we are not tied to the ceremonial cleansing, feasts, and oblations, a little care, time, and expense, will serve to honour God with. No, but rather have our hearts more enlarged with.
The titles of the five books of Moses, which we use in our Bibles, are all borrowed from the Greek translation of the Seventy, the most ancient version of the Old Testament that we know of. But the title of this book only we turn into English; in all the rest we retain the Greek word itself; for which difference I know no reason, but that the Latin translators have generally done the same. Otherwise, this book might as well have been called Arithmoi, the Greek title, as the first Genesis, and the second Exodus; or these might as well have been translated and called, the first the Generation, or Original, the second theQui-let, or Escape, as this Numbers. This book was thus entitied, because of the numbers of the children of Israel, so often mentioned in this book, and was well worthy to give a title to it, because it was the remarkable accomplishment of God's promise to Abraham, that his seed should be as the stars of heaven for multitude. It also relates to two numberings of them, one at Mount Sinai, (ch. 1.) the other in the plains of Moab, thirty-nine years after, ch. 26. And not three men the same in the last account that were in the first. This book is almost equally divided between histories and laws, intermixed.

I. We have here the histories of the numbering and marshalling of the tribes; (ch. 1. 4.) the dedication of the altar and Levites; (ch. 7. 8.) their march; (ch. 9. 10.) their murmuring and unbelief, for which they were sentenced to wander forty years in the wilderness; (ch. 11. 14.) the rebellion of Korah; (ch. 16. 17.) the history of the last year of the forty; (ch. 20. 26.) the conquest of Midian, and the settlement of the two tribes; (ch. 31. 32.) with an account of their journeys, ch. 33.

II. We have divers laws, about the Nazarites, &c.; (ch. 5. 6.) and again, about the priests' charge, &c.; (ch. 18. 19.) feasts, (ch. 28. 29.) and vows; (ch. 30.) and relating to their settlement in Canaan, ch. 27. 34, 35, 36. An abstract of much of this book we have in a few words, (Ps. 95. 10.) Forty years long was I grieved with this generation; and an application of it to ourselves, (Heb. 4. 1.) Let us fear lest we seem to come short. Many considerable nations were now in being, that dwelt in cities and fortified towns, of which no notice is taken, no account kept, by the sacred history; but very exact records are kept of the affairs of a handful of people, that dwelt in tents, and wandered strangely in a wilderness, because they were the children of the covenant: For the Lord's portion is his people, Jacob is the lot of his inheritance.

CHAP. I.

Israel was now to be formed into a commonwealth, or a kingdom rather; for the Lord was their King, (1 Sam. 12. 12.) their government a theocracy, and Moses under him was King in Jahve's name. (Deut. 33. 5.) Now for the right settlement of this holy state, next to the institution of good laws, was necessary the institution of good order; an account therefore must be taken of the subjects of this kingdom, which is done in this chapter; where we have,

I. Orders given to Moses to number the people, v. 1. 4.
II. Persons nominated to assist him herein, v. 5...16.
III. The particular number of each tribe, as it was given in (Exod. 3. 17.) the assembly of the tribes, v. 44...46. V. An exception of the Levites, v. 47. 54.

AND the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the tabernacle of the congregation, on the first day of the second month, in the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt saying, 2. Take ye the sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, after their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of their names, every male by their poll; 3. From twenty years old and upward, all that are able to go forth to war in Israel: thou and Aaron shall number them by their armies. 4. And with you there shall be a man of every tribe; every one head of the house of his fathers. 5. And these are the names of the men that shall stand with you: Of the tribe of Reuben; Elizur the son of Shedeur. 6. Of Simeon; Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai. 7. Of Judah; Nahshon the son of Amminadab. 8. Of Issachar; Nethaneel the son of Zuar. 9. Of Zebulun; Eliab the son of Helon. 10. Of the children of Joseph; of Ephraim, Elisama the son of Ammihud; of Manasseh, Gedeon the son of Padahur. 11. Of Benjamin; Abidan the son of Gideoni. 12. Of Dan; Ahicer the son of Ammishaddai. 13. Of Asher; Pagiel the son of Ocran. 14. Of Gad; Eliasaph the son of Deuel. 15. Of Naphtali; Ahira the son of Enan. 16. These were the renowned of the congregation, princes of the tribes of their fathers, heads of thousands in Israel.

Here is a commission issued out for the numbering of the people of Israel; and David, long after, paid dear for doing it without a commission. Here is,

I. The date of this commission, v. 1. 1. The place, it is given at God's court, in the wilderness of Sinai; from his royal palace, the tabernacle of the congregation. 2. The time; in the second year after they came up out of Egypt; we may call it the second year of that reign. The laws in Leviticus were given in the first month of that year; these orders were given in the beginning of the second month.

II. The directions given for the execution of it, v. 3. 1. None were to be numbered but the males, and of those only such as were fit for war. None under twenty years old; for though some such might have bulk and strength enough for military service, yet, in compassion to their tender years, God would not have them put upon it to bear arms. 2. Nor were any to be numbered, who, through age, or bodily infirmity, blindness, lameness, or chronic diseases, were unfit for war. The church being militant, those only are reputed the true numbers of it that have listed themselves soldiers of Jesus Christ; for our life, our Christian life, is a warfare. 3. The account was to be taken according to their families, that it might not only be known how many they were, and what were their names, but of what tribe, and family, or clan; nay, of what particular house every person was; or, reckoning it the master of an army, to what regiment every man belonged, that he might know his place himself, and the government might know where to find him. They were numbered a little before this, when their poll-money was paid for the service of the tabernacle, Exod. 38. 25, 26. But it should seem they were not then registered by the house of their fathers, as now they were. Their number was the same then that it was now, six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty, and as many as had died since then, and were lost in the account, so many were arrived to be twenty years old, and were added to the account. Note, As one generation passeth away, another generation cometh. As vacancies are daily made, so recruits are daily raised to fill up the vacancies, and Providence takes care that, one time or other, in one family or other, the balance shall be equal, and the race of mankind and the holy seed may not be cut off and extinct.

III. Commissioners are named for the doing of this work. Moses and Aaron were to preside, (v. 3.) and one man of every tribe, that was renowned in his tribe, and was presumed to know it well, was to assist in it: the princes of the tribe, v. 16. Note, Those that are honourable should study to be serviceable; he that is great, let him be your minister and show, by his knowing the public, that he deserves to be publicly known. The charge of this muster was committed to him who was the lord-lieutenant of that tribe.

Now, why was this account ordered to be taken and kept? For several reasons. 1. To prove the accomplishment of the promise made to Abraham, that God would make the seed of Jacob, Gen. 22. 17. That this promise was renewed to Jacob, (Gen. 28. 14.) that his seed should be as the dust of the earth; now it appears that there did not fail one tittle of that good promise, which was an encouragement to them to hope that the other promise of the land of Canaan for an inheritance should also be fulfilled, in its season. When the number of a body of men is only guessed at, upon the view, it is easy for one, that is disposed to cavil, to surmise that the conjecture is mistaken, and that, if they were to be counted, they would not be found half so many; therefore God would have Israel numbered, that it might be upon record how vastly they were increased in a little time; that the power of God's providence, and the truth of his promise, may be seen and acknowledged by all. It could not have been expected, in any ordinary course of nature, that seventy-five souls, (which was the number of Jacob's family when he went down into Egypt) should in 215 years (and it was no longer) multiply into so many hundred thousands. It is therefore to be attributed to an extraordinary virtue in the divine promise and blessing; 2. It was to intimate the particular care which God himself would take of his Israel, and expected that Moses and the inferior rulers should take of their people. It was the called the Shepherd of Israel: (Ps. 80. 1.) now the shepherds always kept count of their flocks, and delivered them by number to their under-shepherds, that they might know if any were missing; in like manner God numbers his flock, that of all which he took into his fold he might lose none, but upon a valuable consideration, even of those that were sacrificed to his justice. 2. It was to put a difference between the true-born Israelites and the mixed multitude. God numbered not Israelites; all the world is but lumber in comparison with those jewels. Little account is made of others, but the saints God has a particular property in, and concern for: The Lord knows them that are his, (2 Tim. 2. 19.) knows them by name, Phil. 4. 3. The hairs of their head are numbered; but he will say to others, "I never knew you, never made any account of you." It was in order to their being marshalled into several districts, for the more easy administration of justice, and their more regular march through the wilderness. It is a rout, and a rabble, not an army, that is not mustered and put in order.

17. And Moses and Aaron took these men which are expressed by their names: 18. And they assembled all the congregation together on the first day of the second month, and they declared their pedigrees after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, by their polls. 19. As the Lord commanded Moses, so he numbered them in the wilderness of Sinai. 20. And the children of Reuben, Israel's eldest son, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 21. Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Reuben, were forty and six thousand and five hundred. 22. Of the children of Simeon, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, those that were numbered of them, according to the number of the names, by their polls, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 23. Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Simeon, were fifty and nine thousand and three hundred. 24. Of the children of Gad, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 25. Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Gad, were forty and five thousand six hundred and fifty. 26. Of the children of Judah, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 27. Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Judah, were three score and fourteen thousand and six hundred. 28. Of the children of Issachar, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 29. Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Issachar, were fifty and four thousand and four hundred. 30. Of the children of Zebulun, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 31. Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Zebulun, were fifty and seven thousand and four hundred. 32. Of the children of Joseph, namely, of the children of Ephraim, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 33. Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Ephraim, were forty thousand and five hundred. 34. Of the children of Manasseh, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 35. Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Manasseh, were thirty and two thousand and two hundred. 36. Of the children of Benjamin, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 37. Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Benjamin, were thirty and five thousand and four hundred. 38. Of the children of Dan, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 39. Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Dan, were three score and two thousand and seven hundred. 40. Of the children of Asher, by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 41. Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Asher, were forty and one thousand and five hundred. 42. Of the children of Naphtali, throughout their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, according to the number of the names, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; 43. Those that were numbered of them, even of the tribe of Naphtali, were fifty and three thousand and four hundred.

We have here the speedy execution of the orders given for the numbering of the people. It was begun the same day that the orders were given, The first day of the second month; compare v. 18, with v. 1. Note, When any work is to be done for God, it is good to set about it quickly, while the sense of duty is strong and pressing. And, for aught that appears, it was but one day's work, for many other things were done between this and the 22d day of this month, when they removed their camp, ch. 16. 10. Joshua was with them two months numbering the people in David's time, (2 Sam. 24. 8.) but then they were dispersed, now they lived close together; then Satan moved the doing of it, now God did. It was the sooner and more easily done now, because it had been done but a little while ago, and they needed but review the old books, with the alterations since made, which, probably, they had kept an account of as they occurred. In the particulars here left upon record, we may observe,

1. That the numbers are registered in words at length, (as I may say,) and not in figures; to every one of the twelve tribes it is repeated, for the greater ceremony and solemnity of the account, that they were numbered by their generations, after their families, by the house of their fathers, accord

eng to the number of their names; to show that every tribe took and gave in the account by the same rule, and in the same method, though so many hands were employed in it; and that, in enumerating their genealogy first, to show that their family descended from Israel, then the families themselves in their order, then dividing each family into the houses or subordinate families that branched from it, and under these, the names of the particular persons, according to the rules of heraldry. Thus every man might know who were his relations or next kin, on which subject we have already met with did depend: besides that, the nearer any are to us in relation, the more ready we should be to do them good.

2. That they all end with hundreds, only God with fifty, (v. 25.) but none of the numbers descend to units or tens. Some think it was a special providence that ordered all the tribes just at this time to be even numbers, and no odd or broken numbers among them, to show them that there was something more than ordinary designed in their increase: there being this uncommon in the circumstance of it. It is rather probable, that, Moses having some time before appointed rulers of hundreds, and rulers of fifties, (Exod. 18. 25.) they numbered the people by their respective rulers, which would bring the numbers to even hundreds or fifties.

3. That Judah is the most numerous of them all; more than double to Benjamin and Manasses, and almost 12,000 more than any other tribe, v. 27. It was Judah whom his brethren must praise, because from him Messiah the Prince was to descend; and because that was a thing at a distance, God did many ways honour that tribe in the meantime, particularly by the great increase of it, for His sake who was to spring out of Judah (Heb. 7. 14.) in the fulness of time. Judah was to lead the van through the wilderness, and was set apart as much more strongly, and with greater strength than any other tribe.

4. Ephraim and Manasses, the sons of Joseph, are numbered as distinct tribes, and both together made up almost as many as Judah; this was in pursuance of Jacob's adoption of them, by which they were equalled with their uncles Reuben and Simeon, Gen. 48. 5. It was also the effect of the blessing of Joseph, Gen. 49. 23. Ephraim and Manasses were the first, and is more numerous than Manasses, for Jacob had crossed hands, and foreseen ten thousands of Ephraim, and thousands of Manasses. The fulfilling of this confirms our faith in the spirit of prophecy with which the patriarchs were endued.

5. When they came down into Egypt, Dan had but one son, (Gen. 46. 25.) and so his tribe was but one family, ch. 26. 42. Benjamin had then ten sons, (Gen. 46. 21.) yet now the tribe of Dan is almost double in number to that of Benjamin. Note, The increasing and diminishing of families does not always go by probabilities. Some are multiplied greatly, and again are diminished, while others, that were poor, have families made them like a flock, Ps. 107. 38, 39, 41. and see Job 12. 23. But, in the end, it is possible that those were numbered who were able to go forth to war, to remind them that they had wars before them, though now they were in peace, and met with no opposition. Let not him that girdeth on the harness boast as though he had put it off.

44. These are those that were numbered, which Moses and Aaron numbered, and the princes of Israel, being twelve men: each one was for the house of his fathers. 45. So were all those that were numbered of the children of Israel, by the house of their fathers, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war in Israel; 46. Even all they that were numbered were six hundred thousand and three thousand and five hundred and fifty.

We have here the sum total at the foot of the account; they were in all 656,000 fighting men, 3,550 over. Some think, that, when this was their number some months before, (Exod. 38. 26.) the Levites were reckoned with them; but now that tribe was separated for the service of God, yet had so many more by this time attained to the age of twenty years, as that still they were the same number; to show, that, whatever we part with for the honour and service of God, it shall certainly be made up to us one way or other.

Now we see what a vast body of men they were. Let us consider, 1. How much went to maintain all these (beside twice as many more, no question, of women and children, sick and aged, of the mixed multitude) for forty years together in the wilderness; and they were all at God's finding every day, having their food from the dew of heaven, and not from the fatness of the earth. Oh what a great and good Housekeeper! and God provided them with numbers depending on him, and receiving from him every day! 2. What work sin makes with a people; within forty years most of them would indeed have died of course for the common sin of mankind; for when sin entered into the world, death came with it, and how great are the desolations which it makes in the earth! But, for the particular sin of unbelief and murmuring, all those that were now numbered, except two, laid their bones under their iniquity, and perished in the wilderness.

3. What a great multitude God's spiritual Israel will amount to at last; though at one time, and in one place, they seem to be but a little flock, yet when they come all together, they shall be a great multitude, innumerable, Rev. 7. 9. And though the church's beginning be small, its latter end shall greatly increase. A little one shall become a thousand.

47. But the Levites after the tribe of their fathers were not numbered among them. 48. For the Lord had spoken unto Moses, saying, 49. Only thou shalt not number the tribe of Levi, neither take the sum of them among the children of Israel: 50. But thou shalt appoint the Levites over the tabernacle of testimony, and over all the vessels thereof, and over all things that belong to it: they shall bear the tabernacle, and all the vessels thereof; and they shall minister unto it, and shall encamp round about the tabernacle. 51. And when the tabernacle setteth forward, the Levites shall take it down: and when the tabernacle is to be pitched, the Levites shall set it up: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death. 52. And the children of Israel shall pitch their tents, every man by his own camp, and every man by his own standard, throughout their hosts. 53. But the Levites shall pitch round about the tabernacle of testimony, that there be no wrath upon the congregation of the children of Israel: and the Levites shall keep and the charge of the tabernacle of testimony. 54. And the children of Israel did according to all that the Lord commanded Moses, so did they.

Care is here taken to distinguish, from the rest of the tribes, the tribe of Levi, which, in the matter of the golden calf, had distinguished itself, Exod. 32. 26. Note, Singular services shall be recompensed with singular honours. Now, 1. It was the honour of the Levites, that they were made to attend to the Lord in this matter, committed the care of the tabernacle and the treasures thereof, both in their camps and in their marches. (1.) When they moved, the Levites were to take down the tabernacle, to carry it, and all that belonged to it, and then to set it up again in the place appointed, v. 50, 51. It was for the honour of the holy things, that none should be permitted to see them, or touch them, but those only who were called of God to the service. Thus we all are unfit and unworthy to have fellowship with God, till we are first called by his grace into the fellowship of his Son Jesus Christ our Lord, and so, being the spiritual seed of that great High Priest, are made priests to our God; and it is promised that God would take Levites to himself, even from the Gentiles. Isa. 66. 21. (2.) When they rested, the Levites were to put up the tabernacle, v. 50, 53. that they might be near their work, and resident upon their charge, always ready to attend; and that they might be a guard upon the tabernacle, to preserve it from being either plundered or profaned. They must pitch round about the tabernacle, That there be no wrath upon the congregation, as there would be, if the tabernacle and the charge of it were neglected, or those crowded upon it that were not allowed to come near. Note, Great care must be taken to prevent sin, because the preventing of sin is the preventing of wrath. 2. It was their further honour, that as Israel, being a holy people, was not reckoned among the nations, so they, being a holy tribe, were not reckoned among other Israelites, but numbered afterward by themselves, v. 49. The service which the Levites were to do about the sanctuary is called, as we render it in the margin, a warfare, ch. 4. 25. And, being engaged in that warfare, they were discharged from military services, and therefore not numbered with those that were to go out to war. Note, They that minister about holy things should neither entertain themselves, nor be entangled, in secular affairs. The ministry is itself work enough for a whole man, and all little enough to be employed in it. It is an admonition to ministers, to distinguish themselves by their exemplary conversation from common Israelites, not affecting to seem greater, but aiming to be really better, every way better, than others.

CHAP. II.

The thousands of Israel, having been mustered in the former chapter, in this are marshalled, and a regular disposition made of their camp, as a divine appointment. Here is, I. A general order concerning II. v. 1-2. 2. Particular directions for the posting of each of the tribes, in four distinct squadrions, three tribes in each squadron. 1. In the van-guard, on the east, were posted Judah and his family, and the name of the camp, the wing, southward, Reuben, Simeon, and Gad, v. 10-16. 3. In the rear, westward, Ephraim, Manasseh, and Benjamin, v. 18, 24, 26. In the left wing, northward, Dan, Asher, and Naphtali, v. 25, 31. And the tabernacle in the centre, v. 17. And, lastly, the conclusion of this appointment, v. 32-34.

A ND the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying, 2. Every man of the children of Israel shall pitch by his own standard, with the ensign of their father's house; far off about the tabernacle of the congregation shall they pitch.

Here is the general appointment given both for their orderly encampment where they rested, and their cloudy march when they moved. Some order, it is probable, they had already, when they came out of Egypt in rank and file, (Exod. 13. 18.) but now they were put into a better model.

1. They all dwelt in tents, and, when they marched, carried all their tents along with them, for they found no city to dwell in, Ps. 107. 4. This represents to us our state in this world; it is a movable state, (we are here to-day, and gone to-morrow,) and it is a military state. Is not our life a warfare? We do but pitch our tents in this world, and have in it no continuing city. Let us, therefore, while we are pitching in this world, be pressing through it.

2. These of a tribe were to pitch together, every man by his own standard. Note, It is the will of God that mutual love and affection, and converse and communion, should be kept up among relations. Those that are of kin to each other should, as much as they can, be acquainted with each other; and the bonds of nature should be improved for the strengthening of the bonds of Christian communion.

3. Every one must know his place, and keep in it; they were not allowed to fix where they pleased, nor to remove when they pleased; but God quarters them, with a charge to abide in their quarters. Note, It is God that appoints us the bounds of our habitation, and to him we must refer ourselves. He shall choose our inheritance for us, (Ps. 47. 4.) and in his choice we must acquiesce, and not love to fit, nor be as the bird that wanders from her nest.

4. Every tribe had its standard, flag, or ensign, and it should seem every family had some particular ensign of their fathers' house, which was carried, as with us the colours of each troop or company in a regiment are. These were of use for the distinction of tribes and families, and the gathering and keeping of them together; in allusion to which the preaching of the gospel is said to lift up an ensign, to which the Gentiles shall seek, and by which they shall pitch, Isa. 11. 10, 12. Note, God is the God of order, and not of confusion. These standards made the camp more beautiful to its friends, and more formidable to its enemies. The church of Christ is said to be as terrible as an army with banners, Cant. 6. 10. It is uncertain how these standards were distinguished: some conjecture that the standard of each tribe was of the same colour with the precious stone in which the name of that tribe was written in the high priest's ephod, and that these was all the difference. Others say, the name of each, that was written in its standard; whatever it was, no doubt, it gave a certain direction.

5. They were to pitch about the tabernacle which was to be in the midst of them, as the tent or pavilion of a general in the centre of an army. They must encamp round the tabernacle, (1.) That it might be equally a comfort and joy to them all, as it was a token of God's gracious presence with them; (Ps. 46. 5.) God is in the midst of her, she shall not be moved. Their camp had reason to be hearty, when thus they had God in the heart of them; to have bread from heaven every day round about their camp, and fire from heaven, with other tokens of God's favour, in the midst of their camp, was abundantly sufficient to answer that question, Is the Lord among us, or is he not? Happy art thou, O Israel! It is probable that the doors of all these tents were made to look toward the tabernacle from all sides; for every Israelite should have his eyes always toward the Lord; therefore they worshipped at the tent-door. The tabernacle was in the midst of the camp, that it might be near to them; for it is a very desirable thing to have the solemn administrations of holy ordinances near us and within our reach. The kingdom of God is among you. (2.) That they might have a common defence of the tabernacle and the Levites on every side. No invader could come near God's tabernacle, without first penetrating the thickest of their squadrons. Note, If God undertake the protection of our comforts, we ought in our places to undertake the protection of his institutions, and stand up in defence of his honour, and interest, and ministers.

Yet they were to pitch afar off, in reverence to the sanctuary, that it might not seem crowded and thrust up among them; and that the common business of the camp might be no annoyance to it. They were also taught to keep their distance, lest too much familiarity should breed contempt. It is supposed (from Joshua 3. 4.) that the distance between the nearest part of the camp and the tabernacle (or perhaps between them and the camp of the Levites, who pitched near the tabernacle) was 2000 cubits, that is, 1000 yards, little more than half a measured mile with us; but the outer parts of the camp must needs be much further off. Some compute that the extent of their camp could be no less than 12 miles square, for it was like a moveable city, with streets and lanes, in which perhaps the mammon fell, as well as on the outside of the camp, that they might have it at their doors.

In the Christian church we have a throne of a throne, (as in the tabernacle there was a mercy-seat,) which is called a glorious high throne from the beginning, (Jer. 17. 12.) and that throne surrounded by spiritual Israelites, 24 elders, double to the number of the tribes, clothed in white raiment, (Rev. 4. 4.) and the banner over them is Love; but we are not ordered, as they were, to pitch afar off, no, we are invited to draw near, and come boldly. The saints of the Most High are said to be round about him, Ps. 76. 11. God by his grace keep us close to him.

And on the east side, toward the rising of the sun, shall they of the standard of the camp of Judah pitch, throughout their armies: and Nahshon, the son of Amminadab, shall be captain of the children of Judah. 4. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were thirty and fourteen thousand and six hundred. 5. And those that do pitch next unto him shall be the tribe of Issachar: and Nethaniel, the son of Zuar, shall be captain of the children of Issachar. 6. And his host, and those that were numbered thereof, were fifty and four thousand and four hundred.

Then the tribe of Zebulun: and Eliab, the son of Helon, shall be captain of the children of Zebulun. 8. And his host, and those that were numbered thereof, were fifty and seven thousand and four hundred. 9. All that were numbered in the camp of Judah were a hundred thousand, and fourscore thousand, and six thousand and four hundred, throughout their armies. These shall first set forth. 10. On the south side shall be the standard of the camp of Reuben, according to their armies: and the captain of the children of Reuben shall be Elizur, the son of Shedeur. 11. And his host, and those that were numbered thereof, were forty and six thousand and five hundred. 12. And those which pitch by him shall be the tribe of Simeon: and the captain of the children of Simeon shall be Shelumiel, the son of Zurishaddai. 13. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were fifty and nine thousand and three hundred. 14. Then the tribe of Gad: and the captain of the sons of Gad shall be Eliasaph, the son of Reuel. 15. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were forty and five thousand and six hundred and fifty. 16. All that were numbered in the camp of Reuben were a hundred thousand, and fifty and one thousand, and four hundred and fifty, throughout their armies. And they shall set forth in the second rank. 17. Then the tabernacle of the congregation shall set forward, with the camp of the Levites in the midst of the camp: as they encamp so shall they set forward, every man in his place by their standards. 18. On the west side shall be the standard of the camp of Ephraim, according to their armies: and the captain of the sons of Ephraim shall be Elishama, the son of Ammihud. 19. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were forty thousand and five hundred. 20. And by him shall be the tribe of Manasseh: and the captain of the children of Manasseh shall be Gamaliel, the son of Pedahzur. 21. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were thirty and two thousand and two hundred. 22. Then the tribe of Benjamin: and the captain of the sons of Benjamin shall be Abidan, the son of Gideoni. 23. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were thirty and five thousand and four hundred. 24. All that were numbered of the camp of Ephraim were a hundred thousand, and eight thousand and a hundred, throughout their armies. And they shall go forward in the third rank. 25. The standard of the camp of Dan shall be on the north side by their armies: and the captain of the chil dren of Dan shall be Ahiezer, the son of Ananishaddai. 26. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were three-score and two thousand and seven hundred. 27. And those that encamp by him shall be the tribe of Asher: and the captain of the children of Asher shall be Pagiel the son of Ocran. 28. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were forty and one thousand and five hundred. 29. Then the tribe of Naphtali: and the captain of the children of Naphtali shall be Ahura, the son of Enam. 30. And his host, and those that were numbered of them, were fifty and three thousand and four hundred. 31. All they that were numbered in the camp of Dan were a hundred thousand, and fifty and seven thousand, and six hundred. They shall go hindmost with their standards. 32. These are those which were numbered of the children of Israel by the house of their fathers: all those that were numbered of the camps, throughout their hosts, were six hundred thousand, and three thousand, and five hundred and fifty. 33. But the Levites were not numbered among the children of Israel; as the Lord commanded Moses. 34. And the children of Israel did according to all that the Lord commanded Moses: so they pitched by their standards, and so they set forward, every one after their families, according to the house of their fathers.

We have here the particular distribution of the twelve tribes into four squadrons, three tribes in a squadron, one of which was to lead the other two.

Observe, 1. God himself appointed them their place, to prevent strife and envy among them. Had they been left to determine precedence among themselves, they would have been in danger of quarrelling with one another, as the disciples, who strive which should be greatest; each would have had a pretence to be first, or, at least, not to be last. Had it been left to Moses to determine, they would have quarrelled with him; and charged him with partiality; therefore God does it, who is himself the Fountain and Judge of honour, and in his appointment all must acquiesce. If God in his providence advance others above us, and abase us, we ought to be as well satisfied in his doing it that way, as if he did it, as this was done here, for his voice out of the tabernacle; and this consideration, that it appears to be the will of God it should be so, should effectually silence all envies and discontent.

And, as far as our place comes to be our choice, our Saviour has given us a rule. (Luke 14. 8.) Sit not down in the highest room; and another, (Matt. 20. 27.) He that will be chief, let him be your servant. That is, we are to look upon them that are most serviceable are really most honourable.

2. Every tribe had a captain, a prince, or commander in chief, whom God himself nominated, the same that had been appointed to number them, ch. 1. 5. Our being all the children of one Adam is so far from justifying the levellers, and taking away the distinction of place and honour, that even among the children of the same Abraham, the same Jacob, the same Judah, God himself appointed that one should be captain of all the rest. There are flowers ordained of God, and those to whom honour and fear are due, and must be paid. Some observe the significance of the names of these princes, at least, in general, how much God was in the thoughts of those that gave them their names, for most of them have El, God, at one end or other of their names. Nehanuel, the gift of God; Elias, my God a father; Elizur, my God a redeemer; Jemuel, God my peace; Elisahaph, God has added; Elisahama, my God has heard; Ganadiel, God my reward; Pagiel, God has met me. By which it appears that the Israelites in Egypt did not quite forget the name of their God, but, when they wanted other memorials, preserved the remembrance of it in the names of their children, and therefore comforted themselves in their affliction.

3. Those tribes were placed together, under the same standard, that were nearest of kin to each other; Judah, Issachar, and Zebulun, were the three youngest sons of Leah, and they were put together; and Issachar and Zebulun would not grudge to be under Judah, since they were younger brethren; Reuben and Simeon would not have been content in their place. Therefore Reuben, Jacob's eldest son, was not captain of the next squadron: Simeon, no doubt, is willing to be under him, and God, the son of Zilpah, Leah's handmaid, is fitly added to them in Levi's room: Ephraim, Manasseh, and Benjamin, are all the posterity of Rachel. Dan, the eldest son of Bilhah, is made a leading tribe, though the son of a concubine, that more abundant honour might be bestowed upon that which lacked; and it was said, Dan should judge his people, and to him were added the two youngest sons of the handmaids. Thus unconceivable was the order in which they were placed.

4. The tribe of Judah was in the first post of honour encamped toward the rising sun, and in their marches led the van, not only because it was the most numerous tribe, but chiefly because from that tribe Christ was to come, who is the Lion of the tribe of Judah, and was to descend from the loins of him who was now nominated chief captain of that tribe. Nahashon is reckoned among the ancestors of Christ, Mat. 1. 4. So that when he went before them, Christ himself went before them in effect, as their Leader. Judah was the first of the twelve sons of Jacob that was blessed; Reuben, Simeon, and Levi, were censured by their dying father; he therefore being first in blessing, though born before all the others, first to teach children how to value the smile of their godly parents, and dread their frowns.

5. The tribe of Levi pitched close about the tabernacle, within the rest of the tribes, v. 17. They must defend the sanctuary, and then the rest of the tribes must defend them. Thus, in the vision which John saw of the glory of heaven, between the elders and the four living creatures, there was a sea of glass under eyes, Rev. 4. 6, 10. Civil powers should protect the religious interests of a nation, and be a defence upon that glory.

6. The camp of Dan, (and so this tribe is called long after their settlement in Canaan, Judg. 13. 25. because celebrated for their military prowess,) though posted in the left wing when they encamped, was ordered to bring up the rear, v. 31. They were the most numerous, near the last, and therefore were ordered into a post, which, next to the front, required the most strength, for as the strength is, so shall the day be.

Lastly, The children of Israel observed the orders given them, and did as the Lord commanded Moses, v. 34. They put themselves in the posts assigned them, without murmuring or disputing, and as it was their safety, so it was their beauty: Ba-
This chapter and the next are concerning the tribe of Levi, which was to be mustered and marshalled by itself, and not in common with the other tribes; which signified the particular honour put upon them, and the particular duty and service required from them. The Levites are in this chapter considered, 1. As attendants on, and assistants to, the priests in the temple-service. And so we have an account, 1. Of the priests themselves, (v. 1 - 4.) and their work, v. 10. 2. Of the gift of the Levites to them, (v. 5 - 8.) in order to which they are mustered, (v. 14 - 16.) and the sum of them taken, v. 39. Each particular family of them is mustered, has its place assigned, and its charge; the Gershonites, (v. 18 - 26.) the Kohathites, (v. 27 - 32.) and the Merarites, v. 33 - 39. 3. As equivalents for the first-born, v. 11 - 13. I. The first-born are numbered, and the Levites taken instead of them, as far as the number of the Levites went, 40. 4. The first-born more than the Levites were redeemed, v. 46 - 51.

1. THESE also are the generations of Aaron and Moses, in the day that the Lord spake with Moses in mount Sinai. 2. And these are the names of the sons of Aaron; Nadab the first-born, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Itamar. 3. These are the names of the sons of Aaron, the priests which were anointed, whom he consecrated to minister in the priest's office. 4. And Nadab and Abihu died before the Lord, when they offered strange fire before the Lord, in the wilderness of Sinai, and they had no children: and Eleazar and Itamar ministered in the priest's office in the sight of Aaron their father. 5. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 6. Bring the tribe of Levi near, and present them before Aaron the priest, that they may minister unto him. 7. And they shall keep his charge, and the charge of the whole congregation before the tabernacle of the congregation, to do the service of the tabernacle. 8. And they shall keep all the instruments of the tabernacle of the congregation, and the charge of the children of Israel, to do the service of the tabernacle. 9. And thou shalt give the Levites unto Aaron and to his sons: they are wholly given unto him out of the children of Israel. 10. And thou shalt appoint Aaron and his sons, and they shall wait on their priest's office: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death. 11. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 12. And I, behold, I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel instead of all the first-born that openeth the matrix among the children of Israel; therefore the Levites shall be mine; 13. Because all the first-born are mine: for on the day that I smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt I hallowed unto me all the first-born in Israel, both man and beast, mine they shall be: I am the Lord. Here I. The family of Aaron is confirmed in the priest's office, v. 10. They had been called to it before, and consecrated; here they are appointed to wait on their priest's office: the apostle uses this phrase, (Rom. 12. 7.) Let us wait on our ministry. The work and office of the ministry require a constant attendance and great diligence; so frequent work, and yet a dispensation of favourable opportunities, that it must be waited on. Here is repeated what is said before, (ch. 1. 51.) The stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death; which forbids the invading of the priest's office by any other person whatsoever; none must come nigh to minister but Aaron and his sons only, all others are strangers. It also lays a charge on the priests, as doorkeepers in God's house, to take care that none should come near who were forbidden by the law; they must keep off all intruders, whose approach would be to the profanation of the holy things, telling them that if they came near, it was at their peril, they would die by the hand of God, as Uzza did. The Jews say, that afterward there was hung over the door of the temple a golden sword, (perhaps alluding to that flaming sword at the entrance of the garden of Eden,) on which was engraven, The stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death. II. A particular account is given of this family of Aaron; what we have met with before concerning them, is here repeated. 1. The consecration of the sons of Aaron, v. 3. They were all anointed to minister before the Lord, though it appeared afterward, and God knew it, that two of them were wise, and two were foolish. 2. The fall of the two eldest; (v. 4.) they offered strange fire, and died for so doing, before the Lord. This is mentioned here in the preamble to the law concerning the priesthood, for warning to all succeeding priests; let them know, by this example, that God is a jealous God, and will not be mocked; the holy anointing oil was an honour to the obedient, but not a shelter to the disobedient. It is here said, They had no children. Provided for them was the gift of the Levites, and the duty of the temple-service, that none of their descendants should remain to be priests, and to bear up their name who had profaned God's name. 3. The continuance of the two youngest; Eleazar and Itamar ministered in the sight of Aaron. It intimates, (1.) The care they took about their ministration, not to make any blunders; they kept under their father's eye, and took instructions from him in all they did, because, probably, he could not give them the sight when they offered strange fire. Note, It is good for young people to put under the conduct and inspection of those that are aged and experienced. (2.) The comfort Aaron took in it; he pleased him to see his younger sons behave themselves prudently and gravely, when his two elder had miscarried. Note, It is a great satisfaction to parents when their younger children are found walking in the truth. This gave him great joy, v. 4. A grant is made of the Levites to be assistants to the priests in their work, Give the Levites to Aaron, v. 9. Aaron was to have a greater propriety in, and power over, the tribe of Levi, than any other of the princes had in and over their respective tribes. There was a great deal of work belonging to the priest's office, and there were now three tribes of them, all helpers in it; and it was his two sons', for it does not appear that they had either of them any children at this time, at least, not any that were of age to minister, therefore God appoints the Levites to attend upon them. Note,
Those whom God finds work for, he will find help for. Here is, (1.) The service for which the Levites were designed; they were to minister to the priests in their ministration to the Lord, (v. 6) and to keep Aaron’s charge, (v. 7.) as the deacons to the bishops in the evangelical constitutions, serving at tables, while they waited on their ministry. The Levites killed the sacrifices, and then the priests needed only to sprinkle the blood and burn the fat: the Levites prepared the incense, the priest burnt it. They were to keep not only Aaron’s charge, but the charge of the whole congregation. Note, It is a great trust that is reposed in ministers, not only for the glory of Christ, but for the good of his church; so that they must not only keep the charge of the great High Priest, but must also be faithful to the souls of men, in trust for whom a dispensation is committed to them. (2.) The consideration upon which the Levites were demanded; they were taken instead of the first-born. The preservation of the first-born of Israel, when all the first-born of the Egyptians (with whom they were many of them mingled) were destroyed, was looked upon by Him who never makes any unreasonable demands, as cause sufficient for the appropriating of all the first-born from thenceforward to himself, (v. 13.) All the first-born are mine. That was sufficient to make them his, though he had given no reason for it, for he is the sole Fount of life and Lord of all beings and powers; but because all obedience must flow from love, and acts of duty must be acts of gratitude, before they were challenged into peculiar services, they were crowned with peculiar favours. Note, When he that made us saves us, we are thereby put under peculiar obligations to serve him and live to him. God’s right to us by redemption, corroborates the right he has to us by creation. Now, because the first-born of a family are generally the favourites, and some would think it a disparagement to have their eldest sons servants to the priests, and attending before the door of the tabernacle, God took the tribe of Levi entire for his own, in lieu of the first-born, v. 12. Note, God’s institutions put no hardships upon men in any case, as their just interests, or reasonable affections. It was presumed that the Israelites would rather part with the Levites than with the first-born, and therefore God graciously ordered the exchange; yet for us he spared not his own Son. 14. And the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, saying, 15. Number the children of Levi, after the house of their fathers, by their families: every male from a month old and upward shalt thou number them. 16. And Moses numbered them, according to the word of the Lord, as he was commanded. 17. And these were the sons of Levi by their names; Gershon, and Kohath, and Merari. 18. And these are the names of the sons of Gershon, by their families; Libni, and Shimei. 19. And the sons of Kohath, by their families; Amram, and Izehar, Hebron, and Uzziel. 20. And the sons of Merari, by their families; Mahli, and Mushli. These are the families of the Levites according to the house of their fathers. 21. Of Gershon was the family of the Libnites, and the family of the Shimites: these are the families of the Gershonites. 22. Those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, even those that were numbered of them, were seven thousand and five hundred. 23. The families of the Gershonites shall pitch behind the tabernacle westward. 24. And the chief of the house of the father of the Gershonites shall be Ela-saph the son of Lel. 25. And the charge of the sons of Gershon, in the tabernacle of the congregation, shall be the tabernacle, and the tent, the covering thereof, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, 26. And the hangings of the court, and the curtain for the door of the court, which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and the cords of it, for all the service thereof. 27. And of Kohath was the family of the Amramites, and the family of the Izeharites, and the family of the Hebronites, and the family of the Uzzielites: these are the families of the Kohathites. 28. In the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, were eight thousand and six hundred, keeping the charge of the sanctuary. 29. The families of the sons of Kohath shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle southward. 30. And the chief of the house of the father of the families of the Kohathites shall be Elizaphan the son of Uzziel. 31. And their charge shall be the ark, and the table, and the candlestick, and the altars, and the vessels of the sanctuary wherewith they minister, and the hanging, and all the service thereof. 32. And Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest shall be chief over the chief of the Levites, and have the oversight of them that keep the charge of the sanctuary. 33. Of Merari was the family of the Mahlites, and the family of the Mushites: these are the families of Merari. 34. And those that were numbered of them, according to the number of all the males, from a month old and upward, were six thousand and two hundred. 35. And the chief of the house of the father of the families of Merari was Zuriel the son of Abihail: these shall pitch on the side of the tabernacle northward. 36. And under the custody and charge of the sons of Merari shall be the boards of the tabernacle, and the pillars thereof, and all the vessels thereof, and all that serveth thereto. 37. And the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords. 38. But those that encamp before the tabernacle toward the east, even before the tabernacle of the congregation eastward, shall be Moses, and Aaron and his sons, keeping the charge of the sanctuary for the charge of the children of Israel; and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death. 39. All that were numbered of the Levites, which Moses and Aaron numbered at the commandment of the Lord, throughout their families, all the males, from a month old and upward, were twenty and two thousand.

The Levites being granted to Aaron to minister to him, they are here delivered him by tale, that he might know what he had, and employ them accordingly.

Observe, 1. The several rule they were numbered, Every man from a month old and upward, v. 15. The rest of the tribes were numbered only from twenty years old and upward, and of them those only that were able to go forth to war; but into the number of the Levites they must take in both infants and infants; being exempted from the war, it was not insisted upon that they should be of age and strength for the wars. Though it appears afterward that little more than half their number were to be employed in the service of the tabernacle, (about 8,000 out of 22,000,) ch. 4. 47, 48, yet God would have them all numbered as retainers to his family; that none may think themselves disowned and rejected of God, because they are not in a capacity of doing him that service which they see others do him. The Levites of a month old could not honour God and serve the tabernacle as those that were grown up. Any part of the mouths of babes and sucklings the Levites' praise was perfected. Let not little children be hindered from being enrolled among the disciples of Christ, for such was the tribe of Levi; of such is the kingdom of heaven, that kingdom of priests. The redemption of the first-born was reckoned from a month old; (ch. 18. 15, 16,) therefore from that age the Levites were numbered. They were numbered after the house of their fathers, not their mothers, for if the daughter of a Levite married one of another tribe, her son was not a Levite: but we read of a spiritual priest to our God, who inherited the unfeigned faith which dwelt in his mother and grandmother, 2 Tim. 1. 5.

II. How they were distributed into three classes, according to the number of the sons of Levi, Gershôn, Kohath, and Merari, and these subdivided into several families, v. 17. 20. Concerning each of these three classes we have an account. 1. Of their number. The Gershonites were 7,600. The Kohathites were 8,600. The Merarites were 6,200. The rest of the tribes had not their subordinate families numbered by themselves, as those of Levi; this honour God put upon his own tribe. 2. Of their post about the tabernacle, on which they were to attend. The Gershonites pitched behind the tabernacle on the westward, v. 25. The Kohathites on the right hand, southward, v. 29. The Merarites on the left hand, northward, v. 35. And, to complete the square, Moses and Aaron, with the priests, encamped in the front, eastward, v. 36. Thus was the tabernacle surrounded with its guards; and thus does the angel of the Lord encamp round about them that fear him, those living temples, Ps. 34. 7. Every one knew his place and his place among the others, with God. 3. Of their chief or head. As each class had its own place, so each had its own prince. The commander of the Gershonites was Elizaphan, v. 24. Of the Kohathites, Elizaphan, (v. 36,) of whom we read, (Lev. 10. 4,) that he was one of the bearers at the funeral of Nadab and Abihu. Of the Merarites, Zuriel, v. 35. Of their charge when the camp moved. Each class knew their own business; it was requisite they should; for that which is every body's work, often proves no body's work. The Gershonites were charged with the custody and carriage of all the curtains and hangings and coverings of the tabernacle and court, v. 23. 26. The Kohathites all of the furniture of the tabernacle, the outer court, altar, table, &c. v. 31. 32. The Merarites of the heavy carriage, boards, bars, pillars, &c. v. 36. 37.

Here we may observe, (1.) That the Kohathites, though they were the second house, yet were preferred before the elder family of the Gershonites. Besides that Aaron and the priests were of that family, they were more numerous, and their post and charge more honourable, which, probably, was ordered to put an honour upon Moses, who was of that family. Yet, (2.) The pesterly of Moses were not at all dignified or privileged, but stood upon the level with other Levites, that it might appear he did not seek the advancement of his own family, nor to entail any honours upon it either in church or state; he that had honour enough himself, coveted not to have his name shine by that borrowed light, but rather to have the Levites borrow honour from him. Let none think contemptibly of the Levites, though inferior to the priests, for Moses himself thought it preterfer more than enough for his sons to be Levites. Probably, it was because the family of Moses were Levites only, that in the title of this chapter, which is concerning that tribe, (v. 1.) Aaron is put before Moses.

III. The sum total of the numbers of this tribe. They are computed in all 22,000, v. 39. The sum of the particular families amount to 500 more; if this had been added to the sum total, the Levites, instead of being 273 fewer than the first-born, as they were, (v. 43,) would have been 27 more, and so the balance would have fallen the other way; but it is supposed that the 300 which were struck off from the account when the exchange was to be made, were the first-born of the Levites themselves, born since their coming out of Egypt; which could not be put into the exchange, because they were already sanctified to God. But that which is especially observable here is, that the tribe of Levi was by much the least of all the tribes. Note, God's part in the world is too often the smallest part. His chosen are but a little flock in comparison.

40. And the Lord said unto Moses. Number all the first-born of the males of the children of Israel, from a month old and upward, and take the number of their names. 41. And thou shalt take the Levites for me (I am the Lord) instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites instead of all the firstlings among the cattle of the children of Israel. 42. And Moses numbered, as the Lord commanded him, all the first-born among the children of Israel. 43. And all the first-born males, by the number of names, from a month old and upward, of those that were numbered of them, were twenty and two thousand two hundred and threescore and thirteen. 44. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying. 45. Take the Levites instead of all the first-born among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle; and the Levites shall be mine: I am the Lord. 46. And for those that are to be redeemed of the two hundred and threescore and thirteen of the first-born of the children of Israel, which are more than the Levites; 47. Thou shalt even take five shekels apiece by the poll; after the shekel of the sanctuary shalt thou take them: (the shekel is twenty gerahs:) 48. And thou shalt give the money, wherewith the odd number of them is to be redeemed, unto Aaron and to his sons. 49. And Moses took the redemption-money of them that were over and above them that were redeemed by the Levites; 50. Of the first-born of the children of Israel took he the money; a thousand three hundred and threescore, and five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary: 51. And Moses gave the money of them that were redeemed unto Aaron, and to his sons, according to the word of the Lord, as the Lord commanded Moses.

Here is the exchange made of the Levites for their first-born. 1. The first-born were numbered from a month old, v. 42, 43. Those certainly were not reckoned, who, though first-born, were become heads of families themselves, but those only that were under age; and the learned Bishop Patrick is decidedly of opinion that none were numbered but those only that were born since they were coming out of Egypt, when the first-born were sanctified, Exod. 13. 2. If there were 22,000 first-born males, we may suppose as many females, and all these brought forth in the first year after they came out of Egypt, we must infer from thence that in the last year of their servitude, even then when it was in the greatest extremity, there were abundance of marriages made among the Israelites; they were not discouraged by their present distress, but improved in faith, expecting that God would shortly visit them with mercy, and that their children, though born in bondage, should live in liberty and honour. And it was a token of good to them, an evidence that they were blessed of the Lord, that they were not only kept alive, but greatly increased, in a barren wilderness.

2. The number of the first-born, and that of the Levites, by a special providence, came pretty near to each other; thus, when he divided the nation, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel, Deut. 32. 8. Known unto God are all his works before-hand, and there is an exact proportion between them, and so it will appear, when they come to be compared. The Levites' cattle are said to be taken instead of the firstlings of the cattle of the children of Israel, that is, the Levites, with all their possessions were devoted to God instead of the first-born and all their's; for, when we give ourselves to God, all we have passes as appurtenances with the premises.

3. The small number of first-born, which exceeded the number of the Levites, (273 in all,) were to be redeemed, at five shekels apiece, and the redemption-money given to Aaron; for it would not do well to have them added to the Levites. It is probable, that, in the exchange, they began with the eldest of the first-born, and so downward, so that those were to be redeemed with money who were the 273 youngest of the first-born; more likely so, than either that it was determined by lot, or that the money was paid out of the public stock. The church is called the church of the first-born, which is redeemed, none of those were, with silver and gold, but, being devoted by sin to the justice of God, is ransomed with the precious blood of the Son of God.

CHAP. IV.

In the former chapter an account was taken of the whole tribe of Levi, in this, of those of that tribe who were in the prime of their time for service, betwixt thirty and fifty years old. 1. The serviceable men of the Kohathites are ordered to be numbered, and their charges given them, v. 21-30. 11. Of the Gershomites, v. 31-38. 111. Of the Merarites, v. 39-46. IV. The numbers of each, and the sum total at last, are recorded, v. 34-49. 1. A AND the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying, 2. Take the sum of the sons of Kohath from among the sons of Levi, after their families, by the house of their fathers; 3. From thirty years old and upward, even until fifty years old, all that enter into the host, to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation. 4. This shall be the service of the sons of Kohath, in the tabernacle of the congregation, about the most holy things, 5. And when the camp setteth forward, Aaron shall come, and his sons, and they shall take down the covering-vail, and cover the ark of testimony with it; 6. And shall put thereon the covering of badgers' skins, and shall spread over it a cloth wholly of blue, and shall put in the staves thereof. 7. And upon the table of show-bread they shall spread a cloth of blue, and put thereon the dishes, and the spoons, and the bowls, and covers to cover withal: and the cominical bread shall be thereon. 8. And they shall spread upon them a cloth of scarlet, and cover the same with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put in the staves thereof. 9. And they shall take a cloth of blue, and cover the candlestick of the light, and his lamps, and his tongs, and his snuff-dishes, and all the oil vessels thereof, wherewith they minister unto it: 10. And they shall put it, and all the vessels thereof, within a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put it upon a bar. 11. And upon the golden altar they shall spread a cloth of blue, and cover it with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put to the staves thereof. 12. And they shall take all the instruments of ministry, wherewith they minister in the sanctuary, and put them in a cloth of blue, and cover them with a covering of badgers' skins, and shall put them on a bar. 13. And they shall take away the ashes from the altar, and spread a purple cloth thereon: 14. And they shall put upon it all the vessels thereof, wherewith they minister about it, even the censors, the flesh-hooks, and the shovels, and the basons, all the vessels of the altar: and they shall spread upon it a covering of badgers' skins, and put to the staves of it. 15. And when Aaron and his sons have made an end of covering the sanctuary, and all the vessels of the sanctuary, as the camp is to set forward; after that, the sons of Kohath shall come to bear it: but they shall not touch any holy thing, lest they die. These things are the burden of the sons of Kohath in the tabernacle of the congregation. 16. And to the office of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, pertaineth the oil for the light, and the sweet incense, and the daily meat-offering, and the anointing oil, and the oversight of all the tabernacle, and of all that therein is, in the sanctuary, and in the vessels thereof. 17. And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying, 18. Cut ye off the tribe of the families of the Kohathites from among the Levites: 19. But thus do unto them, that they may live, and not die, when they approach unto the most holy things: Aaron and his sons shall go in, and appoint them every one to his service and to his burden: 20. But they shall not go in to see when the holy things are covered, lest they die.

We have here a second muster of the tribe of Levi. As that tribe was taken out of all Israel to be God's peculiar, so the middle-aged men of this tribe were taken from among the rest to be actually employed in the service of the tabernacle. Now observe,

I. Who were to be taken into this number. All the males from 30 years old to 50. Of the other tribes, those that were numbered to go forth to war, were from 20 years old and upward, but of the Levites, only from 30 to 50; for the service of God requires the best of our strength, and a prime of our time, which cannot be better spent than to the honour of him who is the First and Best. And a man may make a good soldier much sooner than a good minister.

Now, 1. They were not to be employed till they were 30 years old, because, till then, they were in danger of retaining something childish and youthful, and had not gravity enough to do the service, and wear the honour, of a Levite. They were entered as probations, at 25 years old, (ch. 8. 24.) and in David's time, when there was more work to be done, at 20, (1 Chron. 23. 24. and so, Ezra, 3. 8.) but they must be five years learning, and waiting, and so fitting themselves for service; nay, in David's time, they were ten years in preparation, from 20 to 30. John Baptist began his public ministry, at 30 years old; it is not in the letter of it obligatory on gospel-ministers now, as if they must either not begin their work till 30 years old, or must leave it off at 50; but it gives us two good rules, (1.) That ministers must not be novices, 1 Tim. 3. 6. It is a work that requires ripeness of judgment, and great steadiness, and therefore those are very unfit for it who are but babes in knowledge, and have not put away childish things. (2.) That they must learn before they teach, serve before they rule, and must first be proved, 1 Tim. 3. 10. 2. They were discharged at 50 years old from the toilsome part of the service, particularly this of carrying the tabernacle; for that is the special service to which they are here ordained, and which there was most occasion for while they were in the wilderness. When they began to enter upon it, then they were dismissed; (1.) In favor to them, that they might not be over-toiled, when their strength began to decay. Twenty years' good service was thought pretty well for one man. (2.) In honour to the work, that it might not be done by those who, through the infirmities of age, were slow and heavy. The service of God should be done when we are in the most livly active frame. They do not pass off their repentance to old age, and so leave the best work to be done in the worst time.

II. How their work is described. They are said to enter into the host, or warfare, to do the work in the tabernacle. The ministry is, 1. A good work, 1 Tim. 3. 1. Ministers are not ordained to the honour only, but to the labour, not to have the wages, but to do the work. 2. A good warfare, 1 Tim. 6. 12. They that enter into the ministry must lock upon themselves as entered into the host, and approve themselves good soldiers, 2 Tim. 2. 3. Now, as to the sons of Kohath in particular, here is,

[1.] Their service appointed them in the removes of the tabernacle. Afterward, when the tabernacle was fixed, they had other work assigned them: but this was in the manner of the public ministry. Observe, Wherever the camp of Israel went, the tabernacle of the Lord went with them, and care must be taken for the carriage of it. Note, Wherever we go, we must see to it that we take our religion along with us, and not forget that, or any part of it. Now, the Kohathites were to carry all the holy things of the tabernacle. They were charged with those things before, (ch. 3. 31.) but here they have more particular instructions given them.

[2.] All the holy things must be covered; the ark and table with three coverings, all the rest with two. Even the ashes of the altar, in which the holy fire was carefully preserved and raked up, must have a purple cloth spread over them, v. 13. Even the brazen altar, though in the court of the sanctuary it stood open to the view of all, yet was covered in the carriage of it. All these coverings are designed, Ps. 105. For safety, that it might not be ruffled with the wind, sullied with the rain, or tarnished with the sun, but that they might be preserved in their beauty; for all the glory shall be a defense. The covering of badgers' skins, being thick and strong, would keep out wet; and, while we are in our passage through the wildness of this world, it concerns us to be fenced for all weathers, Isa. 44. 23. and the covering of the ark with a veil, Ezek. 24. 6. Most of these things had a cloth of blue, or purple, or scarlet, spread outmost; and the ark was covered with a cloth wholly of blue, v. 6. An emblem (say some) of the azure skies, which are spread like a curtain between us and the Majesty on high, Job. 26. 9. Those that are faithful to God should endeavour likewise to appear beautiful by for men, that they may adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour. Thirdly, For concealment. It signified the darkness of that dispensation. That which is now brought to light by the gospel, and revealed to babes, was then hid from the wise and prudent. They saw only the coverings, not the holy things themselves, (Heb. 10. 1.) but now Christ has destroyed the face of the covering, Isa. 25. 7.

[3.] When all the holy things were covered, then the Kohathites were to carry them on their shoulders. Those things that had staves were carried by their staves, (v. 6, 8, 11, 14,) those that had not were carried upon a bar, or pier, or bearing barrow, v. 10, 12. See how the tokens of God's presence in this world are moveable things; but we look for a kingdom that cannot be moved.

(2.) Eleazar, now the eldest son of Aaron, is appointed Overseer of the Kohathites in this service; (v. 16,) he must take care that nothing was forgot, left behind, or displaced. As a priest, he had more honour than the Levites, but then he had more care; and that care was a heavier burthen, no doubt, upon his heart. He had means to discharge his duties, but it was no light thing to carry them on their shoulders. It is much easier to do the work of the tabernacle than to discharge the trusts of it, to obey than to rule.

(3.) Great care must be taken to preserve the lives of these Levites, by preventing their unseasonable irreverent approach to the most holy things, (v. 18.) Cut ye not off the Kohathites. Note, Those who are over-zealous for the justice of sin, we do what they can to cut them off. [1.] The Kohathites must not see the holy things till the priests had covered them, v. 20. Even they that bore the vessels of the Lord, saw not what they bore; so much were even they in the dark concerning the gospel, whose office it was to expound the law. And, [2.] When the holy things were covered, they who go near them, at least not the ark, carried here the holy thing, upon pain of death, v. 15. Uzza was struck dead for the breach of this law. Thus were the Lord's ministers themselves then kept in fear, and that was a dispensation of terror, as well as darkness; but now, through Christ, the case is altered; we have seen with our eyes, and our hands have handled the word of life, (1 John 1. 1.) and we are encouraged to come boldly to the throne of grace.

21. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 22. Take also the sum of the sons of Gershon, throughout the houses of their fathers, by their families; 23. From thirty years old and upward, until fifty years old, shalt thou number them; all that enter in to perform the service, to do the work in the tabernacle of the congregation. 24. This is the service of the families of the Gershonites, to serve, and for burdens. 25. And they shall bear the curtains of the tabernacle, and the tabernacle of the congregation, his covering, and the covering of the badgers' skins that is above upon it, and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. 26. And the hangings of the court, and the hangings for the door of the gate of the court which is by the tabernacle, and by the altar round about, and their cords, and all the instruments of their service, and all that is made for them: so shall they serve. 27. At the appointment of Aaron and his sons shall be all the service of the sons of the Gershonites, in all their burdens, and in all their service: and ye shall appoint unto them in charge all their burdens. 28. This is the service of the families of the sons of Gershon in the tabernacle of the congregation: and their charge shall be under the hand of Ithamar, the son of Aaron the priest. 29. As for the sons of Merari, thou shalt number them after their families, by the house of their fathers: 30. From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, shalt thou number them, every one that entereth into the service, to do the work of the tabernacle of the congregation. 31. And this is the charge of their burden, according to all their service in the tabernacle of the congregation; the boards of the tabernacle, and the bars thereof, and the pillars thereof, and sockets thereof. 32. And the pillars of the court round about, and their sockets, and their pins, and their cords, with all their instruments, and with all their service; and by name ye shall reckon the instruments of the charge of their burden. 33. This is the service of the families of the sons of Merari, according to all their service in the tabernacle of the congregation, under the hand of Ithamar, the son of Aaron the priest.

We have here the charge of the other two families of the Levites, which, though not so honourable as the first, yet was necessary, and was to be done regularly. 1. The Gershonites were charged with all the drapery of the tabernacle; the curtains, and hangings, and the coverings of badgers' skins, v. 22, 26. Those were to take down, when the cloud removed, and the ark and the rest of the holy things were carried away, to pack up and bring with them, and then to set up again, when the cloud rested. Aaron and his sons allotted to them their respective charge, "You shall take care of such a curtain, and you of such a hanging; that every one may know his work, and there may be no confusion," v. 27. Ithamar particularly was to take the oversight of them, v. 28. 2. The Mekorites were charged with the heavy carriage, the boards and bars, the pillars and sockets, the pins and cords, and those were delivered them, by name, v. 31, 32. An inventory was given them of every particular, that it might be forthcoming, and nothing to seek, when the tabernacle was to be set up again. Though these seemed of less importance than the other things pertaining to the sanctuary, yet there was this care taken of them, to teach us with the greatest exactness to preserve pure and entire all divine institutions; and to take care that nothing be lost. It also intimates the care God takes of his church, and every member of it; the good Shepherd calls his own sheep by name, John 10. 3.

Here were thousands of men employed about these services, though a much less number would have served for the bearing of those burdens; but it was requisite that the tabernacle should be taken down and set up with great expedition, and many hands would in quicker work, especially when every one knew his work. They had tents of their own to take care of, and to take along with them, but the young men under 30, and the old men above 50, might serve for them; nor is there any mention of them, for God's house must always be preferred before our own. Their care was preposterosus, who built and celled their own houses, while God's house lay waste, Hag. 1. 4, 9.

The death of the saints is represented as the taking down of the tabernacle, (2 Cor. 5. 1.) and the putting of it off, 2 Pet. 1. 14. The immortal soul, like the most holy things, is first recovered and taken away, carried by angels unseen, under the inspection of the Lord Jesus, or Eleazar; and care is taken also of the body, the skin and flesh which are as the curtains, the bones and sinews which are as the bars and pillars; none of these shall be lost: commandment is given concerning the bones; a covenant made with the dust; these are in safe custody and shall all be produced in the great day, when this tabernacle shall be set up again, and these vile bodies made like the glorious body of Jesus Christ.

31. And Moses and Aaron, and the chief of the congregation, numbered the sons of the Kohathites, after their families, and after the house of their fathers, 35. From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the service, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation: 36. And those that were numbered of them, by their families, were two thousand seven hundred and fifty. 37. These were they that were numbered of the families of the Kohathites, all that might do service in the tabernacle of the congregation, which Moses and Aaron did number, according to the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses. 38. And those that were numbered of the sons of Gershon, throughout their families, and by the house of their fathers. 39. From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the service, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation, 40. Even those that were numbered of them, throughout their families, by the houses of their fathers, were two thousand and six hundred and thirty. 41. These are they that were numbered of the families of the sons of Gershon, of all that might do service in the tabernacle of the congregation, whom Moses and Aaron did number, according to the commandment of the Lord. 42. And those that were numbered of the families of the sons of Merari, throughout their families, by the house of their fathers. 43. From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, every one that entereth into the service, for the work in the tabernacle of the congregation, 44. Even those that were numbered of them, after their families, were three thousand and two hundred. 45. These be those that were numbered of the families of the sons of Merari, whom Moses and Aaron numbered, according to the word of the Lord by the hand of Moses. 46. All those that were numbered of the Levites, whom Moses and Aaron and the chief of Israel numbered, after their families, and after the house of their fathers, 47. From thirty years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, every one that came to do the service of the ministry, and the service of the burden in the tabernacle of the congregation, 48. Even those that were numbered of them, were eight thousand and five hundred and fourscore. 49. According to the commandment of the Lord they were numbered by the hand of Moses, every one according to his service, and according to his burden: thus were they numbered of him, as the Lord commanded Moses.

We have here a particular account of the numbers of the three families of the Levites respectively, that is, of the effective men, between 30 years old and 50.

Observe. 1. That the Kohathites were, in all, 8,600, from a month old and upward; but of those three thousand and seven hundred to serve in the work, but one part. The Gershonites, in all, 7,500, and of them but 2,630 serviceable men, little more than a third part. Note, Of the many that add to the numbers of the church, there are comparatively but few that contribute to the service of it. So it has been, and so it is; many have a place in the tabernacle that do but little of the work of the tabernacle, Phil. 2. 20, 21.

2. That the Merarites were but 6,200 in all, and yet of these there were 3,200 serviceable men, that is, several more than half. The greatest burthen lay upon that family, the boards, and pillars, and sockets; and God so ordered it, that, though they were the fewest in number, yet they should have the most able men among them; for, whatever service God calls men to, he will furnish them for it, and give strength in proportion to the work, grace sufficient.

3. The whole number of the able men of the tribe of Levi, which entered into God's host to war his warfare, was but 8,580, whereas the able men of the other tribes, that entered into the host of Israel to war their warfare, were many more. The least of the tribes had almost four times as many able men as the Levites, and some of them more than eight times as many; for those that are engaged in the service of this world, and war after the flesh, are many more than those that are devoted to the service of God, and fight the good fight of faith.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter, we have, I. An order, pursuant to the laws already made, for the removing of the unclean out of the camp, v. 1...4. II. A repetition of the laws concerning restitution, in case of wrong done to a neighbour, (v. 5...8.) and concerning the appropriating of the hallowed things to the priests, v. 9, 10. III. A new law made concerning the trial of a wife suspected of adultery by the waters of jealousy, v. 11...31.

1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Command the children of Israel, that they put out of the camp every leper, and every one that hath an issue, and whosoever is defiled by the dead:

3. Both male and female shall ye put out, without the camp shall ye put them; that they defile not their camps, in the midst whereof I dwell. 4. And the children of Israel did so, and put them out without the camp: as the Lord spake unto Moses, so did the children of Israel. 5. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 6. Speak unto the children of Israel; When a man or woman shall commit any sin that men commit, to do a trespass against the Lord, and that person be guilty; 7. Then they shall confess their sin which they have done; and he shall recompense his trespass with the principal thereof, and add unto it the fifth part thereof, and give it unto him against whom he hath trespassed. 8. But if the man have no kinsman to recompense the trespass unto, let the trespass be recompensed unto the Lord, even to the priest; besides the ram of the atonement, whereby an atonement shall be made for him. 9. And every offering of all the holy things of the children of Israel, which they bring unto the priest, shall be his. 10. And every man's hallowed things shall be his: whatsoever any man giveth the priest, it shall be his.

I. A command for the purifying of the camp, by turning out from within its lines all those that were ceremonially unclean, by issues, lepers, or the touch of dead bodies, until they were cleansed according to the law, v. 2, 3. These orders are executed immediately, v. 4. 1. The camp was now newly-modelled and put in order, and therefore, to complete the reformation of it, it is next to be cleansed. Note, The purity of the church must be as carefully consulted and preserved as the peace and order of it. It is requisite, not only that every sinner be converted to his own standard, but that every polluted Israelitish be separated from it. The wisdom from above is first pure, then peaceable. 2. God's tabernacle was now fixed in the midst of their camp, and therefore they must be careful to keep it clean. Note, The greater profession of religion any house or family makes, the more they are obliged to put away iniquity far from the tabernacle, Job 22, 23. The person, the place, in the midst of which God dwells, must not be defiled; for, if it be, he is affronted, offended, and provoked to withdraw; 1 Cor. 3, 16, 17.

This expulsion of the unclean out of the camp was to signify, (1.) What the governors of the church ought to do; they must separate between the precious and the vile, and purge out scandalous persons as old leaven, (1 Cor. 5, 7, 13.) lest others be infected and defiled, Heb. 12, 15. It is for the glory of Christ, and the edification of his church, that those who are openly and incorrigibly profane and vicious should be put out and kept from Christian communion till they repeat. (2.) What God himself will do in the great day; he will thoroughly purge his floor, and gather out of his kingdom all things that offend. As here the unclean were shut out of the camp, so into the new heaven, he useth no unclean thing shall enter, Rev. 21, 27.

II. A law concerning restitution, in case of wrong done to a neighbour. It is called a sin that men commit, (v. 6.) because it is common among men; a sin of man, that is, a sin against man, so it is thought that it shall be translated and understood. A man may not touch or defraud his brother: in any matter, it is to be looked upon as a trespass against the Lord, who is the Protector of right, the Puni er of wrong, and who strictly charges and commands us to do justly. Now, what is to be done when a man's awakened conscience charges him with guilt of this kind, and brings it to his remembrance, though done long ago? 1. He must confess his sin, confess it to God, confess it to the other party, and so take shame to himself. If he have denied it before, though it go against the grain to own himself in a lie, yet he must do it; because his heart was hardened, he denied it, therefore he has no other way of making it appear that his heart is now softened, but by confessing it. 2. He must bring a sacrifice, a ram of atonement, v. 8. Satisfaction must be made for this gift, again, upon any case whatever, as well as for the loss sustained by our neighbour; restitution in that case is not sufficient without faith and repentance. 3. Yet the sacrifices would not be accepted till full amends was made to the party wronged, not only the principal, but a fifth part added to it, v. 7. It is certain, that, while that which is got by injustice is knowingly retained in the hands, the guilt of the injustice remains upon the conscience, and is not expiated by sacrifice or offering, prayers or tears, for it is one and the same continued act of sin persisted in. This law we had before, (Lev. 6, 4.) and it is here added, that, if the party wronged were dead, and he had no near kinsman who was entitled to the debt, or it were any way uncertain to whom the restitution should be made, that should not serve for an excuse to detain what was unjustly gotten; to whomsoever goes it, it is certainly none of his that got it by sin, and therefore it must be given to the priest, v. 8. If there were any that could make out a title to it, it must not be given to the priest; (God hates robbery for burnt-offerings;) but if there were not, then it lapsed to the great Lord, (ob defectum sanguinis— for want of issue,) and the priests were his receivers. Note, Some work of piety or charity is a due and proper return done by those who are conscious to themselves that they have done wrong, but know not how otherwise to make restitution; what is not our property will never be our profit.

III. A general rule concerning hallowed things given upon this occasion, that, whatever was given to the priest, his it shall be, v. 9, 10. 1. He that gave it shall not receive it again. This law ratifies and confirms all grants for pious uses, that people might not give things to the priests in a fit of zeal, and then recall them in a fit of vexation. 2. The other priests shall not come in sharers with that priest who then officiated, and to whom the hallowed thing, whatever it was, was given. Let him that was most ready and diligent in supplying the better laws, if he do the work, let him have the pay, and much good may it do him.

11. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 12. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, If any man's wife go aside, and commit a trespass against him, 13. And a man lie with her carnally, and it be hid from the eyes of her husband, and be kept close, and she be defiled, and there be no witness against her, neither she taken with the manner. 14. And the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be defiled: or if the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be not defiled; 15. Then shall the man bring his wife unto the priest, and he shall bring her offering for her, the tenth part of an ephah of barley meal; he shall pour no oil upon it, nor put frankincense thereon; for it is an offering of jealousy, an offering of memorial, bringing iniquity to remembrance. 16. And the priest shall bring her near, and set her before the Lord: 17. And the priest shall take holy water in an earthen vessel; and of the dust that is in the floor of the tabernacle the priest shall take, and put it into the water: 18. And the priest shall set the woman before the Lord, and uncover the woman’s head, and put the offering of memorial in her hands, which is the jealousy-offering: and the priest shall have in his hand the bitter water that causeth the curse. 19. And the priest shall charge her by an oath, and say, unto the woman, If no man have lain with thee, and if thou hast not gone aside to uncleanness with another instead of thy husband, be thou free from this bitter water that causeth the curse: 20. But if thou hast gone aside to another instead of thy husband, and if thou be defiled, and some man hath lain with thee besides thine husband; 21. Then the priest shall charge the woman with an oath of cursing; and the priest shall say unto the woman, the Lord make thee a curse and an oath among thy people, when the Lord doth make thy thigh to rot, and thy belly to swell: 22. And this water that causeth the curse shall go into thy bowels, to make thy belly to swell, and thy thigh to rot. And the woman shall say, Amen, amen. 23. And the priest shall write these curses in a book, and he shall blot them out with the bitter water: 24. And he shall cause the woman to drink the bitter water that causeth the curse: and the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her and become bitter. 25. Then the priest shall take the jealousy-offering out of the woman’s hand, and shall wave the offering before the Lord, and offer it upon the altar: 26. And the priest shall take a handful of the offering, even the memorial thereof, and burn it upon the altar, and afterward shall cause the woman to drink the water. 27. And when he hath made her to drink the water, then it shall come to pass, that if she be defiled, and have done trespass against her husband, that the water that causeth the curse shall enter into her, and become bitter, and her belly shall swell, and her thigh shall rot: and the woman shall be a curse among her people. 28. And if the woman be not defiled, but be clean; then she shall be free, and shall conceive seed. 29. This is the law of jealousies, when a wife goeth aside to another instead of her husband, and is defiled; 30. Or when the spirit of jealousy cometh upon him, and he be jealous over his wife, and shall set the woman before the Lord, and the priest shall execute upon her all this law; 31. Then shall the man be guiltless from iniquity, and this woman shall bear her iniquity.

We have here the law concerning the solemn trial of a wife whose husband was jealous of her. Observe, 1. What was the case supposed, That a man had some reason to suspect his wife to have committed adultery, v. 12. 14. Here, 1. The sin of adultery is justly represented as an exceedingly sinful sin; it is going aside from God and virtue, and the good way, Prov. 2. 17. It is committing a trespass against the husband, robbing him of his honour, alienating his right, introducing a spurious brood into his family, to share with his children in his estate, and violating her covenant with him. It is being defiled, for nothing pollutes the mind and conscience of a man more than defilement. It is supposed to be a sin which great care is taken to hide from the sinners to conceal; which there is no witness of; the eye of the adulterer waits for the twilight, Job 24. 15. And the adulteress takes her opportunity when the good man is not at home, Prov. 7. 19. It would not covet to be secret, if it were not shameful, and the Devil, who draws sinners to this sin, teaches them how to cover it. 3. The spirit of jealousy is supposed to come upon the husband, of which Solomon says, It is the rage of a man, (Prov. 6. 34.) and that it is cruel as the grave, Cant. 8. 6. 4. “Yet” (say the Jewish writers) “he must make it appear that he has some just cause for the suspicion.” The rule they give is, “If the husband have said unto his wife, before witnesses, ‘Be not thou in secret with such a man,’ and, notwithstanding that admonition, it is afterward proved that he was in secret with that man, through her father or her brother, then he may compel her to drink the bitter water.” But the law here does not tie him to that particular method of proving the just cause of his suspicion; it might be otherwise proved. In case it could be proved that she had committed adultery, she was to be put to death, (Lev. 20. 10.) but if it was uncertain, then this law took place. From hence, (L.) Let all husbands be admonished not to give any the least occasion for the suspicion of their chastity; it is not enough that they abstain from the evil of uncleanness, but they must abstain from all appearance of it, from every thing that looks like it, or leads to it, or may give the least umbrage to jealousy; for how great a matter may a little fire kindle! (2.) Let all husbands be admonished not to entertain any causeless or unjust suspicions of their wives. Charity is repented, and much more, conjugal affection, teaches to think no evil, 1 Cor. 13. 5. It is the happiness of the virtuous woman that the heart of her husband doth safety trust in her, Prov. 31. 11. 11. What was the course prescribed in this case; 1. That, if the suspected wife was innocent, she might not continue under the reproach and uncleanliness of her husband’s jealousy. For, (v. 2.) That, if she was guilty, her sin might find her out, and others might hear, and fear, and take warning. Now, the process of the trial must be thus:
(1.) Her husband must bring her to the priest, with the witnesses that could prove the ground of her suspicion, and desire that she might be put upon her trial. The Jews say that the priest was first to endeavour to persuade her to confess the truth, saying to this purpose, "Dear daughter, why hast thou wastaken over by drinking wine, or wastcarried away by the heat of youth or the examples of bad neighbours; come, confess the truth, for the sake of his great name which is described in the most sacred ceremony, and do not let it be blotted out with the bitter water." If she confessed, saying, "I am defiled," she was not put to death, but was divorced, and lost all property; if she said, "I have not sinned," she was proceeded.

(2.) He must bring a coarse offering of barley-meal, without oil or frankincense, agreeably to the present afflicted state of his family; for a great affliction it was, either to have cause to be jealous, or to be jealous without cause. It is an offering of memorial, to signify that what was to be done was intended as a religious appeal to the omniscience and justice of God.

(3.) The priest was to prepare the water of jealousy; the holy water out of the laver, at which the priests were to wash when they ministered; this must be brought in an earthen vessel, containing (they say) about a pint; and it must be an earthen vessel, because the coarser and plainer every thing was, the more agreeable it was to the occasion. Dust must be put into the water, to signify the approach she way under, and the shame she ought to take to herself, putting her month in the dust; but dust from the floor of the tabernacle, to put an honour upon every thing that pertained to the place God had chosen to put his name there, and to keep up in the people a reverence for it: see John 8. 6.

(4.) The woman was to be set before the Lord, at the east gate of the temple-court, (say the Jews,) and her head was to be uncovered, in token of her sorrowful condition, and there she stood for a spectacle to the world, that other women might learn not to do after her lewdness, Ezek. 23. 48. Only the Jews say, "Her own servants were not to be present, that she might not seem vile in their sight, who were to give honour to her; her husband also must be dismissed."

(5.) To this was to adjure her to tell the truth, and to denounce the curse of God against her if she was guilty, and to declare what would be the effect of her drinking the water of je lousy, v. 19., 22. He must assure her, that, if she was innocent, the water would do her no harm, v. 19. None need fear the curse of the law, if they have not broken the commands of the law. But, if she was guilty, this water would be poison to her, it would make her belly to swell, and her thigh to sink, and she should be a curse or abomination among her people, v. 21., 22. To this she must say Amen, as Israel must do to the curses pronounced on mount Ebal, Deut. 27. 26. Some think the Amen, being doubled, respects both parts of the adjuration, both that which freed her if innocent, and that which condemned her if guilty. No woman, if she was guilty, this water would be poison to her; if she swore to it, she denied the truth of God, or defied his justice, and was come to such a pitch of impudence and hard-heartedness in sin, as to challenge God Almighty to do his worst, and choose rather to venture upon his curse than to give him glory by making confession; thus has whom sometaken away the heart.

(6.) The priest must write this curse in a script or scroll of parchment, verbatim-word for word, as he had expressed it, and then to wipe or scrape off what he had written into the water, (v. 23.) to signify that it was that curse which impregnated the water, and gave it its strength to effect what was intended. It signified, that, if she was innocent, the curse should be blotted out, and never appear against her, as it is written, (Isa. 48. 25.) I am he that bloteth out the names of the wicked (Ps. 51. 9.) Blot out mine iniquities. But that, if she was guilty, the curse, as it was written, being infused into the water, it would enter into her bowels with the water, even like oil into her bones, (Ps. 109. 18.) as we read of a curse entering into a house, Zech. 5. 4.

(7.) The woman must then drink the water; (v. 24.) it is called the bitter water, some think, because they put poison into it to make it bitter, or rather, because it caused the curse. Thus, sin is called an evil thing and a bitter, for the same reason, because it causeth the curse, Jer. 2. 19. If she had been guilty, (and otherwise it did not cause the curse,) she was made to know, that, though her stolen waters had been sweet, and her bread eaten in secret pleasant, yet the end was bitter as wormwood, Prov. 9. 17. and ch. 5. 4. Let all that meddle with forbidden pleasures know that they will be bitterness in the latter end. The Jews say, that if, upon denouncing the curses, the woman was so terrified that she durst not drink the water, but confessed that she was defiled, the priest flung down the water, and cast her offering among the ashes, and she was divorced without dowry: if she confessed not, and yet would not drink, they forced her to it; and if she was ready to throw it up again, they hustened her away, that she might not pollute the holy place.

(8.) Before she drank the water, the jealous offering was waved and offered upon the altar; (v. 25, 26.) a handful of it was burnt for a memorial, and the remainder of it eaten by the priest, unless the husband was a priest, and then it was scattered among the people. The offering, in the midst of the transaction, signified that the whole was an appeal to God, as a God that knows all things, and from whom no secret is hid. Lastly, All things being thus performed according to the law, they were to wait the issue. The water, with a little dust put into it, and the scriptures of a written parchment, had no natural tendency at all to do either good or hurt; but, if God thought it for his glory to do so, they were to work the miracle, and to call him by his name, the four and twenty elders in the Apocalypse. He had set his sign for these who believed on him to come by this ordinance, though otherwise the innocent might have continued under suspicion, and the guilty undiscovered, yet God would so far own his institution, as that, in a little time, by the miraculous operation of Providence, the innocency of the innocent should be cleared, and the sin of the guilty should find them out.

1. If the suspected woman was really guilty, the water she drank would be poison to her, (v. 37.) her belly would swell, and her thigh rot by a vile disease for vile deserts, and she would mourn at the last, when her flesh and body are consumed, Prov. 5. 11. Bishop Patrick says, from some of the Jewish writers, that the effect of these waters appeared immediately; she grew pale, and her eyes ready to start out of her head. Dr. Lightfoot says, that somewhat it appeared not for two or three years, but she bare no children, was sickly, languished, and rotted at last; it is probable that some indications appeared immediately. The rabbins say, that the adulterer also died in the same day and hour that the adulteress did, and in the same manner too; that his belly swelled, and his secret parts rotted; a disease, perhaps, not much unlike that which, in the latter ages, the avenging hand of a righteous God has made the scourge of uncleanness, and in which whores and whoremongers infect, and plague, and ruin, one another, since they escape punishment from men. The Jewish doctors add, that the waters had this effect upon the adulteress only in case the husband had never offended in the same kind; but that, if he had at any time defiled the marriage-bed, God did not thus right him against his injurious wife; and that, therefore, in the latter and degenerate ages of the Jewish church, when sin was generally dispersed and laid aside: men, knowing their own crimes, were content not to know their wives' crimes. And to this, perhaps, may refer the threatening, (Hos. 4. 14.) I will not punish your spouses when they commit adultery, for yourselves are separated with whores.

2. If she was innocent, the water she drank would be physic to her; (v. 29.) She shall be free, and shall conceive seed. The Jewish writers magnify the good effects of this water to the innocent woman; that, to compensate her for the wrong done to her by the suspicion, she should, after the drinking of these waters, be stronger, and look better, than ever; if she was sickly, she should become healthful, should bear a man-child, and have easy labour.

From the whole we may learn, (1.) That secret sins are known to God, and sometimes are strangely brought to light in this life; however, there is a day coming when God will, by Jesus Christ, as here by the priest, judge the secrets of men according to the gospel, Rom. 2. 16. (2.) That, in particular, Whoremongers and adulterers God will judge. The violation of conjugal faith and chastity is highly provoking to the God of heaven, and sooner or later it will be reckoned for. Though we have not now the waters of jealousy to be a sensible terror to the unclean, yet we have a word from God, which ought to be as great a terror, that, if any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy, 1 Cor. 3. 17. (3.) That God will find out some way or other to clear the innocence of the innocent, and to bring forth their righteousness as the light. (4.) That to the pure all things are pure, but to the defiled nothing is so, Tit. 1. 15. The same word is to some a savour of life unto life, to others a savour of death unto death; like those waters of jealousy, according as they receive it; the same providence is for good to some, and for hurt to others, Jer. 24. 5, 8, 9. And, whatsoever it is intended for, it shall not return void.

CHAP. VI.

In this chapter, we have, 1. The law concerning Nazarites. 1. What it was which the vow of a Nazarite obliged him to, v. 1. 8. 2. A remedial law, in case a Nazarite happened to be polluted by the touch of a dead body, v. 9. 12. 3. The solemnity of his discharge when his time was up; his vow was done, this way of trial was generally disused and laid aside: men, knowing their own crimes, were content not to know their wives' crimes. And to this, perhaps, may refer the threatening, (Hos. 4. 14.) I will not punish your spouses when they commit adultery, for yourselves are separated with whores.

4. All the days of his separation shall he eat nothing that is made of the vine-tree, from the kernels even to the husk.

5. All the days of the vow of his separation there shall no razor come upon his head: until the days be fulfilled, in the which he separateth himself unto the Lord, he shall be holy, and shall let the locks of the hair of his head grow. 6. All the days that he separateth himself unto the Lord he shall come at no dead body. 7. He shall not make himself unclean for his father, or for his mother, for his brother, or for his sister, when they die; because the consecration of his God is upon his head. 8. All the days of his separation he is holy unto the Lord. 9. And if any man die very suddenly by him, and he hath defiled the head of his consecration; then he shall shave his head in the day of his cleansing, on the seventh day he shall shave it. 10. And on the eighth day he shall bring two turtles, or two young pigeons, to the priest, to the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: 11. And the priest shall offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, and make an atonement for him, for that he sinned by the dead, and shall hallow his head that same day. 12. And he shall consecrate unto the Lord the days of his separation, and shall bring a lamb of the first year for a trespass-offering; but the days that were before shall be lost, because his separation was defiled. 13. And this is the law of the Nazarite, when the days of his separation are fulfilled: he shall be brought unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; 14. And he shall offer his offering unto the Lord, one he-lamb of the first year without blemish for a burnt-offering, and one ewe-lamb of the first year without blemish for a sin-offering, and one ram without blemish for peace-offerings, 15. And a basket of unleavened bread, cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, and wafers of unleavened bread anointed with oil, and their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings. 16. And the priest shall bring them before the Lord, and shall offer his sin-offering, and his burnt-offering. 17. And he shall offer the ram for a sacrifice of peace-offerings unto the Lord, with the basket of unleavened bread: the priest shall offer also his meat-offering, and his drink-offering. 18. And the Nazarite shall shave the head of his separation at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation; and shall take the hair of the head of his separation, and put it in the fire which is under the sacrifice of the peace-offerings. 19. And the priest shall take the sodden shoulder of the ram, and one unleavened cake out of the basket, and one unleavened wafer, and shall put them upon the hands of the Nazarite, after the hair of his separation is shaven: 20. And the priest shall wave them for a wave-offering before the Lord: this is holy for the priest, with the wave-breast and heave-shouder: and after that the Nazarite may drink wine. 21. This is the law of the Nazarite who hath vowed, and of his offering unto the Lord for his separation, besides that that his hand shall get: according to the vow which he vowed, so he must do after the law of his separation.

After the law for the discovery and shame of those that by sin had made themselves vile, fitly follows this for the direction and encouragement of those that by their eminent piety and devotion, had made themselves honourable, and distinguished themselves from their neighbours. It is very probable that there were those, before the making of this law, who went under the character of Nazarites, and were celebrated by that title, as persons professing greater strictness and zeal in religion than other people, for the vow of a Nazarite is spoken of here as a thing in general practised, and the obligation of it is reduced to a greater certainty than hitherto it had been. Joseph is called a Nazarite among his brethren, (Gen. 49. 26.) not only because separate from them, but because eminent among them. Observe,

1. The general character of a Nazarite; it is a person separated unto the Lord, v. 2. Some were Nazarites for life, either by divine designation, as Samson, (Judg. 13. 5.) and John Baptist, (Luke 1. 15.) or by their parents' vow concerning them, as Samuel, 1 Sam. 1. 11. Of these this law speaks not. Others were so for a certain time, and by their own voluntary engagement, and concerning them rules are given by this law. A woman might bind herself with the vow of a Nazarite, under the limitations we find, ch. 30. 3, where the vow which the woman is supposed to vow unto the Lord seems to be meant especially of this vow. The Nazarites were, 1. Devoted to the Lord during the time of their Nazaritish, and, it is probable, spent much of their time in the study of the law, in acts of devotion, and instructing others. An air of piety was therefore put upon them, and upon their whole conversation. They were separated from common persons and common things. Those that are consecrated to God must not be conformed to this world. They distinguished themselves, not from others, but from what they themselves were before and after. 3. They separated themselves by vowing a vow; every Israelite was bound by the divine law to love God with all his heart, but the Nazarites by their own act and deed bound themselves to some religious observances, as fruits and expressions of that love, which other Israelites were not bound to. There was a general prohibition of all drink to the Nazarites, but he was no Nazarite according to this law, he drank wine, and touched dead bodies, yet in him this type had its accomplishment, for in him all purity and perfection met; and every true Christian is a spiritual Nazarite separated by vow unto the Lord. We find St. Paul, by the persuasion of his friends, in complaisance to the Jews, submitting to this law of the Nazarites; but, at the same time, it is declared that the Gentiles should observe no such thing, Acts 21. 24, 25. It was looked upon as a great honour to be a Nazarite, therefore, if a man speak of it as a punishment, saying, for instance, "I will be a Nazarite rather than do so or so," he is, (say the Jews) a wicked man; but he that vows unto the Lord in the way of holiness to be a Nazarite, lo, the crown of his God is upon his head.

II. The particular obligations that the Nazarites law; under, that the families of superstition may not multiply their restrictions needless, God himself lays down the law for them, and gives them the rule of their profession.

1. They must have nothing to do with the fruit of the vine, v. 3, 4. They must drink no wine nor strong drink, nor eat grapes, no not the kernel of the husk; they might not so much as eat a raisin. The learned Dr. Lightfoot has conjecture (Hor. Heb. in Luc. 1. 15.) that, as the ceremonial pollutions, by leprosy and otherwise, represented the sinful state of fallen man, so the institution of the order of Nazarites was designed to represent the pure and perfect state of man in innocence; and that the tree of knowledge, forbidden to Adam, was the vine, and for that season it was forbidden to the Nazarites, and all the produce of it. They who gave the Nazarites peculiar laws were the three fathers of the church, (Amos 2. 12.) persuading them to that forbidden fruit. That it was reckoned a perfection and praise not to drink wine, appears from the instance of the Rechabites, Jer. 35. 6. They were to drink no wine: (1.) That they may be examples of temperance and mortification. Those that separate themselves to God and to his honour must not gratify the desires of the body, but they must deny it, and bring it into subjection. Drinking a little wine, the stomach's sake is allowed, to help that, 1 Tim. 5. 23. But drinking much wine for the palate's sake, to please that, does by no means become those who profess to walk not after the flesh, but after the Spirit. (2.) That they might be qualified to employ themselves in the service of God. They must not drink, lest they forget the law, (Prov. 31. 3.) lest they should be a burden to the church, which he charged them to be. Let all Christians oblige themselves to be very moderate in the use of wine and strong drink; for if the love of these once get the mastery of a man, he becomes a very easy prey to Satan. It is observable, that, because they were to drink no wine, (which was the thing mainly intended,) they were to eat nothing that came of the vine, to teach us with the utmost care and caution to avoid sin, and every thing that borders upon it, and leads to it, or may be a temptation to us. Abstain from all appearance of evil, 1 Thess. 5. 22.

2. They must not cut their hair, v. 5. They must neither pull their heads, nor shave their beards; this was that mark of Samson's Nazaritish, which we often read of in his story. Now, (1.) This signified a noble neglect of the body and the ease and elegance of life, of which he speaks, 2 Sam. 19. 24. (2.) Some observe, that long hair is spoken of as a badge of superstition, 1 Cor. 11. 5, &c. So that the long hair of the Nazarites, when it was put off, was a sign of the rejection of the subjection to God, and their putting themselves under his dominion. (3.) By this they were known to all that met them to be Nazarites, and so it commanded respect. It made them look great without art; it was nature's crown to the head, and a testy mony for them that they had preserved their purity.
For, if they had been defiled, their hair must have been cut, v. 9. See Jer. 7. 29.

3. They must not come near any dead body, v. 6, 7. Others might touch dead bodies, and contracted only a ceremonial pollution; but for some reason, some must do it, else the dead must be unburied, but the Nazarites must not do it, upon pain of forfeiting all the honour of their Nazariteship. They must not attend the funeral of any relation, no father or mother, any more than the high priest himself, because the consecration of his God is upon his head. Those that separate themselves to God must learn, (1.) To distinguish themselves, and do more than others, in all things that concern him. To separate themselves from all profane works, and not to touch the unclean thing. The greater profession of religion we make, and the more eminent we appear, the greater care must we take to avoid all sin, for we have so much the more honour to lose by it. (3.) To moderate their affections even to their near relations, so as not to let their sorrow for the loss of them break in upon their joy in God, and submission to his will. See Matt. 8. 21, 22.

4. All the days of their separation they must be holy to the Lord, v. 8. This was the meaning of those external observances, and without this they were of no account. The Nazarites must be devoted to God, employed for him, and their minds intent upon him; they must keep themselves pure in heart and life, and be in every thing conformable to the divine image and will; this is to be holy, this is to be consecrated to God.

III. The provision that was made for the cleaning of a Nazarite, if he happened unavoidably to contract a ceremonial pollution by the touch of a dead body. No penalty is ordered by this law for the wilful breach of the foregoing laws, for it was not supposed that a man, who had so much religion as to make that vow, could have so little sense as to imagine it presumptuously; nor could it be supposed that he should drink wine, or have his hair cut, but by his own fault; but purely by the providence of God, without any fault of his own, he might be near a dead body, and that is the case put, v. 9. If a man die very suddenly by him, he has defiled the head of his consecration. Note, Death sometimes takes men away very suddenly, and without any previous warning. A man might die, his hair might also be cut, and death did also carry with it a more careful Nazarite could not avoid being polluted by the dead body; so short a step is it sometimes, and so soon taken, from time to eternity. God prepare us for sudden death.

In this case, 1. He must be purified from the ceremonial pollution he had contracted, as others must, upon the seventh day, v. 9. Nay, more was required for the purifying of the Nazarite than of any other person that had touched a dead body; he must bring a sin-offering and a burnt-offering, and an atonement must be made for him, v. 10, 11. This teaches us, that sins of infirmity, and the faults we are overtaken in by surprise, must be seriously repented of, and that an application must be made of the virtue of Christ's sacrifice to our souls for the forgiveness of them every day, 1 John ii. 1, 2. For that is a wonderful thing, if those who make an eminent profession of religion, do any thing to sully the reputation of their profession, more is expected from them than others, for the retrieving both of their peace and of their credit. 2. He must begin the days of his separation again; for all that were past before his pollution, though coming ever so near the period of his time set, were lost, and not reckoned to the days of his separation, if, by remaining uncleaned, they be very careful not to defile themselves by the dead, for that was the only thing that made them lose their time, and it teaches us, that if a righteous man turn away from his righteousness, and defile himself with dead works, all his righteousness that he has done shall be lost to him, Ezek. 33. 13. It is a lesse, in vain, if he do not persevere, Gal. 3. 4. He must begin again, and do his first works.

IV. This law for the solemn discharge of a Nazarite from his vow, when he had completed the time he fixed to himself; before the expiration of that term he could not be discharged; before he vowed, it was in his own power, but it was too late after the vow to make inquiry; the Jews say, that the time of a Nazarite's vow could not be less than thirty days; and if a man said, I will be a Nazarite but for two days; yet he was bound for thirty; but it was the common form of prayers for forgiveness, Acts 21. 27. Or rather, then he observed the ceremony of finishing that vow of Nazariteism, from which, being at a distance from the temple, he had discharged himself some years before at Chenchrea, only by the ceremony of cutting his hair, Acts 18. 18.

When the time of the vowed separation was out, he was to be made free, 1. Publicly, at the door of the tabernacle, (v. 13.) that all might take notice of the finishing of his vow, and none might be offended, if they saw him now drink wine, who had so lately refused. 2. It was to be done with sacrifices, v. 14. Lest he should think that by this eminent piece of devotion he had made God a Deutor to him, he is appointed, even when he had finished his vow, to bring an offering; and when we have done our utmost in duty to God, still we must own ourselves behind-hand with him. He must bring one of each sort of the instituted offerings. (1.) A burnt-offering, as an acknowledgment of God's sovereign dominion over him and all he had, still, notwithstanding his discharge from this particular vow. (2.) A sin-offering. This, though mentioned second, (v. 14.) yet seems to have been ordered before the burnt-offering, as a mark of respect for our sins, before any of our sacrifices can be accepted. And it is very observable, that even the Nazarite, that in the eye of men was purer than snow, and whiter than milk, yet durst not appear before the holy God without a sin-offering. Though he had fulfilled the vow of his separation without any pollution, yet he must bring a sacrifice for sin; and if he had neglected to offer it, the sin committed from the omission of it would not be imputed to him, as it would be to others; but it would be imputed to his own conscience. We should feel convinced of our sinfulness, even in their best works; some good emitted, and some ill admitted, which, if we were dealt with in strict justice, would be our ruin; and in consequence of which it is necessary for us to receive the atonement, and plead it as our righteousness before God. (3.) A peace-offering, in thankfulness to God, who had enabled him to fulfil his vow, and in supplication to God for grace to preserve him from over doing anything unbecoming one that had been once a Nazarite; remembering, that though he was now freed from the bonds of his vow, he still remained under the bonds of the divine law.

(4.) To those were added the meat-offerings, and drink-offerings, according to the manner, (v. 15, 17.) for these always accompanied the burnt-offerings and peace-offerings; and, besides those, a basket of unleavened bread and wafers. (5.) Part of the peace-offering, with a cake and wafer, was to be waved for a wave-offering: (v. 19, 20.) and this was a gratuity to the priest, who had it for his pains, after it had been first presented to God. (6.) Besides all this, he might bring his free-will offerings, such as his hand shall get, v. 21. More than this he might bring, but not less. And to grace the solemnity, it was observed upon this occasion to have their friends to be at charges with them, Acts 21. 24. Lastly, One ceremony more was appointed, which was like the cancelling of the bond when the condition is performed, and that was the cutting off his hair; which had been suffered to grow all the time of his being a Nazarite, and burning it in the fire over which the peace-offerings were boiling, v.
18. This intimated that his full performance of his vow was acceptable to God in Christ the great Sacrifice, and not otherwise. Learn hence to vow and pray to the Lord our God, for he has no pleasure in fools.

22. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 23. Speak unto Aaron, and unto his sons, saying, On this wise ye shall bless the children of Israel, saying unto them, 24. The Lord bless thee, and keep thee; 25. The Lord make his face shine upon thee, and be gracious unto thee; 26. The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee, and give thee courage. 27. And they shall put my name upon the children of Israel, and I will bless them.

Here,
1. The priests, among other good offices which they were to do, are appointed solemnly to bless the people in the name of the Lord, v. 23. It was part of their work, Deut. 21. 5. Hereby God put an honour upon the priests, for the less is blessed of the better; and hereby he gave great comfort and satisfaction to the people. He who looked upon the priest as God's mouth to them. Though the priest of himself could do no more than beg a blessing, yet being an intercessor by office, and doing that in His name who commands the blessing, the prayer carried with it a promise, and he pronounced it as one having authority, with his hands lifted up, and his face toward the people. Now, (1.) This was a type of Christ's erudion into the world, which was to bless us, (Acts 3. 26.) as the High Priest of our profession. The last thing he did on earth was, 50. 51. The learned Bishop Pierson observes it as a tradition of the Jews, that the priests blessed the people only at the close of the morning-sacrifice, not of the evening-sacrifice, to show (says he) that in the last days, the days of the Messiah, which are (cf it were) the evening of the world, the benediction of the law should cease, and the blessing of Christ should take place. (2.) It was a pattern to gospel-ministers, the masters of assemblies, who are in like manner to dismiss their solemn assemblies with a blessing. The same that are God's mouth to his people, to teach and command them, are his mouth like-wise to bless them; and they that receive the law shall receive the blessing. The Hebrew doctors warn the people that they say not, "What avails the blessing of this poor simple priest?"
"For," say they, "the receiving of the blessing depends, not on the priest, but on the holy blessed God."

2. A form of blessing is here prescribed them in their other devotions; but this being God's command concerning benediction, that it might not look like any thing of their own, he puts the very words in their mouths, v. 24-26. Where observe, (1.)
That the blessing is commanded upon each particular person, The Lord bless thee. They must each of them prepare themselves to receive the blessing, and then they should find enough in it to make them every man happy; Blessed shalt thou be, Deut. 28. 3. If we take the law to ourselves, we may take the blessing to ourselves, as if our names were inscribed, (2.) That the name Jehovah is three times repeated in it, and (as the critics observe) each with a different accent, in the original:
the Jews themselves think there is some mystery, and we know what it is, the New Testament having explained it, which directs us to expect the blessing from the grace of our Lord Jesus Christ, the love of the Father, and the communion of the Holy Ghost, each of which persons is Jehovah, and yet they are not three Lords, but one Lord. 2 Cor. 13. 14. (3.) That the favour of God is all in this blessing, for that is the fountain of all good.

[1.] The Lord bless thee! Our blessing God is only our speaking well of him, his blessing us is doing well for us; those whom he blesses are blessed indeed. [2.] The Lord make his face shine upon thee! Alluding to the shining of the sun upon the earth, to emblem the manifestation of the face of God. "The Lord love thee, and make thee to know that he loves thee." We cannot but be happy if we have God's love; and we cannot but be easy, if we know that we have it. [3.] The Lord lift up his countenance upon thee! This is to the same purpose with the former, and it seems to allude to the smiles of a father upon his child, or to a man upon his friend, whom he takes pleasure in.
If God give us the assurances of his special favour and his acceptance of us, that will inst lessness into the heart, Ps. 4. 7, 8. (4.) That the fruits of this favour, conveyed by this blessing, are, protection, pardon, and peace. [1.] Protection from evil, v. 24. The Lord keep thee, for it is he that keeps Israel, and neither slumber nor sleeps, Ps.
121. 4. And all believers are kept by the power of God. [2.] Pardon, v. 25. The Lord be cluded all the blessings they could procure upon them, to mark them for God's peculiar, the people of his choice and love. God's name upon them was their honour, their comfort, their safety, their plea;
We are called by thy name, leave us not. It is added, and I will bless them. Note, A divine bless-ging goes along with divine institutions, and puts virtue and efficacy into them. What Christ says of the peace, is true of the blessing; when God's mi-to give his people, the blessing pronounces him the mother of the congregation," if the sums of peace and heirs of blessing be there, the peace, the blessing, shall rest upon them, Luke 16.
5, 6. For in every place where God records his name, he will meet his people and bless them.

CHAP. VII.

God having set up house (as it were) in the midst of the camp of Israel, the princes of Israel here came a visiting with their presents, as tenants to their Landlord, in the name of their respective tribes. They brought presents, P. Upon the dedication of the tabernacle, for the service of that, v. 1. For as they entered the house of the congregation, for the use of that, v. 10. 18. And, III. God graciously signified his acceptance of what was done, v. 88. The two foregoing chapters were the records of additional laws which God gave to Israel, this is the history of the additional services which Israel performed to God.

1. And it came to pass on the day that Moses had fully set up the tabernaacle, and had anointed it, and sanctified it, and all the instruments thereof, both the altar and all the vessels thereof, and had anointed them, and sanctified them.
That the princes of Israel, heads of the house of their fathers, who were the princes of the tribes, and were over them that were

3. And they brought their offering before the Lord, six covered waggons, and twelve oxen; a wagg on for two of the princes, and for each one an ox: and they brought them before the tabernacle. 4. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Take it of them, that they may be to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation; and thou shalt give them unto the Levites, to every man according to his service. 6. And Moses took the waggons and the oxen, and gave them unto the Levites. 7. Two waggons and four oxen he gave unto the sons of Gershon, according to their service: 8. And four waggons and eight oxen he gave unto the sons of Merari, according unto their service, under the hand of Ithamar, the son of Aaron the priest. 9. But unto the sons of Kohath he gave none; because the service of the sanctuary belonging unto them was, that they should bear upon their shoulders.

Here is the offering of the princes to the service of the tabernacle. Observe, 1. When it was; not till it was fully set up, v. 1. When all things were done, both about the tabernacle itself, and the camp of Israel which surrounded it, according to the directions given, then they began their presents; probably, about the eighth day of the second month. Note, Necessary observances must always take place of freewill-offering, first these, and then these. 2. Who they were that offered; The princes of Israel, heads of the house of their fathers, v. 2. Note, Those that are above others in power and dignity, ought to go before others, and endeavour to go beyond them, in every thing that is good. The more any are advanced, the more is expected from them, for the greater opportunity they have of serving God and their generation. What the wealth and power of the world can never enable a man to do, much the more can the world? 3. What they offered; six waggons, with each of them a yoke of oxen to draw them, v. 3. Doubtless, these waggons were agreeable to the rest of the furniture of the tabernacle and its appurtenances, the best of the kind, like the carriages which great princes use, when they go in procession. Some think that God, by Moses, intimated to them, what they should bring; or their own consideration perhaps suggested to them to make this present. Though God's wisdom had ordained all the essentials of the tabernacle, yet it seems these accidental conveniences were left to be provided by their own discretion, which was to set in order that which was wanting, (Tit. 1. 5.) and these waggons were not refused, though no part of them were shown to Moses in the mount. Note, It must not be expected that the divine institution of ordinances should descend to all those circumstances which are determinable, and are fit to be left alterable, by human prudence, that wisdom which is profitable to direct. Observe, No sooner is the tabernacle fully set up, than this provision is made for the removal of it. Note, Even when we are but just settled in the world, and think we are beginning to take root, we must be preparing for changes and removes, especially for the great change. When we are here in this world, everything must be accommodated to a militant and moveable state.
of Issachar, did offer: 19. He offered for his offering one silver charger, the weight whereof was a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering: 20. One spoon of gold of ten shekels, full of incense: 21. One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: 22. One kid of the goats for a sin-offering: 23. And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Nethaneel, the son of Zuar. 24. On the third day Eliab, the son of Helon, prince of the children of Zebulun, did offer: 25. His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering: 26. One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense: 27. One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: 28. One kid of the goats for a sin-offering: 29. And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Eliab, the son of Helon. 30. On the fourth day Elizur, the son of Shedeur, prince of the children of Reuben, did offer: 31. His offering was one silver charger of a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering: 32. One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense: 33. One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: 34. One kid of the goats for a sin-offering: 35. And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Elizur, the son of Shedeur. 36. On the fifth day Shelumiel the son of Zuri- shaddai, prince of the children of Simeon, did offer: 37. His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering: 38. One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense: 39. One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: 40. One kid of the goats for a sin-offering: 41. And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Shelumiel, the son of Zurishaddai. 42. On the sixth day Eliashaph, the son of Deuel, prince of the children of Gad, offered: 43. His offering was one silver charger, the weight of a hundred and thirty shekels, a silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering: 44. One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense: 45. One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: 46. One kid of the goats for a sin-offering: 47. And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Eliashaph, the son of Deuel. 48. On the seventh day Eliasaph, the son of Ammihud, prince of the children of Ephraim, offered: 49. His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering: 50. One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense: 51. One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: 52. One kid of the goats for a sin-offering: 53. And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Eliasaph, the son of Ammihud. 54. On the eighth day offered Gamaliel, the son of Pedahzur, prince of the children of Manasseh: 55. His offering was one silver charger of the weight of a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering: 56. One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense: 57. One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: 58. One kid of the goats for a sin-offering: 59. And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Gamaliel, the son of Pedahzur. 60. On the ninth day Abidan, the son of Gideoni, prince of the children of Benjamin, offered: 61. His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering: 62. One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense: 63. One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: 64. One kid of the goats for a sin-offering: 65. And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Abidan, the son of Gideoni. 66. On the tenth day Ahiezer, the son of Ammishaddai, prince of the children of Dan, offered: 67. His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering: 68. One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense: 69. One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: 70. One kid of the goats for a sin-offering: 71. And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Ahiezer, the son of Ammishaddai. 72. On the eleventh day Pagiel, the son of Ocran, prince of the children of Asher, offered: 73. His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering: 74. One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense: 75. One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: 76. One kid of the goats for a sin-offering: 77. And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Pagiel, the son of Ocran. 73. On the twelfth day Ahira, the son of Ean, prince of the children of Naphtali, offered: 79. His offering was one silver charger, the weight whereof was a hundred and thirty shekels, one silver bowl of seventy shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a meat-offering: 80. One golden spoon of ten shekels, full of incense: 81. One young bullock, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: 82. One kid of the goats for a sin-offering: 83. And for a sacrifice of peace-offerings, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Ahira, the son of Ean. 84. This was the dedication of the altar, in the day when it was anointed, by the princes of Israel: twelve chargers of silver, twelve silver bowls, twelve spoons of gold: 85. Each charger of silver weighing a hundred and thirty shekels, each bowl seventy: all the silver vessels weighed two thousand and four hundred shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary: 86. The golden spoons were twelve, full of incense, weighing ten shekels apiece, after the shekel of the sanctuary: all the gold of the spoons was a hundred and twenty shekels. 87. All the oxen for the burnt-offering were twelve bullocks, the rams twelve, the lambs of the first year twelve, with their meat-offering: and the kids of the goats for a sin-offering, twelve. 88. And all the oxen for the sacrifice of the peace-offerings were twenty and four bullocks, the rams sixty, the he-goats sixty, the lambs of the first year. This was the dedication of the altar, after that it was anointed. 89. And when Moses was gone into the tabernacle of the congregation to speak with him, then he heard the voice of one speaking unto him from off the mercy-seat that was upon the ark of testimony, from between the two cherubims: and he spake unto him.

We have here an account of the great solemnity of dedicating the altars, both that of burnt-offerings, and that of incense: they had been sanctified before, when they were anointed, (Lev. 8. 10, 11.) but now they were handselled, as it were, by the princes, with their freewill-offerings. They began the use of them with rich presents, great expressions of joy and gladness, and extraordinary respect to those tokens of God's presence with them. Now observe here,

I. That the princes and great men were first and foremost in the service of God. Those that are entitled to precedency should go before in good works, and that is true honour. Here is an example to the nobility and gentry, those that are in authority, and of the first rank in their country; they ought to improve their honour and power, their estate and interest, for the promoting of religion, and the service of God, in the places where they live. It is justly expected, that they who have more than others should do more good than others with what they have, else they are unfaithful stewards, and will not make up their account with God. Nay, great men must not only with their wealth and power assist and protect those that serve God, but they must make conscience of being devout and religious themselves, and employing themselves in the exercises of piety, which will greatly redound to the honour of God, (Ps. 138. 4, 5.) and have a good influence upon others, who will be the more easily persuaded to the acts of devotion, when they see them thus brought into reputation. It is certain that the greatest of men is less than the least of the ordinances of God; nor are the nearest services of religion any disparagement to those that make the greatest figure in the world.

II. The offerings they brought were very rich and valuable; so rich, that some think there was not so great a difference in estate between them and others, as that they were able to bear the expense of them themselves, but that the heads of each tribe contributed to the offering which their prince brought.

1. They brought some things to remain for standing service; twelve large silver dishes, each about sixty ounces weight; as many large silver cups, or bowls, of about thirty-five ounces; the former to be used for the meat-offerings, the latter for the drink-offerings; the former for the flesh of the sacrifices, the latter for the blood. The latter was God's table, (as it were,) and it was fit that so great a King should be served in plate. The golden spoons, being filled with incense, were intended, it is probable, for the service of the golden altar; for both the altars were anointed at the same time. Note, In works of piety and charity, we ought to be generous according as our ability is. The Israelites indeed might well afford to part with their gold and silver in recompence of the goodness of God, for they needed it not to buy meat, and victual their camp, who were daily fed with bread from heaven; nor did they need it to buy bread, or pay their army, who were shortly to be put in possession of Canaan.

2. They brought some things to be used immediately, offerings of each sort, burnt-offerings, sin-offerings, and a great many peace-offerings, (on parts of which they were to feast with the Lord, and the meat-offerings to be annexed to them. Hereby they signified their thankful acceptance of, and cheerful submission to, all those laws concerning the sacrifices which God had lately by Moses delivered to them. And though it was a time of joy and rejoicing, yet it is observable that still in the midst of their sacrifices we find a sin-offering, (v. 10.) and a peace-offering, (v. 11.) to ourselves, that there is a mixture of sin, it is fit that there should be even in our most joyful services a mixture of repentance. In all our approaches to God, we must by faith have an eye to Christ as the great Sin-offering, and make mention of him.

3. They brought their offerings each on a several day, in the order that they had been lately put into, so that the solemnity lasted twelve days. So God appointed, (v. 11.) They shall bring their offering, each prince on his day, and so they did. One sabbath must needs fall within the twelve days, if not two, but it should seem they did not intermit on the sabbath, for it was holy work, proper enough for a holy day. God appointed that it should thus be done on several days; (1.) That the solemnity might be prolonged, and so might be universally taken notice of by all Israel, and the more for the discernment of the sanctuary, for the exhibition of it more effectually preserved. (2.) That an equal honour might thereby be put upon each several tribe; in Aaron's breast-plate each had his precious stone, so in this offering each had his day. (3.) Thus it would be done more decently and in order; God's work should not be done confusedly, and in a hurry; take time, and we shall have done the minister, or, at least, we shall have done the better. (4.) God therefore moved by the arguments he had, and how much pleased we should be, with the exercises of piety and devotion. The repetition of them should be a continual pleasure to us, and we must not be weary of well-doing. If extravagant nary services come to be done for twelve days together, we must not shrink from it, nor call it a task and a burden. (5.) The priests and Levites, having this occasion to offer the same sacrifices, and those of every sort, every day, for so many days together, would have their hands well set in, and would be well versed in the laws concerning them. (6.) The peace-offerings were all to be eaten the same day they were offered, and two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, and five lambs, were enough for one day's festival; had there been more, especially if all had been brought on one day, there might have been burning-offerings. (7.) That the sabbath remembrance must not be left, under pretence of the religion of feasting.

4. All their offerings were exactly the same, without any variation, though it is probable that neither the princes nor the tribes were all alike rich; but thus it was intimated that all the tribes of Israel had an equal share in the altar, and an equal interest in the sacrifices that were offered upon it. Though one tribe was posted more honourably in the camp than another, yet they and their services were all alike acceptable to God. Nor must we have the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ with respect to Jerem., 2. 1.

5. Nahshon, the prince of the tribe of Judah, offered first, because God had given that tribe the first post of honour in the camp; and the rest of the tribes followed him, appointed, and offered in the same order in which God had appointed them. Nahshon, of which tribe Christ came, first, and then the rest; thus, in the dedication of souls to God, every man is presented in his own order, Christ the First-Fruits, 1 Cor. 15. 23. Some observe that Nahshon is the only one that is not expressly called a prince, (v. 12.) which the Jews give this account of; he is not called a prince, that he might not be spoken of first, because he offered first; and all the others are called princes, because they (though some of them of the elder house) submitted, and offered after him. Or, because the title of Prince of Judah did more properly belong to Christ, for unto him shall the gathering of the people be.

6. Though the offerings were all the same, yet the account of them is repeated at large for each tribe, that there might be no suspicion of partiality. We are sure there are no vain repetitions in scripture, and what shall we make of these repetitions? Might it not have served, to say of this noble jury, that the same offering which their forerunners brought on his day brought likewise? No, God would have it specified for each tribe: and why so? (1.) It was for the encouragement of these princes, and of their respective tribes, that, each of their offerings being recorded, (v. 14.) The Lord will add the joy of your salvation, (v. 15.) is not a slight matter to be put upon them; for rich and poor meet together before God. (2.) It was for the encouragement of all generous acts of piety and charity, by letting us know that what is given is lent to the Lord, and he carefully records it, with 'every one's name prefixed to his gift, because what is so given he will pay again, and even a cup of cold water shall have its reward. He is not unrighteous, to forget either the cost or the labour of love, Heb. 6. 10. We find Christ taking particular notice of what was cast into the treasury, Mark, 12. 41. Though what is offered be but little, while it is according to our ability, though it be a contribution mixed with the charity of others, yet it shall be recorded, that it may be recompensed in the resurrection of the just.

7. The sum total is added at the foot of the account, (v. 84–88.) to show how much God was pleased with the mention of his free-will offerings; and what a great deal it amounted to in the whole, when every prince brought in his quota! How greatly would the sanctuary of God be enriched and beautified, if all would in their places do their part towards it, by exemplary purity and devotion, extensive charity, and universal usefulness. The estate of God, God's grace, and the God of grace, (as the presents that were brought him, by speaking familiarly to Moses, as a man speaks to his friend, from off the mercy-seat; v. 89. ch. 12. 8.) and in speaking to him, he did in effect speak to all Israel, showing them this token for good, Ps. 103. 7. Note, By this we may know that God hears and accepts our prayers, if he gives us grace to hear and receive them, and by this we may know that his grace is maintained and kept up. I know not why we may not suppose, that, upon each of the days on which these offerings were brought, (probably, while the priests and offerers were feasting upon the peace-offerings,) Moses was in the tabernacle, receiving some of these laws and orders which we have already met with in this and the foregoing book. And here the excellent Bishop Patrick observes, that God's speaking to Moses thus by an audible articulate voice, as if he had been clothed with a body, might be looked upon as an earnest of the incarnation of the Son of God in the fullness of time, when the Word should be made flesh, and speak in the language of the sons of men. For however God at sundry times and in divers manners spake unto the fathers, he has in these last days spoken unto us by his Son. And that he who now spake to Moses, as the Shechinah or Divine Majesty, from between the cherubim, was the Eternal Word, the second Person in the Trinity, was the pious conjecture of many of the ancients; for all God's communication with man is by his Son, by whom he made the world, and rules the church, and who is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

CHAP. VIII.

This chapter is concerning the lamps or lights of the sanctuary. 1. The burning lamps in the candlestick, which the priests were charged to tend, v. 1-4. If offering lamps, (if I may so call them,) the Levites, who, as ministers, were burning and shining lights. The ordination of the priests we had an account of, Lev. 8. Here we have an account of the ordination of the Levites, the inferior clergy. 1. How they were purified, v. 5-8. 2. How they were parted with by the people, v. 9, 10. 3. How they were presented to God in lieu of the first-born, v. 11-13. 4. How they were consigned to Aaron and his sons, (to be ministers to them,) v. 14. 5. How all these orders were daily executed, v. 20-22. And, lastly, The age appointed for their ministration, v. 23, 26.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Speak unto Aaron, and say unto him, When thou lightest the lamps, the seven lamps shall give light over against the candlestick. 3. And Aaron did so; he lighted the lamps thereof over against the candlestick, as the Lord commanded Moses. 4. And this work of the candlestick was of beaten gold, unto the shaft thereof, unto the flowers thereof, was beaten work: according unto the pattern which the Lord had showed Moses, so he made the candlestick.

Directions were given long before this for the making of the golden candlestick, (Exod. 25. 31.) and it was made according to the pattern showed to Moses in the mount, Exod. 37. 17. But now it was not the lamps, but the lamp, were first ordered to be lighted, when other things began to be used. Observe, 1. Who must light the lamps; Aaron himself, he lighted the lamps, v. 3. As the people's representative to God, he thus did the office of a servant in God's house, lighting His Master's candle, as the representative of God to the people, he thus gave them the significations of God's will and favour, thus exalted in them, Exod. 29. 38. Then he lighted my candle; and thus Aaron himself was now lately directed to bless the people. The Lord make his face to shine upon thee, ch. 6. 25. The commandment is a lamp, Prov. 6. 23. The scripture is a light shining in a dark place, 2 Pet. 1. 19. And a dark place indeed even the church would be without it, as the tabernacle (which had no window in it,) without the lamps. Now the work of ministers is that they light the lamps, burning and applying the word of God. The priest lighted the middle lamp from the fire of the altar, and the rest of the lamps he lighted one from another, which (says Mr. Ainsworth,) signifies that the fountain of all light and knowledge is in Christ, who has the seven spirits of God figured by the seven lamps of fire, (Hev. 4. 5.) but that, in the expounding of scripture, one passage must borrow light from another.

He also supposes that seven being a number of perfection, by the seven branches of the candlestick is showed the full perfection of the scriptures, which are able to make us wise to salvation. 2. To what end the lamps were lighted; that they might give light over against the candlestick, that is, to that part of the tabernacle where the table stood, with the show-bread upon it, over against the candlestick. They were not lighted like tapers in an urn, to burn to themselves, but to give light to the other side of the tabernacle, for therefore candles are lighted, Matt. 5. 15. Note, The lights of the world, the lights of the church, must shine as lights. Therefore we have light, that we may give light.

5. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 6. Take the Levites from among the children of Israel, and cleanse them. And thus shalt thou do unto them, to cleanse them: Sprinkle water of purifying upon them, and let them shave all their flesh, and let them wash their clothes, and so make themselves clean. 8. Then let them take a young bullock with his meat-offering, even fine flour mingled with oil, and another young bullock shalt thou take for a sin-offering. 9. And thou shalt bring the Levites before the tabernacle of the congregation: and thou shalt gather the whole assembly of the children of Israel together. 10. And thou shalt bring the Levites before the Lord: and the children of Israel shall put their hands upon the Levites. 11. And Aaron shall offer the Levites before the Lord for an offering of the children of Israel, that they may execute the service of the Lord. 12. And the Levites shall lay their hands upon the heads of the bullocks: and thou shalt offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, unto the Lord, to make an atonement for the Levites. 13. And thou shalt set the Levites before Aaron, and before his sons, and offer them for an offering unto the Lord. 14. Thus shalt thou separate the Levites from among the children of Israel: and the Levites shall be mine. 15. And after that shall the Levites go in to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation: and thou shalt cleanse them, and offer them for an offering. 16. For they are wholly given unto me from among the children of Israel; instead of such as open every womb, even instead of the first-born of all the children of Israel, have I taken them unto me. 17. For all the first-born of the children of Israel are mine, both man and beast: on the day that I smote every first-born in the land of Egypt, I sanctified them for myself. 18. And I have taken the Levites for all the first-born of the children of Israel. 19. And I have given the Levites as a gift to Aaron and to his sons from among the children of Israel, to do the service of the children of Israel in the tabernacle of the congregation, and to make an atonement for the children of Israel: that there be no plague among the children of Israel, when the children of Israel come nigh unto the sanctuary. 20. And Moses, and Aaron, and all the congregation of the children of Israel, did to the Levites according unto all that the Lord commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did the children of Israel unto them. 21. And the Levites were purified, and they washed their clothes; and Aaron offered them as an offering before the Lord; and Aaron made an atonement for them to cleanse them. 22. And after that went the Levites in to do their service in the tabernacle of the congregation before Aaron, and before his sons: as the Lord had commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did they unto them. 23. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 24. This is it that belongeth unto the Levites: from twenty and five years old and upward they shall go in to wait upon the service of the tabernacle of the congregation: 25. And from the age of fifty years they shall cease waiting upon the service thereof; and shall serve no more: 26. But shall minister with their brethren in the tabernacle of the congregation, to keep the charge, and shall do no service. Thus shalt thou do unto the Levites touching their charge.

We read before of the separating of the Levites from among the children of Israel when they were numbered, and the numbering of them by themselves, (ch. 3. 6, 15.) that they might be employed in the service of the tabernacle. Now here we have directions given for their solemn ordination, (v. 6.) and the performance of it, v. 20. All Israel must know that they took not this honour to themselves, but were called of God to it; nor were they enough that they were distinguished from their neighbours, but they must be solely devoted to God. Note, All that are employed for God must be dedicated to him, according as the degree of the employment is. Christians must be baptized, ministers must be ordained: we must first give ourselves unto the Lord, and then our services. Observe in what manner this was done.

I. The Levites must be cleansed, and were so. The rites and ceremonies of their cleansing were to be performed, 1. By themselves. They must wash their clothes, and not only bathe, but shave all their flesh, as the leper was to do when he was cleansed, Lev. 14. 8. They must cause a razor to pass over all their flesh, to clear themselves from that defilement which would not wash off. Jacob, whom God loved, was a strange man; it was himself that was hairy. The great pains they were to take with themselves, to make themselves clean, teaches all Christians, and ministers particularly, by repentance and mortification, to cleanse themselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, that they may sincerely holiness. They must be clean that bear the vessels of the Lord. 2. By Moses. He must sprinkle the water of purifying upon them, which was prepared by divine direction. This signified the application of the blood of Christ to our souls by faith, to purify us from an evil conscience, that we may be fit to serve the living God. It is our duty to cleanse ourselves, and God's promise that he will cleanse us.

II. The Levites, being thus prepared, must be brought both by the Lord in a solemn act, to the Lord, and the children of Israel must put their hands upon them; (v. 10.) so transferring their interest in them and in their service (to which, as a part, the whole body of the people was entitled) to God and to his sanctuary. They presented them to God as living sacrifices, holy and acceptable, to perform a reasonable service; and therefore, as the offerers in all other cases did, they laid their hands upon them, and anointed them, and they thereby were made ministers, and being made ministers by Aaron, who was to offer them before the Lord. All the congregation of the children of Israel could not lay hands on them, but it is probable that the rulers and elders did it, as the representative body of the people. Some think that the first-born did it; because in their stead the Levites were consecrated to God. Whether ever the Lord did so for us, to serve his own glory by, we must cheerfully and freely lay our hands upon it, not to detain it, but to surrender it, and let it go to Him that is entitled to it.

III. Sacrifices were to be offered for them; a sin-offering first, (v. 12.) and then a burnt-offering, to make an atonement for the Levites, who, as the parties concerned, were to lay their hands upon the head of the sacrifices. See here, 1. That we are all utterly unworthy, and unfit to be admitted into, and employed in, the service of God, till atonement be made for sin, and thereby our peace made with God. That interposing cloud must be scattered, before there can be any comfortable communion settled between God and our souls. 2. That it is by sacrifice, by Christ the great Sacrifice, that we are reconciled to God, and made fit to be offered to him. It is by him that Christians are sanctified, signifying that their service may be acceptable to God, and ministers to the work of their ministry. The learned Bishop Patrick's notion of the sacrifice offered by the Levites, is, that the Levites were themselves considered as an expiatory sacrifice, for they were given to make atonement for the children of Israel, (v. 19.) and yet not being devoted to death, any more than the first-born were, these two sacrifices were substituted in their stead, upon which they were taken for them; which offerers, as their sin, which the children of Israel laid upon them, (v. 10.) might be transferred to these beasts. The Levites themselves were offered before the Lord for an offering of the children of Israel, v. 11. Aaron gave them up to God, as being first given up by themselves, and by the children of Israel. The original word signifies a wave-offering, not that they were actually, but that they were presented to God, as the God of heaven and the Lord of the whole earth, as the wave-offerings were. And, in calling them wave-offerings, it was intended to them that they must continually lift up themselves toward God in his service, lift up their eyes, lift up their hearts, and must move to and fro with readiness in the business of their profession. They were not ordained to be idle, but to be active and stirring.

V. God here declares his acceptance of them, numbers. To him the Levites shall be mine. God took them instead of the first-born, (v. 16. 18.) of which before, ch. 3. 41. Note, What is in sincerity offered to God shall be graciously owned and accepted by him. And his ministers, who have obtained mercy of him to be faithful, have particular marks of favour and honour put upon them; they shall be mine, and then, (v. 15.) they shall go in to do the service of God; and God will do for his own children, that they may serve him. All that expect to share in the privileges of the tabernacle must resolve to do the service of the tabernacle. As, on the one hand, none of God's creatures are his necessary servants, (ie, needs not the service of any of them,) so, on the other hand, none are taken merely as honorary servants, to do nothing. All whom God owns he employs, angels themselves have their services. God's service is service, given as a right, to Aaron and his sons, (v. 19.) yet so that as the benefit accrued to the children of Israel. 1. The Levites must act under the priests, as attendants on them, and assistants to them, in the service of the sanctuary. Aaron offers them to God, (v. 11.) and then God gives them back to Aaron, v. 19. Note, Whatever we give up to God he will give back to us, unspeakably to our advantage. Our blessings are but the returns of more of ours, more truly and comfortably ours, than when we have offered them up to God. 2. They must act for the people. They were taken to do the service of the children of Israel, that is, not only to do the service which they should do, but to serve their interests, and do that which would really redound to the honour, safety, and prosperity, of the whole nation. Note, They that faithfully perform the service of God do one of the best services that can be done to the public; God's ministers, while they keep within the sphere of their office, and conscientiously discharge the duty of it, must be looked upon as some of the most useful servants of their country. The children of Israel can as ill spare the tribe of Levi as any of their tribes. But what is the service they do the children of Israel? It follows, it is to make an atonement for them, that there be no plague among them. It was the priests' work to make atonement by sacrifice, but the Levites made atonement by attendance, and preserved the peace with heaven, which was made by sacrifice. If the service of the priests in the tabernacle had been left to all the first-born of Israel promiscuously, it would have been either neglected, or done unskillfully and irreverently, being done by those that were neither so closely tied to it as the priests were, nor so strictly trained in it, nor so constantly used to it, as the Levites were; and this would bring a plague among the children of Israel; meaning, perhaps, the death of the first-born themselves, which was the last and greatest of the plagues of Egypt. To prevent this, and to preserve the atonement, the Levites were appointed to do this service, who should be bred up to it under the eye of the priests, the Levites, and the Levites would be well-versed in it; and so the children of Israel, that is, the first-born, should not need to come nigh to the sanctuary; or, when any Israelites had occasion, the Levites would be ready to instruct them, and introduce them, and so prevent any fatal miscarriage or mistake. Note, It is a very great kindness to the church, that ministers are appointed to go before them in the things of God, as guides, overseers, and in the whole government and discipline, to make that their business. When Christ ascended on high, he gave these gifts, Eph. 4. 8, 11, 12. VII. The time of their ministration is fixed. 1. They were to enter upon the service at twenty-five years old, v. 24. They were not charged with the carrying of the tabernacle, and the utensils of it, till they were thirty years old, ch. 4. 3. But they were entered to be otherwise serviceable at twenty-five years old; a very good age for ministers to begin their public work at. The work then required that strength of body, and the work now requires that maturity of judgment and steadiness of behaviour, which men rarely arrive at till about that age: and novices are in danger of being lifted up with pride. 2. They were to have a writ of ease at fifty years old, then they were to return from the warfare, as the phrase is, (v. 25.) not cashiered with disgrace, but preferred rather to the rest which their age required, to be loaded with the honours of their office, as hitherto they had been with the burdens of it. They shall minister with their brethren in the tabernacle, to direct the junior Levites, and set them in; and they shall keep the charge, as guards upon the avenues of the tabernacle, to see that no stranger intruded, nor person in his uncleanness, but they shall not be put upon any service which may be a fatigue to them. If God's grace provide that men shall have ability according to their work, man's prudence should take care that men have work only according to their ability. The aged are most fit for trusts, and to keep the charge, the younger are most fit for work, and to do the service. Those that have used the office of a servant well, purchase to themselves a good degree, 1 Tim. 3. 13. Yet indeed gifts are not tied to ages, (Job 32. 9.) but all these worketh that one and the self-same Spirit. Thus was the affair of the Levites settled.

This chapter is, I. Concerning the great ordinance of the passover; 1. Orders are given for the observance of it, at the return of the year, v. 1. 6. 2. Provisions added for the case of such as should be ceremonially unclean, or otherwise disabled, at the time when the passover was to be kept, v. 6. 14. II. Concerning the great favour of the pillar of the cloud, which was a guide to Israel through the wilderness, v. 15. 28.

1. And the Lord spake unto Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the first month of the second year after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying, 2. Let the children of Israel also keep the passover at his appointed season. 3. In the fourteenth day of this month, at even, ye shall keep it in his appointed season: according to all the rites of it, and according to all the ceremonies thereof, shall ye keep it. 4. And Moses spake unto the children of Israel, that they should keep the passover. 5. And they kept the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month, at even, in the wilderness of Sinai: according to all that the Lord commanded Moses, so did the children of Israel. 6. And there were certain men who were defiled by the dead body of a man, that they could not keep the passover on that day: and they came before Moses and before Aaron on that day. 7. And those men said unto him, We are defiled by the dead body of a man, wherefore are we kept back? that we may not offer an offering of the Lord in his appointed season among the children of Israel? 8. And Moses said unto them, Stand still, and I will hear what the Lord will command concerning you. 9. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 10. Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If any man of you or of your posterity shall be unclean by reason of a dead body, or be in a journey afar off, yet he shall keep the passover unto the Lord. 11. The fourteenth day of the second month at even they shall keep it, and eat it with unleavened bread and bitter herbs 12. They shall leave none of it unto the morning, nor break any bone of it: according to all the ordinances of the passover they shall keep it. 13. But the man that is clean, and is not in a journey, and forbeareth to keep the passover, even the same soul shall be cut off from his people: because he brought not the offering of the Lord in his appointed season, that man shall bear his sin. 14. And if a stranger shall sojourn among you, and will keep the passover unto the Lord: according to the ordinance of the passover, and according to the manner thereof, so shall he do: ye shall have one ordinance, both for the stranger, and for him that was born in the land.

Here we have, I. An order given for the solemnization of the passover, the day twelvemonth after they came out of Egypt, on the fourteenth day of the first month of the second year, some days before they were numbered, for that was done in the beginning of the second month. Observe, 1. God gave particular orders for the keeping of this passover, otherwise (it should seem) they had not kept it, for, in the first institution of this ordinance, it was appointed to be kept when they should come into the land of promise, Exod. 12. 25. And, for aught that appears, after this, they kept no passover till they came to Canaan, Josh. 5. 10. This was an early indication of the abolishing of the ceremonial institutions at last, that, so soon after they were first appointed, some of them were suffered to lie asleep for so many years. The ordinance of the Lord's supper (which came in the room of the passover) was not thus intermitted or set aside, in the first days of the Christian church, though those were days of greater difficulty and distress than Israel knew in the wilderness; nay, in the times of persecution, the Lord's supper was celebrated more frequently than afterward. The Israelites in the wilderness could not forget their deliverance out of Egypt, their present state was a constant memorandum of it to them; all the danger was when they came to Canaan, in which they had need to be reminded of the rock out of which they were hewn. However, because the first passover was celebrated in a hurry, and was rather the substance itself than the sign, it was the will of God that at the return of the year, when they were more composed, and better acquainted with the divine law, they should observe it again, that their children might more distinctly understand the solemnity, and the better remember it hereafter. Calvin supposes, that they were obliged to keep it now, and notes it as an instance of their carelessness, that they had need to be reminded of an institution which they so lately received. 2. Moses faithfully transmitted to the people the orders given him, v. 4. Thus St. Paul delivered to the churches what he received of the Lord concerning the gospel-passover, 1 Cor. 11. 23. Note, Magistrates must be monitors, and ministers must stir up men's minds by way of remembrance to that which is good. 3. The people observed the orders given them, v. 5. Though they had lately kept the feast of dedication, (ch. 7.) yet they did not desire to excuse themselves with that from keeping this feast. Note, Extraordinary performances must not supersede or jostle out our stated services. They kept the passover even in the wilderness: though our condition be solitary and unsettled, yet we must keep our holy feast by holy ordinances as we have opportunity, for in them we may find the best conversation, and the best reposè. Thus is God's Israel provided for in a desert.

II. Instructions given concerning those that were ceremonially unclean, when they were to eat the passover. The law of the passover required every Israelite to observe it, but we have since, in each of the subsequent laws, had forbidden those that had contracted any ceremonial pollution to eat of the holy things; these whose minds and consciences are defiled by sin are utterly unfit for communion with God, and cannot partake, with any true comfort, of the gospel-passover, till they are cleansed by true repentance and faith: and a sad dilemma they are in; if they come not to holy ordinances, they are guilty of a contempt of them; if they do it out of their own motion, they are guilty of a procrastination of them. They must therefore wash, and then compass God's altar.

Now, 1. Here is the case that happened in Israel when this passover was to be kept. Certain men were defiled by the dead body of a man, (v. 6.) and they lay under that defilement seven days, (ch. 19. 11.) and in that time might not eat of the holy things, Lev. 7. 20. This was not their iniquity, but their infirmity; some persons must touch dead bodies, to bury them out of sight, and therefore they could, with the better grace, bring their complaint to Moses.

2. The application made to Moses by the persons concerned, v. 7. Note, It is people's wisdom, in difficult cases concerning sin and duty, to consult with their ministers whom God has set over them, and to ask counsel of those who are exalted above other persons, and are accustomed to use means we must use in pursuance of our prayers to God to lead us in a plain path. Observe with what trouble and concern these men complain that they were kept back from offering to the Lord. They did not complain of the law as unjust, but lamented their unhappiness, that they fell under the restraint of it at this time, and desired some expedient might be found out for their relief. Note, It is a blessèd sight to see people bungling and fumbling after God's ordinances, and to hear them complaining of that which prevents their enjoyment of them. It should be a trouble to us, when by any occasion we are kept back from bringing our offering in the solemnities of a sabbath or a sacrament, as it was to David, when he was banished from the altar, Ps. 42. 1, 2.

3. The deliberation of Moses in resolving this case: here seemed to be law against law; and though it is a rule that the latter law must explain the former, yet he pitted these Israelites, that were thus debared the privilege of the passover, and therefore took time to consult the oracles, and to know what was the mind of God in this case; (v. 8.) I will hear what the Lord will command concerning you. Ministers must take example from hence in resolving cases of conscience. (1.) They must not determine rashly, but take time to consider, that every circumstance may be duly weighed, the case viewed in a true light, and spiritual things compared with spiritual. (2.) They must ask counsel of God's mouth, and not determine according to the bias of their own fancy or affection, but impartially, according to the mind of God, to the best of their knowledge. We have no such preacher, or such counselor as Moses had, but we must have recourse to the law and the testimony, and speak according to that rule; and if, in difficult cases, we take time to spread the matter in particular before God by a humble believing prayer, we have reason to hope that the Spirit which is promised, to lead us into all truth, will enable us to direct others in the good and right way.

4. The directions which God gave in this case, and which he saw fit to explain in parts, are the explanation of the passover. This dispensable accident produced good laws. (1.) Those that happened to be ceremonially unclean at the time when the passover should be eaten, were allowed to eat it that day month, when they were clean; so were those that happened to be in a journey afar off, v. 10, 11. See here, [1.] That when we are to attend upon God in solemn ordinances, it is very necessary that we be clean, and that we be composed. [2.] That that may excuse the deferring of a duty for a time, which yet will not justify us in the total neglect and omission of it. He that is at variance with his brother may leave his gift before the altar, while he goes to be reconciled to his brother; but, when he has done his part towards it, whether it be effected or no, he must come again, and offer his gift, Matt. 18.

5. This law of the passover was to be kept on the same day of the month with the first, because the ordinance was a memorial of their deliverance on that day of the month. Once we find the whole congregation keeping the passover, on this fourteenth day of the second month, in Hezekiah's time, (2 Chron. 30. 15,) which perhaps might help to account for the admission of some that were not clean to the eating of it; had the general passover been kept in the strictness of the law, they might have been put off till the second; but that being kept in the second month, they had no warrant to eat it in the third month; and therefore, rather than not eat of it at all, they were admitted, though not cleansed according to the purification of the sanctuary, v. 19, 20. (2.) When the passover was observed in the second month, all the rites and ceremonies of it must be strictly observed. v. 12. Thus much in this law, that, because the time was dispensable with, any part of the solemnity of it might be abated; no, when we cannot do as we would, we must do the utmost we can, in the service of God.

6. (3.) This allowance in a case of necessity should by no means countenance or induce any in their neglect to keep the passover at the time appointed, when they were not under the necessity, v. 15. When a person is under no incapacity to eat the passover in the appointed time, if he neglects it then, upon the presumption of the liberty granted by this law, he puts an affront upon God, impiously abuses his kindness, and he shall certainly bear his sin, and be cut off from his people. Note, As those who against their minds are forced to absent themselves from God's ordinances, may comfortably expect that God will accept of the duty thus performed, so those who of choice absent themselves, may justly expect the tokens of God's wrath for their sin. Be not deceived, God is not mocked. (4.) Here is a clause added in favour of strangers, v. 14. Though it was requisite that the stranger, who would join with them in eating the passover, should be circumcised as a proselyte to their religion, (Exod. 12. 48, 49, 52,) yet Moses, in his kind consideration for those who were Gentiles to eat the passover, was an intimation of the favour designed for the poor Gentiles by Christ. As then there was one law, so in the days of the Messiah there should be one gospel, for the stranger, and for him that was born in the land; for, in every nation, he that fears God, and works righteousness, is accepted of him, and this was a truth before Peter perceived it, Acts 10. 34, 35.

15. And on the day that the tabernacle was reared up, the cloud covered the tabernacle, namely, the tent of the testimony: and at even there was upon the tabernacle as it were the appearance of fire, until the morning. 16. So it was always: the cloud covered it by day, and the appearance of fire by night. 17. And when the cloud was taken up from the tabernacle, then after that the children of Israel journeyed: and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Israel pitched their tents. 18. At the commandment of the Lord the children of Israel journeyed, and at the commandment of the Lord they pitched: as long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle they rested in their tents. 19. And when the cloud tarried long upon the tabernacle many days, then the children of Israel kept the charge of the Lord, and journeyed not. 20. And so it was, when the cloud was a few days upon the tabernacle; according to the commandment of the Lord they abode in their tents, and according to the commandment of the Lord they journeyed. 21. And so it was, when the cloud abode from even unto the morning, and that the cloud was taken up in the morning, then they journeyed: whether it was by day or by night that the cloud was taken up, they journeyed. 22. Or whether it were two days or a month, or a year, that the cloud tarried upon the tabernacle, remaining thereon, the children of Israel abode in their tents; and journeyed not but when it was taken up, they journeyed. 23. At the commandment of the Lord they rested in their tents, and at the commandment of the Lord they journeyed: they kept the charge of the Lord, at the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses.

We have here the history of the cloud; not a natural history, who knows the balancings of the clouds? but a divine history of a cloud that was appointed to be the visible sign and symbol of God's presence with Israel.

1. When the tabernacle was finished, this cloud, which before had hung on high over their camp, settled upon the tabernacle, and covered it, to show that God manifests his presence with his people, and in and by his ordinances; there he makes himself known, and to them we must look, if we would see the beauty of the Lord, Ps. 27. 4. Ezek. 37. 26, 27. Thus God glorified his own appointments, and signified his acceptance of his people's love and obedience. Of the kind admission of those who were under this cloud, as of those who were not, we have farther room to consider in the following context.
and his care of them, and that he kept them night and day, Isa. 27. 3. Ps. 121. 6. And thus we are taught to set God always before us, and to see him near us both night and day. Something of the nature of that divine revelation which the Old-Testament church was governed by, might also be signified by these visible signs of God's presence, the cloud denoting the darkness, and the fire the terror, of that dispensation, in comparison with the more clear and comfortable discoveries God has made of his glory in the face of Jesus Christ.

III. This pillar of cloud and fire directed and determined all the motions, encampments, marches, and encampments, of Israel in the wilderness. 1. As long as the cloud rested upon the tabernacle, so long they continued in the same place, and never stirred; though, no doubt, they were very desirous to be pressing forward in their journey toward Canaan, where they longed to be, and hoped to be quickly, yet as long as the cloud rested, if it rested in a month, or a year, so long they rested, v. 22. Note, He that believeth doth not make haste. There is no time lost, while we are waiting God's time. It is as acceptable a piece of submission to the will of God to sit still contentedly when our lot requires it, as to work for him when we are called to it. 2. When the cloud was taken up, they removed, however comfortably sooner they were encamped, v. 17. Whether it moved by day or night, the delayed motion of it, the progress of it, was so slow, that there were some appointed to stand sentinel day and night within sight of it, to give timely notice to the camp of its beginning to stir, and this is called keeping the charge of the Lord. The people being thus kept at a constant uncertainty, and having no time fixed for stopping or removing, were obliged to hold themselves in constant readiness to march upon very short notice. And for the same reason, we are kept at uncertainty concerning the time of our putting off the earthly house of this tabernacle, that we may be always ready to remove at the commandment of the Lord. 3. As long and as far as the cloud moved, so long and so far they marched, and just there where it abode they pitched their tents about it, and God's tent under it, v. 17. Note, It is uncomfortable staying when God is departed, which is the case of them, if God go before us, and resting where he appoints us to rest. This is repeated again and again in these verses, because it was a constant miracle, and often repeated, and what never failed in all their travels, and because it is a matter which we should take particular notice of, as very significant and instructive. It is mentioned long after by David, (Ps. 105. 39.) and by the people of God after their captivity, Neh. 9. 19. And the conduct of this cloud is spoken of as signifying the guidance of the blessed Spirit; (Isa. 63. 14.) The Spirit of the Lord caused him to rest, and so didst thou lead thy people.

This teaches us, (1.) The particular care God takes of his people. Nothing could be more expressive and significant of God's tenderness of Israel, than the conduct of this cloud was; it led them by day (Ex. 16. 10-7.) and night (Deut. 34. 6.) from their wilderness to the Promised Land by it; God did by it, as it were, cover them with his feathers. We are not now to expect such sensible tokens of the divine presence and guidance as this was, but the promise is sure to all God's spiritual Israel, That he will guide them by his counsel, (Ps. 73. 24.) even unto death, Ps. 48. 14. That he will direct their paths when all their ways acknowledge him, Prov. 3. 6. There is a particular providence conversant about all their affairs, to direct and over-rule them for the best. The steps of a good man are ordered by the Lord, Ps. 37. 23. (2.) The particular regard we ought to have to God in all our ways. In our affections and actions we must follow the direction of his word and Spirit; all the motions of our soul must be guided by the divine will; at the commandment of the Lord, our hearts should always move and rest; in all our affairs, we must follow Providence, reconciling ourselves to all its dispositions, and bringing our mind to our condition, whatever it is. The people of Israel, having the cloud for their guide, were eased of the trouble of holding councils of war, to decide when and whether they should march, which might have occasioned strife and debates among them: nor needed they to send spies before to inform them of the posture of the country, or pioneers to clear the way, or officers to mark out their camp; the pillar of cloud did all this for them: and those that by faith commit their works to the Lord, though they are bound to the prudent use of means, yet may in like manner be easy in the expectations of the event; "Father, thy will be done; dispose of me and mine as thou pleasest; here I am, desirous to be found waiting on my God continually, to journey and rest at the commandment of the Lord. What thou wilt, and where thou wilt, only let me be thine, and always in the way of my duty."

CHAP. X.

In this chapter we have, I. Orders given about the making and using of silver trumpets, which seems to have been the last of all the commandments God gave upon mount Sinai, and one of the least, yet not without its significance, v. 1. 10. II. The history of the removal of Israel's camp from mount Sinai, and their orderly march into the wilderness of Paran. IV. Moses's prayer at the removing and resting of the ark, v. 33. 36. 1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Make thee two trumpets of silver: of a whole piece shall thou make them, that thou mayest use them for the calling of the assembly, and for the journeying of the camps. 3. And when they shall blow with them, all the assembly shall assemble themselves to thee at the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. 4. And if they blow but with one trumpet, then the princes, which are heads of the thousands of Israel, shall gather themselves unto thee. 5. When ye blow an alarm, then the camps that lie on the east parts shall go forward. 6. When ye blow an alarm the second time, then the camps that lie on the south side shall take their journey: they shall blow an alarm for their journeys. 7. But when the congregation is to be gathered together, ye shall blow, but ye shall not sound an alarm. 8. And the sons of Aaron, the priests, shall blow with the trumpets; and they shall be to you for an ordinance for ever throughout your generations. 9. And if ye go to war in your land against the enemy that oppresseth you, then ye shall blow an alarm with the trumpets; and ye shall be remembered before the Lord your God, and ye shall be saved from your enemies. 10. Also in the day of your gladness, and in your solemn days, and in the beginnings of your months, ye shall blow... with the trumpets over your burnt-offerings, and over the sacrifices of your peace-offerings; that they may be to you for a memorial before your God: I am the Lord your God.

We have here directions concerning the public notices that were to be given to the people upon several occasions by sound of trumpet. In a thing of this nature, one would think, Moses needed not to have been taught of God, his own reason might teach him the convenience of trumpets; but their constitution was to be in every thing divine, and therefore every matter, small as it seems, Moses is here directed,

1. About the making of them. They must be made of silver; not cast, but of beaten work, (as some read it,) the matter and shape, no doubt, very fit for the purpose. He was now ordered to make but two, because there were but two priests to use them. But in Solomon's time, we read of a hundred and twenty priests sounding with trumpets, 2 Chron. 5. 12. The form of these trumpets is supposed to be much like ours at this day.

2. Who were to make use of them; not any inferior person, but the priests themselves, the sons of Aaron, v. 8. As great as they were, they must not think it a disparagement to them to be trumpeters in the house of God; the nearest place there was honourable. This signified that the Lord's ministers should live to God's voice like a trumpet, to show people their sins, (Isa. 55. 1.) to call them to Christ, Isa. 27. 13.

3. Upon what occasion the trumpets were to be sounded. (1.) For the calling of assemblies, v. 2. Thus they are bid to blow the trumpet in Zion, for the calling of a solemn assembly together, to sacrifice a fast, Joel 2. 15. Public notice ought to be given of the time and place of religious assemblies; for the invitation to the benefit of ordinances is general, whoever will, let him come. Wisdom cries in the chief places of concourse. But, that the trumpet might not give an uncertain sound, they are directed, if only the princes and elders were to meet, to blow but one of the trumpets; less should serve to call them together, who ought to be examples of Exactness in any thing that is good; but, if the body of the people were to be called together, both the trumpets must be sounded, they being heard at the greater distance. In allusion to this, they are said to be blessed that hear the joyful sound, (Ps. 89. 15.) that is, that are invited and called upon to wait upon God in public ordinances, Ps. 122. 1. And the general assembly at that great day will be summoned by the sound of the archangel's trumpet; Matt. 24. 31. (2.) For the journeying of Israel in the wilderness; the sound of the trumpet must move, for no man's voice could reach to give the word of command; soldiers with us, that are well disciplined, may be exercised by beat of drum. When the trumpets were blown for this purpose, they must sound an alarm, (v. 5.) a broken, quavering, interrupted sound, which was proper to excite and encourage the minds of people in their marches against their enemies; whereas a continuance of a broken trumpeting would have called them together; (v. 7.) yet, when the people were called together to deprive God's judgments, we find an alarm sounded, Joel 2. 1. At the first sounding, Judah's squadron marched, at the second Reuben's, at the third Ephraim's, at the fourth Dan's, v. 5. 6. And some think that this was intended to sanitcify their marches; for thus was proclaimed by the priests, who were God's mouth to the people, not only the divine orders given them to move, but the divine blessing upon them in all their motions. He that hath ears let him hear, that God is with them of a truth. King Abijah vaunted himself and his army very much upon this, (2 Chron. 13. 12.) God himself is with us for our Captain, and his priests with sounding trumpets.

(3.) For the sanctifying and training of the armies, when they went out to battle, v. 9. "If ye go to war, blow with the trumpets, signifying thereby your appeal to Heaven for the decision of the controversy, and your prayer to God to give you victory, and God will own his own institution, and ye shall be remembered before the Lord your God." God will take notice of this sound of the trumpet, and be engaged to fight their battles, let all the people take notice of it, and be encouraged to fight his, as David, when he heard a sound of a going upon the tops of the mulberry trees. Not that God needed to be awakened by the sound of the trumpet, any more than Christ needed to be awakened by his disciples in the storm, Matt. 8. 25. But, where he intends mercy, it is his will that we should solicit for it; ministers must stir up the good soldiers of Jesus Christ to fight manfully against sin, the world, and the Devil, by assuring them that Christ is the Captain of their salvation, and will tread Satan under their feet. (4.) For the solemnizing of their sacred feast, v. 10. One of their feasts was called the blowing of trumpets, Lev. 23. 23. &c. And it should seem they were thus to grace the solemnity of all their feasts, (Ps. 81. 3.) and their sacrifices, (2 Chron. 29. 27.) to intimate with what joy and delight they performed their duty to God, and to induce the minds of those that attended the services to a holy triumph in the God they worshipped. And then their performances were for a memorial before God; for then he takes pleasure in our religious exercises, when we take pleasure in them. Holy work should be done with holy joy.

11. And it came to pass on the twentieth day of the second month, in the second year, that the cloud was taken up from off the tabernacle of the testimony. 12. And the children of Israel took their journeys out of the wilderness of Sinai; and the cloud rested in the wilderness of Paran. 13. And they first took their journey according to the commandment of the Lord by the hand of Moses. 14. In the first place went the standard of the camp of the children of Judah according to their armies: and over his host was Nahshon the son of Ammina-dab. 15. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Issachar was Nethanel, the son of Zuar. 16. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Zebulun was Eliab the son of Helon. 17. And the tabernacle was taken down; and the sons of Gershon and the sons of Merari set forward, bearing the tabernacle. 18. And the standard of the camp of Reuben set forward according to their armies: and over his host was Elizur the son of Shedeur. 19. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Simeon was Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai. 20. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Gad was Eliasaph the son of Deuel. 21. And the Kohathites set forward, bearing the sanctuary: and the other did set up the tabernacle against they came. 22. And the standard of the camp of the children of Ephraim set forward according to their armies; and over his host was Eli-shama the son of Ammihud. 23. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Manasseh was Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur. 24. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Benjamin was Abidan the son of Gideoni. 25. And the standard of the camp of the children of Dan set forward, which was the rearward of all the camps throughout their hosts; and over his host was Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai. 26. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Asher was Pagiel the son of Ocran. 27. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Naphtali was Ahira the son of Enan. 28. Thus were the journeyings of the children of Israel according to their armies, when they set forward.

I. A general account of the removal of the camp of Israel from mount Sinai, before which mountain it had lain now about a year, in which time, and place, a great deal of memorable business was done. Of this removal, it should seem, God gave them notice some time before, (Deut. 1. 6. 7.) Ye have dwelt long enough in this mountain; turn you, and take your journey toward the land of promise. The apostle tells us that mount Sinai genders to bondage, (Gal. 4. 24.) and signifies the law there given, which is of use indeed as a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, yet we must not rest in it, but advance toward the joys and liberties of the children of God, for our happiness is conferred not by the law, but by promise.

Observe, 1. The signal given, v. 11. The cloud went up, and gave us what we may suppose it stood for some time, till they were ready to march; and a great deal of work it was to take down all those tents, and pack up all those goods, that they had there; but, every family being employed about its own, and all at the same time, many hands made quick work of it. 2. The march begun; They took their journey according to the commandment of the Lord, and just as the cloud led them, v. 13. Some think that mention is thus frequently made in this and the foregoing chapter of the commandment of the Lord, guiding and governing them in all their travels, to obviate the calamity and reproach which were afterward thrown upon Israel, that they tarried so long in the wilderness, because they had lost themselves there, and could not find the way out. No, the matter was not so; in every stage, in every step, they went out of the wilderness of Sinai, and rested in the wilderness of Paran. Note, All our removers in this world are but from one wilderness to another. The changes which we think will be for the better do not always prove so; while we carry about with us, wherever we go, the common infirmities of human nature, we must expect, wherever we go, to meet with its common calamities; we should never be at rest, never at home, till we come to heaven, and all will be well there.

II. A particular draught of the order of their march, according to the late model. 1. Judah's squadron marched first, v. 14. 16. The leading standard, and the signet of his army, was an earnest of the sceptre, which in David's time was committed to it, and looked farther to the Captain of our salvation, of whom it was likewise foretold, that unto him should the gathering of the people be. 2. Then came those two families of the Levites which were instructed to carry the tabernacle. As soon as ever the cloud was taken up, the tabernacle was taken down, and packed up for removing, v. 17. And the other six tribes were had with the more bulky part of the tabernacle. This frequent removing of the tabernacle in all their journeys signified the moveableness of that ceremonial dispensation. That which was so often shifted would at length vanish away, Heb. 8. 13. 3. Reuben's squadron marched forward next, taking place after Judah, according to the commandment of the Lord, v. 18. 20. 4. Then the Kohathites followed with their tents, the sixth squadron, or the ark, the tabernacle, in the midst of the camp, the safest and most honourable place, v. 21. And they, that is, (says the margin,) the Gershonites, and Mardenites, did set up the tabernacle against they came; and perhaps it is expressed thus generally, because, if there was occasion, not those Levites only, but the other Israelites that were in the first squadron, lent a hand to the tabernacle to hasten the rearing of it up, even before they set up their own tents. 5. Ephraim's squadron followed last after the ark, (v. 22. 24.) to which some think, the Psalmist alludes, when he prays, (Ps. 80. 2.) Before Ephraim, Benjamin and Manasseh, the three tribes that composed this squadron, stir up thy strength; and the ark is called his strength, Ps. 78. 61.) and come and save us. 6. Dan's squadron followed last, v. 28. 27. It is called the rearward, or gathering host, of all the camps, because it gathered up all that were left behind; not the women and children, these we may suppose were taken care of by the heads of their families, in their respective tribes; but all the unclean, the mixed multitude, and all that were weak and feeble, and cast behind in their march. Note, He that leadeth Joseph like a flock, has a tender regard to the hindmost, (John 17. 12.) that cannot keep pace with the rest, and of all that are given him, he will lose none. See Ezek. 34. 16.

29. And Moses said unto Hobab, the son of Raguel the Midianite, Moses' father-in-law, We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good: for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel. 30. And he said unto him, I will not go; but I will depart to mine own land, and to my kindred. 31. And he said, Leave us not I pray thee: forasmuch as thou knowest how we are to encamp in the wilderness, and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes. 32. And it shall be, if thou go with us, yea, it shall be, that what goodness the Lord shall do unto us, the same will we do unto thee. 33. And they departed from the mount of the Lord three days' journey: and the ark of the covenant of the Lord went before them in the three days' journey, to search out a resting-place for them. 34. And the cloud of the Lord was upon them by day, when they went out of the camp. 35. And it came to pass, when the ark set forward, that Moses said, Rise up, Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered, and let them that hate thee flee before thee. 36. And when it rested, he said, Return O Lord, unto the many thousands of Israel.

I. An account of what passed between Moses and Hobab, now upon this advanced which the camp of Israel made toward Canaan. Some think that Hobab was a brother-in-law to Moses, others that he was a father-in-law; but the latter is the more probable because that, Exod. 18. 18. Here Hobab, (alias Reuel, or Raguel,) 18. 18. and that when the father, being aged, went to his own land, (Exod. 18. 27.) he left his son Hobab with Moses, as Barzillai left Chimham with David; and the same word signifies both a father-in-law, and a brother-in-law. Now this Hobab stopped contentedly in the land of Edom, while they encamped at mount Sinai near his own country; but now they were removing, he was for going back to his own country and kindred, and his father's house.

Here is, 1. The kind invitation Moses gives him to go forward with them to Canaan, v. 29. He tempts him with a promise that they would certainly be kind to him, and puts God's word in for security, The Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel. As if he had said, "Come, cast in thy lot among us, and thou shalt fare as we fare; and we have the promise of God for it, that we shall fare well." Note, Those that are bound for the heavenly Canaan should invite and encourage all their friends to go along with them, for we shall have never the less of the treasures of the covenant, and the joys of heaven, for others coming in to share with us. And what argument can be more powerful with us to take God's people for our people, than this, that God hath spoken good concerning them. It is good having fellowship with those that have fellowship with God, (1 John 1. 3.) and going with those with whom God is, Zech. 8. 23.

2. Hobab's inclination, and present resolution, to go back to his own country, v. 30. One would have thought that he who had seen so much of the special presence and power of God, and such surprising tokens of his favour to them, should not have needed much invitation to embark with them. But his refusal must be imputed to the affection he had for his native air and soil, which was not overpowered, as it ought to have been, by a believing regard to the promise of God, and a value for covenant-blessings. He was indeed a son of Abraham's loins, (for the Midianites descended from him,) and such a personage as a son of Abraham's faith, (Heb. 11. 8.) else he had not given Moses this answer. Note, The things of this world which are seen, draw strongly from the pursuit of the things of the other world, which are not seen. The magnetic virtue of this earth prevails with most people above the attractions of heaven itself.

The great importunity Moses used with him to alter his resolution, v. 31, 32. He urges, (1.) That he might be serviceable to them, "We are to encamp in the wilderness," (a country well known to Hobab,) "and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes, not to show us where we must encamp, nor what way we must march," (the cloud was to direct that,) "but to show us the conveniences and inconveniences of the place we march through, and encamp in, that we may make the best use we can of the conveniences, and the best fence we can against the inconveniences." Note, It will very well with our trust in God's providence, to make use of the help of our friends in those things wherein they are capable of being serviceable to us. Even they that were led by miracle must not slight the ordinary means of direction. Some think that Moses suggests this to Hobab, not because he expected much benefit from his information, but to please him with the thought of being some way useful to so great a body, and so to draw him on with them, by inspiring him with an ambition to obtain that honour. Calvin gives quite another sense of this place, very agreeably with the original, which yet I do not find taken notice of by any since, "Leave us go, I pray thee, but come along, to share in the promised land, for therefore hast thou known our encampment in the wilderness, and hast been to us instead of eyes; and we cannot make the amends for sharing with us in our hardships, and doing us so many good offices, unless thou go with us to Canaan. Surely, for this reason, thou didst set out with us, that thou mightest go on with us." Note, Those that have begun well should use that as a reason why they should continue, and take the benefit and recompense of all they have done and suffered. (2.) That they would be kind to him, (v. 32.) What goodness the Lord shall do to us, the same will we do to thee. Note, [1.] We can give only what we receive. We can do no more service and kindness to our friends, than God is pleased to put into the power of our hand to do. This is all we dare promise, to do good, as God shall enable us. [2.] Those that share with God's Israel in their labours and hardships, shall share with them in their comforts and honours. Those that are willing to take their lot with them in the wilderness, shall have their lot with them in Canaan; if we suffer with them, we shall reign with them, 2 Tim. 2. 12, Luke, 22, 28, 29.

We do not find any reply that Hobab here made to Moses, and therefore we hope that his silence gave consent, and he did not leave them, but that, when he perceived he might be useful, he preferred that before the gratifying of his own inclination; in this case he left us a good example. And we find (Judg. 1. 16, 1 Sam. 15. 6.) that his family was no loser by it.

II. An account of the communion between God and Israel this time. First, left with them, (v. 13.) that Moses went where they had seen his glory and heard his voice, and had been taken into covenant with him; (they must not expect that such appearances of God to them, as they had there been blessed with, should be constant;) they departed from that celebrated mountain, which we never read of in scripture any more, unless with reference to these past stories; now we hear from the new covenant, how it is renewed, Sis. 2. 15. 16. This is my rest for ever, (Ps. 132. 14.) and of which we must say so. But when they left the mount of the Lord, they took with them the ark of the covenant of the Lord, by which their stated communion with God was to be kept up. For, (1.) By it God did direct their paths. The ark of the covenant went before them, some think, in place, at least, in this respect, that it was an object of the order of the camp. It was carried in the midst of the camp, yet the cloud that hovered over it directed all their motions. The ark, that is, the God of the ark, is said to search out a resting-place for them; not that God's infinite wisdom and knowledge need to make searches, but every place they were directed to was as convenient for them, as if the wisest man they had among them had been employed to go before them, and mark out the camp to the best advantage. Thus Canaan is said to be a land which God giveth out, Ezek. 20. 28. 2. By it they did in all their ways acknowledge God, looking upon it as a token of God's presence: when that moved, or rested, they had their eye up unto God. Moses, as the mouth of the congregation, lifted up a prayer, both at the removing and the resting of the ark; thus their going out and coming in were sanctified by prayer, and it is an example to us to begin and end every day's journey, and every day's work, with prayer. [1.] Here is his prayer when the ark set forward, (v. 35.) Rise up, Lord, and let thine enemies be scattered. They were now in a desolate country, but they were marching toward an enemy's country, and their dependence was upon God for success and victory in their wars, as well as for direction and supply in the wilderness. David used this prayer (Psa. 17.1. for he also fought the Lord's battles. [2.] There are those in the world that are enemies to God, and haters of him: secret and open enemies; enemies to his truths, his laws, his ordinances, his people. [2.] The scattering and defeating of God's enemies is a thing to be earnestly desired, and believably expected, by all the Lord's people. This prayer is a prophecy. Those that persist in rebellion against God are hastening upon their own destruction. [3.] For the scattering and defeating of God's enemies is their own destruction more but God's arising. When God arose to judgment, the work was soon done, Ps. 76. 8, 9. "Rise, Lord, as the sun riseth, to scatter the shadows of the night." Christ's rising from the dead scattered his enemies, Ps. 63. 18. [2.] His prayer when the ark rested, v. 36. [1.] That God would cause his people to rest. So read it, "Return, O Lord, from the thousands of Israel, return them to their rest again, after this fatigue." Thus it is said, (Isa. 63. 14.) The Spirit of the Lord caused him to rest. Thus he prays that God would give Israel success and victory abroad, and peace and tranquillity at home. [2.] That God himself would take up his rest among them. So we read it, Return, O Lord, from the thousands of Israel, the ten thousand thousand. So the word is. Note, First, That Christ is a paradisical garden, and there are many thousands belonging to God's Israel. Secondly, We ought in our prayers to concern ourselves for this body. Thirdly, The welfare and happiness of the Israel of God consist in the continual presence of God among them. Their safety consists not in their numbers, though they are thousands, many thousands, but in the favour of God and his gracious return to them, and residence with them. These thousands are ciphers, he is the figure, and upon this account, Happy art thou, O Israel, who is like unto thee, O people! {CHAP. XI.}

Hitherto things had gone pretty well in Israel, little interruption had been given to the methods of God's favour to them. It was now considered, that the mixing of Canaan with the Israelites was a thing unbecoming, in so holy a land; therefore God determined to put them to a trial, to teach them how to be ministers of his ordinances, to discipline them in war. These two passages are a collective narrative of the events of this chapter, the one relating to the people's own case, the other to their difficulties, or their dealings with their enemies. They are all embraced in one prayer of Moses, v. 1.-35. [3.] God promises to gratify them both; to appoint help for Moses, (v. 16, 17.) and to give the people flesh. [4.] He presently makes good both these promises. For, [1.] The Spirit of God qualifies the seventy elders for the government, v. 24... 30. [2.] The power of God brings quails to feast the people, v. 31, 32. Yet, [3.] The justness of God plagued them for their murmurings, v. 33.-35.

1. And when the people complained, it displeased the Lord; and the Lord heard it; and his anger was kindled; and the fire of the Lord burnt among them, and consumed them that were in the uttermost parts of the camp. 2. And the people cried unto Moses; and when Moses prayed unto the Lord, the fire was quenched. 3. And he called the name of the place Taborah, because the fire of the Lord burnt among them.

Here is, 1. The people's sin. They complained, v. 1. They were, as it were, complainers. So it is in the main. There were some secret grudgings and discontentments among them, which as yet did not break out into an open mutiny. But however God's anger was kindled, and he did this little fire kindle! They had received from God excellent laws and ordinances, and yet no sooner were they departed from the mount of the Lord, than they began to quarrel with God himself. See in this, (1.) The sinfulness of sin, which takes occasion from the commandment to be the more provoking. (2.) The weakness of the law through the flesh, Rom. 8. 3. The law discovered sin, but could not destroy it; checked it, but could not conquer it.

They complained. Interpreters inquire what they complained of; and truly, when they were furnished with so much matter for thanksgiving, one may justly wonder where they found any matter for complaint; we may conclude, that those who complained did not all agree in the cause. Some, perhaps, complained that they were removed from Mount Sinai, where they had been at rest so long, others that they did not remove sooner: some complained of the weather, others of the ways: some, perhaps, thought three days' journey was too long a march, others thought it not long enough, because it did not bring them into Canaan. When we consider how their camp was guarded, guarded, guarded, what good victualls they had, and good company, and what care was taken of them by the command of the people, that their feet should not swell, nor their clothes wear, (Deut. 8. 4.) we may ask, "What could have been done more for a people to make them easy?" And yet they complained. Note, Those that are of a fretful discontented spirit will always find something or other to quarrel with, though the circumstances of their outward condition be ever so comfortable. 2. God's just resentment of the affront given to him by this sin. The Lord heard it, though it does not appear that Moses did. Note, God is acquainted with the secret frettings and murmurings of the heart, though they are industriously concealed from men. What he took notice of, he was much displeased with, and his anger was kindled. Note, Though God's justice wills us leave to complain to him when there is cause, (Psa. 90. 4.) yet he is justly provoked, and takes it very ill, if we complain of him when there is no cause; such conduct in our inferiors provokes us.

3. The judgment wherewith God chastised them for this sin. The fire of the Lord burnt among them, such flashes of fire from the cloud as had consumed Nadab and Abihu. The fire of their wrath against God burned in their minds, (Ps. 59. 3.) and justly does the fire of God's wrath flash upon their bodies. We read of their murmurings several times, when they came first out of Egypt.

NUMBERS, XI.
Exod. 15, and 16, and 17. But we do not read of any plagues inflicted on them for their murmuring, as these were now; for now they had had great experience of God's care of them, and therefore now to distrust them was so much the more inexcusable. Now a fire was kindled against Jacob, (Ps. 78. 21.) but, to show how unwilling God was to destroy them, it fastened on those only that were in the utmost parts of the camp. Thus God's judgments came upon them gradually, that they might take warning. 4. Their cry to Moses, who was their tried intercessor, v. 2. When he slew them, then they sought him, and made their application to Moses to stand their friend. Note, (1.) When we complain without cause, it is just with God to give us cause to complain. (2.) Those that slight God's friends when they are in prosperity, would be glad to make them their friends when they are in distress: Father Abraham, send Lazarus. 5. The prevalency of Moses's intercession for them; when Moses prayed unto the Lord, (he was always ready to stand in the gap to turn away the wrath of God,) God had respect to him and his intercession, and, fire was quenched. By this it appears that God delights not in punishing, for when he has begun his controversy, he is soon prevailed with to let it fall. Moses was one of those worthies who by faith quenched the violence of fire. 6. A new name given hereupon to the place, to perpetuate the shame of a murmuring people, and the honour of a righteous God; the place was called Taberah, a burning, (v. 3.) that others might hear and fear, and take warning not to sin as they did, lest they should smart as they did, 1 Cor. 10. 10. 4. And the mixed multitude that was among them fell a lusting: and the children of Israel also went again, and said, Who shall give us flesh to eat? 5. We remember the fish which we did eat in Egypt freely; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic: But now our soul is dried away: there is nothing at all, besides this manna, before our eyes. 7. And the manna was as coriander-seed, and the colour thereof as the colour of bdellium. 8. And the people went about, and gathered it, and ground it in mills, or beat it in a mortar, and baked it in pans, and made cakes of it: and the taste of it was as the taste of fresh oil. 9. And when the dew fell upon the camp in the night, the manna fell upon it. 10. Then Moses heard the people weep throughout their families, every man in the door of his tent: and the anger of the Lord was kindled greatly; Moses also was displeased. 11. And Moses said unto the Lord, Wherefore hast thou afflicted thy servant? and wherefore have I not found favour in thy sight, that thou layest the burden of all this people upon me? 12. Have I conceived all this people? have I begotten them, that thou shouldest say unto me, Carry them in thy bosom, as a nursing father beareth the sucking child, unto the land which thou swarest unto their fathers? 13. Whence should I have flesh to give unto all this people? for they weep unto me, saying, Give us flesh, that we may eat. 14. I am not able to bear all this people alone, because it is too heavy for me. 15. And if thou deal thus with me, kill me, I pray thee, out of hand, if I have found favour in thy sight; and let me not see my wretchedness.

These verses represent things sadly unhinged, and out of order, in Israel: both the people and the prince uneasy.

1. Here is the people fretting and speaking against God himself, (as it is interpreted, Ps. 78. 19.) notwithstanding his glorious appearances both to them, and for them.

Observe, 1. Who were the criminals. (1.) The mixed multitude began, they fell a lusting, v. 4. The rabble that came with them out of Egypt, expecting only the land of promise, but not a state of probation in the way to it. They were hangmans on, who took hold of the skirts of the Jews, and would not go with them, only because they knew not how to be content; and were not contented with the fish tunes (as we say) abroad. These were the disorderly sheep that infected the flock, the leaven that leavened the whole lump. Note, A few factions, discontented, ill-natured people may do a great deal of mischief in the best societies, if great care be not taken to discountenance them. Such as these are an untoward generation, from which it is our will to save ourselves, Acts 2. 40. (2.) Even the children of Israel took the infection, as we are informed, v. 4. The whole seed joined themselves to the people of these abominations. The mixed multitude here spoken of were not numbered with the children of Israel, but set aside as a people God made no account of, and yet the children of Israel, forgetting their own character and distinction, helped themselves with them, and learned their way; as if the scum and outcasts of the camp were to be the privy-counsellors of it. The children of Israel, a people near to God, and highly privileged, yet drawn into rebellion against him! Oh how little honour has God in the world, when even the people which he formed for himself, to show forth his praise, were so much a dishonour to him! Therefore let none think that their external professions and privileges will be their security, either against Satan's temptations to sin, or God's judgments for sin: see 1 Cor. 10. 1, 2, 12.

2. What was the crime? they lusted and murmured. Though they had been lately corrected for this sin, and many of them overthrown for it, as God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah, and the smell of the fire was still in their nostrils, yet they returned to it, see Prov. 27. 22. (1.) They were satisfied with the plenty and dainties they had had in Egypt, (v. 5.) as if God had done them a great deal of wrong in taking them thence. While they were in Egypt, they sighed by reason of their burthens, for their lives were made bitter to them with hard bondage; and yet now they talk of Egypt as if they had all lived like princes there, when this serves as a colour for their present discontent. But, with what face can they talk of eating fish in Egypt, (v. 6.) unless they mean of fish, (as it is the common expression) the fish of Egypt, their portions at the tables of the Egyptians, as many times so many as they took. And as it was a good time, as if it cost them nothing, when they paid so dear for it with their hard service? They remember the cucumbers, and the leeks, and the onions, and the garlic, (precious stuff indeed to be fond of!) but they do not remember the brick-kilns, and the task-masters, the voice of the oppressor, and the smart of the whip. No, these are forgotten by these ungrateful people.
They were sick of the good provision God had made for them, v. 6. It was bread from heaven, angel's food; to show how unreasonably their complaint was, it is here described, v. 7-9. It was good for food, and pleasant to the eye, every grain like an orton pearl; it was wholesome food, and nourishing; it was not to be called dry bread, for it tasted like fresh oil; it was agreeable (the Jews say, Wisd. 16. 20.), to every man's palate; and tasted as he would have it; and though it was still the same, yet, by the different ways of dressing it, it yielded them a grateful variety; it cost them no money nor care, for it fell in the night while they slept. Nevertheless, in the midst of their dainties, when speaking of them, they lived upon free quarter, and yet could talk of Egypt's cheapness, and the fish they ate there freely. Nay, which was much more valuable than all this, the manna came from the immediate power and bounty of God, not from common providence, but from special favour. It was, as God's compassion, new every morning; always fresh, not as their food who live on shipboard. While they lived on manna, they seemed to have been exempted from the curse which sin has brought on man, that in the sweat of his face should he eat bread. And yet they speak of the manna with such scorn as if it were not good enough to be meat for swine. Our soul is dried away. They speak as if God dealt hardly with them, in allowing them to eat better food: at first they had the manna, and then the bread: at first God was more judged of by their discontent than by their complaint; at last, by their complaint rather than by their discontent. They were unsatisfied unless they had flesh to eat. They brought flocks and herds with them in great abundance out of Egypt; but either they were covetous, and could not find in their hearts to kill them, lest they should lessen their flocks; (they must have flesh as cheap as they had bread, or they would not be pleased;) or else they were curious, beef and mutton would not please them. They would have something more rare and delicate, like the fish they did eat in Egypt. Food would not serve, they must be feasted; they had feasted with God upon the peace-offerings, which they have their share of; but it seems God did not keep a table good enough for them, they must have daintier bits than any that came to his altar. Note, It is an evidence of the dominion of the carnal mind, when we are solicitous to have all the delights and satisfactions of sense wound up to the height of pleasurableness. Be not desirous of dainties, Prov. 23. 1-3. If God give us food convenient, we ought to be thankful, though we do not eat the fat and drink the sweat.

(4.) They distrusted the power and goodness of God, as insufficient for their supply; Who will give us flesh to eat? taking it for granted that God could not do it (Ps. 78. 19, 20.) Can he give flesh also? Though he had given them flesh with their bread once, when he saw fit, (Exod. 16. 13.) they might have expected that he would have done it again, and in mercy, if, instead of murmuring, they had prayed. Note, It is an offence to God to let our desires go beyond our trials.

(5.) They were eager and importunate in their desires; they lusted a lust, (so the word is,) lusted greatly and greedily, till they went again for vexation. So childish were the children of Israel, and so humourous, they cried, because they had not what they would have, and when they would have it. They did not offer up this desire to God, but would rather be beholden to any one else than to him. We should not indulge ourselves in any desire which we cannot in faith turn into prayer, as we cannot when we ask meat for our lust, Ps. 78. 18. For this sin, the anger of the Lord was kindled greatly against them, which is written for our admonition, that we should not lust after evil things, as they lusted, 1 Cor. 10. 6.

(6.) Flesh is good food, and may lawfully be eaten, yet they are said to lust after evil things; what a lawful thing becomes evil to us, when it is what God does not allot to us, and yet we eagerly desire it.

II. Moses himself, though so meek and good a man, is uneasy upon this occasion. Moses also was displeased. Now.

1. It must be confessed that the provocation was very great. These murmurrings of their's reflected great dishonour upon God, and Moses laid to heart the reproaches cast on him. They also created great vexation to himself; they knew that he did his utmost for their good, and that he did nothing, nor could, without a divine appointment; and yet, to be thus continually teased and clamoured against by an unreasonable ungrateful people, would break in upon the temper even of Moses himself. God considered this, and therefore we do not find that he chid him.

2. Yet Moses expressed himself otherwise than became him upon this provocation, and came short of his duty both to God and Israel in these expositions. (1.) He undervalues the honour God had put upon him, in making him the illustrious minister of his power and grace, in the deliverance and conduct of that peculiar people, which might have been sufficient to balance the burden. (2.) He complains too much of a sensible grievance, and lays too near his heart a little noise and fatigue. If he could not bear the toil of government, which was but running with the footman, how would he bear the terrors of war, which was "contending with horses?" He might easily have furnished himself with considerations enough to enable him to slight their clamours, and make nothing of them. (3.) He indulges this present passion, and "is the burthen of the people lay upon him; whereas God himself did, in effect, ease him of all the burden. Moses needed not to be in care to provide quarters for them, or victuals; God did all. And if any difficult case happened, he needed not to be in any perplexity while he had the oracle to consult, and, in it, the divine wisdom to direct him, the divine authority to back him and bear him out, and almighty power itself to dispense rewards and punishments. (4.) He is not so sensible as he ought to be of the obligation he lay under, by virtue of the divine commission and command, to do the utmost he could for his people, when he suggests that, because they were not the children of his body, therefore he was not concerned to take a fatherly care of them, though God himself, who might employ him as his pleasure, he had promised him a father to them. (5.) He takes too much to himself when he asks, Whence should I have flesh to give them? (v. 13.) as if he were the housekeeper, and not God. Moses gave them not the bread, John 6. 32. Nor was it expected that he should give them the flesh, but as an instrument in God's hand; and if he meant, Whence should God have it for them? an infinitely more ample limit than any of Israel.

(6.) He speaks distrustfully of the divine grace, when he depairs of being able to bear all this people, v. 14. Had the work been much less, he could not have gone through it in his own strength; but, had it been much greater, through God strengthening him, he might have done it. (7.) It was worst of all passionately to wish for death, and desire to be killed out of hand, because just at this time his life was made a little uneasy to him, v. 15. Is this Moses? is this the meekest of all the men on the earth? The best have their infirmities, and fail sometimes in the exercise of that grace which they are most eminent for. But God graciously overlooked Moses’s passion at this time, and therefore we must not be severe in our animadversions upon it, but pray, Lord, lead us not into temptation.

16. And the Lord said unto Moses, Gather unto me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest to be the elders of the people, and officers over them; and bring them unto the tabernacle of the congregation, that they may stand there with thee. 17. And I will come down and talk with thee there: and I will take of the spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they shall bear the burden of the people with thee, that thou bear it not thyself alone. 18. And say unto these, Sanctify yourselves against to-morrow, and ye shall eat flesh: for ye have wept in the ears of the Lord, saying, Who shall give us flesh to eat? for it was well with us in Egypt: therefore the Lord will give you flesh, and ye shall eat. 19. Ye shall not eat one day, nor two days, nor five days, neither ten days, nor twenty days; 20. But even a whole month, until it come out at your nostrils, and it be loathsome unto you: because that ye have despised the Lord which is among you, and have wept before him, saying, Why came we forth out of Egypt? 21. And Moses said, The people among whom I am, are six hundred thousand footmen; and thou hast said, I will give them flesh, that they may eat a whole month. 22. Shall the flocks and the herds be slain for them, to suffice them? or shall all the fish of the sea be gathered together for them, to suffice them? 23. And the Lord said unto Moses, Is the Lord’s hand waxed short? thou shalt see now whether my word shall come to pass unto thee or not.

We have here God’s gracious answer to both the foregoing complaints, wherein his goodness takes occasion, from man’s badness, to appear so much the more illustrious.

I. Provision is made for the redress of the grievances Moses complains of. If he find the weight of government too heavy upon him, though he was a little too passionate in his remonstrance, yet he shall be eased, not by being discarded from the government himself, as he justly might have been, if God had been extreme to mark what he said amiss, but by having assistants appointed him who should be, as the apostle speaks, (1 Cor. 12. 28.) helps, governments, that is, helps in government, not at all to lessen or eclipse his honour, but to make the work more easy to him, and to bear the burthen of the people with him. And, that this provision might be both agreeable and really serviceable,

1. Moses is directed to nominate the persons, v. 16. The people were too hot, and heady, and tumultuous, to be intrusted with the election; Moses must please himself in the choice, that he may not afterward complain. The number he is to choose is seventy men, according to the number of the souls that went down into Egypt. He must choose such as he knew to be elders; that is, wise and experienced men. Those that had acquit themselves best are set of thousands and hundreds, (Exod. 18. 24.) purchase to themselves now this good degree. “Choose such as thou knowest to be elders indeed, and not in name only, officers that execute their office.” We read of the same number of elders (Exod. 24. 1.) that went up with Moses to mount Sinai, but they were distinguished only for that occasion, these for a perpetuity; and according to this constitution, the Sanhedrin, or great council of the Jews, which in after-times sat at Jerusalem, and was the highest court of judgment among them, consisted of seventy men. Our Saviour seems to have had an eye to it in the choice of seventy disciples, who were to be assistants to the apostles, Luke 10.

2. God promises to qualify them. If they were not found fit for the employ, they should be made fit, else they might prove more a hindrance than a help. So to have been called to divine services, and to have talked too boldly with God, yet God does not therefore break off communication with him; he bears a great deal with us, and we must with one another; I will come down (said God) and talk with thee when thou art more calm and composed; and I will take of the same spirit of wisdom, and piety, and courage, that is upon thee, and put it upon them. Not that Moses had the less of the Spirit for their sharing, nor that they were hereby made equal with him; Moses was still well supplied. (Deut. 34. 10.) they were clothed with a spirit of government proportionable to their place, and with a spirit of prophecy to prove their divine call to it, the government being a theocracy. Note, (1.) Those whom God employs in any service, he qualifies for it, and those that are not in some measure qualified, cannot think themselves daily called. (2.) All good qualifications are for God; every perfect gift is from the Father of light.

II. Even the humour of the discontented people shall be gratified too, that every mouth may be stopped. They are bid to sanctify themselves, (v. 18.) that is, to put themselves into a posture to receive such a proof of God’s power as should be a token both of mercy and judgment. Prepare to meet thy God, O Israel, Amos 4. 12.

1. God promises, (shall I say?) he threatens rather, that they should have their fill of flesh; that for a month together, they should not only be fed, but feasted, with flesh, beside their daily manna; and, if they had not a better government of their appetites than now it appeared they had, they should be surfeited with it, (v. 19, 20.) Ye shall eat till it come out at your nostrils, and become loathsome to you. See here, (1.) The vanity of all the delights of sense: they will cloy but not satisfy: spiritual pleasures are the contrary. As the world passes away, so do the lusts of it, 1 John 2. 17. What was greedily coveted, in a little time comes to be nauseated. (2.) What brutish sins (and worse than brutish) glutony and drunkenness are: they put a force upon nature, and make that the sickness of the body which should be its health; they are sins that are their own punishments, and not that punishment he would, (3.) What a righteous thing it is with God to make that loathsome to men which they have inordinately lusted after. God could make them despeile flesh as much as they had despeled manna.
2. Moses objects the improbability of making good this word, v. 21, 22. It is an objection like that which the disciples made, (Mark 8. 26.) "Lord, shall we spend our hand to satisfy these men?" Some excuse Moses here, and construe what he says as only a modest inquiry which way the supply must be expected; but it savours too much of indifference and distrust of God to be justified. He objects the number of the people, as if He, that provided bread for them all, could not, by the same unlimited power, provide flesh too. He reckons it must be too heavy a burden for them, if they are the most bulky animals; little thinking that the flesh of birds, little birds, should serve the purpose. God sees not as man sees, but his thoughts are above our's. He objects the greediness of the people's desires, in that word, to suffice them. Note, Even true and great believers sometimes find it hard to trust God under the discouragements of second causes, and again, that, to believe in hope. Moses himself can scarcely forbear saying, Can God furnish a table in the wilderness? when this was become the common cry. No doubt this was his infancy.

3. God gives a short but sufficient answer to the objection, in that question, Is the Lord's hand waxed short? v. 23. If Moses had remembered the years of the right hand of the Most High, he had not started all these difficulties; therefore he reproved him of them, intimating that this objection reflected upon the divine power, which he himself had been so often, not only the witness, but the instrument of. Had he forgotten what wonders the divine power had wrought for that people, when it inflicted the plagues of Egypt, divided the sea, breached the rock, and rained bread from heaven? Was that power abated? Was God weaker than he used to be? Or was he tired? He is as strong to-day as he was yesterday. Whatever our unbelieving hearts may suggest to the contrary, it is certain, (1.) That God's hand is not short, his power cannot be restrained in the exerting of itself by any thing but his own will; with him nothing is impossible. That hand is not short which measures the waters, metes out the heavens, (Isa. 40. 12.) and grasps the winds, Prov. 30. 4. (2.) That it is not waxed short. He is as strong to-day as he was yesterday. And this is sufficient to silence all our distrusts, when means fail us, Is anything too hard for the Lord? God here brings Moses to this first principle, sets him back in his lesson, to learn the ancient name of God, The Lord God Almighty, and puts the proof upon the issue, Thou shalt see whether my word shall come to pass or not. This magnifies God's word above all his name, his works never come short of it. If he speaks, it is done.

24. And Moses went out, and told the people the words of the Lord, and gathered the seventy men of the elders of the people, and set them round about the tabernacle.

25. And the Lord came down in a cloud, and spake unto him, and took of the spirit that was upon him, and gave it unto the seventy elders: and it came to pass, that, when the spirit rested upon them, they prophesied, and did not cease. 26. But there remained two of the men in the camp, the name of the one was Eldad, and the name of the other Medad: and the spirit rested upon them, and they were of them that were written, but went not out unto the tabernacle: and they prophesied in the camp. 27. And there ran a young man, and told Moses, and said, Eldad and Medad do prophesy in the camp. 28. And Joshua the son of Nun, the servant of Moses, one of his young men, answered and said, My lord Moses, forbid them. 29. And Moses said unto him, Enviest thou for my sake? Would God that all the Lord's people were prophets, and that the Lord would put his spirit upon them! 30. And Moses gat him into the camp, he and the elders of Israel.

We have here the performance of God's word to Moses, that he should have help in the government of Israel.

I. Here is the case of the seventy privy-counselors in general. Moses though a little disturbed by the tumult of the people, yet was thoroughly composed by the communion with God, and soon came to himself again. And according as the matter was concerted, 1. He did his part, he presented the seventy elders before the Lord, round the tabernacle, (v. 24.) that they might there stand ready to receive the grace of God, in the place where he had manifested himself, and that the people also might be witnesses of the solemn institution; they prophesied, and did not cease all that day, and (some think) only that day. They discoursed to the people of the things of God, and perhaps commented upon the law they had lately received, with admirable clearness, and fulness, and readiness, and aptness of expression, so that all who heard them might see and say, that God was with them of a truth. See Cor. 14. 24. 25. Thus, long afterward, Saul was marked for the government, by the gift of prophecy, which came upon him for a day and a night, 1 Sam. 10. 6, 11. When Moses was yet to fetch Israel out of Egypt, Aaron was appointed to be his prophet; (Exod. 7. 1.) but, now that God had called him to other work, in his room Moses has seventy prophets to attend him. Note, Those are fittest to rule in God's Israel that are well acquainted with divine things, and are apt to teach to edification.

II. Here is the particular case of two of them, Eldad and Medad, probably two brothers.

1. They were nominated by Moses to be assistants in the government, but they went not out unto the tabernacle as the rest did, v. 26. Calvin conjectures that the summons was sent them, but that it did not find them, they being somewhere out of the way, so that, though they were written, yet they were not called. Most think that they declined coming to the tabernacle, out of an excess of modesty and humility; being sensible of their own weakness and unworthiness, they desired to be excused from coming into the government. Their principle was their praise; but their practice, in not obeying orders, was their fault.

2. The Spirit of God found them out in the camp, where they were hid among the stuff: and they prophesied, that is, they exercised their gift of praying, preaching, and praising God, in some private tent. Note, The Spirit of God is not tied to the tabernacle, but, like the wind, blows wherever he listeth, John 3. 8. Whither can we go from that Spirit? There was a special providence in it that these two should be absent, for thus it appeared that it was indeed a divine Spirit which the elders were actuated by, and that Moses gave them not that Spirit, but God himself. They modestly declined preferment, but God forces it upon them; nay, they have the honour of being named, which the rest have not: for they that humbled themselves shall be exalted; and those are most fit for government who show least ambition of it.

3. Information of this is given to Moses, (v. 27.) "Eldad and Medad do prophesy in the camp; there is a conclave in such a tent, and Eldad and Medad are holding forth there, from under the inspection and presidency of Moses, and out of the communion of the rest of the elders." Whatever the person was that brought the tidings, he seems to have looked upon it as an irregularity.

We must not now to the best am silenced, (v. 28.) My lord Moses, forbid them; it is probable that Joshua himself was one of the seventy, which made him the more jealous for the honour of their order. He takes it for granted that they were not under any necessitating impulse, for the spirit of the prophets is subject to the prophets, and therefore he would have them either not to prophesy at all, or to come to the tabernacle, and prophesy in council, with the rest, lest they should be punished for what they had done, but only restrained for the future. This motion he made from a good principle, not out of any personal dislike to Eldad and Medad, but out of an honest zeal for that which he apprehended to be the unity of the church, and in concern for the honour of God and Moses.

5. Moses rejects the motion, and reproves him that made it, (v. 29.)“But Moses arose and said. Thou art not to know what manner of spirit thou art of." Though Joshua was Moses's particular friend and confidant, though he said this out of a respect to Moses, whose honour he was very lexic to see lessened by the call of those elders, yet Moses reproves him, and in him, all that show such a spirit. (1.) We must not secretly grieve at the gifts, graces, and usefulness of others. It was the fault of John's disciples that they were so indignant at Christ's seeking to be known, because it shaded their Master's, John 3. 56. (2.) We must not be transported into heats against the weaknesses and infirmities of others. Granting that Eldad and Medad were guilty of an irregularity, yet Joshua was too quick and too warm upon them. Our zeal must always be tempered with the meekness of wisdom; the righteousness of God needs not the wrath of man, 1 John. 1. 29. (3.) We must not move to the best and most successful heads of a party. Paul would not have his name made use of to patronize a faction, 1 Cor. 1. 12, 13. (4.) We must not be forward to condemn and silence those that differ from us, as if they did not follow Christ, because they do not follow him with us, Mark 9. 38. Shall we reject those whom Christ has owned? or restrain any from doing good because they are not in our way of thinking? Moses was of another spirit; so far from silencing these two, and quenching the spirit in them, that he wishes all the Lord's people were prophets, that is, that he would put his Spirit upon them. Not that he would have any set up for prophets that were not duly qualified, or that he expected that the spirit of prophecy should be made thus common; but thus he expresses thelove and esteem he had for all the Lord's people. the representatives took in the gifts of others, and how far he was from being displeased at Eldad's and Medad's prophesying from under his eye. Such an excellent spirit as this blessed Paul was of, rejoicing that Christ was preached, though it was by those who therein intended to add affliction to his bonds, Phil 1. 16. We ought to be pleased that God is served and glorified, and good done, though to the lessening of our credit, and the credit of our way.

6. The elders, now newly ordained, immediately entered upon their administration, (v. 30.) when their call was sufficiently attested by their prophesying, they went with Moses to the camp, and applied themselves to business. Having received the gift, they ministered the same as good stewards.

And now Moses was pleased that he had so many to share with him in his work and honour. And, (1.) Let the testimony of Moses be credited by those who desire to be in power. That government is a burthen. It is a burthen of care and trouble to those who make conscience of the duty of it; and to those who do not, it will prove a heavier burthen in the day of account, when they fall under the doom of the unprofitable servant that buried his talent.

(2.) Let the example of Moses be imitated by those that are in power; let them not despise the advice and assistance of others, but desire it, and be thankful for it; not coveting to monopolize wisdom and power. In the multitude of counselors there is safety.

31. And there went forth a wind from the Lord, and brought quails from the sea, and let them fall by the camp, as it were a day's journey on this side, and as it were a day's journey on the other side, round about the camp, as it were two cubits high upon the face of the earth. 32. And the people stood up all that day, and all that night, and all the next day, and they gathered the quails: he that gathered least gathered ten homers: and they spread them all abroad for themselves round about the camp. 33. And while the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the wrath of the Lord was kindled against the people, and the Lord smote the people with a very great plague. 34. And he called the name of that place Kibroth-hattaavah: because there they buried the people that lusted. 35. And the people journeyed from Kibroth-hattaavah unto Hazeroth; and abode at Hazeroth.

God having performed his promise to Moses, gave him assessors in the government, and proving thereby the power he has over the spirits of men, by his Spirit: he here performs his promise to the people: he gives them flesh, and proving thereby his power over the inferior creatures, and his dominion in the kingdom of nature. Observe,

1. How the great people were gratified with flesh in abundance, v. 31. A wind (a south-east wind, as appears, Ps. 78. 26.) brought quails. It is uncertain what sort of animals they were; the psalmist calls them gathered food, or flesh of wing. The learned Bishop Patrick inclines to agree with some modern writers, who think they were locusts, a delicious sort of food well known in these parts, the rather, because they were brought with a wind, by in heaps, and were dried in the sun for use. Whatever they were, they answered the intention they served, for a month's feast for Israel; such an indulgent Father was God to this errant family. Locusts, that had been a plague to fruitful Egypt, feeding upon the fruits, were a blessing to a barren wilderness, being themselves fed upon.
2. How greedy they were of this flesh that God sent them; they flew upon the spoil with an insatiable appetite, not regarding what Moses had told them from God, that they would surfeit upon it, v. 32. Two days and a night they were at it, gathering flesh, till every master of a family had brought home a great burden of it. Cut off, as it were, the head from the body; but at least David longed for the water of the well of Bethlehem, but would not drink it, when he had it, because it was obtained by venturing; much more reason these Israelites had to refuse this flesh, which was obtained by murmuring, and which they might easily perceive, by what Moses said, was given them in anger; but those that are under the power of a carnal mind will have their lusts fulfilled, therefore it be to the certain damage and ruin of their precious souls.

3. How dear they paid for their feasts, when it came into the reckoning, v. 33, The Lord smote them with a very great plague; some bodily disease, which probably was the effect of their surfeit, and was the death of many of them, and those, it is likely, the ringleaders in the mutiny. Note, God often grants the desire of sinners in wrath, while he denies the desire of his own people in love. He gave them their request, but sent leanness into their soul, Ps. 106. 15. By all that was said to them they were not estranged from their lusts, and therefore, while the meat was in their mouths, the wrath of God came upon them, Ps. 78. 30, 31. What we immediately desire, if we obtain it, (we have reason to fear,) will be some way or other a grief and cross to us, and will not suffice for them, and then plagued them, (1.) To save the reputation of his own power; that it might not be said, "He would not have cut them off, had he been able to suffice them." And, (2.) To show us the meaning of the prosperity of sinners; it is their preparation for ruin, they are fed as an ox for the slaughter.

Lastly, The remembrance of this is preserved in the name given to the place, v. 34. Moses called it Kibrot-tapuchah, the graves of lusters, or of lust. And well it had been, if these graves of Israel's lusts had proved the graves of Israel's lust; the warning was designed to be so, but it had not its due effect, for it follows, (Ps. 78. 32.) For all this they sinned still.

CHAP. XII.

In the foregoing chapter we had the vexation which the people gave to Moses; in this we have his patience tried by his own relations. I. Miriam and Aaron, his own brother and sister, affronted him, v. 1, 3. II. God called them to an account for it, v. 4, 5. III. Miriam was smitten with leprosy, v. 6. IV. Aaron submits, and Moses meekly intercedes for her, v. 11, 13. V. She is healed, but put to shame for seven days, v. 14, 16. And this is recorded to show that the best persons and families have both their follies and their crosses.

AND Miriam and Aaron spake against Moses because of the Ethiopian woman whom he had married; for he had married an Ethiopian woman. 2. And they said, Hath the Lord indeed spoken only by Moses? hath he not spoken also by us? And the Lord heard it. 3. (Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth.)

Here is,

1. The unbecoming passion of Aaron and Miriam, they spake against Moses, v. 1. If Moses, the received in his sight from God, yet received so many slights and affronts from men, shall any of us think such trials either strange or hard, and be either provoked or discouraged by them? But he who would have thought that disturbance should be created to Moses, (1.) From those that were themselves serious and good; nay, that were eminent in religion, Miriam a prophetess, Aaron a high priest, both of whom were in a special manner with Moses for the deliverance of Israel? Mic. 6. 4. I sent before thee Moses, Aaron, and Miriam. (2.) From those that were his nearest relations, his own brother and sister, who shone so much by rays borrowed from him? Thus the spouse complains, (Cant. 1. 6.) My mother's children were angry with me; and quarrels among relations are in a special manner grievances: A brother offended is harder to be reconciled unto than a strong city. Yet this helps to confirm the call of Moses, and shows that his advancement was purely by the divine favour, and not by any compact or collusion with his kindred, who themselves grudged at his advancement. Neither did any of our Saviour's kindred believe on him, John 7. 5. It should seem that Miriam began the quarrel, and Aaron, not having been employed or consulted in the choice of the seventy elders, was for the present left out, and so was the sooner drawn in to take his sister's part. It would grieve one to see the hand of Aaron in so many trespasses, but it shows that the law made men priests which had infirmity. Satan prevailed first with Eve, and by her with Adam; see what need we have to take heed of being drawn into quarrels by our relations, for we know not how great a matter of little fire may kindle. Aaron seems to have remembered how Moses stood by his friend, when God was angry with him for making the golden calf, (Deut. 9. 26.) and not to have rendered him evil for good.

Two things they quarrelled with Moses about.

[1.] About his marriage: some think a late marriage with a Cushite or Arabian; others because of Zipporah, whom, on this occasion, they called, in scorn, an Ethiopian woman, and who, they insinuated, had too great an influence upon Moses in the choice of these seventy elders; perhaps there was some private falling out between Zipporah and Miriam, which occasioned some hot words, and one peevish reflection introduced another, till Moses and Aaron came to be interested. [2.] About his government: not the mismanagement of it, but the monopolizing of it, v. 2, "Hath the Lord spoken only by Moses? Must not the persons on whom the spirit of prophecy shall come? Hath he not spoken also by us?" Might not we have had a hand in that affair, and preferred our friends, as well as Moses his? They could not deny that God had spoken by Moses, but it was plain that he had sometimes spoken also by them; and that which they intended, was, to make themselves equal with him, though God had so many ways directed and helped him personally. Moses was the greatest, is a sin which easily besets disciples themselves, and it is exceedingly sinful. Even those that are well preferred, are seldom pleased if others be better preferred. Those that excel are commonly envied.

2. The wonderful patience of Moses under this provocation. The Lord heard it, (v. 2.) but Moses spake not again like as before. (3.) he was very meek. He had a great deal of reason to be affronted; it was ill-natured and ill-timed, when the people were disposed to mutiny, and had lately given him a great deal of vexation with their murmurings, which would be in danger of breaking out again, when thus headed and counsened by Aaron and Miriam; but he, as a deep man, heard not. When God's honour was concerned, as in the case of the golden calf, no man more zealous than Moses, but when his own honour was touched, no man more meek; as bold as a lion in the cause of God, but as mild as a lamb in his own cause. God's people are the meek of the earth, (Zeph. 2. 3.) but some are more remarkable than others for this grace, as Moses, who was thus fitted for the work he was called to, which required all the meekness he had, and sometimes more. And sometimes the unkindness of our friends is a greater trial of our meekness than the malice of our enemies. Christ himself records his own meekness, (Matth. 11. 29.) I am meek and lowly in heart; and the copy of meekness which Christ has set was without a blot, that of Moses was not.

4. And the Lord spake suddenly unto Moses, and unto Aaron, and unto Miriam, Come out ye three, unto the tabernacle of the congregation. And they three came out. 5. And the Lord came down in the pillar of the cloud, and stood in the door of the tabernacle, and called Aaron and Miriam: and they both came forth. 6. And he said, Hear now my words: If there be a prophet among you, I the Lord will make myself known unto him in a vision, and will speak unto him in a dream. 7. My servant Moses is not so, who is faithful in all mine house. 8. With him will I speak mouth to mouth, even apparently, and not in dark speeches; and the similitude of the Lord shall he behold: wherefore then were ye not afraid to speak against my servant Moses? 9. And the anger of the Lord was kindled against them; and he departed.

Moses did not resent the injury done him, nor complain of it to God, nor make any appeal to him, but God resented it; he hears all we say in our passion, and is swift witness of our hasty speeches, which is a reason why we should resolutely bridle our tongues, that we speak not ill of others, and why we should patiently stop our ears, and not take notice of it, if others speak ill of us. I heard not, for thou wilt hear, Ps. 38. 13. 15. The more silent we are in our own cause, the more is God engaged to plead it. The accused innocent needs to say but little, if he knows the judge himself will be advocate.

1. The cause is called, and the parties are summoned forthwith to attend at the door of the tabernacle, v. 4. 5. Moses had often showed himself zealous for God's honour, and now God showed himself zealous for his reputation; for those that honour God he will honour, nor will he ever be behind-hand with any that appear for him. Judges of old sat in the gate of the city to try causes, and so on this occasion, the Shechinah in the cloud of glory stood at the door of the tabernacle, and Aaron and Miriam, as delinquents, were called to the bar.

II. Aaron and Miriam were made to know, that, great as they were, they must not pretend to be equal to Moses, nor set up as rivals with him, v. 6. 8. Were they prophets of the Lord? Of Moses it might be truly said, He more. It was true that God put a great deal of honour upon the prophets; however men mocked them and misused them, they were the favourites and intimates of heaven. God made, himself known to them, either by dreams when they were asleep, or by visions when they were awake, and by them made himself known to others. And those are happy, those are great, truly great, truly happy, to whom God makes himself known. Now he does it not by dreams and visions, as of old, but by the Spirit of wisdom and revelation, who makes known those things to babes, which prophets and kings desired to see, and might not. Hence in the last days, the days of the Messiah, the sons and daughters are prophets, (Isa. 11. 2.) because they shall be better acquainted with the mysteries of the kingdom of grace than even the prophets themselves were; see Heb. 1. 1, 2.

2. Yet the honour put upon Moses was far greater, (v. 7.) My servant Moses is not so, he excels them all. To recompense Moses for his meek and patient bearing of the affronts which Miriam and Aaron gave him, God not only cleared him, but prais'd him, and took that which was done by and to him for an encomium, which remains upon record to i.s immortal honour; and thus shall they that are reviled and persecuted for righteousness' sake, have a great reward in heaven, Christ will confess them before his Father and the holy angels. (1.) Moses was a man of great integrity and tried fidelity. He is faithful in all my house. This is put first in his character, because grace excels gifts, love excels knowledge, and sincerity in the service of God is a greater honour upon a man, and recommends him to the divine favour, more than learning, abstruse speculations, and an ability to speak with tongues. This is that part of Moses's character which the apostle quotes, when he would show that Christ was greater than Moses; making it out that he was so in this chief instance of his greatness, for Moses was faithful only as a servant, but Christ as a son, Heb. 3. 2, 5. 6. God instructed Moses to deliver his mind in all things to Israel; Israel intrusted him to treat for them with God; and he was faithful to both. He said and did every thing in the management of that great affair as became an honest good man, that aimed at nothing else but the honour of God, and the welfare of Israel. (2.) Moses was therefore honoured with clearer discoveries of God's mind, and a more intimate communication with God, than any other prophet whatsoever. He shall, [1.] Hear more from God than any other prophet, more clearly and distinctly; With him will I speak mouth to mouth, or face to face, (Exod. 33. 11.) as a man speaks to his friend, whom he discourses with freely and familiarly, and without any confusion or constraint, such as sometimes other prophets were under; as Ezekiel, and Daniel, and St. John himself, when God spake to them. By other prophets, God sent to his people reproofs, and predictions of good or evil, which were properly enough delivered in dark speeches, figures, types, and parables; but by Moses he gave laws to his people, and the institution of holy ordinances, which could by no means be delivered by dark speeches, but must be expressed in the plainest and most intelligible manner. [2.] He shall see more of God. The other theophanies were but similitudes of the Lord shall be behold, as he hath seen in Horeb, when God proclaimed his name before him. Yet he saw only the similitude of the Lord, angels and glorified saints always behold the face of our Father. Moses had the spirit of prophecy in a way peculiar to himself, and which set him far above all other prophets; yet he is least in the kingdom of heaven is greater than he; men must see our Lord Jesus infinitely exalt him, Heb. 3. 1, 8.

Now let Miriam and Aaron consider who it was that they insulted. Were ye not afraid to speak against my servant Moses? Against my servant, against Moses? so it runs in the original. How dare you abuse any servant of mine, especially such a servant as Moses, who is a friend, a confidant, and steward of the house?"—How durst they speak to the grief and reproach of one whom God had so much to say in the commendation of? Might they not expect that God would resent it, and take it as an affront to himself? Note, We have reason to be afraid of saying or doing any thing against the servants of God; it is at our peril if we do, for God will plead their cause, and reckon that which touches them touches the apple of his eye. It is a dangerous thing to offend Christ’s little ones, Matt. 18. 6. Those are presumptuous indeed, that are not afraid to speak evil of dignities, 2 Pet. 2. 10.

III. God, having thus showed them their fault and folly, next shows them his displeasure, v. 9. The anger of the Lord was kindled against them, of which perhaps some sensible indications were given in the change of the colour of the cloud, or some flashes of lightning from it. But, indeed, it was indication enough of his displeasure, that he departed, and would not so much as hear their excuse, for he needed not, understanding their thoughts afar off; and thus he would show that he was displeased. Note, The removal of God’s presence from us is the surest and saddest token of God’s displeasure against us. Woe unto us if he departs; and he never departs, till we by sin and folly drive him from us.

10. And the cloud departed from off the tabernacle; and, behold, Miriam became leprous, white as snow: and Aaron looked upon Miriam, and, behold, she was leprous.

11. And Aaron said unto Moses, Alas, my lord, I beseech thee, lay not the sin upon us, wherein we have done foolishly, and wherein we have sinned. 12. Let her not be as one dead, of whom the flesh is half-consumed when he cometh out of his mother’s womb. 13. And Moses cried unto the Lord, saying, Heal her now, O God, I beseech thee. 14. And the Lord said unto Moses, If her father had but spitt in her face, should she not be ashamed seven days? let her be shut out from the camp seven days, and after that let her be received in again. 15. And Miriam was shut out from the camp seven days: and the people journeyed not till Miriam was brought in again. 16. And afterward the people removed from Hazeroth, and pitched in the wilderness of Paran.

1. God’s judgment upon Miriam, v. 10. The cloud departed from off that part of the tabernacle, in which Miriam and Aaron conversed; and Miriam became leprous; when God goes, evil comes: expect no good when God departs. The leprosy was a disease often inflicted by the immediate hand of God as the punishment of some particular sin, as on Gehazi for lying, on Uzziah for invading the priest’s office, and here on Miriam for soiling, and making mischief among relations. The plague of the leprosy, it is likely, appeared to her face, so that it appeared to all that saw her that she was struck with it, with the worst of it, she was leprous as snow; not only so white, but so soft; the solid flesh losing its consistency, as that which putrefies does. Her foul tongue (says Bishop Hall) is justly punished with a foul face, and her folly in pretending to be a rival with Moses is made manifest to all men, for every one sees his face to be glorious, and her’s to be leprous. While Moses needs a veil to hide his glory, Miriam needs one to hide her shame. Note, Those distempers which any way deform us ought to be construed as a rebuke to our pride, and improved for the cure of it, and under such humbling providences we ought to be very humble. It is a sign that the heart is hard indeed, if the flesh be mortified, and yet the lusts of the flesh remain unmortified. The self-sufficiency of Miriam was so great that she pretended to be a rival with Moses. Miriam was designed for an exposition of the law concerning the leprosy, (Lev. 13.) for it is referred to up to the rehearsal of that law, Deut. 24. 8, 9.

Miriam was struck with a leprosy, but not Aaron, because she was first in the transgression, and God would put a difference between those that mislead and those that are misled. Aaron’s office, though it saved him not from God’s displeasure, yet it helped to secure him from this token of his displeasure; it would not only have suspended him for the present from officiating, when (there being no priests but himself and his two sons) he could ill be spared, but it would have rendered him and his office mean, and would have been a lasting blot upon his family. Aaron as priest was to be the judge of the leprosy, and his performing that part of his office, when the leprosy was his, was the more reproachful. Miriam, and, behold, she was leprous, was a sufficient mortification to him. He was struck through her side, and he could not pronounce her leprous without blushing and trembling, knowing himself to be equally obnoxious. This judgment upon Miriam is improvable by us, as a warning to take heed of putting any affront upon our Lord Jesus. If she was thus chastised for speaking against Moses, what will become of those that speak against Christ?

II. Aaron’s submission hereupon; (v. 11, 12.) he humbles himself to Moses, confesses his fault, and begs pardon. He that but just now joined with his sister in speaking against Moses, here is forced for himself and his sister to make a penitent address to him, and in the highest degree to magnify him, (as if he had the power of God to forgive and heal,) whom he had so lately vilified. Note, Those that trample upon the saints and servants of God will one day be glad to make court to them; at furthest, in the other world, as the foolish virgins to the wise for a little oil; and the rich man to Lazarus for a little water; and perhaps in this world, as Job’s friend to him for his prayers, and here Aaron to Moses, Rev. 3. 9. In his submission, 1. He confesses his own and his sister’s sin, v. 11. He speaks of Aaron as he is affectedly, as Moses must have done; he calls him his lord, and now turns the reproach upon himself, speaks as one ashamed of what he had said; We have sinned, we have done foolishly; those sin, and do foolishly, who revile and speak evil of any, especially of good people, or of those in authority. Repentance is the unsaying of that which we have said amiss; and it had better be undone, than that we be undone by it. 2. He begs Moses’s pardon, not that he merit it, but that he was to bring his gift to the altar, but, knowing that his brother had something against him, he, of all men, was concerned to reconcile himself to his brother, that he might be qualified to offer his gift. Some think that this speedy submission, which God saw him ready to make, was that which prevented his being struck with a leprosy as his sister was. He required it not so much as an expression of true sorrow, but of submission to Moses’s compassionate consideration; (v. 12.) Let her not be as one dead, that is, “Let her not continue so separated from conversation, defiling all she touches, and even to putrefy above ground as one dead.” He describes the misery of her case to move his pity.

III. The interpolation Moses made for Miriam; (v. 13.) He cried unto the Lord with a loud voice, because the cloud, the symbol of his presence, was removed, and stood at some distance, and to express his fervency in this request,

Heal her now, O Lord, I beseech thee.

By this he made it appear that he did heartily forgive her the injury she had done him, that he had not accused her to God, nor called for justice against her; so far from that, that when God in his kindness to her honour had chastised her insolence, he was the first that moved for reversing the judgment. By this example we are taught to pray for them that despitefully use us: and not to take pleasure in the most righteous punishment inflicted either by God or man on those that have been injurious to us. Jeroboam’s withered hand was restored at the special instance and request of the people; and when he cast it out, 1 Kings 13. 6. So Miriam here was healed by the prayer of Moses, whom she had abused, and Abimelech by the prayer of Abraham, Gen. 20. 27. Moses might have stood off, and have said, “She is served well enough, let her govern her tongue better next time,” but, not content with being able to say that he had not prayed for the inflicting of the judgment, he prays earnestly for the removal of it. This pattern of Moses, and that of our Saviour, Fathers forgive them, we must study to conform to.

IV. The accommodating of this matter, so as that mercy and justice might meet together. 1. Mercy takes place, as far as that Miriam shall be healed; Moses forgives her, and God will. (See 2 Cor. 2. 10.) But, 2. Justice takes place, so far as that Miriam shall be humbled; (v. 14.) Let her be shut from the assembly of the people, in public, and that her punishment might be the more public, and all Israel might take notice of it, and take warning by it not to mutiny. If Miriam the prophetess be put under such marks of humiliation for one hasty word spoken against Moses, what may we expect for our murmurings? If this be done in a green tree, what shall be done in the dry? See how people debase and diminish themselves by sin, stain their glory, and lay their honour in the dust; when Miriam praised God, we find her at the head of the congregation, and one of the brightest ornaments of it, Exod. 15. 20. Now that she quarrelled with God, we find her expelled as the fifth and off-sourcing of it.

This son is given for her being put out of the camp for seven days, because thus she ought to accept of the punishment of her iniquity. If her father, her earthly father, had but spit in her face, and so signified his displeasure against her, would she not be so troubled and concerned at it, and so sorry that she had deserved it, as to shut herself up for some time in her room, and not come into his presence, or show her face in the family, being ashamed of her own folly and unhappiness? If such reverence as this be owing to the fathers of our flesh, when they correct us, much more ought we to humble ourselves under the mighty hand of the Father of spirits, Heb. 12. 9. Note, When we are under the tokens of God’s displeasure for sin, it becomes us to take shame to ourselves, and to lie down in that shame, owning that to us belongs confusion of face. If our own fault and folly we expose ourselves to the reproof and contempt of it, and of the just censures of the church, or the rebukes of the Divine Providence, we must confess that our Father justly spits in our face, and be ashamed.

V. The hinderance that this gave to the people’s progress; (v. 15.) The people journeyed not till Miriam was brought in again. God did not remove the cloud, and therefore they did not remove their camp. This was intended, 1. As a rebuke to the people, who were conscious to themselves of having sinned after the similitude of Miriam’s transgression, in speaking against Moses: thus far, therefore, they shall share in her punishment, that it shall retard their march forward toward Canaan. Many things oppose us, but nothing hinders us, in the way to heaven, so as sin does. 2. As a mark of respect to Miriam. If the camp had removed during the days of her suspension, her trouble and shame had been the greater; therefore, in compassion to her, they shall stay till her excommunication be taken off, and she taken in again, it is probable, with the usual ceremonies of cleansing of lepers. Note, Those that are under censure and rebuke for sin ought not to be treated with a great deal of tenderness, and not to be over-loaded, no not with the shame they have deserved, not counted as enemies, (2 Thess. 3. 15.) but forgiven and comforted, that they must be cast out with grief, and penitents taken in with joy. When Miriam was absolved and re-admitted, the people went forward into the wilderness of Paran, which joined up to the south border of Canaan, and thither their next remove had been, if they had not put a bar in their own way.

CHAP. XIII.

It is a memorable and very melancholy story which is related in this and the following chapter, of the turning back of Israel from the borders of Canaan, when they were just ready to set foot in it, and the sentencing of them to wander and perish in the wilderness, for their unbelief and murmuring. It is referred to Ps. 95. 7, &c., and improved for warning to us Christians, Heb. 3. 1, &c. In this chapter we have, I. The sending of two spies before them into Canaan, v. 1. &c. II. The instructions given to these spies, v. 17. &c. III. Their executing of their commission according to their instructions, and their return from the search, v. 21. &c. IV. The report they brought back to the camp, v. 26. &c.

1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Send thou men, that they may search the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel: of every tribe of their fathers shall ye send a man, every one a ruler among them. 3. And Moses by the commandment of the Lord sent them from the wilderness of Paran: all those men were heads of the children of Israel. 4. And these were their names: Of the tribe of Reuben, Shammai the son of Zaccur. 5. Of the tribe of Simeon, Shaphat the son of Hori. 6. Of the tribe of Judah, Caleb the son of Jephunneh. 7. Of the tribe of Issachar, Igal the son of Joseph. 8. Of the tribe of Ephraim, Oshia the son of Nun. 9. Of the tribe of Benjamin, Palti the son of Raphu. 10. Of the tribe of Zebulun, Gaddiel the son of Sodi. 11. Of the tribe of Joseph, namely, of the tribe of Manasseh, Gaddi the son of Sussi. 12. Of the tribe of Dan, Ammiel the son of Gemalli. 13. Of the tribe of Asher, Sethur the son of Michael. 14. Of the tribe of Naphtali, Nahbi the son of Vophsi. 15. Of the tribe of Gad, Gath the son of Machi. 16. These are the names of the men which Moses sent to spy out the land. And Moses called Oseoa the son of Nun, Jehoshua. 17. And Moses sent them to spy out the land of Canaan, and said unto them, Get you up this way southward, and go up into the mountain: 18. And see the land, what it is; and the people that dwellth therein, whether they be strong or weak, few or many; 19. And what the land is that they dwell in, whether it be good or bad; and what cities they be that they dwell in, whether in tents, or in strong holds: 20. And what the land is, whether it be fat or lean, whether there be wood therein or not: And be ye of good courage, and bring of the fruit of the land. Now the time was the time of the first-ripe grapes.

Here we have,

1. Orders given to send spies to search out the land of Canaan. It is here said, God directed Moses to send them, (v. 1, 2.) but it appears, by the repetition of the story afterward, (Deut. 1. 22.) that the motion came originally from the people: they came to Moses, and said, We will send men before us; and it was the fruit of their unbelief. They would not take God's word that it was a good land; and that he would, without fail, put them in possession of it: they could not trust the pillar of cloud and fire to show them the way to it, but had a better opinion of the power of their own eyes. For How absurd was it for them to send out a land which God himself had spied out for them; to inquire the way into it, when God himself had undertaken to show them the way! But thus we ruin ourselves, by giving more credit to the reports and representations of sense than to divine revelation; we walk by sight, not by faith; whereas, if we will receive the witness of men, without doubt, the witness of God is greater. The people making this motion to Moses, he (perhaps not aware of the unbelief at the bottom of it) consulted God in the case, who bade him gratify the people in this matter, and send spies before them; "Let them walk in their own counsels." Yet God was no way accessory to the sin that followed, for the sending of these spies was so far from being the cause of the sin, that, if the spies had done their duty, and the people themselves had been willing to be convinced of the truth of revelation, and of the service to their concern, their faith, and of good service to them.

2. The persons nominated that were to be employed in this service, (v. 4, &c.) One of each tribe, that it might appear to be the act of the people in general; and rulers, persons of figure in their respective tribes, some of the rulers of thousands or hundreds, to put the greater credit upon their embassy: this was designed for the best, but it must be to have this ill effect, that the quality of the persons occasioned the evil report they brought up to be the more credited, and the people the more influenced by it. Some think that they are all named for the sake of two good ones that were among them, Caleb and Joshua. Notice is taken of the change of Joshua's name upon this occasion, v. 15. He was Moses's minister, but had been employed, though of the tribe of Ephraim, as general of the forces that were sent out against Amalek. The name by which he was generally called and known in his own tribe was Oshea, but Moses called him Joshua, in token of his affection to him, and power over him; and now, it should seem, he ordered others to call him so, and fixed that to be his name henceforward. Oshea signifies a prayer for salvation, or, in answer to that prayer, so near is the relation between prayers and promises. Prayers prevail for promises, and promises direct and encourage prayers. Some think that Moses designed, by taking the first syllable of the name Jehovah, and prefixing it to his name, which turned Hoshea into Jehoshea, or (as some suppose,) put an honour upon him, and to encourage him in this and all his future services with the assurances of God's presence. Yet after this he is called Hoshea, Deut. 32. 44. Jesus is the same name with Joshua, and it is the name of our Lord Christ, of whom Joshua was a type, as successor to Moses, Israel's captain, and conqueror of Canaan. There was another of the same name, who was also a type of Christ, Zechar. 6. 11. Joshua the Saviour of God's people from the powers of Canaan, but Christ is their Saviour from the powers of hell. 3. The instructions given to those spies. They were sent into the land of Canaan, the nearest way, to traverse the country, and to take an account of its present state, v. 17. Two heads of inquiry were given them in charge, (1.) Concerning the land itself; See what that is; (v. 18. and again, v. 19.) see whether it be good or bad, and (v. 20.) whether it be fat or lean. All parts of the earth do not share alike in the blessing of fruitfulness; some countries are blest with a richer soil than others: Moses himself was well satisfied that Canaan was a very good land, but he sent these spies to bring an account of it for the satisfaction of the people; as John Baptist sent to Jesus, to ask whether he was the Christ, not to inform himself, but to inform those he sent. They might take notice whether the air was Lefth or no, what the soil was, and what the productions; and, for the better satisfaction of the people, they must bring with them some of the fruits. (2.) Concerning the inhabitants—their number, few, or many; their size and stature, whether strong able-bodied men, or weak; their habitations—whether they lived in tents, or houses, whether in open villages, or in walled towns; whether the words were standing in those countries that are uncultivated through the unskilfulness and slothfulness of the inhabitants; or whether the woods were cut down, and the country made champaign, for the convenience of tillage. These were the things they were to inquire about. Perhaps there had not been of late years such commerce between Egypt and Canaan as there was in Jacob's time, else they might have informed themselves of these things, had not God prescribed a purpose to search. Observe the advantage we may derive from books and learning, which acquaint those that are curious and inquisitive with the state of foreign countries, at a much greater distance than Canaan was now from Israel, without this trouble and expense. Moses dismisses the spies with this charge, Be of good courage; interesting, not only that they should be themselves encouraged against the difficulties of this expedition, but that they should bring an encouraging account to the people, and make the best of every thing. It was not only a great undertaking they were put upon, which required good management and resolution, but it was a great trust that was reposed in them, which required that they should be faithful.
they bare it between two upon a staff; and they brought of the pomegranates, and of the figs. 24. The place was called the brook Eshcol, because of the cluster of grapes which the children of Israel cut down from thence. 25. And they returned from searching of the land after forty days. 26. And Caleb stilled the people before Moses, and said, Let us go up at once and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it. 31. But the men that went up with him said, We be not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we. 32. And they brought up an evil report of the land which they had searched unto the children of Israel, saying, The land, through which we have gone to search, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof; and all the people that we saw in it are men of great stature. 33. And there we saw the giants, the sons of Anak, which came of the giants; and we were in our own sight as grashoppers, and so we were in their sight.

It is a wonder how the people of Israel had patience to stay 40 days for the return of their spies, when they were just ready to enter Canaan under all the assurances of success they could have from the divine power, and a constant series of miracles which had hitherto attended them; but they distrusted God's power and promise, and were willing to be held in suspense by their own counsels, rather than be brought to a certainty by God's covenant. How much do we stand in our own light by our unbelief! Well, at length the messengers return, but they agree not in their report.

1. The major part discourage the people from going forward to Canaan; and justly are the Israelites left to the reproaches of putting God to open dis- currence in the judgment of men, when they had the word of God to trust to. It is a righteous thing with God to give those up to strong delusions, who will not receive his truth in the love of it. Observe their report. 1. They cannot deny but that the land of Canaan was a very fruitful land; the bunch of grapes they brought with them was an ocular demonstration of it, v. 30. God had promised them a land flowing with milk and honey, and the evidences they themselves own that it is such a land. Thus even out of the mouth of adversaries will God be glorified, and the truth of his promise attested. And yet afterward they contradict themselves when they say, (v. 32.) It is a land that eateth up the inhabi- tants thereof; as if, though it had milk, and honey, and grapes, yet it wanted other necessary provis so they think that there was a great plague in the country at the time that they surveyed it, which they ought to have imputed to the wisdom of the Divine Providence, which thus lessened the numbers of their enemies, to facilitate their conquests, but they invidiously imputed it to the unwholesomeness of the air, and thence took occasion to disparage the country. For this unreasonable fear of a plague in Canaan, they justly were cut off immediately by a plague in the wilderness, ch. 14. 35. But, 2. They represent the conquest of it as alto- gether impracticable, and that it was to no purpose to attempt it. The people are strong, (v. 28.) men of a great stature, (v. 32.) stronger than we, v. 31. The cities are represented as impregnable fortresses, they are walled and very great, v. 28. But nothing served their ill-purpose more than a description of the giants, which they had great stress upon. We saw the children of Anak there, (v. 28.) and again, we saw the giants, those men of a prodigious size, the sons of Anak, which come of the giants, v. 33. They spake as if they were ready to tremble at the mention of them, as they had done at the sight of them. "Oh these tremendous giants! when we were near them we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, not only little and weak, but trembling and dismayed.” Compare Josh 39. 20. Canst thou make him afraid as a grasshopper? Nay, and so we were in their sight; they looked upon us with as much scorn and disdain, as w. did upon them with fear and trembling.” So that upon the whole matter they give it in as their judgment, \textit{We be not able to go up against them, (v. 31.) and they are a people that are numbers more than us.}

Now, even if they had to judge only by human probabilities, they could not have been excused from the imputation of cowardice. Were not the hosts of Israel very numerous? Six hundred thousand effective men, well-armed and modelled, closely embodied, and entirely united in interest and affection, constituted as formidable an army as perhaps any other in human experience? Then, with full confidence of success, \textit{We are able to overcome them, as strong as they are.} But through the desire of the people to go on, and, his lot lying in the van, he speaks as one resolved to lead them on with bravery, \textit{Let us go up at once, one bold step, one bold stroke more, will do our business; it is all our own, if we have but courage to make it so; Let us go up and possess it.” He does not say, “Let us go up and conquer it;” he looks upon that to be as good as done already; but, “Let us go up and possess it; there is nothing to be done but to enter and take the possession which God our great Lord is ready to give us.” Note, \textit{The righteous are bold as a lion.} Difficulties that lie in the way of salvation, dwindle and vanish before a lively active faith in the power and promise of God. \textit{All things are possible, if they be but promised, to him that believes.}

This chapter gives us an account of that fatal quarrel between God and Israel, upon which, for their murmuring and unbelief, he swore in his wrath that they should not enter into his rest. Here is, I. The mutiny and rebellion of Israel against God, upon the report of the evil spies, v. 1. II. The intercession of Moses and Aaron, v. 2. III. The appearance of God, v. 3-5. IV. The summons of Moses, v. 6-23. V. A reiteration of the survey of the land, v. 24-35. VI. The inactivity of the whole congregation, v. 36-40. This is written for our admonition, that we fall not after the same example of unbelief.

1. And all the congregation lifted up their voice, and cried; and the people wept that night. 2. And all the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron: and the whole congregation said unto them, Would God that we had died in the land of Egypt! or would God we had died in this wilderness! 3. And wherefore hath the Lord brought us unto this land, to fall by the sword, that our wives and our children should be a prey? were it not bet for us to return into Egypt? 4. And they said one to another, Let us make a captain, and let us return into Egypt.

Here we see what mischief the evil spies made by their untruthful report. We may fairly conclude that these twelve, that were implicated to inquire concerning Canaan, had talked it over among themselves before they brought in their report in public; and Caleb and Joshua, it is likely, had done their utmost to bring the rest over to be of their mind, and if they would but have agreed that Caleb, according to his post, should have spoken for them all, as their foreman, all had been well; but the evil spies, it should seem, were wilfully designed to raise this matter into opposition to Moses and Aaron, though they could not propose any advantage to themselves by it, unless they hoped to be captains and commanders of the retreat into Egypt they were now meditating. But what came of it? Here, in these verses, we find those whom they studied to humour put into a vexation, and, before the end of the chapter, brought to ruin.

1. How the people fretted themselves. They lifted up their voices and cried. (v. 1.) giving credit to the report of the spies, rather than to the word of God, and imagining their condition desperate, they laid the reins on the neck of their passions, and could keep no manner of temper; like foolish forward children, they fell a crying, yet know not what they cried for. It had been time enough to cry out, if the enemies had beaten up their quarters, and they had seen the sons of Anak at the gate of their camp; but they that cried when nothing hurt them, deserved to have something given them to cry for. And, as if all had been already gone, they sat them down and wept that night. Note, Unbelief, or distrust of God, is a sin that is its own punishment. Those that do not trust God are continually vexing themselves. The world's mourners are more than God's, and the sorrow of the world worketh death.

2. How they flew in the face of their governors; murmured against Moses and Aaron, and in them reproached the Lord. v. 2, 3. The congregation of elders began the discontent, (v. 1.) but the con tagion soon spread through the whole camp, for the children of Israel murmured. Jealousies and discontent spread like wild-fire among the unthinking multitude, who are easily taught to despise dominions, and to speak evil of dignities. 1. They look back with a careless discontent. They wish that they had died in Egypt with the first-born that were slain there; or, in the wilderness with those that lately died of the plague for lusting. See the prodigious madness of unbridled passions, which makes men prodigal even of that which nature accounts most dear, life itself. Never were so many months spent so pleasantly as these which they had spent since they came out of Egypt, loaded with honours and privileges, and yet how easily they are entertained with something or other that was surprising; and yet, as if all these things had not made it worth their while to live, they wished they had died in Egypt. And such a light opinion they had of God's tremendous judgments executed on their neighbours for their sin, that they wished they had shared with them in their plagues, rather than run the hazard of making a descent upon Canaan. They were directly in opposition to God's justice, than live conquerors in his favour. Some read it, Oh that we had died in Egypt, or in this wilderness; Oh that we might die! They wish to die for fear of dying; and have not sense enough to reason as the poor lepers, when, rather than die upon the spot, they ventured into an enemy's camp, If they kill us, we shall but die, 2 Kings 7. 4. How base were the spirits of these degenerate Israelites, who, rather than die (if it come to the worst) like fiddlers in the field of honour, with their swords in their hands, desire to die like rotten sheep in the wilderness. 2. They look forward with a groundless desire to it. They supposed that if they went on, they must fall by that sword, and pretend to lay the cause of their fear upon the great care they had for their wives and children, who, they conclude, will be a prey to the Canaanites. And here is a most wicked blasphemous reflection upon God himself, as if he had brought them hither on purpose that they might fall by the sword, and that their wives and children, those poor innocents, should be their prey. Thus they, in effect, charge that God, who is Lord of all, with the want of malice, and Eternal Truth, with the basest hypocrisy; suggesting, that all the kind things he had said to them, and done for them, hitherto, were intended only to decoy them, and to cover a secret design carried on all along to ruin them. Daring impudence! But what will not that tongue speak against heaven, that is set on fire of hell? The Devil keeps up his interest in the hearts of men by insinuating in them all thoughts of God, as if he desired the death of sinners, and delighted in the hardships and sufferings of his own servants, whereas he knows his thoughts are, to use the words of the apostle (whether we know them so or no,) to be thoughts of evil, and not of good, Jer. 29. 11.

III. How they came at last to this desperate resolve, that, instead of going forward to Canaan, they would go back again to Egypt. The motion is first made by way of query only. (v. 3.) Were it not better for us to return into Egypt? But the ferment being high, and the spirits of the people being disposed to entertain any thing that was perverse, it soon ripened to a resolution, without a debate; (v. 4.) Let us make a captain, and return to Egypt; and it is lamented long after, (Neh. 9. 17.) That in their rebellion they appointed a captain to return to their bondage; for they knew Moses would not be their captain in this retreat.

Now, 1. It was the greatest folly in the world to wish themselves in Egypt, or to think, that, if they were there, it would be better with them than it was. If they durst not go forward to Canaan, yet better be as they were, than go back to Egypt. What did they want? What had they to complain of? They had plenty, and peace, and rest, and a good government, had good company, had the tokens of God's presence with them, and enough to make them easy even in the wilderness, if they had but hearts to be content. But whither were they thus eager to go and meddle themselves? To Egypt! Had they so soon forgotten the sore bondage they were in there? Would they be again under the tyranny of their task-masters, and at the drudgery of making brick? And, after all the punishments they were under, they could they expect any better treatment there than they had formerly, and not rather much worse? In how little time (not a year and a half) have they forgotten all the sights of their bondage, and all the songs of their deliverance! Like brute-beasts, they mind only that which is present, and their memories, with the other powers of reason, are sacrificed to their passions. See verse 8. And find it was written a very necessary part of the completion of their misery, that they should be brought into Egypt again, and yet that is what they here wish for. Sinners are enemies to themselves; and those that walk not in God's counsels, consult their own mischief and ruin.

2. It was a most senseless ridiculous thing to talk of returning thither through the wilderness. Could they expect that God's cloud would lead them, or his manna attend them? And if they did not, the thousands of Israel must unavoidably be lost and perish in the wilderness. Suppose the difficulties of conquering Canaan were as they imagined, those of returning to Egypt were much greater. In this let us see, (1.) The folly of discontent and impatience under the crosses of our outward condition. We are uneasy at that which is, complain of our place and lot, and we would shift: but is there any place or condition in this world that has not something in it to make us uneasy, if we are disposed to be so? The way to better our condition, is, to get our spirits into a better frame; and instead of asking, "Were it not better to go to Egypt?" ask, "Were it not better to be content, and make the best of that which is?" (2.) The folly of apostasy from the ways of God. Heaven is the Canaan set before us, a land flowing with milk and honey: those that bring up ever so ill a report of it, cannot but say, that it is indeed a good land, only it is hard to get to; strict and serious godliness is looked upon as an impracticable thing, and this deters many who began well from going on; rather than undergo the imaginary hardships of a religious life, they run themselves upon the certain fatal consequences of a sinful course; and so they transfigure the folly of Israel, who, when they were within a step of Canaan, would make a captain, and return to Egypt.

5. Then Moses and Aaron fell on their faces before all the assembly of the congregation of the children of Israel. 6. And Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of them that searched the land, rent their clothes: 7. And they spake unto all the company of the children of Israel, saying, The land, which we passed through to search it, is an exceeding good land. 8. If the Lord delight in us, then he will bring us into this land, and give it us; a land which floweth with milk and honey. 9. Only rebel not ye against the Lord, neither fear ye the people of the land for they are bread for us: their defence is departed from them, and the Lord is with us: fear them not. 10. But all the congregation bade stone them with stones. And the glory of the Lord appeared in the tabernacle of the congregation, before all the children of Israel.

The friends of Israel here interpose to save them, if possible, from ruining themselves, but in vain. The physicians of them that were wounded healed them, but they would not be healed; their wives gave them warning, but they would not take the warning, and so their blood is upon their own heads.

1. The best endeavours were used to still the tumult, and if now at last they would have understood the things that belonged to their peace, all the following mischief had been prevented.

1. Moses and Aaron did their part, v. 5. Though it was against them that they murmured, (v. 2.) yet they bravely overlooked the affront and injury done them, and approved themselves faithful friends to those who were outrageous enemies to them. The clamour and noise of the people were so great, that Moses and Aaron could not be heard; should they order any of their servants to proclaim silence, the angry multitude would perhaps be the more clamorous; and therefore, to gain audience in the sight of all the assembly, they fell on their faces, thus expressing, (1.) Their humble prayers to God to still the noise of this sea, the noise of its waves, even the tumult of the people. (2.) The great trouble and concern of their own spirits; they fell down as men astonished and even thunder-struck, amazed to see a people throw away their own mercies; to see these things were so well-taught. And, (3.) Their great earnestness with the people to cease their murmuring; they hoped to work upon them by this humble pressure, and to prevail with them not to persist in their rebellion; Moses and Aaron beseech them to be reconciled unto God. What they said to them, Moses relates in the repetition of this story, Deut. 1. 29, 30. Be not afraid, the Lord your God will fight for you. Note, Those that are zealous friends to precious souls will stoop to any thing for their salvation. Moses and Aaron, notwithstanding the posts of honour they are in, prostrate themselves to the people to beg of them not to ruin themselves.

2. Caleb and Joshua did their part; they rent their clothes in holy indignation at the sin of the people, and a holy dread of the wrath of God, against which they denounced the sin of Israel; it was the greater trouble to these good men, because the tumult was occasioned by these spies with whom they had been joined in commission: and therefore they thought themselves obliged to do what they could to still the storm which their fellow’s had raised. No reason could be more pertinent and pathetic than their’s here, (v. 7. 9.) and they spake us with authority. (1.) They assured them of the goodness of the land they had surveyed, and that it was worth venturing for, and not a land that ate up the inhabitants, as the evil spies had represented it. It is an exceeding good land, (v. 7.) it is very, very good; so the word is; so that they had no reason to desist this pleasant land. Note, If men were but thoroughly convinced of the desirableness of the gains of religion, they would not stick at the services of it. They made nothing of the difficulties that seemed to lie in the way of their gaining the possession of it. "Fear not the people of the land, v. 9. Whatever formidable ideas have been given you of them, the lion is not so fierce as he is painted; they are bread for us," that is, "they are set before us rather to be fed upon than to be fought with; so easily, so pleasantly, and with so much advantage to ourselves, shall we master them." Pharaoh said to his people; "Let us go and serve God (Ps. 74. 14.) and the Canaanites will be with us. This is what, that, whatever was suggested to the contrary, the advantage was clear on Israel’s side. For, [1.] Though the Canaanites dwell in walled cities, they are naked, their defence was departed from them; that common providence, which preserves the rights of nations, has abandoned them, and will be no shelter or protection to them. The other spies took possession of the land, but cut off their own happiness, and from thence inferred that God had forsaken them, and therefore their defence was departed. No people can be safe, when they have provoked God to leave them. [2.] Though Israel dwell in tents, they are fortified, The Lord is with us, and his name is a strong tower; fear them not. Note, While we have the presence of God with us, we need not dread any force against us. (3.) They showed them plainly, that if it had been in was from their own discontentments, and that they would succeed against all their enemies, if they did not make God their enemy. On this point alone the case would turn, (v. 8.) "If the Lord delight in us, as certainly he does, and will, if we do not provoke him, he will bring us into this good land; we shall without fail get it in possession.
by his favour, and the light of his countenance, (Ps. 44. 3.) if we do not forfeit his favour, and by our own follies turn away our own mercies. It is come to this issue, (v. 9.) Only rebel not ye against the Lord. Note, Nothing can ruin sinners but their own rebellion. If God leave them, it is because they drive him from them; and they die, because they will die. None were excluded in the new covenant, but none exclude themselves. And now could the case have been more plain? could it have been urged more closely? But what was the effect? II. It was all to no purpose; they were dealt to this fair reasoning; nay, they were exasperated by it, and grew more outrageous, (v. 10.) All the congregation bade stone them with stones. The rulers of the congregation, and the great men, (so Bishop Patrick) ordered the common people to fall on them, and knock their brains out. Their case was sad indeed, when their leaders thus caused them to err. Note, It is common for those whose hearts are fully set in them to do evil, to rage at those who give them good counsel. They who hate to be reformed, hate those that would reform them, and count them their enemies, because they tell them the truth. Thus early did Israel begin to misuse the prophets, and stone those that were sent to them, and this was the set thing of the people. (Matth. 23. 37.) Stone them with stones! Why, what evil have they done? No crime can be laid to their charge; but the truth is, those two witnesses tormented them that were obstinate in their in- fidelity, Rev. 11. 10.

Caleb and Joshua had but just said, The Lord is with us, fear them not, (v. 9.) and if Israel will not apply those encouraging words to their own hearts, they that uttered them knew not to encourage themselves with them against this enraged multitude that spake of stoning them; as David in a like case, 1 Sam. 30. 6. Those that cannot prevail to edify others with their counsels and comforts, should endeavour at least to edify themselves. Caleb and Joshua knew they appeared for God and his glory, and therefore doubted not but God would appear for them and their safety. And they were not disperced immediately this night of the Lord ap- peared, to the terror and confusion of those that were for stoning the servants of God. When they reflected upon God, (v. 3.) his glory appeared not to silence their blasphemies; but when they threaten- ed Caleb and Joshua, they touched the apline of his eye, and his glory appeared immediately. Note, Those who faithfully expose themselves for God are sure to be taken under his special protection, and shall be hid from the rage of men, either under heaven or in heaven.

11. And the Lord said unto Moses, How long will this people provoke me? and how long will it be ere they believe me, for all the signs which I have showed among them? 12. I will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them, and will make of thee a greater nation and mightier than they. 13. And Moses said unto the Lord, Then the Egyptians shall hear it, (for thou broughtest up this people in thy might from among them;) 14. And they will tell it to the inhabitants of this land: for they have heard that thou, Lord, art among this people; that thou, Lord, art seen face to face; and that thy cloud standeth over them; and that thou goest before them, by day- time in a pillar of cloud, and in a pillar of fire by night. 15. Now, if thou shalt kill all this people as one man, then the nations which have heard the fame of thee will speak, saying, 16. Because the Lord was not able to bring this people into the land which he sware unto them, therefore he hath slain them in the wilderness. 17. And now, I beseech thee, let the power of my Lord be great, according as thou hast spoken, saying, 18. The Lord is long-suffering, and of great mercy, forgiving iniquity and transgression, and by no means clearing the guilty; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation. 19. Pardon, I beseech thee, the iniquity of this people, according unto the greatness of thy mercy, and as thou hast forgiven this people from Egypt even until now.

I. The righteous sentence which God gave against Israel, for their murmuring and unbelief, which, though afterward mitigated, showed what was the desert of their sin, and the demand of in- jured justice, and what would have been done, it Moses had not interposed. When the glory of the Lord appeared in the tabernacle, we may suppose that Moses took it for a call to him immediately to come and attend there, as, before the tabernacle was erected, he went up to the mount in a like case, Exod. 32. 30. But when the people were study- ing to disgrace him, God publicly put honour upon him, as the man of his counsel. Now here we are told what God said to him there.

1. He showed him the great evil of the people's sin, v. 11. What passed between God and Israel went through the hand of Moses; when they were displeased with God, they told Moses of it, (v. 2;) when God was displeased with them, he told Moses too, revealing his secret to his servant the prophet, Amos 3. 7. Two things God justly com- plains of to Moses. (1.) Their sin. They provoked me; or, as the work signifies, they reject, reproach, despise me, for they will not believe me. That was the bitter root which bore the gall and wormwood. It was their unbelief that made this this day of provocation in the wilderness, Heb. 3. 8. Note, Distrust of God, and his power and promise, is itself a very great provocation, and at the bottom of many other provocations. Unbelief is a great sin, (1 John 5. 10.) and a root-sin, Heb. 3. 12. (2.) Their continuance in it: How long will they do so? Note, The God of heaven keeps an account how long sinners persist in their provocations; and the longer they do, the more he is displeased. The aggravations of their sin were,
[1.] Their relation to God. This people, a peculiar people, a professing people. The nearer any one to God in name and profession, the more he is provoked by their sins, especially their unbelief.
[2.] The experience they had of God's power and goodness, in all the signs which he had showed among them, by which, one would think, he had effectually obliged them to trust him and follow him. The more God has done for us, the greater is the provocation if we distrust him.

He showed him the land, by which justice passed upon them for it, v. 12. What remains now, but that I should make a full end of them? It will soon be done, I will smite them with the pesti- lence, not leave a man of them alive, but wholly blot out their name and race, and so disinherit them, and be no more troubled with them.

Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries. They wish to die; and let them die, and neither root nor branch be left of them.

Such rebellious children deserve to be disinherited.” And if it be asked, "What will become of God’s covenant with Abraham then?" here is an answer: it shall be preserved in the face of God, but I will make this a greater nation."

Thus, (1.) God would try Moses, whether he still continued that affection for Israel that he formerly expressed upon a like occasion, in preferring their interests before the advancement of his own family; and it is proved that Moses was still of the same public spirit, and could not bear the thought of raising his own name upon the ruin of the nation’s. (2.) God would teach us that he will not be a God by the ruin of sinners.

If Adam and Eve had been cut off and disinherited, he could have made another Adam and another Eve, and have glorified his mercy in them, as here he could have glorified his mercy in Moses, though Israel had been ruined.

II. The humble intercession Moses made for them. Their sin had made a fatal breach in the way of the righteous, this indeed could certainly enter, if Moses had not seasonably step’d in, and made it good. Here he was a type of Christ, who interceded for his persecutors, and prayed for them that despatchfully used him, leaving us an example to his own rule, Math. 5. 44.

1. The prayer of his petition is, in one word, Pardon, I beseech thee, the iniquity of this people; (v. 19.) that is, Do not bring upon them the ruin they deserve. This was Christ’s prayer and those that crucified him, Father, forgive them. The pardon of a national sin, as such, consists in the turning away of the national punishment; and that it is for which Moses is here so earnest.

2. The plea is many, and strongly urged.

(1.) He insists most upon the plea that is taken from the glory of God; (v. 13., 16.) with this he begins, and somewhat abruptly, taking occasion from that dreadful word, I will disinherit them; Lord, (says he,) then the Egyptians shall hear it. God’s honour lay nearer to his heart than any interests of his own.

Observe how he orders this cause before God. He pleads, [1.] That the eyes both of Egypt and Canaan were upon them, and great expectations were raised concerning them. They could not but have heard that thou, Lord, art among them, v. 14.

The neighbouring countries rang of it, he apprehended these people were the have made so great a noise be all consumed, and their mighty pretensions come to nothing, but go out as a snuff, it will be told with pleasure in Gath, and published in the streets of Askelon; and what construction will they put upon it? It will be impossible to make them understand it as an act of God’s justice, and, as such, redounding to God’s honour; bruish men know not this, (v. 6.) but they will immediately connect it God’s anger to be hurled against his reproach, v. 16. They will say, he slew them in the wilderness, because he was not able to bring them to Canaan, his arm being shortened, and his stock of miracles being spent. Now, Lord, let not one attribute be glorified at the expense of another; rather let mercy rejoice against judgment, than that almighty power should be impeached.”

Note, The best pleas in prayer are those that are taken from God’s honour; for they agree with the first petition of the Lord’s prayer, Hallowed be thy name. Do not disgrace the throne of thy glory. God pleads it with himself, (Deut. 32. 27.) I feared the wrath of the enemy; and we should use it as an argument with ourselves, to walk so in every thing as to give no occasion to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme his name.

(2.) He pleads God’s proclamation of his name at Horeb, (v. 17, 18.) Let the power of the Lord be great: power is here put for pardoning mercy; it is his power over his own anger. If he should destroy them, God’s power would be questioned; if he should continue and complete their salvation, notwithstanding the difficulties that arose, not only from the strength of their enemies, but from their own provocations, this would greatly magnify the divine power: what cannot He do, we could not do, to weak a people conquerors, and such an unworthy people favourites? The more danger there is of others reproaching God’s power, the more desirous we should be to see it glorified. To enforce this petition, he refers himself to the word which God had spoken, The Lord is long-suffering, and of great mercy. God’s goodness had there been spoken of as his glory; God and his glory were one.

Now here he prays that upon this occasion he would glorify it. Note, We must take our encouragement in prayer from the word of God, upon which he has caused us to hope, Ps. 119. 49. “Lord, be and do according as thou hast spoken; for, hast thou spoken, and wilt thou not make it good?” Three things God had solemnly made a declaration of, which Moses here fastens upon, and improves for the enforcing of his petition. [1.] The goodness of God’s nature in general; that he is long-suffering, or slow to anger, and of great mercy; not soon provoked, but tender and compassionate towards offenders. [2.] His readiness in particular to pardon sin, forgiving iniquity and transgression, sins of all sorts. [3.] His unwillingness to proceed to extremity, even when he does punish. For in this sense the following words may be read; That will by no means make quite desolate, in visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children. God had indeed said in the second commandment that he would thus visit, but here he promises not to make a full end of families, churches, and nations, at once; and so it is very applicable to this occasion, for Moses cannot beg that God would not at all punish this sin, (it would be too great an encouragement to rebellion, if, in the course of his anger he had raised men up on it,) but that he would not kill all the people as one man, v. 15. He does not ask that they may not be corrected, but that they may not be disinherited. And this proclamation of God’s name was the more apposite to his purpose, because it was made upon occasion of the pardoning of their sin in making the golden calf. This sin which they had now fallen into was bad enough, but it was not idolatry.

(3.) He pleads past experience, (v. 19.) As thou hast forgiven this people from Egypt. This seemed to make against him: why should they be forgiven any more, who, after they had been so often forgiven, revolted yet more and more, and seemed hardened and encouraged in their rebellion by the lenity and patience of their God, and the frequent proofs that their God’s anger was not to be brought to his reproach. They will say, He slew them in the wilderness, because he was not able to bring them to Canaan, his arm being shortened, and his stock of miracles being spent. Now, Lord, let not one attribute be glorified at the expense of another; rather let mercy rejoice against judgment, than that almighty power should be impeached.”
24. Twice and 25. have

26. And the Lord said, I have pardoned, according to thy word: 21. But as truly as I live, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord. 22. Because all those men which have seen my glory, and my miracles which I did in Egypt and in the wilderness, and have tempted me now these ten times, and have not hearkened to my voice; 23. Surely they shall not see the land which I sware unto their fathers, neither shall any of them that provoked me see it: 24. But my servant Caleb, because he had another spirit with him, and hath followed me fully, him will I bring into the land whereinto he went; and his seed shall possess it. 25. (Now the Amalekites and the Canaanites dwelt in the valley,) To-morrow turn you, and get you into the wilderness by the way of the Red Sea. 26. And the Lord spake unto Moses and unto Aaron, saying, 27. How long shall I bear with this evil congregation, which murmur against me? I have heard the murmuring of the children of Israel, which they murmur against me. 28. Say unto them, As truly as I live, saith the Lord, as ye have spoken in mine ears, so will I do to you: 29. Your carcases shall fall in this wilderness; and all that were numbered of you, according to your whole number, from twenty years old and upward, which have murmured against me, 30. Doubtless ye shall not come into the land concerning which I sware to make you dwell therein, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun. 31. But your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, them will I bring in, and they shall know the land which ye have despised. 32. But as for you, your carcases, they shall fall in this wilderness. 33. And your children shall wander in the wilderness forty years, and bear your whoredoms, until your carcases be wasted in the wilderness. 34. After the number of the days in which ye searched the land, even forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities, even forty years; and ye shall know my breach of promise: 35. I the Lord have said, I will surely do it unto all this evil congregation, that are gathered together against me; in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and there they shall die.

We have here God's answer to the prayer of Moses, which sings both of mercy and judgment. It is given privately to Moses, (v. 20.) and then directed to be made public to the people, v. 26. The frequent repetitions of the same things in speak these resolve to be unalterable. Let us see the particulars.

I. The extremity of the sentence is recorded from v. 26. "I have pardoned, so as not to cut off the entire race, and disinherit them. See the power of prayer, and how God takes in putting an honour upon it. He designed a pardon, but Moses shall have the praise of obtaining it by prayer: it shall be done according to thy word; thus, as a prince, he has power with God, and prevails. See what countenance and encouragement God gives to our intercessions for others, that we may be public-spirited in prayer. Here is a whole nation rescued from ruin by the effectual fervent prayer of one man." See how the Lord is to be glorified. He is to forgive sin, and how easy to be entreated. Pardon, says Moses, (v. 19.) I have pardoned, says God, v. 20. David found him thus swift to show mercy, Ps. 32. 5. He deals not with us after our sins, Ps. 103. 10.

II. The glorifying of God's name is, in the general, resolved upon, v. 21. It is said, it is sworn, all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord. Moses in his prayer had shewed a great concern for the glory of God. "Let me alone," says God, "to secure that effectually, and to advance it, by this dispensation." All the world shall see how God hates sin even in his own people, and will reckon for it, and yet how gracious and merciful he is, and how slow to anger. Thus, when our Saviour prayed, Father, glorify thy name; he was already sullied, through his sufferings, to glorify it yet again, John 12. 26. Note, Those that sincerely seek God's glory may be sure of what they seek. God having turned this prayer for the glorifying of himself into a promise, we may turn it into praise, in concert with the angels, Isa. 6. 3. The earth is full of his glory.

III. The sin of this people, which provoked God to proceed against them, is here aggravated, v. 22. It is not made worse than really it was, but is showed to be exceeding sinful. It was an evil congregation, each bad, but all together in congregation very bad. 1. They tempted God, tempted his power, whether he could help them in their straits, his goodness, whether he would, and his faithfulness, whether his promise would be performed. They tempted his justice, whether he would resent their provocations, and punish them or no. They tempted his grace, in effect, in that it is, as it does the idols, (Isa. 41. 25.) to do good, or do evil. 2. They murmured against him. This is much insisted on, v. 27. As they questioned what he would do, so they quarrelled with him for every thing he did or had done; continually fretting and finding fault. It does not appear that they murmured at any of the laws or ordinances that God gave them, (though they proved a heavy yoke,) but they murmured at the conduct they were under, and the provision made for them. Note, It is much easier to bring ourselves to the external services of religion, and observe all the formalities of devotion, than to live a life of dependence upon, and submission to, the Divine Providence in the course of our conversation. 3. They did this after they had seen God's miracles in Egypt and the wilderness, v. 2. They believed these miracles, and yet they were witnesses for God that he was in the midst of them of a truth. 4. They had repeated the provocations ten times, that is, very often: the Jewish writers reckon this exactly the tenth time that the body of the congregation had provoked God. First at the Red-sea, Exod. 14. 11. In Marah, Exod. 15. 23. 24. In the wilderness of sin, Exod. 16. 2. Twice about manna, Exod. 16. 20, 27. At Rephidim, ch. 17. 1, 2. The golden calf, Exod. 32. Then at Taberah, then at Kibroth-hattaavah, ch. 11. And so this was the tenth. Note, God keeps an account how often we repeat our provocations, and will sooner or later set them in order before us. 5. They had not hearkened to his voice, though he had again and again admonished them of their sin.

IV. The sentence passed upon them for this sin. 1. That they should not have the promised land, (v. 23.) nor come into it, v. 31. He warned them that they should not enter into his rest, Ps. 95. 11. Note, Disbelief of the promise is a forfeiture of the benefit of it. Those that despised the pleasant land shall be shut out of it. The promise of God should be fulfilled to their posterity, but not to them.

2. That they should immediately turn back into the wilderness, v. 25. Their nextremove should be a retreat; they must face about, and, instead of going forward to Canaan, on the very borders of which they now stood, would recover the wilderness, and the Red sea again. To-morrow turn you; that is, Very shortly you shall be brought back to that vast howling wilderness which you are so weary of. And it is time to shift for your own safety, for the Amalekites be in wait in the valley, ready to attack you, if you march forward." Of them they had been distastefully afraid, (ch. 13. 29.) and now with them was a lively and frighted theme. The fear of the wicked shall be their end.

3. That all those who were now grown up to men's estate should die in the wilderness, not all at once, but by degrees. They wished that they might die in the wilderness, and God said Amen to their passionate wish, and made their sin their ruin, snared them in the words of their mouth, and caused their own tongue to fall upon them, took them at their own profession. God's covenant-shares should fall in the wilderness, v. 28, 29, and again, v. 32, 35. See with what contempt they are spoken of, now that they had by their sin made themselves vile; the mighty men of valour were but carcases, when the Spirit of the Lord was departed from them. They were all as dead men. Their fathers had such a value for Canaan, that they desired to have their dead bodies carried thither to be buried, in token of their dependence upon God's promise, that they should have that land for a possession; but these, having despised that good land, and disbelieved the promise of it, shall not have the honour to be buried in it, but shall have their graves in the wilderness.

4. That, in pursuance to this sentence, they should wander and fro in the wilderness, like travellers that have lost themselves, for forty years; that is, that they might as in the full forty years from their coming out of Egypt to their entrance into Canaan, v. 33, 34. Thus long they were kept wandering, (1.) To answer the number of the days in which the spies were searching the land. They were content to wait forty days for the testimony of men, because they could not take God's word; and therefore justly are they kept forty years waiting for the performance of God's promise. (2.) That thereby they might be brought to repentance, and find mercy with God in the other world, whatever became of them in this. Now they had time to bethink themselves, and to consider their ways; and the inconveniences of the wilderness would help to humble them and prove them, and show them what was in their heart, Deut. 8. 2. Thus long they bore their iniquities, feeling the weight of God's wrath in the punishment. They were made to groan under the burden of their own sins, and God brought it upon them, which was too heavy for them to bear. (5.) That they might sensibly feel what a dangerous thing it is for God's covenant-people to break with him. "Ye shall know my breach of promise, both the causes of it, that it is procured by your sin," (for God never leaves any till they first leave him,) "and the consequences of it, that will produce your ruin; you are quite undone when you are thrown out of covenant." 4. That a new generation might in this time be raised up, which could not be done all of a sudden. And the children being brought up under the tokens of God's displeasure against their fathers, and so bearing their fathers' sins, that is the punishment of their sins, especially that idolatry about the golden calf, which God now remembered against them, might take warning not to tread in the steps of their father's disobedience. And their wandering so long in the wilderness would make Canaan at last the more welcome to them. It should seem that upon occasion of this sentence Moses penned the 90th Psalm, which is very apposite to the present state of Israel, and wherein they are taught to pray, that since the sentence of God was certain, it might be sanctified, that they might learn to apply their hearts unto wisdom.

V. The mercy that was mixed with this severe sentence. 1. Mercy to Caleb and Joshua; that though they should wander with the rest in the wilderness, yet they, and they only of all that were now above twenty years old, should survive the years of punishment, and live to enter Canaan. Caleb only is spoken of, as the expiation of that particular mark of homage put upon him, both, (1.) In the character given of him, he had another spirit, different from the rites of the spies, an after-spirit, which furnished him with second thoughts, and he followed the Lord fully, kept close to his duty, and went through with it, though deserted and threatened; and, (2.) In the recompense promised to him, He will bring him into the land whereto he went. Note, [1.] It ought always to be the great care and endeavour of every one of us to follow the Lord fully. We must, in the course of obedience to God's will, and service to his honour, to low him universally without dividing, uprightly without dissembling, cheerfully without disputing, and constantly without declining; and this is following him fully. [2.] Those that would follow God fully must have another spirit, another from the spirit of the world, and another from men, to make their own spirit's been. They must have the spirit of Caleb. [3.] Those that follow God fully in times of general apostasy, God will own and honour by singular preservations, in times of general calamity. The heavenly Canaan shall be the everlasting inheritance of those that follow the Lord fully. When Caleb is again mentioned, (v. 36.) Joshua deals with him, compassed with the sure favour and crowned with the same honours, having stood with him in the same services. 2. Mercy to the children, even of these rebels. They should have a seed preserved, and Canaan secured to that seed, v. 13. Your little ones, now under twenty years old, which ye, in your unbelief, said should be a fiery, them will I bring in. They had invidiously charged God with a design to ruin their children, v. 3. But God will let them know that he can put a difference between the guilty and the innocent, and cut them off without touching their children. Thus the promise made to Abraham, though it seemed to fail for a time, was kept from failing for evermore: and though God chastened their transgressions with a rod, yet his loving kindness he would not utterly take away.

36. And the men which Moses sent to search the land, who returned, and made all the congregation to murmur against him, by bringing up a slander upon the land, 37. Even those men, that did bring up the evil report upon the land, died by the plague before the Lord: 38. But Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the son of Jephunneh, which were of the men that went to search the land, lived still. 39. And Moses told these sayings unto all the children of Israel: and the people mourned greatly. 40. And they rose up early in the morning, and gat them up into the top of the mountain, saying, Lo, we be here, and will go up unto the place which the Lord hath promised: for we have sinned. 41. And Moses said, Wherefore now do ye transgress the commandment of the Lord? but it shall not prosper. 42. Go not up, for the Lord is not among you; that ye be not smitten before your enemies. 43. For the Amalekites and the Canaanites are there before you, and ye shall fall by the sword: because ye are turned away from the Lord, therefore the Lord will not be with you. 44. But they presumed to go up unto the hill-top: nevertheless the ark of the covenant of the Lord, and Moses, departed not out of the camp. 45. Then the Amalekites came down, and the Canaanites which dwelt in that hill, and smote them, and discomfited them, even unto Hormah.

Here is, I. The sudden death of the ten evil spies. While the sentence was passing upon the people, before it was published, they died of the plague before the Lord, v. 36, 37. Now, 1. God hereby showed his particular displeasure against them who sinned and made Israel to sin. (1.) They sinned themselves in bringing up a slander upon the land of promise. Note, Those greatly provoke God who misrepresent religion, cast reproach upon it, and raise prejudices in men’s minds against it. or give occasion to those to do so, who seek occasion. Those that represent the service of God as mean and despised, melancholy and uncomfortable, hard and impracticable, needless and unprofitable, bring up an evil report upon the good land, pervert the right way of the Lord, and in effect give him the lie. (2.) They made Israel to sin. They designedly made all the congregation murmur against God. Note, Ringleaders in sin may expect to fall under particular marks of God’s wrath, who will severely reckon for the blood of souls which is thus spilt.
2. God hereby showed what he could have done with the whole congregation, and that the execution of the sentence of the sentence now passed upon them. He that thus cut off one of the tribe, could have cut off the whole tribes suddenly, and would do it gradually. Note, The remarkable deaths of notorious sinners are earnest of the final perdition of ungodly men, 2 Pet. 2. 5, 6. Thus the wrath of God is revealed, that sinners may hear and fear. II. The special preservation of Caleb and Joshua. (v. 40–42.) It is observed, that all the twelve spies stood together, for the eyes of all Israel were now upon them; and therefore it is taken notice of as very remarkable, and which could not but be affecting to the whole congregation, that, when the ten evil spies fell down dead of the plague, a malignant infectious distemper, yet these two that stood among them lived, and were well. God hereby confirmed their testimony, and put those to confusion that spake of stoning them. He likewise gave them an assurance of their continued preservation in the wilderness, when thousands should fall by his right hand, and on their left, Ps. 91. 7. Death never came near Caleb, nor takes any by oversight that were designed for life, though in the midst of those that were to die.

III. The publication of the sentence to all the people, v. 39. He told them all what the decree was which was gone forth concerning them, and which could not be reversed: that they must all die in the wilderness, and Canaan must be reserved for the new-generation. It was a very great disappointment, we may well think, to Moses himself, who longed to be in Canaan, as well as to all the people: yet he acquiesced, but they wept and mourned greatly. The assurance which Moses had of God’s being glorified by this sentence, gave him satisfaction, while the consciousness of their own guilt, and their having procured it to themselves, gave them the greatest vexation. They wept for nothing, (v. 1.) and now they have cause given them to weep; so justly are murmurers made mourners. If they had mourned for the sin, when they were faithfully reproved for it, (v. 9.) the sentence had been prevented; but now that they mourned for the judgment only, it came too late, and did them no service; they found no place for repentance, they sought it carefully with tears, Heb. 12. 17. Such mourning as this there is in hell, but the tears will not quench the flames, no, nor cool the tongue.

IV. The fornication of some of the Israelites to enter Canaan, notwithstanding the sentence.
1. They were now earnest to go forward toward Canaan, v. 40. They were up early, mustered all their force, got together in a body, and begged of Moses to lead them on against the enemy, and now there is no more talk among them of making a captain to return into Egypt. They confess their sins, but, as it were, by protestation, Lo, we be here, and will go up. They now desire the land which they had despised, and put a confidence in the promise which they had distrusted. Thus when God judges, he will overcome, and, first or last, will convince sinners of the evil of all their ungodly deeds, and hard speeches, and force them to recall their own words. But though God was glorified by this reclamation of their sins, they were not, however, to be excused by it. The decree was gone forth, the consummation was determined, they did not seek the Lord while he might be found, and now he would not be found. Oh, if men would but be as earnest for heaven while their day of grace lasts, as they will be when it is over, would be as solicitous to provide them selves with oil while the bridegroom tarries, as they will be when the bridegroom comes, how well would it fit them!
2. Moses utterly disallows their motion, and for bids the expedition they were meditating, (v. 41. 43.) Go not up. (1.) He gives them warning of the sin, it is transgressing the commandment of the Lord, who had expressly ordered them, when they did move, to move back toward the Red sea. Note, That which has been duty in its season, when it comes to be mistimed, may be sin. It is the common fruit of some of the commandments to be in the nature of a punishment, but he that has not obeyed the law is obliged to submit to the penalty, for the Lord is our Judge, as well as Law-Giver. (2.) He gives them warning of the danger, “It shall not prosper, never expect it.” Note, It is folly to promise ourselves success in that which we undertake contrary to the mind of God.

“ ‘The Canaanites are before you to attack you, and the Lord is not among you to protect you and fight for you, and therefore look to yourselves, that ye be not smitten before your enemies." Those that are out of the way of their duty, are from under God's protection, and go at their peril. If dangerous going where he cannot expect God should go along with us. Nay, he plainly foresees and foretells their defeat. Ye shall fall by the sword of the Amalekites and Canaanites (who were to have fallen by their sword,) because ye are turned away from the Lord, from following the conduct of his precept and promise, therefore the Lord will not be with you. Note, God will certainly leave those that leave him; and those that are not of him, he will not be prepared to any more exposed to the mercy of his wrath.

3. They venture notwithstanding. Never was a people so perverse, and so desperately resolved in every thing to walk contrary to God. God bid them go, and they would not; he forbid them, and they would. Thus is the carnal mind enmity to God; (v. 44.) They presumed to go up unto the hill-top. Here, (1.) They struggled against the sentence of Divine Justice, and would press on in defiance of it. (2.) They slighted the tokens of God's presence, for they would go, though they left Moses and the ark of the covenant behind them. They had distrusted God's strength, and now they presume upon their own, without his.

4. The expedition speeds accordingly, v. 45. The enemy had posted themselves upon the top of the hill, to make good that pass against the invaders, and being observing their motions and their approach, saliled out upon them, and defeated them, and it is probable that many of the Israelites were killed. Now the sentence began to be executed, that their carcases should fall in the wilderness. Note, That affair can never end well that begins with sin. The way to obtain peace with our friends, and success against our enemies, is, to make God our Friend, and keep ourselves in his love. The Jews, like these their ancestors, when they had rejected Christ's righteousness, attempted to establish their own, and it sped as this here.

CHAP. XV.

This chapter, which is mostly concerning sacrifice and offering, comes in between the story of two rebellions, (one, ch. 11. the other, ch. 16.) to signify that these legal institutions were typical of the gifts which Christ was to receive even for the rebellious. Ps. 68, 18. In the foregoing chapter, upon Israel's provocation, God had determined to destroy them, and, in token of his wrath, had sentenced them to perish in the wilderness. But, upon Moses' intercession, he spake, Exod. 32, 33. and, in token of that mercy, in this chapter he repeats and explains some of the laws concerning offerings, to show that he was reconciled to them, notwithstanding the severe dispensation they were under, and would not unchurch them. Here is, I. The law concerning the meat-offerings, and drink-offerings, (v. 1. 12.) both for Israelites and for strangers, (v. 13. 16.) and a law concerning the heave-offerings of the first of their dough, v. 17. 21. II. The law concerning sacrifices for sins of ignorance, v. 22. 29. III. The punishment of presumptuous sins, v. 30. 31, and an instance given in the sabbath-breaking, v. 32. 36. IV. A law concerning fringes for memorandums, upon the borders of their garments, v. 37. 41.

And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be come into the land of your habitation, which I give unto you, 3. And will make an offering by fire unto the Lord, a burnt-offering, or a sacrifice in performing a vow, or in a free-will-offering, or in your solemn feasts, to make a sweet savour unto the Lord, of the herd, or of the flock; 4. Then shall he that offereth his offering unto the Lord bring a meat-offering of a tenth-deal of flour, mingled with the fourth part of a hin of oil. 5. And the fourth part of a hin of wine for a drink-offering shalt thou prepare, with the burnt-offering or sacrifice, for one lamb. 6. Or for a ram, thou shalt prepare for a meat-offering two tenth-deals of flour mingled with the third part of a hin of oil. 7. And for a drink-offering shalt thou offer the third part of a hin of wine, for a sweet savour unto the Lord. 8. And when thou prepare a bullock for a burnt-offering, or for a sacrifice in performing a vow, or peace-offerings unto the Lord; 9. Then shall he bring with a bullock a meat-offering of three tenth-deals of flour mingled with half a hin of oil. 10. And thou shalt bring for a drink-offering half a hin of wine, for an offering made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord. 11. Thus shall it be done for one bullock, or for one ram, or for a lamb, or a kid. 12. According to the number that ye shall prepare, so shall ye do to every one, according to their number. 13. All that are born of the country shall do these things after this manner, in offering an offering made by fire of a sweet savour unto the Lord; as ye do, so he shall do. 15. One ordinance shall be both for you of the congregation, and also for the stranger that sojourneth with you, an ordinance for ever in your generations: as ye are so shall the stranger be before the Lord. 16. One law and one manner shall be for you, and for the stranger that sojourneth with you. 17. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 18. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land whither I bring you; 19. Then it shall be, that when ye eat of the bread of the land, ye shall offer up a heave-offering unto the Lord. 20. Ye shall offer up a cake of the first of your dough for a heave-offering: as ye do the heave-offering of the threshing-floor, so shall ye heave it. 21. Of the first of your dough ye shall give unto the Lord a heave-offering in your generations.

Here we have, I. Full instructions given concerning the meat-offerings and drink-offerings, which were appendages to all the sacrifices of animals. The beginning of this law is very encouraging, When ye come into the land of your habitation which I give unto you, then ye shall do so and so, v. 2. This was a plain intimation, not only that God was reconciled to them, notwithstanding the sentence he had passed upon them, but that he would secure the promised land to their seed, notwithstanding their prenecess to rebel against him. They might think sacrifice was a peculiarity of a misdeemour, that would be fatal to them, and would exclude them for ever, as the last had done for one generation; but this intimates an assurance that they should be kept from provoking God to such a degree as would amount to a forfeit; for this statute takes it for granted that there were some of them that should in due time come into Canaan.

The meat-offerings were of two sorts; some were offered alone, and were the law concerning them, Lev. 2. 1, &c. Others were added to the burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, and constantly attended them, and about those direction is here given. It was requisite, since the sacrifices of acknowledgment (specified in v. 3.) were intended as the food of God's table, that there should be a constant provision of bread, oil, and wine, whatever the fleshment was. The caterers or purveyors for Solomon's temple provided fine flour, 1 Kings, 4. 22. And it was fit that God should keep a good house, that his table should be furnished with bread as well as flesh, and that his cup should run over. In my Father's house there is bread enough.

Now, the intent of this law is, to direct what proportion the meat-offering and drink-offering should bear to the several sacrifices to which they were annexed. If the sacrifice was a lamb, or a kid, then the meat-offering should be a tenth. If it be a bullock, an omer, which contained about five pints: this must be mingled with oil, the fourth part of a hin, (a hin contained about five quarts,) and the drink-offering must be the same quantity of wine, about a quart and a half pint, v. 3-5. If it was a ram, the meat-offering was doubled, two tenth-deals of flour, about five quarts and a third part of a hin of oil (which was to them as butter is to us) mingled with it: and the same quantity of wine for a drink-offering, v. 6, 7. If the sacrifice was a bullock, the meat-offering was to be trebled, three omers, with five pints of oil, and the same quantity of wine for a drink-offering v. 8-10. And thus for each sacrifice, whether offered by a particular person, or at the common charge. Note, Our religious services should be governed, as by other rules, so by the law of proportion.

II. Natives and strangers are here set upon a level, in this as in other matters, (v. 13-16.) One law shall be for you and for the stranger that is proselyted to the Jewish religion. Now, 1. This was an invitation to the Gentiles to become proselytes, and to embrace the faith and worship of the true God. In civil things there was a difference between strangers and true-born Israelites, but not in the things of God: we are all fore once shall the stranger be before the Lord, for with him there is no respect of persons. See Isa. 56. 3. 2. This was an obligation upon the Jews to be kind to strangers, and not to oppress them, because they saw them owned and accepted of God. Communion in religion is a great engagement to mutual affection, and should shal all enemies. 3. It was a mortification to the pride of the Jews, who are apt to be puffed up with their birthright privileges. "We are Abraham's seed, God let them know that the sons of the stranger were as welcome to him as the sons of Jacob; no man's birth or parentage shall turn either to his advantage or his prejudice in his acceptance with God. This likewise intimated, that, as believing strangers should be accounted Israelites, so unbelieving Israelites should be accounted strangers. 4. It was a superposition of the rights of Gentiles, and of their admission into the church. If the law made so little difference between Jew and Gentile, much less would the gospel make, which broke down the partition-wall, and reconciled both to God in one sacrifice, without the observance of the legal ceremonies. 22. A law for the offering of the first of the dough unto the Lord, This, as the former, goes upon the comfortable supposition of their being come into the promised land, v. 18. Now that they lived upon manna, they needed not such an express acknowledgment of God's title to their daily bread, and their dependence upon him for it, the thing spoke for itself: but in Canaan, where they should eat the fruit of their own industry, God required that he should be owned as their Landlord, and their great Benefactor. They must not only offer him the first-fruits and tenth of the corn in their fields, (those had been already reserved,) but when they had it in their houses, in their kneading troughs, when it was almost ready to be set upon their tables, God must have a further tribute of acknowledgment, part of their dough (the Jews say, a fourth part, at least, of the whole lump,) must be heaved or offered up to God, (v. 26, 21.) and the priest must have it for the use of his family. Thus they must own their dependence upon God for their daily bread, even when they had it in the house with them; they must then wait on God for the comfortable use of it; for we read of that which was brought home, and yet God did blow upon it, and it came to little, Hag. 1. 9. Christ has taught us to pray, not, Give us this year our early harvest, but Give us this day our daily bread. God by this law said to the people, as the prophet long afterward said to the widow of Sarepta, (1 Kings 17. 13.) Only make me thereof a little cake first. This offering was expressly kept up by the laws of Ezekiel's visionary temple, and it is a commandment with promise of family-mercies, (Ezek. 41. 30.) Ye shall give unto the priest the first of your dough, that he may cause the blessing to rest in thine house; for when God has had his dues out of our estates, we may expect the comfort of what falls to our share.

23. And if ye have ered, and not observed all these commandments which the Lord hath spoken unto Moses, Even all that the Lord hath commanded you by the hand of Moses, from the day that the Lord commanded Moses, and henceforward among your generations: Then it shall be, if taught be committed by ignorance, without the knowledge of the congregation, that all the congregation shall offer one young bullock for a burnt-offering, for a sweet savour unto the Lord, with his meat-offering, and his drink-offering, according to the manner, and one kid of the goats for a sin-offering. And the priest shall make an atonement for all the congregation of the children of Israel, and it shall be forgiven them; for it is ignorance: and they shall bring their offering, a sacrifice made by fire unto the Lord, and their sin-offering before the Lord, for their ignorance: And it shall be forgiven all the congregation of the children of Israel, and the stranger that sojourneth among them; seeing all the people were in ignorance. And if any soul sin through ignorance, then he shall bring a she-goat of the first year for a sin-offering. 28. And the priest shall make an atonement for the soul that sinneth ignorantly, when he sinneth by ignorance before the LORD, to make an atonement for him; and it shall be forgiven him. 29. You shall have one law for him that sinneth through ignorance, both for him that is born among the children of Israel, and for the stranger that sojourneth among them.

We have here the laws concerning sacrifices for sins of ignorance: the Jews understand it of idolater, or false worship, through the error of their teachers; the case here supposed, is, that ye have not observed all these commandments, v. 22, 23. If they have failed in the offerings of their acknowledgment, and had not brought them according to the law, then they must bring an offering of atonement, yea, though the omission had been through forswornness or mistake. If they failed in one part of the ceremony, they must make it up by the observance of some part, which was in the nature of a remedial law.

1. The case is put of a national sin, committed through ignorance, and become customary through a vulgar error, (v. 24.) the congregation, that is, the body of the people, for so it is explained, (v. 25. All the congregation of the children of Israel.
The ceremonial observances were so numerous, and various, that, it might easily be supposed, some of them by degrees would be forgotten and dissolved, as particularly that immediately before coming the heave-offering of their dough: now if,
in process of time, upon consulting the law, there should appear to have been a general neglect of that or any other appointment, then a sacrifice must be offered for the whole congregation, and the oversight shall be forgiven, (v. 25, 26.) and not punished as it deserved, with some national judgment. The offering of the sacrifice according to the manner or ordinance, plainly refers to a former statute, which this is the repetition of; and the same bullock which is there called a sin-offering, (Lev. 4. 13, 21.) is here called a burnt-offering, (v. 24.) because it was wholly burnt, though not upon the altar yet without the camp. And here is the addition of a kib of the goats for a sin-offering. According to this law, we find that Hezekiah made atonement for the errors of his father's reign by seven bul-locks, seven rams, seven lambs, and seven he-goats, which he offered as a sin-offering for the kingdom, and for the sanctuary, and for Judah, (2 Chron.
29. 21.) and for all Israel, v. 24. And we find the like done after the return out of captivity, Ezra
8. 35.

2. It is likewise supposed to be the case of a particular person. If any soul sin through ignorance, (v. 28.) respect is given to the part of those he just brought his offering as was appointed, Lev. 4. 27, 8c.
Thus atonement shall be made for the soul that sinneth, when he sinneth through ignorance, v. 28.

Observe, (1.) Sins committed ignorantly need to have atonement made for them; for though ignorance will in a degree excuse, it will not justify, those that might have known their Lord's will, and did it not. David prays to be cleansed from his sins, but he did not willingly. So the king was not awake of the errors, he did not understand, Ps. 19. 12. (2.) Sins committed ignorantly shall be forgiven through Christ the great Sacrifice, who, when he offered up himself once for all upon the cross, seemed to explain the intention of his offering in that prayer, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do. And Paul seems to allude to this law concerning sins of ignorance, (1 Tim. 1. 13.) I obtained mercy, because I did it ignorantly and in unbelief. And it looked favourably upon the Gentiles, that this law of atoning for sins of ignorance is cargo of fulfilling the, and yet have a sup-based supposed to be proselytes of righteousness. Thus the blessing of Abraham comes upon the Gentiles.

30. But the soul that doeth aught presumptuously, whether he be in the land, or a stranger, the same reproacheth the Lord; and that soul shall be cut off from among his people. 31. Because he hath despised the word of the Lord, and hath broken his commandment, that soul shall utterly be cut off; his iniquity shall be upon him. 32. And while the children of Israel were in the wilderness, they found a man that gathered sticks upon the sabbath-day.
33. And they that found him gathering sticks brought him unto Moses and Aaron, and unto all the congregation: 34. And they put him in ward, because it was not declared what should be done to him. 35.
And the Lord said unto Moses, The man shall be surely put to death: all the congregation shall stone him with stones without the camp. 36. And all the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones, and he died; as the Lord commanded Moses.

Here is,
1. The general doom passed upon presumptuous sinners. 1. Those are to be reckoned presumptuous sinners that sin with a high hand, as the original phrase is, (v. 30.) that is, that avowedly confront God's authority, and set up their own lust in competition with it; that sin for sinning-sake, in contradiction to the precept of the law, and in defiance of the penalty; that fight against God, and dare him to do his worst; see Job 15. 25. It is not only to sin against knowledge, but to sin designedly against God's will and glory. 2. Sins thus committed are exceeding sinful. He that thus breaks the commandment, (1.) Refrares the Lord; (v. 30.) he does the worst he can of him, and most swiftly.
The language of presumptuous sin, is, "Eternal truth is not fit to be believed, the Lord of all not fit to be obeyed, and almighty power not fit to be either feared or trusted." It imparts folly to Infinite Wisdom, and iniquity to the righteous Judge of heaven and earth; such is the malignity of wilful sin. (2.) He despises the word of the Lord, v. 31.
There are those who, in many instances, come short of fulfilling the law's precepts; and as they pass over much of the law provided none, that soul shall be cut off from among his people, (v. 30.) utterly cut off; (v. 31.) and, that God may be for ever justified, and the sinner for ever confounded, his iniquity shall be upon him, and there needs no more to sink him to the lowest hell. Thus the Jewish doctors understand it, that the iniquity shall cleave to the soul, after it is cut off, and that man shall give an account of his sin at the great day of judgment. Perhaps the kind of offence might be such as did not expose the offender to the censure of the civil magistrate, but if it was done presumptuously, God himself would require it. The punishment of this sin, and into it is a fearful thing to fall. In the New Testament we find the like sentence of exclusion from all benefit by the great Sacrifice, passed upon the blasphemy against the Holy Ghost, and a total apostasy from Christianity. See Matt. 12. 32. and Heb. 10. 26, which refers to this here.

II. A particular instance of presumption in the sin of sabbath-breaking. 1. The offence was gathered sticks on the sabbath-day, Exod. 34. 14. and it is probable, were designed to make a fire of, whereas they were commanded to bake and see what they had occasion for, the day before, Exod. 16. 23. This seemed but a small offence, but it was a violation of the law of the sabbath, and so was an implicit contempt of the Creator, to whose honour the sabbath was dedicated, and an incursion upon the whole law, which the sabbath was intended as a hedge about. And it appears by the context to have been done maliciously, and in affront both to the law, and to the Law-Maker. 2. The offender was secured, v. 33, 34. They that found him gathering sticks, in their zeal for the honour of the sabbath, brought him to Moses and Aaron, and to all the congregation; which intimates, that, being the sabbath-day, the congregation was at that time gathered to Moses and Aaron, to receive instruction from them, and to join with them in religious worship. It seems even common Israelites, though there was much amiss among them, yet would not contentedly see the sabbath profaned, which was a good sign that they had not quite forsaken God, nor were utterly forsaken of him. 3. God was consulted, because it was not declared what should be done to him. The law had already made the profanation of the sabbath a capital crime, (Exod. 20. 10) but they were in doubt, either concerning the offence, whether this that he had done should be deemed a profanation or no; or concerning the punishment, what death he should die. God was the Judge, and before him they brought this cause. 4. Sentence was passed; the prisoner was adjudged a sabbath-breaker according to the intent of that law, and as such he must be put to death; and, to show how great the crime was, and how displeasing to God, and that others might at least fear, and not do it. Breaching the sabbath, that is, being appointed which that he had appointed which was looked upon as most terrible, he must be stoned with stones, v. 35. Note, God is jealous for the honour of his sabbaths, and will not hold them guiltless, whatever men do, that profane them. 5. Execution was done pursuant to the sentence, v. 36. He was stoned to death by the congregation. This intimates as could be implied in the execution, that they, at least, might be afraid of doing the same, if they, who had thrown a stone at this sabbath-breaker: This intimates that the open profanation of the sabbath is a sin which ought to be punished and restrained by the civil magistrate, who as far as overt-acts go, is keeper of both tables. See Neh. 13. 17. One would think there could be no great harm in gathering a few sticks, on what day soever it was. It was, indeed, the exemplary punishment of him that did so, for a standing warning us all, to make conscience of keeping holy the sabbath. 37. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 38. Speak unto the children of Israel, and bid them that they make them fringes in the borders of their garments, throughout their generations, and that they put upon the fringe of the borders a riband of blue: 39. And it shall be unto you for a fringe, that ye may look upon it, and remember all the commandments of the Lord, and do them; and that ye seek not after your own heart, and your own eyes, after which ye use to go a whoring: 40. That ye may remember, and do all my commandments, and be holy unto your God. 41. I am the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am the Lord your God.

Provision had been just now made by the law for the pardon of sins of ignorance and iniquity; now here is an expedient provided for the preventing of such sins. They are ordered to make fringes upon the borders of their garments, where were to be memorandums to them of their duty, that they might not sin through forgetfulness.

1. The sign appointed is a fringe of silk, or thread, or worsted, of the garment itself ravelled at the bottom, and a blue riband bound on the top of it to keep it tight, v. 38. The Jews being a peculiar people, they were thus distinguished from their neighbours in their dress, as well as in their diet, and, by such little instances of singularity, not to be conformed to the way of the heathen in greater things. Thus likewise they proclaimed themselves Jews wherever they were, as these that were not ashamed of God and his law. Our Saviour, being made under the law, were these fringes: hence we read of the hem or border of his garment, Matt. 9. 20. These borders the Pharisees enlarged, that they might be thought more holy and devout than other people. Yet the phylacteries were different things, those were their own invention, the fringes were a divine institution. The Jews at this day wear them, saying, when they put them on, Blessed be he who has sanctified us unto himself, and commanded us to wear fringes. 2. The intention of it was, to remind them that they were a peculiar people. They were not appointed for the trimming and adorning of their clothes, but to serve them as a lively remembrance; (2 Pet. 3. 1.) that they might look upon the fringe, and remember the commandments. Many look upon their ornaments, to feed their pride, but they must look upon these ornaments to awaken their consciences to a sense of their duty, that their religion might constantly beset them, and they might carry it about with them, as they did their clothes, whatever they went. If they were trusted to one day, the fringe would be a monitor to them, not to break God's commandments; if a duty was forgotten to be done in its season, the fringe would remind them of it. This institution, though it is not an imposition upon us, is an instruction to us always to remember the commandments of the Lord our God, that we may do them, to treasure them up in our memories, and to apply them to particular cases, as there is occasion to use them. It was intended particularly, to be a preservation from idolatry, that ye seek not after your own heart, and your own eyes, in your religious worship. Yet it may extend also to the whole conversation, for nothing is more contrary to God's honour, and our own true interest, than to walk in the way of our heart, and in the sight of our eyes; for the imagination of the heart is evil, and so is the lust of the eye.
After the repetition of some ceremonial appointments, the chapter closes with that great and fundamental law of religion, Be holy unto your God; purged from sin, and entirely devoted to his service; and that great reason for all the commandments is again and again inculcated, I am the Lord your God. Did we more firmly believe, and more frequently and seriously consider, that God is our Lord, and our God, and Redeemer, we should see ourselves bound in duty, interest, and gratitude, to keep all his commandments.

CHAP. XVI.

The date of the history contained in this chapter is altogether uncertain. 1. The repetition of these laws, after their removal back again from Kadesh-barnea, when they were fixed (if I may so speak) for their wandering in the wilderness, and began to look upon that as their settlement. Presently after new laws given, follows the story of a new rebellion, as if sin too often came from the commandment to become more exceeding sinful. Here is, 1. A daring and dangerous rebellion raised against Moses and Aaron, by Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, v. 1-18. 1. Korah and his accomplices contend for the priesthood against Aaron, v. 3. Moses reasons with them, and appeals to God for a decision of the controversy, v. 4-11. 2. Dathan and Abiram quarrel with Moses, and refuse to obey his summons; which greatly grieves him, v. 12-15. II. A solemn appearance of the pretenders to the priesthood before God, according to order, and a public appearance of the glory of the Lord, which would have consumed the whole congregation offering incense, v. 16-18. III. The deciding of the controversy, and the crushing of rebellion, by the cutting off of the rebels, 1. Those in their tents were buried alive, v. 23-34. 2. Those at the door of the tabernacle were consumed by fire, (v. 35-) and their censers preserved for a memorial, v. 37-40. IV. A new insurrection of the people, v. 41-43. 1. God stayed the insurrection by a plague, v. 45. 2. Aaron stayed the plague by offering incense, v. 46. The man of God, by his God, is answered with the man of God, by his God. There is a double sense in the history, that of removal into the congregation, and of removal from the congregation, v. 1-46. The manner of recording this story, plainly denotes the figure, that to have been very great.

1. NOW Korah the son of Izhar, the son of Kohath, the son of Levi; and Dathan and Abiram the sons of Eliab, and On the son of Pelet, sons of Reuben, took men: 2. And they rose up before Moses, with certain of the children of Israel, two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly, famous in the congregation, men of renown: 3. And they gathered themselves together against Moses and against Aaron, and said unto them, Ye take too much upon you, seeing all the congregation are holy, every one of them, and the Lord is among them: wherefore then lift you up yourselves above the congregation of the Lord? 4. And when Moses heard it, he fell upon his face: 5. And he spake unto Korah, and unto all his company, saying, Even to-morrow the Lord will show who are his, and who is holy; and will cause him to come near unto him: even him whom he hath chosen will he cause to come near unto him. 6. This do: Take you censers, Korah, and all his company; and put fire therein, and put incense in them before the Lord to-morrow: and it shall be, that the man whom the Lord doth choose, he shall be holy: ye take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi.

8. And Moses said unto Korah, Hear, I pray you, ye sons of Levi: 9. Seemeth it but a small thing unto you, that the God of Israel hath separated you from the congregation of Israel, to bring you near to himself, to do the service of the tabernacle of the Lord, and to stand before the congregation, to minister unto them? 10. And he hath brought thee near to him, and all thy brethren the sons of Levi with thee: and seek ye the priesthood also? 11. For which cause both thou and all thy company are gathered together against the Lord? and what is Aaron, that ye murmur against him?

1. An account of the rebels, who and what they were, not, as formerly, the mixed multitude, and the dregs of the people, who are therefore never named, but men of distinction and quality, that made a figure. Korah was the ring-leader, he formed and headed the faction, therefore it is called the gaineaying of Korah, Jude 11. He was cousin-german to Moses, they were brothers' children, yet the nearness of the relation could not restrain him from being insolent and rude to Moses. Think it not strange if a man's foes be they of his own house. With him joined Dathan and Abiram, chief men of the tribe of Reuben, the eldest son of Jacob. Probably, Korah was disgusted both at the preferment of Aaron to the priesthood, and the constituting of Elizaphan to the head of the Kohathites; (ch. 3. 30.) and perhaps the Reubenites were angry that the tribe of Judah had the first post of honour in the camp. Or is mentioned, (v. 1.) as one of the heads of the faction, but never more, in the whole story; either because, as some think, he repented and left them, or because he did not make himself so remarkable as Dathan and Abiram did. The Kohathites encamped on the same side of the tabernacle that the Reubenites did, which perhaps gave Korah an opportunity of drawing them in: whence the Jews say, Wo to the wicked man, and wo to his neighbour, who is in danger of being infected by him. And these being themselves included in the number of the Reubenites, the name of Korah, and the number of his company, are described as two hundred and fifty princes of the assembly; (v. 2.) probably they were first-born, or at least heads of families, who, before the elevation of Aaron, had themselves ministered in holy things.

Note, The pride, ambition, and emulation, of great men, have always been the occasion of a great deal of mischief both in churches and states. God by his grace make great men humble, and so give peace in our time, O Lord! and let the number of revolters be separated from these; for who are the great sinners of the old world, Gen. 6. 4. The fame and renown which they had did not content them, they were high, but would be higher, and thus the famous men became infamous.

II. The rebels' remonstrance, v. 3. That which they quarrel with, is, the settlement of the priesthood upon Aaron and his family, which they think an honour too great for Moses to give, and Aaron to accept, so that they are charged with presumption. Ye take too much upon you; or, Let it suffice you to be upon a level with your neighbours, who are all holy, all as good as you, and therefore ought to be as great. Or, Let it suffice you to have domineered thus long, and now think of resigning your places to those who have as good a title to them, and are as well able to manage them. 1. They proudly boast of the holiness of numbers, and the presence of God in it. They are holy, every one of them, and as fit to be emblazoned with the sacred sign, as masters of families formerly were, and the Lord is among them, to direct and own them.” Small reason they had to boast of the people’s purity, or of God’s favour, as the people had been so frequently and so lately polluted with sin, and were now under the marks of God’s displeasure, which should have made them thankful for priests to mediate between them and God; but, instead of this, they envied them. 2. They justly charge Moses and Aaron with taking the honour they had to themselves, whereas it was evident, beyond contradiction, that they were called of God to it, Heb. 5. 4. So that they would either have no priests at all, nor any government, none to preside either in civil or sacred things, none over the congregation, none above it; or, they would not acquiesce in that constitution of the government which God had appointed. See here, (1.) What spirit levellers are of, and those that despise dominions, and resist the powers that God has set over them; they are proud, envious, ambitious, turbulent, wicked, and unreasonable, men. (2.) What usage even the best and most useful men may expect, even from those they have been serviceable to. If they be represented as usurpers that have the best titles, and they as tyrants that govern best, let them recollect that Moses and Aaron had in abundance what those things that they missed. III. Moses’s conduct when this remonstrance was published against him. How did he take it? 1. He fell on his face, (v. 4.) as before, ch. 14. 5. Thus he showed how willing he would have been to yield to them, and how gladly he would have resigned his government, if it would have consisted with his duty to God, and his fidelity to the trust reposed in him. Thus also he applied himself to God by prayer, for direction what to do upon this sad occasion. He would not speak to them till he had thus humbled and composed his own spirit, (which could not but begin to be heated,) and had received instruction from God. The heart of the wise, in such a case, studies to answer, and asks counsel at God’s mouth. 2. He agrees to refer the case to God, and leave it to him to decide it, as one well assured of the goodness of his title, and of the justice of his demand. He resigns to God, and will not gratify his discontented people with another nomination. An honest cause fears not a trial, fears not a second trial, fears not a speedy trial; even to-morrow let it be brought on, v. 5. 7. Let Korah and his partisans bring their censers, and offer incense before the Lord, and if he testify his acceptance of them, well and good; Moses is now as willing that all the Lord’s people should be priests, if God chooses to appear, as before, that they should all be prophets, ch. 11. 29. But if God, upon an appeal to him, determine (as no doubt he will) for Aaron, they would find it highly dangerous to make the experiment: and therefore he puts it off till to-morrow, to try whether, when they had slept upon it, they would desist, and let fall their pretensions. 3. He argues the case fairly with them, to still the mutiny with fair reasoning. If possible, before the appeal came to God’s tribunal, for then he knew it would end in the confusion of the complainers. (1.) He calls them the sons of Levi, v. 7. and again, v. 8. They were of his own tribe, nay, they were of God’s tribe; it was therefore the worse in them thus to mutiny, both against God, and against aim. It was not long since the sons of Levi had appeared before, in justice of the matter of the calf, and got immortal honour by it; and shall they, that were then the only innocents, now be the leading criminals, and lose all the honour they had won? Could there be such chaff on God’s floor? Leviites, and yet rebels? (2.) He reverts their charge upon themselves; they had unjustly charged Moses and Aaron with taking to themselves the things that they had done no more than what God put upon them; nay, says Moses, Ye take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi. Note, That they take upon them to control and contradict God’s appointment, take too much upon them. It is enough for us to submit, it is too much to prescribe. (3.) He shows them the privilege they had as Levites, which was sufficient for them, they needed not to aspire to the higher honours of the Levitical order, ch. 7. 9. Note, He reminds them how great the honour was to which they were preferred as Levites. [1.] They were separatae from the congregation of Israel, distinguished from them, dignified above them; instead of complaining that Aaron’s family was advanced above their’s, they ought to have been thankful that their tribe was advanced above the rest of the tribes, though they had been in all respects upon the level with them. Note, It will help to keep us from envying those that are above us, duly to consider how many there are below us. Instead of fretting that any are preferred before us in honour, power, estate, or interest, in gits, graces, or usefulness, we have reason to bless God, if we, who are less than the least, are not put among the very last. Many, perhaps, who deserve better, are not preferred so well. [2.] They were separated to very great religious, and spiritual honours, First. The Lord is their God, other than the common Israelites, though they also were a people near unto him; the nearer any are to God, the greater is their honour. Secondly, To do the service of the tabernacle. It is honour enough to bear the vessels of the sanctuary, and to be employed in any part of the service of the tabernacle. God’s service is not only perfect freedom, but high preference. Thirdly, To stand before the congregation of Israel, and minister unto them. Note, There is truly great that serve the public, and it is the honour of God’s ministers to be the church’s ministers. nay, which adds to the dignity put upon them, [3.] It was the God of Israel himself that separated them. It was his act and deed to put them into their place, and therefore they ought not to have been discontented; and he it was likewise that put Aaron into his place, and therefore they ought not to have envied his power. But how much the sin of undervaluing these privileges, Seemeth it a small thing unto you? As if he had said, “It ill becomes you of all men to grudge Aaron the priesthood, when, at the same time that he was advanced to that honour, you were designed for another honour dependent upon it, and shine with rays borrowed from him.” Note, [1.] The privilege of standing near to God is not a small thing in itself, and therefore must not appear small to us. To those who neglect opportunities of drawing near to God, who are careless and formali in it, to whom it is a task and not a pleasure, we may properly put this question; “Seemeth it a small thing to you, that God has made you a people near unto him?” [2.] Those who aspire after and usurp the things forbidden them, put a great contempt upon the honours allowed them. We have each of us as good a share of reputation as God sees fit for us, and sees us fit for, and much better than we deserve; and we ought to rest satisfied with it, and not, as these here, exercise ourselves in things too high for us; Seek ye the priesthood also? They would not own that they sought it, but Moses saw that they had this in their eye; the law had provided very well for their privilege, and therefore they would put in for the office. [5.] He interprets their mutiny to be a rebellion against God; (v. 11.) while they pretended to assert the holiness and liberty of the Israel of God, they really took up arms against the God of Israel, Ye are gathered together against the Lord.
Note, Those that strive against God's ordinances and providences, whatever they pretend, and whether they are aware of it or not, do indeed strive with their Maker. Those resist the prince, who resist those that are commissioned by him: for, alas! says Moses, What is Aaron, that ye murmur against him? If murmurers and complainers would consider that the instruments they quarrel with are but instruments whom God employs, and that they are but what he makes them, and neither more nor less, better nor worse, they would not be so bold and fierce in their censures and reproaches as they are. They that found the priesthood, as it was settled, a blessing, must give all the praise to God; but if any found it a burthen, they must not therefore quarrel with Aaron, who is but what he is made, and does but as he is bidden. Thus he interested God in the cause, and so might be sure of speeding well in his appeal.

12. And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Elah: which said, We will not come up. 13. Is it a small thing that thou hast brought us up out of a land that floweth with milk and honey, to kill us in the wilderness, except thou make thyself altogether a prince over us? 14. Moreover, thou hast not brought us into a land that floweth with milk and honey, or given us inheritance of fields and vineyards: wilt thou put out the eyes of these men? we will not come up. 15. And Moses was very wroth, and said unto the Lord, Respect not their offerings: I have not taken one ass from them. neither have I hurt one of them. 16. And Moses said unto Korah, Be thou and all thy company before the Lord, thou, and they, and Aaron, to-morrow: 17. And take every man his censer, and put incense therein, and bring ye before the Lord, every man his censer, two hundred and fifty censers; thou also, and Aaron, each of you his censer. 18. And they took every man his censer, and put fire in them, and laid incense thereon, and stood in the door of the tabernacle of the congregation with Moses and Aaron. 19. And Korah gathered all the congregation against them, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and the glory of the Lord appeared unto all the congregation. 20. And the Lord spake unto Moses, and unto Aaron, saying, 21. Separate yourselves from among this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment. 22. And they fell upon their faces, and said, O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, shall one man sin, and wilt thou be wroth with all the congregation? Here is,

I. The insolence of Dathan and Abiram, and their treasonable remonstrance. Moses had heard what Korah had to say, and had answered it; now he summons Dathan and Abiram to bring in their complaints, (v. 12;) but they would not obey his summons; either because they could not for shame say that to his face which they were resolved to say, and then it is an instance of some remains of modesty in them; or rather, because they would not so far own his authority as to assent to the sentence of the highest degree of impudence. They spoke the language of Pharaoh himself, who set Moses at defiance, but they forgot how dear he paid for it. Had not their heads been wretchedly heated, and their hearts hardened, they might have considered, that, if they regarded not these messengers, Moses could soon in God's name send messengers of death for them. But thus the God of this world blinds their minds, and employs against them the same messengers they send their articles of impeachment against Moses; and the charge runs very high. 1. They charge him with having done them a great deal of wrong in bringing them out of Egypt, invidiously calling that a land flowing with milk and honey, v. 13. Onions, and garlic, and fish, they had indeed plenty of in Egypt, but it never pretended to milk and honey; only they should thus bring the charge, Ungrateful, wretched, to represent that as an injury to them, which was really the greatest favour that ever was bestowed upon any people! 2. They charge him with a design upon their lives, that he intended to kill them in the wilderness, though they were so well provided for. And if they were sentenced to die in the wilderness, they must thank themselves, Moses would have healed them, and they would not be healed. 3. They charge him with a design upon their liberties, that he meant to enslave them, by making himself a prince over them. A prince over them! Was he not a tender father to them; nay, their devoted servant for the Lord's sake? Had they not their properties secured, their order preserved, and justice impartially administered? Did they not live in ease and plenty? Are they yet to complain as if Moses's yoke were heavier than Pharaoh's. And did Moses make himself a prince? Far from it. How gladly would he have declined the office at first! How gladly would he have resigned it many a time since! And yet he is thus put under the blackest characters of a tyrant, and a usurper. 4. They charge him with cheating them, (v. 14;) Thou hast not brought us, as thou promisedst us, into a land that floweth with milk and honey. and pray, whose fault was that? He had brought them to the borders of it, and it was just ready, under God, to put them in possession of it; but they thrust it away from them, and shut the door against themselves; so that it was purely their own fault that they were not now in Canaan, and yet Moses must bear the blame. Thus when the foolishness of man perverteth his way, his heart fretteth against the Lord, Prov. 19. 3. 5. They charge him with being guilty of an unfair dealing, that put out the eyes of these men, (v. 15;) and lead them blindfold as he pleased. The design of all he did for them, was, to open their eyes, and yet they insinuate that he intended to put out their eyes, that they might not see themselves imposed upon. Note, The wisest and best cannot please every body, nor gain the good word of all. These often fall under the heaviest censures, who have dedicated themselves to the highest employments of good work Moses had showed them from the Father, and for which of these do they reproach him?

II. Moses's just resentment of their insolence, v. 15. Moses, though the meekest man, yet, finding God reproached in him, was very wroth; he could not bear to see the people railing themselves, for whose salvation he had done so much. In this disposition, I. He appeals to God concerning his own integrity, whereas they basely reflected upon him as ambitious, covetous, and oppressive, in making himself a prince over them. God was His Witness, (1.) That he never got any thing by them; (2.) That he never lost any thing by way of bribery and extortion, but not by way of recompense or gratuity for all the good offices he had done them; he never took the pay of a general, or salary of a judge, much less the tribute of a prince. He got more in his estate when he kept Jethro’s flock, than when he came to be king in Jeshurun.

(2.) That they never lost any thing by him, neither have I hurt any one of them, no that any one of them can be said to be in the least out of the way of benefit and promotion. He never abused his power to the support of wrong. Note, Those that have never blinshed themselves need not fear being shrun by others: when men condemn us, we may be easy if our own hearts condemn us not. He begs of God to plead his cause, and clear him by showing his displeasure at the incense which Korah and his company were to offer, with whom Dathan and Abiram were in confederacy. Lord, says he, Respect not their offering. Wherein he seems to refer to the history of Cain, lately written by his own hand, of whom it is said, that to him and his offering God had not respect, Gen. 4. 5. These that followed the gainsaying of Korah, walked in the way of Cain, (these are put together, Jude 11.) and therefore he prays that they might be frowned upon as Cain was, and put to open confusion.

III. Issue joined between Moses and his accusers.
1. Moses challenges them to appear with Aaron next morning, at the time of offering up the morning incense, and refer themselves to God’s judgment, v. 16, 17. Since he could not convince them by his calm and affectionate reasoning, he is ready to enter into bonds to stand God’s award, not doubting but that God would come upon his controversy. This reference he had agreed to before, (v. 6, 7.) and here adds only one clause, which speaks his great condescension to the plaintiffs, that Aaron, against whose advancement they excepted, though now advanced by the divine institution to the honour of burning incense within the tabernacle, yet, upon this trial, should put himself into the place of a prosecutor, and stand upon the level with him, that so what they judged to be his error, Moses would himself stand with them, so that the complainant shall have all the fair dealing he can desire; and thus every mouth shall be stopped.
2. Korah accepts the challenge, and makes his appearance with Moses and Aaron at the door of the tabernacle, to make good his pretensions, v. 18, 19. If he had not had a very great stock of impudence, he could not have carried on the matter thus far. He was not lately seen Nadab and Abihu, the consecrated priests, struck dead for daring to offer incense with unwallowed fire; and could he and his accomplices expect to fare any better in offering incense with unwallowed hands? Yet, to confront Moses and Aaron, in the height of his pride, he thus bid defiance to Heaven, and pretends to demand the divine acceptance without a divinearrant; this was a bold thing; that heart hardened through the deceptiveness of sin. They have no heart to their work. Perhaps these were some of the censers which these heads of families had made use of at their family-altars, before this part of religious service was confined to the priesthood; and the altar in the tabernacle; (and they would bring them into use and reputation again;) or they might be common charred censers, which were for their ordinary use. Now, to attend the solemn trial, and to be witness of the issue, one would have thought Moses should have gathered the congregation against the rebels, but it seems Korah gathered them against Moses, (v. 19.) which intimates that a great part of the congregation sided with Korah, were at his beck, and wished him success; and that Korah’s hopes of carrying the point against Aaron, for, had he hesitated to make the trial thus public: but little did he think that he was now calling the congregation together to be the witnesses of his own confusion! Note, Proud and ambitious men, while they are projecting their own advancement, often prove to have been hurrying on their own shameful fall.

IV. The judgment set, and the Judge taking the transcendal part of the event, he would not have the whole congregation. 1. The glory of the Lord appeared, v. 19. The same glory that appeared to install Aaron in his office at first, (Lev. 9. 23.) now appeared to confirm him in it, and to confound those that oppose him, and set up themselves in competition with him. The Shechinah, or Divine Majesty, the glory of the Eternal Word, which ordinarily dwelt between the cherubims within the vail, now was publicly seen over the door of the tabernacle, to the terror of the whole congregation; for though they saw no manner of similitude, yet, probably, the appearances of the light and fire were such as plainly showed God to be angry with them; as when he appeared, ch. 14. 10. Nothing is more terrible to those who are conscious of guilt, than the appearances of divine glory; for such a glorious Being must needs be a formidable Enemy. He needed not to have made use of the Underworld and, in order to that, bade Moses and Aaron stand from among them, v. 21. God thus showed what their sin deserved, and how very provoking it was to him. See what a dangerous thing it is to have fellowship with sinners, and in the least to partake with them. Many of the congregation, it is likely, came only for company, following the crowd, or for curiosity to see the issue, yet it came to pass, as they ought to have done, to hear their testimony against the rebels, and openly to declare for God and Moses, they had like to have been all consumed in a moment. If we follow the herd into which the Devil is entered, it is at our peril.

V. The humble intercession of Moses and Aaron for the congregation, v. 22. 1. Their posture was importuming; they fell on their faces, prosterning themselves, by a posture of submission and dependence, which was, no doubt, the effect of the expectation of mercy, and the fear of the wrath they might prevail for sparing mercy. Though the people had treacherously deserted them, and struck in with those that were in arms against them, yet they approved themselves faithful to the trusts reposed in them, as shepherds of Israel, which were to stand in the breach when they saw the flock in danger. Note, If others fail in their duty to us, that does not discharge us from our duty to them, nor take off the obligations we lie under to seek their welfare. 2. Their prayer was a pleading prayer, and it proved a prevailing one. Now God had destroyed them, if Moses had not turned away his wrath; (Ps. 106. 23.) yet far be it from us to imagine that Moses was more considerate or more compassionate than God, in such a case as this; but God saw fit to show his just displeasure against the sin of sinners, by the sentence, and at the same time to manifest his gracious condescension to the prayers of saints, by the revocation of the sentence at the intercession of Moses. Observe in the prayer, (1.) The title they give to God, The God of the spirits of all flesh. See what man is; he is a spirit in flesh, a soul embodied; a crea- ture wonderfully compounded of heaven and earth. What God is; He is the God of the spirits of all flesh. He forms it, Heb. 4. 12. 2. He has an ability to fashion it, (Ps. 33. 15.) and authority to dispose of it, for he has said, All souls are mine. Ezek. 18. 4. They in-situate hereby, that though, as the God of the spirits of all flesh, he might in sovereignty consume this congregation in a moment, yet it was to be hoped that he would in mercy spare them, not only because they were the work of his own hands, and he had a propriety in them, but because, being the God of spirits, he knew their frame, and could distinguish between the leaders and the led; between those who sinned maliciously, and those who were drawn in by their wiles, and would make a difference accordingly in his judgments. (2.) The argument they insist on; it is much the same with that which Abraham urged in his intercession for Sodom, (Gen. 18. 23.) Wilt thou destroy the righteous with the wicked? Such is the plea here, Shall one man sin, and wilt thou be wroth with all the congregation? Not but that it was the sin of them all to join in this matter, but the great transgression was his that first hatched the treason. Note, Whatever God may do in sovereignty and strict justice, we have reason to hope that he will not destroy a congregation for the sin of one, but that righteousness and peace having kissed each other in the undertaking of the Redeemer, mercy shall rejoice against judgment. Moses knew that all the congregation must perish in the wilderness by degrees, yet he is by this argument, that they might not be consumed at once, and would reckon it a favour to obtain a reprieve. Lord, let it alone this year.

23. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 24. Speak unto the congregation, saying, Get you up from about the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. 25. And Moses rose up, and went unto Dathan and Abiram; and the elders of Israel followed him. 26. And he spake unto the congregation, saying, Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of theirs, lest ye be consumed in all their sins. 27. So they got up from the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, on every side: and Dathan and Abiram came out, and stood in the door of their tents, and their wives, and their sons, and their little children. 28. And Moses said, Hereby ye shall know that the Lord hath sent me to do all these works; for I have not done them of mine own mind. 29. If these men die the common death of all men, or if they be visited after the visitation of all men; then the Lord hath not sent me: 30. But if the Lord make a new thing, and the earth open her mouth, and swallow them up, with all that appertain unto them, and they go down quick into the pit; then ye shall understand that these men have provoked the Lord. 31. And it came to pass, as he had made an end of speaking all these words, that the ground clave asunder that was under them: 32. And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and their houses, and all the men that appertain unto Korah, and all their goods. 33. They, and all that appertain to them, went down alive into the pit, and the earth closed upon: them: and they perished from among the congregation. 34. And all Israel that were round about them fled at the cry of them: for they said, Lest the earth swallow us up also.

We have here the determining of the controversy with Dathan and Abiram, who rebelled against Moses: as, in the next paragraph, the determining of the controversies with Korah and his company, who would be rivals with Aaron. It should seem that Dathan and Abiram had set up a spacious tabernacle in the midst of the tents of their families, where they kept court, met in council, and hung out their flag of defiance against Moses: it is here called the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, v. 24, 27. There, as in the place of the tabernacle, Dathan and Abiram stood, when Korah and his friends went up to the tabernacle of the Lord, waiting the issue of their trial; but here we are told how they had their business done before that trial was over, for God will take what method he pleases in his judgments.

I. Public warning is given to the congregation to withdraw immediately from the tents of the rebels. God bids Moses speak to this purport, v. 24. This was in answer to Moses's prayer; he had begged that God would not destroy the whole congregation; *"Well," says God, "I will not, provided they be so wise as to shift for their own safety, and get out of the way of danger. If they will quit the rebels, well and good, they shall not perish with them; otherwise, let them take what follows." Note, We cannot expect to reap benefit by the prayers of our friends for our salvation, unless we ourselves be diligent and faithful in making use of the means of salvation; for God never promised to save by miracles those that would not save themselves by means. Moses, that had prayed for them, must preach this to them, and warn them to flee from this wrath to come. 2. Moses accordingly repairs to the headquarters of the rebels, leaving Aaron at the door of the tabernacle, v. 25. Dathan and Abiram had solemnly and unanimously refused to come up to him, (v. 12.) yet he hurries to these rebels to go down to them, and try if he could yet convince and reclaim them. Ministers must thus with meekness instruct those that oppose themselves, and not think it below them to stoop to those that are most stubborn, for their good. Christ himself stretches out his hand to a rebellious and gainsaying people. The seventy elders of Israel attend Moses as his guard, to secure him from the insolence of the rabble, and, by their presence, to do an honour upon him, and, if possible, to strike an awe upon the rebels. It is our duty to contribute all we can to the countenance and support of injured innocence and honour. 3. Proclamation is made that all manner of persons, as they tendered their own safety, should forthwith depart from the tents of these wicked men, (v. 26.) and thus should signify that they deserted their house and wife, and were detected for crimes and counsels, and dreaded the punishment coming upon them. Note, Those that would not perish with sinners must come out from among them, and be separate. In vain do we pray, Gather not our souls with sinners, if we save not ourselves from the untoward generation. God's people are called out of Babylon, lest they share both in her sins and in her plagues, Rev. 13. 4. II. The congregation takes the warning, but the rebels themselves continue obstinate, v. 27. 1. God, in mercy, inclined the people to forsake the rebels. They *got up from the tabernacle of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram: both those whose lot it was to pitch near them, who doubtless with them-made them to know he was not tied up to one way of punishing; the earth, when he pleases, shall save his justice as effectually as the fire. 2. It is very terrible to the sinners themselves to go down alive into their own graves; and we have observed that, before God, to go down thus to the bars of the pit, when they were in their full strength, wholly at ease and quiet. 3. It was severe upon their poor children, who, for the greater terror of the judgment, and fuller indication of the divine wrath, persisted as part of their parents; in which, though we cannot particularly tell how bad they might be to desire it, or how good God might be otherwise to them to compensate, yet, as those were the testimony to the law, and the infinite justice did them no wrong. Far be it from God that he should do iniquity. 4. It was altogether miraculous. The clearing of the earth was as wonderful, and as much above the power of nature, as the clearing of the sea; and the closing of the earth again more so than the closing of the waters. God has all the creatures at his command, and can make any of them, when he pleases, instruments of his justice; nor will any of them be our friends, if he be our enemy. God is not capricious in his proceedings.

Moses had lately taught them in that prayer of his, Ps. 90. 11. Who knows the power of thine anger? He has, when he pleases, strange punishments for the workers of iniquity, Job 31. 3. Let us therefore conclude, Who is able to stand before this holy Lord God? 5. It was very significant. They set their mouths against the heavens, and their throat was an often sepulchre; justly therefore does the earth open her mouth upon them, and swallow them up. They made a rent in the congregation, justly therefore is the earth rent under them. Presumptuous sinners that hate to be reformed, are a burthen to the earth, the whole creation groans under them, which here was signified by this, that the earth sunk under these rebels, as weary of bearing them, and being under them. And, considering how the earth is still in like manner laden with the weight of iniquity, we have reason to wonder that this was the only time it ever sunk under its load. Lastly, it was typical of the eternal ruin of sinners who die impenitent, who, perhaps in allusion to this, are said to sink down into the pit, (Ps. 9. 15.) and to go down quick into hell, Ps. 55. 15. But David, even when he sinks in deep mire, yet prays in faith, Let not the pit shut her mouth upon me, as it does on the damned, between whom and life there is a gulf vast and deep, Ps. 16. 10. 11. His case was bad, but not, like this, desperate.

V. All Israel is alarmed at the judgment, v. 34. They fled at the cry of them. They cried for help when it was too late; their dejected spirits, instead of fetching their neighbours in to their relief, drove them so much the farther off; for, knowing their own guilt, and one another’s, they hastened one another, saying, ‘Lest the earth swallow us up also.’ Note, The sinfulness of mankind is so great, and the guilt of those that are gone down to the bottomless pit, we should give more diligence than we do to escape for our lives, lest we also come into that condemnation.

35. And there came out a fire from the Lord, and consumed the two hundred and fifty men that offered incense. 36. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 37. Speak unto Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest, that he take up the censers out of the burning, and scatter thou the fire yonder; for they are hallowed. 38. The censers of these sinners against their own souls, let them make them broad plates for a cover-ng out the altar; for they offered them before the Lord, therefore they are hallowed: and they shall be a sign unto the children of Israel. 39. And Eleazar the priest took the brazen censers, wherewith they that were burnt had offered; and they were made broad plates for a covering of the altar; 40. To be a memorial unto the children of Israel, that no stranger, which is not of the seed of Aaron, come near to offer incense before the Lord; that he be not as Korah, and as his company: as the Lord said to him by the hand of Moses.

We must now look back to the door of the tabernacle, where we left the pretenders to the priesthood, with their censers in their hands, ready to offer incense; and here we find,

I. Vengeance taken on them, v. 35. It is probable, that, when the earth opened in the camp to swallow up Dathan and Abiram, a fire went out from before the Lord, and consumed the pretenders, and fifty men that offered incense, while Aaron, that stood with them, was preserved alive. This punishment was not, indeed, so new a thing as the former, for Nadab and Abihu thus died; but it was no less strange or dreadful; and it appeared, 1. That our God is a consuming Fire. Is thunders a sensible indication of the terror of his voice? Lightning is also of the power of his hand. We must see in this his fiery indignation which devours the adversaries, and infers from it what a fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of the living God, Heb. 10. 27 . . . 31. 2. That it is at our peril if we meddle with that which does not belong to us; God is jealous of the honour of his own institutions, and will not have them invaded. It is most probable that Korah himself was consumed with these 250 that pretended to offer incense; for the priesthood was the thing that he aimed at, and therefore we have reason to think that he would not quit his post at the door of the tabernacle. But, behold, they are made sacrifices to the justice of God, who flattered themselves with the hopes of being priests. Had they been content with their office as Levites, which was sacred and honourable, and better than they deserved, they might have lived and died with joy and reputation; but, like the angels that sinned, learning their first estate, and aiming at the honours that were not appointed them, they were thrust down to Hades, their censers stuck out of their hands, and their breath out of their bodies, by a burning which typified the vengeance of the eternal fire.

II. Care is taken to perpetuate the remembrance of this vengeance. No mention is made of the taking up the censers, though these leaves them as dung upon the face of the earth; but everywhere is given about the censers, 1. That they be secured, because they are hallowed; Eleazar is charged with this, v. 37. Those invaders of the priesthood had proceeded so far, by the divine patience and submission, as to kindle their incense with fire from off the altar, which they were suffered to use by way of experiment: but, as soon as they had kindled their fire, God not only punished them with all their portion, but prolonged their period to their pretensions; now Eleazar is ordered to scatter the fire, with the incense that was kindled with it, in some unclean place without the camp, to signify God's abhorrence of their offering as a polluted thing; The sacrifice of the wicked is an abomination to the Lord. But he is to gather up the censers out of the mingled burning; God's fire and theirs; because they are hallowed. Having been once put to a holy use, and that by God's own order, (though only for trial,) they must not return to common service; so some understand it: rather, they are devoted; they are an anathema; and therefore, as all devoted things, they must be made, some way or other, serviceable to the glory of God. 2. That they be used for the service of the sanctuary, as censers, as would rather have put hands upon the usurpers, whose disgrace was intended; nor was there occasion for brazen censers, the golden altar was served with golden ones; but they must be beaten into broad plates for a covering of the brazen altar, v. 38. . . . 40. These pretended thought to have ruined the altar, by laying the priesthood in common again; but, to show that Aaron's office was so far from being shaken by their impetent malice, that it was rather confirmed by it, the gold which offered to rival his, were used both for the adorning and for the preserving of the altar at which he ministered. Yet this was not all; this covering of the altar must be a memorial to the children of Israel, throughout their generations, of this great event. Though there was so much in it astonishing, and though Moses was to record it in his history, yet there was a danger of its being forgotten; in process of time impressions that seem deep are not always durable; therefore it was necessary to appoint this record of the judgment, that the Levites, who attended this altar, and had their inferior services appointed them, might learn to keep within their bounds, and be afraid of transgressing them, lest they should be made like Korah and his company, who were Levites, and would have been priests. These censers were preserved in terror— that others might hear, and fear, and do no more presumptuously. Thus God has provided that his wonderful works, both in mercy and judgment, should be had in everlasting remembrance, that the end of them may be answered, and they may serve for instruction and admonition to these on whom the ends of the world are come. 41. But, on the morrow, all the congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron, saying, Ye have killed the people of the Lord. 42. And it came to pass, when the congregation was gathered against Moses and against Aaron, that they looked toward the tabernacle of the congregation: and, behold, the cloud covered it, and the glory of the Lord appeared. 43. And Moses and Aaron came before the tabernacle of the congregation. 44. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 45. Get you up from among this congregation, that I may consume them as in a moment. And they fell upon their faces. 46. And Moses said unto Aaron, Take a censer, and put fire therein from off the altar, and put on incense, and go quickly unto the congregation, and make an atonement for them; for there is wrath gone out from the Lord; the plague is begun. 47. And Aaron took, as Moses commanded, and ran into the midst of the congregation; and, behold, the plague was begun among the people; and he put on incense, and made an atonement for the people. 48. And he stood between the dead and the living; and the plague was stayed. 49. Now they that died in the plague were fourteen thousand and seven hundred, besides them that died about the matter of Korah. 50. And Aaron returned unto Moses, unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation: and the plague was stayed.

I. A new rebellion, raised the very next day, against Moses and Aaron. Be astonished, O heavens, at this, and wonder, O earth! Was there ever such an instance of the incurable corruption of sinners? v. 41. On the morrow the body of the people mutilated; 1. Though they were so lately saved from sharing in the same punishment, and the survivors were as brands fired and other burning, yet they fly in the face of Moses and Aaron to whose intercession they owed their preservation. Their charge runs very high, Ye have killed the people of the Lord. Could any thing have been said more unjustly and maliciously? "They canonize the rebels, calling them the people of the Lord, who died in arms against him; they stigmatize divine justice itself; it was plain enough that Moses and Aaron had no hand in their death, they did what they could to save them; so that, in charging them with murder, they did, in effect, charge God himself with it. The continued obstinacy of this people, notwithstanding the terrors of God's law, as it was given on mount Sinai, and the terrors of his judgments, as they were here executed on the disobedient, shows how necessary the grace of God is to the effectual change of men's hearts and lives, without which the most likely means will never attain the end. Love will do what fear could not.

II. God's speedy appearing against the rebels. When they were gathered against Moses and Aaron, perhaps with a design to depose or murder them, they looked toward the tabernacle, as if their misgivings consciences expected some frowns from thence, and, behold, the glory of the Lord appeared, v. 42. The nation of his servants, and the congregation of his and their accusers and adversaries. Moses and Aaron thereupon came before the tabernacle, partly for their own safety; there they took sanctuary from the strife of tongues, (Ps. 27. 5–31. 20.) and partly for advice, to know what was the mind of God upon this occasion, v. 43. Justice hereupon declares that they deserve to be consumed in a moment, v. 44. Moses and Aaron stood before the Lord, therefore, is left to doubt of Aaron's call to the priesthood. Note, Those make out the best title to public honours that lay out themselves the most for the public good, and obtain mercy of the Lord to be faithful and useful. If any man will be great, let him make himself the servant of all.

(4.) That Aaron was a type of Christ, who came into the world to make an atonement for sin, and to take away the wrath of God, from us, and who, by his mediation and intercession, stands between the living and the dead, to secure his chosen Israel to himself, and save them out of the midst of a world infected with sin and the curse.

IV. The result and issue of the whole matter. 1. God's justice was glorified in the death of some. Great execution the sword of the Lord did in a very little time. Though Aaron, one of the haste of the Lord, and one public and responsible for the service, there were 14,700 men laid dead upon the spot, v. 49. There were but few comparatively that died about the matter of Korah, the ring-leaders only were made examples, but the people not being led to repentance by the patience and forbearance of God with them, justice is not now so sparing of the blood of Israelites. They cried out of the death of a few hundreds as an ungodly slaughter made among the people of the Lord, but here one correction that complaint by the slaughter. of many thousands. Note, Those that quarrel with lesser judgments prepare greater for themselves: for when God judges he will overcome. 2. His mercy was glorified in the preservation of the rest; God showed them what he could do by his power, and what he might do in justice, but then showed them what he would do in his love and pity, he would preserve them a people to himself, notwithstanding all this, in and by a mediator. The cloud of Aaron's incense, coming from his hand, stayed the plague. Note, It is much for the glory of God's goodness, that many a time, even in wrath, he remembers mercy; and even when judgments have been begun, prayer puts a stop to them; so ready is he to forgive, and so little pleasure does he take in the death of sinners.

CHAP. XVII.

Enough has been done in the chapter before to quash all pretensions of the families of the tribe of Levi that would set up in competition with Aaron, and to make it appear that Aaron was the head of that tribe; but it seems, when that matter was settled, the princes of the rest of the tribes began to murmur: if the head of a tribe must be a priest, why not the head of some other tribe than that of Levi? He that searches the heart knoweth that. It was not, as before, to prevent bloodshed, and it is done by miracle in this chapter, not a miracle of wrath, but of grace. 1. The matter was put upon trial by the bringing of two rods, one for each prince, before the Lord, v. 1. 7. II. Upon trial, the matter is determined by the miraculous blossoming of Aaron's rod, v. 8. 9. III. The decision of the controversy is registered by the preservation of the rod, v. 10. 11. IV. The people acquiesce in it with some reluctance, v. 12. 13.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Speak unto the children of Israel, and take of every one of them a rod, according to the house of their fathers, of all their princes according to the house of their fathers, twelve rods: write thou every man's name upon his rod. 3. And thou shalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi: for one rod shall be for the head of the house of their fathers. 4. And thou shalt lay them up in the tabernacle of the congregation, before the testimony, where I will meet with you. 5. And it shall come to pass that the man's rod, whom I shall choose, shall blossom: and I will make to cease from me the murmurings of the children of Israel, whereby they murmur against you. 6. And Moses spake unto the children of Israel; and every one of their princes gave him a rod apiece, for each prince one, according to their fathers' houses, even twelve rods: and the rod of Aaron was among their rods. 7. And Moses laid up the rods before the Lord in the tabernacle of witness.

Here we have,

1. Orders given for the bringing in of a rod for every tribe, (which was peculiarly significant, for the word here used for a rod sometimes signified a tribe, as particularly ch. 34. 13.) that God, by a miracle wrought on purpose, might make it known on whom he had conferred the honour of the priesthood. (1.) It seems, then, the priesthood was a preferment worth seeking and striving for, even by the princes of the tribes. It is an honour to the greatest of men to be employed in the service of God. Yet, perhaps, these contended for it rather for the sake of the profit and power that attended the office, than for the sake of that in it which was divine and sacred. (2.) It seems likewise, after all that had been done to settle this matter, there were some who would make up, at any occasion, to contest it. They would not acquiesce in the appointment, but would make an interest in opposition to it. They strive with God for the dominion, and the question is, whose will shall stand? God will rule, but Israel will not be ruled, and that is the quarrel. (3.) It is an instance of the grace of God, that, having wrought divers miracles to punish sin, he would work one more on purpose to prevent it. God has even in this, as Christ said, the sign of the prophet Jonas; that in the generation to which he should be to the men of that generation, the highest proof of his mission that should be given them. The directions are, [1.] That twelve rods or staves should be brought in; it is probable that they were not now fresh cut out of a tree, for then the miracle had not been so great; but that they were the staves which the princes ordinarily used as signs of their authority; of which we read, (ch. 21. 18.) old dry staves, that had been in use in them, and it is probable that they were all made of the almond-tree. It should seem, they were but two in all, with Aaron's, for when Levi comes into the account, Ephraim and Manasseh make but one, under the name of Joseph. [2.] That the name of each prince should be written upon his rod, that every man might know his own, and to prevent contests. Writing is often a good preservative against strife, for what is written may be appealed to. [3.] That they should be laid up in the tabernacle, for one night before the testimony, that is, before the ark, which, with its mercy-seat, was a symbol, token, or testimony, of God's presence with them. [4.] They were to expect, being told it before, that the rod of the tribe, or prince, whom God chose to the priesthood, should bud and blossom, v. 5. It was requisite that they should be told of it, that it might appear not to be casual, but according to the counsel and will of God.

2. The preparing of the rods accordingly. The princes brought them in, some of them perhaps fondly expecting that the choice would fall upon them, and all of them thinking it honour enough to be competitors with Aaron, and to stand candidates, even against the prince of the tribe. They laid them up before the Lord. He did not object that the matter was sufficiently settled already, and enough done to convince those that were not invincibly hardened in their prejudices. He did not undertake to determine the controversy himself, though it might easily have been done, nor did he suggest that it would be to no purpose to offer satisfaction to a prince that was willingly blind; but since God will have it so, he did bring it out, and ordered the case before the Lord, to whom the appeal was made by consent, and left it with him.

3. And it came to pass, that, on the morrow, Moses went into the tabernacle of witness; and, behold, the rod of Aaron, for the house of Levi, was budded, and brought luds, and bloomed blossoms, and yielded almonds. 9. And Moses brought out all the rods from before the Lord unto all the children of Israel: and they looked, and took every man his rod. 10. And the Lord said unto Moses, Bring Aaron's rod again before the testimony, to be kept for a token against the rebels; and thou shalt quite take away their murmuring from me, that they die not. 11. And Moses did so: as the Lord commanded him, so did he. 12. And the children of Israel spake unto Moses, saying, Behold, we die, we perish, we all perish. 13. Whosoever cometh any thing near unto the tabernacle of the Lord shall die: shall we be consumed with dying? Here is, 1. The final determination of the controversy concerning the priesthood, by a miracle, v. 8, 9. The rods, or staves, were brought out from the most holy place, where they were laid up, and publicly produced before the people; and, while all the rest of the rods remained as they were, Aaron's rod only, of a dry stick, became a living branch, budded, and blossomed, and yielded almonds. In some places there were buds, in others blossoms, in others fruit, at the same time; this was miraculous, and took away all suspicion of a fraud, as if in the night Moses had taken away Aaron's rod, and put a living branch of an almond-tree in the room of it; for no ordinary branch would have buds, blossoms, and fruit, all together. Now, 1. This was a plain indication to the people that Aaron was chosen to the priesthood, and not any other of the princes or tribes. Thus he was distinguished from them, and manifested to be under the special blessing of heaven, which sometimes yields increase where there is neither planting nor watering by the hand of man. 2. Bishop Hall here observes, that fruitfulness is fits, ups and downs, as of a divine call, and they are the plants of God's setting, and the boughs cut off from them, will flourish: see Ps. 92.12...14. The trees of the Lord, though they seem dry trees, are full of saft. 2. It was a very proper sign to represent the priesthood itself, which was hereby confirmed to Aaron, (1.) That it should be fruitful and serviceable to the church of God. It produced not only blossoms, but almonds; for the priesthood was designed, not only for an honour to Aaron, but for a blessing to Israel. Thus Christ ordained his apostles and ministers that they should go and bring forth fruit, and that their fruit should remain, John 15.16. (2.) That there should be a succession of priests; here were not only almonds for the present, but buds and blossoms promising more hereafter. Thus has Christ provided in his church, that a seed should spring up from generation to generation. (3.) That yet this priesthood should not be perpetually, but, in process of time, like the branches and blossoms of a tree, should fail and wither. The flourishing of the almond-tree is mentioned as one of the signs of old age, Eccl. 12.5. This character was betimes put upon the priesthood, which soon became old and ready to vanish away, Heb. 8.13. It the same time and frame of Aaron and his priesthood: for he is the Man, the Branch, (Zech. 6.12) that is to be a Priest upon his throne, as it follows there: and was to grow up before God, as this before the ark, like a tender plant, and a root out of a dry ground, Isa. 53.2. II. The record of this determination, by the preserving of the rod before the testimony, in perpetually admirable manner, so that it might be had in perpetual remembrance, v. 10, 11. It is probable that the buds, and blossoms, and fruit, continued fresh; the same divine power that produced them in a night, preserved them for ages, at least so long as it was necessary for a token against the rebels. So it was a standing miracle, and the continuance of it was an undeniable proof of the truth of it. Even the leaf of God's trees shall not wither, Ps. 1.3. Thus was preserved to them, as the Censes were, to take away their murmuring, that they die not. Note, 1. The design of God, in all his providences, both mercies and judgments, and in the memorials of them, is, to take away sin, and to prevent it. These things are done, these things written, that we sin not, 1 John 2.1. Christ was manifested to take away sin. 2. What God does for the taking away of sin, is done in real kindness to us, that we may not, by the bitterness of his sharp methods he uses with us, be for the cure of a disease which otherwise would certainly be fatal. Bishop Hall observes here, that the tables of the law, the pot of manna, and Aaron's rod, were preserved together in or about the ark, (the Apostle takes notice of them all three together, Heb. 9.4.) to show to after-ages how the ancient church was taught, and fed, and ruled; and infers how precious this doctrine is, that the church is the branch of God's ancient ordinance. The church are to him, and should be to us. The rod of Moses was used in working many miracles, yet we do not find that this was preserved, for the keeping of it would serve only to gratify men's curiosity; but the rod of Aaron, that which carried its miracle along with it, was carefully preserved, because that would be of standing use to convince men's consciences, to silence all discussion about the ancient church, and to confirm the faith of God's Israel in those institutions. Such is the difference between the sacraments which Christ has appointed for edification, and the relics which men have devised for superstition. III. The outcry of the people hereupon; (v. 12, 13.) Behold, we die, we perish, we all perish: shall we be consumed with dying? This may be considered, 1. As it is a proper manner of expression for returning people quarrelling with the judgments of God, which, by their own pride and obstinacy, they had brought upon themselves. They seem to speak despairingly, as if God was a hard Master, that sought advantage against them, and took all occasions to pick quarrels with them, so that if they stood ever so little wisely, if they stepped ever so little beyond their bounds, they must die, they must perish. 2. As it is a way of expressing the grief and distress of God, that he should be satisfied with their blood and ruin till he had made an end of them all, and they were consumed with dying. Thus they seem to be like a wild bull in a net, full of the fury of the Lord, (Isa. 51.20.) fretting that God was too hard for them, and that they were forced to stand under, only because they could not help it. Note, It is a very wicked thing to fret against God, when we are in affliction, and in our distress thus to trespass yet more. If we die, if we perish, it is long of ourselves, and the blame will lie upon our own heads. Or, 2. Of a repenting people; many interpreters take it as bespeaking their submission. "Now we see it is the will of God that we should keep our distance, and it is at our peril if we draw nearer than is appointed; we submit to the divine will in this appointment, we will not contest it any more, lest we all perish," and they engage Moses to intercede for them, that they might not be all consumed with dying. Thus the point was gained, and in this matter God quite took away their murmurings, and from henceforward they acquiesced. Note,
When God judges, he will overcome, and, one way or other, will oblige the most obstinate gain-sayers to confess their folly sooner or later, and that wherein they dealt proudly he was above them.

Viciat Galileæ—O Galilean, thou hast conquered.

CHAP. XVIII.

Aaron being now fully established in the priesthood, abundantly to his own satisfaction, and to the satisfaction of the people, (which was the good that God brought out of the evil of the sin which made to him,) in this chapter God gives him full instructions concerning his office; or rather repeats those which he had before given him. 1. He tells him, I. What must be his work, and the care and charge committed to him; and what assistance he should have from the Levites in that work, v. 1—7. II. What should be his wages, and the Levites', for this work. 1. The perquisites or fees peculiar to the priests, v. 8. 2. The settled maintenance of the Levites, v. 9. 3. His wages should not be paid to the priests out of the Levites' maintenance, v. 25. 32. Thus every one knew what he had to do, and what he had to live upon.

1. And the Lord said unto Aaron, Thou, and thy sons, and thy father's house with thee, shall bear the iniquity of the sanctuary: and thou and thy sons with thee shall bear the iniquity of your priesthood. And thy brethren also of the tribe of Levi, the tribe of thy father, bring thou with thee, that they may be joined unto thee, and minister unto thee: but thou and thy sons with thee shall minister before the tabernacle of witness.

2. And they shall keep thy charge, and the charge of all the tabernacle: only they shall not come nigh the vessels of the sanctuary and the altar, that neither they nor you also die. And they shall be joined unto thee, and keep the charge of the tabernacle of the congregation, for all the service of the tabernacle: and a stranger shall not come nigh unto you. And ye shall keep the charge of the sanctuary, and the charge of the altar; that there be no wrath any more upon the children of Israel. And I, behold I, have taken your brethren the Levites from among the children of Israel; to you they are given as a gift for the Lord, to do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation. Therefore thou and thy sons with thee shall keep your priest's office for every thing of the altar, and within the vail; and ye shall serve: I have given your priest's office unto you as a service of gift: and the stranger that cometh nigh shall be put to death.

The coherence of this chapter with that foregoing is very observable. 1. The precedent, in the close of that chapter, had complained of the difficulty and peril that there were in drawing near to God, which put them under some dreadful apprehensions, that the tabernacle in the midst of them, which they hoped would have been their joy and glory, would rather be their terror and ruin; now, in answer to this complaint, God here gives them to understand by Aaron, that the priests should come near for them as their representatives; so that though the people were obliged to keep their distance, yet that should not at all redound to their disgrace or prejudice, but their comfortable communion with God should be kept up by the intercession of the priests.

2. A great deal of honour God had now lately put upon Aaron; his rod had budded and blossomed, when the rods of the rest of the priests remained dry, and destitute both of fruit and beauty; now lest Aaron should be puffed up with the abundance of the favours that were done him, and the miracles that were wrought for the support of him in his high station, God comes to him to remind him of the burden that was laid upon him, and the duty required from him as a priest. He would see reason not to be proud of his preferment, but to receive the honours of his office with reverence and holy trembling, when he considered how great a charge and care were that devolved upon him, and how hard it would be for him to give a good account of his conduct in this office. Be not high-minded, but fear.

(1.) God tells us the danger that attended his dignity, v. 1. [1.] That both the priests and Levites (Thou, and thy sons, and thy father's house) should bear the iniquity of the sanctuary; that is, if the sanctuary were profaned by the intrusion of strangers, or persons in their uncleanness, the blame should lie upon the Levites and priests, who ought to have kept them off. Though the sinner that thrust in presumptuously should die in his iniquity, yet his blood should be required at the hands of the watchmen. Or, it may be taken more generally, so any one of the duties or offices of the sanctuary be neglected, if any service be not done in season, or not according to the law, if any thing be lost or misplaced in the removal of the sanctuary, you shall be accountable for it, and answer it at your peril.” [2.] That the priests should themselves bear the iniquity of the priesthood; that is, If they either neglected any part of their work, or permitted any other persons to invade their office, and take their work out of their hands, they should bear the blame of it. Note, The greater the trust is of work, and power that is committed to us, the greater is our danger of contracting guilt, by falsifying and betraying that trust. This is a good reason why we should neither be envious at others' honours, nor ambitious ourselves of high places, because great dignity expresses us to great iniquity. Those that are intrusted with the charge of the sanctuary are the better guarded for. Who would covet the care of souls, who considers the account that must be given of that care?

(2.) He tells him of the duty that attended his dignity. [1.] That he and his sons must minister before the tabernacle of witness, (v. 2.) that is, (as Bishop Patrick explains it,) before the most holy place, in which the ark was; on the outside of the veil of that tabernacle, but within the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, there to attend the golden altar, the table, and candlestick, which no Levite might approach to. Ye shall serve, (v. 7.) not “Ye shall rule;” it was never intended that they should lord it over God's heritage, but “Ye shall serve God and the congregation.” Note, The priesthood is a service. If any desire the office of a bishop, he desires a good work. Ministers must remember that they are ministers, that is, of whom it is required that they be humble, diligent, and faithful. [2.] That the Levites must assist him and his sons, and minister to them in all the service of the tabernacle, (v. 2.) though they must by no means come nigh the vessels of the sanctuary, nor at the altar meddle with the great services of burning the fat and sprinkling the blood. Aaron's family was very small, and as they increased, the rest of the families of Israel would increase.
likewise, so that their hands neither were now, nor likely be, sufficient for all the service of the tabernacle, therefore, (says God) the Levites shall be joined to thee, v. 2, and again, v. 4, where there seems to be an allusion to the name of Levi, which signifies joined. Many of the Levites had of late set themselves against Aaron, but from henceforward God promises that they should be heartily joined to him in interest and affection, and should no more contest with him. It was a good sign to Aaron that God owned him, when he inclined the hearts of those concerned to own him too. The Levites are said to be given as a gift to the priests, v. 6. Note, We are to value it as a great gift of the divine bounty to have those joined to us, that will be helpful and serviceable to us in the service of God. [3.] That both priests and Levites must carefully watch against the profanation of sacred things. The Levites must keep the charge of the tabernacle, that no stranger (that is, none who upon any account was forbidden to come) might come nigh, (v. 4,) and that upon pain of death, v. 7. And the priests must keep the charge of the sanctuary, (v. 5,) must instruct the people and admonish them concerning the due distance they were to keep, and not suffer them to break the bounds set them, as Korah's company had done, that there be no wrath any more upon the children of Israel. Note, The preventing of sin is the preventing of wrath; and the mischief sin has done, should be a warning to us for the future, to watch against it both in ourselves and others.

3. And the Lord spake unto Aaron, Behold, I also have given thee the charge of my heave-offerings of all the hallowed things of the children of Israel; unto thee have I given them, by reason of the anointing, and to thy sons, by an ordinance for ever. This shall be thine of the most holy things, reserved from the fire: Every oblation of theirs, every meat-offering of theirs, and every sin-offering of theirs, and every trespass-offering of theirs, which they shall render unto me, shall be most holy for thee and for thy sons. 10. In the most holy place shalt thou eat it; every male shall eat it: it shall be holy unto thee. 11. And this is thine: the heave-offering of their gift, with all the wave-offerings of the children of Israel: I have given them unto thee, and to thy sons, and to thy daughters with thee, by a statute for ever: every one that is clean in thy house shall eat of it. 12. All the best of the oil, and all the best of the wine, and of the wheat, the first-fruits of them, which they shall offer unto the Lord, them have I given thee. 13. And whatsoever is first ripe in the land, which they shall bring unto the Lord, shall be thine: every one that is clean in thy house shall eat of it. 14. Every thing devoted in Israel shall be thine. 15. Every thing that openeth the matrix in all flesh, which they bring unto the Lord, whether it be of men or beasts, shall be thine: nevertheless the first-born of man shalt thou surely redeem, and the firstling of unclean beasts shalt thou redeem.

16. And those that are to be redeemed, from a month old shalt thou redeem, according to thine estimation, for the money of five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary, which is twenty gerahs. 17. But the firstling of a cow, or the firstling of a sheep, or the firstling of a goat, thou shalt not redeem; they are holy: thou shalt sprinkle their blood upon the altar, and shalt burn their fat for an offering made by fire, for a sweet savour unto the Lord. 18. And the flesh of them shall be thine, as the wave-breast and as the right shoulder are thine. 19. All the heave-offerings of the holy things, which the children of Israel offer unto the Lord, have I given thee and thy sons, and thy daughters with thee, by a statute for ever: it is a covenant of salt for ever before the Lord unto thee, and to thy seed with thee.

The priests' service is called a warfare; and who goes a warfare at his own charges? As they were well-employed, so they were well-provided for, and well-paid. None shall serve God for naught. All believers are spiritual priests, and God has promised to take care of them; they shall dwell in the land, and they, they shall be a blessing; they shall be a great sight. Godliness has the promise of the life that now is. And, from this plentiful provision here made for the priests, the apostle infers that it is the duty of Christian churches to maintain their ministers; they that served at the altar lived upon the altar. So they that preach the gospel should live upon the gospel, and live comfortably, 1 Cor. 9. 13, 14. Scandalous maintenance makes scandalous ministers. Now observe, 1. That much of the provision that was made for them arose out of the sacrifices which they themselves were employed to offer. They had the skins of almost all the sacrifices, which they might sell, and they had a considerable share out of the meat-offerings, sin-offerings, &c. They that had the charge of the offerings had the benefit, v. 8. Note, God's work is his own wages, and his service carries its recompense along with it. Even in the keeping of God's commandments there is a reward, the present pleasures of religion are part of its pay. 2. That they had not only a good table kept for them, but money likewise in their pockets for the redemption of the first-born, and these firstlings of cattle which might not be offered in sacrifice. Thus their maintenance was such as left them altogether dissatisfied from the affairs of this life, they had no grounds to complain, no land to till, no income and no cattle to tend, no visible estate to take care of, and yet had a more plentiful income than any other families whatsoever. Thus God ordered it. (1.) That they might be the more entirely addicted to their ministry, and not diverted from it, or disturbed in it, by any worldly care or business. The ministry requires a whole man. (2.) That they might be examples of living by faith, not only in God's providence, but in his ordinance. They lived from hand to mouth, that they might learn to take no thought for the morrow, sufficient for the day would be the provision thereof; and they had no estates to leave their children, that they might by faith leave them to the care of that God who had fed them all their lives long. 3. Of the provision that was made for their tables, some is said to be most holy, (v. 9, 10,) which was to be eaten by the priests themselves, and in the court of the tabernacle only.
but other presents were less holy, of which their families might eat, at their own houses, provided they were clean, v. 11. 13. See Lev. 22. 10, &c. It is commanded that the best of the oil, and the best of the wine and wheat, should be offered for the first fruits unto the Lord, which the priests were to have, v. 12. Note, We must always serve and honour God with the best we have, for he is the Best, and best deserves it; he is the First, and therefore must have the first part. There must be no saving charges, by putting God off with the refuse, do but deceive themselves, for God is not mocked. 5. All this is given to the priests, by reason of the anointing, v. 8. It was not for the sake of their personal merits above other Israelites, that they had these tributes paid to them, be it known unto them; but purely for the sake of the office to which they were appointed. Thus, all the comforts that are given to the Lord's people, are given them by reason of the anointing, which they have received. It is said to be given them by an ordinance for ever, (v. 8.) and it is a covenant of salt for ever, v. 19. As long as the priesthood should continue, this should continue to be the maintenance of it, that this lamp might not go out for want of oil to keep it burning. Thus provision is made that a gospel ministry should continue till Christ comes, by an ordinance for ever. Lo, I am with you (that is their maintenance and support) always, even to the end of the world. Thanks be to the Redeemer, it is the word which he has commanded to a thousand generations.

20. And the Lord spake unto Aaron, Thou shalt have no inheritance in their land, neither shalt thou have any part among them: I am thy part, and thine inheritance, among the children of Israel. 21. And, behold, I have given the children of Levi all the tenth in Israel for an inheritance, for their service which they serve, even the service of the tabernacle of the congregation. 22. Neither must the children of Israel henceforth come nigh the tabernacle of the congregation, lest they bear sin, and die. 23. But the Levites shall do the service of the tabernacle of the congregation, and they shall bear their iniquity. It shall be a statute for ever throughout your generations, that among the children of Israel they have no inheritance. 24. But the tithes of the children of Israel, which they offer as a heave-offering unto the Lord, I have given to the Levites to inherit; therefore, I have said unto them, Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance. 25. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 26. Thus speak unto the Levites, and say unto them, When ye take of the children of Israel the tithes, which I have given you from them for your inheritance, then ye shall offer up a heave-offering of it for the Lord, even a tenth part of the tithe. 27. And this your heave-offering shall be reckoned unto you as though it were the corn of the threshing-floor, and as the fulness of the wine-press. 28. Thus ye also shall offer a heave-offering unto the Lord of all your tithes which ye receive of the children of Israel; and ye shall give thereof the Lord's heave-offering to Aaron the priest. 29. Out of all your gifts ye shall offer every heave-offering of the Lord, of all the best thereof, even the hallowed part thereof, out of it. 30. Therefore thou shalt say unto them, When ye have heaved the best thereof from it, then it shall be counted unto the Levites as the increase of the threshing-floor, and as the increase of the wine-press. 31. And ye shall eat it in every place, ye and your households: for it is your reward for your service in the tabernacle of the congregation. 32. And ye shall bear no sin by reason of it, when ye have heaved from it the best of it: neither shall ye pollute the holy things of the children of Israel, lest ye die.

Here is a further account of the provision that was made both for the Levites and for the priests, out of the country.

I. They must have no inheritance in the land; only cities to dwell in were afterward allowed them, but no ground to occupy; Thou shalt not have any part among them, v. 26. 27. Those that have God for their inheritance and their portion for ever, ought to look with a holy contempt and indifference upon the inheritances of the world, and not covet their portion in it. "The Lord is my portion, therefore will I hope in him, and not depend upon any thing I have on this earth," Lam. 3. 24. The Levites shall have no inheritance, and yet they shall live very comfortably and plentifully—to teach us that Providence has various ways of supporting those that live in a dependence upon it; the fowls reap not, and yet are fed, the lilies spin not, and yet are clothed; the Levites have no inheritance in Israel, and yet live better than any other tribe. The repetition of that caution, that no Israelite should apparel the tabernacle, comes in suitably, though somewhat abruptly, v. 22. It seems set in opposition to that order concerning the priests and Levites, that they should have no inheritance in Israel; to show how God dispenses his favours variously. The Levites have the honour of attending the tabernacle, which is denied the Israelites: but then the Israelites have the honour of inheritances in Canaan, which is denied the Levites: thus each is kept from either envying or despising the other, and both have reason to rejoice in their lot. The Israelites must not come nigh the tabernacle, but then the Levites must have no inheritance in the land; this is a difficult figure, which though not of the highest perfection, is quite intelligible, and may be understood.
The priests, which the Jews say, were to be a fifthen part, or, at least, a sixteenth, the tithes so was appropriated.

1. The Levites had the tithes of the people's increase, v. 21. I have given (whence the whole is) all the tenth in Israel, of all the productions of the land, to the children of Levi, to be divided among them in just proportions, for the maintenance of the Levitical service. They were the smallest tribe of the twelve, and yet, beside all other advantages, they had a tenth part of the yearly profits, without the trouble and expense of plowing and sowing; such care did God take of those that were devoted to his service; not only that they might be well maintained, but that they might be honoured with a national acknowledgment of the good services they did to the public; and as God's servants and ministers, to them whose office it was to serve, for that which was a heave-offering, or an offering lifted heavenward unto the Lord, was by him consigned to the Levites.

2. The priests had the tithes of the Levites' tithes settled upon them. The order for this Moses is directed to give to the Levites, whom God would have to pay it with cheerfulness, rather than the priests to demand it with authority. Speak to the Levites, the same part offered by them, rather than levied upon them. Now observe, (1.) The Levites were to give God his due out of their tithes, as well as the Israelites out of their increase. They were God's tenants, and rent was expected from them, nor were they exempted by their office. Thus now, ministers must be charitable out of what they receive; and the more freely they have received, the more freely they must give, and be exacted from the same part offered by them, rather than levied upon them. Now observe, (2.) The Levites were to give God his due out of their tithes, as well as the Israelites out of their increase. They were God's tenants, and rent was expected from them, nor were they exempted by their office. Thus now, ministers must be charitable out of what they receive; and the more freely they have received, the more freely they must give, and be exacted from the Levites' tithes, settled upon them by God.

This is to be given to Aaron the priest, (v. 28.) and to his successors the high priests, to be divided and disposed of in such proportions as they should think fit among the inferior priests. Most of the profits of the priests' office, which were appointed in the law, were from the tithes of such produce from the sacrifices, those priests had the benefit of, who constantly attended at the altar; but forasmuch as there were many priests employed in the country to teach and rule, those tithes taken by the Levites, it is probable, were directed by the high priest for their maintenance. It is the probable conjecture of the learned Bishop Patrick, that the tenth of this last tenth was reserved for the high priest himself, to support his dignity, or, otherwise, we read not of any peculiar provision made for him. (3.) When the Levites had thus paid the tenth of their income, as a heave-offering to the Lord, they had themselves the comfortable enjoyment of the other nine parts; (v. 30.) when ye have thus heaved the best from it, (for still God's part must be the best,) then ye shall eat the rest, not as a holy thing, but as levitical, that is, to be served in the Israelites' part with, in every place, ye and your households, v. 31. See here what is the way to have the comfort of all our worldly possessions, so as to bear no sin by reason of them, as it follows, v. 32. [1.] We must be sure that what we have be honest, and in the service of God. It is your reward for your service: that meat is best eaten, that is best earned; but if any will not work, neither shall he eat, 2 Thess. 3. 10. And that seems to be spoken of, as having a particular comfort and satisfaction in it, which is the reward of faithful service done in the tabernacle of the congregation. [2.] We must be sure that God has his dues out of it. Then we have the comfort of our substance, when we have honoured the Lord with it. Then ye shall bear no sin by reason of it, when we have heaved the best from it. This intimates that we must never feed ourselves without fear, lest our table become a snare, and we bear sin by reason of it, and that therefore we are concerned to give alms of such things as we have, that all may be clean and comfortable to us.

CHAP. XIX.

This chapter is only concerning the preparing and using of the ashes which were to impregnate the water of purification. The people had complained of the strictness of the law, which forbade their near approach to the tabernacle, ch. 17. 13. In answer to which complaint, they are here directed to purify themselves, so as that they might come as far as they had occasion, without fear. Here is, I. The method of preparing these ashes, by the burning of a red heifer, with a great deal of ceremony, v. 1., 10. II. The way of using them. 1. They were designed to purify persons from the pollution contracted Lev. 1. 4. (v. 11.), v. 16. 2. They were to put into running water (a small quantity of them,) with which the person to be cleansed must be purified, v. 17., 22. And that this ceremonial purification was a type and figure of the cleansing of the consciences of believers from the pollution of sin, appears by the apostle, in course, Heb. 9. 13, 14, where he compares the efficacy of the blood of Christ with the sanctifying virtue that was in the ashes of a heifer sprinkling the unclean.

1. And the Lord spake unto Moses, and unto Aaron, saying, 2. This is the ordinance of the law which the Lord hath commanded, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, that they bring thee a red heifer without spot, wherein is no blemish, and upon which never came yoke. 3. And ye shall give her unto Eleazar the priest, that he may bring her forth without the camp, and one shall slay her before his face. 4. And Eleazar the priest shall take of her blood with his finger, and sprinkle of her blood directly before the tabernacle of the congregation seven times. 5. And one shall burn the heifer in his sight; her skin, and her flesh, and her blood, with her dung, shall he burn: 6. And the priest shall take cedar-wood, and hyssop, and scarlet, and cast it into the midst of the burning of the heifer. 7. Then the priest shall wash his clothes, and he shall bathe his flesh in water; and afterward he shall come into the camp, and the priest shall be unclean until the even. 8. And he that burneth her shall wash his clothes in water, and bathe his flesh in water, and shall be unclean until the even. 9. And a map that is clean shall gather up the ashes of the heifer, and lay them up without the camp in a clean place, and it shall be kept for the congregation of the children of Israel, for a water of separation: it is a purification for sin. 10. And he that gathereth the ashes of the heifer shall wash his clothes, and be unclean.
until the even: and it shall be unto the children of Israel, and unto the stranger that sojourneth among them, for a statute for ever.

We have here the divine appointment concerning the solemn burning of a red heifer to ashes, and the preserving of the ashes, that of them might be made, not a beautifying, but a purifying, water, for that was the utmost the law reached to; it offered not to adorn as the gospel does, but to cleanse only. This burning of the heifer, though it was not properly a sacrifice of expiation, being not performed at the altar, yet was typical of the death and sufferings of Christ, by which he intended not only to satisfy God's justice, but to purify and pacify our consciences, that we may have peace with God, and also peace in our own bosoms: to prepare for which Christ died, not only like the bulls and goats at the altar, but like the heifer without the camp.

I. There was a great deal of care employed in the choice of the heifer that was to be burnt, much more than in the choice of any other offering, v. 2. It must not only be without blemish, typifying the spotless purity and sinless perfection of the Lord Jesus, but it must be a red heifer, because of the rarity of the colour, that it might be the more remarkable: "When a heifer, or a heifer's hair, is black or white, it was unlawful." Christ, as man, was the Son of Adam, red-earth; and we find him red in his apparel, red with his own blood, and red with the blood of his enemies. And it must be one on which never came yoke, which was not insisted on in other sacrifices, but thus was typified the voluntary offer of the Lord Jesus, when he said, Lo, I come. He was bound and held with no other cords than those of his own love. This heifer was to be provided at the expense of the congregation, because they were all to have a joint-interest in it; and so all believers have in Christ.

II. There was to be a great deal of ceremony in the burning of it. The care of doing it was committed to Eleazar, not to Aaron himself, because it was not fit that he should do any thing to render himself ceremonially unclean, no, not so much as till a cook (v. 8.) yet it being an affair of great concern, especially in the significance of it, it was to be performed by him that was next to Aaron in dignity. The chief priests of that time had the principal hand in the death of Christ. Now,

1. The heifer was to be slain without the camp, as an impure thing, which bespeaks the insufficiency of the methods prescribed by the ceremonial law to take away sin; so far were they from cleansing effectually, that they were themselves as clean as if the pollution that was laid upon them, continued to cleave to them. Yet, to answer this type, our Lord Jesus, being made sin and a curse for us, suffered without the gate, Heb. 13. 12.

2. Eleazar was to sprinkle the blood directly before the door of the tabernacle, and looking steadfastly towards it, v. 4. This made it in some sort an especial offering made by the Lord. This was the chief solemnity in all the sacrifices of atonement; therefore though this was not done at the altar, yet being done toward the sanctuary, it was intended that the virtue and validity of it depended upon the sanctuary, and were derived from it. This signified the satisfaction that was made to God by the death of Christ, our great High Priest, who by the eternal Spirit (and the Spirit is called the finger of God, as Ainsworth observes, Luke 11. 20.) offered himself without spot unto God; he did, as it were, sprinkle his own blood directly before the sanctuary, when he said, Father, into thy hands I commit my spirit: it also signifies how necessary it was to the purifying of our hearts, that satisfaction should be made to Divine Justice. This sprinkling of the blood put virtue into the ashes.

3. The heifer was to be wholly burnt, v. 5. This typified the extreme sufferings of our Lord Jesus, both in soul and body, as a Sacrifice made by fire. The priest was to cast into the fire, while it was burning, cedar-wood, hyssopp, and scarlet, which were used in the cleansing of lepers, (Lev. 14. 6, 7.) that the ashes of these might be mingled with the ashes of the heifer, because they were designed for purification.

4. The ashes of the heifer (separated as well as they could from the ashes of the wood wherewith it was burnt) were to be carefully gathered up by the hand of a clean person, and (as the Jews say) pounded and sifted, and so laid up for the use of the congregation, as there was occasion, (v. 9.) not only for that generation, but for posterity; for the ashes of this one heifer were sufficient to sanctify as many vessels of water as the people of Israel would need for many ages. The Jews say that this one served till the captivity, near 1000 years, and that there was never another heifer burnt till Ezra's time, after their return; to which tradition of their's, grounded (I suppose) only upon the silence of their old records, I see no reason we have to give credit, since in the later times of their church, if not before, their ashes were mixed with water and used in scouring, and their accomplishment and perfection in Christ, who is the End of this law for righteousness. Now observe, (1.) That the water of purification was made so by the ashes of a heifer, whose blood was sprinkled before the sanctuary; so that which cleanses our consciences, is, the abiding virtue of the death of Christ; it is his blood that cleanses us from all sin; Rom. 3. 25. (2.) That the ashes were sufficient for all the people; there needed not to be a fresh heifer slain for every person or family that had occasion to be purified, but this one was enough for all, even for the strangers that sojourned among them; (v. 10.) so there is virtue enough in the blood of Christ for all that repent and believe the gospel, for every Israelite; and not for their sins only, but for the sins of the whole world, 1 John 2. 2. (3.) That these ashes were capable of being preserved without waste to many ages. No bodily substance is so incorruptible as ashes are, which (says Bishop Patrick) made these a very fit emblem of the everlasting efficacy of the sacrifice of Christ. He is able to save, and, in order to that, to cleanse, to the uttermost, both of persons and times. (4.) These ashes were used up as a stock or reservoir, and were kept; and so the blood of Christ, as it were, drained off from their pollutions; so the blood of Christ is laid up for us in the word and sacraments, as an inexhaustible fountain of merit, to which by faith we may have recourse daily, for the purging of our consciences; see Zech. 13. 1.

5. All those that were employed in this service were made ceremonially unclean by it; even Eleazar himself, though he did but sprinkle the blood directly before the sanctuary; and also the Levites, even the strangers among them, v. 7. He that burnt the heifer was unclean, (v. 8.) and he that gathered up the ashes; (v. 10.) so all that had a hand in putting Christ to death contracted guilt by it; his betrayer, his prosecutors, his judge, his executioner, all did what they did with wicked hands, though it was by the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God; (Acts 2, 23.) yet some of them were, and all might have been, cleansed by the virtue of that same blood which they had brought themselves under the guilt of. Some make this to signify the imperfection of the legal services, and their insufficiency to take away sin; inasmuch as those who prepared for the purifying of others were themselves polluted by the preparation. The Jews say, this is a mystery which Solomon himself did not understand, that the same thing should pollute those that were clean, and yet purify those that were unclean. But (says Bishop Patrick) it is not strange to those who consider that all the sacrifices which were offered for sins were done before the people’s eyes, because the sins of men were laid upon them, as all our sins were upon Christ, who therefore is said to be made sin for us, 2 Cor. 5. 21.

11. He that toucheth the dead body of any man shall be unclean seven days. 12. He shall purify himself with it on the third day, and on the seventh day he shall be clean: but if he purify not himself the third day, then the seventh day he shall not be clean. 13. Whosoever toucheth the dead body of any man that is dead, and purifieth not himself, defileth the tabernacle of the Lord; and that soul shall be cut off from Israel: because the water of separation was not sprinkled upon him, he shall be unclean; his uncleaness is yet upon him. 14. This is the law when a man dieth in a tent; All that come into the tent, and all that is in the tent, shall be unclean seven days. 15. And every open vessel, which hath no covering bound upon it, is unclean.

16. And whosoever toucheth one that is slain with a sword in the open fields, or a dead body, or a bone of a man, or a grave, shall be unclean seven days. 17. And for an unclean person they shall take the ashes of the burnt heifer of purification for sin, and running water shall be put thereto in a vessel; 18. And a clean person shall take hyssop, and dip it in the water, and sprinkle it upon the tent, and upon all the vessels, and upon the persons that were there, and upon him that touched a bone, or one slain, or one dead, or a grave: 19. And the clean person shall sprinkle upon the unclean on the third day, and on the seventh day; and on the seventh day he shall purify himself, and wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and shall be clean at even. 20. But the man that shall be unclean, and shall not purify himself, that soul shall be cut off from among the congregation, because he hath defiled the sanctuary of the Lord: the water of separation hath not been sprinkled upon him; he is unclean. 21. And it shall be a perpetual statute unto them, that he that sprinketh the water of separation shall wash his clothes; and he that toucheth the water of separation shall be unclean until even. 22. And whatsoever the unclean person toucheth shall be unclean; and the soul that toucheth it shall be unclean until even.

Directions are here given concerning the use and application of the ashes, which were prepared for purification. They were laid up to be laid out; and therefore, though now one place would serve to keep them in, while all Israel lay so closely encamped, yet it is probable that afterward, when they came to Canaan, some of these ashes were kept in every town, for there would be daily use of them.

1. In what cases there needed a purification with these ashes. No other is mentioned here than the ceremonial uncleanness that was contracted by the touch of a dead body, or of the bone or grave of a dead man, or being in the tent or house where a dead body lay, v. 11, 14, 16. This I look upon to be one of the greatest blemishes of the ceremonial law, and one of the most unaccountable. He that troubled the holy things of God by taking and carrying a dead man under the greatest ceremonial uncleanness, was made unclean by it only till the even, and needed only common water to purify himself with; but he that came near the dead body of man, woman, or child, must bear the reproach of his uncleanness seven days, must twice be purified with the water of separation, which he could not obtain without trouble and charge, and, till he is purified, must not come near the sanctuary, upon pain of death. This was strange, considering, 1. That whenever any died, and we are in deaths off, several persons must unavoidably contract this pollution, the body must be stripped, washed, wound up, carried out, and buried, and this could not be done without many hands, and yet all defiled; which signifies, that in our corrupt and fallen state there is none that lives and is clean; we cannot avoid being polluted by the defiling world we pass through, and we offend daily, yet the impossibility of our being sinless does not make sin the less polluting. 2. That taking care of the dead, to see them decently buried, is not only necessary, but a very good office, and an act of kindness, both to the honour of the dead, and the comfort of the living, and yet uncleanness was contracted by it; which intimates that the pollutions of sin mix with and cleave to our best services. There is not a just man upon earth that doeth good and sinneth not; we are apt some way or other to do amiss even in our doing good. 3. That this pollution was contracted by what was done privately in their own houses, which intimates (as Bishop Patrick observes) that God sees what is done in secret, and nothing can be concealed from the Divine Majesty. This caution might not a just man might never know it, as by the touch of a grave which appeared not, of which our Saviour says, They that walk ever are not aware of it; (Luke 11. 44,) which intimates the defilement of the conscience by sins of ignorance, and the cause we have to cry out, "Who can understand his errors?" and to pray, "Cleanse us from secret faults, faults which we ourselves do not see ourselves guilty of." But why did the law make a dead corpse such a defiling thing? (1.) Because death is the wages of sin, entered into the world by it, and reigns by the power of it. Death to mankind is another thing, from what it is to other creatures, it is a curse, it is the execution of the law, and therefore the defilement of death signifies the defilement of sin. (2.)
Because the law could not, con quer death, nor abolish it and alter the property of it, as the gospel does by bringing life and immortality to light, and so introducing a better hope. Since our Redeemer was dead and buried, death is no more destroying to the Israel of God, and therefore dead bodies are no more defiling; but while the church was under the law, to show that it made not the comers thereunto perfect, the pollution contracted by dead bodies could not but form in their minds melancholy and uncomfortable notions concerning death, while believers now through Christ can triumph over it.

O grave, where is thy victory? Where is thy pollution?

II. How the ashes were to be used and applied in these cases.

1. A small quantity of the ashes must be put into a cup of spring water, and mixed with the water, which thereby was made, as it is here called, a water of separation, because it was to be sprinkled on those who were separated or removed from the sanctuary by their uncleanness. As the ashes of the heifer signified the merit of Christ, so the running water signified the power and grace of the blessed Spirit, who is compared to rivers of living water; and it is by his operation that the righteousness of Christ is applied to us for our cleansing. Hence we are said to be washed, that is, sanctified and justified, 1 Cor. 6. 11. 1 Pet. 1. 2. Those that promise themselves benefit by the righteousness of Christ, while they submit not to the grace and influence of the Spirit, do but deceive themselves, for we cannot put asunder what God has joined, nor be purified by the ashes otherwise than in the running water.

2. This water must be applied by a bunch of hyssop, which was a small bush, the root of which in Egypt was called, by the Spirit of our God, 1 Cor. 10. 9. The plant was of a purging nature, hence the name by which it is called, hyssop. Faith is the bunch of hyssop whereby the conscience is sprinkled and the heart purified. Many might be sprinkled at once, and the water with which the ashes were mingled, might serve for many sprinklings, till it was all spent; and a very little liquid and anointing oil was sufficient for other purposes, as to purify him if done with that intention. In allusion to this application of the water of separation by sprinkling, the blood of Christ is said to be the blood of sprinkling, (Heb. 12. 24.) and with it we are said to be sprinkled from an evil conscience, (Heb. 10. 22.) that is, we are free from the uncleaness that arises from a sense of our guilt. And it is foretold, that Christ, by his baptism, shall sprinkle many nations, Isa. 52. 15.

3. The unclean person must be sprinkled with this water on the third day after his pollution, and on the seventh day, v. 12. 19. The days were reckoned (we may suppose) from the last time of his touching or coming near the dead body; for he would not begin the days of his cleansing, while he was still under a necessity of repeating the pollution. But when the dead body was buried, so that there was no further occasion of mingling with the uncleanness of the Lord, then he began to reckon his days. Then and then only we may with comfort apply Christ's merit to our souls, when we have forsaken sin, and cease all fellowship with the unfruitful works of death and darkness. The repetition of the sprinkling teaches us often to renew the acts of repentance and faith: wash, as Naaman, seven times; we need to God to often, which is so necessary to be well done.

4. Though the pollution contracted was only ceremonial, yet the neglect of the purification prescribed would turn into moral guilt; He that shall be unclean, and shall not purify himself, that soul shall be cut off, v. 20. Note, It is a dangerous thing to contemn divine institutions, though they may seem minute. A slight wound, if neglected, may prove fatal; a sin we call trifle, if not repented of, will be our ruin, when great sins, that repent shall find mercy. Our uncleanness separates us from God, but it is our being unclean and not purifying ourselves, that will separate us for ever from him; it is not the wound that is fatal, so much as the contempt of the remedy.

5. Even he that sprinkled the water of separation, or touched it, or touched the unclean person, must be unclean, v. 21. Hence, as it is, must not venture near the sanctuary on that day, v. 21, 22. Thus God would show them the imperfection of those services, and their insufficiency to purify the conscience, that they might look for the Messiah, who, in the fulness of time, should by the eternal Spirit offer himself without spot unto God, and so purge our consciences from dead works, (that is, from sin, which defiles like a dead body, and is therefore called a body of death,) that we may have liberty of access to the sanctuary, to serve the living God with living sacrifices.

CHAP. XX.

At this chapter begins the history of the fortieth year (which was the last year) of the Israelites' wanderings in the wilderness. And since the beginning of their second year, when they were expected to perform the quarantines in the desert, there to wear away the tedious revolutions of forty years, there is little recorded concerning them till this last year, which brought them to the borders of Canaan, and the history of this year is almost as large as the history of the first year. This chapter gives an account of, I. The death of Miriam, v. 1. II. The fetching of water out of the rock. In which observe, 1. The distress Israel was in for want of water, v. 2. Their discontent and murmuring in that distress, v. 3-5. 3. God's pity and power engaged for their supply with water out of the rock, v. 6-9, 11. 4. The iniquity of Moses and Aaron upon this occasion, v. 10. 5. God's displeasure against them, v. 12, 13, 15. III. The treaty with the Edomites. Israel's request, (v. 14, 17.) and the repulse the Edomites gave them, v. 18, 21. IV. The death of Aaron the High Priest upon mount Hor, the installation of Eleazar in his room, and the people's mourning for him, v. 22, 29.

1. THEN came the children of Israel, even the whole congregation, into the desert of Zin, in the first month; and the people abode in Kadesh; and Miriam died there, and was buried there. 2. And there was no water for the congregation: and they gathered themselves together against Moses and against Aaron. 3. And the people chide with Moses, and spake, saying, Would God that we had died when our brethren died before the Lord! 4. And why have ye brought up the congregation of the Lord into this wilderness, that we and our cattle should die there? 5. And therefore have ye made us to come up out of Egypt, to bring us in unto this evil place? it is no place of seed, or of figs, or of vines, or of pomegranates; neither is there any water to drink. 6. And Moses and Aaron went from the presence of the assembly unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, and they fell upon their faces; and the glory of the Lord appeared unto them. 7. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 8. Take the rod, and gather thou the as sembly together, thou and Aaron thy brother, and speak ye unto the rock before their eyes; and it shall give forth his water, and thou shalt bring forth to them water out of the rock: so thou shalt give the congregation and their beasts drink. 9. And Moses took the rod from before the Lord, as he commanded him. 10. And Moses and Aaron gathered the congregation together before the rock; and he said unto them, Hear now, ye rebels; must we fetch you water out of this rock? 11. And Moses lifted up his hand, and with his rod he smote the rock twice: and the water came out abundantly: and the congregation drank, and their beasts also. 12. And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron, Because ye believed not me to sanctify me in the eyes of the children of Israel, therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I have given them. 13. This is the water of Meribah; because the children of Israel strove with the Lord, and he was sanctified in them.

After thirty-eight years' tedious marches, or rather tedious rests, in the wilderness, backward toward the Red-sea, the armies of Israel now at length set their faces toward Canaan again, and are come not far off from the place where they were, when, by the righteous sentence of Divine Justice, they were warned to begin their wanderings. Hitherto they had been led about as in a maze or labyrinth, while execution was doing upon the rebels that were sentenced; but they were now brought into the right way again; they abode in Kadesh, (v. 1.) not Kadesh-barnes, which was near the borders of Canaan, but another Kadesh on the confines of Edom, farther off from the land of promise, yet in their way to the Red-sea, to which they had been hurried back. Now,

I. Here Miriam dies, the sister of Moses and Aaron, and, as it should seem, elder than either of them. She must be so, if she was that sister that was set to watch Moses, when he was put into the ark of bulrushes, Exod. 2. 4. Miriam died there, v. 1. She was a prophetess, and had been an instrument of much good to Israel, Mic. 6. 4. When Moses and Aaron with their red went before them to work wonders for them, Miriam with her timbrel went before them in praising God for these wondrous works, (Exod. 15. 20.) and therein did them real service; yet she had once been a murmurer, (ch. 12. 1.) and must not enter Canaan.

II. Here is another Miribah; one place we met with before of that name, in the beginning of their wanderings in the wilderness, which was so called, because of the chiding of the children of Israel, Exod. 17. 7. And now we have another place, at the latter end of their march, which bears the same name, and for the same reason; this is the water of Meribah, v. 13. What was there done, was here re-acted.

1. There was no water for the congregation, v. 2. The water out of the rock of Rephidim had followed them while there was need of it; but it is probable that for some time they had been in a country where they were supplied in an ordinary way, and, when common providence supplied them, it was fit that the miracle should cease; but in this place it fell out that there was no water, or not sufficient for the congregation. Note, We live in a wanting world, and wherever we are, we must expect to meet with some inconvenience or other. It is a great mercy to have plenty of water, a mercy which, if we found the want of, we should own the worth of.

2. Hereupon they murmured; mutinied, (v. 2.) gathered themselves together, and took up arms against Moses and Aaron. They chid with them, (v. 3.) spake the same abstract and brutish language that their fathers had done before them. (1.) They wished they had died as malefactors by the hands of Divine Justice, rather than thus seem for a while neglected by the Divine Mercy. Would God that we had died when our brethren died before the Lord! Instead of giving God thanks, as they ought to have done, for sparing them, they not only despise the mercy of their reprieve, but quarrel with it, as if God had done them a great deal of good, in sparing them another day. But they need not wish that they had died with their brethren, they are here taking the ready way to die like their brethren in a little while. Wes unto them that desire the day of the Lord, Amos 5. 18. (2.) They are angry that they were brought out of Egypt, and led through this wilderness, v. 4. 5. They quarrelled with Moses for that which they had no cause to complain of; they had been no more concerned in the sin of that stone than any other of the people; and it was an injury which was the greatest favour that ever was done to any people. They prefer slavery before liberty; the house of bondage before the land of promise: and though the present want was of water only, yet, now that they are disposed to find fault, it shall be looked upon as an insufferable hardship put upon them, that they have not vines like other nations, and figs. It was an aggravation of their crime, [1.] That they had carried their burdens and despises, and distrusts of their fathers. They had borne their whoredoms now almost forty years in the wilderness; (ch. 14. 33.) and yet they venture in the same steps, and, as is charged upon Belshazzar, humble not their hearts, though they knew all this, Dan. 5. 22. [2.] That they had such long and constant experience of God's goodness to them; and of the tenderness and provisiousness of Moses and Aaron, and the fear and respectfulness of Miriam; (5.) That Miriam was now lately dead; and, having lost one of their leaders, they ought to have been more respectful to those that were left; but as if they were resolved to provoke God to leave them as sheep without any shepherd, they grow outrageous against them; instead of condoling with Moses and Aaron for the death of their sister, they add affliction to their grief.

3. Moses and Aaron made them no reply, but retired to the door of the tabernacle, to know God's mind in this case, v. 6. There they fell on their faces, as formerly on the like occasion, to deprecate the wrath of God, and to entreat direction from him. Here is no mention of any thing they said, they knew that God heard the murmurings of the people, and before him they humbly prostrate themselves, making intercession with groanings. There they lay waiting for orders. Speak, Lord, for thy servants hear.

4. God appeared to determine the matter; not on his tribunal of Justice, to sentence the rebels according to their deserts, no, he will not return to destroy Ephraim, (Hosea 11. 9.) will not always chide; see Gen. 8. 21. But he appeared, (1.) On his throne of glory, to silence their unjust murmuring, v. 6. The glory of the Lord appeared, to still the tumult of the people, by striking an awe upon them. Note, A believing sight of the glory of the Lord would be an effectual check to our lusts and passions, and would keep our mouths as with a bridle. (2.) On his throne of grace, to satisfy their just desires. It was requisite that they should have water, and therefore, though the manner of their petitioning for it was irregular and disorderly, yet God did not take that advantage against them that He might show himself a God of power, but gave immediate orders for their supply, v. 8. Moses was a second time in God's name command water out of a rock for them, to show that God is as able as ever to supply his people with good things, even in their greatest straits, and the utmost failure of second causes. Almighty power can bring water out of a rock, has done it, and can again, for his arm is not shortened. Lest it should be thought that there was something peculiar in the former rock itself, some secret store which nature hid before in it, God here bids him break another, and does not, as then, direct him which he must apply to, but lets him make use of which he pleased, or the first he came to; all a like to Omnipotence. [1.] God bids him take the rod, that famous rod with which he summoned the plagues of Egypt, and divided the sea, that, having that in his hand, both he and the people might be reminded of the great things God had formerly done for them, and might be encouraged to trust in him now. This rod, it seems, was kept in the tabernacle, (v. 9,) for it was the rod of God, the rod of his strength, as the gospel is called, (Ps. 110. 2,) perhaps in allusion to it. [2.] God bids him gather the assembly, not the elders only, but the people, to be witness of what was done, that by their own eyes they might see, and not embarrassed by the contrary report of their unbelief. There is no fallacy in God's works, of wonder, and therefore they shun not the light, nor the inspection and inquiry of many witnesses. [3.] He bids him speak to the rock, which would do as it was bidden, to shame the people who had so often spoken to, and would not hear or obey. Their hearts were harder than this rock, not so tender, not so yielding, not so obedient. [4.] He made the rod speak, (v. 8,) and it did so, (v. 11,) The water came out abundantly. This is an instance not only of the power of God, that he could thus fetch honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock, but of his mercy and grace, that he would do it for such a provoking people. This was a new generation, (most of the old stock were by this time worn off,) yet they were as bad as those that went before them in their dealing with God. [5.] He shewed the power of the divine favour not cut off; but, in this instance of it, the divine patience shines as bright as the divine favour. He is God, and not man, in sparing and pardoning; nay, he not only here gave them the drink which they drank of in common with their beast, (v. 8, 11,) but in it he made them to drink spiritual drink, which typified spiritual blessings, for that rock was Christ.

5. Moses and Aaron acted improperly in the management of this matter; so much so, that God in displeasure told them immediately that they should not have the honour of bringing Israel into Canaan, v. 10. 12. This is a strange passage of story, yet very instructive. (1.) It is certain that God was greatly offended, and justly, for he is never angry without cause. Though they were his servants, and had obtained mercy to be faithful, though they had still a chain of favour, and were still honoured, yet, for something they thought, or said, or did, upon this occasion; he put them under the disgrace and mortification of dying as other unbelieving Israelites did, short of Canaan. And, no doubt, the crime deserved the punishment. (2.) Yet it is uncertain what it was, in this management, that was so provoking to God. The fault was complicated; [1.] They did not punctually observe their orders, but in some things varied from their commission; God bid him speak to the rock, and they spake to the people, and smote the rock, which at this time they were not ordered to do, but they thought speaking would not do. When, in distrust of the power of the word, we have recourse to the secular sword, and put the sword of pure conscience, as we do, Moses here, smite the rock which we should speak to. [2.] They assumed too much of the glory of this work of wonder to themselves; Must we fetch water? As if it were done by some power or worthiness of their's. Therefore it is charged upon them, (v. 12,) that they did not sanctify God, that is, they did not give him that glory of this miracle which was due unto his name. (3.) Unbelief was not without disorder. [1.] It was a great transgression, (v. 12,) he believed not me, not, it is called, rebelling against God's command, ch. 27. 14. The command was to bring water out of the rock, but they rebelled against this command, by distrusting it, and doubting whether it would take effect or no. They speak doubtfully, Must we fetch water? And, probably, they did some other ways discover an uncertainty in their own minds, whether water would come or no for such a rebellious generation as this was. And perhaps they the rather questioned it, though God had promised it, because the glory of the Lord did not appear before them upon this rock, as it had done upon the rock in Rephidim, Exod. 17. 6. They would not take God's word without a sign. Dr. Lightfoot's notion of their unbelief is, that they doubted whether now at last, when the forty years were expired, they should enter Canaan, and whether, if they took the least notice of the great things of the people, be condemned to another period of years, because a new rock was now opened for their supply, which they took for an indication of their longer stay. And if so, justly were they kept out of Canaan themselves, while the people entered at the time appointed. [4.] They said and did all in heat and passion; this is the account given of the sin, Num. 13. 25. They provoked his spirit, so that he spake unadvisedly with his mouth. His passion that he called them rebels, it is true, they were so, God had called them so; and Moses afterward, in the way of a just reproof, (Deut. 9. 24,) calls them so without offence, but now it came from a provoked spirit, and was spoken unadvisedly: it was too much like Race, and Thou foot. His smiting of the rock twice (it should seem, not waiting for the eruption of the water upon the first stroke,) is to speak of something said and done with meekness, may be justifiable, which, when said and done in anger, may be highly culpable; see Jam. 1. 20. [5.] That which aggravated all the rest, and made it the more provoking, was, that it was public, before the eyes of the children of Israel, to whom they should have been examples of faith, and hope, and meekness. We find Moses guilty of sinful distrust, ch. 11. 22, 23. This great unbelief being discovered, it was therefore only checked; but this was public, it dishonoured God before Israel, as if he grudged them his favours, and discouraged the people's hope in God, and therefore this was severely punished, and the more, because of the dignity and eminency of them that offended.

From the whole, we may learn, First, That the height of disbelieve and their failure, even in these graces that they are most eminent for. The man Moses was very meek, and yet here he sinned in passion: wherefore let him that thinks he stands, take heed lest he fall. Secondly, That God judges not as man judges concerning sins: we might think that there was not much amiss in what Moses said and did, yet God saw cause to animadvert severely upon it. He knows the frame of men's spirits, what temper they are of, and what temper they are in, upon particular occasions; and from what thoughts and intents words and actions do proceed; and we are sure that therefore his judgment is according to truth, when it agrees not with our's. Thirdly, That God not only takes notice of, and is displeased with, the sins of his people, but that the nearer anyone are to him, the more offensive are their sins, Amos 3. 2. It should seem, the Psalmist refers to this sin of Moses and Aaron, (Ps. 99. 8.) Thou wast a God that forgavest them, though thou tookst vengeance on their inventions. As many are spared in this life, and punished in the other, so many are punished in this life, and spared in the other. Fourthly, That when our heart is hot within us, we are concerned to take heed that we offend not with our tongue. Yet, Fifthly, It is an evidence of the sincerity of Moses, and his impartiality in writing, that he himself left this upon record concerning himself, and drew not a vail over his own infirmity; by which it appeared that in what he wrote, as well as what he did, he sought God's glory more than his own.

Lastly, The place is hereupon called Meribah, v. 13. It is called Meribah-Kadesh (Deut. 32. 51.) to distinguish it from the other Meribah. It is the water of strife; to perpetuate the remembrance of the people's sin, and Moses', and yet of God's mercy, who supplied them with water, and owned and honoured Moses notwithstanding. Thus he was sanctified in them, as the Holy One of Israel, so he is called when his mercy rejoices against judgment, Hos. 11. 9. Moses and Aaron did not sanctify God as they ought in the eyes of Israel, (v. 12.) but God was sanctified in them; for he will not be a Loser in his honour by any man. If he be not glorified by us, he will be glorified upon us.

14. And Moses sent messengers from Kadesh unto the king of Edom, Thus saith thy brother Israel, Thou knowest all the travail that hath befallen us; 15. How our fathers went down into Egypt, and we have dwelt in Egypt a long time; and the Egyptians vexed us and our fathers: 16. And when we cried unto the Lord, he heard our voice, and sent an angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt; and, behold, we are in Kadesh, a city in the uttermost of thy border: 17. Let us pass, I pray thee, through thy country: we will not pass through the fields, or through the vineyards, neither will we drink of the water of the wells: we will go by the king's high-way, we will not turn to the right hand nor to the left, until we have passed thy borders. 18. And Edom said unto him, Thou shalt not pass by me, lest I come out against thee with the sword. 19. And the children of Israel said unto him, We will go by the highway, and if I and my cattle drink of thy water, then I will pay for it: I will only, without doing any thing else, go through on my feet. 20. And he said, Thou shalt not go through. And Edom came out against him with much people, and with a strong hand. 21. Thus Edom refused to give Israel passage through his border: wherefore Israel turned away from him.

We have here the application made by Israel to the Edomites; the nearest way to Canaan, from the place where Israel now lay encamped, was through the country of Edom. Now,

1. Moses sends ambassadors to treat with the king of Edom for leave to pass through his country, and gives them instructions what to say, v. 14. . . . 17. (1.) They are to claim kindred with the Edomites. Thus saith thy brother Israel. Both nations descended from Abraham and Isaac, their common ancestors; Esau and Jacob, the two fathers of their several nations, were twin-brothers; and at the time for relation-sake, they might reasonably expect this kindness from them; nor needed the Edomites to fear that their brother Israel had any ill design upon them, or would take any advantages against them. (2.) They are to give a short account of the history and present state of Israel, which, they take it for granted, the Edomites were no strangers to. And in this there was a double plea; [1.] Israel had been harboured by the Egyptians, such as make no account to be pitied and succoured by their relations; [2.] The Egyptians vexed us, and our fathers, but we may hope our brethren the Edomites will not be so vexations. [2.] Israel had been wonderfully saved by the Lord, and therefore ought to be countenanced and favoured; (v. 16.) "We cried unto the Lord, and he sent an angel, the Angel of his presence, the Angel of the covenant, the eternal Word, who hath glorified himself, and has been sanctified in the sight of all the earth." It was therefore the interest of the Edomites to ingratiate themselves with a people that had so great an interest in heaven, and were so much its favourites, and it was at their peril if they offered them any injury. It is our wisdom and duty to be kind to those whom God is pleased to own, and to take his people for our people. Come in, thou blessed of the Lord, (v. 17.) This village is hallowed to be a passport through their country. Though God himself, in the pillar of cloud and fire, was Israel's Guide, in following which they might have justified their passing through any man's ground against all the world; yet God would have this respect paid to the Edomites, to show that no man's property ought to be invaded under colour of religion. Dominion is founded in providence, not in grace. Thus when Christ was to pass through the Samaritans, to whom his coming was likely to be offensive, he sent messengers before his face to ask leave, Luke 9. 52. Those that would receive kindness must not disdain to request it. (4.) They are to give security for the good behaviour of the Israelites in this march; that they would keep in the king's high road, that they would commit no trespass upon any man's property, either in ground or in water, that they would regard their other disciplines, a well, without paying for it, and that they would make all convenient speed, as fast as they could well go on their feet, v. 17, 19. Nothing could be offered more fair and neighbourly.

2. The ambassadors returned with a denial, v. 18. Edom, that is, the king of Edom, as protector of his country, said, Thou shalt not pass by me; and when the ambassadors went on from the denial, (v. 20.) and threatened if they offered to enter his country, it should be at their peril; he raised his trained bands to oppose them. Thus Edom refused to give Israel passage. This was owing, (1.) To their jealousy of the Israelites; they feared they should receive damage by them, and would not trust their promises. And truly had this numerous army been under the hand of the righteous God himself, who would no more suffer them to do wrong, than to take wrong, there might have been cause for this jealousy; but what could they fear from a nation that had statutes and judgments so righteous? (2.) It was owing to the old enmity which Esau bore to Israel. If they had no reason to fear damage by them.
yet they were not willing to show so much kindness to them. Esau hated Jacob because of the blessing, and now the hatred revived, when the blessing was ready to be inherited. God would hereby discover the ill-nature of the Edomites to their shame, and the good-nature of the Israelites to their honour, they turned away from him, and did not take this occasion to quarrel with him. Note, We must not think it strange if the most reasonable requests be denied by unreasonable men, and if those be affronted by men whom God favours. I as a deaf man heard not. After this indignity which the Edomites offered to Israel, God gave them a particular caution not to abhor an Edomite, (Deut. 23. 7.) though the Edomites had showed such an abhorrence of them, to teach us in such cases not to meditate revenge.

22. And the children of Israel, even the whole congregation, journeyed from Kadesh, and came unto mount Hor. 23. And the Lord spake unto Moses and Aaron in mount Hor, by the coast of the land of Edom, saying, 24. Aaron shall be gathered into his people: for he shall not enter into the land which I have given unto the children of Israel, because ye rebelled against my word at the water of Meribah. 25. Take Aaron and Eleazar his son, and bring them up unto mount Hor; 26. And strip Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son: and Aaron shall be gathered unto his people, and shall die there. 27. And Moses did as the Lord commanded: and they went up into mount Hor, in the sight of all the congregation. 28. And Moses stript Aaron of his garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son; and Aaron died there in the top of the mountain: and Moses and Eleazar came down from the mount.

29. And when all the congregation saw that Aaron was dead, they mourned for Aaron thirty days, even all the house of Israel.

The chapter began with the funeral of Miriam, and it ends with the funeral of her brother Aaron. When death comes into a family, it often strikes double. Israel had not improved the former affliction they were under, by the death of the prophets, and therefore, soon after, God took away their priest, to try if they would lay that to heart. This happened at the very next stage, when they removed to mount Hor, fetching a compass round the Edomites' country, leaving it on their left hand. Wherever we go, death attends us, and the graves are ready for us.

1. God bids Aaron die, v. 24. God takes Moses and Aaron aside, and tells them, Aaron shall be gathered to his people; these two dear brothers are told that they must part, Aaron the elder must die first, but Moses is not likely to be long after him, so that it is but for a while, a little while, that they are parted. 1. There is something of displeasure in these orders. Aaron must not enter Canaan, because he had failed in his duty at the waters of strife. The mention of this, no doubt, went to the heart of Moses, who knew himself, perhaps, at that time, to be the guiltier of the two. 2. There is much of mercy in them. Aaron, though he dies for his transgression, is not put to death as a malefactor, by a plague, or fire from heaven, but dies with ease, and in honour. He is not cut off from his people, as the expression usually is concerning those that die by the hand of Divine Justice, but he is gathered to his people, as one that died in the arms of divine grace. 3. There is much of type and significance in them. Aaron must not enter Canaan, to shew us that he could not make nothing perfect, that must be done by the bringing of a better hope. Those priests could not continue, by reason of sin and death, but the priesthood of Christ, being undefiled, is unchangeable: and to this, which abides for ever, Aaron must resign all his honour, Heb. 7. 23., 25.

11. Aaron submits, and dies in the method and manner appointed, and, for aught that appears, wills much more coldly of it, if he had been going to bed. 1. He puts on his holy garments to take his leave of them, and goes up with his brother and son to the top of mount Hor, and probably some of the elders of Israel with him, v. 27. They went up in the sight of all the congregation, who, it is likely, were told on what errand they went up; by this solemn procession, Aaron lets Israel know that he is neither afraid nor ashamed to die, but, when the bridge is gone, it is enough, and he will not try to cross any further to meet him. His going up the hill to die, signified that the death of saints (and Aaron is called the saint of the Lord) is their ascension: they rather go up than go down to death. 2. Moses, whose hands had first clothed Aaron with his priestly garments, now strips him of them; for, in reverence to the priesthood, it was not fit that he should die in them. Nor, Death will strip us: naked we came into the world, and naked we must go out. We shall see little reason to be proud of our clothes, our ornaments, or marks of honour, if we consider how soon death will strip us of our glory, divest us of all our offices and honours, and take the crown off from our head. 3. Moses immediately puts the priestly garments upon Eleazar his son, clothes him with his father's robe, and strengthens him with his garments, Isa. 22. 21. Now, (1.) This was a great comfort to Moses, by whose hand the law of the priesthood was given, to see that it should be kept up in a succession, and that a lamp was ordained for the anointed, which should not be extinguished by death itself. This was a happy earnest and indication to the church of the care God would take, that as one generation of ministers and Christians (spiritual priests) passes away, another generation shall come up to take their place. The duty of satisfaction to Aaron, to see his son, who was dear to him, thus preferred, and his office, which was dearer, thus preserved and secured: and especially to see in this a figure of Christ's everlasting priesthood, in which alone his would be perpetuated; now, Lord, might Aaron say, Let thy servant depart in peace, for mine eyes have seen thy salvation. (2.) It was a great kindness to the people. The instating of one of Aaron's tribe was a way of recompensing those who bore ill-will to Aaron's family from attempting to set up another upon his death, in competition with his son. What could they do when the matter was already settled? It would likewise encourage those among them that feared God, and be a token for good to them, that he would not leave them, nor suffer his faithfulness to fail. 4. Aaron died there. Quickly after the death of Stript of his priestly garments, he laid him down and died contentedly; for a good man would desire, if it were the will of God, not to cut off his usefulness. Why should we covet to continue any longer in this world, than while we may do God and our generation some service in it? 5. Moses and Eleazar, with those that attended them, buried Aaron there where he died, as appears by Deut. 10. 16. and then came down from the mount. And now, when they came down, and had left Aaron behind, it might be proper for them to think that he was rather gone up to the better world, and had left them behind. 6. All the congregation mourned for Aaron thirty days, v. 29. Though the loss was well made up in Eleazar, who, being in the prime of life, was fitter for public service than Aaron would have been if he had lived, yet it was a debt owing to their deceased high priest to mourn for him. While he lived, they were murmuring at him upon all occasions, but, now that he was dead, they mourned for him. Thus many are taught to lament the loss of those mercies which they would not learn to be thankful for the enjoyment of. Many good men have had more honour done to their memories than ever they had to their persons; witness those that were persecuted while they lived, but, when they were dead, had their sepulchres garnished.

CHAP. XXI.

The armies of Israel now begin to emerge out of the wilderness, and to enter into a land inhabited; to enter into action, and to take possession of the frontiers of the land of promise. A glorious campaign this chapter gives us the history of, especially in the latter part of it. Here is, I. The defeat of Arad the Canaanite, v. 1-3. II. The chastisement of the people with fiery serpents for their murmuring, and the relief granted them upon their submission by a brazen serpent, v. 4-9. III. Several marches forward, and some occurrences by the way, v. 10-19. The destruction of Sihon king of the Amorites, v. 21-32. And of Og king of Bashan, (v. 33, 35.) and possession taken of their land.

1. AND when king Arad the Canaanite, which dwelt in the south, heard tell that Israel came by the way of the spies; then he fought against Israel, and took some of them prisoners. 2. And Israel vowed a vow unto the Lord, and said, If thou wilt indeed deliver this people into my hand, then I will utterly destroy their cities. 3. And the Lord hearkened to the voice of Israel, and delivered up the Canaanites; and they utterly destroyed them and their cities: and he called the name of the place Hormah.

Here is, 1. The descent which Arad the Canaanite made upon the camp of Israel, hearing that they came by the way of the spies; for though the spies, which Moses had sent thirty-eight years before, then passed and repassed unobserved, yet their coming, and their errand, it is likely, were after ward known to the Canaanites, gave them an alarm, and induced them to keep an eye upon Is rael, and get intelligence of all their motions. Now, when they understood that they were facing about toward Canaan, this Arad, thinking it policy to keep the war at a distance, made an onset upon them, and fought with them. But it proved that he maddened to his own hurt; had he sitten still, his people might have overthrown the last of all the Canaanites, but now they were the first. Thus they that are overmuch wicked, die before their time, Ecle. 7. 17. 2. His success at first in this attempt. His advance-guards picked up some struggling Israelites, and took them prisoners, v. 1. This, no doubt, puffed him up, and he began to think that he should have the honour of crushing this formidable enemy and saving his country from the ruin which threatened it. It was likewise a trial to the faith of the Israelites, and a check to them for their distrusts and discontent. 3. Israel's humble address to God upon this occasion, v. 2. It was a temptation to them to murmur as their fathers did, and to despair of getting possession of Canaan; but God, who thus tried them by his providence, enabled them by his grace to quit themselves well in the trial, and to trust in God for relief against this fierce and powerful assailant. They, by their elders, in prayer for success, vowed a vow. Note. When we are desiring and expecting mercy from God, we should bind our souls with a bond that we will faithfully do our duty to him, particularly that we will honor him with the mercy we are in the pursuit of. Thus Israel here promised to destroy the cities of these Canaanites, as devoted to God, and not to take the spoil of them to their own use. If God would give them victory, he should have all the praise, and they would not make a gain of it to themselves. When we are in this frame, we are prepared to receive mercy. 4. The victory which the Israelites obtained over the Canaanites, v. 3. A strong party was sent out, probably under the command of Joshua, which not only drove back these Canaanites, but followed them to their cities, which probably lay on the edge of the wilderness, and utterly destroyed them, and so returned to the camp. Vincimus in praetio, sed non in bello—We lose a battle, but we finally tri umph. What is said of the tribe of God is true of all God's Israel, a troop may overcome them, but they shall not overcome him at last. The place is called Hormah, as a memorial of the destruction, for the terror of the Canaanites, and probably for warning to posterity not to attempt the rebuilding of these cities which were destroyed, as devoted to God, and sacrifices to divine justice. And it appears, from the instance of Jericho, that the law concerning such cities, was, that they should never be rebuilt. There seems to be an allusion to this when it is said in the prophecy of the fall of the New-Testament Babylon, (Rev. 16. 16.) where its forces are said to be gathered together to a place called Armageddon; the destruction of a troop.

4. And they journeyed from mount Hor by the way of the Red Sea, to compass the land of Edom: and the soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way. 5. And the people spake against God, and against Moses, Wherefore have ye brought us up out of Egypt, to die in the wilderness? for there is no bread, neither is there any water: and our soul loatheth this light bread. 6. And the Lord sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people; and much people of Israel died. 7. Therefore the people came to Moses, and said, We have sinned, for we have spoken against the Lord, and against thee; pray unto the Lord, that he take away the serpents from us. And Moses prayed for the people. 8. And the Lord said unto Moses, Make thee a fiery serpent, and set it upon a pole: and it shall come to pass, that every one that is bitten, when he looketh upon it, shall live. 9. And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole: and it came to pass, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he beheld the serpent of brass, he lived.

Here is, 1. The fatigue of Israel by a long march round the land of Edom, because they could not obtain passage through it the nearest way, (v. 4.) The soul of the people was much discouraged because of the way. Perhaps the way was rough and uneven, and they had not found it far about, and that they were not permitted to force their passage through the Edomites' country. Those that are of a fretful discontented spirit, will never want something or other to make them uneasy.

II. Their unbelief and murmuring upon this occasion, v. 5. Though they had just now obtained a glorious victory over the Canaanites, and were going on conquering and to conquer; yet they speak very discontentedly of what God had done for them, and distrustfully of what he would do, vexed that they were brought out of Egypt, that they had not bread and water as other people had by their own care and industry, but by miracle, they knew not how. They have bread enough and to spare; and yet they complain there is no bread, because, though they eat angels' food, yet they are weary of it; manna itself is loathed, and called light bread, fit for children, not for men and soldiers. What will they be pleased with, whom manna will not please? They that are disposed to quarrel, will find fault, where there is no fault to be found. Thus those that have long enjoyed the means of grace, are apt to surfeit even on the heavenly manna, and to call it light bread. But let not the contempt which some cast up on the word of God, make us to value it the less: it is the bread of life, substantial bread, and will nourish those who, by faith, feed upon it to eternal life, whoever calls it light bread.

III. The righteous judgment which God brought upon them for their murmuring, v. 6. He sent fiery serpents among them, which bit and stung many of them to death. The wilderness, through which they had passed, being full of serpents, these fiery serpents, as appears, Deut. 8. 15. But hither to God had wonderfully preserved his people from receiving hurt from them, till now that they murmured; to chastise them for which, these animals, which hitherto had shunned their camp, now invade it. Justly are those made to feel God's judgments that are not thankful for his mercies. These serpents did not bite them out of revenge from their rage, or from the effects of their bitings, inflaming the body, putting it immediately into a high fever, scourching it with an insatiable thirst. They had unjustly complained for want of water; (v. 5.) to chastise them for which God sends upon them this thirst, which no water would quench. They that cry without cause, have justly cause given them to cry out. They distrustfully concluded that they must die in the wilderness, and God took them at their word, chose their delusions, and brought their unbelieving fears upon them; many of them did die. They had impulsively flown in the face of God himself, and the poison of asps was under their life, and now these fiery serpents (which, it should seem, were flying serpents, Isa. 14. 29.) flew in their faces and poisoned them. They in their pride had lifted themselves up against God and Moses, and now God humbled and mortified them, by making these despicable animals a plague to them. That artillery is now turned against them, which had formerly been made use of in their defence against the Egyptians. He that brought quails to feast them, let them know that he would bring serpents to bite them; the whole creation is at war with those that are in arms against God.

1. Between their despair and Christ. The Devil is the old serpent, a fiery serpent, hence he appears, (Rev. 12. 3.) as a great red dragon. Sin is the biting of this fiery serpent, it is painful to the startled conscience, and poisonous to the scared soul. Satan's temptations are called his fiery darts, Eph. 6. 16. Lust and passion inflame the soul, so do the terrors of the Almighty, when they set themselves in array. At the last, sin bites like a serpent, but the grace of God is like an alter; and even its sweets are turned into the gall of asps.

2. Between their remedy and ours. (1.) It was God himself that devised and prescribed this antidote against the fiery serpents; so our salvation by Christ was the contrivance of Infinite Wisdom; God himself has found the ransom. (2.) It was a very unlikely method of cure; so our salvation by the death of Christ is to the Jews a stumbling-block, to the Greeks foolishness. It was Moses that lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, so the law is a schoolmaster to bring us to Christ, and Moses wrote of him, John 5. 46. Christ was lifted up by the rulers of the Jews, who were the successors of Moses, and by the people of God, who had not owned the sin, if they had not felt the smart; but they relented under the rod, when he slew them, then they cried to the Lord and to Moses for grace. Moses for them, as consir up to themselves of their own unworthiness to be heard, and convinced of the great interest which Moses had in heaven. How soon is their tone altered! They who had just before quarrelled with him as their worst enemy, now make their court to him as their best friend, and choose him for their advocate with God. Afflictions often change men's sentiments concerning God's people, and teach them to value those prayers which, at a former period, they had scorned. Moses, to show that he had heartily forgiven them, blesses them who had cursed him, and prays for them who had disrespectfully used him. Herein he was a type of Christ, who interceded for his persecutors, and a pattern to us to go and do likewise, and thus to show that we love our enemies.
4, Look. Even singing. In the likeness of that which wounded. So Christ, though perfectly free from sin himself, yet was made in the likeness of sinful flesh; (Rom. 8.3.) so like, that it was taken for granted, this man was a sinner, John 9.2. (Rom. 5.6.) (Rom. 5.7.) serpent was lifted up; so was Christ. He was lifted up on the cross, (John 12.33, 34.) for he was made a spectacle to the world. He was lifted up by the preaching of the gospel. The word here used for a pole, signifies a banner, or ensign, for Christ crucified stands for an ensign of the people, Isa. 11.10. Some make the lifting up of the serpent to be a figure of Christ's triumphing over Satan, the old serpent, whose head he had wounded, and whom he was carrying across the desert. He made an open show of the principalities and powers which he had spoiled and destroyed, Col. 2.15.

3. Between the application of their remedy and our's. They looked and lived, and we, if we believe, shall not perish; it is by faith that we look unto Jesus, Heb. 12.2. Look unto me, and be ye saved, Isa. 45.22. We must be sensible of our wound, and of our danger by it, receive the record which God has given concerning himself, and rely upon the assurance he has given us, that we shall be healed and saved by him, if we resign ourselves to his conduct. The brazen serpent's being lifted up would not cure, if it was not looked upon. If any pore upon their wound, and would not look up to the brazen serpent, they inevitably died. If they slighted this method of cure, and had recourse to natural medicines, and trusted to them, they justly perished; so, if sinners either despise Christ's righteousness, or despair of benefit by it, their wound will, without doubt, be fatal; but whoever looked up to this healing sign, though from the outmost part of the camp, though with a weak and weeping eye, was certainly healed; so whosoever believes in Christ, though as yet but weak in faith, shall not perish. There are weak brethren, for whom Christ died. Perhaps, for some time after the serpent was set up, the camp of Israel was molestled by the fiery serpents; and it is the probable conjecture of some, that they carried this brazen serpent along with them through the rest of their journey, and set it up wherever they encamped, and, when they settled in Canaan, fixed it somewhere within the borders of the land; for it is not likely that the children of Israel went so far off as this was, into the wilderness, to look to it as to us, if we read, 2 Kings 18.4. Even those that are delivered from the eternal death which is the wages of sin, yet must expect to feel the pain and smart of it as long as they are here in this world; but, if it be not our own fault, we may have the brazen serpent to accompany us, to be still looked up to upon all occasions, by bearing about with us continually the dying of the Lord Jesus.

10. And the children of Israel set forward, and pitched in Oboth. 11. And they journeyed from Oboth, and pitched at Ije-abarim, in the wilderness which is before Moab, toward the sun-rising. 12. From thence they removed, and pitched in the valley of Zared. 13. From thence they removed, and pitched on the other side of Arnon, which is in the wilderness that cometh out of the coasts of the Amorites: for Arnon is the border of Moab, between Moab and the Amorites. 14. Wherefore it is said in the book of the wars of the Lord, What he did in the Red Sea, and in the brooks of Arnon. 15. And at the stream of the brooks that goeth down to the dwelling of Ar, and lieth upon the border of Moab. 16. And from thence they went to Beer: that is the well whereof the Lord spake unto Moses, Gather the people together, and I will give them water. 17. Then Israel sang this song, Spring up, O well: sing ye unto it. 18. The princes digged the well, the nobles of the people digged it, by the direction of the lawgiver, with their stakes. And from the wilderness they went to Mattanah: 19. And from Mattanah to Nahaliel: and from Nahaliel to Bamoth: 20. And from Bamoth in the valley, that is in the country of Moab, to the top of Pisgah, which looketh toward Jeshimon.

We have here an account of the several stages and removes of the children of Israel, till they came into the plains of Moab, out of which they at length passed over Jordan into Canaan, as we read in the beginning of Joshua. Natural motions move quicker the nearer they are to their centre. And now they set forward, as the expression is, v. 10. It was well if we would do thus in our way to heaven, rid ground in the latter end of our journey, and the nearer we come to heaven, the more we should live as the work of the Lord. Two things especially are observable in the brief account here given of these removes.

1. The wonderful success which God blessed his people with, near the brooks of Arnon, v. 13.-15. They had now compassed the land of Edom, which they were not to invade, nor so much as to infest, (Deut. 2.4, 5.) and were come to the border of Moab. It is well that there are more ways than one to Canaan. The enemies of God's people may retard their passage, but cannot prevent their entrance into the promised rest. Care is taken to let us know that the Israelites in their march religiously observed the orders which God gave them, to use no hostility against the Moabites, (Deut. 2.9.) because they were the posterity of righteous Lot; therefore they pitched in the other side of Arnon, v. 13. that side which was now in the possession of the Amorites, one of the devoted nations, though formerly it had belonged to Moab, as appears here, v. 26, 27. This care of their's not to offer violence to the Moabites is pleaded by Jephthah long afterward, in his remonstrance against the Ammonites, (Judg. 11.15, &c.) and turned to them for a testimony. What their achievements were, now they pitched on the banks of the river Arnon, we are not particular, but we are told, that Solomon read the book of the wars of the Lord; perhaps that book, which was begun with the history of the war with the Amalekites, Exod. 17.14. 'Write it (said God) for a memorial in a book; to which were added all the other battles which Israel fought, in order; and among the rest, their actions on the river Arnon, at Taib, in Sinphah, as our margin reads it, and in the Red-sea. Or it may be, (as some read it,) in the rehearsal, or commemoration of the wars of the Lord, what he did in the Red-sea, when he brought Israel out of Egypt, and what he did in the brooks of Arnon, just before he brought them into Canaan. Note, In celebrating the memorials of God's favours to us, it is good to observe the series of them, and how divine goodness and mercy have constantly followed us, even from the Red-sea to the brooks of Arnon. In every stage of our lives, may in every step, we should take notice.
of what God has wrought for us; what he did at such a time, and what in such a place, ought to be distinctly remembered.

2. The wonderful supply which God blessed his people with at Beer, (v. 16,) they pitched in Oboth, which signifies bottles, so called, perhaps, because there they filled their bottles with water, which should last them for some time; but by this time, we may suppose, it was with them as it was with Hagar, (Gen. 21. 15,) The water was spent in the bottle; yet we do not find that they murmured, and therefore God, in compassion to them, brought them to water to refresh them, and encourage them to hold on in humble patience and expectation, and to believe that he would graciously take cognizance of their wants, though they did not complain of them. In this world, we do at the best but pitch at Oboth, where our comforts lie in close and scanty vessels; when we come to heaven, we shall remove to Beer, the well of life, the fountain of living waters. Hitherto we have found, 'tis they were supplied with water, they asked it in unjust discontent, and God gave it in just displeasure: but here we find, (1.) That God gave it in love, (v. 16,) Gather the people together, to be witnesses of the wonder, and joint-sharers in the favour, and I will give them water. Before they prayed, God granted, and prevented them with the blessings of his goodness.

(2.) That they received it with joy and thankfulness, which did much to encourage them to hold on in patient expectation, v. 17. Then they sang this song, to the glory of God, and the encouragement of one another, Spring up, O well; thus they pray that it may spring up, for promised mercies must be fetched in by prayer; they triumph that it does spring up, and meet it with their joyful acclamations; with joy must we draw water out of the wells of salvation, Isa. 12. 3. As the brazen serpent was a figure of Christ, who is lifted up for our cure, so is this well a figure of the Spirit, who is poured forth for our comfort, and from whom flow to us rivers of living waters, John 7. 38. Does this well spring up in our souls? We should sing to it; take the comfort to ourselves, and give the glory to God; stir up this gift, sing to it, Spring up, O well, thou fountain of gardens, to water my soul, (Cant. 4. 15,) plead the promise, which perhaps alludes to this story, (Isa. 41. 17, 18,) There is a well of water, &c.

(3.) That whereas, before, the remembrance of the miracle was perpetuated in the names given to the places, which signified the people's strife and murmuring, now, it was perpetuated in a song of praise, which preserved on record the manner in which it was done, (v. 18,) The princes digged the well, the seventy elders, it is probable, by direction of the lawgiver, that is, Moses, under God, with their staves; that is, with their staves they made holes in the soft and sandy ground, and God caused the water miraculously to spring up in the holes which they made. Thus the pious Israelites long afterward, passing through the valley of Baca, a dry and thirsty place, made wells, and God by rain from heaven filled the pools, Ps. 84. 6.

Observe, [1.] God promised to give them water, but they must open the ground to receive it, and give it vent. God's favours must be expected in the use of such means as lie within our power, but still the excellency of the power is of God. [2.] The nobles of Israel were forward to set their hands to this work, and used their staves, probably, those that were the ensigns of their honour and power, for the public service, and it is upon record to the glory of them, and to us, that it was great confirmation to them in their offices, and a great comfort to the people, that they were made use of by the divine power, as instruments to this miraculous supply. By this it appeared that the spirit of Moses, who must shortly die, rested in some measure upon the nobles of Israel. Moses did not strike the ground himself, as formerly the rock, but gave them direction to do it, that their staves might share in the honour of his rod, and they might comfortably hope that when he should leave them, yet God would not, but that they also in their generation should be public blessings, and might expect the divine presence with them, as long as they acted by the direction of the lawgiver. For comfort must be looked for only in the way of duty; and if we would share in divine joys, we must carefully follow the divine conduct.

21. And Israel sent messengers unto Sihon king of the Amorites, saying, 22. Let me pass through thy land: we will not turn into the fields, or into the vineyards; we will not drink of the waters of the well: but we will go along by the king's high-way, until we be past thy borders. 23. And Sihon would not suffer Israel to pass through his border; but Sihon gathered all his people together, and went out against Israel into the wilderness: and he came to Jahaz, and fought against Israel. 24. And Israel smote him with the edge of the sword, and possessed his land from Arnon unto Jabbock, even unto the children of Ammon: for the border of the children of Ammon was strong. 25. And Israel took all these cities: and Israel dwelt in all the cities of the Amorites, in Heshbon, and in all the villages thereof. 26. For Heshbon was the city of Sihon the king of the Amorites, who had fought against the former king of Moab, and taken all his land out of his hand, even unto Arnon. 27. Wherefore they that speak in proverbs say, Come into Heshbon, let the city of Sihon be built and prepared: for there is a fire gone out of Heshbon, a flame from the city of Sihon: it hath consumed Ar of Moab, and the lords of the high places of Arnon. 29. Wo to thee, Moab! thou art undone, O people of Chemosh: he hath given his sons that escaped, and his daughters, into captivity unto Sihon king of the Amorites. 30. We have shot at them: Heshbon is perished even unto Dibon, and we have laid them waste even unto Nophah, which reacheth unto Medeba. 31. Thus Israel dwelt in the land of the Amorites. 32. And Moses sent to spy out Jazer: and they took the villages thereof, and drove out the Amorites that were there. 33. And they turned, and went up by the way of Bashan: and Og the king of Bashan went out against them, he and all his people, to the battle at Edrei. 34. And the Lord said unto Moses, Fear him not: for I have delivered him into thy hand, and all his people, and his land; and thou shalt do to him as thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon. 35. So they smote him, and his sons, and all his people, until there was none left him alive; and they possessed his land.

We have here an account of the victories obtained by Israel over Sihon and Og, which must be distinctly considered, not only because they are distinctly related, but because long afterward the memory of them is distinctly celebrated, and they are severally assigned as instances of everlasting mercy; he slew Sihon king of the Amorites, for his mercy endured for ever; and Og the king of Bashan, for his mercy endured for ever, Ps. 136. 19. 20.

1. Israel sent a peaceable message to Sihon king of the Amorites, (v. 21.) but received an unpeaceable return, worse than that of the Edomites to Jephthah, ch. 20. 18. 20. For the Edomites only refused them a passage, and stood upon their own defence to keep them out; but Sihon went out with his forces against Israel in the wilderness, out of his own borders, without any provocation given him, (v. 23.) and so ran himself upon his own ruin. Jephthah intimates that he was prompted by his politics to do this; (Judg. 11. 20.) Sihon trusted not Israel to pass through his coast; but his policy is seen in the words used by Moses for says, God hardened his spirit, and made his heart obstinate, that he might deliver him into the hand of Israel, Deut. 2. 30.

The enemies of God's church are often infatuated in those very counsels which they think most wisely taken. Sihon's army was routed, and not only so, but all his country came into possession of Israel, v. 24. 25.

This seizure was justified, 1. Against the Amorites themselves, for they were the aggressors, and provoked the Israelites to battle; and yet, perhaps, that would not have been sufficient to entitle Israel to their land, but God himself, the King of nations, the Lord of the whole earth, had given them a grant of it. The Amorites formed one of the deposed nations whose land God had promised to Abraham and his seed, which promise should be performed, and that the Amorites should be full, Gen. 15. 16. Jephthah insists upon this grant as their title, Judg. 11. 23. 24. The victory which God gave them over the Amorites, put them in possession, and then the promise made to their fathers, having given them a right, by virtue of that, they kept possession.

2. Against the Moabites, who had formerly been the lords-proprietors of this country; if they should ever desarise to it, and should plead that God himself had provided that none of their land should be given to Israel for a possession, (Deut. 2. 9.) Moses here furnishes posterity with a replication to their plea, and Jephthah makes use of it against the Amorites 260 years after, when Israel's title to this country was questioned. (1.) The justification itself is, that though, it was true, this country had belonged to the Moabites, yet the Amorites had taken it from them some time before, and were now in full and quiet possession of it, v. 26. The Israelites did not take it out of the hands of the Moabites, they had before lost it to the Amorites, and were constrained to give up their pretensions to it; and when Israel had taken it from the Amorites, they were under no obligation to restore it to the Moabites, whose title to it was long since extinguished. See here the uncertainty of worldly possessions, how often they change their owners, and how soon we may be deprived of them, even when we think ourselves most sure of them; they make themselves wings. It is our wisdom therefore to secure the good part, which cannot be taken away from us.

See also the wisdom of the Divine Providence and its perfect foresight, by which, preparation was made long before for the accomplishment of all God's purposes in their season. This country being designed in due time for Israel, it is beforehand put into the hand of the Amorites, who little think that they have it but as trustees, till Israel comes of age, and then must surrender it. We understand not the vast reaches of Providence, but known unto God are all his works, as appears in this instance, that he set the bounds of the people, according to the number of the children of Israel, Deut. 32. 8. All that land which he intended for his chosen people, he put into the possession of the devoted nations, that were to be driven out. (2.) For proof of the allegation, he refers to the authentic records of the country, for so their prophets, or songs, were, one of which he quotes some passages out of, (v. 24. 25.) which sufficiently proves what is vouched for, namely, [1.] That such and such places that are here named, though they had been in the possession of the Moabites, were by right of war become the dominion of Sihon king of the Amorites Heshbon is become his city, and he obtained such a quiet possession of it, that it was built and prepared for him, (v. 27.) and the country of Dibon and Nophah was likewise subdued, and annexed to Israel, v. 11. See also, Ps. 117. 1. But the Moabites were utterly disabled ever to regain the possession. Even Ar of Moab, though not taken or attempted by Sihon, but still remaining the metropolis of Moab, yet was so wasted by this less, that it would never be able to make head, v. 20. The Moabites were undone, and even Chemosh their god had given them up as unable to rescue them out of the hands of Sihon, v. 29. By all which it appears that the Amorites were barred for ever. There may be a further reason for inserting this Amorite poem, namely, to show that the triumphing of the wicked is short. They that had conquered the Moabites, and insulted over them, are now themselves conquered and insulted over by the Israel of God. It is very probable that the same Sihon king of the Amorites, that had got this country from the Moabites, was now to have it himself restored to him; as is said to be taken from a former king of Moab, (v. 26.) yet not by a former king of the Amorites; and then it shows how sometimes justice makes men to see the less of that which they got by violence, and were puffed up with the gain of. They are exacted but for a little while, Job 24. 24. Og, king of Bashan, instead of being warned by the fate of his neighbours to make peace with Israel, scornered by it to make war with them, which proves in like manner to be his destruction. Og was also an Amorite, and therefore, perhaps, thought himself better able to deal with Israel than his neighbours were, and more likely to prevail, because of his own gigantic strength and stature, which Moses takes notice of, (Deut. 3. 11.) where he gives a more full account of this story. Here observe, 1. That the Amorites begins the war, v. 33. He went out to battle against Israel. His country was very rich and pleasant, Bashan was famous for the best timber, (witness the oaks of Bashan,) and the best breed of cattle, witness the bulls and kine of Bashan, and the lambs and rams of that country, which are celebrated, Deut. 32. 14. Wicked men do their utmost to secure themselves and their possessions against the judgments of God, but all in vain, when their day comes, on which they must fall. 2. That God interests himself in the cause, bids Israel not to fear this threatening force, and promises a complete victory, "I have delivered him into thy hand, (v. 34.) the thing is as good as done already, it is all thine own, enter and take
CHAP. XXII.

At this chapter begins the famous story of Balak and Balaam, their attempt to curse Israel, and the baffling of that attempt; God's people are long afterward bid to remember what Balak the King of Moab consulted, and what Balaam the son of Beor answered him, that they might know the righteousness of the Lord, Mic. 6. 5. In this chapter we have, I. Balak's fear of Israel, and the plot he had to get them cursed, v. 1-4. II. The embassy he sent to Balaam, a conjurer, to fetch him for that purpose, and the disappointment he met with in that first embassy, v. 5-14. III. Balaam's coming to him upon his second message, v. 15-21. IV. The opposition Balak met with by the way, v. 22-25. V. Balaam's interview at length between Balak and Balaam, v. 26-41.

1. And the children of Israel set forward, and pitched in the plains of Moab, on this side Jordan by Jericho. 2. And Balak, the son of Zippor, saw all that Israel had done to the Amorites. 3. And Moab was sore afraid of the people, because they were many: and Moab was distressed because of the children of Israel. 4. And Moab said unto the elders of Midian, Now shall this company lick up all that are round about us, as the ox licketh up the grass of the field. And Balak, the son of Zippor, was king of the Moabites at that time. 5. He sent messengers, therefore, unto Balaam, the son of Beor, to Pethor, which is by the river of the land of the children of his people, to call him, saying, Behold, there is a people come out from Egypt: behold, they cover the face of the earth, and they abide over against me. 6. Come now, therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people, for they are too mighty for me: peradventure I shall prevail, that we may smite them, and that I may drive them out of the land: for I wot that he whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed. 7. And the elders of Moab, and the elders of Midian, departed with the rewards of divination in their hand; and they came unto Balaam, and spake unto him the words of Balak. 8. And he said unto them, Lodge here this night, and I will bring you word again, as the Lorp shall speak unto me: And the princes of Moab abode with Balaam. 9. And God came unto Balaam, and said, What men are these with thee? 10. And Balaam said unto God, Balak the son of Zippor, king of Moab, hath sent unto me saying, 11. Behold, there is a people come out of Egypt, which covereth the face of the earth: come now, curse me them; peradventure I shall be able to overcome them, and drive them out. 12. And God said unto Balaam, Thou shalt not go with them; thou shalt not curse the people: for they are blessed. 13. And Balaam rose up in the morning, and said unto the princes of Balak, Get you into your land: for the Lorp refuseth to give me leave to go with you. 14. And the princes of Moab rose up, and they went unto Balak, and said, Balaam refuseth to come with us.

The children of Israel have at length finished their wanderings in the wilderness, out of which they went up, (ch. 21. 18.) and are now encamped in the plains of Moab near Jordan, where they continued till their ground was watered under Joshua, after the death of Moses. Now we have here, I. The fright which the Moabites were in upon the approach of Israel, v. 2. 4. They needed not to fear any harm from them, if they knew (and it is probable Moses let them know) the orders God had given Israel, not to contend with the Moabites, nor to use any hostility against them, Deut 2. 9. But if they had any notice of this, they were jealous that it was but a sham, to make them secure, that they might be the more easily conquered. Notwithstanding the old friendship between Abraham and Lot, the Moabites resolved to ruin Israel if they could, and therefore they will take it for granted, without any ground for the suspicion, that Israel resolves to ruin them. Thus it is common for those that design mischief to pretend that mischief is designed against them; and their groundless jealousies must be the colour of their causeless malice. They hear of their triumphs over the Amorites, (v. 2.) and think their own house is in danger, when their neighbour's is on fire. They observe their multitudes, (v. 3.) They were many; and hence infer how easily they would conquer their country, and all about them, if some speedy and effectual course were not taken to stop the progress of their victorious arms. They shall lick up, or devour us, all that are round about us, as speedily and irresistibly as the ox eats up the grass, (v. 4.) owning himself to be an unequal match for so formidable an enemy. Therefore they were sore afraid and distressed themselves; thus were the wicked in great fear where no fear was, Ps. 53. 5. These fears they communicated to their neighbours, the elders of Midian, that some measures might be concerted between them and their people, on the one side, and the kingdom of Moab fall, the republic of Midian cannot stand long. The Moabites, if they had pleased, might have made a good use of the advances of Israel, and their successes against the Amorites; they had reason to rejoice, and give God and Israel thanks for freeing them from the threatening power of Sihon king of the Amorites, who had taken from them part of their country, and was likely to overrun the rest. They had reason likewise to have courted Israel's friendship, and to have come in to their assistance; but, having forsaken the religion of their father Lot, and being sunk into idolatry, they hated the people of the God of Abraham, and were lustily infatuated in their counsels, and given up to distress.

II. The project which the king of Moab formed, to get the people of Israel cursed, that is, to set God against them, who, he perceived, hitherto fought for them. He trusted more to his arts than to his arms, and had a notion, that if he could but get some prophet or other, with his powerful charms, to imprecate evil upon them, and to prostrate Balaam, he would get an account of their errand; and so, too weak, he should be able to deal with them. This notion arose, 1. Out of the remains of some religion; for it owns a dependence upon some visible sovereign powers that rule in the affairs of the children of men, and determines them, and an obligation upon us to make application to these powers. 2. Out of the ruins of the true religion; for if the Midianites and Moabites had not wretchedly degenerate and worshiped of their pious ancestors, Abraham and Lot, they could not have imaged it possible, with their curses, to do any mischief to a people who alone adhered to the service of the true God, from whose service they had revolted.

III. The court which he made to Balaam the son of Beor, a famous conjurer, to engage him to curse Israel. This Balaam lived in the country from which Abraham came, and where Laban lived; but though it was probable that there were many nearer home that were pretenders to divination, yet none had so great a reputation for success as Balaam, and Balak will employ the best he can hear of, though he sent a great way for him, so much is his heart upon this project. And, to gain him, 1. He makes him his friend; complaining to him, as his confidant, of the difficulties he was in, and the plagues and neighbourhood of the camp of Israel, (v. 5.) They cover the face of the earth, and they abide over against me. 2. In effect, he makes him his god, by the great power he attributes to his word; He whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed, v. 6. The learned Bishop Patrick inclines to think, with many of the Jewish writers, that Balaam had been a great prophet, who, for the accomplishment of his predictions, and the answers of his prayers, both for good and evil, had been looked upon justly as a man of great interest with God; but that, growing proud and covetous, God departed from him, and then, to support his sinking credit, he betook himself to didabolical arts. He is called a prophet, (2 Pet. 2. 16.) because he had been one, or, perhaps, he had raised his reputation from the first by his magical charms, and had signified to the people so far, that he was called The great power of God, Acts 8. 10. Curses pronounced by God's prophets, in the name of the Lord, have wonderful effects, as Nàv's, Gen. 9. 25. Elisha's, 2 Kings 2. 24. But the curse causeless shall not come; (Prov. 26. 2.) no more than Goliath's, when he cursed Dauid by his gods, 1 Sam. 17. 43. Let us desire to have the prayers of God's ministers accepted, and to be thankful to them, and dread having them against us, for they are greatly regarded by him who blesseth indeed, and curseth indeed. But Balak cannot rely upon these compliments as sufficient to prevail with Balaam, the main inducement is yet behind, (v. 7.) They took the rewards of divination in their hand, the wages of unrighteousness, which he loved, 2 Pet. 2. 24.

IV. The restraint God lays upon Balaam, forbidding him to curse Israel. It is very probable, that Balaam, being a curious inquisitive man, was no stranger to Israel's case and character, but had heard that God was with them of a truth; so that he ought to have given the messengers their answer immediately, that he never would curse a people whom God had blessed; but he lodges the messengers, and takes a night's time to consider what he should do, and to receive instructions from God, v. 8. When we enter into a parley with temptations, we are in great danger of being overcome by them. In the night God comes to him, probably in a dream, and inquires what business those strangers had with him; He knows it, but he will know it from him, and gives him an account of their errand; (v. 9. 11.) and God thereupon charges him not to go with them, nor attempt to curse that blessed people, v. 12. Thus God sometimes, for the preservation of his people, was pleased to speak to bad men, as to Abimelech, (Gen. 20. 3.) and to Laban, Gen. 31. 24. And we read of some that were workers of iniquity, and yet in Christ's name prophesied, and did many wondrous works. Balak is moved not only not to go to Balak, but not to offer to curse this people, which he might have attempted at a distance; and the reason is given, they are blessed. This was part of the blessing of Abraham, (Gen. 12. 3.) I will curse him that curseth thee. So that an attempt to curse them would be not only fruitless, but pernicious. Israel had often provoked God in the wilderness, yet he will not suffer their enemies to curse them, for he rewards them not according to their iniquities. The blessedness of those whose sin is covered comes with them, Rom. 4. 6. 7.

V. The return of the messengers without Balaam. 1. Balaam is not faithful in returning God's answer to the messengers, v. 13. He only tells them, The Lord refuseth to give me leave to go with you; he does not tell them, as he ought to have done, that Israel was a blessed people, and must by no means be cursed. But by so doing, he has, for the moment, justified his conduct. Notice, Those are a fair mark for Satan's temptation that speak diminishing of divine prohibitions, as if they amounted to no more than the denial of a permission, and as if to go against God's law were only to go without his leave. 2. The messengers are not faithful in returning Balaam's answer to Balak; all the account they give of it, is, Balaam refuseth to come with us; (v. 14.) intimating that he only went with them, because he was bribed; but they are not willing that Balak should know that God had signified his disallowance of the attempt. Thus are great men wretchedly abused by the flatteries of those about them, who do all they can to prevent their seeing their own faults and follies.

15. And Balak sent yet again princes, more, and more honourable than they. 16. And they came to Balaam, and said to him, Thus saith Balak, the son of Zippor, Lot nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee from coming unto me: 17. For I will promote thee unto very great honour, and I will do whatsoever thou sayest unto me: come, therefore, I pray thee, curse me this people. 18. And Balaam answered and said unto the servants of Balak, If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word of the Lord my God, to do less or more. 19. Now, therefore, I pray thee, tarry ye also here this night, that I may know what the Lord will say unto me more. 20. And God came unto Balaam at night, and said unto him, If the men come to call thee, rise up, and go with them; but yet the word which I shall say unto thee, that shalt thou do. 21. And Balaam rose up in the morning, and saddled his ass, and with the princes of Moab.

We have here a second embassy sent to Balaam, to fetch him over to curse Israel. It was well for us, if we were as earnest and constant in presenting a good work, notwithstanding disappointments, as Balak was in pursuing this ill design. The enemies of the church are restless and unwearied in their attempts against it; but he that sits in heaven laughs at them. Observe, 1. The temptation Balak laid before Balaam; he contrived to make this assault more vigorous than the former. It is very probable that he sent double money in the hands of his messengers; but, beside that, now he tempted him with honours, laid a bait not only for his covetousness, but for his pride and ambition. How earnestly should we beg of God daily to mortify in us these two limbs of the old man! Those that know how to look with a holy contempt upon worldly wealth and preferment, will not be so hard a matter, as most men do, to keep a good conscience. See how artfully Balaam managed the temptation. 1. The messengers he sent were more, and more honourable, ch. 15. He sent to this conjurer with as great respect and deference to his quality, as if he had been a sovereign prince; apprehending, perhaps, that Balaam had thought himself slighted in the fewness and meanness of the former messengers. 2. The request was very urgent; this powerful prince becomes a suitor to him, "Let nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee, (v. 16.) no, not God, nor conscience, or any fear either of sin or shame." 3. The provers were high; I will promote thee to very great honour among the princes of Moab; nay, he gives him a blank, and he shall write his own terms, I will do whatsoever thou sayest, that is, "I will give thee whatever thou desirest, and observe whatever thou ordainest; thy word shall be law to me, sure and sure. Thus sinners sit at no pains, spare no cost, and care not how low they stoop, for the gratifying either of their luxury, or of their malice; shall we then be stiff and strait-handed in our compliance with the laws of virtue? God forbid.

Balaam's seeming resistance of, but real yielding to, this temptation. We may here discern in Balaam a struggle between his convictions and his corruptions. 1. His conformities changed him, and adhered to the command of God, and he spoke their language, v. 18. Nor could any man have said better; If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, and that is more than he can give, or I can ask, I cannot go beyond the word of the Lord my God. See how honourably he speaks of God, he is Jehovah, my God. Note, Many call God their's that are not his, not only by the new star by the Lord and by Malchiel. See how respectfully he speaks of the word of God, as one resolved to stick to it, and in nothing to vary from it, and how slightly of the wealth of this world, as if gold and silver were nothing to him in comparison with the favour of God; and yet, at the same time, the Searcher of hearts knew that he loved the wages of unrighteousness. Note, It is an easy thing for bad men to speak very good words, and with their mouth to make a show of piety. There is no judging of men by their words, God knows the heart. 2. His corruptions at the same time strongly inclined him to go contrary to the command. He seemed to refuse the temptation, v. 18. But even then he expressed no abhorrence of it. As Christ did when he had the kingdoms of the world offered him, Get thee hence, Satan; and as Peter did, when Simon Magus offered him money; Thy money perish with thee. But it appears (v. 19.) that he had a strong inclination to accept the proffer; for he would further attend, to know what God would say to him, hoping that he might alter his mind, and give him leave to go. This was a vile reflection upon God Almighty, as if he could change his mind, and now, at last, suffer those to be cursed whom he had pronounced blessed; and as if he would be brought to allow of that which he had already declared to be evil. Surely he thought God altogether such a one as himself. He had already been told what the will of God was, in which he ought to have acquiesced, and not to have desired a re-hearing of that cause which was already so plainly determined. Note, It is a very great affront to God, and a certain evidence of the dominion of corruption in the heart, to beg leave to sin.

The permission God gave him to go, v. 20. God came to him, probably, by an angel, and told him he might, if he pleased, go with Balak's messengers. So he gave him up to his own heart's lusts. "Since thou hast such a mind to go, even go, yet know that the journey thou undertakest will be not for thine honour; for, though thou hast leave to go, thou shalt not, as they have, have leave to curse, for the word which I shall say unto thee, that shalt do." Note, God has wicked men in a chain; hitherto they shall come by his permission, but no farther than he does permit them. Thus he makes the wrath of man to praise him, yet, at the same time, restrains the remainder of it. It was in anger that God said to Balaam, Go with them, and we have reason to think that Balaam himself so understood it, for we do not find him pleading this allowance, when God reproved him for going. Note, As God sometimes denies the prayers of his people in love, so sometimes he grants the desires of the wicked in wrath.

His setting out in the journey, v. 21. God gave him leave to go, if the men called him, but he changed his mind, and said, I will not go, we do not find that he stayed for their calling him, but he hesitated; in the morning, got every thing ready with all speed, and went with the princes of Moab, who were proud enough that they had carried their point. The apostle describes Balaam's sin here to be, that he ran greedily into an error for reward, Jude 11. The love of money is the root of all evil.

22. And God's anger was kindled because he went: and the angel of the Lord stood in the way for an adversary against him. Now he was riding upon his ass, and his two servants were with him. 23. And the ass saw the angel of the Lord standing in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand: and the ass turned aside out of the way, and went into the field; and Balaam smote the ass, to turn her into the way. 24. But the angel of the Lord stood in the path of the vineyards, a wall being on this side, and a wall on that side. 25. And when the ass saw the angel of the Lord, she thrust herself unto the wall, and crushed Balaam's foot against the wall: and he smote her again. 26. And the angel of the Lord went further, and stood in a narrow place, where was no way to turn, either to the right hand or to the left. 27. And when the ass saw the angel of the Lord, she fell down under Balaam: and Balaam’s anger was kindled, and he smote the ass with a staff. 28. And the Lord opened the mouth of the ass; and she said unto Balaam, What have I done unto thee, that thou hast smitten me these three times? 29. And Balaam said unto the ass, Because thou hast mocked me: I would there were a sword in mine hand, for now would I kill thee. 30. And the ass said unto Balaam, Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day? was I ever wont to do so unto thee? And he said, Nay. 31. Then the Lord opened the eyes of Balaam, and he saw the angel of the Lord standing in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand: and he bowed down his head, and fell flat on his face. 32. And the angel of the Lord said unto him, Wherefore hast thou smitten thine ass these three times? behold, I went out to withstand thee, because thy way is perverse before me: 33. And the ass saw me, and turned from me these three times, unless she had turned from me, surely now also I had slain thee, and saved her alive. 34. And Balaam said unto the angel of the Lord, I have sinned; for I knew not that thou stoodest in the way against me: now, therefore, if it displease thee, I will get me back again. 35. And the angel of the Lord said unto Balaam, Go with the men: but only the word that I shall speak unto thee, thou shalt speak. So Balaam went with the princes of Balak.

We have here an account of the opposition God gave to Balaam in his journey toward Moab; probably the princes were gone before, or gone some other way, and Balaam had pointed out where he would meet them, or where they should stay for him, for we read nothing of them in this part of our narrative; only that Balaam, like a person of some quality, was attended with his two men; honour enough, one would think, for such a man, he needed not to be beholden to Balak for promotion.

I. Here is God’s displeasure against Balaam for undertaking this journey; God’s anger was kindled because he went, v. 22.

Note. 1. The sin of sinners is not to be thought the less provoking to God, because he permits it. We must not think that, because God does not prevent his angels from running men from sin, therefore he approves of it, or that it is therefore not hateful to him; he suffers sin, and yet is angry at it. 2. Nothing is more displeasing to God than malicious designs against his people; he that touches them touches the apple of his eye.

II. The way God took to let Balaam know his displeasure against him; An angel stood in the way for an adversary. Now God fulfilled his promise to Israel, (Exod. 23. 22.) I will be an enemy to thine enemies. The holy angels are adversaries to sin, and perhaps are employed more than we are aware of in preventing it, particularly in opposing those that have any ill designs against God’s church and people, for whom Michael our prince stands up, Dan. 12. 1, 10, 21. What a comfort is this to all that wish well to the Israel of God, that he never suffers wicked men to form any attempt against them, without sending his holy angels forth to break this attempt, and secure his little ones. When the prophet saw the four horns that scattered Judah, at the same time he saw four carriages that were to fray those horns, Zech. 1. 18. &c. When the enemy comes in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord will lift up a standard against him. This angel was an adversary to Balaam, because Balaam counted him his adversary; otherwise those are really our best friends, and we are so to reckon them, that stop our progress in a sinful way. The angel stood with his sword drawn; (v. 23.) a flaming sword, like that in the hands of the seraph, (Isa. 6. 3, 24.) turning every way. Note. The holy angels are at war with those with whom God is angry, for they are the ministers of his justice.

Balaam has notice given him of God’s displeasure, 1. By the ass, and that did not startle him. The ass saw the angel, v. 23. How vainly did Balaam boast that he was a man whose eyes were open, and that he saw the visions of the Almighty, (ch. 24. 3.) When he had the angel before him, his eyes being blinded with covetousness and ambition, and dazzled with the rewards of divination. Note, Many have God against them, and his holy angels, but are not aware of it. The ass knows his own, sees his danger, but Balaam does not know, does not consider, Isa. 1. 3. Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not see. Let none be puffed up with a conceit of visions and revelations, when they can not tell if an angel of God; and the angels, with their own self-sufficiency, worse than that of the beasts that perish, who, when they are told of the sword of God’s wrath drawn against them, while they persist in wicked ways, yet will go on; the ass understood the law of self-preservation better than so; for, to save both herself and her senseless rider, (1.) She turned aside out of the way, v. 23. Balaam should have taken the hint of this, and considered what it was as a mark of the angel’s authority and duty; but, instead of that, he beat her into the way again. Thus they who by wilful sin are running headlong into perdition are angry at those that would prevent their ruin. (2.) She had not gone much further, before she sees the angel again, and then, to avoid him, runs up to a wall, and crushes her rider’s foot, v. 24, 25. How many ill accidents are we liable to, in travelling upon the road, from which if we are preserved, we must own our obligations to the Divine Providence, which by the ministry of angels keeps us in all our ways, lest we dash our foot against a stone; but if we at any time meet with a disaster, it should put us upon inquiring whether our way be right in the sight of God or no. The crushing of Balaam’s foot, though it was the saving of his life, provoked him so much, that he smote his ass the second time. So angry are we apt to be at that which, though a present unassays, yet is a real kindness. (3.) Upon the next encounter with the angel, the ass fell down under Balaam, v. 26, 27. He ought to have considered that there was certainly something extraordinary in this; for his ass was not restive, nor did she use to serve him thus; but it is common for those whose hearts are fully set in them to do evil, to push on violently, and break through all the difficulties which Providence lays in their way to give check to them, and to stop them in their career. Balaam the third time smote his ass, though she had now done him the best piece of service that every the inferior creatures are, and have been to us, that we may be thankful to God, and tender of them. Thirdly, That she was not wont to do so by him, and had never before crushed his foot, or fallen down under him; he might therefore conclude that there was a warning in this; that he should not abuse her so now. Note. 1. The rare recurrence of an offence should moderate our displeasure against an offender. 2. When creatures depart from their wonted obedience to us, we should inquire the cause within ourselves, and be humbled for our sin.

2. Balaam at length has notice of God's displeasure, by the angel, and that did startle him. When God opened his eyes, he saw the angel, (v. 31.) and the ass's mouth was opened, (v. 32.) It was a token of his majesty, and a warning, by the presence of that glorious messenger, and in fear of the sword he saw in his hand. God has many ways of breaking and bringing down the hard and unhumbled heart. (1.) The angel reproved him for his outrageousness; (v. 32, 33.) Wherefore hast thou smitten thine ass? Whether we consider it or no, it is certain that God will call us to account for the abuses done to his creatures. Nay, he shows him that he had much sin to answer for, and had been more bcast, and to condemn himself, than to fly out thus against his ass; "Thy way is perverse before me, and then how canst thou expect to prosper?" And how much wiser his ass was than himself, and how much beheld he was to her that she turned aside; it was for his safety, and not for her own, for, had she gone on, he had been slain, and she had been saved alive. Note. When our eyes are opened, we shall see what danger we are in, in a small way; and how much it was for our advantage to be crossed in it, and what fools we were to quarrel with our crosses, which helped to save our lives. (2.) Balaam then seemed to relent; (v. 34.) "I have sinned; sinned in undertaking this journey, sinned in pushing on so violently;" but he excuses it with this, that he saw not the angel; yet, now that he did see him, he was willing to go back again. That which was displeasing to God, was not so much his going, as his going with a malicious design against Israel, and a secret hope, that, notwithstanding the proviso with which his permission was clogged, he might prevail to curse them, and to gratify Balak, and get preferment under him. It does not appear that he is sensible of this wickedness of his heart, or willing to own it; but, if he finds he cannot go forward, he will himself, (as it was before), turn back. Here is no sign that his heart is turned, but, if his hands are tied, he cannot help it. Thus many leave their sins, only because their sins have left them. There seems to be a reformation of the life, but what will that avail, if there be no renovation of the heart? (3.) The angel however continued his permission; (v. 35.) "Go with the men. Go, if thou hast a mind to be made a fool of, and to be reviled for all thine pride. Go, only the word that I shall speak unto thee, that thou shalt speak, whether thou wilt or no." For this seems not to be a precept, but a prediction of the event, that he should not only not be able to curse Israel, but should be forced to bless them; which would be more for the glory of God, and his own confusion, than if he had turned back. Thus God gave him fair warning, but he would not take it, he went with the men; and the pride of Balaam's covetousness God was wrath, and smote him, but he went on forwardly, Isa. 37. 17.

36. And when Balak heard that Balaam was come, he went out to meet him unto a city of Moab, which is in the border of Arnon, which is in the utmost coast. 37. And Balak said unto Balaam, Did I not earnestly send unto thee to call thee? wherefore comest thou not unto me? am I not able indeed to promote thee to honour? 33. And Balaam said unto Balak, Lo, I am come unto thee: have I now any power at all to say any thing? the word that God putteth in my mouth, that shall I speak. 39. And Balaam went with Balak, and they came unto Kirjath-huzoth. 40. And Balak offered oxen and sheep, and sent to Balaam, and to the princes that were with him. 41. And it came to pass on the morrow, that Balak took Balaam, and brought him up into the high places of Baal, that thence he might see the utmost part of the people. We have here the meeting between Balak and Balaam, confederate enemies to God's Israel; but here they seem to differ in their expectations of the success. 1. Balak speaks of it with confidence, not doubting but to gain his point, now that Balaam was come. In expectation of this, he went out, to meet him, even to the utmost border of his country; (v. 36.) partly to gratify his own impatient desire to see one he had such great expectations from, and partly to do honour to Balaam, and so to engage him with his utmost power to serve him. See what respect he then princes paid to, but that Balaam did not come sooner, v. 37. And he thinks that he should have considered both the importunity Balak had used, did I not earnestly send for thee? (and the importunity of people inferior to kings has prevai- led with many against their inclinations,) and that he should also have considered Balak's intentions concerning him, Am I not able to promote thee to honour? Balak, as king, was in his own eyes, the fountain of their's, and Balaam should have made his choice of all the preferments that were in his gift; he therefore thinks himself affronted by Balaam's delays, which looks as if he thought the honours he prepared not worthy his acceptance. Note, Promotion to honour is a very tempting bait to many people; and it were well if we would be drawn into the service of God by the honour he sets before us. Why do we delay to come unto God? Is any thing that I fear to lose? 2. Balaam speaks doubly of the issue, and bids Balak not depend too much on him, (v. 38.) "Have I now any power at all to say any thing? I am come, but what the nearer am I? Gladly would I curse Israel; but I must not, I cannot, God will not suffer me." He seems to speak with vexation at the hook in his nose, and the bridle in his lips, such as Sennacherib was lied up with, Is. 37. 29. 3. Address them- selves with all speed to the business. Balaam is half entertained over night, a sacrifice of thanksgiving is offered to the gods of Moab, for the safe arrival of this welcome guest, and he is treated with a feast upon the sacrifice, v. 40. And the next morning, that no time might be lost, Balak takes Balaam in his chariot to the high-places of his kingdom, not only because their holiness, (such as it was,) he thought, might give some advantage to his divinations, but their height might give him a convenient prospect of the camp of Israel, which was to be the butt or mark at which he must shoot his envenomed arrows. And now Balaam is really as soliciting for Balak, as ever he had pret- ended to be to please God. See what need we have to pray every day, Our Father in heaven, lead us not into temptation.

CHAP. XXIII. In this chapter, we have Balak and Balaam busy at work to do Israel a mischief, and for that which appears, nei- ther Moses nor the elders of Israel knew anything of the matter, nor are in a capacity to break the snare; but God, who keeps Israel, and neither slumbers nor sleeps, baffles the attempt, without any intercession or confi- dence, and in the same manner frustrated, v. 13. 26. III. Preparations made for a third attempt, (v. 27. 30.) the issue of which we have in the next chapter.

1. And Balaam said unto Balak, Build me here seven altars, and prepare me here seven oxen and seven rams. 2. And Balak did as Balaam had spoken; and Balak and Balaam offered upon every altar a bullock and a ram. 3. And Balaam said unto Balak, Stand by thy burnt-offering, and I will go; peradventure the Lord will come to meet me: and whatsoever he showeth me I will tell thee. And he went to a high place. 4. And God met Balaam; and he said unto him, I have prepared seven altars, and I have offered upon every altar a bullock and a ram. 5. And the Lord put a word in Balaam's mouth, and said, Return unto Balak, and thus thou shalt speak. 6. And he returned unto him; and lo, he stood by his burnt-sacrifice, he, and all the princes of Moab. 7. And he took up his parable, and said, Balak the king of Moab hath brought me from Aram, out of the mountains of the east, saying, Come, curse me Jacob, and come, defy Israel. 8. How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed? or how shall I defy, whom the Lord hath not defied? 9. For from the top of the rocks I see him, and from the hills I behold him: lo, the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations. 10. Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his! 11. And Balaam said unto Balaam, What hast thou done unto me? I took thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast blessed them altogether. 12. And he answered and said, Must I not take heed to speak that which the Lord hath put in my mouth? Here is, 1. Great preparation made for the cursing of Israel. That which was aimed at, was, to engage the God of Israel to forsake them, and either to be on Moab's side, or to stand neuter. Oh the sottishness of superstition, to imagine that God will be at men's beck! Balaam and Balak think to bribe him with altars and sacrifices, offered without any warrant or instance of the high priest, if he would eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats. Ridiculous nonsense, to think that these would please God, and gain his favour, when there could be in them no exercise either of faith or obedience! Yet it should seem, they offered these sacrifices to the God of heaven, the supreme Numen—Divinity, and not to any of their local deities. But the multiplying of altars was an instance of their degeneracy from the simplicity of the patriarchs; and it was opening to idolatry; for they that multiplied altars multiplied gods: Ephraim made many altars to sin, Hos. 8. 11. Thus they liked not to retain God in their knowledge, but became vain in their imaginations; and yet presumptuously expected hereby to gain God over to them from Israel, who had his sanctuary among them, and is anointed altar.

Observe here. 1. How very imperious Balaam was, proud to have the command of a king, and to give law to princes. Such is the spirit of that wicked one who exults himself above all that is called God, or that is worshipped. With what authority does Balaam give orders, build me here (in the place I have pitched upon) seven altars, of stone or turf. Thus he covers his malice against Israel with a show of devotion, but his sacrifice was an abomination, it expressed with such a spirit, that, Deut. 21. 27. That which he aimed at, was, not to honour our God with the sacrifices of righteousness, but to enwreih himself with the wages of unrighteousness.

2. How very obsequious Balak was. The altars were presently built, and the sacrifices prepared, the best of the sort, seven bullocks and seven rams, Balak makes no objection to the charge, nor does he shew at it, or think it either a weariness or a dis-carriage to stand by his burnt-offering as Baalam ordered him.

II. The turning of the curse into a blessing, by the overruling power of God, in love to Israel; which is the account Moses gives of it, Deut. 23. 5.

1. God puts the blessing into the mouth of Balaam. Whene the sacrifices were burning, Balaam retired; he went solitary, into some dark grove on the mountainside, and there it is said, he met an angel of the Lord, and the angel had known, that he was alone, and it was a good opportunity for communion with God; those that would meet with him, must retire from the world, and the business and conversation of it, and long to be private, reckoning themselves never less alone than when alone, because the Father is with them. Enter therefore into thy closet, and shut the door, and be assured that God will meet thee, if thou seek him in the due order; but Balaam retired with a pet-adventure only, having some thoughts that God might meet him, but being conscious to himself of guilt, and knowing that God had lately met him in anger, he had reason to speak doubtfully, (v. 3.) Peradventure the Lord will come to meet me. But let not such a man think that he shall receive any favour from God. Nay, it should seem, though he pretended thereby to make a discovery to God, he really designed to use enchantments; see ch. 24. 1. But whatever he intended, God designed to serve his own glory by him, and therefore met Balaam, v. 4. What communion has light with darkness? No friendly communion, we may be sure; Balaam's way was still reverse, and God was still an Adversary to him; but Balak having chosen him for his oracle, God would have a turn in the event and the future, inattendant to the honour of God and Israel, as should render these far more inexcusable, who should appear in arms against them. When Balaam was aware that God met him, probably, by an angel, he boasted of his performances, I have prepared seven altars, and offered upon every altar a bullock and a ram. How had he done it? It cost him nothing, it was done at Balak's expense; yet, (1.) He boasts of it, as if he had done some Israel thing. The acts of devotion which are done in hypocrisy, are commonly reflected upon with pride and vain glory. Thus the Pharisee went up to the temple to boast of his religion, Luke 18. 12. (2.) He insists upon it as a reason why God should gratify him in his desire to curse Israel, as if now he had made God his Debtor, and might draw upon him for what he would. He thinks God is so much beholden to him for the sacrifices that he has made, that he should receive recompense for them, is, to sacrifice his Israel to the malice of the king of Moab. Note, It is a common cheat that wicked people put upon themselves, to think that by the shows of piety they may prevail with God to countenance them, and connive at them, in their greatest immoralties, especially in persecution, Isa. 66. 5. However, though the sacrifice was an abomination, God took the occasion of Balaam's expectation, to put a word into his mouth, (v. 5.) for the answer of the tongue is from the Lord; and thus he would show how much they are mistaken, who say, With our tongue we will prevail, our lips are our own, Ps. 12. 4. He that made man's mouth, knows how to manage it, and to serve his own purposes by it. This speaks terror to daring sinners, that set their mouth against the heavens, God can make their own tongues to fall upon themselves, Ps. 64. 8. And it speaks comfort to God's witnesses, whom at any time he calls out to appear for him; if God put a word into the mouth of Balaam, who would have defied God and Israel, surely he will not be wanting to those who desire to glorify God and edify his people by their testimony; but it shall be given them in that same hour that they should speak.

2. Balaam pronounced the blessing in the ears of Balak. He found him standing by his burnt sacrifice, (v. 6.) closely attending it, and earnestly expecting the success. Those that would have an answer of peace from God, must abide by the sacrifice, and attend on the Lord without distraction, not weary in well-doing. Balaam, having fixed himself in the place appointed for his devoted sacrifice, was ready to proceed; he had drawn up in form ready to deliver, takes up his parable, and it proves a blessing, v. 7. He pronounces Israel safe and happy, and so blesses them.

(1.) He pronounces them safe, and out of the reach of his envenomed darts. [1.] He owns that the design was to curse them; that Balak sent for him out of his own country, and he came, with that intent, v. 7. The message sent to him, was Come, curse me Jacob, and come, defy Israel. Balak intended to make war upon them, and he would have Balaam to bless h's arms, and to prophesy and pray for the ruin of Israel, [2.] He owns the design defeated, and his own inability to accomplish it. He could not do so much as give them an ill word, or an ill wish. How shall I curse whom God has not cursed? v. 8. Men might before he would not do it, but therefore he could not do it. This is a fair confession. First, Of the weakness and impotency of his own magic skill, for which others value him so much, and doubtless he valued himself no less. He was the most celebrated man of that profession, and yet owns himself baffled. God had warned the Israelites not to use divination, (Lev. 19. 31.) and this providence gave them a reason for the law, by showing them the weakness and folly of it. As they had seen the magicians of Egypt befuddled, so here, the great conjurer of the east. See Isa. 47. 12... 14. Secondly,
It is a confession of the sovereignty and dominion of the divine power. He owns that he could do no more than God would suffer him to do, for God could over-rule all his purposes, and turn his counsels headlong. Thirdly, it is a confession of the indwelling Spirit of God. Note, 1. God's Israel are owned and blessed of him. He has not cursed them, for they are delivered from the curse of the law, he has not defiled them, nor rejected and abandoned them, though mean and vile. 2. Those that have the good-will of Heaven, have the ill-will of Hell; the serpent and his seed have an enmity to them. 3. Though the enemies of God's people may prevail far against them, yet they cannot defeat them; that is, they cannot make them any real mischief, much less a ruinous mischief, for they cannot separate them from the love of God. Rom. 8. 39.

[2.] He pronounces them happy, in three things: [1.] Happy in their peculiarity, and distinction from the rest of the nations; (v. 9.) From the top of the rocks I see him. And it seems to have been a great surprise to him, that whereas, it is probable, that he had seen God's people from a distance, he is now made to see them as a rude and disorderly rabble, that infested the countries round about in rabbling parties, he saw them a regular incorporated camp, in which appeared all the marks of discipline and good order; he saw them a people dwelling alone, and foresaw they would continue so, and their singularity will be their unspeakable honour. Persons of quality we call persons of distinction; this was Israel's praise, that they were not only set apart to God, but so set apart, that they differed from all the neighbouring nations, not only in their religion and sacred rites, but in their diet, and dress, and common usages, as a people called out of the world, and not to be conformed to it. They never lost their reputation till they mingled themselves among the heathen, Ps. 106. 35. Note, It is the duty and honour of those that are dedicated to God, to be separated from the world, and not to walk according to the course and custom of it. Those who make conscience of peculiar duties, may take the comfort of peculiar privileges, which is probable, Balaam has an eye to here; God's Israel shall not stand upon a level with other nations, but be dignified above them all, as a people near to God, and set apart for him.

[2.] Happy in their numbers; not so few and despicable as they were represented to him, but an imposing company, with which he was made to see them, both honourable and formidable; (v. 10.) Who can count the dust of Jacob? The number of the people was the thing that Balak was vexed at, (ch. 22. 3.) Mab was afraid of them, because they were many; and God does here by Balaam promote that fear and vexation, foretelling their further increase. Balak would have him see the utmost part of the people, (ch. 22. 6.) but I say no more, he will make them more he would be exasperated against them, and throw about his curses with the more keenness and rage; but it proved quite contrary, instead of being angry at their numbers, he admired them. The better acquainted we are with God's people, the better opinion we have of them. He takes notice of the number, First, of the dust of Jacob; that is, the people of Jacob, concerning whom he foresaw should be the most warlike of all the nations, Gen. 21. 30. 28. 14. Thus he owns the fulfilling of the promise made to the fathers, and expects that it should be yet further accomplished. Perhaps it was part of David's fault in numbering the people, that he offered to count the dust of Jacob, which God had said should be innumerable.

Secondly, Of the fourth part of Israel; alluding to the form of their camp, which was cast into four squadrons, under four standards. Note, God's Israel are a very great body, his spiritual Israel are so, and they will appear to be, when they shall all be gathered together unto him in the great day, Rev. 7. 9.

[3.] Happy in their last end. Let me die the death of the righteous Israelites, that are in covenant with God, and let my last end, or future state, be like theirs, or my recompense, namely, in the other world. Here, First, It is taken for granted that death is the end of all men; the righteous themselves must die, and it is good for us to think of this with application, as Balaam himself does here, speaking of his own death. Secondly, He goes upon the supposition of the soul's immortality, and a different state on the other side death, to which this is a noble testimony, and an evidence of its being anciently known and believed. For how could the death of the righteous be more desirable than the death of the wicked upon any other account, than as it involved happiness in another world, since in the manner and circumstances of dying we see all things come alike to all? Thirdly, He pronounces the righteous truly blessed, not only as to this life, but in the next; that is, that he foresees their death not only more desirable than the death of others, but even more desirable than life itself; for in that sense his wish may be taken; "Not only when I die, let me die the death of the righteous; but I could even now be willing to die, on condition that I might die the death of the righteous, and reach my end this moment, provided it might be like his." Very near the place where Balaam now was, on one of the mountains of Moab, not long after this, Moses died, and to that perhaps God, who put this word into his mouth, designed it should have a reference; that by it Moses might be encouraged to go up and die such a death, as Balaam himself wished to have died. Fourthly, He shows his opinion of religion to be better than his resolution; there are many who desire to die the death of the righteous, but do not endeavour to live the life of the righteous; gladly would they have their end like their's, but not their way. They would be saints in heaven, but not saints on earth. This is the desire of the slothful, which kills him because his hands refuse to labour. This of Balaam's is only a wish, not a prayer, and it is a vain wish, being only a wish for the end, without any care for the means. Thus far this blessing goes, even to death and beyond it, as far as the last end. Now we are told, 1. How Balak fretted at it, v. 11. He pretended to honour the Lord with his sacrifices, and to wait for the answer God would send him; and yet when it did not prove according to his mind, he forgot God, and flew out in a great passion against Balaam, as if it had been purely his doing, "What hast thou done unto me? How hast thou disappointed me?" Sometimes God makes the enemies of his church to revile and anathematize him that sits in heaven, laughs at them, and the efforts of their impotent malice. 2. How Balaam was forced to acquiesce in it. He submits, because he cannot help it, and yet humours the thing with no small address, as if he had been peculiarly conscientious, answering Balak with the gravity of a prophet, Must I not take heed to speak that which the Lord hath put into my mouth? To this the confession of God's over-ruling power is extorted from a wicked prophet, to the further confusion of a wicked prince.

13. And Balak said unto him, Come, I pray thee, with me unto another place, from whence thou mayest see them: thou shalt see but the utmost part of them, and shall not see them all; and curse me them from thence. 14. And he brought him into the field of Zophim, to the top of Pisgah, and built seven altars, and offered a bullock and a ram on every altar. 15. And he said unto Balak, Stand here by thy burnt-offering, while I meet the LORD yonder. 16. And the LORD met Balaam, and put a word in his mouth, and said, Go again unto Balak, and say thus. 17. And when he came to him, behold, he stood by his burnt-offering, and the princes of Moab with him. And Balak said unto him, What hath the LORD spoken? 18. And he took up his parable, and said, Rise up, Balak, and hear; hearken unto me, thou son of Zippor: 19. God is not a man, that he should lie; neither the son of man, that he should repent: hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good? 20. Behold, I have received commandment to bless; and he hath blessed; and I cannot reverse it. 21. He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel: the LORD his God is with him, and the shout of a king is among them. 22. God brought them out of Egypt: he hath as it were the strength of a unicorn. 23. Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination against Israel: according to this time it shall be said of Jacob and of Israel, What hath God wrought! 24. Behold, the people shall rise up as a great lion, and lift up himself as a young lion: he shall not lie down until he eat of the prey, and drink the blood of the slain. 25. And Balak said unto Balaam, Neither curse them at all, nor bless them at all. 26. But Balaam answered and said unto Balak, Told not I thee, saying, All that the LORD speaketh, that must I do? 27. And Balak said unto Balaam, Come, I pray thee, I will bring thee unto another place: peradventure it will please God that thou mayest curse me them from thence. 28. And Balak brought Balaam unto the top of Peor, that looketh toward Jeshimon. 29. And Balaam said unto Balak, Build me here seven altars, and prepare me here seven bullocks and seven rams. 30. And Balak did as Balaam had said, and offered a bullock and a ram on every altar.

I. Preparation made the second time, as before, for the cursing of Israel. 1. The place is changed, v. 13. Balak fancied that Balaam having so full a prospect of the whole camp of Israel, from the top of the rocks, (v. 9.) was either so enamoured with the beauty of it, that he would not curse them, or so aftrighted with the terror of it, that he durst not; and therefore he would bring him to another place, from which he might see only some part of them, which would appear more despicable, and that part at least which would lie in view, he hoped he might obtain leave to curse, and so by degrees he should get ground against them; intending, no doubt, if he had gained this point, to make his success certain. 1. That Balaam now had in his eye, and into which he was to throw the fire-balls of his curses. See how restless and unequered the church's enemies are in their malicious attempts to ruin it; they leave no stone unturned, no project untried, to compass it. O that we were as full of contrivance and resolution in prosecuting good designs for the glory of God! 2. The sacrifices are repeated, new altars are built, a bullock and a ram offered on every altar, and Balaam attends his sacrifice as closely as ever, v. 14, 15. Were we thus earnest to obtain the blessing, as Balak was to procure a curse, (designing upon Israel, but really upon himself and his people,) we should not grudge the return both of the charge and of the labour of religious exercises. 3. Balaam reneweth his attendance on God, and God meets him in a second time, and puts another word into his mouth, not to curse the former, to Balak, v. 16, 17. If God said not to Balaam, Seek in vain, much less will he say so to any of the seed of Jacob, who shall surely find him, not only as Balaam, their Instructor and Oracle, but their bountiful Rewarder. When Balaam returned, Balak was impatient to know what message he had, "What hath the LORD spoken? Are there any better tidings yea hope of escaping?" This should be our inquiry, when we come to hear the word of God, see Jer. 23. 35.
II. A second conversion of the curse into a blessing by the over-ruling power of God; and this blessing is both larger and stronger than the former, and quite cuts off all hopes of altering it. Balak having been so forward to ask what the Lord had spoken, (v. 17.) Balaam now addresses himself particularly to him, (v. 18.) Rise up, Balak, and hear. It was a message from God that he had to deliver, and it is required of Balak, though a King, 1. That he attend, hear, and hearken. with a close application. of mind, let not a word slip. 2. That he attend with reverence, Rise up and hear. His successor Eglon, when he was to receive a message from God, rose out of his seat, Judg. 3. 20.
Two things Balaam in this discourse informs Balak of, some grief and disappointment; (1.) That he had no reason to hope he should rule in Israel; it would be to no purpose to attempt it, and he would deceive himself if he expected it, for two reasons. [1.] Because God is unchangeable; (v. 19.) God is not a man, that he should lie. Men change their minds, and therefore break their words; they lie, because they repent. But God does not alter, he never changes his mind, and therefore those that never recalls his promises. Balaam had fancied (v. 8.) that he could not alter God's counsel, and from thence he infereth here, that God himself would not alter it; such is the imperfection of man, and such the perfection of God. It is impossible for God to lie, Heb. 6. 18. And when in scripture he is said to repent, it is not meant of any change of his mind, (for he is in one mind, and who can turn him?) but of the change of his way. The great truth that with God there is no variability or shadow of turning. Now here, First, He appeals to Balak himself concerning it: "Hath he said, and shall he not do it?" Said it in his own purpose, and shall he not perform it in his providence, according to the counsel of his will? Hath he spoken in his word, in his promise, and shall he not make it good? Can we think otherwise of God, than that he is unchangeably one with himself, and true to his word: All his decrees are unalterable, and all his promises inviolable. Such are the decrees of God, and shall be executed through all ages, and in all generations: He hath blessed and I cannot reverse it, that is, "I cannot prevail with him to reverse it." Israel were of old a blessed people, a seed that the Lord had blessed, the blessing of Abraham came upon them; they were born under the blessing of the covenant, and born to the blessing of Canaan, and therefore they could not be cursed, unless you could suppose that the God of eternal truth would break his word, and become false to himself and his people. [2.] Because Israel are at present unblemishable, v. 21. He has not beheld iniquity in Jacob. Not but that there was iniquity in Jacob, and God saw it; but, First, There was not such a degree of iniquity as might provoke God to abandon them, and give them up to ruin. As bad as they were, they were not so bad. Secondly, There was no idolatry among them, which is in a particular manner called iniquity and perverseness; we have found nothing of that kind in Israel since the golden calf, and therefore, though they were in other instances very provoking, yet God would not cast them off. Balaam knew that nothing would separate between them and God, but sin; while God saw no reigning sin among them, he would send no destroying curse among them; and therefore, as long as they kept in with God, he designs to keep in with them. While we keep from sin, we keep from harm. Some give another sense of those words; they read it thus: He has not beheld wrong offered to Jacob, nor will he see any grievance done to Israel, that is, "He has not, nor will he permit it, or allow it; he will not see Israel injured, but he will right them, and avenge their quarrel." Note, God will not bear to see any injury done to his church and people; For what is done against them, he takes it done against himself, and will reckon for it accordingly. [3.] Because the power of both was irresistible. He shows Balak there was no contending with them, it was to no purpose to offer it; for, First, They had the presence of God with them. The Lord his God is with him, in a particular manner, and not provoked to withdraw from him. Secondly, They had the joy of the Lord's presence, and were always able to the umph in it; the shout or alarm of a king is among them. They shout against their enemies, as sure of victory and success, glorying continually in God as their King and Conqueror for them. Thirdly, They had the experience of the benefit of God's presence with them, and his power engaged for them. For God brought them out of Egypt, v. 22. The power which had done that, could never be restrained, never resisted; and having begun so gloriously, would, no doubt, finish gloriously. Fourthly, While they had God's presence with them, they had the strength of a unicorn, able to make head against all that opposed them. See ch. 24. 8. Such is the strength which the God of Israel gives unto his people.

Now from this all he infers, that it was to no purpose for him to think of doing them a mischief by all the arts he could use, v. 25. 1. He owns himself baffled. Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, so as to prevail. The curses of hell can never take place against the blessings of heaven. Not but that attempts of this kind would be made, but they would certainly be fruitless and ineffectual. Some observe that Jacob, denotes the church low and afflicted, Israel, denotes it prosperous and advanced; but this is no reason why we are to part from them. Many, let second causes smile or frown, it comes all to one. No weapon formed against it shall prosper. Note, God easily can, and certainly will, baffle and disappoint all the devices and designs of the powers of darkness against his church, so that they shall not prevail to destroy it. 2. He foresees that this would be the signal of his coming. According to this time, that is, with reference to what we are now about, it shall be said regarding Jacob and Israel, and said by them, What hath God wrought? What great things hath God done for his people! It shall be said with wonder, joy, and thankfulness, and a challenge to the neighbouring nations, to produce any like instances of the care of their gods for them. Note, The defeating of the designs of the church's enemies, ought, to be had in view, as a memorial to the glory of God. There is none like unto the God of Jehoshurun. What Balaam says here concerning the pre-eminence of the God of Israel above all the Gods of the Gentiles, perhaps Moses refers to, when he says, (Deut. 32. 31.) Their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges, Balaam particularly. Balaam therefore has no hopes of ruining Israel; but, (2.) Balaam shows him that he had more reason to fear being ruined by them, for they were likely to make bloody work among his neighbours; and if he and his country escaped, it was not because he was too great for them to meddle with, but because he fell not within their commission, v. 24. Behold, and tremble; the people that now have him for some time closely encamped, do but repose themselves for a while like a lion couchant, but shortly they shall rise and charge, and strike when they please; Man shall not lie down till he eat of the f LJPE, and drink the blood of the slain. This seems to point at the victories he foresaw they would obtain over the Canaanites; that they would never lay down their arms till they had made a complete conquest of the land they had now in view; and when his neighbour's house was on fire, he had reason to think his own in danger.

Now what was the issue of this disappointment? [1.] Balak and Balaam were both of them sick of the cause. First, Balak is now willing to have his conjurer silenced. Since he cannot say what he would have him, he wishes him to say nothing; Neither curse them at all, nor bless them at all, v. 25. If thou canst not curse them, I beseech thee not to bless them. If thou canst not assist and encourage my designs, do not oppose and dispirit them." Note, God can make the blessings he bestows upon us, a snare, and work all sorts of mischief by them, to put us out of the way; and Balaam was so sensible of this, that he would haveBalak not to appeal to him, but to the gods. [2.] Yet they resolve to make another attempt. They think it scorn to be baffled, and therefore pursue the design, though it be only to their further confusion. And now the third, Third, They change the place; Balak is at last convinced that it is not Balaam's fault, on whom, before, he had laid the blame, but that really he was under a divine check, and therefore now he hopes to bring him to a place, whence God might at least permit him to curse them, v. 27. Probably, he and Balaam were more encouraged thus to repeat their attempt, because God had the second time allowed Balaam to go, though he had forbidden him the first time; because by repeated trials they had carried that point, they hope in like manner to carry this. Thus because sinners are convinced, and sentence against their evil works is not executed speedily, their hearts are the more fully set in them to do evil. The place he now took him to, was the top of Peor; the most eminent high place in all his country, where, it is probable, Baal was worshipped, and was thence called Baal-peor. He chose this place, with a hope, either, 1. That it being the residence (as he fancied) of Baal the god of Moab, he might there get some benefit; or (2.) That he could not, come hither to hinder the operation; or, 2. That it being a place acceptable to his god, it would be so to the Lord, and there he would be brought into a good humour. Such idle conceits have foolish men of God, and so vain are their imaginations concerning him. Thus the Syriac fancied the Lord to be God of the hills, but not of the valleys, (I Kings 20. 29.) as if he were more powerful in one place, than he is in every place. Secondly. They repeat their sacrifice, seven bullocks and seven rams, upon seven altars, v. 29, 30. Thus do they persevere in their expensive oblations, though they had no promise on which to build their hopes of speeding. Let us not therefore, who have a promise that the vision at the end shall speak and not lie, be discouraged by delays, but continue in instant prayer, and not faint, Luke 18. 1.

CHAP. XXIV.

This chapter continues and concludes the history of the defeat of the counsels of Balaak and Balaam against Israel, not by might, nor by power, but by the Spirit of the Lord of hosts; and the insufﬁcient and vain power over the children of men, and his favour toward his own children, as any of the victories recorded in the book of the wars of the Lord. What preparation was made the third time, for the cursing of Israel, we read of in the close of the foregoing chapter. In this chapter we are told, I. What the blessing was into which that intended curse was turned, v. 1. 9. II. How Balaak dismissed Balaam from his service thereupon, v. 10. 13. III. The prediction that he left behind him concerning Israel, and some of the neighbouring nations, v. 14. 25.

1. AND when Balaam saw that it pleased the Lord to bless Israel, he went not, as at other times, to seek for enchantments, but he set his face toward the wilderness. 2. And Balaam lifted up his eyes, and he saw Israel abiding in his tents according to their tribes; and the spirit of God came upon him. 3. And he took up his parable, and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes are open hath said; 4. He hath said, which heard the words of God, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open: 5. How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob, and thy tabernacles, O Israel! As the valleys are they spread forth, as gardens by the river's side, as the trees of lign-aloes which the Lord hath planted, and as cedar-trees beside the waters. 7. He shall pour the water out of his buckets, and his seed shall be in many waters, and his king shall be higher than Agag, and his kingdom shall be exalted. 8. God brought him forth out of Egypt; he hath as it were the strength of a unicorn: he shall eat up the nations his enemies, and shall break their bones, and pierce them through with his arrows. 9. He couched, he lay down as a lion, and as a great lion: who shall stir him up? Blessed is he that blesseth thee and cursed is he that curseth thee.

The blessing itself, which Balaam here pronounces upon Israel, is much the same with the two we had in the foregoing chapter; but the introduction in this chapter is more proper. 1. The method of proceeding here varies much in several instances. 1. Balaam laid aside the enchantments which he had hitherto depended on; used no spells, or charms, or magic arts, finding they did him no service; it was to no purpose to deal with the Devil for a curse, when it was plain that God was determined immovably to bless, v. 1. Sooner or later, God will conﬁne men of their folly, in seeking after by no vanities which cannot proﬁt. 2. To what purpose should he seek for enchantments? He knew that God was out of the reach of them. 2. He did not now retire into a solitary place, as before, but set his face directly toward the wilderness where Israel lay encamped; and since there is no remedy but they must be blessed, he will design nothing else, but will submit by compulsion. 3. Now the Spirit of God came upon him, namely, the Spirit of the Almighty, as upon Saul to prevent from taking David, 1 Sam. 19. 23. He spoke not his own sense, but the language of the Spirit that came upon him. 4. He used a different preface now from what he had used before, (v. 3, 4.) much like that of David's, (2 Sam. 23. 1. 2.) yet savouring very much (as some think) of pride and vain-glory, taking all the praise of this prophecy to himself, and magnifying himself as one of the cabinet-council of heaven. Two things he boasts of; (1.) The favour God did him in making known himself to him. He heard the words of God, and saw the vision of the Almighty; God himself had met him, and spoken to him, (ch. 23. 16.) and this puffs him up. Paul speaks with humility of his visions and revelations, (2 Cor. 12. 1.) but Balaam speaks of them with pride. (2.) His own power to receive and bear those revelations. He fell into a trance indeed, as other prophets did, but he had his eyes open. This he mentions twice; but the words in the original are not the same. The man whose eyes were shut, some think it may be read so, (v. 3.) but now having his eyes open, v. 4. When he had attempted to curse Israel, he owns himself in a mistake, but now he began to see his error; and yet still he remained blinded by covetousness and ambition, those foolish and hurtful lusts. Note, [1.] Those that oppose God and his people, will sooner or later be made to see themselves wretchedly deceived. [2.] Many have their eyes open that have not their hearts open; are enlightened, but not sanctiﬁed; and that knowledge which puffes men up with pride, will but serve to light them to hell, whither many go with their eyes open.

II. Yet the blessing is for substance the same with those before. Several things he annexes in Israel. 1. Their beauty, (v. 3.) How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob! Though they dwelt not in stately palaces, but in coarse and homely tents, and those, no doubt, sadly weather-beaten, yet Balaam sees a beauty in those tents, because of their admirable order, according to their tribes, v. 2. Nothing recommends religion more to the good opinion of those that look upon it at a distance, than the unity and harmony of its professors. TheTABERNACLE22 The tabernacle, and what people of the great reputation they should gain among their neighbours, are compared (v. 6.) to the beauty and sweetness of fruitful valleys, and ﬁne gardens, ﬂourishing trees, and fragrant spices. Note, Those whose eyes are open, see the saints on the earth to be excellent ones, and their delight is accordingly in them. The righteous, doubtless, is more excellent than his neighbour. They are trees which the Lord has planted; that is their excellency. The branches of righteousness are the planting of the Lord. See Hos. 14. 5, 7. 2. Their fruitfulness and increase. This may be intended by those similitudes (v. 6.) of the valleys, gardens, and trees, as well as by those expressions, (v. 7.) He shall pour the water out of his buckets; that is, God shall water them with his blessing like rain from heaven, and then his seed shall be in many waters. Compare Hos. 2. 23, and speaks unto me in the ears of that tree, He share in scripture put for peoples, and multitudes, and nations. This has been fulfilled in the wonderful increase of that nation, and their vast multitude even in their dispersion. 3. Their honour and advancement. As the multitude of the people is the honour of the prince, so the magnificence of the prince is the honour of the people; Balaam therefore foretells that his king shall be higher than Agag. Agag was only the most potent monarch in those parts; Balaam knew of none more considerable than he was; he rose above the rest of his neighbours, but Balaam foretells, that Israel's chief commander, who, after Moses, was Joshua, should be more great and honourable than ever Agag was, and make a far better figure in history. Saul, their first king, triumphed over Agag; though, it is said, he came nakedly. 4. The power and wealth of Israel is insuperable. (1.) He has stood back upon what they had done, or rather, what had been done for them. God brought him forth out of Egypt; this he had spoken of before, ch. 23. 22. The wonders that attended their deliverance out of Egypt, contributed more to their honour, and the terror of their adversaries, than any thing else, Josh. 2. 10. He that brought them out of Egypt, will not fail to bring them into Canaan, for, as for Agag, his work is perfect. (2.) He looks down upon their present strength. Israel hath, as it were, the strength of a unicorn; of which creature it is said, (Job 39. 9, 10.) Will he be willing to serve thee, or abide thy crib? Canst thou bind him with his band in the furrow? "No, Israel is too powerful to be checked or held in by my curses, or thy armies." (3.) He looks forward to their future conquests. He shall eat the fatness of thy sheep, and the fatness of thy goats; he shall take his trespass Gift from the face of thee, and bid defiance to all his neighbours; for whom shall stir up a sleeping lion? It is observed of lions, (as the learned Bishop Patrick takes notice here,) that they do not retire into places of shelter to sleep, but lie down anywhere, knowing that none dares meddle with them: thus secure were Israel in Canaan, chiefly in the days of David and Solomon; and thus is the glorious hold of a lion, (Prov. 28. 1. 1.) not to assail others, but to repose themselves, because God maketh them to dwell in safety, Ps. 4. 8. 6. Their interest, and influence upon their neighbours. Their friends, and those in alliance with them, were happy, blessed is he that blesseth thee; those that do them any kindness, will certainly fare the better for it: but their enemies, and those in arms upon them, were miserable; cursed is he that curseth thee: those that do them any injury, do it at their peril; for God takes what is done to them, whether good or evil, as done to himself. Thus he confirms the blessing of Abraham, (Gen. 12. 3.) and speaks as if therefore he did at this time bless Israel, and not curse them, because he desired to share in the blessing of Israel's friends, and dreaded the curse on Israel's enemies.

10. And Balaam's anger was kindled against Balaam, and he smote his hands together; and Balaam said unto Balaam, I called thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast altogether blessed them these three times. 11. Therefore now flee thou to thy place: I thought to promote thee unto great honour; but, lo, the Lord hath kept thee back from honour. 12. And Balaam said unto Balak, Spake I not also to thy messengers which thou sentest unto me, saying, 13. If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the commandment of the Lord, to do either good or bad of mine own mind; but what the Lord saith, that will I speak? 14. And now, behold, I go unto my people: come therefore, and I will advertise thee what this people shall do to thy people in the latter days.

We have here the conclusion of this vain attempt to curse Israel, and the total abandonment of it. 1. Balaam made the worst of it. He broke out into a rage against Balaam; (v. 10.) expressed, both in words and gesture, the highest degree of vexation at the disappointment; he smote his hands together for indignation, to see all his measures thus broken, and his project baffled. He charged Balaam with putting upon him the basest affront and cheat imaginable; I called thee to curse mine enemies, and thou hast showed thyself in league with them, and in their interests, for thou hast blessed them these three times; though, by appointing the altars to be built, and sacrifice to be renewed, thou madest me believe thou wouldest certainly curse them." Hereupon he forbade him his presence, expelled him his country; upbraided him with the pretences he had designed to have brought upon him, but now would not; (v. 11.) "The Lord hath kept thee back from honour. See what thou gettest by pleasing the Lord, instead of pleasing me! thou hast hindered thy preferment by it." Thus they who are any way losers by their duty, are commonly upbraided with it, as fools, for preferring that before their interest in the world. Whereas, if Balaam had been voluntary and sincere in his adherence to the word of the Lord, though he lost the honour Balaam designed him by it, God would have made that loss up to him abundantly to his advantage. 2. Balaam made the best of it. (1.) He endeavours to excuse the disappointment. And a very good excuse he has for it, that God restrained him from saying what he would have said, and constrained him to say what he would not; and that this was the thing Balak might not to be displeased at, not only because he could not help it, but because he had told Balak before what he must depend upon, v. 12, 13. Balak could not say that he had cheated him, since he had given him fair notice of the check he found himself under. (2.) He endeavours to atone for it, v. 14. Though he cannot do what Balak would have him do; yet, [1.] He will gratify his curiosity with some pre-visions concerning the nations about him. It is natural to us to be pleased with prophecy, and with this he hopes to pacify the angry prince. [2.] He will satisfy him with an assurance that whatever this formidable people should do to his people, it should not be till the latter days; so that he, for his part, needed not to fear any mischief or molestation from them; the vision was for a great while to come, but in his days there should be peace. [3.] He will put him into a method of doing Israel a mischief without the ceremonies of enchantment and excration. This seems to be applied in that word, I will advertise thee; for it properly signifies, I will counsel thee: what the counsel was, is not set down here, because it was given privately, but we are told afterwards what it was, ch. 31. 16. He counselled him to entice the Israelites to idolatry, Rev. 2. 14. Since he could not have leave from God to curse them, he puts him in a way of getting help from the Devil to tempt them. See note on Jer. 27. 10. If I cannot move Heaven, I will solicit Hell.

15. And he took up his parable, and said, Balaam the son of Beor hath said, and the man whose eyes are open hath said; 16. He hath said, which heard the words of God, and knew the knowledge of the Most High, which saw the vision of the Almighty, falling into a trance, but having his eyes open: 17. I shall see him, but not now; I shall behold him, but not nigh: there shall come a Star out of Jacob, and a Sceptre shall rise out of Israel, and shall smite the corners of Moab, and destroy all the children of Sheth. 18. And Edom shall be a possession, Seir also shall be a possession for his enemies; and Israel shall do valiantly.

19. Out of Jacob shall come he that shall have dominion, and shall destroy him that remaineth of the city. 20. And when he looked on Amalek, he took up his parable, and said, Amalek was the first of the nations; but his latter end shall be, that he perish for ever. 21. And he looked on the Kenites, and took up his parable, and said, Strong is thy dwelling-place, and thou puttest thy nest in a rock. 22. Nevertheless the Kenite shall be wasted, until Asshur shall carry thee away captive. 23. And he took up his parable, and said, Alas, who shall live when God doeth this! 24. And ships shall come from the coast of Chittim, and shall afflict Asshur, and shall afflict Eber, and he also shall perish for ever. 25. And Balaam rose up, and went and returned to his place: and Balak also went his way.

The office of prophets was both to bless and to prophesy in the name of the Lord. Balaam, as a prophet, per force had blessed Israel; here he foretells future events.

1. His preface is much the same with that, v. 3. 4. He personates a true prophet admirably well, God permitting and directing him to do so, because whatever he was, the prophecy itself was a true prophecy. He boasts, 1. That his eyes are open, (v. 15.) for the prophets were in old time called Seers, (1 Sam. 9. 9.) because they must speak what they have seen, and therefore before they opened their lips, it was necessary that they should have their eyes open. 2. That he had heard the words of God, which many do that do not heed them, or hear God in them. 3. That he knew the knowledge of the Most High; this is added here. A man may be full of the knowledge of God, and yet utterly destitute of the grace of God; may receive the truth in the light of it, and yet be strange to the love of it. 4. That he saw the vision of the Almighty, but not so as to be changed into the same image. He calls God the Most High, and the Almighty; no man could speak more honourably of him, nor seem to put a greater value upon his acquaintance with him, and yet he had no true fear of him, love to him, or faith in him; so far may a man go toward heaven, and yet be as much a stranger to the love of God as to the knowledge of him.

II. Here is his prophecy concerning him that should be the crown and glory of his people Israel; who is, 1. David in the type, who not now, not quickly, but in process of time, should smite the corners of Moab, (v. 17.) and take possession of Edom, and mount Seir; and under whom the forces of Israel should do valiantly, v. 18. This was fulfilled when he smote Moab, and measured them with a line, so that the Moabites became David's servants, 2 Sam. 8. 2. And at the same time the Edomites likewise were brought into obedience to Israel, v. 14. But, 2. Our Lord Jesus, the promised Messiah, is chiefly pointed at in the antitype, and of him it is an illustrious prophecy; it was the will of God that notice should thus be given of his coming, a great while before, not only to the people of the Jews, but to other parts of the earth also. His gospel and kingdom were to extend themselves beyond the borders of the land of Israel. It is here foretold, (1.) That his coming should not be yet of a great while: "I shall see him, but not now; I do see him in vision, but at a very great distance, through the interposing space of 1500 years at least." Or, understand it thus: Balaam, a wicked man, shall see Christ, but shall not see him nigh; nor see him himself, but shall see him as a servant who saw Abraham, and saw him for himself, Job 19. 25. 27. When he comes in the clouds, every eye shall see him, but many will see him (as the rick man in hell saw Abraham) after off. (2.) That he shall come out of Jacob, and Israel, as a Star and a Sceptre; the former denoting his glory and lustre, as the bright and morning Star; the latter his power and authority: it is, he shall be a Star of wonder, a wonder prophecied in this prophecy of Balaam (one of the children of the East) concerning a star that should arise out of Jacob, as the indication of a sceptre arising in Israel, being preserved by a tradition of that country, gave occasion to the wise men, who were of the East too, upon the sight of an unusual star over the land of Judea, to inquire for him that was born King of the Jews, Matt. 2. 2. (3.) That his kingdom shall be universal, and victorious over all opposition; which was typified by David's victories over Moab and Edom. But the Messiah shall destroy, or, as some read it, shall rule over, all the children of Seth, (v. 17.) that is, all the children of men, who descend from Seth, the son of Adam; the descendants of the rest of Adam's sons being cut off by the deluge. Christ shall be King, not only of Jacob and Israel, but of all the world; so that all the children of Seth shall be either governed by his golden sceptre, or dashed in pieces by his iron rod. He shall set up a universal rule, authority, and power, of his own, and shall put down all opposing rule, 1 Cor. 15. 24. He shall unswall all the children of Seth; so some read it. He shall take down all their defences and carnal confidences, so as that they shall stand in the midst of his government, examined by his judgments. (4.) That his Israel shall do valiantly; the subjects of Christ, animated by his might, shall maintain a spiritual war with the powers of darkness, and be more than conquerors. The people that do know their God, shall be strong and do exploit, Dan. 2. 32.
III. Here is his prophecy concerning the Amalekites and Kenites, part of whose country, it is probable, he had now taken. The Amalekites were next to the Canaanites of the nations, (v. 20.) therefore Agag was spoken of, (v. 7.) as an eminent prince, and they were the first that engaged Israel when they came out of Egypt, but the time shall come when that nation, as great as it looks now, will be totally ruined and root out. His latter end shall be, that he perish for ever. Here Balaam confirms that doom of Amalek which Moses had read, (Exod. 17. 14, 15.) where God said would be perpetual war with Amalek. Note, Those whom God is at war with, will certainly perish for ever, for when God judges, he will overcome. 2. The Kenites were now the scourge of the nations; their situation was such, as that nature was their engineer, and had strongly fortified them; "Thou livest in thy nest (like the eagle) in a rock, v. 21. Thou think'st thyself safe, and yet the Kenite shall be wasted, (v. 22.) and gradually brought to decay, till they be carried away captive by the Assyrians," which was done at the captivity of the ten tribes. Note, Bodies politic, like natural bodies, though of the strongest constitutions, will gradually decay, and come to ruin at last; even a nest in a rock will be no perpetual security.

IV. Here is a prophecy that looks as far forward as the Greeks and Romans, for their's is supposed to be meant by the coast of Chittim, (v. 24.) The introduction of this parable; this article of his prophecy is very observable, (v. 23.) Alas, who shall live when God doeth this! Here he acknowledges all the revolutions of states and kingdoms to be the Lord's doing, God doeth this; whoever are the instruments, he is the Supreme Director; but he speaks mournfully concerning them, and has a very melancholy prospects of these events; Who shall live? Either, (1.) Those events: so distant, and so far off, that it is hard to say who shall live till they come: but whoever shall live to see them, there will be amazing turns. Or, (2.) They will be so dismal, and make such desolations, that scarcely any will escape, or be left alive; who shall live, when death rides in triumph? Rev. 6. 8. They that live then, will be as brands plucked out of the fire, and will have their lives given them as a prey. God will have his vengeance of time and place, and his prophecy itself is observable. Both Greece and Italy lie much on the same sea, and therefore their armies were sent forth mostly in ships. Now concerning this, observe, I. That Balak, by the advice of Balaam, cast this stumbling-block before the children of Israel, Rev. 2. 14. Note, Those are our worst enemies, that draw us to sin, for that is the greatest mischief any man can do us. If Balak had drawn cut his armed men against them to fight them, Israel had bravely resisted, and no doubt had been more than conquerors; but now that he sends his beautiful women among them, and invites them to his idolatrous feasts, the Israelites basely yield, and are shamefully overcome: they are smitten with his flatterers, that could not be smitten with the sword. Note, We are more endearrowed by the charmers of a smiling world, than by the terrors of a frowning world. 2. That the daughters of Moab were their tempters and conquerors. Ever since Eve was first in the transgression, the fairer sex, though the weaker, has been a snare to many; yea strong men have been wounded and slain by the lips of the strange woman; (Prov. 7. 26.) witness Solomon, whose wives were snares and nets to him, Eccl. 7. 26. 3. That whoredom and idolatry went together. They first defied and despised their own children, by consenting lewdness with the women, and then were easily drawn, in complaisance to them, and in contempt of the God of Israel, to bow down to their idols. And they were more likely to do so, if, as it is commonly supposed, and seems probable by the joining of them together, the uncleanness committed was a part of the worship and service performed to Baal-peor. Those that have broken the fences of modesty, will be held by the hands and feet; and those that have dishonoured themselves by fleshly lusts, will not scruple to dishonour God by idolatrous worship; for this they are justly given up yet further to vile affections. 4. That by eating of the idolatrous sacrifices, they joined themselves to Baal.
It was a great aggravation of the sin, that Israel abode in Shittim, where they had the land of Canaan in view, and were just ready to enter and take possession of it. It was the height of treachery and ingratitude to be false to their God, whom they had found so faithful to them, and to eat of idol-sacrifices, when they were ready to be feasted so richly on God’s favours.

II. God’s just displeasure against them for this sin. Israel’s whoredoms did that which all Balaam’s enchantments could not do, they set God against them; now he was turned to be their Enemy, and fought against them. So many of the people, nay so many of the princes, were guilty, that the sin became national, and for it God was wroth with the whole congregation.

1. A plague immediately broke out, for we read of the staying of it, (v. 8.) and of the number that died of it, (v. 9.) but no mention of the beginning of it, which therefore must be implied in these words, (v. 2.) The anger of the Lord was kindled against Israel. It is said expressly, (Ps. 106. 29.) The plague brake in. Note, Epidemical diseases are the fruits of God’s anger, and the just punishments of epidemical sins; one infection follows the other. The plague, no doubt, fastened on those that were most guilty, who were soon made to pay dear for their forbidden pleasures; and though now God does not always plague such sinners as he did here, yet that word of God will be fulfilled, If any man defile the temple of God, him shall God destroy, 1 Cor. 3. 17.

2. The ring-leaders are ordered to be put to death by the hand of public justice, which will be the only way to stay the plague, v. 4. Take the heads of the people, that is, of that part of the people, that went out of the camp of Israel into the country of Moab, to join in their idolatries; Take them and stone them before the sun, they were criminals against God’s justice, and for a terror to the rest of the people. The judges must first order them to be slain with the sword, (v. 5.) and their dead bodies must be hung up, that the stupid Israelites, seeing their leaders and princes so severely punished for their whoredom and idolatry, without any regard to their quality, might be possessed with a sense of the evil of the sin and the terror of God’s wrath against them. Ring-leaders in sin ought to be made examples of justice.

6. And, behold, one of the children of Israel came, and brought unto his brethren a Midianitish woman, in the sight of Moses, and in the sight of all the congregation of the children of Israel, who were weeping before the door of the tabernacle of the congregation. 7. And when Phinehas the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, saw it, he rose up from among the congregation, and took a javelin in his hand; 8. And he went after the man of Israel into the tent, and thrust both of them through, the man of Israel, and the woman through her belly. So the plague was stayed from the children of Israel. 9. And those that died in the plague were twenty and four thousand. 10. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 11. Phinehas the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, hath turned my wrath away from the children of Israel, (while he was zealous for my sake among them,) that I consumed not the children of Israel in my jealousy. 12. Wherefore, say, Behold, I give unto him my covenant of peace: 13. And he shall have it, and his seed after him, even the covenant of an everlasting priesthood; because he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Israel. 14. Now the name of the Israelite that was slain, even that was slain with the Midianitish woman, was Zimri the son of Salu, a prince of a chief house among the Simeonites. 15. And the name of the Midianitish woman that was slain was Cozbi, the daughter of Zur, he was head over a people, and of a chief house in Midian.

Here is a remarkable contest between wickedness and righteousness, which shall be most bold and resolute; and righteousness carries the day, as no doubt it will at last.

I. Never was vice more daring than it was in Zimri; a prince of a chief house in the tribe of Simeon. Such a degree of impudence in wickedness was he arrived at, that he publicly appeared leading a Midianitish harlot (and a harlot of quality too like himself, a daughter of the house in Midian) in the sight of Moses, and all the good people of Israel. He did not think it enough to go out with his harlot to worship the gods of Moab, but when he had done that, he brought her with him to dishonour the God of Israel. He not only owned her publicly, as his friend, and higher in his favour than any of the daughters of Israel, but openly went with her into the tent, v. 8. The word signifies she was such a hath, or place of retirement, as was designed and fitted up for lewdness. Thus he declared his sin as Sodom, and was so far from blushing for it, that he rather prided himself in it, and gloried in his shame. All the circumstances concurred to make it exceeding sinful, exceeding shameful.

1. It was an affront to the justice of the nation, and bid defiance to that: the judges were ordered to put the criminals to death, but he thought himself too great for them to meddle with, and, in effect, bid them touch him if they durst. He had certainly cast off all fear of God, who stood in no awe of the powers which he had ordained to be a terror to evil doers. 2. It was an affront to the religion of the nation, and put a contempt upon that. Moses, and the main body of the congregation, who kept their integrity, were weeping at the door of the tabernacle lamenting the sin committed, and predicting the plague began; they were sanctifying a feast in a solemn assembly, weeping between the fire of the altar and the altar, to turn away the wrath of God from the congregation; then comes Zimri among them, with his harlot in his hand, to banter them, and, in effect, to tell them that he was resolved to fill the measure of sin, as fast as they emptied it.

II. Never was virtue more daring than it was in Phinehas. Being aware of the impiety of Zimri, which, it is probable, all the congregation took notice of, in a holy indignation at the offenders, he rose up from his prayers, takes his sword or half pike, follows those impudent sinners into their tent, and stabs them both, v. 7, 8. It is not at all difficult to justify Phinehas in what he did; for being now clear that the high priesthood, no doubt, he was one of those judges of Israel, whom Moses had ordered, by the divine appointment, to slay all those whom they knew to have joined themselves to Baal-peor; so that this gives no countenance at all to private persons, under pretence of zeal against sin, to put offenders to death, who ought to be prosecuted by the course of law. The civil magistrate is the avenger to execute wrath upon him that doeth evil, and no private person may take his work out of his hand.

Two ways God testified his acceptance of the pious zeal of Phinehas. 1. He immediately put a stop to the plague, v. 8. Their weeping and prayer prevailed not, till this piece of necessary justice was done. If magistrates do not take care to punish sin, God will; but their justice will be the last profession of his judgment, as in the case of Achan, Josh. 7. 13. 2. He put an honour upon Phinehas; though he did no more than was his duty to do as a judge, yet because he did it with extraordinary zeal against sin, and for the honour of God and Israel, and did it when the other judges, out of respect to Zimri's character, as a prince, were afraid, and declined doing it; therefore God showed himself particular to him, and gave him a blessing in him, Zn. 11. 29, 30. There is nothing lost by venturing for God. If Zimri's relations bore him agrudge for it, and his friends might censure him as indiscreet in this violent and hasty execution, what needed he care, while God accepted him? In a good thing we should be zealously affected. (1.) Phinehas, upon this occasion, though a young man, is pronounced his country's patriot and best friend, v. 11. He has turned away my wrath from the children of Israel. So much does God delight in showing mercy, that he is well pleased with those that are instrumental in turning away his wrath; this is the best service we can do to our people; and we may contribute something towards it by our prayers, and by our endeavours in our places to bring the wickedness of the wicked to an end. (2.) The priesthood is entitled by covenant upon his being a Levite, a Levite's son, and was confirmed to him, and, which added much to the comfort and honour of it, it was made the recompense of his pious zeal, v. 12, 13. It is here called an everlasting priesthood, because it should continue to the period of the Old Testament dispensation, and should then have its perfection and perpetuity in the unchangeable priesthood of Christ, who is consecrated for ever more. By the covenant of grace, in general, a promise of long life and prosperity, and all good; it seems rather to be meant particularly of the covenant of priesthood, for that is called the covenant of life and peace, (Mal. 2. 5.) and was made for the preserving of peace between God and his people. Observe how the reward answered the service; by executing justice he had made an atonement for the children of Israel, (v. 12.) and therefore he and his shall from henceforward be employed in making atonement by sacrifice. He was zealous for his God, and therefore he shall have the covenant of an everlasting priesthood. Note, It is requisite that ministers should be not only for God, but, zealous for God. It is required of them that they do more than others for the support and advancement of the interests of God's kingdom among men.

And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 17. Vex the Midianites, and smite them; for they vex with their wiles, wherewith they have beguiled you, in the matter of Peor, and in the matter of Cozbi, the daughter of a prince of Midian, their sister, which was slain in the day of the plague, for Peor's sake.

God had punished the Israelites for their sin with a plague, as a Father he corrected his own children with a rod; but we read not that any of the Midianites died of the plague, God took another course with them, and punished them with the sword of an enemy, not with the rod of a father. 1. Moses, though the meekest man, and far from a spirit of revenge, is bid to vex the Midianites, and smite them, v. 17. Note, We must set ourselves against the vengeance of evil, which we cannot return to God, though it be a right eye, or a right hand, that thus offends us, Mat. 5. 39, 40. This is that holy indignation and revenge which God sorely worketh, 2 Cor. 7. 11. 2. The reason given for the meditating of this revenge, is, because they vex you with their wiles, v. 18. Note, Whatever draws us to sin, should be a vexation to us, as a thorn in the flesh. The mischief which the Midianites did to Israel seemed to be so short a period as most must be remembered and punished with as much severity, as that which the Amalekites did in fighting with them when they came out of Egypt, Exod. 17. 14. God will certainly reckon with those that do the Devil's work in tempting men to sin, especially those that make Israel to sin. See further orders given in this matter, ch. 31. 2.

CHAP. XXVI.

This book is called Numbers, from the numberings of the children of Israel; which it gives an account of. Once they were numbered at Mount Sinai, in the first year after they came out of Egypt, which we had an account of, ch. 1. and 2. And now a second time the number is remembered in the plains of Moab, just before they entered Canaan, and that we have an account of in this chapter. I. Orders are given for the doing of it, v. 1. 4. II. A register of the families and numbers of each tribe, (v. 5. 60.) and the sum total, v. 51. III. Direction given to divide the land among them, v. 52. 56. IV. The families and numbers of the Levites by themselves, v. 57. 62. V. Notice is taken of the fulfilling of the threatenings of punishment, but that all those that were first numbered, (v. 63. 65.) and to this there seems to have been a special regard in the taking and keeping of this account.

And it came to pass, after the plague, that the Lord spake unto Moses, and unto Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest, saying, 2. Take the sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, from twenty years old and upward, throughout their father's house, all that are able to go to war in Israel. 3. And Moses and Eleazar the priest spake with them in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho, saying, 4. Take the sum of the people, from twenty years old and upward; as the Lord commanded Moses, and the children of Israel, which went forth out of the land of Egypt.

Observe here, 1. That Moses did not number the people, but when God commanded him. Dav. in his time did it without a command, and paid dear for it. God was Israel's King, and he would not have this act of authority done, but by his express orders. Moses, perhaps, by this time, had heard of the blessing, with which Balaam was constrained, sore against his will, to bless Israel, and particularly the notice he took of their numbers; and is sufficiently pleased, with that general testimony and to this instance of their strength and honour by an adversary, though he knows not their numbers exactly, till God now appoints him to take the sum of them 2. Eleazar is joined in commission with him, as Aaron had been before, by which God honoured Eleazar before the elders of his people, and confirmed his succession. 3. It was previously after the plague, that this account was ordered to be taken; to show, that though God had a justice contended with them by that sweeping presilence, yet he had not made a full end, nor would he utterly cast them off. God's Israel shall not be ruined, though it be severely rebuked. 4.
They were now to go by the same rule that they had gone by in the former numbering, counting those only that were able to go forth to war, for that was the service now before them.

5. Reuben, the eldest son of Israel: the children of Reuben; Hanoch, of whom cometh the family of the Hanochites: of Pallu, the family of the Palluites: 6. Of Hezron, the family of the Hezronites: of Carmi, the family of the Carmites. 7. These are the families of the Reubenites: and they that were numbered of them were forty and three thousand and seven hundred and thirty. 8. And the sons of Pallu; Eliab. 9. And the sons of Eliab; Nemuel, and Dathan, and Abiram. This is that Dathan and Abiram which were famous in the congregation, who strove against Moses and against Aaron in the company of Korah, when they strove against the Lord: 10. And the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up together with Korah, when that company died, what time the fire devoured two hundred and fifty men: and they became a sign. 11. Notwithstanding, the children of Korah died not. 12. The sons of Simeon after their families: of Nemuel, the family of the Nemuelites: of Jamin, the family of the Jammite: of Gaddah, the family of the Gaddites: 13. Of Zerah, the family of the Zerahites: of Shaul, the family of the Shaullites: 14. These are the families of the Simeonites, twenty and two thousand and two hundred. 15. The children of Gad, after their families: of Zephon, the family of the Zephonites: of Haggi, the family of the Haggites: of Shuni, the family of the Shunnites: 16. Of Ozni, the family of the Oz nitites: of Er, the family of the Erites: 17. Of Arod, the family of the Arodites: of Zer, the family of the Zerites: 18. These are the families of the children of Gad, according to those that were numbered of them, forty thousand and five hundred. 19. The sons of Judah were Er and Onan: and Er and Onan died in the land of Canaan. 20. And the sons of Judah after their families were: of Shelah, the family of the She lhanites: of Pharez, the family of the Pha rezites: of Zerah the family of the Zarhites:

21. And the sons of Pharez were: of Hez ron, the family of the Hezronites: of Hamul, the family of the Hamulites. 22. These are the families of Judah according to those that were numbered of them, threescore and sixteen thousand and five hundred. 23. Of the sons of Issachar after their families: of Tola, the family of the Tolaite: of Pua, the family of the Punites: 24. Of Jashub, the family of the Jashubites: of Shimron, the family of the Shimronites. 25. These are the families of Issachar according to those that were numbered of them, (threescore and four thousand and three hundred. 26. Of the sons of Zebulun after their families: of Sered, the family of the Sardites: of Elon, the family of the Elonites: of Jahleel, the family of the Jahleelites. 27. These are the families of the Zebulunites, according to those that were numbered of them, threescore thousand and five hundred. 28. The sons of Joseph, after their families, were Manasseh and Ephraim. 29. Of the sons of Manasseh: of Machir, the family of the Machirites: and Machir begat Gilead: of Gilead came the family of the Gileadites. 30. These are the sons of Gilead: of Jeezer, the family of the Jeezerites: of Helek, the family of the Helekites: 31. And of Asriel, the family of the Asrielites: and of Shechem, the family of the Shechemites: 32. And of Shemida, the family of the Shemidites: and of Hepher the family of the Hepherites: 33. And Zelophehad the son of Hepher had no sons, but daughters: and the names of the daughters of Zelophehad were Mahlah, and Noah, Hoglah, Milcah, and Tirzah. 34. These are the families of Manasseh, and those that were numbered of them, fifty and two thousand and seven hundred. 35. These are the sons of Ephraim after their families: of Shuthelah, the family of the Shuthalites: of Becher, the family of the Bachrites: of Tahan, the family of the Tahanites. 36. And these are the sons of Shuthelah: of Eran, the family of the Eranites. 37. These are the families of the sons of Ephraim, according to those that were numbered of them, thirty and two thousand and five hundred. 38. These are the sons of Joseph after their families. 39. The sons of Benjamin after their families: of Bela, the family of the Belaites: of Asbel, the family of the Ashbelites: of Ahiram, the family of the Ahiramites: of Shupham, the family of the Shuphamites: of Hupham, the family of the Huphamites. 40. And the sons of Bela were Ard and Naaman: of Ard, the family of the Ardites: and of Naaman, the family of the Naamites: 41.
These are the sons of Benjamin, after their families: and they that were numbered of them were forty and five thousand six hundred. 42. These are the sons of Dan, after their families: of Shubham, the family of the Shuhamites. These are the families of Dan, after their families. 43. All the families of the Shuhamites, according to those that were numbered of them, were three score and four thousand and four hundred. 44. Of the children of Asher, after their families: of Jimna, the family of the Jimnites: of Jesui, the family of the Jesuites: of Beriah, the family of the Berities. 45. Of the sons of Beriah: of Heber, the family of the Heberites: of Malchiel, the family of the Malchielites. 46. And the name of the daughter of Asher was Jimna. 47. These are the families of the sons of Asher, according to those that were numbered of them, who were fifty and three thousand and four hundred. 48. Of the sons of Naphtali, after their families: of Jalmoeel, the family of the Jalmoeelites: of Gunis, the family of the Gunites. 49. Of Jezer, the family of the Jezerites: of Shillem, the family of the Shillemites. 50. These are the families of Naphtali; according to their families: and they that were numbered of them were forty and five thousand and four hundred. 51. These were the number of the children of Israel, six hundred thousand, and a thousand seven hundred and thirty. This is the register of the tribes as they were numbered in the same order that they were numbered in ch. 1.

Observe, 1. The account that is here kept of the families of each tribe; which must not be understood of such as we call families, those that live in a house together, but such as were the descendants of the several sons of the patriarchs, by whose names, in honour of them, their posterity distinguished themselves and one another. The families of the twelve tribes are thus numbered; of Dan but one, for Dan had but one son, and yet that tribe was the most numerous of all, except Judah, v. 42, 43. Its beginning was small, but its latter end was greatly increased, and was divided into three families; Ephraim into four; Issachar into four; Naphtali into four; and Reuben into four; Judah, Simeon, and Asher had five families apiece; Gad and Benjamin seven apiece; and Manasseh eight. Benjamin brought ten sons into Egypt, (Gen. 46. 21.) but three of them, it seems, either died childless, or their families were extinct, for here we find seven only of Benjamin's names preserved, and that which is the most numerous: for Providence, in the building up of families and nations, does not tie itself to probabilities. The barren hath born seven, and she that hath many children, is waxed feeble, 1 Sam. 2. 5.

2. The numbers of each tribe. And here our best entertainment will be to compare these numbers with those when they were numbered at mount Sinai. The sum total was nearly the same; they were now 1,820 fewer than they were then; yet seven of the tribes increased in number. Judah increased 1,900; Issachar, 9,900; Zebulun, 3,100; Manasseh, 20,500; Benjamin, 10,200; Dan, 1,700; Asaph, 42,250. But Ephraim was decreas ed more than to balance that increase. Reuben decreased 2,770; Simeon, 37,100; Gad, 5,150; Ephraim, 8,000; and Naphtali, 8,000. In which account we may observe, (1.) That all the three tribes that were encamped under the standard of Judah, who was the ancestor of Christ, were increased, for his church shall be edified and multiplied. (2.) That none of the tribes increased so much as that of Manasseh, which in the former account was the smallest of all the tribes, only 32,200, while here it is one of the most considerable; and his brother Ephraim, which there was numerous, is here one of the least. Jacob had crossed hands upon their heads, and had preferred Ephraim before Manasseh, which perhaps the Ephraimites had prided themselves too much in, and had trampled upon their brethren the Manassites; but when the Lord saw that Manasseh was despised, he thus multiplied him exceedingly, for it is his glory to help the weakest, and raise up them that are cast down. (3.) That none of the tribes decreased so much as Simeon did; from 59,300, it sank to 22,200; almost to but a third part of what it was. One whole family of that tribe, (namely, Othad, mentioned Exod. 6. 15.) was extinct, and the whole family of Zimri, which was not numbered in Moses's blessing, (Deut. 33.) and the lot of that tribe in Canaan was inconceivable, only a canton out of Judah's lot, Josh. 19. 9. Some conjecture that most of those 24,000 which were cut off by the plague for the iniquity of Peor, were of that tribe; for Zimri, who was a ringleader in that iniquity, was a prince of that tribe, many of which therefore were influenced by his example to follow his breaches. In the account of the tribe of Reuben, mention is made of the rebellion of Dathan and Abiram, who were of that tribe, in con federation with Korah a Levite, v. 9. 11. Though the story had been largely related but a few chapters before, yet here it comes again, as fit to be had in remembrance and thought of by posterity, whenever they looked into their pedigree, and pleased themselves with the antiquity of their families and the glory of their ancestors, that they might call themselves a seed of evil-doers. Two things are here said of them; (1.) That they had been famous in the congregation, v. 9. Probably, they were remarkable for their ingenuity, activity, and fitness for business; that Dathan and Abiram, that might have been advanced in due time under God and Moses; but their ambitious spirits put them upon striving against God and Moses, and they quarrelled with one the other, and they quarrelled with the other. And what was the issue? (2.) They that might have been famous, were made infamous; they became a sign, v. 10. They were made monuments of divine justice; God, in their ruin, showed himself glorious in holiness, and so they were set up for a warning to all others in all ages, to take heed of treading in the steps of pride and sin. Now here taken of the preservation of the children of Korah, (v. 11.) they died not, as the children of Dathan and Abiram did; doubtless, because they kept themselves pure from the infection, and would not join, no, not with their own father, in rebellion. If we partake not of the sins of sinners, we shall not partake of their plagues. These sons of Korah were afterward employed serviceable to the church, being employed by David as singers in the house of the Lord; hence many palms are said to be for the sons of Korah: and perhaps they were made to bear his name so long
And the name of Amram's wife was Jochebed, the daughter of Levi, whom her mother bare to Levi in Egypt: and she bare unto Amram, Aaron, and Moses, and Miriam their sister. 60. And unto Aaron was born Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar. 61. And Nadab and Abihu died, when they offered strange fire before the Lord. 62. And those that were numbered of them were twenty and three thousand, all males, from a month old and upward: for they were not numbered among the children of Israel, because there was no inheritance given them among the children of Israel.

Levi was God's tribe; a tribe that was to have no inheritance with the rest in the land of Canaan, and therefore was not numbered with the rest, but by itself; so it had been numbered in the beginning of this book at mount Sinai, and therefore came not under the sentence passed upon all that were then numbered, that none of them should enter Canaan, but Caleb and Joshua; for of the Levites that were not numbered with them, nor were to go forth to war, Eleazar and Ithamar, and perhaps others, who were above twenty years old then, (as appears, ch. 4. 16, 28,) entered Canaan; and yet this tribe, now at its second numbering, was increased but 1,060, and was still one of the smallest tribes. Mention is made here of the death of Nadab and Abihu for offering strange fire, as before of the sin and punishment of Korah, because these things happened to them for examples.

63. These are they that were numbered by Moses and Eleazar the priest, who numbered the children of Israel in the plains of Moab, near Jericho. 64. But among these there was not a man of them whom Moses and Aaron the priest numbered, when they numbered the children of Israel in the wilderness of Sinai: 65. For the Lord had said of them, They shall surely die in the wilderness. And there was not left a man of them, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun.

That which is observable in this conclusion of the account, is, the execution of the sentence passed upon the murmurers, (ch. 14. 29.) That not one of those who were numbered from twenty years old and upward, (and that the Levites were not, but either from a month old, or from 30 years old to 50,) should enter Canaan, except Caleb and Joshua. In the muster now made, particular directions, no doubt, were given to those of each tribe that were employed in taking the account, to compare these rolls with the former, and to observe whether there were any now left of those that were numbered at mount Sinai, and it appeared that there was not one man numbered now, that was numbered then, but Caleb and Joshua, v. 64. 65.

Herein appeared, 1. The righteousness of God, and his faithfulness to his threatening, when once the decree is gone forth. He spake in his wrath, and what he had sworn he performed. Better all those carcasses, had they been ten times as many, should fall to the ground, than the word of God. Though the rising generation was mixed with them, and many of the guilty and condemned criminals long survived the sentence, even to the last year of the forty, yet they were cut off by some means or other before this muster was made; those who had God has condemned, cannot escape, either by losing themselves in a crowd, or by the delay of execution. 2. The good news of God to this people, notwithstanding their provocations; though that murmuring race was cut off, yet God raised up another generation which was as numerous as they, that though they perished, yet the name of Israel might not be cut off, lest the inheritance of the promise should be lost for want of heirs. And though the number fell a little short of what it was at mount Sinai, yet those now numbered, had this advantage, that they were all middle-aged men, between 20 and 60, in the prime of their time for service; and during the 38 years of their wandering and wasting in the wilderness, they had an opportunity of acquainting themselves with the laws and ordinances of God, having no business, civil or military, to divert them from those sacred studies; and having Moses and Aaron to instruct them, and God's good spirit, Neh. 9. 20. 3. The truth of God, in performing his promise made to Caleb and Joshua. They were to be preserved from falling in this common ruin, and they were so. The arrows of death, though they fly in the dark, do not fly at random, even when they fly thickest, but are directed to the mark intended, and no other. All that are written among the living, have the blessing given to them, for a prey, in the most dangerous times. Thousands may fall on their right hand, and ten thousand on their left, but they shall escape.

CHAP. XXVII.

THEN came the daughters of Zelophehad, the son of Hepher, the son of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of Manasseh the son of Joseph: and these are the names of his daughters; Mahlah, Noah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Tirzah. 2. And they stood before Moses, and before Eleazar the priest, and before the princes and all the congregation, by the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, saying, 3. Our father died in the wilderness, and he was not in the company of them that gathered themselves together against the Lord in the company of Korah; but died in his own sin, and had no sons. 4. Why should the name of our father be done away from among his family, because he hath no son? Give unto us, therefore, a possession among the brethren of our father. 5. And Moses brought their case before the Lord. 6. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 7. The daughters of Zelophehad speak right: thou shalt surely give them a possession of an inheritance among their father's brethren; and thou shalt cause the inheritance of their father to pass unto them. 8. And thou shalt speak unto the children of Israel, saying, If a man die, and have no son, then ye shall cause his inheritance to pass unto his daughter. 9. And if he have no daughter, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his brethren. 10. And if he have no brethren, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his father's brethren. 11. And if his father have no brethren, then ye shall give his inheritance unto his kinsman that is next to him of his family, and he shall possess it: and it shall be unto the children of Israel a statute of judgment; as the Lord commanded Moses.

Mention is made of the case of these daughters of Zelophehad, in the chapter before, v. 33. It should seem, by the particular notice taken of it, that it was a singular case, and that the like did not at this time occur in all Israel, that the head of a family had no sons but daughters only; their case is again debated, (ch. 36.) upon another article of it; and according to the judgments given in that case, we find them put in possession, Josh. 17. 3, 4. One would suppose that the assembly was as much concerned in the character and lot of these as was added weight to their case, and made it to be so often taken notice of.

Here is, 1. Their case stated by themselves, and their petition upon it presented to the highest court of judicature, which consisted of Moses as king, the princes as lords, and the congregation, or elders of the people, who were chosen their representatives, and sent to the Lord, v. 1. This assembly set near the door of the tabernacle, that in difficult cases they might consult the oracle. To them these young ladies made their application; for it is the duty of these magistrates to defend the fatherless, Ps. 82. 3. We find not that they had any advocate to speak for them, but they managed their own case ingeniously enough; which they could do the better, because it was plain and honest, and spoke for itself.

Now observe, (1.) What it is they petition for; That they might have a possession in the land of Canaan, among the brethren of their father, v. 4. What God had said to Moses, (ch. 26. 53.) he had faithfully made known to the people, that the land of Canaan was to be divided among those that were now numbered; these daughters knew that they were not numbered, and therefore by this rule they must expect no inheritance; and the family of the father must be looked upon as extinct, and written childless, though he had all these daughters: this they thought hard, and therefore prayed to be admitted heirs to their father, and to have an inheritance in his right. If they had had a brother, they would not have applied to Moses (as one did to Christ, Luke 12. 13.) for an order to inherit with him. But, having no brother, they beg for possession. Herein, I. The defense. II. The answer. A strong faith in the power and promise of God, concerning the giving of the land of Canaan to Israel. Though it was yet unconquered, untouched, and in the full possession of the natives, yet they petition for their share in it, as if it were all their own already. See Ps. 60. 6, 7. God has spoken in his holiness, and then Gilead is mine, Manasseh is mine. [2.] An earnest of the grace of God, in placing them among the people, and taking possession of the land, of the promise, which was a type of heaven; and if they had, as some think, an eye to that, and by this claim laid hold on eternal life, they were five wise virgins indeed; and their example should quicken us with all possible diligence to make sure of our title to the heavenly inheritance, in the disposal of which, by the covenant of grace, no difference is made between male and female, Gal. 3. 28. [5.] A true respect and honour for their father, whose name was dear and precious to them now that he was gone, and they were therefore solicitous that it should not be done away from among his family. There is a debt which children owe to the memory of their parents, required by the fifth commandment; Honour thy father and thy mother. (2.) What their plea is; That their father allowed the undertaking, which might be thought to have corrupted his blood, and forfeited his estate, but he died in his own sin, (v. 3.) not engaged in any mutiny or rebellion against Moses, particularly not in that of Korah and his company, nor in any way concerned in the sins of others, but chargeable only with the common iniquities of mankind, for which, to his own Master; he was to stand or fall, laid not his case before a lawyer or a court of justice, but before God and the princes. He was never convicted of any thing that might be a bar to his children's claim. It is a comfort to parents, when they come to die, if, though they smart themselves for their own sin, yet they are not conscious to themselves of any of those iniquities which God visits upon the children. 3. Their case determined by the divine oracle. (1.) He condescends to give judgment himself, because, though their pretensions seemed just and reasonable, yet his express orders were to divide the land among those that were numbered, which were the males only; he therefore brings their case before the Lord, and waits for his decision, (v. 5.) and God himself gives judgment upon it. He takes cognizance of the affairs, not only of nations, but of private families, and orders them in judgment, according to the counsel of his own will. (13.) The petition is granted; (v. 7.) They speak right, give them a possession. Those that seek an inheritance in the land of promise, shall have what they seek for, and other things shall be added to them. Those are claims which God will countenance and crown. (2.) The point is settled for all future occasions. Those daughters of Zelophehad consulted, not only their own comfort, and the credit of their family, but the honour and happiness of their sex likewise; for on this particular occasion a general law was made, that in case a man had no son, his estate should go to his daughters, v. 8. Not to the eldest, as the eldest son, but to them all in copartnership, share and share alike. Those that in such a case deprive their daughters of their right, purely to keep up the name of their family, unless a valuable consideration be allowed them, take the entail of their lands surer than the entail of a blessing with them. Further directions are given for the disposal of inheritances, v. 9. 11. That if a man have no issue at all, his estate shall go to his brethren; if no brethren, then to his father's brethren; and if there be no such, then to his next kinsman; and on this the rules of our law exactly agree: and though the Jewish doctors here have it understood, that if a man have no children, his estate shall go to his father, if living, before his brethren, yet there is nothing of that in the law, and our common law has an express rule against it; That an estate cannot ascend lineally; so that if a person purchase lands in fee-simple, and die without issue in the life-time of his father, his father cannot be his heir. See how God makes heirs, and in his disposal we must acquiesce. 12. And the Lord said unto Moses, Get thee up into this mount Abarim, and see the land which I have given unto the children of Israel. 13. And when thou hast seen it thou also shalt be gathered unto thy people, as Aaron thy brother was gathered. 14. For ye rebelled against my commandment in the desert of Zin, in the strife of the congregation, to sanctify me at the water before their eyes: that is the water of Meribah in Kadesh, in the wilderness of Zin. 15. And Moses spake unto the Lord, saying, 16. Let the Lord, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set a man over the congregation, 17. Which may go out before them, and which may go in before them, and which may lead them out, and which may bring them in; that the congregation of the Lord be not as sheep which have no shepherd. 18. And the Lord said unto Moses, Take thee Joshua the son of Nun, a man in whom is the spirit, and lay thine hand upon him; 19. And set him before the Lord, a faithful servant, yet once he rebelled against God's commandment, and failed in his duty; and though a very honourable servant, and highly favoured, yet he shall hear of his miscarriage, and all the world shall hear of it too, again and again; for God will not allow any sin committed in those that are nearest and dearest to him. Those that are in reputation for wisdom and honour, have need to be constantly careful of their words and ways, lest at any time they say or do that which may be a diminution either to their comfort, or to their credit, or both, a great while after. 2. He tells Moses of his death; his death was the punishment of his sin, and yet notice is given of him in such a manner as might best serve to sweeten and mollify the sentence, and reconcile him to it. (1.) Moses must die, but he shall first have the satisfaction of seeing the land of promise, v. 12. God did not intend with this sight of Canaan to tantarize him, or upbraid him with his folly in doing that which cut him short of it, nor had it any impression of that kind upon him, but God appointed it, and Moses accepted it as a favour; his sight (we have reason to think) being wonderfully strengthened and enlarged to take such a full and distinct view of it as did abundantly gratify his innocent curiosity. This sight of Canaan signified his believing prospect of the better country, that is, the heavenly, which is very comfortable to dying saints. (2.) Moses must die, but death does not cut him off, it only gathers him to his people, brings him to rest with the holy patriarchs that were gone before him; Abraham, and Isaac, and Jacob, were his people, the people of his choice and love, and to them death gathered him. (3.) Moses must die, but only as Aaron died before him, v. 13. And Moses had seen how easily and cheerfully Aaron had put off the priesthood first, and then the body: let not Moses therefore be afraid of dying, it was but to be gathered to his people, as Aaron was gathered. Thus the Lord showed his patience, and would be improved by us. [1.] As an encouragement to us to think often of dying; we are not better than our fathers or brethren; if they are gone, we are going; if they are gathered already, we must be gathered very shortly. [2.] As an encouragement to us to think of death without terror, and even to please ourselves with the thoughts of it; it is but to die as such and such died, if we live as they lived; and the end that we desire, they finished their course with joy; why then should we fear any evil in that melancholy valley?
Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation: and give him a charge in their sight. 20. And thou shalt put some of thine honour upon him, that all the congregation of the children of Israel may be obedient. 21. And he shall stand before Eleazar the priest, who shall ask counsel for him, after the judgment of Urim before the Lord: at his word shall they go out, and at his word they shall come in, both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even all the congregation. 22. And Moses did as the Lord commanded him: and he took Joshua, and set him before Eleazar the priest, and before all the congregation. 23. And he laid his hands upon him, and gave him a charge, as the Lord commanded him by the hand of Moses.

Here, 1. Moses prays for a successor. When God had told him that he must not pass over this people, he earnestly solicited for a representative for himself, (Deut. 3. 24. 25.) yet when that could not be obtained, he begged earnestly that the work of God might be carried on, though he might not have the honour of finishing it. Evident spirits do not love their successors, but Moses was not one of those. We should concern ourselves, both in our prayers and in endeavours for the rising generation, that religion may flourish, and the interest of God's kingdom may not be lost and abandoned, when we are in graves.

In this prayer Moses expresses, (1.) A tender concern for the people of Israel, that the congregation of the Lord be not as sheep which have no shepherd. Our Saviour uses this comparison in his communications for the people, when they wanted good ministers, Mat. 19. 36. Magistrates and ministers are the shepherds of a people, if those be wanting, or be not as they should be, people are apt to wander and be scattered abroad, are exposed to enemies, in danger of wanting food, and of hurting one another, as sheep having no shepherd. (2.) A believing dependence upon God, as the God of the spirits of all flesh. He is both the Former and the Searcher of spirits, and therefore can either find men fit, or make them fit, to serve his purposes for the good of his church. He prays to God, not to send an angel, but to set a man over the congregation, that is, to nominate and appoint one whom he would qualify and own, as ruler of his people Israel. Before God gave this blessing to Israel, he stirred up Moses to pray for it: thus Christ, before he sent forth his apostles, called to those about him, to pray the Lord of the harvest, that he would send forth labourers into his harvest, Mat. 9. 38. And this prayer of Moses is answered. In answer to his prayer, he appoints a successor, even Joshua, who had long since signalized himself by his courage in fighting Amalek, his humility in ministering to Moses, and his faith and sincerity in witnessing against the report of the evil spies: this is the man whom God pitches upon to succeed Moses. A man in whom is the Spirit, the Spirit of grace; he is a good man, fearing God and hating covetousness, and acting from principle; the spirit of government; he is fit to do the work, to discharge the trusts of his place; a spirit of conduct and courage; and he had also the spirit of prophecy, for the Lord often spake unto him, Josh. 1. 1.—6. 2. 7.—10.

Now here, (1.) God directs Moses how to secure the succession to Joshua. [1.] He must ordain him; lay thine hand upon him. This was done in token of Moses' transferring the government to him, as the laying of hands on the sacrifice put the offering in the place and stead of the offerer; also in token of God's conferring the blessing of the Spirit upon him, which Moses obtained by prayer. It is said, (Deut. 34. 9.) Joshua was full of the spirit of grace and power, which Moses had before him. This rite of imposing hands we find used in the New Testament, in the setting apart of apostle-ministers, denoting a solemn designation of them to the office, and an earnest desire that God would qualify them for it, and own them in it. It is the offering of themselves to Christ and his church for living sacrifices. [2.] He must present him to Eleazar the priest and the people; set him before them, that they might know him to be the successor, and he for it, and to be representative to that designation. [3.] He must give him a charge. He must be charged with the people of Israel, who were delivered into his hand as sheep into the hand of a shepherd, and for whom he must be accountable; he must be strictly charged to do his duty to them; though they were under his command, he was under God's command, and from him he must receive charge; the highest must know that his highest is given to him by God, and not by man. He was given in their sight, that it might be the more affecting to Joshua, and that the people seeing the work and care of their prince, might be the more engaged to assist and encourage him. [4.] He must put some of his honour upon him, v. 20. Joshua at the most had but some of the honour of Moses, and in many instances came short of him; but this seems to be meant of his taking him now, while he lived, into partnership with him in the government, and admitting him to act with authority as his assistant. It is an honour to be employed for God and his church; some of this honour must be put upon Joshua, that the people being used to obey him while Moses lived, they might the more cheerfully do it afterward. [5.] He must appoint Eleazar the High Priest, with his breast-plate of judgment, to be his privy-council, (v. 21.) He shall stand before Eleazar, by him to consult the oracle, ready to receive and observe all the directions that should be given him by it. This was a direction to Joshua, that though he was full of the Spirit, and had all this honour put upon him, yet he must do nothing without asking counsel of God, not leaning to his own understanding; it was also a great encouragement to him; to govern Israel, and to conquer Canaan, were two hard tasks, but God assures him that in both he should be under a divine command, and every difficult case God would advise him to that which should be for the best. Moses had recourse to the oracle of God himself, but Joshua, and the succeeding judges, must use the ministry of the High Priest, and consult the judgment of Urim, which, the Jews say, might not be inquired of but by the king, or the head of the Sanhedrim, or by the agent or representative of the people, for them, and in their name. Joshua was to be under divine command, and now purely divine, for both the designation and direction of their princes were entirely so. At the word of the priest, according to the judgment of Urim, Joshua and all Israel must go out and come in; and no doubt, God who thus guided, would preserve both their going out and their coming in. Those are safe, and may be easy, that follow God, and all his ways are sure.
own hands to ordain Eleazar, first, High Priest, and now Joshua, one of another tribe, chief ruler, while his own children had no preferment at all, but were left in the rank of common Levites; this was such an instance of self-denial, and submission to the will of God, as was more his glory than the highest advancement of his family could have been; for it confirms his character as the meekest man upon earth, and faithful to him that appointed him in all his house. This (says the excellent Bishop Patrick) shows him to have had a principle which raised him above all other law-givers, who always took care to establish their families in some share of that greatness, which they themselves possessed; but hereby it appeared Moses acted not from himself, because he acted not for himself.

CHAP. XXVIII.

Now that the people were numbered, orders given for the division of the land, and a general of the forces nominated and commissioned, one would have expected that the next chapter should have begun the history of the campaign, or at least should have given us an account of the ordinance of, the law for, no, it contains the ordinances of worship, and provides that now as they were on the point of entering Canaan, they should be sure to take their religion along with them, and not forget that, in the prosecution of their wars, v. 1, 2. The laws are here repeated and summed up concerning the sacrifices that were to be offered, I Daily, v. 3., 8. II. Weekly, v. 3, 10. III. Monthly, v. 11., 15. IV. Yearly; 1. At the passover, v. 18., 25. 2. At pentecost, v. 26., 31. And the next chapter is concerning the annual solemnities of the seventh month.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Command the children of Israel, and say unto them, My offering, and my bread for my sacrifices made by fire for a sweet savour unto me, shall ye observe to offer unto me in their due season. 3. And thou shalt say unto them, This is the offering made by fire which ye shall offer unto the Lord; two lambs of the first year without spot, day by day, for a continual burnt-offering. 4. The one lamb shalt thou offer in the morning, and the other lamb shalt thou offer at even; 5. And a tenth part of an ephah of flour for a meat-offering, mingled with the fourth part of a hin of beaten oil. 6. It is a continual burnt-offering, which was ordained in mount Sinai for a sweet savour, a sacrifice made by fire unto the Lord. 7. And the drink-offering thereof shall be the fourth part of a hin for the one lamb: in the holy place shalt thou cause the strong wine to be poured unto the Lord for a drink-offering. 8. And the other lamb shalt thou offer at even: as the meat-offering of the morning, and as the drink-offering thereof, thou shalt offer it, a sacrifice made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord.

1. A general order given concerning the offerings of the Lord, which were to be brought in their season, v. 2. These laws are here given fresh, not because the observance of them was wholly disused, during their 38 years' wandering in the wilderness, (we cannot think that they were so long without any public worship, but that at least the daily lamb was offered morning and evening, and doubled on the sabbath-day; so Bishop Patrick conjectures: but that many of the sacrifices were then omitted, is plainly intimated, Amos 5. 25. quoted by Stephen, Acts 7. 42. Did ye offer unto me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel? is it for this I am doing you good? 9. And when they were entered into the war, and might be tempted to think that while they were engaged in that, they should be excused from offering sacrifices; inter arma silent leges—law is but little regarded amidst the clash of arms. No, says God, my bread for my sacrifices even now shall ye observe to offer, and that in their due season. They were then concerned to keep their peace with God, when they were at war with their enemies. In the war, when they were not, in the land, and at peace, they might have left the sacrifices out of their thoughts, and might be tempted to think that while they were engaged in that, they should be excused from offering sacrifices; and many, probably, have done so. 10. Because they were now entering into the land of promise, and were about to enter into the land of war, and might be tempted to think that while they were engaged in that, they should be excused from offering sacrifices; inter arma silent leges—law is but little regarded amidst the clash of arms. No, says God, my bread for my sacrifices even now shall ye observe to offer, and that in their due season. They were then concerned to keep their peace with God, when they were at war with their enemies. In the war, when they were not, in the land, and at peace, they might have left the sacrifices out of their thoughts, and might have done so. 11. Because they were now entering into the land of promise, and were about to enter into the land of war, and might be tempted to think that while they were engaged in that, they should be excused from offering sacrifices; and many, probably, have done so. 12. But because they were now entering into the land of promise, and were about to enter into the land of war, and might be tempted to think that while they were engaged in that, they should be excused from offering sacrifices; and many, probably, have done so.
flour for a meat-offering, mingled with oil, for one bullock; and two tenth-deals of flour for a meat-offering, mingled with oil, for one ram; 13. And a several tenth-deal of flour mingled with oil for a meat-offering unto one lamb, for a burnt-offering of a sweet savour, a sacrifice made by fire unto the Lord. 14. And their drink-offerings shall be half a hin of wine unto a bullock, and the third part of a hin unto a ram, and the fourth part of a hin unto a lamb: this is the burnt-offering of every month throughout the months of the year. 15. And one kid of the goats for a sin-offering unto the Lord shall be offered, besides the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering.

The new moons and the sabbaths are often spoken of together, as great solemnities in the Jewish church, very comfortable to the saints then, and typical of gospel-grace. Now we have here the sabbath-days compared with every month. Every sabbath-day the offering must be doubled; beside the two lambs offered for the daily burnt-offering, there must be two more offered, one (it is probable) added to the morning sacrifice, and the other to the evening, v. 9, 10. This teaches us to double our devotions on sabbath-days, for so the duty of the day requires. The sabbath-rest is to be observed, in order to a more close application to the sabbath-work, which ought to fill up a sabbath-time. In Ezekiel’s temple-service, which points at gospel-times, the sabbath-offerings were to be six lambs and a ram, with their meat-offerings and drink-offerings, (Ezek. 46. 4, 5.) to intimate not only the continuance, but the advancement, of sabbath-sanctification in the days of the Messiah. This is the burnt-offering of the sabbath, in his sabbath, so it is in the original, v. 10. We must do every sabbath-day’s work with it, and reserve every minute of sabbath-time, as those that believe it precious, and not thinking to put off one sabbath’s work to another, for sufficient to every sabbath is the service thereof. 2. For the new moons. Some suggest, that as the sabbath was kept with an eye to the creation of the world, so the new moons were sanctified with an eye to the divine providence, which appoints the moon for seasons, guiding the revolutions of time by its changes, and governing sublunary bodies (as many think) by its influences: though we observe not any feast of new moons, yet we must not forget to give God the glory of all the precious things put forth by the moon, which he has established forever, a faithful witness in heaven, Ps. 89. 37. The offerings in the new moons were very considerable; two bullocks, a ram, and seven lambs, for the meat-offering and drink-offerings that were to attend them, (v. 11, 15.) beside a sin-offering, v. 15. For when we give glory to God by confessing his mercies, we must give glory to him likewise by confessing our own sins. And when we rejoice in the gifts of common providence, we must make the sacrifice of Christ, that great gift of special grace, the fountain and spring-head of our joy. Some have questioned whether the new moons were kept among the heathens; but why should they not? When, beside the special sacrifices which were then to be offered, they rested from servile works, (Amos 8. 5.) blew the trumpets (ch. 10. 10.) and went to the prophets to hear the word, 2 Kings 4. 23. And the worship performed in the new moons is made typical of gospel solemnities, Isa. 66. 23.

16. And in the fourteenth day of the first month is the passover of the Lord. 17. And in the fifteenth day of this month is the feast: seven days shall unleavened bread be eaten. 18. In the first day shall be a holy convocation; ye shall do no manner of servile work therein: 19. But ye shall offer a sacrifice made by fire, for a burnt-offering unto the Lord; two young bullocks, and one ram, and seven lambs of the first year: they shall be unto you without blemish: 20. And their meat-offerings shall be of flour mingled with oil: three tenth-deals shall ye offer for a bullock, and two tenth-deals for a ram; 21. A several tenth-deal shalt thou offer for every lamb, throughout the seven lambs: 22. And one goat for a sin-offering, to make an atonement for you. 23. Ye shall offer these besides the burnt-offering in the morning, which is for a continual burnt-offering. 24. After this manner ye shall offer daily, throughout the seven days, the meat of the sacrifice made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord: it shall be offered besides the continual burnt-offering, and his drink-offering. 25. And on the seventh day ye shall have a holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work. 26. Also in the day of the first-fruits, when ye bring a new meat-offering unto the Lord, after your works be out, ye shall have a holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work: 27. But ye shall offer the burnt-offering for a sweet savour unto the Lord; two young bullocks, one ram, seven lambs of the first year; 28. And their meat-offering of flour mingled with oil, three tenth-deals unto one bullock, two tenth-deals unto one ram; 29. A several tenth-deal unto one lamb, throughout the seven lambs; 30. And one kid of the goats, to make an atonement for you. 31. Ye shall offer them besides the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, (they shall be unto you without blemish,) and their drink-offerings.

1. The appointment of the passover sacrifices; not that which was the chief, the paschal lamb, (sufficient instructions had formerly been given concerning that) but those which were to be offered upon the seven days of unleavened bread, which followed it, v. 17-25. The first and last of those seven days were to be sanctified as sabbaths, by a holy rest and a holy convocation, and during each of the seven days, they were to be very liberal in their sacrifices, in token of their great and constant thankfulness for their deliverance out of Egypt; two bullocks, a ram, and seven lambs. A gospel-conversation, in gratitude for Christ our Passover who was sacrificed, is called the keeping of this feast, 1 Cor. 5. 8. For it is not enough that we purge out the leavened bread of malice and wickedness, but we must offer the bread of our God, even... the sacrifice of praise, continually, and continue herein unto the end. 2. The sacrifices are likewise appointed, which were to be offered at the feast of pentecost, here called the day of the first-fruits, v. 26. In the feast of unleavened bread, they offered a sheaf of their first-fruits, of barley (which with them was first ripe) to the priest, (Lev. 23. 10.) as an introduction to the harvest; but now, about seven weeks after, they were to bring a new meat-offering to the Lord, at the end of harvest, in thankfulness to God, who had not only given, but preserved to their use, the kindly fruits of the earth, so as that in due time they did enjoy them. It was at this feast, that the spirit was poured out, (Acts 2. 1, &c.) and thousands were converted by the preaching of the apostles, and were presented to Christ, to be a kind of first-fruits of his creatures. The sacrifice that was to be offered with the leaves of the first fruits, was appointed, Lev. 23. 18. But over and above, beside that, and beside the daily offerings, they were to offer two bullocks, one ram, and seven lambs, with a kid for a sin-offering, v. 27—30. When God sows plentifully upon us, he expects to reap accordingly from us. Bishop Patrick observes that no peace-offerings are appointed in this chapter, which were chiefly for the benefit of the offerers, and therefore in them they were left more to themselves; but burnt-offerings, which were purely for the honour of God, and confessions of his dominion, and which figured evangelical piety and devotion, by which the soul is wholly offered up to God, in the flames of holy love; and sin-offerings, which were typical of Christ's sacrifice of himself, by which we and our services are perfected and sanctified.

CHAP. XXIX.
This chapter appoints the offerings that were to be made by fire unto the Lord, in the three great solemnities of the seventh month. 1. In the feast of trumpets on the first day of that month, v. 1—9. II. In the day of atonement on the tenth day, v. 7—11. III. In the feast of tabernacles on the fifteenth day, and the seven days following, v. 12—38. And then the conclusion of these ordinances, v. 39, 40.

1. AND in the seventh month, on the first day of the month, ye shall have a holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work; it is a day of blowing the trumpets unto you. 2. And ye shall offer a burnt-offering for a sweet savour unto the Lord, one young bullock, one ram, and seven lambs of the first year without blemish; 3. And their meat-offerings shall be of flour mingled with oil, three tenth-deals for a bullock, and two tenth-deals for a ram, 4. And one tenth-deal for one lamb, throughout the seven lambs; 5. And one kid of the goats for a sin-offering, to make an atonement for you: 6. Besides the burnt-offering of the month, and his meat-offering, and the daily burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, according unto their manner, for a sweet savour, a sacrifice made by fire unto the Lord. 7. And ye shall have on the tenth day of this seventh month a holy convocation; and ye shall afflict your souls: ye shall do no work therein: 8. But ye shall offer a burnt-offering unto the Lord for a sweet savour; one young bullock, one ram, and seven lambs of the first year; they shall be unto you without blemish. 9. And their meat-offering shall be of flour mingled with oil, three tenth-deals to a bullock, and two tenth-deals to one ram. 10. A several tenth-deal for one lamb, throughout the seven lambs: 11. One kid of the goats for a sin-offering, besides the sin-offering of atonement, and the continual burnt-offering, and the meat-offering of it, and their drink-offerings.

There were more sacred solemnities in the seventh month than in any other month of the year; not only because it had been the first month, till the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, which, being in the month Abib, occasioned its being therewith made the beginning of the weeks in all ecclesiastical computations; but because still it continued the first month in the civil reckonings of the jubilees, and years of release; and also because it was the time of vacation between harvest and seedtime, when they had most leisure to attend the sanctuary: which intimates that though God will dispense with sacrifices, in consideration of works necessary in the day of mercy, yet the more leisure we have from the pressing occasions of this life, the more time we should spend in the immediate service of God.

1. We have here the appointment of the sacrifices that were to be offered on the first day of the month, the day of blowing the trumpets; which was a preparative for the two great solemnities, that of holy mourning on the day of atonement, and that of holy joy in the feast of tabernacles. The intention of divine institutions is then well answered, when one religious service helps to fit us for another, and all for heaven. The blowing of the trumpets was appointed, Lev. 23. 24. Here they are directed what sacrifices to offer on that day, of which there was not then any mention made. Note, Those who would know the mind of God in the scriptures, must compare one part of the scripture with another, and put those parts together that have reference to the same thing, for the latter discoveries of divine light explain what was dark, and supply what was defective, in the former, that the man of God may be perfect. The sacrifices then to be offered are particularly ordered here, (v. 2., 6.) and care taken that these should not supersede the daily oblation, and that of the new-moon. It is hereby intimated that we must not seek occasions to abate our joy in the Lord's service, or be glad of an excuse to omit a good duty, but rather rejoice in an opportunity of accumulating, and doing more than ordinary in religion. If we perform family-worship, we must not think that that will excuse us from our secret devotions; nor that on the days we go to church, we need not worship God, alone, and with our families: but we should always have our eye to the glory and honour of God, which was purely intended in the burnt-offerings; there was likewise to be a kid of the goats for a sin-offering, beside the great sin-offering of atonement, (v. 11.) which intimates that there are so many defects and faults, even in the exercises and expressions of our repentance, that we have need of an interest in a sacrifice to expiate the guilt even of that part of our holy things. Though we must not repent that we have repented, yet we must repent that we have not repented better. It likewise bespeaks the imperfection of the legal sacrifices, and their insufficiency to take away sin, that on the very day the sin-offering of atonement was offered, yet there must be another sin-offering. But what the law could not do in that it was weak, that Christ has done.

12. And on the fifteenth day of the seventh month ye shall have a holy convocation; ye shall do no servile work, and ye shall keep a feast unto the Lord seven days: 13. And ye shall offer a burnt-offering, a sacrifice made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord; thirteen young bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year; they shall be without blemish: 14. And their meat-offering shall be of flour mingled with oil, three tenth-deals unto every bullock of the thirteen bullocks, two tenth-deals to each ram of the two rams, 15. And a several tenth-deal to each lamb of the fourteen lambs; 16. And one kid of the goats for a sin-offering, besides the continual burnt-offering, his meat-offering, and his drink-offering. 17. And on the second day ye shall offer twelve young bullocks, two rams, fourteen lambs of the first year without spot: 18. And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner: 19. And one kid of the goats for a sin-offering; besides the continual burnt-offering, and the meat-offering thereof, and their drink-offerings.

20. And on the third day eleven bullocks, two rams, fourteen lambs of the first year without blemish; 21. And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner: 22. And one goat for a sin-offering; besides the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, and his drink-offering. 23. And on the fourth day ten bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without blemish: 24. Their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner: 25. And one kid of the goats for a sin-offering; besides the continual burnt-offering, his meat-offering, and his drink-offering. 26. And on the fifth day nine bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without spot: 27. And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner: 28. And one goat for a sin-offering; besides the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, and his drink-offering. 29. And on the sixth day eight bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without blemish: 30. And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner: 31. And one goat for a sin-offering; besides the continual burnt-offering, his meat-offering, and his drink-offering. 32. And on the seventh day seven bullocks, two rams, and fourteen lambs of the first year without blemish: 33. And their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullocks, for the rams, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner: 34. And one goat for a sin-offering; besides the continual burnt-offering, his meat-offering, and his drink-offering. 35. On the eighth day ye shall have a solemn assembly; ye shall do no servile work therein: 36. But ye shall offer a burnt-offering, a sacrifice made by fire, of a sweet savour unto the Lord; one bullock, one ram, seven lambs of the first year without blemish: 37. Their meat-offering, and their drink-offerings, for the bullock, for the ram, and for the lambs, shall be according to their number, after the manner: 38. And one goat for a sin-offering; besides the continual burnt-offering, and his meat-offering, and his drink-offering. 39. These things ye shall do unto the Lord in your set feasts, besides your vows, and your free-will offerings, for your burnt-offerings, and for your meat-offerings, and for your drink-offerings, and for your peace-offerings. 40. And Moses told the children of Israel, according to all that the Lord commanded Moses.
intimates that the repetition of the same services, if performed with an upright heart, and with a continued fire of pious and devout affection, is no weariness to God, and therefore we ought not to snuff at it, or to say, Behold, what a weariness it is to us! 4. The number of the bullocks, (which were the most costly part of the sacrifice) decreased every day. On the first day of the feast they were to offer thirteen, on the second day, but twelve, on the third day, eleven, &c. So that on the seventh day, they offered seven. And the last day, though it was the great day of the feast, and celebrated with a holy convocation, yet they were to offer but one bullock; and whereas on all the other days, they offered two rams, and fourteen lambs, on this, but one ram and seven lambs. Such was the will of the Law-Maker, and that was reason enough for the provision, that God herein considered the infirmity of the flesh, which is apt to grudge the charge and expense of religion; it is therefore ordered to grow less and less, that they might not complain as if God had made them to serve with an offering, Isa. 43. 23. Or, it is hereby intimated to them, that the legal dispensation should wax old, and vanish away at last; and the multitude of their sacrifices should own the great sacrifice, infinitely more worthy than all of them. It was on the last day of the feast, after all these sacrifices had been offered, that our Lord Jesus stood, and cried to those who still thirsted after righteousness, (being sensible of the insufficiency of these sacrifices to justify them,) to come unto him and drink, John 7. 37. 5. The meat-offerings and drink-offerings attended all the sacrifices, according to their number, after the manner. Be there never so much flesh, it is no feast without bread and drink, therefore these must never be omitted at God’s altar, which was his table. We must not think that doing much in religion will be accepted, if we do not do it well, and after the manner that God has appointed. 6. Every day, there must be a sin-offering presented, as we observed in other feasts. Our burnt-offerings of praise cannot be accepted of God, unless we have an interest in the great sacrifice of propitiation which Christ offered, when for us he made himself a Sin-offering. 7. Even when all these sacrifices were offered, yet the continual burnt-offering must not be omitted, either morning or evening, but each day that must be offered, first in the morning, and last in the evening. No extraordinary services should justly out our stated devotions.

Lastly, Though all these sacrifices were required to the body of the congregation, at the common charge, yet, beside these, particular persons were to glorify God with their vows and their free-will offerings, v. 39. When God commanded that this they must do, he left room for the generosity of their devotion, a great deal more they might do; not inventing other worship, but abounding in these, as 2 Chron. 30. 23, 24. Large directions had been given in Leviticus concerning the offerings of all sorts that should be brought by particular persons; according to the providences of God concerning them, and the graces of God in them. Though every Israelite had an interest in these common sacrifices, yet he must not think that these will serve instead of his vows and his free-will offerings. Thus our ministers praying with us and for us, will not excuse us from praying for ourselves.

CHAP. XXX.

In this chapter we have a law concerning vows, which had been mentioned in the close of the foregoing chapter. 1. Here is a general rule laid down, that all vows must be carefully performed, v. 1, 2. II. Some particular exceptions to this rule. 1. That the vows of daughters should not be binding, unless allowed by the father, v. 3-5. Nor 2. The vows of wives, unless allowed by the husband, v. 6-18.

1. AND Moses spake unto the heads of the tribes concerning the children of Israel, saying, This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded. 2. If a man vow a vow unto the Lord, or swear an oath to bind his soul with a bond; he shall not break his word, he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth.

This law was delivered to the heads of the tribes, that they might instruct those who were under their charge, explain the law to them, give them necessary cautions, and call them to account, if there were occasion, for the breach of their vows. Perhaps the heads of the tribes, had, upon some emergency of this kind, consulted Moses, and desired by him to know the mind of God, and here they are told it. This is the thing which the Lord hath commanded concerning vows, and it is a command still in force.

1. The case supposed, is, that a person vows a vow unto the Lord, making God a Party to the promise, and designing his honour and glory in it. The law is, the vow must not be supposed to be something lawful; no man can be by his own promise bound to do that which he is already by the divine precept prohibited to do. Yet it is supposed to be something which, in such and such measures and degrees, was not a necessary duty antecedent to the vow. A person might vow to bring such and such sacrifices at certain times; to give such a sum, or such a proportion, in alms; to forbear such meats and drinks, which the law allowed; to fast and afflict the soul (which is specified, v. 13.) at other times besides the day of atonement. And many similar vows might be made, either in an extraordinary heat of holy zeal, or in humiliation for some sin committed, or for the prevention of sin, in pursuit of some mercy desired, or in gratitude for some mercy received. It is of great use to make such vows as these, provided they be made in sincerity and with due caution. Vows (say the Jewish doctors) are the hedge of separation, that is, a fence to religion. He that vows, is here said to bind his soul with a bond. It is a vow to God, who is a Spirit, and to him the soul, with all its powers, must be bound. A promise to a man is a bond upon his estate, but a promise to God is a bond upon the soul. Our sacramental vows, by which we are bound to no more than what we are supposed to be otherwise bound, nor father nor husband can disannul, are bonds upon the soul, and by them we must feel ourselves bound out from all sin, and bound up to the whole will of God. Our occasional vows concerning that which before was in our own power, (Acts 5. 4.) when they are made, are bonds upon the soul likewise.

2. The command given, is, that these vows be conscientiously performed. He shall not break his word, though afterward he may change his mind, but he shall do according to what he has said. Margin, He shall not change his word. Vowing is an ordinance of God; if we vow in hypocrisy, we profane that ordinance: it is plainly determined, Better not vow, than vow and not pay, Excl. 3. 5. Be not deceived, God is not mocked. His promises to us are yea and amen, let not our's to him be yea and nay.

3. If a woman also vow a vow unto the Lord, and bind herself by a bond, being in her father's house in her youth: 4. And
I. The case of a daughter in her father's house and some think, probably enough, that it extends to a son likewise, while he is at home with his father. But not understood, and generally, whether the exception may thus be stretched, I cannot say. Non est distinguendum ubi lex non distinguit—We are not allowed to make distinctions which the law does not. The rule is general, If a man vow, he must pay. But for a daughter it is express, her vow is amulatory, and in suspense till her father knows it, and (it is supposed) knows it from her; for when it comes to his knowledge, it is in his power either to disallow or nullify it. But in favour of the vow, 1. Even his silence shall suffice to ratify it, v. 4. If he hold his peace, her vows shall stand. Qui tacet, consentire videtur—Silence gives consent. Hereby he allows his daughter the liberty she has assumed, and as long as he says nothing against her vow, she shall be bound by it. But, 2. His protestation against it shall completely disannul it. Because it is possible that such vow may be prejudicial to the affairs of the family, break the father's measures, perplex the provision made for his table, (if the vow related to meats,) or lessen the provision made for his children, if the vow would be more expensive than his estate would bear; however, it was certain that it was an infringement of his authority over his child, and therefore if he disallow, she is discharged, and the Lord shall forgive her, that is, she shall not be charged with the guilt of violating her vow. If the father knew her vow, and disallow her vow, and if her intentions therein were sincere, she shall be accepted; and to obey her father shall be accounted better than sacrifice. This shows what a deference children owe to their parents, and how much they ought to honour them and be obedient to them. It is for the interest of the public that the paternal authority be supported; for when children are countenanced in their disobedience to their parents (as they were by the tradition of the elders, Matth. 15. 5, 6,) they soon become in other things children of Belial. If this law be not to be extended to children's marrying without their parents' consent, so far as to put it in parents' power to null the marriage and dissolve the obligation, (as some have thought it does,) yet certainly it proves the sinfulness of it, and obliges the children to obey their parents, and not to become foolishly, to repent and humble themselves before God according to their nature.

II. The case of a wife is much the same. As for a woman that is a widow, or divorced, she has neither father nor husband to control her, so that whatever vows she binds her soul with, they shall stand against her, (v. 9.) it is at her peril if she run back; but a wife, who has nothing that she can strictly call her own but with her husband's allowance, cannot, without that, make any such vow.

1. The law is plain in case of a wife that continues so, long after the vow. If her husband allow her vow, though only by silence, it stands, v. 6, 7. If he disallow it, since her obligation to that which she had vowed, arose purely from her own act, and not from any prior command of God, her obligation to her husband shall take place of it, for to him she ought to be in subjection, as unto the Lord; and now it is so far from being her duty to fulfill her vow, that it would be her sin to disobey her husband, whose consent perhaps she ought to have asked before she had made the vow; therefore she needs forgiveness, v. 8.

2. The law is the same in case of a wife that soon after becomes a widow, or is put away. Though if she return to her father's house, she does not therefore regain the right, and hence she has power to disannul her vows, (v. 9.) yet if the vow was made while she was in the house of her husband, and her husband disallowed it, it was made void and of no effect for ever, and she does not return under the law of her vow when she is loosed from the law of her husband. This seems to be the distinct meaning of v. 10-14, which otherwise would be but a repetition of v. 6-8. But it is added, (v. 15.) That if the husband make void the vows of his wife, he shall bear her basity; that is, if the thing she had vowed, was really good, for the honour of God and the prosperity of her own soul, and the husband disallow it out of covetousness or humour, or to show his authority, though she be discharged from the obligation of her vow, yet he will have a great deal to answer for.

Now here it is very observable how carefully the divine law consults the good order of families, and preserves the power of superior relations, and the duty and reverence of inferiors. It is fit that every man should bear rule in his own house, and have his wife and his children in subjection with all gravity and awe, rather than that this great rule should be broken, or any encouragement given to inferior relations to break those bonds sander, God himself would quit his right, and release the obligation even of a solemn vow; so much does religion strengthen the ties of all relations, and secure the welfare of all societies, and in it the families of the earth are blessed.

CHAP. XXXI.

This chapter belongs to the book of the wars of the Lord, into which, it is probable, it was inserted. It is the history of a Holy War, a war with Midian. Here is, I. A divine command for the war, v. 1-3. II. The undertaking of the war, v. 3-6. III. The glorious success of it, v. 7-12. IV. Their triumphal return from the war. 1. The respect Moses paid the soldiers, v. 13. 2. The rebuke he gave them for sparing the women, v. 14-18. 3. The diversions he gave them for the purifying of themselves and their effects, v. 19-24. 4. The distribution of the spoil they had taken; one half to the soldiers, the other to the congregation, and a tribute to the Lord out of each, v. 25-27. 5. The free-will-offering of the officers, v. 28-34.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Avenge the children of Israel of the Midianites: afterward shalt thou be gathered unto thy people. 3. And Moses spake unto the people, saying, Arm some of yourselves unto the war, and let them go against the Midianites, and avenge the Lord of Midian. 4. Of every tribe a thousand, throughout all the tribes of Israel, shall ye send to the war. 5. So there were delivered out of the thousands of Israel, a thousand of every tribe, twelve thousand armed for war. 6. And Moses sent them to the war, a thousand of every tribe, them and Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest, to the war, with the holy instruments, and the trumpets to blow, in his hand.

Here,

1. The Lord of hosts gives orders unto Moses to make war upon the Midianites, and his commission, no doubt, justified this war, though it will not serve to justify the like without such commission. The Midianites were the posterity of Abraham by Kezurah, Gen. 25. 2. Some of them settled south of Canaan, among whom Jethro lived, and they retained the worship of the true God; but these were settled east of Canaan, and were fallen into idolatry, neighbours to, and in confederacy with, the Moabites. Their land was not designed to be given to Israel, nor would Israel have meddled with them, if they had not made themselves obnoxious to their resentments, by sending their bad women among them to draw them to whoredom and idolatry. This was the provocation, this was the quarrel. For this, (says God,) avenge Israel of the Midianites, v. 2. (1.) God would have the Midianites chastised, an inroad made upon that part of their country which lay next to the camp of Israel, and which was concerned in that mischief, probably more to show the Midianites, that we can take care of our own, and not let alone. God will have us to reckon those our worst enemies, that draw us to sin, and to avoid them; and since every man is tempted when he is drawn aside of his own lusts, and those are the Midianites which ensnare us with their wiles, on them we should avenge ourselves; not only make no league with them, but make war upon them living a life of filial application. God had taken vengeance on his own people for yielding to the Midianites, and some would have let it alone. 2. Moses gives orders to the people to prepare for this expedition, v. 3. He would not have the whole body of the camp to stir, but they must arm some of themselves to the war, such as were most fit, or most forward, and avenge the Lord of Midian. God said, Avenge Israel, Moses says, Avenge the Lord; for the interests of God and Israel are united, and the cause of both is one and the same. And if God, in what he does, shows himself jealous for the honour of Israel, surely Israel, in what they do, ought to show themselves jealous for the glory of God. Then only we can justify the avenging of ourselves, when it is the vengeance of God the Father, and the Devil’s, when we have a just cause for this reason we are forbidden to avenge ourselves, because God has said, Vengeance is mine, I will repay. 3. A detachment is drawn out accordingly for this service, a thousand for every tribe, 12,000 in all; a small number in comparison with what they could have sent, and, it is probable, small in comparison with the number of enemies they were sent against. But God would teach them, that it was all one to him to save by many or by few. 1 Sam. 14. 6. 4. Phinehas the son of Eleazar is sent along with them. It is strange that no mention is made of Joshua in this great action. If he was general of these forces, why do we not find him leading them out? If he tarried at home, why do we not find him meeting them with Moses at their return? It is probable, each tribe having a captain of its own thousand, there was no general, but they proceeded in the march through the wilderness, Judah first, and the rest in their posts, under the command of their respective captains, spoken of, v. 48. But the war being a holy war, Phinehas was their common head, not to supply the place of a general, but, by the oracle of God, to determine the resolves of their councils of war, in which the captains of thousands would all acquire, and according to which they would act in conjunction. He took the sword with him the holy instruments or vessels, probably, the breast-plate of judgment, by which God might be consulted in any emergency. Though he was not yet the High Priest, yet he might be delegated pro hac vice—for this particular occasion, to bear the Urim and Thummim, as 1 Sam. 23. 6. And there was a particular reason for sending Phinehas to preside in this expedition: he had already signalized himself for his zeal against the Midianites and their cursed arts to ensnare Israel, when he slew Cozbi, a daughter of a chief house in Midian, for her impudence in the matter of Peor, ch. 25. 15. He that had so well used the sword of justice against a particular criminal, was best qualified to guide the sword of war against the whole nation. Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things.

7. And they warred against the Midianites, as the Lord commanded Moses; and they slew all the males. 8. And they slew the kings of Midian, besides the rest of them that were slain; namely, Evi, and Rekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, five kings of Midian: Balaam also, the son of Beor, they slew with the sword. 9. And the children of Israel took all the women of Midian captives, and their little ones, and took the spoil of all their cattle, and all their flocks, and all their goods. 10. And they burnt all their cities wherein they dwelt, and all their goodly castles, with fire. 11. And they took all the spoil, and all the prey, both of men and of beasts. 12. And they brought the captives, and the prey, and the spoil, unto Moses and Eleazar the priest, and unto the congregation of the children of Israel, unto the camp at the plains of Moab, which are by Jordan near Jericho.

1. The descent which this little army of Israelites made, under the divine commission, conduct, and control, their march through the country of Midian. They warred against the Midianites. It is very probable they first published their manifesto, showing the reasons of the war, and requiring them to give up the ring-leaders of the mischief to justice; for such afterward was the love, (Deut. 20. 10.) and such the practice, Judg. 20. 12, 13. But the Midianites justifying what they had done, and standing by those that had done it, the Israelites attacked them with fire and sword, and all the pious fury which their zeal for God and their people inspired them with.

2. The execution (the military execution) they did in this descent. (1.) They slew all the males, (v. 7.) that is, all they met with as far as they went; they put them all to the sword, and gave no quarter. But that they did not slay all the males of the nation, is certain, for we find the Midianites a powerful and formidable enemy to Israel in the days of Gideon; and they were the Midianites of this country, for they are reckoned with the children of the east, Judg. 6. 3. (2.) They slew the kings of Midian, the same that are called elders of Midian, (ch. 22. 4.) and dukes of Sihon, Josh. 13. 21. Five of these princes are here named, one of which is Zur, probably the same Zur whose daughter Cozbi was, ch. 25. 15. (3.) They slew Balaam. Many conjecture these things brought Balaam among the Midianites at this time; it is probable the Midianites having intelligence of the march of this army of Israelites against them, hired Balaam to come and assist them with his enchantments; that if he could not prevail to act offensively in their favour, by cursing the armies of Israel, yet he might act defensively, by blessing the country of Midian. Whatever was the occasion of his being there, God's over-ruled providence brought him thither, and there his just vengeance found him. Had he himself believed what he said of the happy state of Israel, he would not have heeded himself thus with the enemies of Israel, but justly does he die the death of the wicked, (though he pretended to desire that of the righteous,) and go down slain to the pit with the unconverted, who rebelled thus against the convictions of his own conscience. The Midianites' wiles were made use of by God; it therefore just that he should perish with them, Hos. 4. 5. Now was his folly made manifest to all men, who foretold the fate of others, but foresaw not his own. (4.) They took all the women and children captives, v. 9. (5.) They burnt their cities and goodly castles, (v. 10.) not designing to inhabit them themselves, (that country was out of their line,) but they thus prevented those who had made their escape, from sheltering themselves in their own country and settling there again. Some understand it of their idol temples; it was fit that they should share in this vengeance. (6.) They plundered the country, and carried off all the cattle, and valuable goods, and so returned to the camp of Israel laden with a very rich booty, v. 9, 11, 12. Thus (as when they came out of Egypt,) they were enriched with the spoils of their enemies, and furnished with stock for the good land into which God was bringing them.

13. And Moses, and Eleazar the priest, and all the princes of the congregation, went forth to meet them without the camp. 14. And Moses was wroth with the officers of the host, with the captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, which came from the battle. 15. And Moses said unto them, Have ye saved all the women alive? 16. Behold, these caused the children of Israel, through the counsel of Balaam, to commit trespass against the Lord in the matter of Peor, and there was a plague among the congregation of the Lord. 17. Now therefore kill every male among the little ones, and kill every woman that hath known man by lying with him. 18. But all the women-children that have not known a man, by lying with him, keep alive for yourselves. 19. And do ye abide without the camp seven days; whosoever hath killed any person, and whosoever hath touched any slain, purify both yourselves and your captives, on the third day, and on the seventh day. 20. And purify all your raiment, and all that is made of skins, and all work of goats’ hair, and all things made of wood. 21. And Eleazar the priest said unto the men of war which went to the battle, This is the ordinance of the law which the Lord commanded Moses; 22. Only the gold, and the silver, the brass, the iron, the tin, and the lead, 23. Everything that may abide the fire, ye shall make it go through the fire, and it shall be clean; nevertheless it shall be purified with the water of separation: and all that abideth not the fire ye shall make go through the water. 24. And ye shall wash your clothes on the seventh day, and ye shall be clean, and afterwards ye shall come into the camp.

We have here the triumphant return of the army of Israel from the war with Midian. And here, we see with what gravity, v. 23. Moses himself, notwithstanding his age and gravity, walked out of the camp to congratulate their victory, and to grace the solemnity of their triumphs. Public successes should be publicly acknowledged, to the glory of God, and the encouragement of those who have jeopardized their lives in their country’s cause.

They were severely reproved for saving the women alive. It is very probable that Moses had commanded them to kill the women, at least, that was implied in the general order to avenge Israel of the Midianites; the execution having reference to that crime; their drawing them in to the worship of Peor, it was easy to conclude that the women, who were the principal criminals, must not be spared. What! (says Moses,) have ye saved the women alive? v. 15. He was moved with a holy indignation at the sight of them. These were they that caused the children of Israel to commit the trespasses; and therefore, (1.) It is just that they should die. The law, in case of whoredom, was, The adulterer and adulteress shall surely be put to death. God has put to death the adulterers of Israel by the plague, and now it was fit that the adulteresses of Midian, especially since they had been the tempters, should be put to death by the sword. (2.) It is dangerous to let them live; they will be still tempting the Israelites to uncleanness, and so your captives will be your conquerors, and a second time your destroyers.” Severe orders are therefore given, that all the grown women should be slain in cold blood, and only the female children spared.

They were obliged to purify themselves, according to the ceremony of the law, and to abide without the camp seven days, till their purification was accomplished. For, (1.) They had imbrued their hands in blood, by which, though they had not contracted any moral guilt, the war being just and lawful; yet they were brought under a ceremonial uncleanness, which rendered them unfit to come near the tabernacle till they were purified. Thus God would preserve in their minds a dread and detestation of murder. David must not build his temple, because he had been a man of war, and had shed blood, 1 Chron. 28. 3. (2.) They could not but have touched dead bodies, by which they were polluted, and that required they should be purified with the water of separation, v. 19, 20, 24.

They must likewise purify the spoil they had taken; the captives, (v. 19.) and all the goods, v. 21. 23. What would bear the fire, must pass through the fire, and what would not, must be washed with water. These things had been used by Midianites, and being now come into the possession of Israelites, it was fit that they should be sanctified to the service of that holy nation, and the honour of their holy God. To us now every thing is sanctified by the word and prayer, if we are sanctified by the Spirit, who is compared both to fire and water. To the pure all things are pure.

25. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 26. Take the sum of the prey that was taken, both of man and of beast, thou, and Eleazar the priest, and the chief fathers of the congregation; 27. And divide the prey into two parts; between them that took the war upon them, who went out to battle, and between all the congregation: 28. And levy a tribute unto the Lord of the men of war which went out to battle: one soul of five hundred, both of the persons, and of the beees, and of the asses, and of the sheep. 29. Take it of their half, and give it unto Eleazar the priest, for a heave-offering of the Lord. 30. And of the children of Israel’s half, thou shalt take one portion of fifty, of the persons, of the beees, of the asses, and of the flocks, of all manner of beasts, and give them unto the Levites, which keep the charge of the tabernacle of the Lord. 31. And Moses and Eleazar the priest did as the Lord commanded Moses. 32. And the booty, being the rest of the prey which the men of war had caught, was six hundred thousand, and seventy thousand, and five thousand sheep. 33. And threecore and twelve thousand beees, 34. And threecore and one thousand asses, 35. And thirty and two thousand persons in all, of women that had not known man by lying with him. 36. And the half, which was the portion of them that went out to war, was in number three hundred thousand, and seven and thirty thousand, and five hundred sheep: 37. And the Lord’s tribute of the sheep was six hundred and threecore and fifteen. 38. And the beees were thirty and six thousand; of which the Lord’s tribute was threecore and twelve. 39. And the asses were thirty thousand and five hundred; of which the Lord’s tribute was threecore and one. 40. And the persons were sixeentce hundred thousand; of which the Lord’s tribute was thirty and two persons. 41. And Moses gave the tribute, which was the Lord’s heave-offering, unto Eleazar the priest; as the Lord commanded Moses. 42. And of the children of Israel’s half, which Moses divided from the men that warred, 43. (Now the half that pertained unto the congregation was three hundred thousand, and thirty thousand, and seven thousand and five hundred sheep, 44. And thirty and six thousand beesees, 45. And thirty thousand assses and five hundred, 46. And sixteen thousand persons.) 47. Even of the children of Israel's half, Moses took one portion of fifty, both of man and of beast, and gave them unto the Levites, which kept the charge of the tabernacle of the Lord; as the Lord commanded Moses.

We have here the distribution of the spoil which was taken in this expedition against Midian. God himself directed how it should be done, and Moses and Eleazar did according to the directions. And thus unhappy contests among themselves were prevented, and the victory was made the common benefit. It was fit that he who gave them the prey, should order the disposal of it: all we have is from God, and therefore must be subject to his will.

1. The prey is ordered to be divided into two parts; one for the 12,000 men that undertook the war, the other for the congregation. The prey that was divided, seems to have been only the captives, and the spoil of the things of value, jewels, and other goods, every man kept what he took, as is intimated, v. 50-55. That only was distributed, which would be of use for the stocking of that good land into which they were going. Now observe, (1.) That the one half of the prey was given to the whole congregation, Moses allotting to each tribe its share, and then leaving it to the heads of the tribes to divide their respective shares among themselves, according to the number of their families. That was undertaken on the behalf of the whole congregation, they would all have been ready to go to the help of the Lord against the mighty, if they had been so ordered, and they did help, it is likely, by their prayers, and therefore God appoints that they that tarried at home should divide the spoil, Ps. 68. 12. David, in his time, made it a statute and an ordinance for Israel, that as his part is that goes down to the battle, so shall his part be the portion with the stuff. 1 Sam. 30. 24; 25. Those that are employed in public trusts, must not think to benefit themselves only by their toils and hazards, but must aim at the advantage of the community. (2.) That the 12,000 that went to the battle, had as much for their share as the whole congregation (which were 50 times as many) had for their's; so that the particular persons of the congregation had much better for their's than any of their brethren that tarried at home; and good reason they should. The greater pains we take, and the greater hazards we run, in the service of God and our generation, the greater will our recompense be at last; for God is not unrighteous to forget the work and labour of love.

2. God was to have a tribute of it; as an acknowledgment of his sovereignty over them in general, and that he was their King, to whom tribute was due; and particularly of his interest in this war and the gains of it, he having given them their success; and that the priests, the Lord's receivers, might have something added to the provision made for their maintenance. Note, Whatever we have, God must have his dues out of it. And here (as before) the soldiers are favoured above the rest of the congregation, for out of the people's share God required one in fifty, but out of the soldiers, one in five hundred, because the people get their subsistence without any peril or fatigue. The less opportunity we have of honouring God with our personal services, the greater should our pecuniary contributions be. The tribute out of the soldiers' half was given to the priests, v. 29. That out of the people's half was given to the Levites, v. 50. For the priests were taken from among the Levites, as these soldiers from among the people, for special service, and hazardous, and their pay was accordingly.

48. And the officers which were over thousands, and captains of hundreds, came near unto Moses: 49. And they said unto Moses, Thy servants have taken the sum of the men of war which are under our charge, and there lacketh not one man of us. 50. We have therefore brought an oblution for the Lord, what every man hath gotten, of jewels of gold, chains, and bracelets, rings, ear-rings, and tablets, to make an atonement for our souls before the Lord. 51. And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of them, even all wrought jewels. 52. And all the gold of the offering that they offered up to the Lord, of the captains of thousands, and of the captains of hundreds, was sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty shekels. (For the men of war had taken spoil, every man for himself.) 54. And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and brought it into the tabernacle of the congregation, for a memorial for the children of Israel before the Lord.

Here is a great example of piety and devotion in the officers of the army; the colonels, that are called captains of thousands, and the inferior officers that were captains of hundreds; they came to Moses as their general and commander in chief; and, though he was now going off the stage, they very humbly and respectfully addressed themselves to him, calling themselves his servants; the honours they had won, did not puff them up, so as to make them forget their duty to him. Observe in their address to him,

1. The pious notice they take of God's wonderful goodness to them in this late expedition, in preserving not only their own lives, but the lives of all the men of war that they had under their charge; so that, upon the review of their muster-roll, it appeared there was not one missing, v. 49. This was very extraordinary, and perhaps cannot be paralleled in any history. So many thousand lives jeopardized in the high-places of the field, and not one lost, either by the sword of the enemy, or by disease or disaster. This was the Lord's doing, and cannot but be marvellous in the eyes of those that consider how the lives of all men, especially soldiers, are continually in their hands. It is an evidence of the tender feeling which these commanders had for their soldiers, and that their lives were very precious to them, that they looked upon it as a mercy to themselves, that none of those under their charge miscarried. Of all that were given them they had lost none; so precious also is the blood of Christ's subjects and soldiers unto him, Ps. 72. 14.

2. The pious acknowledgment they make for this favour, (v. 50.) Therefore we have brought an oblation to the Lord. The oblation they brought, was out of that which every man had gotten, and it was gotten honestly by a divine warrant. Thus every man should lay by, according as God had prospered him, 1 Cor. 16. 2. For where God sows plentifully in the gifts of his bounty, he expects to reap accordingly in the fruits of our piety and charity. The tabernacle first, and the temple afterward, were beautified and enriched with the spoils taken from the enemies of Israel; as by David, (2 Sam. 8, 11, 12.) and his captains, 1 Chron. 26, 26, 27. We should never take any thing to ourselves in war, or trade, which we cannot in faith consecrate a part to God, who hates robbery for burnt-offerings; but when God has remarkably preserved and succeeded us, he expects that we should make some particular return of gratitude to him.

As to this obligation, (1.) The captains offered it to make an atonement for their souls, v. 50. Instead of coming to Moses to demand a recompense for the good service they had done in avenging the Lord of Midian, or to set up trophies of their victory for the immortalizing of their own names, they bring an oblation to make atonement for their souls, being conscious to themselves, as the best men must be even in their best services, that they had been defective in their duty, not only in that instance for which they were reproved, (v. 14.) but in many others; for there is not a just man upon earth, that doeth good and sinneth not. (2.) Moses accepted it, and laid it upon the tabernacle as a memorial for the children of Israel; (v. 54.) that is, a monument of God's goodness to them, that they might be encouraged to trust in him in their further wars; and a memorial of his favor (as27.) to be set on record, and made to be remembered; that he, being well pleased with this thankful acknowledgment of favours bestowed, might continue and repeat his mercies to them.

CHAP. XXXII.

In this chapter, we have, 1. The humble request of the tribes of Reuben and Gad, for an inheritance on that side Jordan, where Israel now lay encamped, v. 1. 2. Moses's mis-interpretation of their request, v. 6. 15. 3. Their explanation of it, and stating it right, v. 16. 19. 4. The grant of their petition under the provisos and limitations which they themselves proposed, v. 20. 42. 1. NOW the children of Reuben, and the children of Gad, had a very great multitude of cattle: and when they saw the land of Jazer, and the land of Gilead, that, behold, the place was a place for cattle; 2. The children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, came and spake unto Moses, and to Eleazar the priest, and unto the princes of the congregation, saying, 3. Ataroth, and Dibon, and Jazer, and Nimrah, and Heshbon, and Elealeh, and Shobam, and Nebo, and Beon. 4. Even the country which the Lord smote before the congregation of Israel, is a land for cattle, and thy servants have cattle: 5. Whercfore, said they, if we have found grace in thy sight, let this land be given unto thy servants for a possession, and bring us not over Jordan. 6. And Moses said unto the children of Gad and to the children of Reuben, Shall your brethren go to war, and shall ye sit here? 7. And wherefore discourage ye the heart of the children of Israel from going over into the land which the Lord hath given them? 8. Thus did your fathers, when I sent them from Kadesh-barnah to see the land. 9. For when they went up unto the valley of Eschol, and saw the land, they discouraged the heart of the children of Israel, that they should not go into the land which the Lord had given them. 10. And the Lord's anger was kindled the same time, and he sware, saying, 11. Surely none of the men that came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upward, shall see the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob; because they have not wholly followed me; 12. Save Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kenezite, and Joshua the son of Nun; for they have wholly followed the Lord. 13. And the Lord's anger was kindled against Israel, and he made them wander in the wilderness forty years, until all the generation that had done evil in the sight of the Lord was consumed. 14. And, behold, ye are risen up in your father's stead, an increase of sinful men, to augment yet the fierce anger of the Lord toward Israel. 15. For if ye turn away from after him, he will yet again leave them in the wilderness, and ye shall destroy all this people.

Israel's tents were now pitched in the plains of Moab, where they continued many months, looking back upon the conquests they had already made in the land of Sihon and Og, and looking forward to Canaan, which they hoped to obtain in a little time to make themselves masters of. While they made this stand, and were at a pause, this great affair of the disposal of the conquests they had already made, was here concerted and settled, not by any particular order or appointment of God, but at the special instance and request of two of the tribes, which Moses, after a long debate that arose upon it, consented to. For even then, when so much was done by the extraordinary appearances of Divine Providence, many things were left to the conduct of human prudence: for God, in governing both the world and the church, makes use of the reason of men, and serves his own purposes by it.

1. Here is a motion made by the Reubenites and Gadites, that the land which they had lately possessed themselves of, and which in the right of conquest belonged to Israel in common, might be assigned to them in particular for their inheritance; upon the general idea they had of the land of Promise, they supposed this would be about their proportion. Reuben and Gad were encamped under the same standard, and so had the better opportunity of comparing notes, and settling this matter between themselves. In the first verse, the children of Reuben are named first, but afterward the children of Gad are, (v. 2, 25, 31.) either because the Gadites made the first motion, and were most forward for it, or because they were the better spokesmen, and had more of the art of management; Reuben's tribe still lying under Jacob's sentence, he shall not excel. Two things common in the world induced these tribes to make this choice, and this motion upon it, the lust of the eye, and the pride of life, 1 John 2. 16. 1. The lust of the eye. This land which they coveted, was not only beautiful in situation, and pleasant to the eye, but it was good for food, feed for cattle; and they had a great multitude of cattle, above the rest of the tribes, it is supposed, because they brought more out of Egypt than the rest did, but that was forty years before; and stocks of cattle increase and decrease in less time than that; therefore I rather think that they had been better husbands of their cattle in the wilderness, had tended them better, had taken more care of the breed, and not been so profuse as their neighbours in eating the lambs out of the flock, and calves out of the midst of the stall. Now they, having these large stocks, coveted land proportionable. Many scriptures speak of Bashan and Gilgal as places famous for gold; they had been so already, and therefore these tribes hoped they would be so to them, and whatever comes of it, here they desire to take their lot. The judicious Calvin thinks there was much amiss in the principle they went upon, and that they consulted their own private convenience more than the public good; that they had not such regard to the honour and interest of Israel, and the promise made to Abraham over and above that of Canaan, (stated so clearly) a thing they ought to have had. And still, it is too true, that many seek their own things more than the things of Jesus Christ, (Phil. 2. 21.) and that many are influenced by their secular interest and advantage to take up short of the heavenly Canaan. Their spirits agree too well with this world, and with the things that are seen, that are temporal; and they say, “It is good to be here,” and so lose what is hereafter. Let every one choose the sight of the eye, and smarted for his choice. Would we choose our portion aright, we must look above the things that are seen. 2. Perhaps there was something of the pride of life in it. Reuben was the first-born of Israel, but he had lost his birth-right; divers of the tribes, and Judah especially, had risen above him, so that he could not expect the best lot in Canaan; and therefore, to save the shadow of a birth-right, when he had forfeited the substance, he here catches at the first lot, though it was out of Canaan, and far off from the tabernacle. Thus Esau sold his birth-right, and yet got to be saved first with an inheritance in mount Seir. The tribe of Gad descended from the first-born of Zilpah, and were like pretenders with the Reubenites; and Manasseh too was a first-born, but knew he must be eclipsed by Ephraim his younger brother, and therefore he also coveted to get precedence.

II. Moses’s dislike of this motion, and the severe rebuke he gives to it, as a faithful prince and prophet.

It must be confessed that, prima facie—at first sight, the thing looked ill, especially the closing words of their petition, (v. 5.) Bring us over Jordan. 1. It seemed to be a bad principle, in contempt of the land of promise, which Moses himself was so desirous of a sight of; a distrust too of the power of God to dispossess the Canaanites; as if a lot in a land which they knew, and which was already conquered, was more desirable than a lot in a land they knew not, and which was yet to be conquered; one bird in the hand is worth two in the bush; there seemed also to be covetousness in it, for that which they insisted on, was, that it was convenient for their cattle: it argued likewise a neglect of their brethren, as if they cared not what became of Israel, while they themselves were well-provided for. 2. It might have been of bad consequence. The people might have taken improper hints from it, and have suggested that they were few enough, when they had their whole number, to deal with the Canaanites, but they would now much rather be, if they should drop two tribes and a half (above a fifth part of their strength) on this side Jordan. It would likewise be a bad precedent; if they must have the land thus granted them as soon as it was conquered, other tribes might make the same pretensions and claims, and so the regular disposition of the land by lot would be anticipated.

Moses is therefore very warm upon them, which is to be imputed to his pious zeal against sin, and not to any peevishness, the effect of old age, for his meekness abated not, any more than his natural force.

(1.) He shows them what he apprehended to be in this motion, that it would discourage the heart of their brethren, v. 6, 7. “What!” (says he, with a holy indignation at their selfishness,) “Shall your brethren go to war, and expose themselves to all the hardships and hazards of the field, and shall you sit here at your ease? No, do not mistake yourselves, you shall never be indulged by me in this sloth and cowardice.” It ill becomes any of God’s Israel to sit down unconcerned in the difficult and perilous concerns of their brethren, whether public or personal.

(2.) He reminds them of the fatal consequences of the unbelief and faint-heartedness of their fathers, when they were, as these here, just ready to enter Canaan. He recites the story very particularly, (v. 8-13.) Thus did your fathers, whose punishment should be a warning to you to take heed of sinning after the similitude of their transgression.

(3.) He gives them fair warning of the mischief that would be likely to follow upon this separation which they were about to make from the camp of Israel; they would be in danger of bringing wrath upon the whole congregation, and hurrying them all back again into the wilderness, v. 14, 15. “Ye are risen up in your fathers’ stead, to despise the pleasant land and reject it as they did, when we hoped ye were risen up in their stead to possess it.” It was an encouragement to Moses to see what an increase of men they were, but a discouragement to see that they were withal an increase of sinful men, treading in the steps of their father’s impiety. It is sad when we observe, as too often we may, that the rising generation in families and countries is not only no better, but worse, than that which went before it; and what comes of it? Why, it augments the fire and anger of the Lord; not only continues that fire, but increases it, and fills the measure often, till it overflows in a deluge of desolation. Note, If men did consider as they ought, what would be the end of sin, they would be afraid of the beginnings of it.

16. And they came near unto him, and said, We will build sheep-folds here for our cattle, and cities for our little ones; 17. But we ourselves will go ready armed before the children of Israel, until we have brought them unto their place: and our little ones shall dwell in the fenced cities, because of the inhabitants of the land. 18. We will not return unto our houses, until the children of Israel have inherited every man his inheritance: 19. For we will not inherit with them on yonder side Jordan, or forward; because our inheritance is fallen to us on this side Jordan eastward. 20. And Moses said unto them, If ye will do this thing, if ye will go armed before the Lord to war, 21. And will go all of you armed over Jordan before the Lord, until he hath driven out his enemies from before him, 22. And the land be subdued before the Lord; then afterward ye shall return, and be guiltless before the Lord, and before Israel; and this land shall be your possession before the Lord. 23. But if ye will not do so, behold, ye have sinned against the Lord: and be sure your sin will find you out. 24. Build ye cities for your little ones, and folds for your sheep; and do that which hath proceeded out of your mouth. 25. And the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, spake unto Moses, saying, Thy servants will do as my lord commandeth. 26. Our little ones, our wives, our flocks, and all our cattle, shall be there in the cities of Gilead; 27. But thy servants will pass over, every man armed for war, before the Lord to battle, as my lord saith.

We have here the accommodating of the matter between Moses and the two tribes, about their settlement on this side Jordan. Probably, the petitioners withdrew, and considered with themselves what answer they should return to the severe reproof Moses had given them; and, after some consultation, they return with this proposal, that their men of war should go and assist their brethren in the conquest of Canaan, and they would leave their families and flocks behind them in this land: and thus they might have their inheritances and no harm would be done.

Now it is uncertain whether they designed this at first when they brought their petition or no. 1. If they did, it is an instance how often that which is honestly meant, is unhappily misinterpreted. Yet Moses herein was excusable, for he had reason to suspect the ulterior of them, and the rebuke he gave them, was from the abundance of cause to prevent sin. 2. But if they did not, it is an instance of the good effect of plain dealing: Moses, by showing them their sin, and the danger of it, brought them to their duty without murmuring or disputing. They object not that their brethren were able to contend with the Canaanites without their help, especially since they were sure of God’s fighting for them; but they engage themselves to the service of the public.

1. Their proposal is very fair and generous, and such as, instead of discouraging, would rather encourage, their brethren. 1. That their men of war, who were fit for service, would go ready armed before the children of Israel into the land of Canaan; so far would they be from deserting them, that, if they were thought fit, they would lead them on, and be foremost in all dangerous enterprises. So far were they from either distrustling or despising the conquest of Canaan, that they would assist in it with the utmost readiness and resolution. 2. That they would leave their families and cattle behind them, who would have been but the incumbrance of their camp, and so they would be the more serviceable to their brethren. v. 16. 3. That they would not return to their possessions till the conquest of Canaan was completed, v. 18. Their brethren should have their help as long as they needed it. 4. That yet they would not expect any share of the land that was yet to be conquered, v. 19, “We will not desire to inherit with them, nor, under colour of assisting them in the war, put in for a share with them in the land; no, we will be content with our inheritance on this side Jordan, and there will be so much the more on yonder side for them.”

Moses would have generals upon the consideration that they would adhere to their proposals. 1. He insists much upon it that they should never lay down their arms till their brethren laid down their’s. They promised to go armed before the children of Israel, v. 17. “Nay,” says Moses, “thou art not armed before the Lord, v. 20. 21. It is God’s cause more than your brethren’s, and to him you must have an eye, not to them only.” Before the Lord, that is, before the ark of the Lord, the token of his presence, which, it should seem, they carried about with them in the wars of Canaan, and immediately before which these two tribes were posted, as we find in the order of their march, ch. 10. 17. 2. Upon this condition, he grants them the land, and neither sin nor blame should cleave to it; neither sin before God, nor blame before Israel; and whatever possessions we have, it is desirable thus to come guiltless to them. But, 3. He warns them of the danger of breaking their word; If you fail, you sin against the Lord, (v. 23.) and not against your brethren only, and be sure your sin will find you out; that is, God will certainly reckon with you for it, though you may make a light matter of it.” Note, Sin will, without doubt, find out the sinner sooner or later. It concerns us therefore to find our sins out that we may repent of them, and forsake them lest our sins find us out to our ruin and confusion.

III. They unanimously agree to the provisos and conditions of the grant, and do, as it were, give bond for performance, by a solemn promise, (v. 24.) Thy servants will do as thou, Lord commands. Their brethren had all contributed their assistance to the conquest of this country, which they desired for a possession, and therefore they owned themselves obliged in justice to help them in the conquest of that which was to be their possession. Having received kindness, we ought to return it, though it was not so conditioned when we received it. We may suppose that this promise was understood, on which they agreed to oblige all that were numbered of these tribes to go over armed, but these only that were fittest for the expedition, that would be most serviceable, while it was necessary that some should be left to till the ground, and guard the country; and accordingly, that about 46,000 of the two tribes and a half went over armed, (Josh. 4.13.) whereas their whole number was about 160,000.

28. So concerning them Moses commanded Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the chief fathers of the tribes of the children of Israel: 29. And Moses said unto them, If the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, will pass with you over Jordan, every man armed to battle before the Lord, and the land shall be subdued before you, then ye shall give them the land of Gilead for a possession: 30. But if they will not pass over with you armed, they shall have possessions among you in the land of Canaan. 31. And the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, answered, saying, As the Lord hath said unto thy servants, so will we do. 32. We will pass over armed before the Lord into the land of Canaan, that the possession of our inheritance on this side Jordan may be ours. 33. And Moses gave unto them, even to the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, and unto half the tribe of Manasseh the son of Joseph, the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og king of Bashan, the land, with the cities thereof in the coasts, even the cities of the country round about. 34. And the children of Gad built Dibon, and Ataroth, and Aroer, 35. And Atroth, Shophan, and Jaazer, and Jogbehah, 36. And Beth-nimrah, and Beth-haran, fenced cities; and folds for sheep. 37. And the children of Reuben built Heshbon, and Eleaeh, and Kirjathaim, 38. And Nebo, and Baal-meon, (their names being changed,) and Shibmah: and gave other names unto the cities which they built. 39. And the children of Machir, the son of Manasseh, went to Gilead, and took it, and dispossessed the Amorite which was in it. 40. And Moses gave Gilead unto Machir the son of Manasseh; and he dwelt therein. 41. And Jair, the son of Manasseh, went and took the small towns thereof, and called them Havoth-jair. 42. And Nobah went and took Kedemoth, and the villages thereof, and called it Nobah, after his own name.

Here, 1. Moses settles this matter with Eleazar, and with Joshua who was to be his successor, knowing that he himself must not live to see it perfected, v. 28. 30. He gives them an estate upon condition, leaving it to Joshua, if they fulfilled the condition, to declare the estate absolute. "If they will not go over with you," he does not say, "you shall give them no inheritance at all," but "you shall not give them this inheritance which they covet. If their militia will not come over with you, compel the whole tribes to come over, and let them take their lot with their brethren, and fare as they fare; they shall have possessions in Canaan, and let them not expect that the lot will favour them." Hereupon they repeat their promise to adhere to their brethren, v. 31, 32.

2. Moses settles them in the land they desired. He gave it them for a possession, v. 33. Here is the first mention of the half tribe of Manasseh, coming in with them for a share; probably, they had not joined with them in the petition, but the land, when it came to be apportioned, proving to be too much for them, this half to put them among them, either at their request, or by divine direction, or because they had signalized themselves in the conquest of this country; for the children of Machir, a stout and warlike family, had taken Gilead, and dispossessed the Amorites, v. 35. "Let them win it and wear it; get it and take it." And they being celebrated for their courage and bravery, it was for the common good, and put them in this part of the country. Concerning the settlement of these tribes here; Observe, (1.) That they built the cities, that is, repaired them, because either they had been damaged by the war, or the Amorites had suffered them to go decay. (2.) That they changed the names of them; (v. 33.) either to show their authority, that the change of the names might signify the change of their owners; or because the names were idolatrous, and carried in them a respect to the dunghill-deities that were there worshipped. Nebo and Baal were names of their gods, which they were forbidden to make mention of, (Exod. 23. 13.) and which, by changing the names of these cities, they endeavoured to bury in oblivion; and God promises to take away the names of Baalim out of the mouths of his people, Hos. 2. 17.

Lastly, It is observable, that as these tribes were now first placed before the other tribes, so, long afterward, they were displaced before the other tribes. We find that they were carried captive into Assyria, some years before the other tribes, 2 Kings, 15. 29. Such a proportion does Providence sometimes observe, in balancing prosperity and adversity: he sets the one over against the other.

CHAP. XXXIII.

In this chapter, we have, 1. A particular account of the removes and encampments of the children of Israel, from their escape out of Egypt to their entrance into Canaan; forty-two in all; with some remarkable events that happened at some of those places, v. 1. 49. 11. A strict command given to drive out all the inhabitants of the land of Canaan, which they were now going to conquer and take possession of, v. 50. 56. So that the former part of the chapter looks back upon their march through the wilderness, the latter looks forward to their settlement in Canaan.

1. THESE are the journeys of the children of Israel, which went forth out of the land of Egypt with their armies, under the hand of Moses and Aaron. 2. And Moses wrote their goings out according to their journeys, by the commandment of the Lord: and these are their journeys according to their goings out. 3. And they departed from Rameses in the first month, on the fifteenth day of the first month: on the morrow after the passover the children of Israel went out with a high hand in the sight of all the Egyptians. 4. (For the Egyptians buried all their first-born which the Lord had smitten among them: upon their gods also the Lord executed judgments.) 5. And the children of Israel removed from Rameses, and pitched in Succoth. 6. And they departed from Succoth, and pitched in Etham, which is in the edge of the wilderness. 7. And they removed from Etham, and turned again unto Pi-hahiroth, which is before Baal-zephon; and they pitched before Migdol. 8. And they departed from before Pi-hahiroth, and passed through the midst of the sea into the wilderness, and went three days' journey in the wilderness of Etham, and pitched in Marah. 9. And they removed from Marah, and came unto Elim: and in Elim were twelve fountains of water, and threescore and ten palm-trees; and they pitched there. 10. And they removed from Elim, and encamped by the Red Sea. 11. And they removed from the Red Sea, and encamped in the wilderness of Sin. 12. And they took their journey out of the wilderness of Sin, and encamped in Dophkah. 13. And they departed from Dophkah, and encamped in Alush. 14. And they removed from Alush, and encamped at Rephidim, where was no water for the people to drink. 15. And they departed from Rephidim, and pitched in the wilderness of Sinai. 16. And they removed from the desert of Sinai, and pitched at Kibroth-hattaavah. 17. And they departed from Kibroth-hattaavah, and encamped at Hazeroth. 18. And they departed from Hazeroth, and pitched in Rithmah. 19. And they departed from Rithmah, and pitched at Rimmon-parez. 20. And they departed from Rimmon-parez, and pitched in Libnah. 21. And they removed from Libnah, and pitched at Rissah. 22. And they journeyed from Rissah, and pitched in Keelahath. 23. And they went from Keelahath, and pitched in mount Shapher. 24. And they removed from mount Shapher, and encamped in Haradah. 25. And they removed from Haradah, and pitched in Makeloth. 26. And they removed from Makeloth, and encamped at Tahath. 27. And they departed from Tahath, and pitched at Makheloth. 28. And they removed from Makheloth, and pitched in Dibon-gad. 29. And they pitched in the wilderness of Zin, which is Kadesh. 30. And they departed from Kadesh, and pitched in mount Hor, in the edge of the land of Edom. 31. And Aaron the priest went up into mount Hor, at the commandment of the Lord, and died there, in the fortieth year after the children of Israel were come out of the land of Egypt, in the first day of the fifth month. 32. And Aaron was a hundred and twenty and three years old when he died in mount Hor. 33. And king Arad the Canaanite, which dwelt in the south, in the land of Canaan, heard of the coming of the children of Israel. 34. And they departed from mount Hor, and pitched in Zalmonah. 35. And they departed from Zalmonah, and pitched in Punon. 36. And they departed from Punon, and pitched in Oboth. 37. And they departed from Oboth, and pitched in Ije-abarim, in the border of Moab. 38. And they departed from Ije-abarim, and pitched in Dibon-gad. 39. And they removed from Dibon-gad, and encamped in Almon-diblathaim. 40. And they removed from Almon-diblathaim, and pitched in the mountains of Abarim, before Nebo. 41. And they departed from the mountains of Abarim, and pitched in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho. 42. And they pitched by Jordan from Beth-jesimoth, even unto Abel shittim, in the plains of Moab.

This is a review and brief rehearsal of the travels of the children of Israel through the wilderness; it was a memorable history, and well worthy to be thus abridged, and when thus abridged, to be preserved, to the honour of God that led them, and for the encouragement of the generations that followed. Observe here,

1. How the account was kept, (v. 2.) Moses wrote that great book or record when they began this tedious march, God ordered him to keep at first an original or diary, and to insert in it all the remarkable occurrences of their way, that it might be a satisfaction to himself in the review, and an instruction to others when it should be published. It may be of good use to private Christians, but especially for those in public stations, to preserve in writing an account of the providences of God concerning them, and of the constant series of events they have endured, especially those turns and changes which have made some days of their lives more remarkable. Our memories are deceitful and need this help, that we may remember all the way which the Lord our God has led us in this wilderness, Deut. 8. 2.

2. What the account itself was. It began with their departure out of Egypt, continued with their march through the wilderness, and ended in the plains of Moab, where they now lay encamped before Sinai.

(1.) Some things are observed here concerning their departure out of Egypt, which are reminded of upon all occasions, as a work of wunder never to be forgotten. [1.] That they went forth with their armies, (v. 1.) rank and file, as an army with banners. [2.] Under the hand of Moses and Aaron, their guides, overseers, and rulers, under God. [3.] With a high hand, because God’s hand was high that wrought for them, and in the sight of all the Egyptians, (v. 3.) They did not steal away clandestinely, (Isa. 52. 12.) but in defiance of their enemies, to whom God had made them such a burthensome stone, that they neither could, nor would, nor durst, oppose them. [4.] They went forth while the Egyptians were burying, or at least preparing to bury, their first-born. [5.] To all appearance, Egypt was now ended here, v. e. of their gods also the Lord executed judgments. Their idols, which they worshipped, it is probable, were broken down, as Dagon afterward before the ark; so that they could not consult them about this great affair. To this perhaps there is a reference, Isa. 19. 1. The idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence.

(2.) Concerning their travels towards Canaan. Observe, [1.] They were continually upon the remove. When they had pitched a little while in one place, they departed from that to another. Such is our state in this world; we have here no continuing city. [2.] Most of their way lay through a wilderness uninhabited, untraveled, unfurnished even with the necessaries of human life; which their providence supplied, and by wonderful conduct and bounty the thousands of Israel not only subsisted for forty years in that desolate place, but came out at least as numerous and vigorous as they went in. At first, they pitched in the edge of the wilderness, (v. 6.) but afterward, in the heart of it; by lesser difficulties God prepares his people for greater. We find them in the wilderness of Edam, (v. 8.) of Sin, (v. 11.) of Sinai, (v. 15.) Our removes in this world are but freer one wilderness to another. [3.] That they were led to and fro, forward and backward, as in a maze or labyrinth, and yet were all the while under the direction of the pillar of cloud and fire. He led them about, (Deut. 32. 10.) and yet led them the right way, Ps. 107. 7. The way which God takes in bringing his people to himself, is always the best way, though it does not always seem to us the nearest way. [4.] Some events are mentioned in this journal, as their want of water at Rephidim, (v. 14.) the death of Aaron, (v. 36, 38,) the insult of Arad, (v. 40.) and the very name of Rephidim, or the graves of lusts, (v. 16.) has a story depending upon it. Thus we ought to keep in mind the providences of God concerning us and our families, us and our land; and the many instances of that divine care which led us, and fed us, and kept us, all our days till hitherto. Shittim, the place where the people sinned in the matter of Peor, (ch. 25. 1.) is here called Abel-shittim; Abel signifies mourning, (as Gen. 50. 11.) and, probably, this place was so called from the mourning of the good people of Israel for that sin, and God's wrath against them for it. It was so great a mourning, that it gave a name to the place.

50. And the Lord spake unto Moses in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho, saying, 51. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye are passed over Jordan, into the land of Canaan; 52. Then ye shall drive out all the inhabitants of the land from before you, and destroy all their pictures, and destroy all their molten images, and quite pluck down all their high places. 53. And ye shall dispossess the inhabitants of the land, and dwell therein: for I have given you the land to possess it. 54. And ye shall divide the land by lot for an inheritance among your families; and to the more ye shall give the more inheritance, and to the fewer ye shall give the less inheritance: every man's inheritance shall be in the place where his lot fell; according to the tribes of your fathers ye shall inherit. 55. But if ye will not drive out the inhabitants of the land from before you; then it shall come to pass, that those which ye let remain of them, shall be pricks in your eyes, and thorns in your sides, and shall vex you in the land wherein ye dwell. 56. Moreover, it shall come to pass, that I shall do unto you, as I thought to do unto them.

While the children of Israel were in the wilderness, their total separation from all other people kept them out of all idolatry; and perhaps that was one thing intended by their long confinement in the wilderness, that thereby the idols of Egypt might be forgotten, and the people aired (as it were) and purified from infection, and the generation that entered Canaan, might be such as never knew those depths of Satan. But now that they were to pass over Jordan, they were entering again into that temptation, and therefore;

1. They are strictly charged utterly to destroy all the remnants of idolatry: they must not only drive out the inhabitants of the land, that they might possess their country, but they must deface all their idolatrous pictures and images, and pull down all their high places, v. 52. They must not preserve any of them, no not as monuments of antiquity to gratify the curious, or as ornaments of the houses, or toys for their children to play with, but they must destroy all; both in token of their abhorrence and detestation of idolatry, and to prevent their being tempted to worship those images, and the false gods represented by them, or to worship the God of Israel by such images or representations.

2. They are assured that if they did so, God would by degrees put them in full possession of the land of promise, v. 53, 54. If they would keep themselves pure from the idols of Canaan, God would enrich them with the wealth of Canaan. Learn not their way, and then fear not their power.

3. They are threatened that if they spared either the idols or the idolaters, they should be beaten with their own rod, and their sin would certainly be their punishment. (1.) They would foster snakes in their own bosoms, v. 55. The remnant of the Canaanites, if they made any league with them, though it were but a cessation of arms, would be frics in their eyes, and thorns in their sides, that is, they would be upon all occasions vexatious to them, insulting them, robbing them, and, to the utmost of their power, making mischief among them. We must expect trouble and affliction from that, whatever it is, which we sinfully indulge; that which we are willing to take, we shall find will vex us. (2.) The righteous God would turn that wheel upon the Israelites, which was to have crushed the Canaanites; (v. 56.) I shall do to you as I thought to do unto them. It was intended that the Canaanites should be dispossessed, but if the Israelites fell in with them, and learned their way, they should be dispossessed, for God's displeasure would justly be greater against them than against Canaan; for they themselves were not so pure this, and fear. If we do not drive sin out, sin will drive us out; if we be not the death of our lusts, our lusts will be the death of our souls.

CHAP. XXXIV.

In this chapter God directs Moses, and he is to direct Israel, I. Concerning the bounds and borders of the land of Canaan, v. 1. 15. II. Concerning the division and distribution of it to the tribes of Israel, v. 16. 29.

A ND the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 2. Command the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye come into the land of Canaan, (this is the land that shall fall unto you for an inheritance, even the land of Canaan, with the coasts thereof,) 3. Then your south quarter shall be from the wilderness of Zin, along by the coast of Edom; and your south border shall be the utmost coast of the salt sea eastward. 4. And your border shall turn from the south to the ascent of Akrabim, and pass on to Zin: and the going forth thereof shall be from the south to Kadesh-barnea, and shall go on to Hazar addar, and pass on to Azmon. 5. And the border shall fetch a compass from Azmon unto the river of Egypt, and the goings out of it shall be at the sea. 6. And as for the western border, you shall even have the great sea for a border: this shall be your west border. 7. And this shall be your north border, from the great sea you shall point out for you mount Hor. 8. From mount Hor ye shall point out your border unto the entrance of Hamath: and the goings forth of the border shall be to Zedad. 9. And the border shall go on to Ziphron, and the goings out of it shall be at Hazar-enan: this shall be your north border. 10. And ye shall point out your east border from Hazar-enan to Shepham. 11. And the coast shall go down from Shepham to Riblah, on the east side of Ain; and the border shall descend, and shall reach unto the side of the sea of Chinnereth eastward. 12. And the border shall go down to Jordan, and the goings out of it shall be at the salt sea: this shall be your land, with the coasts thereof round about. 13. And Moses commanded the children of Israel, saying, This is the land which ye shall inherit by lot, which the Lord commanded to give unto the nine tribes, and to the half tribe. 14. For the tribe of the children of Reuben according to the house of their fathers, and the tribe of the children of Gad according to the house of their fathers, have received their inheritance, and half the tribe of Manasseh have received their inheritance: 15. The two tribes and the half tribe have received their inheritance on this side Jordan near Jericho, eastward, toward the sunrising.

We have here a particular draught of the line, by which the land of Canaan was meted, and bounded, on all sides. God directs Moses to settle here, not as a geographer in his map, only to please the curious, but as a prince in his grant, that it may be certainly known what passes, and is conveyed, by the grant. There was a much larger possession promised them, in which due time they should be possessed of, if they had been obedient, reaching even to the river Euphrates. Deut. 11. 24. And even so far the dominion of Israel did extend in David's time and Solomon's, 2 Chron. 9. 26. But this here described is Canaan only, which was the lot of the nine tribes, and a half, for the other two and a half were already settled, v. 14, 15: Now concerning the limits of Canaan, observe, 1. That it was limited within certain bounds, for God appoints the bounds of our habitation, Acts 17. 26. The borders are set them. (1.) That they might know whom they were to dispose of, and how far the commission which was given them extended, (ch. 33. 33.) that they should drive out the inhabitants. Those that lay within these borders, and those only, they must destroy; litterso their bloody sword must go, and no farther. (2.) That they might know whom they were to possess, and what bounds to set them to themselves. God would not have his people to enlarge their desire of worldly possessions, but to know when they have enough, and to rest satisfied with it. The Israelites themselves must not be placed alone in the midst of the earth, but must leave room for their neighbours to live by them. God sets bounds to our lot; let us then set bounds to our desires, and bring our mind to our condition. 2. That it lay (comparatively) in a very little compass: as it is here bounded, it is reckoned to be but about 160 miles in length, and about 50 in breadth; perhaps it did not contain more than half as much ground as England; and yet this is the country which was promised to the father of the faithful, and was the possession of the seed of Israel. This was that little spot of ground in which only, for many ages, God was known, and his name was great, Ps. 76. 1. This was the vineyard of the Lord, the Lord's vineyard, Ps. 80. 12; but as it is with gardens and vineyards, the narrowness of the extent was abundantly compensated by the extraordinary fruitfulness of the soil, otherwise it could not have subsisted so numerous a nation as did inhabit it. See here then, (1.) How little a part of the world God has for himself; though the earth is his, and the fulness thereof; yet few have the knowledge of him, and serve him; but the few are happy, very happy, because fruitful to God. (2.) To have a share of the world God often gives to his own people. They that have their portion in heaven, have reason to be content with a small pittance of this earth; but as here, what is wanting in quantity, is made up in quality; a little that a righteous man has, having it from the love of God, and with his blessing, is far better and more comfortable than the riches of many wicked, Ps. 37. 16, 17.

3. It is observable what the bounds and limits of it were; (1.) Canaan was itself a pleasant land, (so it is called, Dan. 8. 9.) and yet it bordered upon wildernesses and seas, and was surrounded with divers melancholy prospects. Thus the vineyard of the church is compassed on all hands with the desert of this world, which serves as a foil to it, to make it appear the more beautiful for situation. (2.) Many of its borders were its defences, and natural fortifications, to render the access of its enemies the more difficult; to intimate to them that the God of nature was their Protector, and with his favour would compass them as with a shield. (3.) The border reached to the river of Egypt, (v. 5.) that the sight of that country which they could look into out of their own, might remind them of their bondage there, and their wonderful deliverance thence. (1.) Their border is here made to begin at the Salt Sea, (v. 3.) and there it ends, v. 12. That was the remaining lasting monument of the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah; that pleasant fruitful vale in which these cities stood, became a lake, which was never stirred by any wind, bore no vessels, was replenished with no fish, no living creature of any sort being found in it, therefore called the Dead Sea; this was part of their border, that it might be a constant warning to them, and that they might be haunted with the memory of those sins which had been the ruin of Sodom; yet the iniquity of Sodom was afterward found in Israel, Ezek. 16. 49. For which, Canaan was made, though not a salt sea as Sodom, yet a barren soil, and continues so to this day. (5.) Their western border was the Great Sea, (v. 6.) which is now called the Mediterranean. Some make that sea itself to be the bound of this possession; and that, by virtue of this grant, they had the dominion of it, and if they had not forfitted it by sin, might have rode masters of it.

16. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 17. These are the names of the men which shall divide the land unto you; Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun. 18. And ye shall take one prince of every tribe, to divide the land by inheritance. 19. And the names of the men are these: of the tribe of Judah, Caleb the son of Jephunneh. 20. And of the tribe of the children of Simeon, Shemuel the son of Ammiuh. 21. Of the tribe of Benjamin, Elidad the son of Chislon. 22. And the prince of the tribe of the children of Dan, Bukki the son of Jogli. 23. The prince of the children of Joseph, for the tribe of the children of Manasseh, Hanniel the son of Ephod. 24. And the prince of the tribe of the children of Ephraim, Kemuel the son of Shiphtan. 25. And the prince of the tribe of the children of Zebullon, Elizaphan the son of Parnach. 26. And the prince of the tribe of the children of Issachar, Paltiel the son of Azzan. 27. And the prince of the tribe of the children of Asher, Ahihuud the son of Shelomi. 28. And the prince of the tribe of the children of Naphtali, Pedahel the son of Ammiuh. 29. These are they whom the Lord commanded to divide the inheritance unto the children of Israel in the land of Canaan.

God here appoints commissioners for the dividing of the land to them. The conquist of it is taken for granted, though as yet there was never a stroke struck toward it; here is no nomination of the generals and commanders in chief that should carry on the war; for they were to get the land in possession, not by their own sword or bow, but by the power and favour of God; and so confident they were; for God himself undertook to give them the land, that the persons must now be named, who should be intrusted with the dividing of the land, that is, who should preside in casting the lots, and determine controversies that might arise, and see that all was done fairly.

1. The principal commissioners, who were of the Quorun, were Eleazar and Joshua, (v. 17.) typifying Christ, who, as Priest and King, divides the heavens and the earth in the person of the tabernacle, which is the spiritual model of the visible; yet they were to go by the lot, so Christ acknowledges this disposal must be by the will of the Father, Matt. 20. 23. Compare Eph. 1. 11.

2. Beside these, that there might be no suspicion of partiality, a prince of each tribe was employed to inspect this matter, and to see that the tribe he served for, was by no means injured. Public affairs should be so managed, as not only to give their right to all, but, if possible, to give satisfaction to all that they have right done them. It is a happiness to a land, to have the princes of their people meet together, some out of every tribe, to concert the affairs that are of common concern; a constitution, which is the abundant honour, ease, and safety, of the nation that is blessed with it.

Some observe that the order of the tribes here very much differs from that in which they had hitherto, upon all occasions, been named, and agrees with the neighbourhood of their lots in the division of the land. Judah, Simeon, and Benjamin, the three first here named, lay close together; the inheritance of Dan lay next them on one side; that of Ephraim and Manasseh on another side; Zebullon and Issachar lay abreast more northerly; and lastly, Asher and Naphtali more northward of all, as is easy to observe in looking over a map of Canaan: this (says Bishop Patrick) is an evidence that Moses was guided by a divine Spirit in his writings. Known unto God are all his works beforehand, and what is new and surprising to us, he perfectly foresaw, without any confusion or uncertainty.

CHAP. XXXV.

Orders having been given before for the dividing of the land of Canaan among the lay-tribes, (as I may call them,) care is here taken for a committee for the clergy, the tribe of Levi, which minisitered in holy things. 1. Forty-eight cities were to be assigned them, with their suburbs, some in every tribe, v. 1-8. Six cities of these were to be for cities of refuge, for any man that killed another, unawares, v. 9-15. In the law concerning these, observe, 1. In what cases sanctuary was not allowed, not in case of wilful murder, v. 10-12. In what cases it was allowed, v. 22, 24. 3. What was the law concerning those that took shelter in these cities of refuge, v. 25-34.

1. AND the Lord spake unto Moses in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho, saying, 2. Command the children of Israel, that they give unto the Levites, of the inheritance of their possession, cities to dwell in; and ye shall give also unto the Levites suburbs for the cities round about them. 3. And the cities they shall have to dwell in; and the suburbs of them shall be for their cattle, and for their goods, and for all their beasts. 4. And the suburbs of the cities, which ye shall give unto the Levites, shall reach from the wall of the city outward, a thousand cubits round about.

5. And ye shall measure from without the city on the east side two thousand cubits, and on the south side two thousand cubits, and on the west side two thousand cubits, and on the north side two thousand cubits; and the city shall be in the midst: this shall be to them the suburbs of the city. 6. And among the cities which ye shall give unto the Levites, there shall be six cities for refuge, which ye shall appoint for the man-slayer, that he may flee thither: and to them ye shall add forty and two cities.

7. So all the cities which ye shall give to the Levites shall be forty and eight cities: them shall ye give with their suburbs. 8. And the cities which ye shall give shall be of the possession of the children of Israel: from them that have many ye shall give many; but from them that have few ye shall give few: every one shall give of his cities unto the Levites, according to his inheritance which he inheriteth.

The laws about the tithes and offerings had provided very minutely for the maintenance of the Levites; but it was not to be thought, nor indeed was it for the public good, that when they came to Canaan, they should all live about the tabernacle, as they had done in the wilderness, and therefore care must be taken to provide habitations for them, in which they might live comfortably and usefully. That is it, which is here taken care of.

1. Cities were allotted them, with their suburbs. 2. They were not to have any ground for tillage; they needed not to sew, or reap, or gather into barns, for their heavenly Father fed them with the tithe of the increase of other people's labours, that they might more the closely attend the study of the law, and might have more leisure to teach the people; for they were not fed thus easily, that they might live in idleness, but that they might give themselves wholly to the business of their profession, and not be entangled in the affairs of this life.

(1.) Cities were allotted them, that they might live near together, and converse with one another about the law, to their mutual edification; and in doing so they might consult another, in all cases strengthen one another’s hands.

(2.) These cities had suburbs annexed to them for their cattle; Is 3. a thousand cubits from the wall was allowed them for out-housing to keep their cattle in, and then two thousand more for fields to graze their cattle in, v. 4, 5. Thus was care taken that they should not only live, but live plentifully, and have all desirable conveniences about them, that they might not be looked upon with contempt by their neighbours.

2. These cities were to be assigned them out of the possessions of each tribe, v. 8. (1.) That each tribe might thus make a grateful acknowledgment to God out of their real as well as out of their personal estates; for what was given to the Levites, was accepted as given to the Lord; and thus their possessions were sanctified to them. (2.) That each tribe might have the benefit of the Levites’ dwelling among them, to teach them the good knowledge of the Lord; thus that light was diffused through all parts of the country, and none left to sit in darkness, Deut. 33. 10. They shall teach Jacob the judgments. Jacob’s curse on Levi’s anger, was, I will scatter them in Israel, Gen. 49. 7. But that curse was turned into a blessing, and the Levites, by being thus scattered, were put into a capacity of doing so much the more good. It is a great mercy to a country, to be replenished in all parts with faithful ministers. The number allotted them, was forty-eight in all; four out of each of the twelve tribes, one with another. Out of the united tribes of Simeon and Judah nine, out of Naphtali three, and four apiece out of all the rest, as appears, Josh. 21. Thus were they blessed with a good ministry, and that ministry with a comfortable maintenance, not only in tithes, but in glebe-lands. And though the gospel is not so particular as the law was in this matter, yet it expressly proves that he that is taught in the word, should communicate all unto him that teaches in all good things, Gal. 6. 6.

9. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, 10. Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them, When ye be over Jordan into the land of Canaan: 11. Then ye shall appoint you cities to be cities of refuge for you; that the slayer may flee thither, which killeth any person at unwares. 12. And they shall be unto you cities for refuge from the avenger; that the man-slayer die not, until he stand before the congregation in judgment. 13. And of the cities which ye shall give, six cities shall ye have for refuge. 14. Ye shall give three cities on this side Jordan, and three cities shall ye give in the land of Canaan, which shall be cities of refuge. 15. These six cities shall be a refuge, both for the children of Israel, and for the stranger, and for the sojourner among them; that every one that killeth any person unwares may flee thither. 16. And if he smite him with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death. 17. And if he smite him with throwing a stone, whereby he may die, and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death. 18. Or if he smite him with a hand-weapon of wood, whereby he may die, and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death. 19. The revenger of blood himself shall slay the murderer: when he meeteth him, he shall slay him. 20. But if he thrust him of hatred, or hurl at him by laying of wait, that he die; 21. Or in enmity smite him with his hand, that he die; he that smote him shall surely be put to death; for he is a murderer: the revenger of blood shall slay the murderer when he meeteth him. 22. But if he thrust him suddenly without enmity, or have cast upon him any thing without laying of wait, 23. Or with any stone, wherewith a man may die, seeing him not, and cast it upon him that he die, and was not his enemy, neither sought his harm; 24. Then the congregation shall judge between the slayer and the revenger of blood according to these judgments: 25. And the congregation shall deliver the slayer out of the hand of the revenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to the city of his refuge, whither he was fled: and he shall abide in it unto the death of the high priest, which was anointed with the holy oil. 26. But if the slayer shall at any time come without the border of the city of his refuge, whither he was fled; 27. And the revenger of blood find him without the borders of the city of his refuge, and the revenger of blood kill the slayer; he shall not be guilty of blood; 28. Because he should have remained in the city of his refuge until the death of the high priest: but after the death of the high priest the slayer shall return into the land of his possession. 29. So these things shall be for a statute of judgment unto you, throughout your generations, in all your dwellings. 30. Whoso killeth any person, the murderer shall be put to death by the mouth of witnesses: but one witness shall not testify against any person to cause him to die. 31. Moreover, ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, which is guilty of death; but he shall be surely put to death. 32. And ye shall take no satisfaction for him that is fled to the city of his refuge, that he should come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the priest. 33. So ye shall not pollute the land wherein ye are: for blood it defileth the land: and the land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, but by the blood of him that shed it. 34. Defile not therefore the land which ye shall inhabit, wherein I dwell: for I the Lord dwell among the children of Israel.

We have here the orders given concerning the cities of refuge, fitly annexed to what goes before, because they were all Levites' cities. In this part of the constitution there is a great deal both of good law and pure gospel.

1. Here is a great deal of good law, in the case of the man's daughter, a case which the laws of all nations have taken particular cognizance of. It is here enacted and provided, consonant to natural equity,

1. That wilful murder should be punished with death, and in that case no sanctuary should be allowed, no ransom taken, nor any commutation of the punishment accepted; the murderer shall surely be put to death, v. 16. It is supposed to be done of hatred, v. (16.) and is an ancient law, according to the law of nature, that whoso sheds man's blood, by man shall his blood be taken. Gen. 9. 6. Where wrong has been done, restitution must be made; and since the murderer cannot restore the life he has wrongfully taken away, his own must be exacted from him in lieu of it, not (as some have fancied) to satisfy the manes or ghost of a person slain, but to satisfy the law and the justice of a nation, and to be a warning to all others not to do likewise. It is here said, and it is well worthy of the consideration of all princes and states, that blood defies not only the conscience of the murderer, who is thereby proved not to have eternal life abiding in him, (1 John 3. 15.) but also the land in which it is shed; so offensive is it to God and all good men, and the worst of nuisances. And it is added, that the land cannot be cleansed from the blood of the murderer, but by the blood of the murderer, v. 33. If murderers escape punishment from men, they that suffer them to escape, will have a great deal to answer for, and God however will not suffer them to escape his righteous judgments. Upon the same principle, it is provided, that no satisfaction should be taken for the life of a murderer, v. 31. If a man would give all the substance of his house to the judges, to the country, or to the avenger of blood, to atone for his crime, it must utterly be contemned. The redress upon the death of a man cannot be obtained by the multitude of riches, (Ps. 49. 7, 8.) which perhaps may allude to this law. A rule of law comes in here, which is a rule of our law in case of treason only,) that no man shall be put to death upon the testimony of one witness, but it was necessary there should be two; (v. 30.) this law is settled in all capital cases, Deut. 17. 6.—19. 13. And lastly, (1.) in the case of murder, but execution, of the murderer, is commuted to the next of kin, who, as he was to be the redeemer of his kinsman's estate if it were mortgaged, so he was to be the avenger of his blood if he were murdered; (v. 19.) The avenger of blood himself shall slay the murderer, if he were convicted by the notorious evidence of the fact, and he needed not to have recourse by a judicial process to the court of judgment. But if it were uncertain who the murderer was, and the proof doubtful, we cannot think that his bare suspicion, or surmise, would empower him to do that which the judges themselves could not do, but upon the testimony of two witnesses. Only, if the fact were plain, then the next of the heir of slain might himself, in a just indignation, slay the murderer wherever he met him. Some think this must be understood to be after the lawful judgment of the magistrate, and so the Chaldee says; "He shall shew him, when he shall be condemned unto him by judgment;" but it should seem by v. 24, that the judges interposed only in a doubtful case, and that if the person on whom he took vengeance, was indeed the murderer, and a wilful murderer, the avenger was innocent; (v. 27.) only if it proved otherwise, it should be brought up at his peril. Our law allows an appeal to be brought against a murderer, by the widow, or next heir, of the person murdered, yes, though the murderer have been acquitt'd upon an indictment: and if the murderer be found guilty upon that appeal, execution shall be awarded at the suit of the appellant, who may properly be called the avenger of blood.

2. But if it was murder were not voluntary, nor donedesignately, if it were without enmity, or lying in wait, (v. 22.) not seeing him, or seeking his harm, (v. 23.) which our law calls chance-medley, or homicide, her infortunium—through misfortune, in this case there were cities of refuge appointed for the man-slayer to flee to. By our law this incurs a forfeiture of goods, but a pardon is granted of course upon the special matter found.

Concerning the cities of refuge, the law was,

(1.) That he might kill no man, in these cities he was safe, and under the protection of the law, till he had his trial before the congregation, that is, before the judges in open court. If he neglected thus to surrender himself, it was at his peril; if the avenger of blood met him elsewhere, or overtook him, he was now his own head, because he did not make the person safe other: then the man-slayer should continue safe in the city of refuge, and the avenger of blood might not meddle with him, v. 25. There he was to remain in banishment from his own house and patrimony, till the death of the High-priest; and if at any time he went out of that city, or the suburbs of it, he put himself out of the protection of this law, and the avenger of blood, if he met him, might slay him, v. 26—28. Now, (1.) By the preservation of the life of the man-slayer, God would teach us, that men ought not to suffer for that which is rather their unholiness than their crime, rather the act of Providence than their own act, for God delivered him into his hand, Exod. 21. 13. [2.] By the banishment of the man-slayer from his own city, and his confinement to the city of refuge, where he was in manner a prisoner, God would teach us to consider a dread and horror of the guilt of blood, and to be very careful of life, and always afraid lest, by oversight, or negligence, we occasion the death of any. [3.] By the limiting of the time of the offender's banishment to the death of the High Priest, an honour was put upon that sacred office. The High Priest was to be looked upon as so great a blessing to his country, that when he died, their sorrow upon that occasion should swallow up all other resentments. The cities of refuge being all of them Levites' cities, and the High Priest being at the head of that tribe, and consequently having a peculiar dominion over those cities, those that were confined to them, might properly be looked upon as his prisoners, and so his death must be their discharge; it was, as it were, at his suit, that the delinquent was imprisoned, and therefore at his death it fell; dicta moritur cum persona.—The suit expires with the party.

Ainsworth has another notion of it, That as the High Priests, while they lived, by their service and sacrificing made atonement for sin, wherein they figured Christ's satisfaction; so, at their death, those were released that had been exiled for casual murder, which typified redemption in Israel. [4.] By the abandoning of the person that sinned, and by the oath which he at the time went out of the limits of the city of refuge, they were taught to adhere to the methods which Infinite Wisdom prescribed for their security. It was for the honour of a remedial law, that it should be so strictly observed. How can we expect to be saved, if we neglect the salvation, which is indeed a great salvation.

II. Here is a great deal of good gospel couched under the type and figure of the cities of refuge; and to them the apostle seems to allude, when he speaks of our flying for refuge to the hope set before us, (Heb. 6. 18.) and being found in Christ, Phil. 3. 9. We never read in the history of the Old Testament, of any use made of those cities of refuge, any more than of other such institutions, which yet, no doubt, were made use of upon the occasions, recorded; only, we read of those, that, in danger cases, took hold of the horns of the altar, (1 Kings 1. 50.—2. 28.) for the altar, wherever that stood, was, as it were, the capital city of refuge. But the law concerning these cities, was designed both to raise and to encourage the expectations of those who looked for redemption in Israel, which should be to those who were convinced of sin, and in terror by that, as the cities of refuge, to the man-slayer. Observe, 1. There were several cities of refuge, and they were so appointed in several parts of the country, that the man-slayer, wherever he dwelt in the land of Israel, might in half a day reach one or other of them; so, though there is but one Christ appointed for our Refuge, yet, wherever we are, he is a Refuge at hand, a very present Help, for the word is nigh us, and Christ in their stead, as a man-slayer, was appointed in their stead in these cities; so in Christ believers that fly to him, and rest in him, are protected from the wrath of God, and the curse of the law. There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus, Rom. 8. 1. 2. Who shall condemn them that are thus sheltered? 3. They were all Levites' cities; it was a kindness to the poor prisoner, that though he might not go up to the place where the ark was, yet he was in the midst of Levites, who would teach him the good knowledge of the Lord, and instruct him how to improve the providence he was now under. It might also be expected that the Levites would comfort and encourage him, and bid him welcome; so it is the work of gospel-ministers to bid poor sinners welcome to Christ, and to assist and counsel those that through grace are in him. 4. Even strangers and heathenmen, though they were not native Israelites, might take the benefit of these cities of refuge, v. 15. So in Christ Jesus no difference is made between Greek and Jew; even the sons of the stranger that by faith fly to Christ, shall be safe in him. 5. Even the suburbs or borders of the city were a sufficient security to the offender, v. 26, 27. So there is virtue, even in the hem of Christ's garment, for the healing and saving of prodigals. If we cannot reach to a full assistance, we may comfort ourselves in a good hope through grace. 6. The protection which the man-slayer found in the city of refuge, was not owing to the strength of its walls, or gates, or bars, but purely to the divine appointment, so it is the word of the gospel, that gives souls safety in Christ; for him hath God the father sealed. 7. If the offender was ever caught straggling out of the borders of his city of refuge, or setting out to it without security, he might avail himself of the benefit of his protection, and lay exposed to the avenger of blood; so those that are in Christ must abide in Christ, for it is at their peril if they forsake him and wander from him. Drawing back is to perdition.

CHAP. XXXVI.

We have in this chapter the determination of another question that arose upon the case of the daughters of Zelophehad. God had appointed that they should inherit, ch. 27. Now here, 1. An inconvenience is suggested in case they should marry into any other tribe, v. 1.—4. II. It is prevented by a divine appointment, that they should marry in their own tribe and family, v. 5.—7; and this is settled for a rule in like cases, v. 8, 9. and they did marry accordingly to some of their own relations, v. 10.—12. and with this the book concludes, v. 13.

1. And the chief fathers of the families of the children of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, of the families of the sons of Joseph, came near, and spake before Moses, and before the princes, the chief fathers of the children of Israel: 2. And they said, The Lord commanded my lord to give the land for an inheritance by lot to the children of Israel: and my lord was commanded by the Lord to give the inheritance of Zelophehad our brother unto his daughters. 3. And if they be married to any of the sons of the other tribes of the children of Israel, then shall their inheritance be taken from the inheritance of our fathers, and shall be put to the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received: so shall it be taken from the lot of our inheritance. 4. And when the jubilee of the children of Israel shall be, then shall their inheritance be put unto the inheritance of the tribe whereunto they are received: so shall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of the tribe of our fathers.

We have here the humble address which the heads of the tribe of Manasseh made to Moses and the princes, on occasion of the order lately made concerning the daughters of Zelophehad. The family they belonged to, was part of that half of the tribe of Manasseh, which was yet to have their lot within Jordan, not that half that was already settled; and yet they speak of the land of their possession, and the inheritance of their fathers, with as great assurance, as if they had it already in their hands, knowing whom they had trusted. In their appeal, observe, 1. They fairly recite the former order made in this case, and do not move to have that set aside, but are very willing to acquiesce in it, v. 2. The Lord commanded to give the inheritance of Zelophehad to his daughters; and they are very well pleased that it should be so, none of them knowing but that hereafter it might be the case of their own families, and then their daughters would have the benefit of this law. 2. They represent the inconvenience which might, possibly, follow hereupon, if the daughters of Zelophehad should see cause to marry into any other tribes, v. 6. And it is probable that this was not a bare surmise, or supposition, but that they knew, at this time, great court was made to them by some young gentlemen of other tribes, because they were heirs, that they might get footing in this tribe, and so enlarge their own inheritance. This truly is often aimed at more than it should be in making marriages; not the meetness of the person, but the consideration of being here, there, or else; to town, or from house to house, and field to field. Wisdom indeed is good with an inhertance; but what is an inheritance good for in that relation without wisdom? But here, we may presume, the personal merit of these daughters recommended them as well as their fortunes; however, the heads of their tribe foresaw the mischief that would follow, and brought the case to Moses, that he would consider the inclusion of God in the matter. The difficulty then was, God could have obviated and provided against, in the former order given in this case; but, to teach us that we must, in our affairs, not only attend God's providence, but make use of our own prudence, God did not direct in it, till they themselves that were concerned, wisely foresaw the inconvenience, and piously addressed Moses for a rule in it. For though they were chief fathers in their families, and might have assumed a power, so as that no daughter of Zelophehad, in disposing of themselves, especially their father being dead, and the common interest of their tribe being concerned in it, yet they chose rather to refer themselves to Moses, and it issued well. We should not covet to be judges in our own case, for it is hard to be so, without being partial. It is easier in many cases to take good advice than to give it, and it is a satisfaction to be under direction.

Two things they aimed at in their representation:
(1.) To preserve the divine appointment of inhertances. They urge the command, (v. 2.) that the land should be given by lot to the respective tribes, and urge that it would break in upon the divine appointment, if such a considerable part of the lot of Manasseh should, by their marriage, be transferred to any other tribe; for the issue would be denominated from the father's tribe, not the mother's. This indeed would not lessen the lot of the particular persions of that tribe, (they would have their own still,) but it would lessen the lot of the tribe in general, and render it less strong and considerable; they therefore thought themselves concerned for the reprotection of their tribe; and perhaps were the more jealous for it, because it was already very much weakened by the sitting down of the one half of it on the side of Jordan.
(2.) To prevent contests and quarrels among posterity. If those of other tribes should come among them, perhaps it might occasion some contests: they would be apt to give and receive disturbance, and their title might, in process of time, come to be questioned; and how great a matter would this fire kindle! It is the wisdom and duty of those that have estates in the world, to settle them, and dispose of them, that the strife and contention may arise about them among posterity.

5. And Moses commanded the children of Israel, according to the word of the Lord, saying, The tribe of the sons of Joseph hath said well. 6. This is the thing which the Lord doth command concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, saying, Let them marry to whom they think best; only to the family of the tribe of their fathers shall they marry: 7. So shall not the inher-itage of the children of Israel remove from tribe to tribe: for every one of the children of Israel shall keep himself to the inheri-ance of the tribe of his fathers. 8. And every daughter, that possesseth an inheritance in any tribe of the children of Israel, shall be wife unto one of the family of the tribe of her father, that the children of Israel may enjoy every man the inheritance of his fathers. 9. Neither shall the inheritance remove from one tribe to another tribe; but every one of the tribes of the children of Israel shall keep himself to his own inheritance. 10. Even as the Lord commanded Moses, so did the daughters of Zelophehad: 11. For Mahlah, Tirzah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Noah, the daughters of Zelophehad, were married unto their father's brothers' sons. 12. And they were married into the families of the sons of Ma-nessach, the son of Joseph; and their inheritance remained in the tribe of the family of their father. 13. These are the commandments and the judgments which the Lord commanded, by the hand of Moses, unto the children of Israel, in the plains of Moab, by Jordan near Jericho.

Here is,
1. The matter settled by express order from God between the daughters of Zelophehad, and the rest of the tribe of Manasseh. The petition is assented to, and care taken to prevent the inconvenience feared, (v. 5.) The tribe of the sons of Joseph hath said well. Thus those that consult the oracles of God, concerning the making of their heavenly inher-heritance sure, shall not only be directed what to do, but their inquiries shall be graciously accepted, and they shall have not only their well-done, but their well-said, good and faithful servant. Now the matter is thus accommodated; these heiresses must be obliged to marry, not only within their own tribe of Manasseh, but within the particular family of the Hephrites, to which they did belong. (1.) They are not determined to any particular persons, there was choice enough in the family of their father, Let them marry to whom they think best. As children must preserve the authority of their parents, and not marry against their minds; so parents must consult the affections of their children in disposing of them, and not compel them to marry such as they cannot love. Forced marriages are not likely to prove blessings. (2.) Yet they are confined to their own relations, that their inheritance might not go to another family. God would have them know, that the land being to be divided by lot, the disposal whereof was of the Lord, they could not mend, and therefor should not alter, his appointment. The inheritance must not remove from tribe to tribe. (v. 7.) lest there should be confusion among them, their estates entangled, and their genealogies perxplexed. God would not have one tribe to be enriched by the straitening and impoverishing of another, since they were all alike the seed of Abraham his friend.
2. The law, in this particular case, was made perpelical, and be observed whenever hereafter the like case should happen, v. 8. Those that were not heiresses, might marry into what tribe they pleased, (though we may suppose that, ordinarily, they kept within their own tribe,) but those that were, must either quit their claim to the inheritance, or marry one of their own family, that each of the tribes might keep themselves to their own inheritance, and one tribe might not encroach upon another, but throughout their generations there might remain ineradicable the ancient landmarks, set, not by their fathers, but by the God of their fathers.

Lastly, The submission of the daughters of Zelophehad to this appointment. How could they but marry well, and to their satisfaction, when God himself directed them? They married their father's brothers' sons, v. 10. 12. By this it appears, (1.) That the marriage of cousin-germans is not in itself unlawful, nor within the degrees prohibited, for then God would not have countenanced these marriages. But, (2.) That ordinarily it is not advisable: for if there had not been a particular reason for it, (which cannot hold in any case now, inheritances being not disposed of as then by the special designation of Heaven,) they would not have married such near relations. The world is wide, and he that walks uprightly, will endeavour to walk surely.

AN EXPOSITION,
WITH PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS,
OF THE FIFTH BOOK OF MOSES, CALLED DEUTERONOMY.

This book is a repetition of very much both of the history and of the laws contained in the three foregoing books; which repetition Moses delivered to Israel, (both by word of mouth, that it might affect, and by writing, that it might abide,) a little before his death. There is no new history in it but that of the death of Moses in the last chapter, nor any new revelation to Moses, for nothing that appears, and therefore the style here is not, as before, The Lord spake unto Moses, saying. But the former laws are repeated and commented upon, explained and enlarged, and some particular precepts added to them, with copious reasons for the enforcing of them; in this, Moses was divinely inspired and assisted, so that this is as truly the word of the Lord by Moses, as that which was spoken to him with an audible voice out of the tabernacle of the congregation, Lev. 1. 1. The Greek interpreters called it Deuteronomy, which signifies the second law or a second edition of the law, not with amendments, for there needed none, but with additions, for the further direction of the people in divers cases not mentioned before.

I. It was much for the honour of the divine law, that it should be thus repeated; how great were the things of that law which was thus inculcated, and how inexusable would they be by whom they were counted as a strange thing! Hos. 8. 12.

II. There might be a particular reason for the repeating of it now; the men of that generation to which the law was first given, were all dead, and a new generation was sprung up, to whom God would have it repeated by Moses himself, that, if possible, it might make a last impression upon them. Now that they were just going to take possession of the land of Canaan, Moses must read the articles of agreement to them, that they might know upon what terms and conditions they were to hold and enjoy that land, and might understand that they were upon their good behaviour in it.

III. It would be of great use to the people to have those parts of the law thus gathered up and put together, which did more immediately concern them, and their practice; for the laws which concerned the priests and Levites, and the execution of their offices, are not repeated; it was enough for them that they were once delivered; but, in compassion to the infirmities of the people, the laws of more common concern are delivered a second time. Precept must be upon precept, and line upon line, Isa. 28. 10.

The great and needful truths of the gospel should be often pressed upon people by the ministers of Christ. To write the same things (says Paul, Philipp. 3. 1.) to me indeed is not grievous, but for you it is safe. What God has spoken once, we have need to hear twice, to hear many times, and it is well if, after all, it be duly perceived and regarded. Three ways this book of Deuteronomy was magnified and made honourable: 1. The king was to write a copy of it with his own hand, and to read therein all the days of his life, ch. 17. 18, 19. 2. It was to be written upon great stones plastered, at their passing over Jordan, ch. 27. 2, 3. It was to be read publicly every seventh year, at the feast of tabernacles, by the priests, in the audience of all Israel, ch. 31. 9, &c. The Gospel is a kind of Deuteronomy, a second law, a remedial law, a special law, a law of faith; by it we are under the law to Christ, and it is a law that makes the corners thereof unto perfect. This book of Deuteronomy begins with a brief rehearsal of the most remarkable events that had befallen the Israelites since they came from mount Si-
DEUTERONOMY, I.

CHAP. I.

The first part of Moses's farewell sermon to Israel begins with this chapter, and is continued to the latter end of the fourth chapter. In the five first verses of this chapter we have the date of the sermon, the place where it was preached, v. 1, 2, 5, and the time when, v. 3, 4. The narrative in this chapter reminds us, I. Of the promise God made them of the land of Canaan, v. 6. 8. II. Of the provision made of judges for them, v. 9. 18. III. Of their unbelief and murmuring upon the report of the spies, v. 19. 33. IV. Of the sentence passed upon them for it, and the ratification of that sentence, v. 34. 46.

1. THESE be the words which Moses spake unto all Israel on this side Jordan, in the wilderness, in the plain over against the Red Sea, between Paran, and Tophel, and Laban, and Hazeroth, and Dizahab. 2. (There are eleven days' journey from Horeb, by the way of mount Seir, unto Kadesh-barnea.) 3. And it came to pass in the fortieth year, in the eleventh month, on the first day of the month, that Moses spake unto the children of Israel, according unto all that the Lord had given him in commandment unto them; 4. After he had slain Sihon the king of the Amorites, which dwelt in Heshbon, and Og the king of Bashan, which dwelt at Ashtaroth in Edrei: 5. On this side Jordan, in the land of Moab, began Moses to declare this law, saying, 6. The Lord our God spake unto us in Horeb, saying, Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount: 7. Turn you, and take your journey, and go to the mount of the Amorites, and unto all the places nigh thereto, in the plain, in the hills, and in the vale, and in the south, and by the sea-side, to the land of the Canaanites, and unto Lebanon, unto the great river, the river Euphrates. 3. Behold, I have set the land before you: go in and possess the land which the Lord sware unto your fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, to give unto them, and to their seed after them.

We have here,

1. The date of this sermon which Moses preached to the people of Israel. A great auditory, no question, he had, as many as could crowd within hearing, and particularly all the elders and officers, the representatives of the people; and, probably, it was on the sabbath-day that he delivered this to them. (1.) The place, where they were now encamped, was in the plain, in the land of Moab, (v. 1, 5) where they were just ready to enter Canaan, and engage in a war with the Canaanites; yet he does not shun the introductory words of that magnificent discourse, the arts and stratagems of war, but concerning their duty to God; for if they kept themselves in his fear and favour, he would secure to them the conquest of the land; their religion would be their best policy. (2.) The time was near the end of the fortieth year since they came out of Egypt. So long God had borne their manners, and they had borne their own injustice, (Numb. 14. 34.) and now that a new and more pleasant scene was to be introduced, as a token for good, Moses repeats the law to them. Thus after God's controversy with them on account of the golden calf, the first and surest sign of God's being reconciled to them, was, the renewing of the tables. There is no better evidence and earnest of God's favour than his putting his law in our hearts, Ps. 147. 19, 20.

2. The discourse itself. In general, Moses spake unto them all that the Lord had given him in commandment; (v. 3.) which intimates, not only that what he now delivered, was for substance the same with what had formerly been commanded, but that it was what God now commanded him to repeat. He gave them this rehearsal and exhortation purely by divine direction; God appointed him to leave this legacy to the church.

He begins his narrative with the removal from mount Sinai, (v. 6.) and relates here, (1.) The orders which God gave them to decamp, and proceed in their march, v. 6, 7. Ye have dwelt long enough in this mount; that was the mount that burned with fire, (Deut. 9. 18.) and gendered to bondage, Gal. 4. 24. Thither God brought them to humble them, and by the terrors of the law to prepare them for the land of promise. There he kept them about a year; and then would they had dwelt long enough there, they must go forward. Though God bring his people into trouble and affliction, into spiritual trouble and affliction of mind, he knows when they have dwelt long enough in it, and will certainly find a time, the fittest time, to advance them from the terrors of the spirit of bondage to the comforts of the spirit of adoption. See Rom. 8. 13. 15. (2.) The prospect which he gave them of a happy and early settlement in Canaan. Go to the land of the Canaanites; (v. 7.) enter and take possession, it is all your own. Behold, I have set the land before you, v. 8. When God commands us to go forward in our Christian course, he sets the heavenly Canaan before us for our encouragement.

9. And I spake unto you at that time saying, I am not able to bear you myself alone: 10. The Lord your God hath multiplied you, and, behold, you are this day as the stars of heaven for multitude. 11. (The Lord God of your fathers make you a thousand times so many more as ye are, and bless you, as he hath promised you!) 12. How can I myself alone bear your cumbrence, and your burden, and your strife? 13. Take ye wise men, and understanding, and known among your tribes, and I will make them rulers over you. 14. And ye answered me, and said, The thing which thou hast spoken is good for us to do. 15. So I took the chief of your tribes, wise men, and known, and made them heads over you, captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, and captains over fifties, and captains over tens, and officers among your tribes. 16. And I charged your judges at that time, saying, Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between every man and his brother, and the stranger that is with him. 17. Ye shall not respect persons in judgment; but you shall hear the small as well as the great; you shall not be afraid of the face of man; for the judgment is God's: and the cause that is too hard for you, bring it unto me, and I will hear it. 18. And I commanded you at that time all the things which ye should do.

Moses here reminds them of the happy constitution of their government, which was such as might make them all safe and easy, if it was not their own fault. What good laws were given them, good men were intrusted with the execution of them; which as it was an instance of God's goodness to them, so it was of the care of Moses concerning them; and, it should seem, he mentions it here, to recommend himself to them as a man that sincerely sought their welfare, and so to make way for what he was about to say to them, wherein he aimed at nothing but their good.

In this part of his narrative he insinuates to them, 1. That he greatly rejoiced in the increase of their numbers. He owns the accomplishment of God's promise to Abraham, (v. 10.) Ye are as the stars of heaven for multitude; and prays for the further accomplishment of it, (v. 11.) God make you a thousand times more. This prayer comes in, in a parenthesis, and a good prayer prudently put in as cannot be impertinent, in any discourse of divine things; nor will a pious ejaculation break the coherence, but rather strengthen and adorn it. But how greatly are his desires enlarged, when he prays that they might be made a thousand times more than they were! We are not straitened in the power and goodness of God, why should we be straitened in our own faith and hope, which ought to be as large as the promise? Larger it needs not be. It is from the promise that Moses here takes the measures of his prayer, The Lord bless you as he hath promised you. And why might he not hope that they might become a thousand times more than they were now, when they were now ten thousand times more than they were when they went down into Egypt, about 250 years ago? Observe, When they were under the government of Pharaoh, the increase of their numbers was envied, and complained of as a grievance; (Exod. 1. 9.) but now, under the government of Moses, it was rejoiced in, and prayed for, as a blessing; the comparing of which might give them occasion to reflect with shame upon their own folly, when they had talked of making away a capital of this nation and sending it to Egypt. 2. That he was not ambitious of monoply, and refused all honour of the government, and ruling them himself alone, as an absolute monarch, v. 9. Though he was a man as well worthy of that honour, and as well qualified for the business, as ever any man was, yet he was desirous that others might be taken in as assistants to him in the business, and consequently shavers with him in the honour. I cannot myself alone bear the burden, or the weightiness of the people, (v. 11.) and then, Moses himself, though eminently gifted for it, found it lay heavy on his shoulders; nay, the best magistrates complain most of the burthen, and are most desirous of help, and most afraid of undertaking more than they can perform.

3. That he was not desirous to prefer his own creatures, or such as underhand should have a dependence upon him; for he leaves it to the people to choose their own judges. He recommended commissions, not durante bene plac tempo—to be turned out when he pleased; but quam diu se bene gesserint—to continue so long as they approved themselves faithful, v. 13. Take you wise men, that are known to be so among your tribes, and I will make them rulers. Thus the apostle directed the multitude to choose overseers of the poor, and then they ordained them, Acts 6. 3, 6. He directs them to take wise men and understanding, whose personal merit would recommend them; the rise and original of this nation were so late, that none of them could pretend to antiquity of race, and nobility of birth, above their brethren; and they having all lately come out of slavery in Egypt, it is probable that one family was not much richer than another; so that their choice must be directed purely by the qualifications of wisdom, experience, and integrity. "Choose those," says Moses, "whose praise is in your tribes, and, with all my heart, I will make them rulers." We must not grudge that God's work be done by other hands than our's, provided it be done by good hands.

4. That he was in this matter very willing to please the people; and though he did not in any thing aim at their applause, yet in a thing of this nature he was not act without registry. And they agreed to the proposal, (v. 14.) The thing which thou hast spoken, is good. This he mentions, to aggravate the sin of their mutinies and discontented after this, that the government they quarrelled with, was what they themselves had consented to; Moses would have pleased them, if they would have been pleased.

5. That he aimed to edify them, as well as to gratify the people; (v. 15.) He appointed men of good characters, (v. 15.) wise men and men known, men that would be faithful to their trust, and to the public interest. (2.) He gave them a good charge, v. 16, 17. Those that are advanced to honour, must know that they are charged with business, and must give account another day of their charge. (1.) He charges them to be diligent and patient; Hear the causes, and, in a word, hear them, and grant them, and answer their causes carefully, for nature has provided us with two ears, and he that answereth a matter before he heareth it, it is folly and shame to him. The ear of the learner is necessary to the tongue of the learned, Isa. 50. 4. (2.) To be just and impartial; Judge righteously. Judgment must be given according to the merits of the cause, without regard to the quality of the parties. The natives must not be suffered to abuse the strangers, any more than the strangers to insult the natives, or to encroach upon them: the great must not be suffered to oppress the small, or to crush them, any more than the small to rob the great, or to affright them. No faces must be known in judgment, but unblinded unbiased equity must always pass sentence. [3.] To be resolute and courageous: "Ye shall not be afraid of the face of man. Be not overawed to do an ill thing, either by the clamours of the crowd, or by the menaces of those that have power in their hands." And he gave them a good reason to enforce this charge, For the judgment is God's. You are God's vicegerents, you act for him, and therefore must act like him; you are his representatives, but if you judge unrighteously, you misrepresented him. The judgment is his, and therefore he will protect you in doing right; and will certainly call you to account if you do wrong." And, (Lastly,) He allowed them to bring all difficult cases to him, and he would always be ready to hear and determine, and to make both the judges and the people easy. Happy art thou, O Israel, in such a prince as Moses was.

19. And when we departed from Horeb, we went through all that great and terrible wilderness, which you saw by the way of the mountain of the Amorites, as the Lord our God commanded us; and we came to Kadesh-barnea. 20. And I said unto you, Ye are come unto the mountain of the Amorites, which the Lord our God doth give unto us. 21. Behold, the Lord thy God hath set the land before thee: go up and possess it, as the Lord God of thy fathers hath said unto thee; fear not, neither be discouraged. 22. And ye came near unto me every one of you, and said, We will send men before us, and they shall search us out the land, and bring us word again by what way we must go up, and into what cities we shall come. 23. And the saying pleased me well: and I took twelve men of you, one of a tribe: 24. And they turned, and went up into the mountain, and came unto the valley of Eshcol, and searched it out. 25. And they took of the fruit of the land in their hands, and brought it down unto us, and brought us word again, and said, It is a good land which the Lord our God doth give us. 26. Notwithstanding ye would not go up, but rebelled against the commandment of the Lord our God. 27. And ye murmured in your tents, and said, Because the Lord hated us, he hath brought us forth out of the land of Egypt, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to destroy us. 28. Whither shall we go up? our brethren have discouraged our heart, saying, The people is greater and taller than we; the cities are great, and walled up to heaven: and, moreover, we have seen the sons of the Anakims there. 29. Then I said unto you, Dread not, neither be afraid of them. 30. The Lord your God, which goeth before you, he shall fight for you, according to all that he did for you in Egypt before your eyes; 31. And in the wilderness, where thou hast seen how that the Lord thy God bare thee, as a man doth bear his son, in all the way that ye went, until ye came into this place. 32. Yet in this thing ye did not believe the Lord your God, 33. Who went in the way before you, to search you out a place to pitch your tents in, in fire by night, to show you by what way ye should go, and in a cloud by day. 34. And the Lord heard the voice of your words, and was wroth, and swere, saying, 35. Surely there shall not one of these men of this evil generation see that good land, which I swere to give unto your fathers, 36. Save Caleb the son of Jephunneh; he shall see it; and to him will I give the land that he hath trodden upon, and to his children, because he hath wholly followed the Lord. 37. Also the Lord was angry with me for your sakes, saying, Thou also shalt not go in thither. 38. But Joshua the son of Nun, which standeth before thee, he shall go in thither: encourage him; for he shall cause Israel to inherit it. 39. Moreover, your little ones, which ye said should be a prey, and your children, which in that day had no knowledge between good and evil, they shall go in thither, and unto them will I give it, and they shall possess it. 40. But as for you, turn ye, and take your journey into the wilderness, by the way of the Red Sea. 41. Then ye answered and said unto me, We have sinned against the Lord; we will go up, and fight, according to all that the Lord our God commanded us. And when ye had girded on every man his weapons of war, ye were ready to go up into the hill. 42. And the Lord said unto me, Say unto them, Go not up, neither fight; for I am not among you; lest ye be smitten before your enemies. 43. So I spake unto you; and you would not hear, but rebelled against the commandment of the Lord, and went presumptuously up into the hill. 44. And the Amorites, which dwelt in that mountain, came out against you, and chased you as bees do, and destroyed you in Seir, even unto Hormah. 45. And ye returned, and wept before the Lord; but the Lord would not hearken to your voice, nor give ear unto you. 46. So ye abode in Kadesh many days, according unto the days that ye abode there.

Moses here makes a large rehearsal of that fatal turn which was given them by their own sins, and God's wrath, when, from the very borders of Canaan, the honour of conquering it, and the pleasure of possessing it, the whole generation was hurried back into the wilderness, and their carcases fell therein. It was a memorable story; we read it Numb. 13, and 14, but divers circumstances are found here, which are not related there.

1. He reminds them of their march from Horeb to Kadesh-barnea, (v. 19.) through that great and terrible wilderness. This he takes notice of, (1.) To make them sensible of the great goodness of God to them, in guiding them through so great a wilderness, and protecting them from the mischiefs they were in the Holy Land, but then a terrible wild

2. He speaks of the wilderness, (v. 7.) He speaketh in the wilderness, we are at home in God's presence, and he sweetly figures the pangs of the wilderness as "sweet". The remembrance of our dangers should make us thankful for our deliverances. (2.) To aggravate the folly of those, who, in their discontent, would have gone back to Egypt through the wilderness, though they had forfeited, and had no reason to expect, the divine conduct, in such a retrograde motion.

3. He points them to the way how fair they stood for Canaan at that time, v. 20, 21. He told them with triumph, The land is set before you, go up, and possess it. He lets them see how near they were to a happy settlement, when they put a bar in their own door, that their sin might appear the more exceeding sinful. It will aggravate the eternal ruin of hypocrites, that they were not far from the kingdom of God, and yet came short, Mark 12. 34. 35. God had shown them the land of Canaan, which, which did not appear in Numbers; there it is said (ch. 13. 1, 2.) that the Lord directed the sending of them, but here we find that the people first desired it, and God, in permitting it, gave them up to their own counsels, v. 22. Ye said, we will send men before us. Moses had given them God's word; (v. 20, 21.) but they could not find in their hearts to rely upon that; human policy goes further with them than divine wisdom, and they will needs light a candle to the sun. As it were not enough that they were sure of a God before them, they must send men before them.

4. He repeats the report which the spies brought of the goodness of the land, which they were sent to survey, v. 24, 25. The blessings which God has promised, are truly valuable and desirable, even the unbelievers themselves being judges; never any lack of the good land, but what is wanting is the possession of it. Yet they represented the difficulties of conquering it as insuperable; (v. 28.) as if it were in vain to think of attacking them either by battle, for the people are taller than we, or by siege, for the cities are walled up to heaven; an herculean task which they made use of to serve their ill purpose, which was to dishearten the people, and perhaps they intended to reflect upon the God of heaven himself, as if they were able to defy him like the Babel-builders, the top of whose tower must reach to heaven, Gen. 11. 4. Those places only are walled up to heaven, that are compassed with God's favour as with a shield.

5. He tells them what pains he took with them to encourage them, when their brethren had said so much to discourage them, (v. 29.) Then I said unto you, Moses said unto me, Fear not, Moses signifies he had stilled the tumult, and to have kept them with their faces toward Canaan. He assured them that God was present with them, and President among them, and would certainly fight for them, v. 30. As for proof of his power over their enemies, he refers them to what they had seen in Egypt, where their enemies had all possible advantages against them, and were the more formidable, and forced upon them, v. 30. And for proof of God's goodness, the law which he intended them, he refers them to what they had seen in the wilderness, (v. 31, 33.) through which they had been guided by the eye of divine wisdom, in a pillar of cloud and fire, which guided I both their motions and their rests; and had been carried in the arms of divine grace, with as much care and tenderness as ever any child was borne in the arms of a护士; Women. And was there any room left to distrust this God? Or were they not the most ungrateful people in the world, who, after such sensible proofs of the divine goodness, hardened their hearts in the day of temptation? Moses had complained once, that God had charged him to carry this people as the nursing father doth the sucking child; (Numb. 11. 12.) but here he has it was God that so carried them, and perhaps this is alluded to, (Acts 13. 18.) where he is said to bear them, or to suffer their manners.

6. He charges them with the sin which they were guilty of upon this occasion. Though these whom he was now speaking to, were a new generation, yet he lays it upon them, Ye rebelled, and ye murmured; for many of these were then in being, though under twenty years old, and perhaps were engaged in the riot; and God had remissly heard their fathers' voices, and smote for them. Observe what he lays to their charge; (1.) Disobedience, and rebellion against God's law. Ye would not go up, but rebelled, v. 26. The rejecting of God's favours is really a rebelling against his authority.

(2.) Invidious reflections upon God's goodness. They basely suggested, (v. 27.) Because the Lord hates us, and will bring us into the land of Egypt. What could have been more absurd, mean, ingenuous, and more reproachful to God? (3.) An unbelieving heart at the bottom of all this, (v. 28.) Ye did not believe the Lord your God. All your disobedience to God's laws, and distrust of his power and goodness, flow from a disbelief of his word. A sad pass it is come to with us, when the God of eternal truth cannot be believed.

7. He concludes with the sentence passed upon them for this sin, which now they had seen the execution of. (1.) They were all condemned to die in the wilderness, and none of them must be suffered to enter Canaan, except Caleb and Joshua, v. 34. .38. So long they must continue their wanderings in the wilderness, that most of them would drop off of course, and the youngest of them should be cut off. Thus they could not enter in because of unbelief. It was as if God had cut short their time, and the law that shut them out of Canaan, no, not the golden calf, but their disbelief of that promise which was typical of gospel-grace, to signify that no sin will ruin us but unbelief, which is a sin against the remedy. (2.) Moses himself afterward fell under God's displeasure, for a hasty word which he provoked him to speak; (v. 37.) The Lord was angry with me for your sakes. Because all the old men must go, Moses himself must not stay behind. Their unbelief left death into the camp, and, having entered, even Moses falls within his commission. (3.) Yet here is mercy mixed with wrath. [1.] That though Moses might not bring them into Canaan, Joshua should, (v. 38.) Encourage him; for he would be discouraged from taking up a government which he saw Moses himself would fall under the weight of, but let him be assured that he shall accomplish that for which he is raised up, he shall cause Israel to inherit it. Thus what the law could not do in that it was weak, Jesus, our Joshua, does by bringing in the better hope. [2.] That though this generation should not enter into Canaan, the next should, v. 39. As they had been chosen for their fathers' sakes, so their children might justly have been rejected for their sakes. But much remains, against judgment.

8. He reminds them of their foolish and fruitless attempt to get this sentence reversed, when it was too late. (1.) They tried it by their reformation, in this particular; whereas they had refused to go up against the Canaanites, now they would go up, in all haste; and they girded on their weapons of war for the special purpose, v. 41. Thus, when the door is shut, and the day of grace over, there will be found those that stand without and knock. But this which looked like a reformation, proved but a further rebellion; God, by Moses, prohibited the attempt; (v. 42.) yet they went presumptuously up to the hill, (v. 43.) acting now in contempt of the threatening, as before in contempt of the promise, as if they were governed by a spirit of contradiction; and accordingly; (v. 44.) they were chased and destroyed, and by this defeat which they suffered, when they had provoked God to leave them, they were taught what success they might have had if they had kept themselves in his love. (2.) They tried by their prayers and tears to get the sentence reversed. (v. 45.) They returned and wept before the Lord. While they were fretting and quarrelling, it is said, (Num. 30. 1.) They wept that night; those were tears of rebellion against God, these were tears of repentance and humiliation before God. Note, Tears of discontent must be wept over again; the sorrow of the world worketh death, and is to be repented of; it is not so with godly sorrow, that will end in joy. But their weeping was all to no purpose, The Lord would not hearken to your voice, because you would not hearken to his voice, or to his word. (3.) They found no place of repentance, though they sought it carefully with tears.

CHAP. II.

Moses, in this chapter, proceeds in the rehearsals of God's providences concerning Israel in their way to Canaan, yet preserves not the record of any thing that happened during their tedious march back to the Red-sea, in which there were about 40 years, but gives it in the style of silence, as a dark time; and makes his narrative to begin again when they faced about toward Canaan, (v. 1-5.) and drew toward the countries that were inhabited, concerning which God here gives them direction, 1. That national it should not give any distrust or care, &c. No. 1. Not to the Edomites, v. 4-8. 2. Not to the Moabites, (v. 9.) of the antiquities of whose country, with that of the Edomites, he gives some account, v. 10-12. And here comes in an account of their passing the river Zered, v. 13-16. 3. Not to the Ammonites, of whose country here is some account given, v. 17-22. II. What nations they should attack and conquer. They must be driven out of the land, v. 23-25. And accordingly, 1. They had a fair occasion of quarrelling with him, v. 26-32. 2. God gave them a complete victory over him, v. 33-37.

I. THEN we turned, and took our journey into the wilderness, by the way of the Red Sea, as the Lord spake unto me; and we compassed mount Seir many days. 2. And the Lord spake unto me, saying, 3. Ye have compassed this mountain long enough; turn you northward. 4. And command thou the people, saying, Ye are to pass through the coast of your brethren the children of Esau, which dwell in Seir; and they shall be afraid of you: take ye good heed unto yourselves therefore: 5. Meddle not with them; for I will not give you of their land, no not so much as a foot- bread, because I have given mount Seir unto Esau for a possession. 6. Ye shall buy meat of them for money, that ye may eat; and ye shall also buy water of them for money, that ye may drink. 7. For the Lord thy God hath blessed thee in all the works of thy hand; he knoweth thy walk- ing through this great wilderness: these forty years the Lord thy God hath been with thee, thou hast lacked nothing.

Here is, 1. A short account of the long stay of Israel in the wilderness; We compassed mount Seir many days, v. 1. Near 38 years they wandered in the deserts of Seir; probably, in some of their rests they stayed several years, and never stirred; God by this not only chastised them for their murmuring against him, but used them as a nursery, for them to be brought up, (1.) by humbling them for sin, teaching them to mortify their lusts, to follow God, and to comfort themselves in him. It is a work of time to make souls meet for heaven, and it must be done by a long train of exercises. (2.) He prepared the Canaan- ites for destruction: all this time the measure of their iniquity was filling up; and though it might have been unseasonable to attempts on Canaan, in it, it was abused by them to the hardening of their hearts. Now that the host of Israel was once repulsed, and after that, was so long entangled, and seemingly lost, in the wilderness, they were secure, and thought the danger was over from that quarter, which would make the next attempt of Israel upon them the more dreadful.

2. Orders given them to turn toward Canaan. Through the wilderness of Zin, v. 1. They will not contend for ever. Though Israel may be long kept waiting for deliverance and enlargement, it will come at last; The vision is for an appointed time, and at the end it shall speak, and not lie.

3. A charge given them to not annoy the Edomites: (1.) They must not offer any hostility to them as enemies; (v. 4, 5.) Meddle not with them. [1.] They must not improve the advantage they had against them, by the fright they would be put into upon Israel's approach, "They shall be afraid of you, knowing your strength and numbers, and the power of God engaged for you; but think not that because their fears make them an easy prey, you may therefore prey upon them; no, take heed to yourselves." There is need of great caution, and a strict government of our own spirits, to keep ourselves from injuring these whom we have an advantage against, for God is well-placed, this way to the princes; they must not only not meddle with the Edomites themselves, but not permit any of the soldiers to meddle with them. [2.] They must not avenge upon the Edomites the affront they gave them in refusing them passage through their country; Numb. 26. 21. Thus before God brought Israel to destroy their enemies in Canaan, he taught them to forgive them as enemies. [3.] They must not expect to have any part of their land given them for a possession; mount Seir was already settled upon the Edomites, and they must not, under pretense of God's covenant and conduct, think to seize for themselves all they could lay hand on. Dominion is not founded in grace. God's Israel shall be well-placed, but must not expect to be placed alone in the midst of the earth, Isa. 5. 8. [4.] They must not meddle with them, as soldiers, buy meat and water of them, and pay for what they bought; (v. 6.) religion must never be made a cloak for injustice. The reason given, (v. 7.) is, because God hath blessed thee, and hitherto thou hast lacked nothing; and therefore, [1.] Thou needest not beg; scorn to be beholden to Edomites, when thou hast a God all-sufficient to depend upon. The best whereof thou hast to pay for what thou callest for, (thanks to the divine blessing!) use therefore what thou hast, use it chearfully, and do not spunge upon the Edomites." [2.] "Therefore thou must not steal. Thou hast experienced the care of the divine providence concerning thee, in confidence of which, for the future, and in a firm belief of its sufficiency, never use any indirect methods for thy supply. Live by thy faith, and not by thy sword."

3. And when we passed by from our brethren the children of Esau, which dwelt in Seir, through the way of the plain from Elath, and from Ezion-gaber, we turned, and passed by the way of the wilderness of Moab. 9. And the Lord said unto me, Distress not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle; for I will not give thee of their land for a possession, because I have given Ar unto the children of Lot for a possession. 10. The Emims dwelt therein in times past, a people great, and many, and tall, as the Anakims; 11. Which also were accounted giants, as the Anakims; but the Moabites call them Emims. 12. The Horims also dwelt in Seir before-time; but the children of Esau succeeded them, when they had destroyed them from before them, and dwelt in their stead; as Israel did unto the land of his possession, which the Lord gave unto them. 13. Now rise up, said I, and get you over the brook Zered; and we went over the brook Zered. 14. And the space in which we came from Kadesh-barnea, until we were come over the brook Zered, was thirty and eight years; until all the generation of the men of war were wasted out from among the host, as the Lord sware unto them. 15. For indeed the land of the Lord was against them, to destroy them from among the host, until they were consumed. 16. So it came to pass, when all the men of war were consumed and dead from among the people, 17. That the Lord spake unto me, saying, 18. Thou art to pass over through Ar, the coast of Moab, this day. 19. And when thou comest nigh over against the children of Ammon, distress them not, nor meddle with them: for I will not give thee of the land of the children of Ammon any possession; because I have given it unto the children of Lot for a possession. 20. (That also was accounted a land of giants: giants dwelt therein in old time, and the Ammonites called them Zamzummims; 21. A people great, and many, and tall, as the Anakims; but the Lord destroyed them before them; and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead: 22. As he did to the children of Esau, which dwelt in Seir, when he destroyed the Horims from before them; and they succeeded them, and dwelt in their stead even unto this day: 23. And the Avims which dwelt in Hazerim, even unto Azzah, the Caphtorims, which came forth out of Caphtor, destroyed them, and dwelt in their stead.)

It is observable here that Moses, speaking of the Edomites, (v. 8.) calls them our brethren, the children of Esau; though they had been unkind to Israel, in refusing them a peaceable passage through their country, yet he calls them brethren. For though our relations fail in their duty to us, we must retain a sense of the relation, and not be wanting in our duty to them, as there is occasion.

Now in these verses we have,

1. The account which Moses gives of the original of the nations which he had here occasion to speak of; the Moabites, Edomites, and Ammonites. We know very well, from other parts of his history, whose posterity they were, but here he tells us how they came into the country which was so long called Edom, or Moab; they were not the aborigines, or first planters. But, (1.) The Moabites dwelt in a country which had belonged to a numerous race of giants, called Emims, that is, terrible ones; as tall as the Anakims, and perhaps more fierce, v. 10, 11. (2.) The Edomites in like manner dispossessed the Horims from mount Seir, and took their country, (v. 12. and again, v. 22.) of which we read, Gen. 16. 20. (3.) The Ammonites likewise got possession of a country that had formerly been inhabited by giants, called Zamzummims, crafty men, or wicked men; (v. 20. 21.) probably, the same that are called Zizzim, Gen. 14. 5. He illustrates these remarks by an instance older than any of these; the Caphtorims (who were akin to the Philistines, Gen. 16. 14.) drove the Avims out of their country, and took possession of it, v. 20. The western world, when God permitted them, in his providence, to advance, and spread his kingdom, by overthrowing the aboriginal inhabitants of the countries, as had been the case of the Israelites, he may have so ordered it, as to make a people of the world, who have no account of their original, and are uncertain of their descent, and who are therefore likely to be more rebellious and unprofitable, as they were, than those who have been the subjects of the kings of the earth, and from whom they may have received some notions of the world, and what became of it, and what was its condition in the days of the patriarchs; while, as the Israelites, they might have a sense of their relation, and of the blessing which God had promised them, if they would, as the Israelites, turn to him, who would make them to be the people of his own choice, and give to them the land of promise; for it is said, (v. 21.) to encourage the children of Israel, who were now going to take possession of Canaan, against the difficulties they would meet with, and to show the unbelief of those that were afraid of the sons of Anak, to whom the giants, here said to be destroyed, were compared, and who were supposed to have been the remains of the aboriginal inhabitants of Canaan, which God had promised, and which had been so long possessed by the kings of the earth, and which they had not been able to take possession of; though Moses then took occasion to speak of the providence of God in destroying the aboriginal inhabitants of the land, and of having made the land more fertile and fruitful by their destruction, to show that God was merciful to his people, and that he would be a refuge and strength to them in the day of distress; and that he would show himself to be their Saviour, making them to be the instruments of destroying the aboriginal inhabitants of the land. And of this destruction, or deliverance, he here speaks, to encourage his people to march forward against the nations that were before them. 2. The advances which Israel made towards Canaan. They passed by the way of the wilderness of Moab, (v. 8.) and then went over the brook or vale of Zered, (v. 13.) and there Moses takes notice of the fulfilling of the covenant which God had made with Abraham, and spoken of to them; that none of those that were numbered at Mount Sinai, should see the land that God had promised, Numb. 14. 23. According to that sentence, now that they began to set their faces towards Canaan, and to have it in their eye, notice is taken of their being all destroyed and consumed, and not a man of them left, v. 14. Common providence, we may observe, in about 36 years of their deserts, only raises a new generation, so that in that time few remain of the old one; but here it was entirely new, and none at all remained but Caleb and Joshua: for indeed the hand of the Lord was against them, v. 15. These cannot but waste, until they are consumed, who have the hand of God against them. Observe, Israel is not called to engage with the Canaanites till all the men of war, the veteran regiments, that had been used to hardship, and had learned the art of war from the Egyptians, were consumed and dead from among the people; (v. 16,) that the conquest of Canaan, being effected by a host of new-raised men, trained up in a wilderness, the excellency of the power might the more plainly appear to be of God, and not of men. The caution given them, not to meddle with the Moabites or Ammonites, when they must not disguise, nor so much as disturb, in their possessions. Distress them not, nor contend with them, v. 9. Though the Moabites aimed to ruin Israel, (Numb. 22. 6.) yet Israel must not aim to ruin them. If others design us a mischief, that will not justify us in designing them a mischief. But why must not the Moabites and Ammonites be meddled with? (1.) Because they were the children of Lot, (v. 9, 19.) righteous Lot, who kept his integrity in Sodom. Note, Children often fare the better in this world for the piety of their ancestors; the seed of the upright, though they degenerate, yet are blessed with temporal good things. (2.) Because the land they were possessed of, was what God had given them, and he did not design it for Israel. Even wicked men have a right to their worldly possessions, and must not be wronged. The tares are allowed their place in the field, and must not be rooted out until the harvest. God gives and preserves outward blessings to wicked men, to show that these are not the best things, but he has better in store for his own children.

24. Rise ye up, take your journey, and pass over the river Arnon: behold, I have given unto thy hand Sihon the Amorite, king of Heshbon, and his land: begin to possess it, and contend with him in battle. 25. This day will I begin to put the dread of thee and the fear of thee upon the nations that are under the whole heaven, who shall hear report of thee, and shall tremble, and be in anguish because of thee. 26. And I sent messengers out of the wilderness of Kedemoth, unto Sihon king of Heshbon, with words of peace, saying, 27. Let me pass through thy land: I will go along by the highway; I will neither turn unto the right hand nor to the left. 28. Thou shalt sell me meat for money, that I may eat; and give me water for money, that I may drink: only I will pass through on my feet. 29. (As the children of Esau which dwell in Seir, and the Moabites which dwell in Ar, did unto me;) until I shall pass over Jordan, into the land which the Lord our God giveth us. 30. But Sihon king of Heshbon would not let us pass by him: for the Lord thy God hardened his spirit, and made his heart obstinate, that he might deliver him into thy hand, as appeareth this day. 31. And the Lord said unto me, Behold, I have begun to give Sihon and his land before thee: begin to possess, that thou mayest inherit his land. 32. Then Sihon came out against us, he and all his people, to fight at Jahaz. 33. And the Lord our God delivered him before us; and we smote him, and his sons, and all his people. 34. And we took all his cities at that time, and utterly destroyed the men, and the women, and the little ones, of every city; we left none to remain: 35. Only the cattle we took for a prey unto ourselves, and the spoil of the cities which we took. 36. From Aror, which is by the brink of the river of Arnon, and from the city that is by the river, even unto Gilead, there was not one city too strong for us: the Lord our God delivered all unto us. 37. Only unto the land of the children of Ammon thou camest not, nor unto any place of the river Jabbok, nor unto the cities in the mountains, nor unto whatsoever the Lord our God forbade us.

God having tried the self-denial of his people, in forbidding them to meddle with the Moabites and Ammonites, and they having quietly passed by those rich countries, and, though superior in number, not made any attack upon them, here he recompenses them for their obedience by giving them possession of the country of Sihon king of the Amorites. If we forbear what God forbids, we shall receive what he promises, and shall be no lesers at last by our obedience, though it may seem for the present to be our loss. Wrong not others, and God shall right thee.

1. God gives them commission to seize upon the country of Sihon king of Heshbon, v. 24, 25. This was then God's way of disposing of kingdoms, but such particular grants are not now either to be expected or pretended. In this commission, observe, (1.) Though God assured them that the land should be their own, yet they must bestir themselves, and contend in battle with the enemy. What God gives, we must endeavour to get. (2.) God promises that when they fight, he will fight for them. Do you begin to possess it, and I will begin to put the dread of you upon the nations. God would dispirit the enemy, and so destroy them; we would magnify Israel, and terrify all those against whom they were commissioned. See Exod. 15. 14. 2. Moses sends to Sihon a message of peace, and only begs a passage through this land, with a promise to give his country no disturbance, but the advantage of trading for ready money with so great a body, v. 26-29. Moses herein did neither dissemble with God, nor bid him contend with Sihon, nor dissemble with Sihon; but doubtless it was by divine direction that he did it, that Sihon might be left inexusable, though God hardened his heart. This may illustrate the method of God's dealing with those to whom he gives his gospel, but does not give grace to believe it. 3. Sihon began the war; (v. 32.) God having hardened his heart, he obstinately, and hid from his eyes all things that belonged to his peace, (v. 36,) that he might deliver him into the hand of Israel. Those that meddle with the people of God, meddle with their own hurt; and God sometimes ruins his enemies by their own resolves. See Mic. 4. 11-13. Rev. 16. 14. 4. Israel was victorious. (1.) They put all the Amorites to the sword, men, women, and children; (v. 33, 34,) this they did as the executioners of God's wrath; now the measure of the Amorites' iniquity was full, (Gen. 15, 16,) and the longer it was in the filling, the sorrier was the reckoning at last. This was one of the devoted nations, they died not as Israel's enemies; but as sacrifices to divine justice, in the offering of which sacrifices Israel was employed, as a kingdom of priests. The case being therefore such, ought to be treated as a precedent for military executions, which make no distinction, and give no quarter: they shall have judgment without mercy, that show no mercy. (2.) They took possession of all they had; their cities, (v. 34,) their goods, (v. 33,) and their land, v. 36. The weather of the sinner is laid up for the just. What a new world did Israel now come into! Most of them were born, and had lived all their days, in a vast howling wilderness, where they knew not what either fields or cities were, had no houses to dwell in, and neither sowed nor reaped; and now of a sudden to become masters of a country so well-built, so well-husbanded, this made them amends for their long waiting; and yet it was but the earnest of a great deal more. Much more joyful will be the change be which holy souls will experience, when they are translated from the wilderness of this world to the better country, that is, the heavenly; to the city that has foundations.

CHAP. III.

Moses, in this chapter, relates, I. The conquest of Og, king of Bashan, and the seizing of his country, v. 1-11. II. The distribution of these new conquests to the two tribes and a half, v. 12-17. Under certain provisions and limitations, v. 18-20. III. The encouragement given to Joshua to carry on the war which was so gloriously begun, v. 21, 22. IV. Moses's request to go over into Canaan, (v. 23, 24,) with the denial of that request, but the grant of an equivalent, v. 26-29.

1. THEN we turned, and went up the way to Bashan: and Og the king of Bashan came out against us, he and all his people, to battle at Edrei. 2. And the Lord said unto me, Fear him not: for I will deliver him, and all his people, and his land, into thy hand; and thou shalt do unto him as thou didst unto Sihon king of the Amorites, which dwelt at Heshbon. 3. So the Lord our God delivered into our hands Og also, the king of Bashan, and all his people: and we smote him, until none was left to him remaining. 4. And we took all his cities at that time; there was not a city which we took not from them, three score cities, all the region of Argob, the kingdom of Og in Bashan. 5. All these cities were fenced with high walls, gates and bars; besides unwalled towns a great many. 6. And we utterly destroyed them, as we did unto Sihon king of Heshbon, utterly destroying the men, women, and children, of every city. 7. But all the cattle, and the spoil of the cities, we took for a prey to ourselves: 8. And we took at that time, out of the hand of the two kings of the Amorites, the land that was on this side Jordan, from the river of Arnon unto Mount Hermon; 9. (Which Hermon the Sidonians call Sirion;) and the Amorites call it Shenir; 10. All the cities of the plain, and all Gilead, and all Bashan, unto Salchah and Edrei, cities of the kingdom of Og in Bashan. 11. For only Og king of Bashan remained of the remnant of giants; behold, his bedstead was a bedstead of iron: is it not in Rabbath of the children of Ammon? nine cubits was the length thereof, and four cubits the breadth thereof, after the cubit of a man.

We have here another brave country delivered into the hand of Israel, that of Bashan; the conquest of Sihon is often mentioned together with that of Og, to the praise of God, the rather because in these Israel's triumphs began, Ps. 135. 11.-136. 19, 20.

See, 1. How they got the mastery of Og, a very formidable prince; (1.) Very strong, for he was of the remnant of the giants; (v. 11.) his personal strength was extraordinary; a monument of which was preserved by the Amorites in his bedstead, which was showed as a rarity in their chief city. You might guess at his weight by the materials of his bedstead, it was iron, as if a bedstead of wood were too weak for him to trust to; and you might guess at his stature by the dimensions of it, it was nine cubits long, and four cubits broad; which, supposing a cubit to be but half a yard, (and some learned men have made it appear to be somewhat more,) would make 15 and a half, and ten yards broad; and if we allow his bedstead to be two cubits longer than himself, and that is as much as we need allow, he was three yards and a half long, double the stature of an ordinary man, and every way proportionable, yet they smote him, v. 3. Note, When God pleads his people's cause, he can deal with giants as with grasshoppers. No man's might is secure against his. All the army of Og was very powerful, for he had the command of sixty fortified cities, beside unwalled towns, v. 5. Yet all this was nothing before God's Israel, when they came with commission to destroy him. (2.) He was very stout and daring; he came out against Israel to battle, v. 1. It was wonderful that he did not take warning by the ruin of Sihon, and send to desire conditions of peace; but God trusted to his own strength, and delivered it into his destruction. Note, Those that are not awakened by the judgments of God upon others, but persist in their defiance of heaven, are ripening space for the like judgments upon themselves. Jer. 3. 8. God bade Moses not fear him, v. 2. If Moses himself was so strong in faith as not to need the caution, yet it is probable that the people needed it; and for this, these fresh assurances are designed, "I will deliver thee into his hand: not only deliver thee out of his hand, that he shall not be thy ruin, but deliver him into thy hand, that thou shalt be his ruin, and make him pay dear for his attempt." He adds, Thou shalt do to him as thou didst to Sihon; intimating that they ought to be encouraged by their former victory to trust in God for another victory, for he is God, and changeth not. How the rest of the possessions of Bashan, a very desirable country, They took all the cities, (v. 4.) and all the spoil of them, v. 7. They made them all their own, v. 10. So that now they had in their hands all that fruitful country which lay east of Jordan, from the river Arnon unto Hermon, v. 8. Their conquering and possessing these countries was intended, not only for the encouragement of Israel in the work of Canaan, but for the satisfaction of Moses before his death; because he must not live to see the completing of their victory and settlement, God thus gives him a specimen of it. Thus the Spirit is given to them that believe, as the earnest of their inheritance, until the redemption of the purchased possession.
12. And this land, which we possessed at that time, from Aroer, which is by the river Arnon, and half mount Gilead, and the cities thereof, gave I unto the Reubenites, and to the Gadites. 13. And the rest of Gilead, and all Bashan, being the kingdom of Og, gave I unto the half-tribe of Manasseh; all the region of Argob, with all Bashan, which was called the land of giants. 14. Jair the son of Manasseh took all the country of Argob, unto the coasts of Jeshuri and Maachath; and called them after his own name, Bashan-havoth-jair, unto this day. 15. And I gave Gilead unto Machir. 16. And unto the Reubenites, and unto the Gadites, I gave from Gilead even unto the river Arnon, half the valley, and the border, even unto the river Jabbok, which is the border of the children of Ammon: 17. The plain also, and Jordan, and the coast thereof, from Chinnereth even unto the sea of the plain, even the salt sea, under Ashdoth-pisgah eastward. 18. And I commanded you at that time, saying, The Lord your God hath given this land to possess it; ye shall pass over armed before your brethren the children of Israel, all that are meet for the war. 19. But your wives, and your little ones, and your cattle, (for I know that ye have much cattle,) shall abide in your cities which I have given you; 20. Until the Lord have given rest unto your brethren, as well as unto you, and until they also possess the land which the Lord your God hath given them beyond Jordan; and then shall ye return every man unto his possession which I have given you.

Having showed how this country which they were now in, was conquered, in these verses he shows how it was settled upon the Reubenites, Gadites, and half tribe of Manasseh, which we had the story of before, Numb. 32. Here is the rehearsal.

1. Moses specifies the particular parts of the country that were allotted to each tribe; especially the distribution of the lot to the half tribe of Manasseh, the subdividing of which is observable. Joseph was divided into Ephraim and Manasseh; Manasseh was divided into the one half on this side Jordan, and the other half on the other side: that here on the east side Jordan was again divided into two great families, which had their several allotments, Jair, v. 14, Machir, v. 15. And perhaps Jacob's prediction of the smallness of that tribe was now accomplished in these divisions and subdivisions.

Observe that Bashan is here called the land of the giants, because it had been in their possession, but Og was the last of them. These giants, it seems, had lost their country, and were rootted out of it sooner than any of their neighbours; for they who, presuming upon their strength and stature, had their hand against every man, had every man's hand against them, and went down slain to the pit, though they were the terror of the mighty in the land of the living.

2. He repeats the condition of the grant which they had already agreed to, v. 18, 20. That they should send a strong detachment over Jordan to lead the van in the conquest of Canaan, who should not return to their families, at least, not to settle, (though for a time they might retire thither into winter quarters, at the end of a campaign,) till they had seen their brethren in as full possession of their respective allotments, as themselves were now in of their's. They must hereby be taught not to look at their own things only, but at the things of others, Phil. 2. 4. It ill becomes an Israelite to be selfish; and to prefer any private interest before the public welfare. When we are at rest, we should desire to see our brethren at rest too, and should be ready to do what we can towards it; for we are not born for ourselves, but are members one of another. A good man cannot rejoice much in the comforts of his family, unless withal he sees peace upon Israel, Ps. 128. 6.

21. And I commanded Joshua at that time, saying, Thine eyes have seen all that the Lord your God hath done unto these two kings: so shall the Lord do unto all the kingdoms whither thou passest. 22. Ye shall not fear them: for the Lord your God, he shall fight for you. 23. And I besought the Lord at that time, saying, 24. O Lord God, thou hast begun to show thy servant thy greatness and thy mighty hand: for what god is there in heaven or in earth that can do according to thy works, and according to thy might? 25. I pray thee, let me go over, and see the good land that is beyond Jordan, that goodly mountain, and Lebanon. 26. But the Lord was wroth with me for thy sakes, and would not hear me: and the Lord said unto me, Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto me of this matter. 27. Get thee up into the top of Pisgah, and lift up thine eyes westward, and northward, and southward, and eastward, and behold it with thine eyes: for thou shalt not go over this Jordan. 28. But charge Joshua, and encourage him, and strengthen him: for he shall go over before this people, and he shall cause them to inherit the land which thou shalt see. 29. So we abode in the valley over against Beth-peor.

Here is,

1. The encouragement which Moses gave to Joshua, who was to succeed him in the government, v. 21, 22. He commanded him not to fear. Thus those that are aged and experienced, in the service of God, should do all they can to strengthen the hands of those that are young, and setting out in religion. Two things he would have him consider for his encouragement; 1. What God had done. Joshua had seen what a total defeat God had given by the forces of Israel to these two kings, and from thence he might easily infer, so shall the Lord do to all the rest of his kingdoms, which we are to make war upon. He must not only infer from thence, that thus the Lord can do with them all, for, his arm is not shortened, but thus he will do, for his purpose is not changed; he that has begun, will finish; as for God, his worship is perfect. Joshua had seen it with his own eyes. And the more we have seen of the instances of divine wisdom, power and goodness, the more inexcusable we are, if we fear what flesh can do unto us. 2. What God had promised. "The Lord your God, he shall fight for you, that cause cannot be but victorious, which the Lord of Hosts fights for. If God be for us, who can be against us, so as to prevail?" We reproach our Leader if we follow him with trembling.

II. The prayer which Moses made for himself, and the answer which God gave to that prayer.

1. His prayer was, that, if it were God's will, he might go before Israel over Jordan into Canaan. At that time, when he had been encouraging Joshua to fight Israel's battles, taking it for granted that he must be their leader; upon that occasion, he was touched with an earnest desire to go over himself, which expresses itself not in any passionate and impatient complaints, or reflections upon the sentence he was under, but in humble prayers to God for a gracious reversing of it. I besought the Lord. Note, We should never allow any desires in our hearts, which we cannot in faith offer up in prayer; and what desires are innocent, let them be presented to God. We have not, because we ask not.

Observe, (1.) What he pleads here. Two things;

[1.] The great experience which he had had of God's goodness to him in what he had done for Israel. "Thou hast begun to show thy servant thy greatness. Lord, perfect what thou hast begun." Thous hast given me to see thy glory in the conquest of Canaan, and the Divine hand hath shared me with wonder and thankfulness; O let me see more of the outgoings of my God, my King! This great work, no doubt, will be carried on and completed, let me have the satisfaction of seeing it." Note, the more we see of God's glory in his works, the more we shall desire to see. The works of the Lord are great, and therefore are sought out more and more of all them that have pleasure therein. [2.] The desire he had of being accepted in his own person. And I am sure upon his heart by what he had seen; for what God is there in heaven or earth, that can do according to thy works! The more we are affected with what we have seen of God, and of his wisdom, power and goodness, the better we are prepared for further discoveries. Those shall see the works of God, that admire him in them. Moses had thus expressed himself concerning God and his works, long before, (Exod. 14.11) and he still continues of the same mind, that no other works are worthy to be compared with God's works, Ps. 86. 8.

(2.) What he begs. I pray thee let me go over, v. 25. God had said, he should not go over; yet he prays that he might; not knowing but that the threatening was conditional, for it was not ratified with an oath, as that concerning the people was, that they should not enter. Thus Hezekiah prayed for an over-life, and David for the life of his child, after both had been expressly threatened; and the former prevailed, though the latter did not. Moses remembered the time, when he by prayer prevailed with God to recede from the declarations which he had made of his wrath against Israel, Exod. 32. 14. And why might he not hope in like manner to prevail for himself? Let me go over and see the good land. Not, "Let me go over and be a prince and a ruler there," he seeks not his own honour, but content to resign the government to Joshua; but, "Let me go to be a spectator of thy kindness to Israel; to see what I believe concerning the goodness of the land of promise." How patently does he speak of Canaan, that good land, that goodly mountain! Note, Those may hope to obtain and enjoy God's favours, that know how to value them. What he means by that goodly mountain, we may learn from Ps. 78. 54, where it is said of God's Israel, that he brought them to the border of his sanctuary, even to this mountain which his right hand had purchased: where it is plainly to be understood of the whole land of Canaan, yet with an eye to the sanctuary, the glory of it.

2. God's answer to this prayer had in it a mixture of mercy and judgment, that he might sing unto God of both.

(1.) There was judgment in the denial of his request, and that in something of anger too, v. 26. The Lord was wroth with me for your sakes. God not only sees sin in his people, but is much displeas'd with it; and even those that are delivered from their adversary can be under the token of God's wrath in this world, and may be denied some particular favour which their hearts are much set upon. God is a gracious, tender, loving Father; but he is angry with his children when they do amiss, and denies them many a thing that they desire and are ready to cry for. But how was he wroth with Moses, for the sake of Israel? Either, [1.] For that sin (that wine) he provoked him to. See Ps. 106. 18, 28, 32, 33. Or, [2.] The removal of Moses at that time, when he could so ill be spared, was a rebuke to all Israel, and a punishment of their sin.

[3.] It was for their sakes, that it might be a warning to them to take heed of offending God by passionate and unbelieving speeches at any time, after the similitude of his transgression; for if this were done to such a green tree, what should be done to the dry? He acknowledges that God would not hear him. He would often hear him for Israel, yet he would not hear him for himself. It was the prerogative of Christ, the great Intercessor, to be heard always, yet of him his enemies said, He saved others, himself he could not save: which the Jews would not have upbraided him with, had they considered that Moses, their great prophet, prevailed for others, but for himself he could not prevail. Though Moses, being one of the wrestling seed of Jacob, did receive all the promises, and was a saviour to himself, which he sought for. God may accept our prayers, and yet not grant us the very thing we pray for. Here is mercy mixed with this wrath, in several things;

[1.] God quieted the spirit of Moses under the decree that was gone forth, by that word, (v. 26.) Let it suffice thee. With which word, no doubt, a divine power went to reconcile Moses to the will of God, to make him willing to bring him to acquiesce in it. If God did not by his providence give us what we desire, yet if by his grace he makes us content without it, it comes much to one. "Let it suffice thee to have God for thy father, and heaven for thy portion, though thou hast not every thing thou would'st have in this world. Be satisfied with this, God is all-sufficient."

[2.] He put honour upon his prayer, in directing him not to insist upon his request. Speak no more to me of this matter. It intimates that what God does not think fit to grant, we should not think fit to ask; and that God takes such a pleasure in the prayer of the upright, that it is no pleasure to him, no, not in any particular instance, to give a denial to it.

[3.] He promised him a sight of Canaan from the top of Pisgah, v. 27. Though he should not have the possession of it, he should have the prospect of it; not to taintalize him, but such a sight of it as would yield him true satisfaction, and would enable him to form a very clear and pleasing idea of that promised land. Probably, Moses had not only his sight preserved for other purposes, but greatly enlarged for this purpose; for if he were not to have such a sight of it as others could not have from the same place, it had been no particular favour to Moses, nor the matter of a promise. Even great believers, in this present state, see heaven but at a distance.

[4.] He provided him a successor, one who should support the honour of Moses, and carry on complete that glorious work which the heart of Moses was so much upon, the bringing of Israel to Canaan, and settling them there; (v. 28.) Charge Joshua, and encourage him in this work. Those to whom God gives a charge, he will be sure to give encouragement. This, and it is a comfort to the church's friends, (when they are dying and going off,) to see God's work likely to be carried on by others, when they are silent in the dust.

CHAP. IV.

In this chapter, we have, 1. A most earnest and pathetic exhortation to keep all the statutes, the word, and judgments; and he is a comfort to the church's friends, (when they are dying and going off,) to see God's work likely to be carried on by others, when they are silent in the dust.

1. Now therefore hearken, 0 Israel, unto the statutes and unto the judgments which I teach you, for to do them, that ye may live, and go in and possess the land which the Lord God of your fathers giveth you. 2. Ye shall not add unto the word which I command you, neither shall you diminish from it; that ye may keep the commandments of the Lord your God which I command you. 3. Your eyes have seen what the Lord did because of Baal-peor; for all the men that followed Baal-peor, the Lord thy God hath destroyed them from among you. 4. But ye that did cleave unto the Lord your God are alive every one of you this day. 5. Behold, I have taught you statutes, and judgments, even as the Lord my God commanded me, that ye should do so in the land whither ye go to possess it. 6. Keep, therefore, and do them: for this is your wisdom and your understanding in the sight of the nations, which shall hear all these statutes, and say, Surely this great nation is a wise and understanding people. 7. For what nation is there so great, who hath God so nigh unto them, as the Lord our God is in all things that we call upon him for? 8. And what nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this day? 9. Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently, lest thou forget the things which thine eyes have seen, and lest they depart out of thy heart all the days of thy life: but teach them thy sons, and thy sons' sons; 10. Specially the day that thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb, when the Lord said unto me, Gather me the people together, and I will make them hear my words, that they may learn to fear me all the days that they shall live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children. 11. And ye came near, and stood under the mountain; and the mountain burned with fire unto the midst of heaven, with darknes, clouds, and thick darkness. 12. And the Lord spake unto you out of the midst of the fire: ye heard the voice of the words, but saw no similitude; only ye heard a voice. 13. And he declared unto you his covenant, which he commanded you to perform, even ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone. 14. And the Lord commanded me at that time to teach you statutes and judgments, that ye might do them in the land whither ye go over to possess it. 15. Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves, (for ye saw no manner of similitude on the day that the Lord spake unto you in Horeb out of the midst of the fire.) 16. Lest ye corrupt yourselves, and make you a graven image, the similitude of any figure, the likeness of male or female; 17. The likeness of any beast that is on the earth, the likeness of any winged fowl that lieth in the air; 18. The likeness of any thing that creepeth on the ground, the likeness of any fish that is in the waters beneath the earth: 19. And lest thou lift up thine eyes unto heaven, and when thou seest the sun, and the moon, and the stars, even all the host of heaven, shouldest be driven to worship them, and serve them, which the Lord thy God hath divided unto all nations under the whole heaven. 20. But the Lord hath taken you, and brought you forth out of the iron furnace, even out of Egypt, to be unto him a people of inheritance, as ye are this day. 21. Furthermore, the Lord was angry with me for your sakes, and spake unto me, saying, Take heed unto yourselves, lest ye forget the covenant of the Lord your God, which he made with you, and make you a graven image, or the likeness of any thing, which the Lord thy God hath forbidden thee. 22. For the Lord thy God is a consuming fire even a jealous God. 23. When thou shalt beget children, and children's children, and shalt have remained long in the land, and shall corrupt yourselves, and make a graven image, or the likeness of any thing, and shall do evil in the sight of the Lord thy God, to provoke him to anger; 24. I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that ye shall soon utterly perish from off the land wherewith unto you go over Jordan to possess it; ye shall not prolong your days upon it, but shall utterly be destroyed. 27. And the Lord shall scatter you among the nations, and ye shall be left few in number among the heathen, whither the Lord shall lead you. 28. And there ye shall serve gods, the work of men's hands, wood and stone, which neither see, nor hear, nor eat, nor smell. 29. But if from thence thou shalt seek the Lord thy God, thou shalt find him, if thou seek him with all thy heart and with all thy soul. 30. When thou art in tribulation, and all these things are come upon thee, even in the latter days, if thou turn to the Lord thy God, and shalt be obedient unto his voice, 31. (For the Lord thy God is a merciful God,) he will not forsake thee, neither destroy thee, nor forget the covenant of thy fathers, which he sware unto them. 32. For ask now of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day that God created man upon earth, and ask from the one side of heaven unto the other, whether there hath been any such thing as this great thing is, or hath been heard like it? 33. Did ever people hear the voice of God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou hast heard, and live? 34. Or hath God assayed to go and take him a nation from the midst of another nation, by temptations, by signs, and by wonders, and by war, and by a mighty hand, and by a stretched-out arm, and by great terrors, according to all that the Lord your God did for you in Egypt before your eyes? 35. Unto thee it was showed, that thou mightest know that the Lord he is God; there is none else besides him. 36. Out of heaven he made thee to hear his voice, that he might instruct thee: and upon earth he showed thee his great fire; and thou heardest his words out of the midst of the fire. 37. And because he loved thy fathers, therefore he chose their seed after them, and brought thee out in his sight with his mighty power out of Egypt; 38. To drive out nations from before thee, greater and mightier than thou art, to bring thee in, to give thee their land for an inheritance, as it is this day. 39. Know therefore this day, and consider it in thine heart, that the Lord he is God in heaven above, and upon the earth beneath: there is none else. 40. Thou shalt keep therefore his statutes, and his commandments, which I command thee this day, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days upon the earth, whither the Lord thy God giveth thee, for ever.

This most lively and excellent discourse is so entire, and the particulars of it are so often repeated, that we must take it altogether in the exposition of it, and endeavour to digest it into proper heads, for we cannot divide it into paragraphs.

In general, it is the use and application of the foregoing history; it comes in by way of inference from it, v. 1, Now therefore hearken, O Israel. This use we should make of the review of God's providences concerning us, we should by them be quickened and engaged to duty and obedience. The histories of the years of ancient times should in like manner be improved by us.

II. The scope and drift of his discourse is to persuade them to keep close to God, and to his service, and not to forsake him for any other god, nor in any instance to decline from their duty to him. Now observe what he says to them with a great deal of divine rhetoric. 1. By way of exhortation and direction. 2. By way of motive and argument, to enforce his exhortations.

1. See here how he charges and commands them, how the Lord requires of them.

(1.) He demands their diligent attention to the word of God, and to the statutes and judgments that were taught them, Hearken, O Israel. He means, not only that they must now give him the hearing, but that whenever the book of the law was read to them, or read by them, they should be attentive to it. "Hearken to the statutes, as containing the great commands of God, and the great concerns of your own souls, and therefore challenging your utmost attention." At Horeb God had made them hear his words, (v. 10.) hear them with a witness; the attention which was then constrained by the circumstances of the delivery, ought ever after to be enganged by the excellency of the things themselves. What God so spake once, we should hear twice, hear often.

(2.) He charges them to preserve the divine law pure and entire among them, v. 2. Keep it pure, and do not add to it; keep it entire, and do not diminish from it. Not in practice, so some; "Ye shall not add, by committing the evil which the law forbids; nor diminish, by omitting the good which the law requires." Not in opinion, so others; "Ye shall not add your own inventions, as if the divine institutions, and the great concerns of God and man, were not sufficient for your perfection and happiness, but impose any rites of religious worship, other than what God has appointed, nor shall ye diminish, or set aside, any thing that is appointed, as needless, or superfluous." God's work is perfect, nothing can be put to it, or taken from it, without making it the worse. See Eccl. 3. 14. The Jews understand it as prohibiting the alteration of the text or letter of the law, even in the least jot or tittle. And to their great care and exactness herein, we are very much indebted, under God, for the purity and integrity of the Hebrew code. We find a fence like this made about the New Testament in the close of it, Rev. 22. 18, 19.

(3.) He charges them to keep God's commandments, (v. 2.) to do them, (v. 5, 14.) to keep and do them, (v. 6.) to perform the covenant, v. 13. Hearing must be in order to doing; knowledge is in order to practice. God's commandments were the way they must keep in, the rule they must keep to; they must govern themselves by the moral precepts; perform their devotion according to the divine ritual; and administer justice according to the judicial law. He concludes his discourse, (v. 40.) with this repeated charge, Thou shalt keep his statutes and his commandments which I command thee. What are laws made for but to be observed and obeyed?

(4.) He charges them to be very strict and careful in their observance of the law, (v. 9.) Only take heed to thyself, and keep thy soul diligently, and (v. 15.) Take ye therefore good heed unto yourselves:
and again, (v. 23.) Take heed to yourselves. Those that would be religious, must be very cautious, and walk circumspectly. Considering how many temptations we are compassed about with, and what corrupting influence we have in our own bosoms, we have great need to look about us, and to keep our hearts with all diligence. Those cannot walk aright, that walk carelessly, and at all adventures.

(5.) He charges them particularly to take heed of the sin of idolatry, that sin which of all others they would be most tempted to, by the customs of the nations, were most addicted to, by the corrupted heart of man, and which would be most provoking to God, and of the most pernicious consequences to themselves: Take good heed, lest in this matter, ye corrupt yourselves, v. 15, 16. Two sorts of idolatry he cautions them against.

[1.] The worship of images, however by them they might intend to worship the true God, as they had done in the golden calf; so changing the truth of God into a lie, and his glory into shame. The second commandment is expressly directed against this, and is here enlarged upon, v. 15. Take heed lest ye corrupt yourselves, that is, lest ye deabach yourselves, for they that think to make images of God, form in their minds such notions of him as must needs be an inlet to all impurities; and it is intimated that it is a spiritual adultery: ...and take heed lest ye destroy yourselves. If any thing ruinous, any thing of the kind, be attempted, there is no similitude to God, either in a human shape, male or female, or in the shape of any beast or foul, serpent or fish, for the heathen worshipped their gods by images of all these kinds, being either not able to form, or not willing to admit, that plain demonstration which we find, Hos. 8. 6. The workman made it, therefore it is not God. To represent an infinite Spirit by an image, and so great an attribute as omnipresence, is the greatest affront we can put upon God, and the greatest cheat we can put upon ourselves.

As an argument against their making images of God, he urges it very much upon them, that when God made himself known to them at Horeb, he did it by a voice of words which sounded in their ears, to teach them that faith comes by hearing, and God in it, and not by seeing; as he made no image, nor any similitude to himself, in their eye; for to see God as he is, is reserved for our happiness in the other world, and to see him as he is not, will do us hurt and no good in this world. Ye saw no similitude, (v. 12.) no manner of similitude, v. 15. Probably, they expected to have seen some similitude, for they were ready to break through unto the Lord to gaze, Exod. 19. 21. But all they saw, was, light and fire, and nothing that they could make an image of; God, in infinite wisdom so ordering his manifestation of himself, because of the peril of idolatry. It is said indeed of Moses, that he beheld the similitude of the Lord, Num. 12. 8. God allowing him that favour, because he was above the temptation of idolatry; but for the people who were lately come from admiring the idols of Egypt, they must see no resemblance of God. Least they should have pretended to copy it, and so should have received the second commandment in vain; "For" (says Bishop Patrick) "they would have thought that that forbade them only to make any representation of God beside that where-in he showed himself to them, in which they would have concluded it lawful to represent him." Let this be a caution to us, to take heed of making images of God in our fancy and imagination, when we are worshipping him, lest thereby we corrupt ourselves. There may be idols in the heart, where there are none in the sanctuary.

[2.] The worship of the sun, moon, and stars, is another sort of idolatry which they are here cautioned against, v. 14. This was the most ancient species of idolatry, and the most plausible, drawing the adoration of those creatures that not only are in a situation to suit us, but are most sensibly visible in themselves, and most generally serviceable to the world. And the plausibility of it made it the more dangerous. It is intimated here, First, How strong the temptation is to sense; for the caution is, Lest thou shouldest be driven to worship them, by the strong impulse of a vain imagination, and the impetuous torrent of the customs of the nations. The more a thing is suited to us, the more it is fitted for the eye, which, in our corrupt and degenerate state, is our great bent to do. *"When thou seest the sun, moon, and stars, thou wilt so admire their height and brightness, their regular motion and powerful influence, that thou wilt be strongly tempted to give that glory to them, which is due to him that made them, and made them what they are to us; gave them their beings, and made them blessings to the world."

It seems, there was need of a great deal of resolution to arm them against this temptation; so weak was their faith in an invisible God and an invisible world. Secondly, Yet he shows how weak the temptation would be to those that would use their reason; for these pretended deities, the sun, moon, and stars, were only blessings which the Lord their God, whom they were obliged to worship, had imparted to all nations. It is absurd to worship them, for 1. They are God's gifts; he has imparted them; whatever benefit we receive from them, we are to attribute to him; it is therefore highly injurious to him, to give that honour and praise to them, which is due to him only. (6.) He charges them to teach their children to observe the law of God. Teach them thy sons, and thy son's sons, (v. 9.) that they may teach their children, v. 10. [1.] Care must be taken in general to preserve the entail of religion among them, and to transmit the knowledge and worship of God toposterity. For this purpose the following points are specially designed to be perpetual, if they did not forfeit the privilege of it. [2.] Parents must, in order hereunto, particularly take care to teach their own children the fear of God, and to train them up in an observance of all his commandments.

(7.) He charges them never to forget their duty; (v. 23.) Take heed lest we forget the covenant of the Lord your God. Though God is ever mindful of the covenant, we are apt to forget it; and that is the bottom of all our departures from God. We have need therefore to watch against all those things which would put the covenant out of our minds, and to watch over our own hearts, lest at any time we let it slip; and so we must take heed lest at any time we forget our religion, lest we lose it or leave it off. Care and caution, and holy watchfulness, are the best helments we have, to preserve us from these directions and commands he gives them.

2. Let us see now what are the motives or arguments with which he backs these exhortations. How does he order the cause before them, and fill his mouth with arguments? He has a great deal to say on God's behalf. Some of his topics are indeed peculiar to that people, yet applicable to us. But, upon the whole, it is evident that Jehovah has here given us, on its own principles, the powerful charms of which, all that are irreligious wilfully stop their ears against.

(1.) He urges the greatness, glory, and goodness, of God. Did we consider what a God he is with whom we have to do, we should surely make conscience of our duty to him, and not dare to sin against him. He reminds them here, [1.] That the Lord Jehovah is the one only living and true God. This they must know and consider, v. 39. There are many things which we know, but are not the better for, because we do not consider them; we do not apply them to ourselves, nor draw proper inferences from them. This is a truth so evident, that it cannot but be known, and so important, that if it were duly considered, it would faithfully reform the world. The Lord Jehovah he is God, an infinite and eternal Being, self-existent and self-sufficient, and the Fountain of all being, power, and motion; that he is God in heaven above, clothed with all the glory, and Lord of all the hosts, of the upper world, and that he is God upon earth beneath, which, though distant from the throne of his glory, is not out of the reach of his sight. He can never withdraw the God, who wields heaven, not below his care and cognizance. And there is none else: no true and living God but himself; all the deities of the heathen were counterfeiters and usurpers; nor did any of them so much as pretend to be universal monarchs in heaven and earth, but were only local deities. The Israelites who worshiped no other than the supreme Numen—Divinity, were for ever inexcusable, if they ever thought to serve another. [2.] That he is a consuming Fire, a jealous God, v. 24. "Take heed of offending him, for, First, He has a jealous eye to discern an affront; he must have your entire affection and adoration, and will by no means endure a rival." God's jealousy over us is a good reason for our godly jealousy over ourselves. Secondly, He has a heavy hand to punish an affront, corporally, and spiritually, in a most awful manner; he is a consuming Fire; his wrath against sinners is so, it is dreadful and destroying, it is a fiery indignation which will devour the adversaries, Heb. 10. 27. Fire consumes that only which is fuel for it, so the wrath of God fastens upon those only who, by their own sin, have fitted themselves for destruction, 1 Cor. 3. 13. Isa. 27. 4. Even in the New Testament we find the same argument used. In his worship, as a reason why he is a consuming Fire; his wrath against sinners is so, it is dreadful and destroying, it is a fiery indignation which will devour the adversaries, Heb. 12. 28. 29. because though he is our God, and a rejoicing Light to those that serve him faithfully, yet he is a consuming Fire to those that trifle with him. Thirdly, That yet he is a merciful God, v. 31. It comes in here as an encouragement to repentance, but might serve as an inducement to obedience, and a consideration proper to prevent their apostasy. Shall we then desert our God, and forget the covenant that we have made with him, as it follows here, if we be faithful unto him? Whither can we go to mend ourselves? Shall we forget the covenant of our God, who will not forget the covenant of our fathers? Let us be held to our duty by the bonds of love, and prevailed with by the mercies of God to cleave to him.

(2.) He urges their relation to this God, his authority over them, and their obligation to him. "The commandments you are to know and do, are mine," says Moses, "not my inventions, not my injunctions, but they are the commandments of the Lord, framed by infinite wisdom, enacted by sovereign power, he is the Lord of your fathers, (v. 1.) so that you are by inheritance, your fathers were his, and you were born in his house. He is the Lord your God, (v. 2.) so that you are his by your own consent. He is the Lord your God, (v. 3.) so that I treat with you as his agent and ambassador;" and in his name Moses delivered unto them all that, and that only, which he had received from the Lord.

(3.) He urges the wisdom of being religious, (v. 5.) for this is your wisdom in the sight of the nations. In keeping God's commandments, [1.] They would act wisely for themselves. This is your wisdom. It is not only agreeable to right reason, but highly conducive to our true interest; this is one of the first and most ancient maxims of divine revelation, The fear of the Lord, that is wisdom, Job 28. 28. [2.] They would answer the expectations of their neighbours, who, upon reading or hearing the precepts of the law that was given them, would conclude that certainly the people that were governed by this law, and that were subject to the ceremonies of the law, were a great and holy people. Great things may justly be looked for from those who are guided by divine revelation, and unto whom are committed the oracles of God; they must needs be better and wiser than other people; and so they are, if they are ruled by the rules that are given them; and if they are not, though reproach may for their sakes be cast upon the religion they profess, yet they are greatly certain return upon themselves to their eternal confusion. Those that enjoy the benefit of divine light and laws, ought to conduct themselves so as to support their own repute for wisdom and honour, (see Exe. 10. 1.) that God may be glorified thereby.

(4.) He urges the singular advantages which they enjoyed by virtue of the happy establishment they were under, v. 7, 8. Our communion with God (which is the comfort of our blessings, and the delight which we are capable of in this world,) is kept up by the word and prayer; in both these Israel were happier than any people under heaven.

[1.] Never were any people so privileged in speaking to God, (v. 7.) he was nigh unto them in all that they called upon him for, ready to answer their inquiries, and resolve them by his oracles; nothing but what they consult him in, they desire nothing but what they come to him for. Secondly, Those that call upon God, shall certainly find him within call, and ready to give an answer of peace to every prayer of faith; see Isa. 58. 9. Thou shalt cry, as the child from the nurse, and he shall say, Here I am, what does my dear child cry for? Thirdly, This is a privilege which makes the Israel of God truly great and honourable. What can go further than this, to magnify a people, or person? Is any name more illustrious than that of Israel, a prince with God? What nation is there so great? Other nations might boast of greater numbers, larger territories, and more ancient incorporations; but none could boast of such an interest in heaven as Israel had. They had their gods, but not so nigh to them as Israel's God was; they could not help them in a time of need, as 1 Kings 18. 27.

[2.] None were ever so in hearing from God by the statutes and judgments which were set before them, (v. 8.) this also was the grandeur of Israel above any people. What nation is there so great, that hath statutes and judgments so righteous? Observe, First, That all these statutes and judgments of the divine law, are infinitely just and righteous, above the statutes and judgments of any of the nations. The law of God is far more excellent than the law of nations. No law so consonant to natural equity and the unprejudiced dictates of right reason, so consistent with itself in all the parts of it, and so conducive to the welfare and interest of mankind, as the scripture-law is, Ps. 119. 128. Secondly, The having of these statutes, and judgments set before them, is the true and transcendent greatness of any nation or people. See Ps. 147. 19, 20. It is an honour to us that we have the Bible in reputation and power among us. It is a mark of God’s people’s high in the family of God, and a means of making them high among the nations. That they magnify the law, shall be magnified by it.

(5.) He urges God’s glorious appearances to them at mount Sinai, when he gave them this law. This he insists much upon. Take heed lest thou forget the day that thou stoodest before the Lord thy God in Horeb, v. 10. Some of them were then alive, that could remember it, though they were then under twenty years of age, and the rest of them might be said to stand there in the loins of their fathers, who received the law and entered into covenant there, not for themselves only, but for their children, to whom God had an eye particularly in giving the law; that they might teach it their children.

Two things they must remember, and, one would think, they could never forget them.

(i.) What they saw at mount Sinai; (v. 11.) they saw a strange composition of fire and darkness, both dreadful and very awful; and they must needs be a striking foil to each other; the darkness made the fire in the midst of it look the more dreadful. Fires in the night are most frightful, and the fire made the darkness thirt surrounded it, look the more awful; for it must needs be a strong darkness which such a fire did not dispel. As religious people receive the impressions of it; but how dreadful then must a constant fire from heaven be! It gave an earnest of the day of judgment, in which the Lord Jesus shall be revealed in flaming fire. As he reminds them of what they saw, so he tells them what they saw not; no manner of similitude, from which they might form either an idea of God in their fancies, or an image of God in their high places. By what we see of God, sufficient ground is given us to believe him to be a Being of infinite power and perfection, but no occasion given us to suspect him to have a body such as we have.

(2.) What they heard at mount Sinai; (v. 12.) The Lord spake unto you with an intelligible voice, in your own language, and you heard it. This he enlarges upon toward the close of his discourse, v. 32, 33, 36. First, They heard the voice of God speaking upon the mountain; secondly, They heard the voice of God speaking out of the fire, which showed them that it was God himself speaking; thirdly, What else could dwell with devouring fire? God spake to Job out of the whirlwind, which was terrible; but to Israel out of the fire, which was more terrible. We have reason to be thankful that he does not thus speak to us, but by men like ourselves, whose terror shall not make us afraid, Job 33, 6, 7. Thirdly, They heard it and yet lived, v. 33. It was a wonder of mercy then, and in allusion to Moses himself trembled. Fourthly, Never any people heard the like. He bids them inquire of former days, and distant places, and they would find this favour of God to Israel without precedent or parallel. There is a name for them, called for singular obedience from them. It might justly be expected that they should do more for God than other people, since God had done so much more for them.

(6.) He urges God’s gracious appearances for them, in bringing them out of Egypt, from the iron furnace, where they laboured in the fire, forming them into a people, and then taking them to be his own people, a people of inheritance: (v. 20.) this he mentions again, v. 34, 37, 38. Never did God do such a thing for any people: the rise of this nation was quite different from the origin of all other nations. [1.] They were thus dignified and distinguished, not for any thing in them that was despising or inviting, but because God had a kindness for their fathers, he chose them. See the reasons of free grace; we are not beloved for our own sakes, but for his sake who is the great Trustee of the covenant. [2.] They were delivered out of Egypt by miracles and signs, in mercy to them, and in judgment upon the Egyptians, against whom God stretched out his arm, which was signified by Moses’s stretching out his hand in smiting the plagues. [3.] They were designed for a happy settlement in Canaan, v. 38. Nations must be driven out from before them, to make room for them, to show how much dearer they were thought of than any other people were. Egyptians and Canaanites must both be sacrificed to Israel’s honour and interest. They that stand in Israel’s light, in Israel’s way, shall find that it is at their peril.

(7.) He urges God’s righteous appearance against them sometimes for their sines. He specifies the matter of Peor; (v. 3, 4.) this had happened very lately: their eyes had seen but the other day the great things of God in the presence of God, and he now conveys to Baal-peor, and the preservation of those that clave to the Lord; from which they might easily infer the danger of apostasy from God, and the benefit of adherence to him. He also takes notice again of God’s displeasure against himself, (v. 21, 22.) The Lord was angry with me for your sakes. He mentions this, to try their ingenuousness, whether they would really be troubled for the great wrongs done to God, and what they had occasioned to their faithful friend and leader. Others’ sufferings for our sakes should grieve us more than our own.

(8.) He urges the certain benefit and advantage of obedience. This argument he begins with, (v. 1.) That ye may live, and go in and possess the land; and this he concludes with, (v. 40.) That it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee. He reminds them that they were upon their own advantage to be watchful, and they might depend upon their piety. If they kept God’s precepts, he would undoubtedly fulfil his promises.

(9.) He urges the fatal consequences of their apostasy from God: That it would undoubtedly be the ruin of their nation. This he enlarges upon, v. 25... 31. Where, [1.] He foresees their revolt from God to idols; that in process of time, when they had remained long in the idolatry of Egypt, they would corrupt themselves, and make a groaven image; this was the sin that would most easily beset them, v. 25. [2.] He foretells the judgments of God upon them for this, Ye shall utterly be destroyed, (v. 26.) scattered among the nations, v. 27. And their sin should be made their punishment, (v. 28.) There shall we serve gods, the work of men’s hands; be compelled to serve them, whether ye will or no; or, through your own selfishness and stupidity, you will find no beter succours to apply yourselves to in your captivity. Those that cast off the duties of religion in their prosperity, cannot expect the comforts of it when they come to be in distress. Justly are they then sent to the gods whom they have served, Judg.
10. 14. [3.] Yet he encourages them to hope that God would reserve mercy for them in the latter days; that he would by his judgments upon them bring them to repentance, and take them again into covenant with himself, v. 29. 31. Where observe, First, That whatever place we are in, we may from thence seek the Lord our God, though ever so remote from our own land, or from his holy temple.
There is no part of this earth that has a gulf fixed between it and heaven. Secondly, They, and they only, shall find God to their comfort, who seek him with all their heart, that is, who are entirely devoted to him, and earnestly desirous of his favour, and solicitous to obtain it. Thirdly, Afflictions are sent to engage and quicken us to seek God, and, by the grace of God working with them, many are thus reduced to their right mind. "When these things are come upon thee, it is to be hoped that you will turn to the Lord thy God, for thou seest what comes of turning from him," see Jer. 5. 21.
Fourthly, God's faithfulness to his covenant encourages us to hope that he will not reject us, though we are driven to him by affliction. If we at length remember the covenant, we shall find that he has not forgotten it.

Now let all these arguments be laid together, and then say whether religion has not reason on its side.
None cast off the government of their God, but those that have first abandoned the understanding of a man.

41. Then Moses severed three cities on this side Jordan, toward the sun-rising;
42. That the slayer might flee thither, which should kill his neighbour unawares, and hated him not in times past; and that,
 fleeing unto one of these cities, he might live:
43. Namely, Bezer in the wilderness, in the plain country of the Reubenites; and Rahmoth Gilead, of the Gadites; and Golan in Bashan, of the Manassites.
44. And this is the law which Moses set before the children of Israel: 45. These are the testimonies, and the statutes, and the judgments, which Moses spake unto the children of Israel, after they came forth out of Egypt. 46. On this side Jordan, in the valley over against Beth-peor, in the land of Sihon king of the Amorites, who dwelt at Heshbon, whom Moses and the children of Israel smote, after they were come forth out of Egypt: 47. And they possessed his land, and the land of Og king of Bashan, two kings of the Amorites, which were on this side Jordan, toward the sun-rising; 48. From Aroer, which is by the bank of the river Armon, even unto mount Sion, which is Hermon; 49. And all the plain on this side Jordan eastward, even unto the sea of the plain, under the springs of Pisgah.

Here is,
1. The nomination of the cities of refuge on that side Jordan where Israel now lay encamped. Three cities were appointed for that purpose, one in the lot of Reuben, another in that of God, and another in that of the half tribe of Manasseh, v. 41.
What Moses could do for that people while he was yet with them, he did, to give example to the rulers who were settled, that they might observe them the better when he was gone.

2. The introduction to another sermon that Moses preached in Israel, which he hath in the following chapters. Probably, it was preached the next Sabbath-day after, when the congregation attended to receive instruction. He had in general exhorted them to obedience in the former chapter; here he comes to repeat the law which they were to observe; for he demands a universal, but not an implicit, obedience. How can we do our duty, if we do not know it? Here therefore he sets the law before them, as the rule they were to work by, the way they were to walk in; sets it before them, as the glass in which they were to see their natural face, that, looking into this perfect law of liberty, they might continue therein. These are the testimonies, the statutes, and the judgments, the moral, ceremonial, and judicial, laws, which had been enacted before, when Israel was newly come out of Egypt, were now repeated on this side Jordan, v. 44. 46.
But we are to understand that the laws in charge, is here particularly described. It was, (1.) Over-against Beth-peor, an id. tempel of the Moabites, which perhaps Moses sometimes looked toward, with a particular caution to them against the infection of that and other such like dangerous places. (2.) It was upon their new conquests, in the very land, which they had got out of the hands of Sihon and Og, and were now possessively in possession of, v. 47. Their present triumphs here were powerful arguments for obcidence.

CHAP. V.

In this chapter we have the second edition of the ten commandments. 1. The general intent of them; they were in the nature of a covenant between God and Israel, v.
1., 5. 11. The particular precepts are repeated, v. 6. 21.
with the double delivery of them, both by word and writing, v. 22. III. The settling of the correspondence from thenceforward between God and Israel, by the mediation and ministry of Moses. 1. It was Israel's humble remembrance, that it might be said, v. 28. 27. 2. It was God's gracious grant that it should be so, v. 28. 31.
And from hence he infers the obligations they were under to obedience, v. 32.

1. And Moses called all Israel, and said unto them, Hear, O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day, that ye may learn them, and keep and do them. 2. The LORD our God made a covenant with us in Horeb. 3.
The LORD made not this covenant with our fathers, but with us, even us, who are all of us here alive this day. 4. The LORD talked with you face to face in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, 5. (I stood between the LORD and you at that time, to show you the word of the LORD; for ye were afraid by reason of the fire, and went not up into the mount;) saying,

Here Moses summons the assembly. He called all Israel; not only the elders, but, it is likely, as many of the people as could come within hearing, v. 1.
The greatest of them were not above God's command, nor the meanest of them below his cognizcance; but they were all concerned to hear what they were all bound to do.
2. He demands attention. "Hear, O Israel; hear and heed, hear and remember, hear, that you may learn, and keep, and do all the hearing is to no purpose." When we hear the word of God, we must set ourselves to learn it, that we may have it ready to us upon all occasions, and what we have learned, we must put in practice, for that is the end of hearing and learning; not to fill our heads with notions, or our mouths with talk, but to rectify and direct our affections and conversations.

3. He refers them to the covenant made with them in Horeb, as that which they must observe themselves by. See the wonderful condescension of divine grace in turning the command into a covenant, that we might be more strongly bound to obedience by our own consent, and the more encouraged in it by the divine promise, both which are supposed in the covenant. The promises and threatenings annexed to some of the precepts, as to the second, third, and fifth, make them amount to a covenant. Observe, (1.) The parties to this covenant: God made it, not with our fathers, not with Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob; to them God gave the covenant of circumcision, (Acts 7. 8.) but not that of the ten commandments. The light of divine revelation shone gradually, and the children of Israel were made to know more of God's mind, than their fathers had done. "The covenant was made with us, or our immediate parents that represented us, before mount Sinai, and transacted for us. (2.) The publication of this covenant: God himself did, as it were, read the articles to them; (v. 4.) He talked with you face to face. Word to word; so the Chaldee. Not in dark visions, as of old he spake to the fathers, (Job 4. 12, 13.) but openly and clearly, and so that all the thousands of Israel might hear and understand. He spake to them, and then received the answer they returned to him: thus was it transacted in the making of the other covenant; Moses stood between God and them, at the foot of the mount, (v. 5.) and carried messages between them, both for the settling of the preliminaries, (Exod. 19.) and for the exchanging of the ratifications, Exod. 24. Herein Moses was a type of Christ, who stands between God and man, to show us the word of the Lord: a blessed Day's-Man, that has laid his hand upon us both, so that we may both hear from God, and speak to him, without trembling.

6. I am the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the house of bondage. 7. Thou shalt have none other gods before me. 8. Thou shalt not make any graven image, or any likeness of any thing that is in heaven above, or that is in the earth beneath, or that is in the waters beneath the earth: 9. Thou shalt not bow down thyself unto them, nor serve them: for I the Lord thy God am a jealous God, visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation of them that hate me, 10. And showing mercy unto thousands of them that love me, and keep my commandments. 11. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain: for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain. 12. Keep the sabbath-day to sanctify it, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee. 13. Six days thou shalt labour, and do all thy work; 14. But the seventh day is the sabbath of the Lord thy God: in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; that thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thou. 15. And remember that thou wast a servant in the land of Egypt, and that the Lord thy God brought thee out thence, through a mighty hand, and by a stretched-out arm: therefore the Lord thy God commanded thee to keep the sabbath-day. 16. Honour thy father and thy mother, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee; that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may go well with thee, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. 17. Thou shalt not kill. 18. Neither shalt thou commit adultery. 19. Neither shalt thou steal. 20. Neither shalt thou bear false witness against thy neighbour. 21. Neither shalt thou desire thy neighbour's wife, neither shalt thou covet thy neighbour's house, his field, or his man-servant, or his maid-servant, his ox, or his ass, or any thing that is thy neighbour's. 22. These words the Lord spake unto all your assembly in the mount, out of the midst of the fire, of the cloud, and of the thick darkness, with a great voice; and he added no more: and he wrote them in two tables of stone, and delivered them unto me. Here is the repetition of the ten commandments; in which observe: 1. Though they had been spoken before, and written, yet they are again rehearsed; for precept must be upon precept, and line upon line, and all little enough to keep the word of God in our minds, and to preserve and renew the impressions of it. We have need to have the same things often included upon us. See Phil. 3. 1. 2. There is some variation here from that record, Exod. 20. as there is between the Lord's prayer, as it is in Matthew, 6. and as it is Luke 11. In both, it is more necessary that we tie ourselves to the things, than to the words unalterably. 3. The most considerable variation is in the fourth commandment; (Exod. 20.) the reason annexed, is taken from the creation of the world; here it is taken from their deliverance out of Egypt, because that was typical of our redemption by Jesus Christ, in remembrance of which the christian sabbath was to be observed; (v. 15.) Remember that thou wast a servant, and God brought thee out. And therefore, (1.) "It is fit that thy servants should be favoured by the sabbath-rest; for thou knowest the heart of a servant, and how welcome one day's ease will be after six days' labour." (2.) It is fit that thy God should be honoured by the sabbath-work, and the religious services of the day, in commemoration of the great things he has done for thee." In the resurrection of Christ we were brought into the glorious liberty of the children of God, with a mighty hand, and an outstretched arm: therefore by the gospel edition of the law, we are directed to observe the first day of the week. In remembrance of that glorious work of power and grace.

4. It is added in the fifth commandment, That it may go well with thee, which addition the apostle quotes, and puts first, (Eph. 6. 3.) that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest live long. If there be a way for that, it is a very duteous to their parents, and yet have not lived long up on earth, we may reconcile it to the promise, by this explication of it. Whether they live long or no, it shall go well with them, either in this world, or in a better. See Eccl. 8. 12.

5. The five last commandments are connected or coupled together, which they are not in Exodus; and that is by no means, Nor shall thou commit adultery, neither shalt thou steal, &c. Which intimates that God's commandments are all of a piece, the same authority that obliges us to one, obliges us to another; and we must not be partial in the law, but have respect to all God's commandments; for he that offends in one point, is guilty of all, Jam. 2. 10, 11.

6. That these commandments were given with a great deal of awful solemnity, v. 22. (1.) They were spoken with a great voice out of the fire and thick darkness. That was a dispensation of terror, designed to make the gospel of grace the more welcome, and to be a specimen of the terrors of the judgment-day, Ps. 50. 3, 4. (2.) He added no more. What other laws they gave him, were sent by Moses, but no more were spoken in the same manner that the ten commandments were. He added no more, therefore we must not add: the law of the Lord is perfect. (5.) He wrote them in two tables of stone, that they might be preserved from corruption, and might be transmitted pure and entire to posterity, for whose use they were intended, as well as for the present generation. These being the heads of the covenant, the chest in which the written tables were deposited, was called the ark of the covenant. See Rev. 11. 19.

23. And it came to pass, when ye heard the voice out of the midst of the darkness, (for the mountain did burn with fire,) that ye came near unto me, even all the heads of your tribes, and your elders; 24. And ye said, Behold, the Lord our God hath shewed us his glory and his greatness, and we have heard his voice out of the midst of the fire: we have seen this day that God doth talk with man, and he liveth. 25. Now therefore why should we die? for this great fire will consume us: if we hear the voice of the Lord our God any more, then we shall die. 26. For who is there of all flesh that hath heard the voice of the living God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as we have, and lived? 27. Go thou near, and hear all that the Lord our God shall say; and speak thou unto us all that the Lord our God shall speak unto thee; and we will hear it, and do it. 28. And the Lord heard the voice of your words, when ye spake unto me; and the Lord said unto me, I have heard the voice of the words of this people, which they have spoken unto thee: they have well said all that they have spoken. 29. Oh that there were such a heart in them, that they would fear me, and keep my commandments always, that it might be well with them, and with their children for ever! 30. Go say to them, Get you into your tents again. 31. But as for thee, stand thou here by me, and I will speak unto thee all the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which thou shalt teach them, that they may do them in the land which I give them to possess it. 32. Ye shall observe to do therefore as the Lord your God hath commanded you: you shall not turn aside to the right hand or to the left. 33. You shall walk in all the ways which the Lord your God hath commanded you, that ye may live, and that it may be well with you, and that ye may prolong your days in the land which ye shall possess.

Here,

1. Moses reminds them of the agreement of both the parties that were now treating, in the mediator of Moses.

2. Their earnest request that God would from henceforth speak to them by Moses, with a promise that they would hear what he said, as from God himself, and do it, v. 27. It seems by this (1.) That they expected to receive further commandments from God, and were willing to hear more from him. (2.) That they thought Moses able to bear these discoveries of the divine glory, which they, by reason of guilt, were sensible of their inability to stand up under. They believed him to be a favourite of Heaven, and also one that would be faithful to them; yet at other times they murmured at him, and but a little before this, were ready to stone him, Exod. 17. 4. See how men's convictions correct their passions. (3.) That now they were in a good mind, under the strong convictions of the word they heard. Many have their consciences startled by the law, that have them not purified; fair promises are extorted from them, but no good principles fixed and rooted in them.

3. God's reply to the substance of their request. (1.) He commends what they said, v. 28. They spoke it to Moses, but God took notice of it; for there is no word in our tongue, but he knows it. He acknowledges, They have well said. Their own necessity of a mediator to deal between them and God, was well said. Their desire to receive further directions from God by Moses, and their promise to observe what directions should be given them, were well said. And that which is well said, shall have its praise with God, and should have with us. What is good, as far as it goes, let it be commend ed. (2.) He wishes they were but sincere in it, (v. 29.) O that there were such a heart in them! [1.] Such a heart as they should have; a heart to fear

God, and keep his commandments for ever. Note, The God of heaven is truly and earnestly desirous of the welfare and salvation of poor sinners: he has given abundant proof that he is so; he gives us time and space to repent, by his mercies and warnings, and waits to be gracious; he sent his Son to redeem us, published a general offer of pardon and life, promised his Spirit to those that pray for him, and has said it, and sworn, that he has no pleasure in the ruin of sinners. (2.) Such a heart as they now had, or, one would think they had. Note. It would be well with many, if there were always such a heart in them, as there seems to be sometimes; yet we must not approve of us, or the rebukes of Providence, or when they come to look death in the face: How gracious will they be, when these things come upon them? O that there may be always such a heart in them! (3.) He appoints Moses to be his messenger to them, to receive the law from his mouth, and to communicate it to them, v. 31. Here the matter was settled by consent of both parties, that God should from henceforward speak to us by men like ourselves, by Moses and the prophets, by the apostles and the evangelists, whom if we believe not, neither should we be persuaded, though God should speak to us as he did to Israel at mount Sinai, or send expressés from heaven or hell. He gives the law, and then gives thewent, and shows them the way to obey it, and the manner and mode. Note, God gives it in due time, as he engaged to do it. (4.) He confines the hearing of the law to the children of Israel: They are to hear the words of the law, and they are to teach their children. The scope of the law. (5.) The Lord's religion is peculiar to himself; he only speaks that may be trusted; and therefore the people should submit to God's commands, as they will find them to be no reproach to their country, but an honour and a glory to it, and of his church. Note, God's righteousness and Christianity are not the same. 1. Thus Christ's ministers are to teach his churches all that he has commanded, and neither more nor less, Matt. 28. 20. 2. That the end of their being taught, was, that they might do as they were taught, (v. 1.) thus keep God's statutes, (v. 2.) and observe to do them. Good instructions from parents and ministers will but aggravate our condemnation, if we do not live up to them. 3. That Moses carefully endeavoured to fix them for God and goodness, now that they were entering upon the land of Canaan, that they might be prepared for the comforts of that land, and for trials against the snares of it; and now that they were setting out in the world, might set out well. 4. That the fear of God in the heart will be the most powerful principle of obedience; (v. 2.) Thou mightest fear the Lord thy God to keep all his statutes. 5. The entitl of religion in a family, or country, is the best entail: it is highly desirable that not we only, but our children, and our children's children, may fear the Lord. 6. Religion and righteousness advance and secure the prosperity of any people. Fear God, and it shall be well with thee. Those that are well-taught, if they do what they are taught, shall be well-fed too, as Israel in the land flowing with milk and honey, v. 5. 6. And these words, which I command thee this day, shall be in thine heart: 7. And thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. 8. And thou shalt bind them for a sign upon thine hand, and they shall be as frontlets between thine eyes. 9. And thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, and on thy gates. 10. And it shall be, when the Lord thy God shall have brought thee into the land which he sware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give thee great and goodly cities, which thou buildedst not, 11. And houses full of all good things, which thou fillest not, and wells digged, which thou diggédst not, vineyards and olive-trees, which thou plantest not; when thou shalt have eaten, and be full; 12. Then beware lest thou forget the Lord, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage. 13. Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God, and serve him, and shalt swear by his name. 14. Ye shall not go after other gods, of the gods of the people which are round about you; 15. (For the Lord thy God is a jealous God among you,) lest the anger of the Lord thy God be kindled against thee, and destroy thee from off the face of the earth. 16. Ye shall not tempt the Lord your God, as ye tempted him in Massah. Here is, 1. A brief summary of religion, containing the... first principles of faith and obedience, v. 4, 5. These two verses the Jews reckon one of the choicest portions of scripture: they write it in their phylacteries, and think themselves not only obliged to say it at least twice every day, but very happy in being so obliged; having this saying among them, Blessed are we, who every morning and evening say, Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord. But more blessed are we, if we duly consider and keep this weighty precept.

1. What we are here taught to believe concerning God; That Jehovah our God is one Jehovah. (1.) That the God whom we serve, is Jehovah, a Being infinitely and eternally perfect, self-existent, and self-sufficient. (2.) That he is the one only living and true God; he only is God, and he is but One. The firm belief of this self-existent truth would effectually arm them against all idolatry, which was introduced by that fundamental error, That there are gods many. It is past dispute, that there is one God, and there is no other but he, Mark, 12. 23. Let us therefore have no other, nor desire to have any other. Some have thought there is here a plain intimation of the Trinity of persons in the unity of the Godhead; for here is the name of God three times and the word three is prefixed to it. It may be possible that there is one Lord for their God; for they have but one Master to please, but one Benefactor to seek to. It is better to have one fountain than a thousand cisterns; one all-sufficient God than a thousand insufficient ones.

2. What we are here taught concerning the duty which God requires of man. It is all summed up in this, as its principle, Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart. He had undertaken, (v. 2.) to teach them to fear God; and in pursuance of his undertaking, he here teaches them to love him; for the warmer our affection to him, the greater will be our veneration for him; and the child that honours his parents, no doubt loves them. Did ever any prince make a law that his subjects should love him? Yet such is the condescension of the divine grace, that this is made the first and great commandment of God's law, that we love him, and that we perform all other parts of our duty to him from a principle of love: My soul, give me thine heart. We must highly esteem him, be well pleased that there is such a Being, well pleased in all his attributes, and relations to us; our desire must be toward him, our delight in him, our dependence upon him, and to him we must be entirely devoted. It must be a constant delight to us to think of him, hear from him, speak to him, and serve him. We must love him. (1.) As the Lord, the best of Beings, most excellent and amiable in himself. (2.) As our God, a God in covenant with us, our Father, and the most kind and bountiful of friends and benefactors. We are also commanded to love God with all our heart, and soul, and might; that is, We must love him, [1.] With a sincere love; not in word and tongue only, but in deed and in truth, with our heart, with our soul, and with our strength. [2.] With a strong love; the heart must be carried out toward him with great ardor and fervency of affection. Some have from hence thought, that we should avoid saying (as we commonly express ourselves) that we will do this or that, with all our heart; for we must not do any thing with all our heart but love God; and that this phrase of with all our heart is repeated to shew that it should not be unhearted. That he is our All, must have our all, and none but he. [3.] With a superlative love; we must love God above every creature whatsoever, and love nothing beside him, but what we love for him, and in subordination to him. [4.] With an intelligent love; for so it is explained, Mark 12. 38. To love him with all the heart, and with all the understanding, we must know him, and therefore love him, as those that see good cause to love him. [5.] With an entire love; he is one, and therefore our hearts must be united in this love, and the whole stream of our affections must run toward him. O that this love of God may be shed abroad in our hearts!

II. Means are here prescribed for the maintaining and keeping up of religion in our hearts and houses, that it might not wither and go to decay. And they are these: 1. Meditation, v. 6. These words which I command thee, shall be in thine heart. Though the words alone without the things will do us no good, yet we are in danger of losing the things if we neglect the words, by which ordinarily divine light and power are con-eyed to the heart. God's words must be laid up in our heart, that our thoughts may be daily conversant with them, and employed about them, and thereby the whole soul may be brought to abide and act under the influence and impress of them. This immediately follows upon the law of loving God with all our heart; for they that do so, will lay up his word in their hearts, both as an evidence and effect of that love, and as a means to preserve and increase it. He that loves God, loves his Bible.

2. The religious education of children, v. 7. Thou shalt teach them diligently to thy children; and by communicating thy knowledge thou wilt increase it. They that love the Lord God themselves, should do what they can to engage the affections of their children to him, and so to preserve the entail of religion in their families from being cut off. Thou shalt not let this word, which is so diligently upon thy children, so seem read; frequently repeat these things to them, try all ways of instilling them into their minds, and making them pierce into their hearts; as in whetting a knife, it is turned first on this side, then on that. Be careful and exact in teaching thy children; and aim, as by whetting, to sharpen them, and put an edge upon them. Teach them thy children, not only those of thine own body, (say the Jews,) but all those that are any way under thy care and tuition. Bishop Patrick well observes here, that Moses thought this law so very plain and easy, that every father might be able to instruct his sons in it, and every mother her daughters. Thus that good thing which is committed to us, we must carefully transmit to those that come after us, that it may be perpetuated.

3. Pious discourse. Thou shalt talk of these things, with due reverence and seriousness, for the benefit not only of thy children, but of thy other domestics, thy friends and companions, as thou sittest in thy house, either at work, or at meat, or at rest, or to receive visits; and when thou walkest by the way, either for diversion, or for conversation, or in journeys, when at night thou art retiring from thy family to lie down for sleep, and when in the morning thou comest up, and returnest to thy family again. Take all occasions to discourse with them, and to cast about thee of divine things; not of unrevealed mysteries, or matters of doubtful dispute, but of the plain truths and laws of God, and the things that belong to our peace. So far is it from being reckoned a diminution to the honour of sacred things, to make them the subject of our familiar discourse, that they are recommended to us to be talked of; one may with much propriety discourse with them; we shall admire them, and be affected with them, and may thereby be instrumental to communicate divine light and heat.

4. Frequent reading of the word. They shall be as frontlets between thine eyes, and thou shalt write them upon the posts of thy house, v. 8, 9. It is probable that at that time there were few written copies of the whole law, only at the feast of tabernacles the people had it read to them; and therefore God appointed them, at least for the present, to write some select sentences of the law, that were most weighty and comprehensive, upon their walls, or in scrolls of parchment to be worn about their wrists; and sometimes that hence the phylacteries, so much used among the Jews, took rise. Christ blames the Pharisees, not for wearing them, but for affecting to have them broader than other people. Deut. 6. 8. 10. 23. 5. But when Bibles came to be common among them, there was the less occasion for this expedient: It was prudently and piously provided by the first reformers of the English church, that then when Bibles were scarce; some select portions of scripture should be written on the walls and pillars of the churches, which the people might make familiar to them, in conformity to this direction here, which was in the letter of Deut. 6. 8. 10. 23. 5. The Jews, as it is to us in the intent of it, which is, that we should endeavour by all means possible to make the word of God familiar to us, that we may have it ready to us upon all occasions, for our restraint from sin and our direction and excitement to our duty. It must be as that which is written on the palms of our hands, always before our eyes. See Prov. 3. 1. 5. It is also intimated that we must now think of our religion as a thing to be laid down to us, and ourselves under the check and government of it. Let it be written on our gates, and let every one that goes by our door, read it, That we believe Jehovah to be God alone, and believe ourselves bound to love him with all our hearts.

III. A caution is here given not to forget God in a day of prosperity and plenty, v. 10–12. Here, 1. He reminds them of the goodness of God; taking it for granted that he would bring them into the good land that he had promised, v. 10. That they should no longer dwell in tents as shepherds and poor travellers, but should settle in great and goodly cities; should no longer wander in a barren wilderness, but should enjoy houses well-furnished, and gardens well-plant ed; (v. 11.) and all this without any care or expense of their own, which he gave them here upon their entrance into the land; They shall not build moist, Houses which thou fittedst not, &c. both because it made the mercy really much more valuable, that what they had, came to them so cheap; and yet if they did not actually consider it, the mercy would be the less esteemed, for we are most sensible of the value of that which has cost us dear. When they came so easily by the gift, they would be apt to grow secure, and unmindful of the Giver. 2. He engages their way in the goodness of God; that when they liest safe and soft, lest thou forget the Lord, v. 12. Note, (1.) In a day of prosperity we are in great danger of forgetting God, our dependence upon him, our need of him, and our obligations to him. When the world smiles, we are apt to make our court to it, and expect our happiness in it, and so we forget him that is our only Portion and Providence. (Prov. 30. 9.) Lest the full and deny thee. (2.) There is therefore need of great care and caution at such a time, and strict watchfulness against the badness of their own hearts; then beware, when thou liest safe and soft, lest thou forget the Lord; v. 12. Note, (1.) In a day of prosperity we are in great danger of forgetting God, our dependence upon him, our need of him, and our obligations to him. When the world smiles, we are apt to make our court to it, and expect our happiness in it, and so we forget him that is our only Portion and Providence. (Prov. 30. 9.) Lest the full and deny thee. (2.) There is therefore need of great care and caution at such a time, and strict watchfulness against the badness of their own hearts; then beware, when thou liest safe and soft, lest thou forget the Lord; v. 12.

IV. Some special precepts and prohibitions are here given, which are of great consequence. 1. They must upon all occasions give honour to God, (v. 13.) fear him and serve him, (for if he be a Master, we must both reverence him and do his work,) and swear by his name; that is, they must not upon any occasion appeal to any other, as the Discerner of truth, and Avenger of wrong. Swear by him only, and not by any idol, or any other creature. Swear by his name in all treaties and covenants with the neighbouring nations, and do not compliment them so far as to swear by their gods. Swearing by his name, is sometimes put for an open profession of his name; Isa. 44. 23. Every tongue shall swear, is expounded, (Rom. 14. 11.) Every tongue shall confess to God. 2. They must not upon any occasion give that honour to other Gods; (v. 14.) Ye shall not go after other gods, that is, Ye shall not serve or worship them, for therein they went astray, they went a whoring from the true God, who, in this, more than in any thing, is a jealous God; (v. 15.) and the learned Bishop Patrick observes here, out of Maimonides, that we never find, either in the law or the prophets, anger, or fury, or jealousy, or indignation, attributed to God but upon occasion of idolatry. 3. They must take heed of dishonouring God by tempting him, (v. 16.) Ye shall not tempt the Lord thy God; either by despising of his power and goodness, while we keep in the way of our duty, or by presuming upon it, when we turn aside out of that way. 17. Ye shall diligently keep the commandments of the Lord your God, and his testimonies, and his statutes, which he hath commanded thee. 18. And thou shalt do that which is right and good in the sight of the Lord; that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest go in and possess the good land which the Lord sware unto thy fathers; 19. To cast out all thine enemies from before thee, as the Lord hath spoken. 20. And when thy son asketh thee in time to come, saying, What mean the testimonies, and the statutes, and the judgments, which the Lord our God hath commanded you? 21. Then thou shalt say unto thy son, We were Pharaoh's bondmen in Egypt; and the Lord brought us out of Egypt with a mighty hand: 22. And the Lord showed signs and wonders, great and sore, upon Egypt, upon Pharaoh, and upon all his household before our eyes: 23. And he brought us out from thence, that he might bring us in, to give us the land which he sware unto our fathers. 24. And the Lord commanded us to do all these statutes, to fear the Lord our God, for our good always, that he might preserve us alive, as it is at this day. 25. And it shall be our righteousness, if we observe to do all these commandments before the Lord our God, as he hath commanded us.
Here,
I. Moses charges them to keep God's commandments, v. (17. 19.) Ye shall diligently keep God's commandments. Note, It requires a great deal of care and pains to keep up religion in the power of it in our hearts and lives. Negligence will ruin us; but we cannot be saved without diligence. To induce them to this, he here shows them, 1. That this would be most acceptable to God; it is right, and good in the sight of the Lord; and right and good indeed, that is so in God's sight. If we have any regard to the favour of our Creator as our felicity, and the law of our creation as our rule, we shall be religious. 2. That it would be very advantageous and profitable to themselves. It would secure to them the possession of the land of Canaan, prosperity there, and constant victory over those that stood in their way. In short, Do well, and it shall be well with thee.

II. He charges them to instruct their children in the command of God; not only that they might in their tender years intelligently and affectionately join in religious services, but that afterward they might in their day keep up religion, and convey it to those that should come after them.

Now, 1. Here is a proper question, which it is supposed they would ask, [1.] What mean the testimonies and the statutes? What is the meaning of the feasts we observe, the sacrifices we offer, and the many peculiar customs we keep up?

Observe, (1.) All divine institutions have a certain meaning, and there is something great designed in them. (2.) It concerns us to know and understand the meaning of them, that we may perform a reasonable service, and may not offer the blind for sacrifice. (3.) It is good for children betimes to inquire into the true intent and meaning of the religious observances they are trained up in. To be thus inquisitive in divine things, is a good sign that they are concerned about them, and a good means of their attaining to a great acquaintance with them.

Then shall we know, if thus we follow on to know.

2. Here is a full answer put into the parents' mouths to be given to this good question. Parents and masters, instruct them in their charge, though they do not ask it. Nay, though they have an aversion to it; much more must they be ready to answer questions, and to give instruction when it is desired; for it may be hoped, they that ask it, will be willing to receive it. Did the children ask the meaning of God's laws? Let them be told, That they were to be observed. (1.) In a grateful remembrance of God's former favours to them, especially their deliverance out of Egypt, v. 21. - 23. The children must be often told of the deplorable state their ancestors were in, when they were bondmen in Egypt, the great salvation God wrought for them in fetching them out there, and that God, in giving them these peculiar statutes, meant to perpetuate the memorial of that work of wonder, by which they were formed into a peculiar people. (2.) As the prescribed condition of his further favours, v. (24. The Lord commanded them to keep all these statutes for our good. Note, God commands us nothing but what is really for our own good. It is our interest, as well as our duty, to be religious. [1.] It will be our life; that he might preserve us alive; which is a great favour, and more than we could expect, considering how often we have forfeited life itself. Godliness has the promise of the continuance and comfort of that life that now is, as far as it is consistent with God's glory. [2.] It will be our righteousness. Could we perfectly fulfil but that one command of loving God with all our heart, soul, and might, and could we say, "We have never done otherwise," that would be our righteousness, as to entitle us to the benefits of the covenant of in- nocency; had we continued in every thing that is written in the book of the law to do it, the law would have justified us. But that we cannot pretend to, therefore our sincere obedience shall be accepted through a Mediator to denominate us, as Noah was, righteous before God, Gen. 7. 1. Luke 1. 6. and 1 John 3. 7. The Chaldee reads it, There shall be a reward to us, if we observe to do these commandments; for, without doubt, in keeping God's commandments there is great reward.

CHAP. VII.

Moses in this chapter exhorts Israel. 1. In general, to keep God's commandments, canons, precepts, and laws, and in order to that, to keep themselves pure from all communion with idolaters. 1. They must utterly destroy the seven devoted nations, and not spare them or make leagues with them, v. 1, 2, 16, 24. 2. They must by no means marry with the remains of them, v. 3, 4. 3. They must deface and consume their altars and images, and not so much as take the silver and gold of them to their own use, v. 5, 25, 26. To enforce this charge, he shows that they were bound to do so, (1.) Induty. Considering, [1.] Their election to God, v. 6. [2.] The reason of that election, v. 7, 8. [3.] The terms they stood upon with God, v. 9, 10. (2.) In interest. It is here promised, [1.] In general, that if they would serve God, he would bless and prosper them, v. 12...15. [2.] In particular, that if they would drive out the nations that they might not be a temptation to them, God would drive them out, that they should not be any vexation to them, v. 17...24.

1. WHEN the Lord thy God shall bring thee into the land whither thou goest to possess it, and hath cast out many nations before thee, the Hittites, and the Gergashites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, seven nations greater and mightier than thou: 2. And when the Lord thy God shall deliver them before thee; thou shalt smite them, and utterly destroy them: thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor show mercy unto them: 3. Neither shalt thou make marriages with them; thy daughter thou shalt not give unto his son, nor his daughter shalt thou take unto thy son. 4. For they will turn away thy son from following me, that they may serve other gods: so will the anger of the Lord be kindled against you, and destroy thee suddenly. 5. But thus shall ye deal with them; ye shall destroy their altars, and break down their images, and cut down their groves, and burn their graven images with fire. 6. For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God: the Lord thy God hath chosen thee to be a special people unto himself, above all people that are upon the face of the earth. 7. The Lord did not set his love upon you, nor choose you, because ye were more in number than any other people; for ye were the fewest of all people; 8. But because the Lord loved you, and because he would keep the oath which he had sworn unto your fathers, hath the Lord brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you out of the house of bondmen, from the hand of Pharaoh king of Egypt. 9. Know therefore that the Lord thy God, he is God, the faithful God, which keepeth covenant and mercy with them that love him and keep his commandments, to a thousand generations; 10. And repayeth them that hate him to their face, to destroy them: he will not be slack to him that hateth him, he will repay him to his face. 11. Thou shalt therefore keep the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which I command thee this day, to do them.

I. A very strict caution against all friendship and fellowship with idols and idolaters. Those that are taken into communion with God, must have no communication with the unfruitful works of darkness, and they are charged about, for the preventing of this snare now before them. 1. They must show them no mercy, v. 1, 2. Bloody work is here appointed them, and yet it is God's work, and good work, and in its time and place needful, acceptable, and honourable.

(1.) God here engages to do his part. It is spoken of as a thing taken for granted, that God would do all that he had promised. He that would cast out the nations before them, who were the present occupants of that land: no room was left to doubt of that. His power is irresistible, and therefore he can do it: his promise is inviolable, and therefore he will do it. Now, [1.] These devoted nations are here named and numbered, v. 1. Seven in all, and seven to one seemed to make it a very unequal contest. They are specified, that Israel might know the bounds and limits of their commission; hitherto their severity must come, but no further; nor must they, under colour of this commission, kill all that came in their way; no, here must its waves be stayed. The confining of this commission to the nations here mentioned, plainly intimates that after ages were not to draw this into a precedent; this will not serve to justify those barbarous wars which give no quart. God agreesable to every other method might be, when God himself prescribed it, to that dispensation under which such multitudes of beasts were killed and burned in sacrifice; now that all sacrifices of atonement are perfected in, and superseded by, the great propitiation made by the blood of Christ, human blood is become perhaps more precious than it was, and those that have most power, yet must not be prodigal of it. [2.] They are here owned to be greater and mightier than Israel. They had been long rooted in this land to which Israel came strangers; they were more numerous, had men much more bulky, and more expert in war, than Israel had; yet all this shall not prevent their being cast out before Israel. The strength of Israel's enemies magnifies the power of Israel's God, who will certainly be too hard for them.

(2.) He engages them to do their part. Thou shalt smite them, and utterly destroy them, v. 2. If God cast them out, Israel must not take them in, no, not as tenants, or tributaries, or servants. No covenant of any kind must be made with them, no mercy must be shewed them. This severity was appointed, [1.] In order to punish the wickedness they and their fathers had been guilty of. The iniquity of the Amorites was now full, and the longer it had been in the filling, the sweeter was the vengeance when it came at last. [2.] In order to prevent the mischiefs they would do God's Israel, if they were left alive. The people of these abominations must not be mingled with the holy seed, lest they corrupt them. Better that all these lives should be lost from the earth, than that religion and its worship, the way, the doctrine of God should be learnt in Israel. Thus we must deal with our lusts that war against our souls; God has delivered them into our hands by that promise, Sin shall not have dominion over you, unless it be your own faults; let not us then make covenants with them, or show them any mercy, but mortify and crucify them, and utterly destroy them.

2. They must make no marriages with those of them that escaped the sword, v. 3, 4. The families of the Canaanites were ancient, and it is probable that some of them were called honourable, which might be a temptation to the Israelites, especially those of them that were of least note in their tribes, to court an alliance with them, to mend their blood; and the rather, because their acquaintance with the country might be serviceable to them in the improvement of it: but religion, and the fear of God, must overrule all these considerations. To intermarry with them was therefore unlawful, because it was dangerous; this very thing had proved of fatal consequence to the old world, (Gen. 6. 2.) and thousands in the world that now is, have been undone by irreligious, ungodly, marriages; for there is more ground of fear in mixed marriages that the good will be perverted, than of hope that the bad will be converted. They must not enter into a communion with them, they cannot promise themselves helps meet for them. One of the Chaldee paraphrases adds here, as a reason of this command, (v. 3.) For he that marries with idolaters, does in effect marry with their idols.

3. They must destroy all the relics of their idolatry, v. 5. Their altars and pillars, their groves and graven images, all must be destroyed; both in a holy indignation, and to prevent infection. This command was given before, Exod. 23. 24.—34. 13. A great deal of good work of this kind was done by the people, in their piens zeal, (2 Chron. 31. 1.) and by god Josiah, (2 Chron. 34. 3, 7.) and with this may be compared the burning of the conjuring books, Acts 19. 19.

II. Here are very good reasons to enforce this caution.

1. The choice which God had made of this people for his own, v. 6. There was such a covenant and communion established between God and Israel, as was not between him and any other people in the world. Shall they by their idolatries dishonour him who had thus honoured them? Shall they slight him who had thus testified his kindness for them? Shall they put themselves upon the level with other people, when God had thus dignified and advantaged them above all people? Had God taken them to be a special people to him, and no other: but them, and will not they take God to be a special God to them, and no other but him?

2. The freeness of that grace, which made this choice. (1.) There was nothing in them to recommend or entitle them to this favour. In the multitude of the people is the increase of the king; (1 Sam. 8. 7.) But their number was inconsiderable; they were only seventy souls when they went down into Egypt, and though greatly increased there, yet there were many other nations more numerous; Ye were the fewest of all people, v. 7. The author of the Jerusalem Targum passes too great a compliment upon his nation, in his reading this, Ye were humble in spirit, and meek above all peoples; quite contrary. They were rather stiff-necked, and ill-natured, to all people. (2.) God fetched the reason of it purely from himself, v. 8. [1.] He loved you, because he would love you. Even so, Father, because it seemed good in thine eyes. All that God loves, he loves freely, Hos. 14. 4. Those that perish, perish by their own merits, but all that are saved, are saved by prerogative. [2.] He has done his work because he would keep his word. "He has brought you out of Egypt in pursuance of the great design of the covenant, the creatures of fancy, subjects fit enough for loose poetry, but no proper objects of serious devotion; no, he is God, God indeed, God alone, the faithful God, able and ready not only to fulfil his own promises, but to answer all the just expectations of his worshippers, and he will certainly keep covenant and mercy," that is, "show mercy according to covenant, to them that love him, and keep his commandments;" and in vain do we pretend to love him, if we do not make conscience of his commandments; "and this," (as is here added for the explication of the promise in the second commandment,) "not only to thousands of persons, but to thousands of generations. So inexhaustible is the fountain, so constant the streams!" (2.) Just to his enemies, he refrayeth them that hate him, v. 10. Note, [1.] Wilful sinners are haters of God. For the carnal mind is enmity against him. Idolaters are so in a special manner, for they are in league with his rivals. [2.] Those that hate God, cannot hurt him, but certainly ruin themselves. He will repay them to their face, in defiance of them and all their impotent malice. His arrows are said to be made ready against the face of them, Ps. 21. 12. Or, He will bring those judgments upon them, which will ruin themselves with the just punishment of their idolatry. Compare Job 21. 19. He rewardeth him, and he shall know it. Though vengeance seem to be slow, yet it is not slack. The wicked and sinner shall be recompenced in the earth, Prov. 11. 31. I cannot pass the gloss of the Jerusalem Targum upon this place, because it speaks the faith of the Jewish church concerning a future state: He recompenseth to them that hate him, the reward of their good works in this world, that he may destroy them in the world to come.

12. Wherefore it shall come to pass, if ye hearken to these judgments, and keep and do them, that the Lord thy God shall keep unto thee the covenant and the mercy which he sware unto thy fathers: 13. And he will love thee, and bless thee, and multiply thee: he will also bless the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy land, thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep, in the land which he sware unto thy fathers to give thee. 14. Thou shalt be blessed above all people: there shall not be male or female barren among you, or among your cattle. 15. And the Lord will take away from thee all sickness, and will put none of the evil diseases of Egypt, which thou knewest, upon thee; but will lay them upon all them that hate thee. 16. And thou shalt consume all the people which the Lord thy God shall deliver thee; thine eye shall have no pity upon them: neither shall thou serve their gods; for that will be a snare unto thee. 17. If thou say in thine heart, These nations are more than I; how can I disposess them? 18. Thou shalt not be afraid of them; but shalt well remember what the Lord thy God did unto Pharaoh, and unto all Egypt; 19. The great temptations which thine eyes saw, and the signs, and the wonders, and the mighty hand, and the stretched-out arm, whereby the Lord thy God brought thee out; so shall the Lord thy God do unto all the people of whom thou art afraid. 20. Moreover, the Lord thy God will send the hornet among them, until they that are left, and hide themselves from thee, be destroyed. 21. Thou shalt not be affrighted at them: for the Lord thy God is among you, a mighty God and terrible. 22. And the Lord thy God will put out those nations before thee by little and little: thou mayest not consume them at once, lest the beast of the field increase upon thee. 23. But the Lord thy God shall deliver them unto thee, and shall destroy them with a mighty destruction, until they be destroyed. 24. And he shall deliver their kings into thine hand, and thou shalt destroy their name from under heaven: there shall no man be able to stand before thee, until thou have destroyed them. 25. The graven images of their gods shall ye burn with fire: thou shalt not desire the silver or gold that is on them, nor take it unto thee, lest thou be snared therein: for it is an abomination to the Lord thy God. 26. Neither shalt thou bring an abomination into thine house, lest thou be a cursed thing like it: but thou shalt utterly detest it, and thou shalt utterly abhor it; for it is a cursed thing.

Here, 1. The caution against idolatry is repeated, and against communion with idolaters, v. 16. "Thou shalt consume the people, and not serve their gods." "We are in danger of having fellowship with them, and to take pleasure in fellowship with those that do those works. Here is also a repetition of the charge to destroy the images, v. 25, 26. The idols which the heathen had worshipped were an abomination to God, and therefore must be so to them: all that truly love God, hate what he hates. Observe how this is urged upon them, Thou shalt utterly detest it, and thou shalt utterly abhor it; such a holy indignation as this must we conceive against sin, that abominable thing.
which the Lord hates. They must not retain the images, to gratify their covetousness. Thou shalt not desire the silver or gold that is on them, nor think it pity to have that which thy fathers left. Achan was not sure for converting that to his own use, which was an anachema. Nor must they retain the images, to gratify their curiosity; "Neither shalt thou bring it into thine house, to be hung up as an ornament, or preserved as a monument of antiquity: No, to the fire with it, that is the fittest place for it." Two reasons are given for this caution. Levit thou be snared therein; (v. 25.) that is, "Let thou be drawn in, thou that art unawares, to like it and love it, to fancy it, and pay respect to it." And, lest thou be a cursed thing like it, v. 26. They that make images, are said to be like unto them, stupid and senseless; here they are said to be in a worse sense like to them, accursed of God, and devoted to destruction. Compare these two reasons together, and observe, That whatever brings us into a snare, brings this under a curse.

11. The promise of God's favour to them, if they would be obedient, is enlarged upon with a most affecting copiousness and fluency of expression, which intimates how much it is both God's desire, and our own interest, that we be religious. All possible assurance is here given them.

1. That if they would sincerely endeavour to do their part of the covenant, God would certainly perform his part. He shall keep the covenant which he made to his fathers, v. 12. Let us be constant to our duty, and we cannot question the constancy of God's mercy.

2. That if they would love God, and serve him, and devote themselves and their's to him, he would love them, and bless them, and multiply them greatly, v. 13, 14. What could they desire more to make them happy? (1.) He will love thee. He began in love to us, (1 John 4. 21.) and if we return his love in filial duty, then, and then only, we may expect the continuance of it, John 14. 21. (2.) He will bless thee with the tokens of his love above all people. If they would distinguish themselves from their neighbours by singular services, God would dignify them above their neighbours by singular blessings. (3.) He will multiply thee. Increase was the ancient blessing for the people of the world, Gen. 1. 28. and here for the peopling of Canaan, that little world by itself. The increase both of their families and of their stock is promised: They should neither have estates without heirs, nor heirs without estates, but should have the complete satisfaction of having many children, and plentiful provisions and portions for them.

3. That if they would keep themselves pure from the idolatries of Egypt, God would keep them clear from the diseases of Egypt, v. 15. It seems to refer not only to those plagues of Egypt, by the force of which they were delivered, but to some other epidemic country disease, (as we call it,) which they remembered the prevalence of among the Egyptians, and by which God had chastised them for their national sins. Diseases are God's servants; they go at his command, and do what he bids them. It is therefore good for the health of our bodies, to mortify the sin of our souls.

4. That if they would cut off the devoted nations, they should cut them off, and none should be able to stand before them. Their duty in this matter would itself be their advantage. Thou shalt consume all the people which the Lord thy God shall drive from before thee, and thou shalt drive the Lord thy God shall deliver them unto thee, and shall destroy them, that is the promise, v. 23. Thus we are commanded not to let sin reign, not to indulge ourselves in it, or give countenance to it, but to hate it, and strive against it; and then God has promised that sin shall not have dominion over us, (Rom. 6. 14.) but that we shall be more than conquerors over it.

The difficulty and doubfulness of the conquest of Canaan having been a stone of stumbling to their fathers, he here animates them against those things which were most likely to discourage them, bidding them not to be afraid of them, v. 18. And again, v. 21.

(1.) Let them not be disheartened by the number and strength of their enemies. Say not, they are more in number than we, how can I dispossess them? v. 17. We are apt to think that the most numerous, most needs be victorious; but to fortify them against this temptation, he reminds them of the destruction of Pharaoh and all the power of Egypt, v. 18, 19. They had seen the great temptations, or miracles, (so the Chaldee reads it,) the signs and wonders, whereby God had brought them out of Egypt, in order to his bringing of them into Canaan, and from thence might easily infer, that God could dispossess the Canaanites, who, though formidable enough, had not such advantages against Israel as the Egyptians had; He that had done the greater, could do the lesser: and they might also infer, that he would dispossess them, otherwise his bringing Israel out of Egypt had been no kindness to them. He that began would finish. Thou shalt therefore remember this, v. 18. The word and works of God are then well remembered, when they are improved as helps to our faith and obedience. This is well laid up, which is ready to us when we have occasion to use it.

(2.) Let them not be disheartened by the weakness and deficiency of their own forces; for God will send them in auxiliary troops of hornets, or wasps, as some read it, (v. 26.) probably, larger than ordinary, which would so terrify and make their enemies, (and perhaps be the death of many of them,) that their most numerous armies would become an easy prey to Israel. God plagued the Egyptians with flies, but the Canaanites with hornets. These who take not warning by lesser judgments on others, may expect greater on themselves. But their great encouragement was, that they had God among them, a mighty God and terrible, v. 21. And if God be for us, who can be against us? (Rom. 8. 31.) and we need not fear the power of any creature against us.

(3.) Let them not be disheartened by the slow progress of their arms, nor think that the Canaanites would never be subdued, if they were not expelled the first year; no, they must be put out by little and little, and not all at once, v. 22. Note, We must not think, that because the deliverance of the church, and the destruction of its enemies, are not effected immediately, therefore it will never be effected; God will do his own work in his own method and time; and we may be sure that they are always the best. Thus corruption is driven out of the hearts of believers by little and little. The work of sanctification is carried on gradually; but that judgment will at length be brought forth into a complete victory. The reason here given (as before, Exod. 13. 10.) is, that the beast of the desert, the increase upon thee. The earth God has given to the children of men; and therefore there shall rather be a remainder of Canaanites to keep possession till Israel become numerous enough to replenish it, than that it should be a habitation of dragons, and a court for the wild beasts of the desert, Isa. 34. 13, 14. Yet God could have prevented this iniquity with miracles. Let us observe, Pride and secular, and other sins that are the common effects of settled prosperity, were the enemies more dangerous than the beasts of the field, that would be apt to increase upon them. See Judges 3. 1, 4.
CHAP. VIII.

Moses had charged parents, in teaching their children, to what the word of God upon them, (ch. 6. 7.) by frequent repetition of the same things, over and over again; and here he himself takes the same method of instructing the Israelites, as his children; frequently inculcating the same precepts and cautions, with the same motives, or arguments, to enforce them; that what they heard so often, might abide with them. In this chapter Moses gives them, I. General exhortations to obedience, v. 1. 6. II. A review of the great things God had done for them in the wilderness, as a good argument for obedience, v. 2. 5. and v. 15. 16. III. A prospect of the good land into which God would now bring them, v. 7. 9-11. IV. A notice against the temptations of a prosperous condition, v. 10. 14. and 17, 18. V. A fair warning to the fatal consequences of apostasy from God, v. 19. 20.

1. ALL the commandments which I command thee this day shall ye observe to do, that ye may live, and multiply, and go in and possess the land which the Lord sware unto your fathers. 2. And thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart, whether thou wouldest keep his commandments, or no. 3. And he humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger, and fed thee with manna, (which thou knewest not, neither did thy fathers know,) that he might make thee know that man doth not live by bread only, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of the Lord doth man live. 4. Thy raiment waxed not old upon thee, neither did thy foot swell, these forty years. 5. Thou shalt also consider in thine heart, that, as a man chasteneth his son, so the Lord thy God chasteneth thee. 6. Therefore thou shalt keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to fear him. 7. For the Lord thy God bringeth thee into a good land; a land of brooks of water, of fountains, and depths that spring out of valleys and hills; 8. A land of wheat, and barley, and vines, and fig-trees, and pomegranates; a land of oil-olive, and honey; 9. A land wherein thou shalt eat bread without scarceness, thou shalt not lack any thing in it; a land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig brass.

The charge here given them, is the same as before, to keep and do all God's commandments. Their obedience must be, 1. Careful, observe to do. 2. Universal, to do all the commandments, v. 1. And, 3. Proceeds a good principle, with a regard to God, as the Lord, and their God, and particularly with a holy fear of him, (v. 6.) from a reverence of his majesty, a submission to his authority, and a dread of his wrath. To engage them to this obedience, beside the great advantages of it, (which he sets before them, v. 1.) that they should live and multiply, and all should be well with them, he directs them, 1. To look back upon the wilderness through which God had now brought them, (v. 2.) Thou shalt remember all the way which the Lord thy God led thee these forty years in the wilderness. Now that they were come of age, and were entering upon their inheritance, they must be reminded of the discipline they had been under during their minority; and the method God had taken to train them up for himself. The wilderness was the school in which they had been for forty years boarded and taught, under tutors and governors; and this was a time to bring it all to remembrance. The occurrences of these last forty years were, 1. Very memorable, and well worthy to be remembered. 2. Very useful and profitable to be remembered, as yielding a complication of arguments for obedience. And, 3. They were recorded, as a warning in future, that they must be attended with. All the feast of the passover was a memorial of their deliverance out of Egypt, so the feast of tabernacles was, of their passage through the wilderness. Note, It is very good for us to remember all the ways both of God's providence and grace, by which he has led us hitherto through this wilderness, that we may be prevailed with cheerfully to serve him and trust in him. He has led us, and he will lead our children.
might live upon air, if it were sanctified for that use by the word of God; for the means God ordinarily uses is not tied to, but can conform his kind purposes to his pleader without them. Our Saviour quotes this scripture in answer to that temptation of Satan, Command these stones be made bread. What need of that?" says Christ; "my heavenly Father can keep me alive without bread." Matt. 4. 3, 4. Let none of God's children distrust their Father, nor take any sinful indirect course for the supply of their own necessities; some way or other, God will provide for them, which was true of that humble, honest diligence, and verily they shall be fed. It may be applied spiritually; the word of God, as it is, the revelation of God's will and grace duly received, and entertained by faith, is the food of the soul; the life which is supported by that is the life of the man, and not only that life which is supported by bread. The manna typified Christ, the bread of life. He is the Word of God; by him we live; the Lord evermore gave us that bread which endures to eternal life, and let us not be put off with the meat that passeth! [2] The same clothes served them from Egypt to Canaan; at least the generality of them. Though they had not change of raiment, yet it was always new, and waxed not old upon them, v. 4. This was a standing miracle, and the greater, if, as the least need of them, to them, as so to be always fit for them. But it is plain that some Israelites carried Egypt bundles of clothes on their shoulders, (Exod. 12. 34.) which they might barter with each other as there was occasion; and those, with what they wore, sufficed till they came into a country where they could furnish themselves with new clothes.

Now by the method God took of providing food and raiment for them, First, He humbled them. It was his pleasure and will to keep them, fed and clothed for forty years together to the same meat, without any variety, and to the same clothes, in the same fashion. Thus He taught them that the good things he designed for them, were figures of better things: and that the happiness of man consists not in being clothed in purple or fine linen, and in faring sumptuously every day, but in being taken into covenant and communion with God, and in learning his righteous judgment, which was given to Israel in the wilderness, must be to them instead of food and raiment. Secondly, He proved them, whether they could trust him to provide for them then, when means and second causes failed. Thus He taught them to live in a dependence upon Providence, and not to perplex themselves with care, what they should eat and drink, and wherewithal they should be clothed. Christ would have his disciples learn the same lesson, (Matt. 6. 25.) and took a like method to teach it them, when he sent them out without purse or scrip, and yet took care that they lacked nothing, Luke 22. 35. Thirdly, God took care of their health and ease. Though they travelled on foot in a dry country, the way rough and untrodden, yet their foot swelled not: God preserved them from taking hurt by the inconveniences of their journey, and care of that kind we ought to acknowledge. Note, Those that follow God's conduct are not only safe but easy. Our feet swell not while we keep in the way of duty; it is the way of transgression that is hard, Prov. 13. 15. God has promised to keep the feet of his saints, 1 Sam. 2. 9.

(3.) They must also remember the rebukes they had been under, v. 5. During these years of their education they had been kept under great discipline, and not without need. As a man chasteneth his son, for his good, and because he loves him, so the Lord thy God chasteneth thee. God is a loving tender Father to all his children, when yet there is occasion they shall feel the smart of the rod. Israel did so, they were chastened that they might not be condemned; chastened with the rod of men. Not God's enemies whose destruction he aims at, but as a father, and in whose wisdom and happiness and welfare he designs: so did their God chasten them; he chastened and taught them, Ps. 94. 12. This they must consider in their heart, that is, they must own it from their own experience, that God had corrected them with a fatherly love, for which they must return to him as a penitent and obedient, and comply. Because God has chastened thee as a father, therefore (v. 6.) thou shalt keep his commandments. This use might make of all our affliction; by them let us be engaged and quickened to our duty. Thus they are directed to look back upon the wilderness.

II. He directs them to look forward to Canaan, into which God was now bringing them. Look which way we will, both our reviews and our prospects will furnish us with arguments for obedience. The land which they were now going to take possession of, is here described to be a very good land, v. 7. 9. There was everything in it that was desirable. 1. It was well watered, like Eden, the garden of the Lord. It was a land of brooks of water, of fountains and depths, which contributed to the fruitfulness of the soil. Perhaps there was more plenty of water there now than had been in Abraham's time, the Canaanites having found and dugged wells; thus Israel might have the advantage of their industry as well as of God's bounty. 2. The ground produced great plenty of all good things, not only for the necessary support, but for the convenience and comfort of human life. In their fathers' land they had bread enough; it was corn land, and a land of wheat and barley, where, with the common care and labour of the husbandman, they might eat and be satisfied with it. 3. It was a fruitful land, that was never turned into barrenness but for the iniquity of them that dwelt therein. They had not only water enough to quench their thirst, but vines, the fruit whereof was ordained to make glad the heart. And if they were desirous of dainties, they needed not to send to far countries for them, when their own was so well stocked with fig-trees, and pomegranates, olives of the best kind, and honey, or dates, and every good tree. 3. Even the bowels of its earth were very rich, though it should seem that silver and gold they had none; of these the princes of Sheba should bring presents; (Ps. 72. 15.) yet they had plenty of those more serviceable metals, iron and brass. Iron-stone and mines of brass were found in their hills. See Job 28. 21.

Now observe these things are mentioned, (1.) To show the great difference between that wilderness through which God had led them, and the good land into which he was bringing them. Note, Those that bear the inconveniences of an afflicted state with patience and submission, are humbled by them, and prove well under them, are best prepared for better circumstances. (2.) To show what obligations they lay under to keep God's commandments, both in gratitude for his favour to them, and from a regard to their future as a nation. If this might be continued. The only way to keep possession of this good land, would be to keep in the way of their duty. (3.) To show what a figure it was of good things to come. Whatever others saw, it is probable that Moses in it saw a type of the better country: the gospel-church is the New Testament Canaan, watered with the Spirit in his gifts and graces, planted with the trees of righteousness, bearing the fruits of righteousness. Heaven is the good land, in which there is nothing wanting, and where there is a fulness of joy.
10. When thou hast eaten, and art full, then thou shalt bless the Lord thy God, for the good land which he hath given thee.

11. Beware that thou forget not the Lord thy God, in not keeping his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes, which I command thee this day: 12. Lest, when thou hast eaten and art full, and hast built goodly houses, and dwelt therein; 13. And when thy herds and thy flocks multiply, and thy silver and thy gold is multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied; 14. Then thine heart be lifted up, and thou forget the Lord thy God, which brought thee forth out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage; 15. Who led thee through that great and terrible wilderness, wherein were fiery serpents, and scorpions, and drought; where there was no water; who brought thee forth water out of the rock of flint; 16. Who fed thee in the wilderness with manna, wherein thy fathers knew not, that he might humble thee, and that he might prove thee, to do thee good at thy latter end; 17. And thou say in thine heart, My power, and the might of mine hand, hath gotten me this wealth. 18. But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God: for it is he that giveth thee power to get wealth, that he may establish his covenant, which he sware unto thy fathers, as it is this day. 19. And it shall be, if thou do at all forget the Lord thy God, and walk after other gods, and serve them, and worship them, I testify against thee this day, that ye shall surely perish. 20. As the nations which the Lord destroyeth before your face, so shall ye perish; because ye would not be obedient unto the voice of the Lord your God.

Moses having mentioned the great plenty they would find in the land of Canaan, finds it necessary to caution them against the abuse of that plenty, which is a sin they would be the more prone to, now that they came into that vineyard of the Lord, immediately out of a barren desert.

I. He directs them to the duty of a prosperous condition, v. 10. They are allowed to eat even to fulness; but not to surfeit or excess. But let them always remember their Benefactor, the Founder of their feast, and never fail to give thanks after eating.

Then thou shalt bless the Lord thy God. 1. They must take heed of eating or drinking so much as to indispose themselves for this duty of blessing God, rather they must aim to serve God therein with so much the more cheerfulness and enlargement. 2. They must not have any fellowship with those that, when they had eaten and were full, blessed false gods, as the Israelites themselves had done in their worship of the golden calf, Exod. 32. 6. 3. Whatever they had the comfort of, God must have the glory of. As our Saviour has taught us to bless before we eat, (Matt. 14. 19. 20.) so we are here taught to bless after meat. That is our Hallelujah, Blessed be God. In every thing we must give thanks. From this law the religious Jews took up a laudable usage of blessing God, not only at their solemn meals, but upon other occasions; if they drank of a cup of wine they lifted up their hands and said, Blessed be he that created the fruit of the vine to make glad the heart. If they did but smell it a flower, they said, Blessed be he that made this flower sweet. 4. When they give thanks for the fruits of the land, they must give thanks for the good land itself, which was given them by promise. From all our comfortable enjoyments we must take our time of that great God for comfortable settlements; and I know not but we of this nation have as much reason as they had to give thanks for a good land.

II. He warns them against the temptations of a prosperous condition, and charges them to stand upon their guard against them; "When thou art settled in goodly houses of thy own building," v. 12. (for through God gave them houses which they builded not, ch. 6. 10. those would not serve them, they must have larger and finer,) "and when thou art grown rich in cattle, in silver and in gold, (v. 13.) as Abraham, (Gen. 13. 2.) when all thou hast is multiplied."

1. "Then take heed of pride. Beware lest thy heart be lifted up;" (v. 14.) when the estate and condition of mind is apt to rise with it, in self-conceit, self-complacency, and self-sufficiency. Let us therefore strive to keep the spirit low in a high condition; humility is both the ease and the ornament of prosperity. Take heed of saying, so much as in thy heart, that proud word, My power and the might of my hand hath gotten me this wealth, v. 17. Note, We must never take the praise of our prosperity to ourselves, nor attribute it to our ingenuity or industry; for by that we mock the wise, or riches to men of understanding, Eccl. 9. 10. It is spiritual idolatry, thus to sacrifice to our own nets, Hab. 1. 16.

2. Then take heed of forgetting God. This follows upon the lifting up of the heart; for it is through the pride of the countenance that the wicked seeks not after God, Ps. 10. 4. Those that admire the creature despise its Creator.

(1.) "Forget not thy duty to God," v. 11. We forget God, if we keep not his commandments; we forget his authority over us, and our obligations to him, and expectations from him, if we are not obedient to his laws. When men grow rich, they are tempted to think religion a needless thing; they are happy without it, think it a thing below them, and too hard upon them; their dignity forbids them to stoop, and their liberty forbids them to serve. But we are basely ungrateful if, the better God is to us, the worse we are to him.

(2.) "Forget not God's former dealings with thee. Thy deliverance out of Egypt, v. 14. The provision he made for thee in the wilderness, that great and terrible wilderness," they must never forget the impressions which the horror of that wilderness made upon them; see Jer. 2. 6. where it is called the wilderness where the whorer went up; and that is not an improper figure, 1. Those preserved them from being destroyed by the fiery serpents and scorpions, though sometimes he made use of them for their correction: there he kept them from perishing for want of water, following them with water out of the rock of flint, v. 15. Out of which (says Bishop Patrick) one would rather have expected fire, than water. There he fed them with manna and quails, but when he had done that (v. 15.) taking care to keep them alive, that he might do them good at their latter end, v. 16. Note, God reserves the best till the last for his Israel. However he may seem to deal hardly with them by the way, he will not fail to do them good at their latter end.

(3.) "Forget not God's hand in thy present prosperity, v. 18. Remember, it is he that giveth thee wealth; for he giveth the power to get wealth." See here how God's giving and our getting are reconciled, and apply it to spiritual wealth. It is our duty to get wisdom, and above all our gettings to get understanding; and yet it is God's grace that gives wisdom, and when we have got it, we must not say, It was the might of our hand that got it, but must own it was God that gave us power to get it, and therefore to him we must give the praise, and consecrate the use of it. The blessing of the Lord on the hand of the diligent, makes rich both for this world and for the other. He giveth thee power to get wealth, not so much to gratify thee, and make thee easy, as that he may establish his covenant. All God's gifts are in pursuance of his promises.

III. He repeats the fair warning he had often given them of the fatal consequences of their folly from God, ver. 19, 20. Observe, 1. How he describes the sin; it is forgetting God, and then worshipping other gods. What wickedness will not they fall into, that keep thoughts of God out of their minds? And when once the affections are displaced from God, they will soon be misplaced upon lying vanities. 2. How he denounces wrath and ruin against them for it; If you do so, ye shall surely perish, and the power of might shall destroy ye, with the 3d. kind of, cannot help you. Nay, you shall perish, as the nations that are driven out before you. God will make no more account of you, notwithstanding his covenant with you, and your relation to him, than he does of them, if you will not be obedient and faithful to him. They that follow others in sin, will certainly follow them to destruction. If we do as sinners do we must expect to fare as sinners fare.

CHAP. IX.

The design of Moses in this chapter, is, to convince the people of Israel of their unworthiness of the land they were coming to possess, and the wretched fate they must expect, if they should be unfaithful to God, and go back to their old sins. This he does partly by reported instances, partly by reason, and partly is it by a comparison of the land they were coming into, with other lands. For this purpose he gives the digital of two different countries, viz. that of the Amalekites, and of the people of Canaan.

1. Hear, O Israel; Thou art to pass over Jordan this day, to go in to possess nations greater and mightier than thyself, cities great, and fenced up to heaven; 2. A people great and tall, the children of the Anakims, whom thou knowest, and of whom thou hast heard say, Who can stand before the children of Anak! 3. Understand therefore this day, that the Lord thy God is he which goeth over before thee; as a consuming fire he shall destroy them, and he shall bring them down before thy face: so shalt thou drive them out, and destroy them quickly, as the Lord hath said unto thee. 4. Speak not thou in thine heart, after that the Lord thy God hath cast thee out from before thee, saying, For my righteousness the Lord hath brought me in to possess this land; but for the wickedness of these nations the Lord doth drive them out from before thee. 5. Not for thy righteousness, or for the uprightness of thine heart, dost thou go to possess their land; but for the wickedness of these nations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee, and that he may perform the word which the Lord sware unto thy fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. 6. Understand therefore that the Lord thy God giveth thee not this good land to possess it for thy righteousness; for thou art a stiff-necked people.

The call to attention, (ver. 1.) Hear, O Israel, intimates that this was a new discourse, delivered at some distance of time after the former, probably the next sabbath-day.

I. He represents to them the formidable strength of the enemies which they were now to encounter, ver. 1. The nations they were to dispossess were mightier than themselves, not a rude and undiscovered rout, but any that were easily made a prey of. But should they besiege them, they would find their cities well fortified according as the art of fortification then was: should they engage them in the field, they would find the people great and tall, of whom common fame had reported, that there was no standing before them, ver. 2. This representation is much the same with that which the evil spirits had made, (Numb. 13. 28, 33.) but not so generally observed; that was designed to drive them from God, and to discourage their hope in him; this to drive them to God, and engage their hope in him; since no power less than that which is almighty, could secure and succeed them.

II. He assures them of victory, by the presence of God with them, notwithstanding the strength of the enemy, ver. 3. "Understand therefore what thou must trust to for success, and which way thou must look; it is the Lord thy God that goes before thee, not only as thy Captain, or Commander in chief, to give direction, but as a consuming Fire, to do execution among them. Observe, he shall destroy them, and then thou shalt drive them out. Thou canst not drive them out, unless he destroy them, and bring them down. But he will not destroy them, and bring them down, unless thou set thyself in good earnest to drive them out." We must do our endeavour in dependence upon God's grace, and we shall have that grace, if we do our endeavour.

III. He cautions them not to entertain the least thought of their own righteousness, as if that had procured them this favour at God's hand. Say not, For my righteousness, either with regard to thy character, or in replacement for any good service; the Lord hath brought me in to possess this land; (ver. 4.) never think it is for thy righteousness or the uprightness of thy heart, that it is for and in consideration either of thy good conversation, or of thy good disposition, ver. 5. And again, (ver. 6.) it is insisted on, because it is hard to bring people from a conceit of their own merit, and yet very necessary that it be done. "Understand, know it, and believe it, and consider it, that the Lord thy God giveth thee not this land for thy righteousness. Hadst thou been to come to it upon that condition, thou hadst been for ever shut out of it, for thou art a stiff-necked people." Note, Our gaining possession of the heavenly Canaan, as it must be attributed God’s power, and not to our own might, so it must be ascribed to God’s grace, and not to our own merit; in Christ we have both righteousness and strength; in him therefore we must glory, and not in ourselves, or any sufficiency of our own.

IV. He intimates to them the true reasons why God would take this good land out of the hands of the Canaanites, and settle it upon Israel, and they are borrowed from his own honour, not from Israel’s deserts. 1. He will be honoured in the destruction of Idolaters; they are justly looked upon as haters of him, and therefore he will visit their iniquity upon them. It is for the wickedness of these nations that God drives them out, (v. 4.) and again, v. 5. All those whom God rejects, are rejected for their own wickedness: but none of those whom he accepts, are accepted for their own righteousness. 2. He will be honoured in the performance of his promise to those that are in covenant with him; God swore to the patriarchs who loved him, and left all to follow him, that he would give this land to their seed; and therefore he would keep that promised mercy for thousands of them that loved him and kept his commandments; he would not suffer his promise to fail. It was for their fathers’ sakes that they were beloved, Rom. 11. 28. Thus boasting is for ever excluded. See Eph. 1. 9, 11.

7. Remember, and forget not, how thou provokedst the Lord thy God to wrath in the wilderness: from the day that thou didst depart out of the land of Egypt, until ye came unto this place, ye have been rebellious against the Lord. 8. Also in Horeb ye provoked the Lord to wrath, so that the Lord was angry with you, to have destroyed you. 9. When I was gone up into the mount to receive the tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant which the Lord made with you, then I abode in the mount forty days and forty nights; I neither did eat bread nor drink water: 10. And the Lord delivered unto me two tables of stone, written with the finger of God: and on them was written according to all the words which the Lord spake with you in the mount, out of the midst of fire, in the day of the assembly. 11. And it came to pass, at the end of forty days and forty nights, that the Lord gave me the two tables of stone, even the tables of the covenant. 12. And the Lord said unto me, Arise, get thee down quickly from hence; for thy people which thou hast brought forth out of Egypt have corrupted themselves: they are quickly turned aside out of the way which I commanded them; they have made them a molten image. 13. Furthermore, the Lord spake unto me, saying, I have seen this people, and, behold, it is a stiff-necked people: 14. Let me alone, that I may destroy them, and blot out their name from under heaven: and I will make of thee a nation mightier and greater than they. 15. So I turned, and came down from the mount, and the mount burned with fire: and the two tables of the covenant were in my two hands. 16. And I looked, and, behold, ye had sinned against the Lord your God, and had made you a molten calf: ye had turned aside quickly out of the way which the Lord had commanded you. 17. And I took the two tables, and cast them out of my two hands, and brake them before your eyes. 18. And I fell down before the Lord, as at the first, forty days and forty nights: I did neither eat bread nor drink water, because of all your sins which ye sinned, in doing wickedly in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger: 19. For I was afraid of the anger and hot displeasure wherewith the Lord was wroth against you to destroy you. But the Lord hearkened unto me at that time also. 20. And the Lord was very angry with Aaron to have destroyed him: and I prayed for Aaron also the same time. 21. And I took your sin, the calf which ye had made, and burnt it with fire, and stamped it, and ground it very small, even until it was as small as dust: and I cast the dust thereof into the brook that descended out of the mount. 22. And at Taberah, and at Massah, and at Kibroth-hattaavah, ye provoked the Lord to wrath. 23. Likewise, when the Lord sent you from Kadesh-barnea, saying, Go up and possess the land which I have given you; then ye rebelled against the commandment of the Lord your God, and ye believed him not, nor hearkened to his voice. 24. You have been rebellious against the Lord from the day that I knew you. 25. Thus I fell down before the Lord forty days and forty nights, as I fell down at the first; because the Lord had said he would destroy you. 26. I prayed therefore unto the Lord, and said, O Lord God, destroy not thy people, and thine inheritance, which thou hast redeemed through thy greatness, which thou hast brought forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand. 27. Remember thy servants, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: look not unto the stubbornness of this people, nor to their wickedness, nor to their sin; 28. Lest the land whence thou broughtest us out say, Because the Lord was not able to bring them into the land which he promised them, and because he hated them, he hath brought them out to slay them in the wilderness. 29. Yet they are thy people, and thine inheritance, which thou bringest out by thy mighty power, and by thy stretched-out arm.

That they might have no pretence to think that God brought them to Canaan for their righteousness, he here shows them what a miracle of mercy it was, that they had not long ere this been destroyed in the wilderness; “Remember, and forget not,

how thou provokedst the Lord thy God; (v. 7.) so far from purchasing his favour, that thou hast many a time laid thyself open to his displeasure. Their father's provocations are here denounced; and for God had dealt with their fathers according to to their deserts, this generation had never been, much less had they entered Canaan. We are apt to forget our provocations, especially when the smart of the rod is over, and have need to be often put in mind of them, that we may never entertain any concert of our own righteousness. St. Paul argues from the guilt which all mankind is under, to prove that we can be justified before God by our own works, Rom.
3. 19, 20. If our works content us, they will not justi-fy us.

1. They had been a provoking people ever since they came out of Egypt, v. 7. Forty years long, from first to last, were God and Moses grieved with them. It is a very sad character Moses now has at parting leaves of them, (v. 24.) You have been rebellious since the day I knew you. No sooner were they formed into a people, than there was a faction formed among them, which upon all occasions made head against God and his government. Though the Mosaic history records little more than the occurrences of the first and last year of the forty, yet it seems by this general account, that the rest of the years were not much better, but one continued provocation.

2. Even in Horeb they made a calf and worship-peled it, (v. 8c.) That was a sin so heinous, and by several aggravations made so exceeding sinful, that they desired upon all occasions to be upbraided with it. It was done in the very place where the law was given, by which they were expressly forbidden to worship God by images; and while the mountain was yet burning before their eyes, and Moses was gone up to fetch the law in writing, They turned aside quickly, v. 10. They did it for their sin.

Let them not think that God overlookted what they did amiss, and gave them Canaan for what was good among them. No, God had determined to destroy them, (v. 8.) could easily have done it, and had been no loser by it; he even desired Moses to let him alone that he might do it, v. 13, 14. By this it appeared how heinous their sin was, for God is never angry with any above what there is cause for, as the mouth only of Moses himself, his friend and favourite, trembled at the revelation of God's wrath from heaven, against their ungodliness and unrighteousness, (v. 19.) I was afraid of the anger of the Lord; afraid perhaps not for them only, but for himself, Ps. 119, 120.

4. They had by their sin broken covenant with God, and forfeited all privileges of the covenant, which Moses signified to them by breaking the all, v. 17. A bill of divorce was given them, and from thenceforward they might justly have been abandoned for ever; so that their mouth was certainly stopped from pleading any righteousness of their own. God had, in effect, disowned them, when he said to Moses, (v. 2.) "They are thy people, you are none of mine, nor shall they be dealt with as mine." Aaron himself fell under God's displeasure for it, though he was the saint of the Lord, and was only brought by surprise or terror, to be confederate with them in the sin; (v. 20.) The Lord was very angry with Aaron. No man's place or character can shelter him from the wrath of God, if he have fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness. Aaron that should have made atonement for them, if the iniquity could have been purged away by sacrifice and offering, did himself fall under the wrath of God, so little did they consider what they did, when they drew him in.

6. It was with great difficulty and very long attendance, that Moses himself prevailed to turn away the wrath of God, and prevent their utter ruin. He fasted and prayed full forty days and forty nights, before he could obtain any pardon.
The greatness of God's anger against all mankind, that no less a person than his Son, and no less a price than his own blood, would serve to turn it away. Moses here tells them the substance of his intercession for them. He was obliged to own their stubbornness, and their wickedness and their sin,
v. 27. Their character was bad indeed, when he that appeared an advocate for them, could not give them a good word; and had nothing else to say in their behalf, but that God had done great things for them, which really did but aggravate their crime, (v. 26.) that they were the perversity of good ancestors, (v. 27.) which might also have been turned upon him, as making the matter worse and not better: and that the Egyptians would reproach God, if he should destroy them, as unable to perfect what he wrought for them, v. 28. A plea which might have been turned against him, and in matter what the Egyptians say, while the heavens declare God's righteousness. So that the saving of them from ruin at that time, was owing purely to the mercy of God, and the importunity of Moses, and not to any merit of their's, that could be offered so much as in mitigation of their offence.

7. To affect them with the more the destruction they were exercised, the brink of the river, he described the destruction of the calf they had made there particularly, v. 21. He calls it their sin; perhaps, not only because it had been the matter of their sin, but because the destroying of it was intended for a testimony against their sin; and an indication to them, what the sinners themselves did deserve. They that made it were like unto it, and had no wrong done them, if they had been thus stamped to dust, and reduced to ashes, and even purged with fire, but that they were left. It was infinite mercy that accepted the destruction of the idol, instead of the destruction of the idolaters.

8. Even after this fair escape that they had, in many other instances they provoked the Lord again and again. He needed only to name the place, for they carried the memorials either of the sin or of the punishment in their names, (v. 22.) at Taba-lore, where God set fire to them and burned them; and in this appears their murmuring; at Massah, the temptation, where they challenged almighty power to help them: and at Kibroth-hattaavah, the graves of lusters, where the dainties they coveted were their poison. And after these, their unbelief and distrust at Kadesh bannea, which he had already told them of, (ch. 1.)
and here mentions again, (v. 24.) had certainly completed their ruin, if they had been dealt with according to their own merits.

Now let them lay all this together, and it will appear, that what soever favour God should hereafter show them, in subduing their enemies, and putting them in possession of the land of Canaan, it was not for their righteousness. It is good for us often to remember against ourselves, with sorrow and shan, our former sins, and to review the records of our experience, keeping in our eyes the many things we are indebted to free grace, and may humbly own that we never merited at God's hand any but wrath and the curse.
Moses having, in the foregoing chapter, reminded them of their own sin, as a reason why they should not depend upon their own righteousness, in this chapter sets before them God's great mercy to them, notwithstanding their provoking, as a reason why they should be more obedient for the future. 1. He mentions divers tokens of God's favour and reconciliation to them, never to be forgotten. 1. The renewing of the tables of the covenant, v. 1-5. 2. Giving orders for their progress towards Canaan, v. 6. 3. Choosing the tribe of Levi, for his own, v. (8, 9), and continuing the priesthood after the death of Aaron, v. 6. 4. Owning and accepting the intercession of Moses for them, v. 10, 11. From hence he infers what obligations they lay under to fear, and love, and serve God, which he presseth upon them with many motives, v. 12. 22.

1. At that time the Lord said unto me, Heth thee two tables of stone like unto the first, and come up unto me into the mount, and make thee an ark of wood. 2. And I will write on the tables the words that were in the first tables, which thou brakest, and thou shalt put them in the ark. 3. And I made an ark of shittim-wood, and hewed two tables of stone like unto the first, and went up into the mount, having the two tables in mine hand. 4. And he wrote on the tables, according to the first writing, the ten commandments, which the Lord spake unto thee in the mount out of the midst of the fire, in the day of the assembly: and the Lord gave them unto me. 5. And I turned myself, and came down from the mount, and put the tables in the ark which I had made; and there they be, as the Lord commanded me. 6. And the children of Israel took their journey from Beeroth of the children of Jaakan to Mosera: there Aaron died, and there he was buried; and Eleazar his son ministered in the priest's office in his stead. 7. From thence they journeyed unto Gudgodah; and from Gudgodah to Jotbath, a land of rivers of waters. 8. At that time the Lord separated the tribe of Levi, to bear the ark of the covenant of the Lord, to stand before the Lord, to minister unto him, and to bless in his name, unto this day. 9. Wherefore Levi hath no part nor inheritance with his brethren: the Lord is his inheritance, according as the Lord thy God promised him. 10. And I stayed in the mount, according to the first time, forty days and forty nights; and the Lord hearkened unto me at that time also, and the Lord would not destroy thee. 11. And the Lord said unto me, Arise, take thy journey before the people, that they may go in and possess the land, which I sware unto their fathers to give unto them.

There were four things in and by which God showed himself reconciled to Israel, and made them truly great and happy; and in which God's goodness took occasion from their badness to make himself the more illustrious.

1. He gave them his law; gave it them in writing, as a standing pledge of his favour. Though the tables that were first written, were broken, because they had broken the commandments, and God might justly break the covenant; yet when his anger was turned away, the tables were renewed, v. 1, 2. Note, God's putting his law in our hearts, and writing it in our inward parts, is the surest evidence of our reconciliation to God, and the best evidence of our happiness in him. Moses is bid to be the tabernacle of God's presence, that it may prepare the heart by conviction and humiliation for the grace of God, but it is only that grace that then writes the law in it. Moses made an ark of shittim-wood, (v. 3,) a plain chest, the same, I suppose, in which the tables were afterward preserved: but Bezaleel is said to make it, (Exod. 37. 1,) because he afterward finished it up, and over-laid it with gold. Or, Moses is said to make it, because when he went up into the second time into the mount, he ordered it to be made by Bezaleel, against he came down. And it is observable, that for this reason the ark was the first thing that God gave orders about, Exod. 25. 10. And this left an earnest to the congregation, that the tables should not miscarry this second time, as they had done the first. God will send his law and gospel to those whose hearts are prepared for it, and works of mercy to them that have them not; and both which of our salvation is kept safe, that it may not be lost, as it was in the first Adam, when he had it in his own hand.

Observe, 1. What it was that God wrote on the two tables; the ten commandments, (v. 4,) or ten words; intimating in how little a compass they were contained: they were not ten volumes, but ten words: it was the same with the first writing, and both the same that he spoke to him the second time, and the second edition needed no correction or amendment: nor did what he wrote, differ from what he spoke: the written word is as truly the word of God, as that which he spake to his servants the prophets. 2. What care was taken of it. These two tables, thus engraven, were faithfully laid up in the ark. And there they be, said Moses, pointing it is probable, toward the sanctuary, v. 5. That good thing which he had committed to his servant, he committed to them, and left it pure and entire in their hands, now let them look to it at their peril. Thus we may say to the rising generation, "God has intrusted us with Bibles, sabbaths, sacraments, &c., as tokens of his presence and favour, and there they be: we lodge them with you," 2 Tim. 1. 13, 14.

11. He led them forward toward Canaan, though they in their hearts turned back toward Egypt, and Israel, they might have chosen their deusions, v. 7. 12. He brought them to a land of rivers of water, out of a dry and barren wilderness: when that failed, then by miracles; and yet after this, when they were brought into a little distress, we find them distrusting God and murmuring. Numb. 20. 3, 4.

13. He appointed a standing ministry among them, to deal for them in holy things. At that time, when Moses went up a second time to the mount, or soon after, he had orders to separate the tribe of Levi to God, and to his immediate service, they having distinguished themselves by their zeal against the worshippers of the golden calf, v. 8, 9. The Kohathites carried the ark: they and other Levites stood before the Lord, to minister to him in all the offices of the tabernacle: and the priests, who were of that tribe, were to bless the people. This was a standing ordinance, which had now almost four thousand years, even unto this day: and provision was made for the perpetuating of it, by the settled maintenance of that tribe, which was such as gave them great encouragement in their work, and no diversion from it. The Lord is his inheritance. Note, A settled ministry is a great blessing to a people, and a special token of God's favour. And since the part cular priests could not continue by reason of death, God showed his care of the people in securing a succession, which Moses takes notice of here, v. 6. When Aaron died, the priesthood did not die with him, but Eleazar his son ministered in his stead, and took care of the ark, in which the tables of stone, those precious stones, were deposited, that they should suffer no damage; there they be, and he has the custody of them. Under the law, a succession in the ministry was kept up, by an entail of the office on a certain tribe and family. But now, under the gospel, when the effusion of the Spirit is more plentiful and powerful, the succession is kept up by the Spirit's operation on men's hearts, qualifying men for, and inclining men to, that work, some in every age, that the name of Israel may not be blotted out.

IV. He accepted Moses as an advocate or intercessor for them, and therefore constituted him their prince and leader, v. 10, 11, The Lord heartened to me, and said, Arise, go before the people. It was a mercy to them, that they had such a friend, so faithful both to him that appointed him, and to them for whom he was appointed. It was the more a mercy, that he who had saved them from ruin, by his intercession with heaven, should have the conduct and command of them. And herein he was a type of Christ, who, as he ever lives making intercession for us, so he has all power both in heaven and in earth.

12. And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee, but to fear the Lord thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him, and to serve the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul.

13. To keep the commandments of the Lord, and his statutes, which I command thee this day for thy good? 14. Behold, the heaven and the heaven of heavens is the Lord's thy God, the earth also, with all that therein is. 15. Only the Lord had a delight in thy fathers to love them, and he chose their seed after them, even you above all people, as it is this day. 16. Circumcise therefore the foreskin of your heart, and be no more stiff-necked. 17. For the Lord your God is God of gods, and Lord of lords, a great God, a mighty, and a terrible, which regardeth not persons, nor taketh reward: 18. He doth execute the judgment of the fatherless and widow, and loveth the stranger, in giving him food and raiment. 19. Love ye, therefore, the stranger: for ye were strangers in the land of Egypt. 20. Thou shalt fear the Lord thy God; him shalt thou serve, and to him shalt thou cleave, and swear by his name. 21. He is thy praise, and he is thy God, that hath done for thee these great and terrible things, which thine eyes have seen. 22. Thy fathers went down into Egypt with three-score and ten persons; and now the Lord thy God hath made thee as the stars of heaven for multitude.

Here is a most pathetic exhortation to obedience, inferred from the premises, and urged with very powerful arguments, and a great deal of persuasive rhetoric. He brings it in like an orator, with an appeal to his auditors, And now, Israel, what doth the Lord thy God require of thee? v. 12. Ask what he requires; as David, (Ps. 116. 12.) What shall I render? When we have received mercy from God, it becomes us to inquire what returns we shall make. It is fit we consider what he requires, and you will find it is nothing but that is just and reasonable in itself, and of unspeakable benefit and advantage to you. Let us see here what we do require, and what abundant reason there is why we should do what he requires.

1. We are here most plainly directed in our duty, both to God, to our neighbour, and to ourselves.

1. We are here taught our duty to God, both in the discharge of those duties which are appropriate to all the actions of our lives; our principles, and our practices. (1.) We must fear the Lord our God, v. 12, and again, v. 20. We must adore his majesty, acknowledge his authority, stand in awe of his power, and dread his wrath. This is gospel-duty, Rev. 14, 6, 7. (2.) We must love him, be well-pleased that he is, desire that he may be ours, and delight in the contemplation of him, and in communion with him. We must love our Lord, love him as a good God, and our Father and Benefactor. (3.) We must walk in his ways, that is, the ways which he has appointed us to walk in. The whole course of our conversation must be conformable to his holy will. (4.) We must serve him; (v. 20.) serve him with all our heart and souls (v. 12.) devote ourselves to his honour, put ourselves under his government, and engage ourselves to advance all the interests of his kingdom among men. And we must be hearty and zealous in his service, engage and employ our inward man in his work, and what we do for him, we must do cheerfully and with a good will. (5.) We must keep his commandments and his statutes, v. 13. Having given up ourselves to his service, we must make his revealed will our rule in every thing; perform all he prescribes; forbear all he forbids; firmly adhering that all the statutes he commands us, are for our good. Beside the reward of obedience, which will be our unspeakable gain, there is true honour and pleasure in obedience. It is really for our present good, to be meek and humble, chaste and sober, just and charitable, patient and contented; these make us easy, and safe, and pleasant, and truly great. (6.) We must give honour to God, in every name: For by his name, we do by his honour of his omniscience, his sovereignty, his justice, as well as of his necessary existence. Swear by his name, and not by the name of any creature, or false god, whenever an oath for confirmation is called for. (7.) To him we must cleave, v. 20. Having chosen him for our God, we must faithfully and constantly abide with him, and never for sake him. Cleave to him as one we love and delight in, trust and confide in, and from whom we have great expectations.

2. We are here taught our duty to our neighbour, (v. 19.) Love ye the stranger. And if the stranger, much more our brethren, as ourselves. If the Israelites that were such a peculiar people, so particularly distinguished from all people, must be kind to strangers, much more must we, that are not set apart in a peculiar manner; for we must have a tender concern for all that share with us in the human nature, and as we have opportunity, that is, according to their necessities and our abilities, we must do good unto all men. Two arguments are here urged to enforce this duty. (1.) God's common providence, which extends itself to all nations of men, they being all made of one blood. God loveth the stranger, (v. 18.) that is, he gives to all life, and breath, and all things, even to those that are Gen tiles, and strangers to the commonwealth of Israel and to Israel's God. He knows those perfectly whom we know nothing of. He gives food and raiment even to those to whom he has not showed his word and statutes. God's common gifts to mankind oblige us to honour all men. Or, it denotes the particular care which Providence takes of strangers in distress, which we ought to prize in for, (Ps. 146. 9. The Lord preserves the strangers, and) to imitate him, to serve him, and concern with him, therein, being forward to make ourselves instruments in his hand of kindness to strangers. (2.) The afflicted condition which the Israelites themselves had been in, when they were strangers in Egypt. They that have themselves been in distress, and have found mercy with God, should sympathize most feelingly with those that are in the like distress, and be ready to show kindness to them. The people of the Jews, notwithstanding these repeated commands given them to be kind to strangers, conceived a rooted antipathy to the Gentiles, whom they looked upon with the utmost disdain, which made them enmity them the grace of God, and the gospel of Christ, and that brought a final ruin upon themselves.

2. (Vv. 13, 16.) Circumcise the foreskin of your hearts, that is, Cast away from you all corrupt affections and inclinations which hinder you from fearing and loving God. Mortify the flesh with the lusts of it. Away with all filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness, which obstruct the free course of the word of God to your hearts. Rest not in the circumcision of the body, which was only the sign, but be circumcised in heart, which is the thing significant of God's Spirit and Spirit's dispensation. See Rom. 2. 29. The command of Christ goes further than this, and obliges us not only to cut off the foreskin of the heart, which may be easily spared, but to cut off the right eye, that is an offence to us: the more spiritual the dispensation is, the more spiritual we are obliged to be, and to go the closer in mortifying sin. And be no more stiff-necked, as they had been hitherto, not only in breaking God's statutes, but with great affections, against divine commands and corrections, but ready to comply with the will of God in both. The circumcision of the heart makes it ready to yield to God, and draw in his yoke.

II. We are here most pathetically persuaded to our duty. Let but reason rule us, and religion will follow.

1. Consider the greatness and glory of God, and therefore fear him, and from that principle serve and obey him. What is it that is thought to make a man great, but great honour, power, and possessions? Think then how great the Lord our God is, and greatly to be feared. (1.) He has great honour, a name above every name, v. 17. He is God of gods, and Lord of Lords. Angels are called gods, so are magistrates, and the Gentiles had gods mentioned in the lost of the Gentiles they were only fancy, but God is infinitely above all these nominal deities. What an absurdity would it be for them to worship other gods, when the God to whom they had sworn allegiance, was the God of Gods! (2.) He has great power. He is a mighty God and terrible, (v. 17.) which regardeth not persons. He has the power of a conqueror, and so he is terrible to those that resist him and rebel against him. He has that power and force, and is so terrible to all those that appeal to him or appear before him. And it is as much the greatness and honour of a judge to be impartial in his justice, without respect to persons or bribes, as it is to a general to be terrible to the enemy. Our God is both. (3.) He has great possessions. Heaven and earth are his, (v. 14.) and all the hosts and stars of both. Therefore he is able to bear us out in his service, and to make up the losses we sustain in discharging our duty to him. And yet therefore he has no need of us, or anything we have, or can do; we are undone without him; but he is happy without us; which makes the condescensions of his grace, in accepting us and our services, truly admirable. Heaven and earth are his possession, and yet the Lord's portion is his people.

2. Consider the goodness and grace of God, and therefore love him, and from that principle serve and obey him. His goodness is his glory, as much as his greatness.

(1.) He is good to all. Whomsoever he finds miserable, to them he will be found merciful, v. 18. He executes the judgment of the fatherless and widow. It is his honour to help the helpless, and to succour those that most need it, and that men are apt to do injury to, or at least to put a slight upon. See Ps. 68. 4, 5.—146. 7, 9.

(2.) But truly God is good to Israel, in a special manner, and therefore they are under special obligations to him. "He is thy Praise, and he is thy God, v. 21. Therefore love him and serve him, because of the relation wherein he stands to thee. He is thy God and in covenant with thee, and as such he is thy Praise," that is, (1.) He puts honour upon thee; he is the God in whom, all the day long, thou mayest boast that thou knowest him, and art known of him. If he be thy God, he is thy Glory. (2.) He expects honour from thee. He is thy Praise," that is, he is the God whom thou art bound to praise; if he has not praise from thee, whence may he expect it? He inhabits the praises of Israel.

Consider, First. The gracious choice he made of Israel, v. 15. 'He had a delight in thy fathers, and therefore chose their seed.' Not that there was anything in them to merit his favour, or to recommend them to it, but so it seemed good in his eyes. He would be kind to them, though he had no need of them. Secondly, The great things he had done for Israel, v. 21, 22. He reminds them not only of what they had seen with their eyes, but what their fathers had told them of, but of what they had seen with their eyes, and which they must tell their children of; particularly that within a few generations seventy souls (for there were no more when Jacob went down into Egypt) increased to a great nation, as the stars of heaven for multitude. And the more they were in number, the more praise and service God expected from them; yet it proved, as the other, that when they began to multiply, they corrupted themselves.

CHAP. XI.

With this chapter Moses concludes his preface to the repetition of the statutes and judgments which they must observe to do. He repeats the general charge, (v. 1.) and having in the close of the foregoing chapter begun to mention the great things God had done among them, in this, I. He concludes with the particular good things God had done before their eyes, v. 2.—7. II. He sets before them, for the future, life and death, the blessing and the curse, according as they did, or did not, keep God's commandments. That they should enormously prosper if they were obedient, should be blessed with plenty of all good things, (v. 8. —15.) and with victory over their enemies, and the enlargement of their coast thereby, v. 22. —25. But their enemies would be ascribed to his name, and God would think them, v. 16, 17. III. He directs them what means to use, that they might keep in mind the law of God, v. 18. —21. And, IV. Concludes all with solemnly charging them to choose which they would have, the blessing or the curse, v. 22. —29.

1. THEREFORE shalt love the Lord thy God, and keep his charge, and his statutes, and his judgments, and his commandments, always. 2. And know you this day: for I speak not with your children which have not known, and which have not seen the chastisement of the LORD your God, his greatness, his mighty hand, and his stretched-out arm, 3. And his miracles, and his acts which he did in the midst of Egypt, unto Pharaoh the king of Egypt, and unto all his land; 4. And what he did unto the army of Egypt, unto their horses, and to their chariots; how he made the water of the Red Sea to overflow them as they pursued after you, and how the LORD hath destroyed them unto this day; 5. And what he did unto you in the wilderness, until ye came into this place. 6. And what he did unto Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab, the son of Reuben: how the earth opened his mouth, and swallowed them up, and their households, and their tents, and all the substance that was in their possession, in the midst of all Israel: 7. But your eyes have seen all the great acts of the LORD which he did.

Because God has made thee as the stars of heaven for multitude, so the chapter before concludes; therefore thou shalt love the LORD thy God, so this begins. Those whom God has built up into families, whose beginning was small, but whose latter end greatly increases, should use that as an argument with themselves, why they should serve God. Thou shalt keep his charge, that is, the oracles of his word, and ordinances of his worship, with which they were intrusted, and for which they were accountable. It is a passage often used concerning the office of the priests and Levites, for all Israel was a kingdom of priests, a holy nation. Observe the connexion of these two: Thou shalt love the Lord, and keep his charge: since love will work in obedience, and that only is acceptable obedience which flows from a principle of love, 1 John 5. 3.

He goes on to mention divers of the great and terrible works of God which their eyes had seen, v. 7. This part of his discourse he addresses to the seniors among them, the elders in age; and, probably, the elders in office were so, and were now his immediate auditors: there were some among them, that could remember their deliverance out of Egypt, all above fifty, and to them he speaks this, not to the children, who knew it by hearsay only, v. 2. Note, God's mercies to us when we were young, we should remember and ret in the impression when we were old. What our eyes have seen, especially in our early days, has affected us, and should be improved by us long after.

They had seen what terrible judgments God had executed upon the enemies of Israel's peace; 1. Upon Pharaoh and the Egyptians that enslaved them. What a fine country was ruined and laid waste by one plague after another, to force Israel's enlargement! v. 5. What a fine army was entirely destroyed in the Red-Sea? therefore, Israel's being re-enslaved! v. 4. Thus did he give Egypt for their ransom, Isa. 43. 3. Rather shall that famous kingdom be destroyed, than that Israel shall not be delivered. 2. Upon Dathan and Abiram that embroiled them. Remember what he did in the wilderness, (v. 5.) by how many necessary chastisements, (as they are called, v. 2.) they were kept from ruining themselves. Particularly, when those daring Reubenites defied the authority of Moses, and headed a dangerous rebellion against God himself, which threatened the ruin of a whole nation, and might have ended in that, if the divine power had not immediately crushed the rebellion, by burying the rebels alive, and all that was in their possession, v. 6. What was done against them, though misinterpreted by the dissatisfied party, (Numb. 16. 41.) was really done in mercy to Israel. To be saved from the mischiefs of insurrections at home, is as great a kindness to a people, and therefore lays under as strong obligations, as protection from the invasion of enemies abroad.

8. Therefore shall ye keep all the commandments which I command you this day, that ye may be strong, and go in and possess the land whither ye go to possess it; 9. And that ye may prolong your days in the land, which the LORD swears unto your fathers to give unto them and to their seed, a land that floweth with milk and honey. 10. For the land, whither thou goest in to possess it, is not as the land of Egypt, from whence ye came out, where thou sowedst thy seed, and wateredst it with thy foot, as a garden of herbs: 11. But the land, whither ye go to possess it, is a land of hills and valleys, and drinketh water of the rain of heaven; 12. A land which the LORD thy God careth for: the eyes of the LORD thy God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year even unto the end of the year. 13. And it shall come to pass, if you shall hearken diligently unto my commandments which I command you this day, to love the LORD your God, and to serve him with all your heart, and with all your soul, 14. That I will give you the rain of your land in his due season, the first rain and the latter rain, that thou mayest gather in thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil. 15. And I will send grass in thy fields for thy cattle, that thou mayest eat and be full. 16. Take heed to yourselves, that your heart be not deceived, and ye turn aside, and serve other gods, and worship them; 17. And then the LORD's wrath be kindled against you, and he shut up the heaven, that there be no rain, and that the land yield not her fruit; and lest ye perish quickly from off the good land which the LORD giveth you.

Still he urges the same subject, as loth to conclude till he had gained his point. If thou wilt enter into life, if thou wilt enter into Canaan, a type of that life, and find it a good land indeed to thee, keep the commandments, keep all the commandments which I command you this day: love God, and serve him with all your heart.

I. Because this was the way to get and keep possession of the promised land. 1. It was the way to get possession; (v. 8.) That ye may be strong for war, and so go in and possess it. So little did they know either of hardship or hazard in the wars of Canaan, that he does not say they should go in and fight for it, no, they had nothing in effect to do but go in and possess it. He does not go about to teach them the art of war, how to draw the bow, and use the sword, and keep rank, that they might be strong and go in and possess the land; no, but let them keep God's commandments, and their religion, while they are true to it, will be their strength, and secure their success. 2. It was the way to keep possession; (v. 9.) That ye may prolong your days in this land that your eyes are upon. 3. It tends to the shortening of the days of particular persons, and to the shortening of the days of a people. 4. ALOUD HELP (Ibid.) will be a lengthening out of their tranquillity. 5. Because the land of Canaan, into which they were going, had a more sensible dependence upon the blessing of heaven, than the land of Egypt had, v. 10-12. Egypt was a country fruitful enough, but it was all flat, and was watered, not as other countries, with rains (it is said of Egypt, Zech. 14. 8. that there was no rain); but by consequence we had of the Nile at a certain season of the year, to the improving of which there was necessary a great deal of the art and labour of the husbandman; so that in Egypt a man must bestow as much cost and pains upon a field, as upon a garden of herbs. And this made them the more apt to imagine that the power of their own hands got them this wealth. But the land of Canaan was an uneven country, a land of hills and plains, in a nature more promising prospect to the eye, but yielded a greater variety of soils for the several purposes of the husbandman. It was a land that had no great rivers in it, except Jordan, but drank water of the rain of heaven. And so, 1. Saved them a great deal of labour. While the Egyptians were ditching and guttering in the fields, up to their knees in mud, to bring water to their land, which otherwise would soon become like the heath in a wilderness, the Israelites could sit in their houses, warm and easy, and leave it to God to water their land with the former and the latter rain, which is called the river of God, (Ps. 65. 9.) perhaps in allusion to, and contempt of, the river of Egypt, which that nation was so proud of. Note. The better God has provided, by our outward condition, for our ease and convenience, the more we should aim at our own service; the less we have to do for our bodies, the more we should do for God and our souls. 2. So he directed them to look upward to God, who giveth us rain from heaven and fruitful seasons, (Acts 14. 17.) and promised to be himself as the dew unto Israel, Hos. 14. 5. Note. (1.) Mercies bring with them the greatest comfort and sweetness, when we see them coming from heaven, the immediate gifts of Divine Providence. (2.) Then, when we depend upon God, the more cheerful we should be in our obedience to him. See how Moses here magnifies the land of Canaan, above all other lands, that the eyes of God were always upon it, that is, they should be so, to see that nothing was wanting, while they kept close to God and duty; its fruitfulness should be, not so much the happy effect of its soil, as the immediate gift of the divine blessing; this we may infer from its present state, for it is said to be at this day, now that God is departed from it, as barren a spot of ground as perhaps any under heaven. Call it not Naomie; call it Marah. III. Because God would certainly bless them with an abundance of all good things, if they would love him and serve him, v. 13-15. I will give you the rain in due season, and the former and the latter rain, which fell before the harvest, Amos 4. 7. This represented all the seasonable blessings which God would bestow upon them, especially spiritual comforts, which should come as the latter and former rain, Hos. 6. 3. And the earth thus watered produced, 1. Fruit for the service of man; corn, and wine, and oil, Ps. 104. 13-15. 2. Grass for the cattle, that they also might be serviceable to man, that he might eat of them and be full, v. 15. Godliness hath here the promise of the life that now is; but the favour of God shall put gladness into the heart, more than the increase of corn, and wine, and oil, will. IV. Because their revolt from God to idols would certainly be their ruin; (v. 16, 17.) Take heed, your hearts be not deceived. All that forsake God to set their affection upon, or pay their devotion to, any creature, will find themselves wretchedly deceived to their own destruction; and this will aggravate it, that it was purely for want of taking heed. A little care would have prevented their being imposed upon by the great deceiver. To awaken them to take heed, Moses here tells them plainly, that if they should turn aside to other gods, 1. They would provoke the wrath of God against them; and who knows the power of that anger? 2. Good things would be turned away from them; the heaven would withhold its rain, and then of course the earth would not yield its fruit. 3. Evil things would come upon them, they would perish quickly from off this good land. And the better the land was, the more grievous it would be to perish from it. The goodness of the land would not be their security, when the badness of the inhabitants had made them ripe for ruin. 18. Therefore shall ye lay up these my words in your heart and in your soul, and bind them for a sign upon your hand, that they may be as frontlets between your eyes. 19. And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest by the way, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. 20. And thou shalt write them upon the door-posts of thine house, and upon thy gates; 21. That your days may be multiplied, and the days of your children, in the land which the Lord sware unto your fathers to give them, as the days of heaven upon the earth. 22. For if ye shall diligently keep all these commandments which I command you, to do them, to love the Lord your God, to walk in all his ways, and to cleave unto him; 23. Then will the Lord drive out all these nations from before you, and ye shall possess greater nations and mightier than yourselves. 24. Every place whereon the soles of your feet shall tread shall be yours: from the wilderness and Lebanon, from the river, the river Euphrates, even unto the uttermost sea, shall your coast be. 25. There shall no man be able to stand before you: for the Lord your God shall lay the fear of you and the dread of you upon all the land that ye shall tread upon, as he hath said unto you. Here. 1. He repeats the directions he had given for their guidance and assistance in their obedience and for the keeping up of religion among them, (v. 18-20.) which is much to the same purport with what we had before, ch. 6. 6, 6c. Let us all be di-corrected by the three rules here given. 1. Let our hearts be filled with the word of God. Lay up these words in your heart and in your soul. The heart must be the treasury of sacred treasure in which the word of God must be laid up, to be used upon all occasions. We cannot expect good practices in the conversation, unless there be good thoughts, good affections, and good principles, in the heart. 2. Let our eyes be fixed upon the word of God. "Bind these words for a sign upon your hand, which is always in view, (Isa. 49. 16,) and as frontlets between your eyes, which you cannot avoid the sight of; let them be familiar with your heart, and ever present to your eye as constantly upon them, as if they were written upon your door-posts and could not be overlooked either when you go out or when you come in." Thus we must lay God's judgments before us, having a constant regard to them, as the guide of our way, as the rule of our work, Ps. 119. 30. 3. Let our tongues be employed about the word of God. Let it be the subject of our familiar discourse, wherever we are; especially with our children, who must be taught the service of God, as the one thing needful, much more needful than either the rules of decency, or the calling they must live by in this world. Great care and pains must be taken to acquaint children betimes, and to affect them, with the word of God and the wonderful things of his law. Nor will any thing contribute more to their safety and perpetuity of religion in a nation, than the good education of children; if the seed be holy, it is the substance of a land.

II. He repeats the assurances he had before given them, in God's name, of prosperity and success, if they were obedient: 1. They should have a happy settlement, v. 21. Their days should be multiplied; and when they were fulfilled, the days of their children likewise should be many, as the days of heaven, that is, Canaan should be sure to them and their heirs for ever, as long as the world stands, if they did not by their own sin throw themselves out of it. 2. It should not be in the power of their enemies to give them any disturbance, or make them upon any account uneasy. "If ye will keep God's commandments, and be careful to do your duty, (v. 22.) God will not only crown them with the blessing of his presence, but he will own and succeed the more glorious undertakings of the men of war; victory shall attend your arms: which way soever they turn, God will drive out these nations, and put you in possession of their land," v. 23, 24. Their territories should be enlarged to the utmost extent of the promise, Gen. 15. 18. And all their neighbours should stand in awe of them, v. 25. Nothing contributes more to the establishment of a considerable abstract, valuable to its friends, and formidable to its enemies, than religion reigning in it; for who can be against those that have God for them? And he is certainly for those that are sincerely for him, Prov. 14. 34.

26. Behold, I set before you this day a blessing and a curse: 27. A blessing, if ye obey the commandments of the Lord your God, which I command you this day; 28. And a curse, if ye will not obey the commandments of the Lord your God, but turn aside out of the way which I command you this day, to go after other gods, which ye have not known. 29. And it shall come to pass, when the Lord thy God hath brought thee in unto the land whither thou goest to possess it, that thou shalt put the blessing upon mount Gerizim, and the curse upon mount Ebal. 30. Are they not on the other side Jordan, by the way where the sun goeth down, in the land of the Canaanites, which dwell in the champaign over against Gilgal, beside the plains of Moreh?

31. For ye shall pass over Jordan, to go in to possess the land which the Lord your God giveth thee, and ye shall possess it, and dwell therein. 32. And ye shall observe to do all the statutes and judgments which I set before you this day.

Here Moses concludes his general exhortation to obedience; and his management is very affecting, and such as, one would think, should have engaged them for ever to God, and should have left impressions upon them, never to be worn out.

I. He sums up all his arguments for obedience in two words, the blessing and the curse, (v. 26,) that is, the rewards and the punishments, as they stand in the promises and the threatenings, which are the great sanctions of the law, taking hold of hope and fear, those two handles of the soul, by which it is caught, held, and managed. These two, the blessing, and the curse, he set before them, that is, he explained to them what they ought to know, that he enumerated the particulars contained both in the blessing and in the curse, that they might see the more fully how desirable the blessing was, and how dreadful the curse. 2. He confirmed them, that they might believe them; made it evident to them, by the proofs he produced of his own commission, that the blessing was not a fool's paradise, nor the curse a bugbear, but that both were real declarations of the purpose of God concerning them. 3. He charged them to choose which of these they would have. So fairly does he deal with them, and so far is he from putting out the eyes of these men, as he was charged, Num. 16. 14. They and we are plainly told on what terms we stand with Almighty God. (1.) If we be obedient to his laws, we may be sure of a blessing, v. 27. But, (2.) If we be disobedient, we may be sure of the curse, v. 28.

Say ye to the righteous, (for God has said it,) the world cannot unsay it,) that it shall be well with them: But woe to the wicked, it shall be ill with them.

II. He appoints a public and solemn proclamation to be made of the blessing and curse which he had set before them, upon the two mountains of Gerizim and Ebal, v. 29, 30. We have more particular directions for this solemnity, (ch. 27. 11, &c.) and an account of the performance of it, Josh. 8. 33, &c. It was to be done, and was done, immediately upon their coming into Canaan, that when they first took possession of that land, they might know upon what terms they stood. The place where this was to be done, is particularly described by Moses, though he never saw it, which is one circumstance among many, that evidences his divine instructions. It is said to be upon the mount of Moreh, which was one of the first places that Abraham came to in Canaan; so that in sending them thither to hear the blessing and the curse, God reminded them of the promise he made to Abraham in that very place, Gen. 12. 6, 7. The mention of this appointment here, serves, 1. For the encouragement of their faith in the promise of God, that they should be masters of Canaan quickly. Do it (says Moses) on the other side Jordan, (v. 30,) for you may be confident you shall pass over Jordan, v. 31. The institution of this service to be done in Canaan, was an assurance to them that they should be brought into possession of it, and a token, like that which God gave to Moses, (Exod. 3. 12.) Ye shall serve God upon this mountain. And, 2. It serves for an engagement upon them to be obedient, that they might escape that curse, and obtain that blessing, which was to be theirs if they obeyed; and so as a reference to the tabernacle, v. (p. 32.) 4. Ye shall observe to do the statutes and judgments, that ye may not in that solemnity be witnesses against yourselves.

Moses at this chapter comes to the particular statutes which he had to give in charge to Israel, and he begins with those which relate to the worship of God; and particularly those which explain the second commandment, about which God is in a special manner jealous. 1. They must utterly destroy all relics and remains of idolatry, v. 1. 2. v. 3. They must keep close to the tabernacle, v. 4. 5. The former precept was intended to prevent all false worship; the latter, to preserve the worship God had instituted. By this latter law, 1. They are commanded to bring all their offerings to the altar of God, and all their holy things to the place which he should choose, v. 6. 7. 11. 12. 14. 15. They are to have no other altar but that of the Lord God, and that is to be in the holy place, where the tabernacle begins, v. 8. 9. 11. And as the Canaanites had done; (v. 29. 32.) and, in particular, to eat the hallowed things at their own houses; v. 19. 17. 18. or, to forsake the institute of God. 2. They are permitted to eat flesh as common food at their own houses, provided they did not eat the blood, v. 15. 16. And again, v. 20. 26.

1. These are the statutes and judgments which ye shall observe to do in the land which the Lord God of thy fathers giveth thee to possess it, all the days that ye live upon the earth. 2. Ye shall utterly destroy all the places wherein the nations which ye shall possess served their gods, upon the high mountains, and upon the hills, and under every green tree: 3. And ye shall overthrow their altars, and break their pillars, and burn their groves with fire; and ye shall hew down the graven images of their gods, and destroy the names of them out of that place. 4. Ye shall not do so unto the Lord your God.

From those great original truths, That there is a God, and, That there is but one God, arise those great fundamental laws, That God is to be worshipped, and he only, and that therefore we are to have no other God before him: this is the first commandment, and the second is a guard upon it, or a hedge about it. To prevent a revolt to false gods, we are forbidden to worship the true God in such a way as to be false worshipers; and so the false gods are given over to the judgment of God; and are commanded to observe the instituted ordinances of worship, that we may adhere to the proper Object of worship. For this reason, Moses is very large in his exposition of the second commandment. What is contained in this, and the four following chapters, mostly refers to that. These are statutes and judgments which they must observe to do, v. 1. 2. 3. And they are of their rest and prosperity, when they should be masters of Canaan. We must not think that our religion is instituted only to be our work in the years of our servitude, our entertainment in the places of our solitude, and our consolation in affliction; no, when we come to possess a good land, still we must keep up the worship of God in Canaan, as well as in a wilderness; when we are grown up, as well as when we are children; when we are full of business, as well as when we have nothing else to do. 2. All the days, as long as ye live upon the earth. While we are here in our state of trial, we must continue in our obedience, even to the end, and never Cease, nor grow weary of well-doing.

Now, 1. They are here charged to abolish and extirpate all those things that the Canaanites had served, and all the works of darkness which could not be destroyed, either because pleasant, or because awful: whatever makes the mind easy and reverent, contracts and composes it, was thought to befriend devotion. The solemn shade and silence of a grove are still admired by those that are disposed to contemplation. But the advantages which these retirements gave to the Gentiles in the worship of their idols, was, that they concealed their works of darkness, which could not bear the light; and therefore they must all be destroyed, with the altars, pillars, and images, that had been used by the natives in the worship of their gods, so that the very names of them might be buried in oblivion, and not only be remembered with respect, but not remembered at all. They must thus consult, (1.) The reputation of their land; let it never be said of this holy land, that it had been thus polluted, but let all these dung-hills be carried away, as things they were ashamed of. (2.) The safety of their religion; let none be left remaining, lest profane unthinking people, especially in degenerate ages, should make use of them in the service of the God of Israel. Let these pest-houses be demolished, as things they were afraid of. He begins the statutes that relate to divine worship with this, because there must first be an abhorrence of that which is evil, before there can be a steady adherence to that which is good, Rom. 12. 9. The kingdom of God must be set up, both in persons and places, upon the ruins of the Devil's kingdom; for they cannot stand together, nor can there be any communion between Christ and Belial.

2. They are charged not to translate the rites and usages of idolaters into the worship of God; no, not even of the heathen gods with their names and works. (v. 7. 8.) Here is no

Ye shall not do so to the Lord your God, v. 8. 9. "You must not think to do honour to him, by offering sacrifices on mountains and hills, erecting pillars, planting groves, and setting up images; no, you must not indulge a luxurious fancy in your worship, nor think that whatever pleases that, will please God: he is above all gods, and will not be worshipped as other gods are."

5. But unto the place which the Lord your God shall choose out of all your tribes to put his name there, even unto his habitation shall ye seek, and thither thou shalt come; 6. And thither ye shall bring your burnt-offerings, and your sacrifices, and your tithes, and heave-offerings of your hand, and your vows, and your free-will offerings, and the firstlings of your herds and of your flocks: 7. And there ye shall eat before the Lord your God, and ye shall rejoice in all that ye put your hand unto, you and your households, wherein the Lord thy God hath blessed thee. 8. Ye shall not do after all the things that we do here this day, every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes. 9. For ye are not as yet come to the rest and to the inheritance, which the Lord your God giveth thee. 10. But when ye go over Jordan, and dwell in the land which the Lord your God giveth you to inherit, and when he giveth you rest from all your enemies round about, so that ye dwell in safety; 11. Then there shall be a place which the Lord your God shall choose, to cause his name to dwell there; thither shall ye bring all that I command you; your burnt-offerings, and your sacrifices, your tithes, and the heave-offering of your hand, and all your choice vows which ye vow unto the Lord: 12. And ye shall rejoice before the Lord your God, ye, and your sons, and your daughters, and your manservants, and your maidservants, and the Levite that is within your gates; forasmuch as he hath no part nor inheritance with you. 13. Take heed to thyself that thou offer not thy burnt-offerings in every place that thou seeest: 14. But in the place which the Lord shall choose he shall offer thy burnt-offerings, and there thou shalt do all that I command thee. 15. Notwithstanding thou mayest kill and eat flesh in all thy gates, whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, according to the blessing of the Lord thy God which he hath given thee: the unclean and the clean may eat thereof, as of the roebuck, and as of the hart. 16. Only ye shall not eat the blood; ye shall pour it upon the earth as water. 17. Thou mayest not eat within thy gates the tithe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or of thy oil, or the firstlings of thy herds or of thy flock, nor any of thy vows which thou vowest, nor thy free-will-offerings, or heave-offering of thine hand: 18. But thou must eat them before the Lord thy God, in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maidservant, and the Levite that is within thy gates: and thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God in all that thou puttest thine hands unto. 19. Take heed to thyself that thou forsake not the Levite as long as thou livest upon the earth. 20. When the Lord thy God shall enlarge thy border, as he hath promised thee, and thou shalt say, I will eat flesh, (because thy soul longeth to eat flesh,) thou mayest eat flesh, whatsoever thy soul lusteth after. 21. If the place which the Lord thy God hath chosen to put his name there be too far from thee, then thou shalt kill of thy herd and of thy flock, which the Lord hath given thee, as I have commanded thee, and thou shalt eat in thy gates whatsoever thy soul lusteth after. 22. Even as the roebuck and the hart is eaten, so thou shalt eat them; the unclean and the clean shall eat of them alike. 23. Only be sure that thou eat not the blood: for the blood is the life; and thou mayest not eat the life with the flesh. 24. Thou shalt not eat it thou shalt pour it upon the earth as water. 25. Thou shalt not eat it; that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee, when thou shalt do that which is right in the sight of the Lord. 26. Only thy holy things which thou hast, and thy vows, thou shalt take, and go unto the place which the Lord shall choose: 27. And thou shalt offer thy burnt-offerings, the flesh and the blood, upon the altar of the Lord thy God: and the blood of thy sacrifices shall be poured out upon the altar of the Lord thy God, and thou shalt eat the flesh. 28. Observe and hear all these words which I command thee, that it may go well with thee, and with thy children after thee for ever, when thou doest that which is good and right in the sight of the Lord thy God. 29. When the Lord thy God shall cut off the nations from before thee, whither thou goest to possess them, and thou proceedest them, and dwellest in their land; 30. Take heed to thyself, that thou be not snared by following them, after that they be destroyed from before thee; and that thou inquire not after their gods, saying, How did these nations serve their gods? even so will I do likewise. 31. Thou shalt not do so unto the Lord thy God: for every abomination to the Lord, which he hateth, have they done unto their gods; for even their sons and their daughters they have burnt in the fire to their gods. 32. What thing soever I command you, observe to do it: thou shalt not add thereto, nor diminish from it.

There is not any one particular precept (as I remember) in all the law of Moses, so largely pressed and inculcated as this, by which they are all tied to bring their sacrifices to that one altar which was set up in the court of the tabernacle, and there to perform all the rituals of their religion; for as to moral services, there is no doubt, as now, men might pray everywhere, as they did in their synagogues. The command to do this, and the prohibition of the contrary, are here repeated again and again, as we teach children: and yet we are sure that there is in scripture no vain repetition: but all this stress is laid upon it. 1. Because of the strange proneness there was in the hearts of the people to idolatry and superstition, and the danger of their being seduced by the many temptations which they would be surrounded with. 2. Because of the great use which the observance of this appointment would be of to them, both to prevent the introducing of corrupt customs into their worship, and to preserve among them unity and brotherly love; that meeting all in one place, they might continue both of one way, and of one heart. 5. Because of the significance of this appointment. They must keep to one place, in token of their belief of these two great truths, which we find together, (2 Tim. 2. 5.) That there is one God, and one Mediator between God and man. It not only served to keep up the notion of the unity of the Godhead, but was an intimation to them (though they could not steadfastly discern it) of the one only way of approach to God, and communion with him, in and by the Messiah. Let us now reduce this long charge to its proper head.

I. It is here promised, that when they were settled in Canaan, when they had rest from their enemies, and dwelt in safety, God would choose a certain place, which he would appoint to be the centre of their unity, to which they should bring all their offerings, v. 10, 11. Observe, 1. If they must be tied to one place, they should not be left in doubt concerning it, but should certainly know what place it was. Had Christ intended, under the gospel, to make any difference such as a seat of power, as Rome pretends to be, we should not have been left so destitute of instruction as we are, concerning the appointed place. 2. God does not leave it to them to choose the place, lest the tribes should have quarrelled about it, each striving for their secular advantage, to have it among them; but he reserves the choice to himself, as he does the designation of the Redeemer, even to the setting up of the holy ordinances. 3. He does not appoint the place new, as he had appointed mounts Gerizim and Ebal, for the pronouncing of the blessings and curses, (ch. 11. 29.) but reserves the doing of it till hereafter, that thereby they might be made to expect further directions from heaven, and a divine conduct, after Muses should be removed.

The place which God would choose, is said to be the place where he would put his name, that is, which he would have to be called his, where his honour should dwell, where he would manifest himself to his people, and make himself known, as men do by their names, and where he would receive addresses by which his name is both praised and called upon. It was to be his habitation, where, as King of Israel, he would keep court, and be found by all the children of his people, and especially by him. The ark was the token of God’s presence, and where that was put, there God put his name, and that was his habitation; it contained the tables of the law; for none must expect to receive favours from God’s hand, but those that are willing to receive the law from his mouth. The place which God first chose for the ark to reside in, was Shiloh: and after that place had sinned away its honours, we find the ark at Kirjath-jearim, and other places; but at length, in David’s time, it was fixed at Jerusalem, and God said concerning Solomon’s temple, more expressly than ever he had said concerning any other place, This I have chosen for a house of sacrifice, 2 Chron. 7. 12. Compare ch. 6. 5. Now, under the gospel, we have no temple that sanctifies the gold, no altar that sanctifies the gift, but Christ only; and as to the place of worship, and all other places, but at length, every place the spiritual incidence should be offered, Mal. 1. 11. And our Saviour has declared that these are accepted as true worshippers, who worship God in sincerity and truth, without regard either to this mountain or Jerusalem, John 4. 21.

II. They are commanded to bring all their burnt-offerings and sacrifices to this place that God would choose; and again, v. 11. They shall bring all that I command you. And v. 14. They shall offer thy burnt-offerings. And v. 27. The flesh and the blood must be offered upon the altar of the Lord thy God. And of their peace-offerings, here called their sacrifices, though they were to eat the flesh, yet the blood was to be poured upon the altar. By this they were taught that sacrifices and offerings God did not desire, nor accept, for their own sake, nor for any good results in them, as natural expressions of homage and adoration: but that they received their virtue purely, from the altar on which they were offered, as it typified Christ; whereas prayers and praises, as much more necessary and valuable, were to be offered every day by the people of God wherever they were. A devout Israelite might honour God, and keep up communion with him, and obtain many spiritual blessings, from God, through Christ, perhaps, for many months together, of bringing a sacrifice to his altar. But this signified the obligation we Christians are under, to offer up all our spiritual sacrifices to God, in the name of Jesus Christ, hoping for acceptance only upon the score of his mediation, 1 Pet. 2. 5.

III. They are commanded to feast upon their hallowed things, before the Lord with holy joy. They must not only bring to the altar the sacrifices which were to be offered to God, but they must bring to the place of the altar all those things which they were appointed by the law to eat and drink, to the honour of God, in token of their communion with him, v. 6. Their tithes, heavy-offerings of their hand, that is, their first-fruits, their vows, and free will-offerings, and firstlings, all these things which were not burnt-offerings; these must be carried to the sanctuary, or by the priests and Levites, must be brought to the place which God would choose; as all the revenues of the crown, from all parts of the kingdom, are brought into the exchequer. And v. 7. They shall eat ye before the Lord, and rejoice in it in joy, and in his glory. If we glorify God, we edify ourselves, and cultivate our own minds, through the grace of God, by the increase of our knowledge and faith, the enlivening of devout affections, and the improvement of religious duties; and that is the place where God should be done with holy joy and cheerfulness. Ye shall eat and rejoice, v. 7. And again, v. 12. and v. 18. (1.) Now while they were before the Lord, they must rejoice, v. 12. It is the will of God that we should serve him with gladness; none displeased him more than they that covered his altar with tears, Mal. 2. 13. See what a good Master we serve, that has made our duty to sing a song of joy. Even the children and servants must rejoice with them before God, that the services of religion might be a pleasure to them, and not a task or drudgery. (2.) They must carry away with them the grateful relish of that delight which they found in communication with God; they must rejoice in all that they put their hands unto, v. 7. Some of the comfort which they had by making the observance of religion, they must take with them into their common affairs; and being thus strengthened in soul, whatever they did, they must do it heartily and cheerfully. And this holy pious joy in God and his goodness, with which we are to rejoice evermore, would be the best preservative against the sin and snare of vain and carnal mirth, and a relief against the sorrows of the world.

IV. They are commanded to be kind to the Levites. Did they feast with joy? The Levites must feast with them, and rejoice with them, v. 12. And again, v. 18. And a general caution, (v. 19.) Take Deuteronomy, right, Otily by f bandry will be of God, to and assist to them in their devotions; for it is the Levite within their gates, that they are here commanded to make much of. It is a great mercy to have Levites near us, within our gates, that we may ask the law at their mouth, and at our feasts to be a check upon us, to restrain excess. And it is the duty of the whole ministers, that give them good instructions, and set them good examples. As long as we live, we shall need their assistance, till we come to that world where ordinances will be superseded; and therefore as long as we live, we must not forsake the Levites. The reason given, (v. 12.) is because the Levite has no part nor inheritance with you; so that he cannot grow rich by husbandry or trade; let him therefore share with you in the common abundance of your house. They must give the Levites their tithes and offerings, settled on them by the law, because they have no other maintenance.

V. They are allowed to eat common flesh, but not the flesh of their offerings, in their own houses wherever they dwell. What was any way devoted to God, they must not eat at home, v. 13, 17. But what was not so devoted, they might kill and eat of, at their pleasure, v. 15. And their permission is again repeated, v. 20-22. It should seem that while they were in the wilderness, they did not eat the flesh of any of those kind of beasts that were used in sacrifice, but what was killed at the door of the tabernacle, and part of it presented to God as a peace-offering, Lev. 17. 3, 4. But when they came to Canaan, where they must live at a great distance from the tabernacle, they might kill what they pleased for their own use, of their flocks and herds, without bringing part to the altar. This allowance is very express, and repeated, lest Satan should take occasion from the law which forbade the eating of their sacrifices at their own houses, to suggest to them, as he did to our first parents, hard thoughts of God, as if he grudged them the enjoyment of what he had given them; There must eat our bread of the monstrosities. There is no natural and regular appetite, which it is lawful to gratify with temperance and sobriety, not taking too great a pleasure in the gratification, nor being uneasy if it be crossed. The unclean, who might not eat of the holy things, yet might eat of the same sort of flesh, when it was only used as common food. The distinction between clean persons and unclean was sacred, and designed for the preserving of the holy feasts, and therefore must not be brought into their ordinary meals.

This permission has a double restriction. 1. They must eat according to the blessing which God had given them, v. 15. Note, It is not only our wisdom, but our duty, to live according to our estates, and not to spend above what we have. As it is unjust on the one hand to hoard what should be spent, so it is much more unjust, and to spend more than we have. What is not our own, must needs be another's. who is thereby robbed and defrauded. And this, I say, is much more unjust, because it is easier afterward to distribute what has been medically spared, and so to make a sort of restitution for the wrong, than it is to repay to wife, and children, and creditors, what has been unduly spent. Between these two extremes let wisdom find the mean, and then let watchfulness and resolution keep it.

2. They must not eat blood; (v. 16. and again, v. 23.) Only be sure that thou eat not the blood; (v. 24.) Thou shalt not eat it; and, (v. 23.) Thou shalt not eat it, that it may go well with thee. When they could not bring the blood to the altar, to pour it out there before the Lord, as belonging to him, they must pour it out upon the earth, as not belonging to them, because it was the life, and therefore, as an acknowledgment, belonged to him who gives life, and as an atonement, belonged to him to whom life is forfeited. Bishop Patrick thinks one reason why they were forbidden thus strictly the eating of blood, was, to prevent the superstitions of the old idolators about the blood of their sacrifices, which was considered as a great privilege. There is an uncommon instruction of which they imagined that they had communion with them.

VI. They are forbidden to keep up either their own corrupt usages in the wilderness, or the corrupt usages of their predecessors in the land of Canaan. 1. They must not keep up those improper customs which they had got into in the wilderness, and which were connived at in consideration of the present unsetteness of their condition. (v. 8.) Ye shall not do after all the things that we do here this day. Never was there a better governor than Moses, and one would think never a better opportunity of keeping up good order and discipline than now among the people of Israel, when they lay so closely encamped under the eye of their governor; and yet it seems there was much amiss, and that many irregularities had crept in among them. We must not suffer expect to be seen in publicly in any conspicuous right, and as it should be, till we come to the heavenly Canaan. They had sacrifices, and religious worship, courts of justice and civil government, and by the stoning of the man that gathered sticks on the sabbath day, it appears that there was great strictness in guarding the most weighty matters of the law; but being frequently upon the remove, and in journeys at a distance; (1.) They must observe the solemn feasts, and the rights of cleaning, with the exactness that the law required. And, (2.) Those among them that were disposed to do amiss, had opportunity given them to do it unobserved, by the frequent interruptions which their removals gave to the administration of justice. But (says Moses) when you come to Canaan, ye shall not do as we do here. Note, When the people of God are content with settled conditions, that may be tolerated and dispensed with, which would by no means be allowed at another time. Cases of necessity are to be considered while the necessity continues; but that must not be done in Canaan, which was indulged in the wilderness. While a house is in the building a great deal of dirt and rubbish is suffered to lie by it, which must all be taken away when the house is built. Moses was now about to lay down his government, and he cannot but foresee that he who is to succeed him would have it for his comfort to foresee that Israel would be better in the next reign than they had been in his. 2. They must not worship the Lord by any of those rites or ceremonies which the nations of Canaan had made use of in the service of their gods, v. 29. 32. They must not so much as inquire into the modes and forms of idolatrous worship. What good would it do them to know the depths of idolatry? (v. 2) Because it would be absurd to make those their pattern, whom God had made their slaves and captives, cut off, and destroyed from before them. The Canaanites had not flourished and prospered so much in the service of their gods, as that the Israelites should be invited to take up their customs. Those are wretchedly besotted indeed, who will walk in the way of sinners, after they have seen their end.

(2.) Because some of their customs were most barbarous and inhuman, and such as trampled, not only upon the light and law of nature, but upon natural affection itself, as burning their sons and their daughters in the fire to their gods, (v. 31.) the very mention of which is sufficient to make it odious, and possess us with a horror of it. (3.) Because their idolatrous customs were an abomination to the Lord, and the translating of them into his worship, would make even that an abomination, and an affront to him, by which they should give him no honour, and by which he would not obtain his favour. The case is bad indeed, when the sacrifice itself is become an abomination, Prov. 15. 8. He therefore concludes, (v. 32.) with the same caution concerning the worship of God, which he had before given concerning the word of God, (ch. 4. 2.) "Ye shall not add thereto any inventions of your own, under pretence of making the ordinance either more significant or more magnificent; nor diminish from it, under pretence of making it more easy and practicable, or of setting aside that which may be spared; but observe to do all that, and that only, which God has commanded." We may then hope in our religious worship to obtain the divine acceptance, when we observe the divine appointment. God will have his own work done in his own way.

CHAP. XIII.

Moses is still upon that necessary subject, concerning the peril of idolatry. In the close of the foregoing chapter, he had cautioned them against the peril that might arise from their predecessors the Canaanites. In this chapter, he cautions them against the rise of idolatry from among themselves; they must take heed lest any should draw them to idolatry, I. By the presence of prophecy, v. 1... 5. By the presence of friendship and relations, v. 6... 11. III. By the presence of numbers, v. 12... 18. But in all these cases the temptation must be resolutely resisted, and the tempters punished and cut off.

1. If there arise among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a sign or a wonder, 2. And the sign or the wonder come to pass whereby he speaketh unto thee, saying, Let us go after other gods, which thou hast not known, and let us serve them; 3. Thou shalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams: for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether you love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul. 4. Ye shall walk after the Lord your God, and fear him, and keep his commandments, and obey his voice, and ye shall serve him, and cleave unto him. 5. And that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, shall be put to death: because he hath spoken to turn you away from the Lord your God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed you out of the house of bondage, to thrust thee out of the way which the Lord thy God commanded thee to walk in: So shalt thou put the evil away from the midst of thee.

1. A very strange supposition, v. 1, 2. (1.) It is strange that there should arise any among themselves, especially any pretending to vision and prophecy, who should move them to go and serve other gods. Was it possible that any who had so much knowledge of the methods of divine revelation, as to be able to persuade a prophet, should yet have so little knowledge of the law of nature, and will, and as to go himself, and entice his neighbours after other gods? Could an Israelite ever be guilty of such impurity? Could a man of sense ever be guilty of such absurdity? We see it in our own day, and therefore may think it the less strange; multitudes that profess both learning and religion, yet exciting both themselves and others, not only to worship God by images, but to give divine honour to saints and angels, which is no better than giving after other gods to serve them; such is the power of strong delusions. (2.) It is yet more strange that the sign or wonder given for the confirmation of this false doctrine, should come to pass. Can it be thought that God himself should give any countenance to such a vile motion? Did ever a false prophet work a true miracle? It is only supposed here, for two reasons; [1.] To strengthen the caution here given against hearkening to such a one. "Though it were possible that he should work a true miracle, yet you must not believe him if he tells you, you must serve other gods, for the divine law against that is certainly perpetual and unalterable." The supposition is like that, (Gal. 1. 8.) If we, or an angel from heaven, preach any other gospel to you; which does not prove it possible that an angel should preach another gospel, but strongly increases the absurdity of the thing which we have received. So here, [2.] It is to fortify them against the danger of impostures, and lying wonders, (2 Thess. 2. 9.) "Suppose the credentia he produces, be so artily counterfeited, that you cannot discern the cheat, nor disprove them, yet if they are intended to draw you to the service of other gods, that alone is sufficient to disprove them; provided you can make it appear clear a truth as that of the Unity of the Godhead, so plain a law as that of worshipping the one only living and true God." We cannot suppose that the God of truth should set his seal of miracles to a lie, to so gross a lie as is supposed, in that temptation, Let us go after other Gods. But if it be asked, Why is this false prophet permitted to counterfeit this broad seal? It is answered here, (v. 3.) "The Lord your God proveth you, to know whether you love the Lord your God with all your heart and with all your soul." This proveth them, that of the two, religious learning and corrupt schemes, should not be set upon by such a temptation, to try your constancy, that both they that are perfect, and they that are false and corrupt, may be made manifest. It is to prove you; therefore see that you acquit yourselves in the trial, and stand your ground.

2. Here is a very necessary charge given in this case; (1.) Not to yield to the temptation, (v. 3.) "Thou shalt not hearken to the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams; for the Lord thy God commandeth thee to walk in the way of the Lord thy God, which brought you out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed you out of the house of bondage, to thrust thee out of the way which the Lord thy God commanded thee to walk in: So shalt thou put the evil away from the midst of thee." and to prevent his doing further mischief. This is called putting away the evil. There is no way of removing the guilt but by removing the guilty; if such a criminal be not punished, they that should do it, make themselves responsible. And thus the mischief must be put away; the infection must be kept from spreading, by cutting off the gangrened limb, and putting away the mischief-makers. Such dangerous diseases as these must be taken in time.

6. If thy brother, the son of thy mother, or thy son, or thy daughter, or the wife of thy bosom, or thy friend, which is as thine own soul, entice thee secretly, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which thou hast not known, thou, nor thy fathers: 7. Namely, of the gods of the people which are round about you, nigh unto thee, or far off from thee, from the one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth; 8. Thou shalt not consent unto him, nor hearken unto him; neither shall thine eye pity him, neither shalt thou spare, neither shalt thou conceal him; 9. But thou shalt surely kill him; thine hand shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterwards the hand of all the people. 10. And thou shalt stone him with stones, that he die; because he hath sought to thrust thee away from the Lord thy God, which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage. 11. And all Israel shall hear, and fear, and shall do no more any such wickedness as this is among you.

Further provision is made by this branch of the statute, against receiving the infection of idolatry from those that are near and dear to us.

1. It is the policy of the tempter to send his solicitations by the hand of those whom we love, whom we least suspect of any ill design upon us, and whom we are desirous to please, and apt to conform ourselves to. The enticement here is supposed to come from a brother or child that are near by nature; from a wife or friend that are near by choice; and are to us as our own souls, v. 6. Satan tempted Adam by Eve, and Christ by Peter. We are therefore concerned to stand upon our guard against a bad proposal, when the person that proposes it, can pretend to an interest in us; that we may never sin against God in compliment to the best friend we have in the world. The temptation is supposed to be private; he will entice thee secretly, implying that idolatry is a work of darkness, which dreads the light, and covets to be concealed; and which the sinner promises himself, and the tempter promises him, secrecy and security in. Concerning the false gods proposed to be served, (1.) The tempter suggests, that the worshipping of these gods was the common practice of the world; and if they limited their adorations to an invisible Deity, they were singular, and like nobody, for these gods were the gods of the people round about them, and indeed of all the nations of the earth, v. 7. This suggestion draws many away from religion and godliness, that it is an unfashionable thing; and they make their court to the world and the flesh, because these are the gods of the people that are round about them. (2.) Moses suggests, in opposition to this, that it had not been the practice of their ancestors; they are gods which thou hast not known, thou nor thy fathers. These that are born of godly parents, and have been educated in pious exercises when they are enticed to a vain, loose, careless way of living, should remember that there are ways which they have not known, they nor their fathers. And will they thus degenerate?

2. It is our duty to prefer God and religion before the best friends we have in the world. (1.) We must not, in complaisance to our friends, break God's law, (v. 8.) Thou shalt not consent to him, nor go with him to his idolatrous worship, nor for curiosity, or gain any better interest in his affections. It is a general rule, If sinners entice thee, consent thou not, Prov. 1. 10. (2.) We must not, in compassion to our friends, obstruct the course of God's justice. He that offers such a thing, must not only be looked upon as an enemy, or dangerous person, whom one should be afraid of, and swear the peace against, but as a cunning traitor, whom, in zeal for our sovereign Lord, his crown and dignity, we are bound to inform against, and cannot conceal without incurring the guilt of a great misprision; (v. 9.) Thou shalt surely kill him. By this law the persons enticed were bound to prosecute the seder, and to give evidence against him before the proper judges, that he might suffer the penalty of the law, and that without delay, which the Jews say is here intended in the Hebrew, killing thou shalt kill him: neither the execution must be deferred; and he that was first in the former, must be first in the latter, to show that he stood to his testimony, Thy hand shall be first upon him; to mark him out as an anaethem, and the hands of all the people, to put him away as an accursed thing. The death he must die was that which was looked upon among the Jews as the severest of all others. He must be stoned; and his accusation written is, that he has sought to thrust thee away, by a kind of violence, from the Lord thy God, v. 10. Those are certainly our worst enemies, that would thrust us from God our best Friend; and whatever draws us to sin, separates between us and God, it is a design upon our life, and to be resented accordingly. And, lastly, here is the good effect of this necessary execution, (v. 11.) All Israel shall hear and fear; and so to prevent their repetition. And it is to be hoped they will hear and fear, and by the severity of the punishment, especially when it is at the prosecution of a father, a brother, or a friend, will be made to conceive a horror of the sin, as exceedingly sinful, and to be afraid of incurring the like punishment themselves. The crime is so heinous, that sins presumptuous, and the simple that is in danger of sinning carelessly, will beware.

12. If thou shalt hear say in one of thy cities, which the Lord thy God hath given thee to dwell there, saying, Certain men, the children of Belial, are gone out from among you, and have withdrawn the inhabitants of their city, saying, Let us go and serve other gods, which ye have not known; 14. Then shalt thou inquire, and make search, and ask diligently; and, behold, if it be truth, and the thing certain, that such abomination is wrought among you; 15. Thou shalt surely smite the inhabitants of that city with the edge of the sword, destroying it utterly, and all that is therein, and the cattle thereof, with the edge of the sword. 16. And thou shalt gather all the spoil of it into the midst of the street thereof, and shalt burn with fire the city, and all the spoil thereof every whith, for the Lord thy God: and it shall be a heap for ever; it shall not be built again.

17. And there shall cleave naught of the cursed thing to thine hand; that the Lord may turn from the fierceness of his anger, and show thee mercy, and have compassion upon thee, and multiply thee, as he hath sworn unto thy fathers; 18. When thou shalt hearken to the voice of the Lord thy God, to keep all his commandments which I command thee this day, to do that which is right in the eyes of the Lord thy God.

Here the case is put of a city revolting from its allegiance to the God of Israel, and setting other gods.

I. The crime is supposed to be committed, 1. By one of the cities of Israel, that lay within the jurisdiction of their courts; the church then judged them only that were within, 1 Cor. 5. 12, 13. And even when they were ordered to preserve their religion in the first principles of it, by fire and sword, yet the city was not put to death, but only a sword to furthage it. They that are born within the allegiance of a prince, if they take arms against him, are dealt with as traitors, but foreign invaders are not so. The city that is here become idolatrous, is supposed formerly to have worshipped the true God, but now to be withdrawn to other gods; which intimates how great the crime is, and how severe the punishment will be, of those that, after they have known the way of right, and the path of truth, turn and go back to that which would deliver no yoke, so it signifies; that neither fear God nor regard man, but shake off all restraints of law and conscience, and are perfectly lost to all manner of virtue; these are they that say, Let us serve other gods, that will not only allow, but will countenance and encourage, our impieties. Belial is put for the Devil, 2 Cor. 6. 15.) and the children of Belial, men that would endure no yoke, so it signifies; that neither fear God nor regard man, but shake off all restraints of law and conscience, and are perfectly lost to all manner of virtue; these are they that say, Let us serve other gods, that will not only allow, but will countenance and encourage, our impieties.

II. The cause is ordered to be tried with a great deal of care, (v. 14.) Thou shalt inquire and make search. They must not proceed upon common fume, or take the information by hearsay, but must examine the proofs, and not give judgment against them unless the evidence was clear, and the charge fully made out. God himself, before he destroyed Sodom, is said to come down and see whether its crimes were according to the climax, Gen. 18. 21. Injudicial processes it is requisite that time, and care, and pains, be taken to find out the truth, and that search be made without any passion, prejudice, or partiality. The Jewish writers say, that through particular persons who were idolaters, might be judged by the inferior courts, the death of a city must be tried by the great Sanhedrim; and if it appear that they are thrust away to idolatry, they send two learned men to them to admonish and reduce them. If they repent, all is well; if not, then all Israel must go up to war against them, to testify their induction against idolatry, and to stop the spreading of the contagion.

III. If the crime were proved, and the criminals were incorrigible, the city was to be wholly destroyed. If there were a few righteous men in it, no doubt, they would remove themselves and their families out of such a dangerous place, and then all the inhabitants, men, women, and children, must be put to the sword, (v. 15.) all the spoil of the city, both silver and gold. Such as live is to be brought into the market-place and burned, and the city itself must be laid in ashes and never built again, v. 16. The soldiers are forbidden, upon pain of death, to convert any of the plunder to their own use, v. 17. It was a devoted thing, and dangerous to meddle with it, as we find in the case of Achan. Now, 1. God enjoins this severity, to show what a jealous God he is in the matters of his worship, and how great a crime it is to serve other gods. Let men know that God will not give his glory to another, nor his praise to graven images. 2. He expects that magistrates, having their honour and power from him, should be concerned for his honour, and use their power for terror to evil doers, else they bear the sword in vain. 3. The faithful worshippers of the true God must take all occasions to show their just indignation against idolatry, much more against atheism, infidelity, and irreligion. It is here intimated that the best expedient for the turning away of God's anger from a land, is to execute justice upon the wicked of the land, (v. 17.) that the Lord may turn from the fierceness of his anger, which was ready to break out against the whole nation, for the wickedness of that one apostate city. It is probable that it is not the actual wickedness out of their land, God would destroy them. They might think it impolitic, and against the interest of their nation, to ruin a whole city, for a crime relating purely to religion, and that they should be more sparing of the blood of Israelites: Fear not that, (says Moses,) God will multiply you the more; the body of your nation will lose nothing by the letting out of this corrupt pest. Lord, if thou wilt, put them in execution by abundant judges in all the history of the Jewish church, (Gibeath was destroyed, not for idolatry, but immorality,) yet for the neglect of the execution of it upon the inferior cities that served idols. God himself, by the army of the Chaldeans, put it in execution upon Jerusalem the head city, which, for its apostasy from God, was utterly destroyed and laid waste, and lay in ruins seventy years. Though idolaters may escape punishment from men, (nor is this law in the letter of it binding now, under the gospel,) yet the Lord our God will not suffer them to escape his righteous judgments. The New Testament speaks of communion with idolaters, as a sin which, above any other, provokes the Lord to jealousy, and dares him as if we were stronger than he 1 Cor. 10. 21, 22.

CHAP. XIV.

Moses, in this chapter, teaches them, 1. To distinguish themselves from their neighbors by a singularity, that is, by their mourning. 1, 2. In the manner, 1. 1. 2. To devote themselves unto God, and, in token of that, to give him his dues out of their estates, the yearly tithes, and that, every third year, for the maintenance of their religious feasts, the Levites, and the poor, v. 22—29.

1. Ye are the children of the Lord your God; ye shall not cut yourselves, nor make any baldness between your eyes for the dead: 2. For thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God, and the Lord hath chosen thee to be a peculiar people unto himself, above all the nations that are upon the earth. 3. Thou shalt not eat any abominable thing. 4. These are the beasts which ye shall eat; the ox, the sheep, and the goat, 5. The hart, and the roebuck, and the fallow-deer, and the wild goat, and the pygarg, and the wild ox, and the cha-mois. 6. And every beast that parteth the hoof, and cleaveth the cleft into two claws, and cheweth the cud among the beasts, that ye shall eat. 7. Nevertheless these ye shall not eat of them that chew the cud, or of them that divide the cloven hoof; as the camel, and the hare, and the coney: for they chew the cud, but divide not the hoof: therefore they are unclean unto you. 8. And the swine, because it divideth the hoof, yet cheweth not the cud, it is unclean unto you: ye shall not eat of their flesh, nor touch their dead carcasse. 9. These ye shall eat of all that are in the waters: all that have fins and scales shall ye eat: 10. And whatsoever hath not fins and scales ye may not eat; it is unclean unto you. 11. Of all clean birds ye shall eat. 12. But these are they of which ye shall not eat: the eagle, and the ossifrage, and the ospray, 13. And the gleda, and the kite, and the vulture after his kind, 14. And every raven after his kind, 15. And the owl, and the night-hawk, and the cuckoo, and the hawk after his kind, 16. The little owl, and the great owl, and the swan, 17. And the pelican, and the gier-eagle, and the cormorant, 18. And the stork, and the heron after her kind, and the lapwing, and the bat. 19. And every creeping thing that believeth is unclean unto you: they shall not be eaten. 20. But of all clean fowls ye may eat. 21. Ye shall not eat of any thing that dieth of itself: thou shalt give it unto the stranger that is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it unto an alien: for thou art a holy people unto the Lord thy God. Thou shalt not seethe a kid in his mother's milk.

Moses here tells the people of Israel,

I. How God had dignified them, as a peculiar people, with three distinguishing privileges which were their honour, and figures of those spiritual blessings in heavenly things, with which God has in Christ blessed us. 1. Here is election, the Lord hath chosen thee, v. 2. Not for their own merit, or for any good works of theirs, but because he would magnify the riches of his power and grace among them. He did not choose them because they were by their own dedication and subjection a peculiar people to him above other nations, but he chose them that they might be so by his grace; and thus were blessed and chosen, Eph. 1. 4. 2. Here is adoption, (v. 1.) Ye are the children of the Lord your God, formed by him into a people, owned by him as his people, nay, his family, a people near unto him, nearer than any other. Israel is my son, my first born; not because he needed children, but because they were orphans and needed a father. Every Israelite is indeed a child of God, a partaker of his nature and favour, his love and blessing; Behold, what manner of love the Father hath bestowed upon us. This is sanctification, (v. 2.) Thou art a holy people; separated and set apart for God, devoted to his service, designed for his praise, governed by a holy law, graced by a holy tabernacle, and the holy ordinances relating to it. God's people are obliged to be holy, and if they are holy, are indebted to the grace of God that makes them so. The Lord has set them apart for himself, and qualified them for his service and the enjoyment of him, and so has made them holy to himself.

II. How they ought to distinguish themselves by a sober singularity from all the nations that were about them. And God having thus advanced them, let not them debase themselves by admitting the superstitious customs of idolaters, and, by making themselves like them, put themselves upon the level with them. Be ye the children of the Lord your God; so the Seventy read it, as a command, that is, Carry yourselves as become the children of God, and do nothing to disgrace the honour, and forfeit the privileges, of the relation.

In two things particularly they must distinguish themselves: 1. In their mourning. Ye shall not cut yourselves, v. 1. This forbids, (as some think,) not only their cutting themselves at their funerals, either to express their grief or otherwise, but their worshipping the infernal deities, and their devoting themselves to them, above all, to worship the Lord, as parts of the children of God, and do nothing to disgrace the honour, and forfeit the privileges, of the relation.

This is the intention of those commands which oblige us to deny ourselves; the true meaning of them, if we understood them right, would appear to be, Do yourselves no harm. And this also is the reason why we are warned to be careful to remove from us, to remove from us those things by which we are in danger of doing ourselves harm. Knives are taken from us, lest we cut ourselves. That they are dedicated to God, as a holy people, must do nothing to disfigure themselves; the body is for the Lord, and is to be used accordingly.

(2.) They are forbidden to deform or hurt their own bodies upon any account. Methinks this is like a parent's charge to his little children, that are foolish, careless, and willful, and are apt to play with knives, Children, ye shall not cut yourselves.

1 Thess. 4. 13. It is an excellent passage which Mr. Ainsworth here quotes from one of the Jewish writers, who understands it as a judgment on our sins, and a direction for the conduct of our relations. If your father (for instance) die, you shall not cut yourselves, that is, you shall not sorrow more than is meet, for you are not fatherless, you have a Father, who is great, living, and permanent, even the holy blessed God, whose children ye are, v. 1. But an infidel, (says he,) when his father dies, hath no father that can help him in time of need; for he hath said to a stock, Thou art my father, and to a stone, Thou hast brought me forth.
(Jer. 2. 27.) therefore he weeps, cuts himself, and makes him bald. We that have a God to hope in, and a heaven to hope for, must bear with our troubles with that hope under every burden of this kind.

2. They must be singular in their meat. Many sorts of flesh, which were wholesome enough, and which other people did commonly eat, they must religiously abstain from, as unclean. Th's law we had before, (Lev. 11. 2.) where it was largely opened. It seems plainly, by the connexion here, to be intended to distinguish by their own laws of that which would cause them to be taken notice of in all mixed companies as a separate people, and which would preserve them from mingling themselves with, and conforming themselves to, their idolatrous neighbours.

(1.) Concerning beasts, here is a more particular enumeration of those which they were allowed to eat, than was in Leviticus, to show that they had no reason to complain of their being liable to eat swine's flesh, and hares, and rabbits, (which were all that were then forbidden, but are now commonly used,) when they were allowed so great a variety, not only of that which we call butcher's meat, (v. 4.) which alone was offered in sacrifice, but of venison, which they had great plenty of in Canaan, the hart, and the roebuck, and the fallow- deer, (v. 5.) which never before was offered upon their altar, was allowed them at their own table. See ch. 12. 22. When of all these (as Adam of every tree of the garden) they might freely eat, those were inex- ces- sable, who, to gratify a perverse appetite, or (as should seem) in honour of their idols, and in partici- pation of their idolatrous sacrifices, ate swine's flesh, and made broth of abominable things (made so by this law) in their vessels, Isa. 65. 4.

(2.) Concerning fowl, there is only one general rule given, that whatsoever had not fins and scales, (as shell-fish and eels, beside leeches and other ani- mals in the water that are not proper food,) was unclean and forbidden, v. 9, 10.

(3.) No general rule is given concerning fowl, but those are particularly mentioned that were to be unclean to them, and there are few or none of them which are here forbidden, that are not so commonly, or expressa- lly, forbidden, is allowed,v. 11. . . . 20. Of all clean fowls you may eat.

They are further forbidden, [1.] To eat the flesh of any creature that died of itself, because the blood was not separated from it, and beside the ceremoni- al uncleanness which it lay under, (from Lev. 11. 39.) it is not wholesome food, nor ordinarily used among us, except by the poor. [2.] To see the kid in its mother's milk, either to gratify their own luxury, supposing it a delicacy bit, or in conformity to some superstitious custom of the heathen. The Chaldee paraphrases read it, Thou shalt not eat flesh-meat and milk-meat together. And so it would forbid the use of butter, as sauce to any flesh. Now as to all these precepts concerning their food, First, It is plain in the law itself, that they belonged only to the Jews, and were not moral, nor of perpetual use, because not of universal extraction from what they might not eat themselves, they might give to a stranger, a proselyte of the gate, that had ren- ounced idolatry, and therefore was permitted to live among them, though not circumcised; or, they might sell to an alien, a mere Gentile, that came in to their country for trade, but might not settle in it, v. 21. They might feed upon that which an Israel- ite might not touch; which is a plain instance of the [2.] Conclusiveness, and, their being only people. Secondly, It is plain in the gospel, that they are now antiquated and repealed. For every creature of God is good, and nothing now to be refused, or called common and unclean, 1 Tim. 4. 4.

22. Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed, that the field bringeth forth year by year. 23. And thou shalt eat before the Lord thy God, in the place which he shall choose to place his name there, the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the firstlings of thy herds, and of thy flocks; that thou mayest learn to fear the Lord thy God always. 24. And if the way be too long for thee, so that thou art not able to carry it; or if the place be too far from thee, which the Lord thy God shall choose to set his name there, when the Lord thy God hath blessed thee; 25. Then shalt thou turn it into money, and bind up the money in thine hand, and shalt go unto the place which the Lord thy God shall choose:

26. And thou shalt bestow that money for whatsoever thy soul lusteth after, for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink, or for whatsoever thy soul desireth: and thou shalt eat there before the Lord thy God, and thou shalt rejoice, thou, and thine household. 27. And the Levite that is within thy gates; thou shalt not forsake him; for he hath no part nor inheritance with thee.

28. At the end of three years thou shalt bring forth all the title of thine increase the same year; and shalt lay it up within thy gates: 29. And the Levite, (because he hath no part nor inheritance with thee,) and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, which are within thy gates, shall come, and shall eat and be satisfied; that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hand which thou doest.

We have here a part of the statute concerning tithes. The productions of the ground were twice tithe'd, so that, putting both together, a fifth part was devoted to God out of their increase, and only four parts of five were for their own common use; and they could not but own they paid an easy rent, especially since God's part was disposed of to their own benefit and advantage. The first tithe was for the maintenance of their Levites, who taught them the good knowledge of God, and ministered to them in holy things; this is supposed, as anciently due, and is entailed upon the Levites as an inheritance, by that law, Numb. 18. 24, &c. But it is the second title that is here spoken of, which was to be taken out of the remainder, when the Levites had had their's.

I. They are here charged to separate it, and set it apart for God; (v. 22.) Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy seed. The Levites took one tithe of their own, but the separating of this was left to the owners themselves, the law encouraging them to be honest, by reposing a confidence in them, and so trying their fear of God. They are bid to tithe truly, that is, to be sure to do it, and to do it faithfully, and carefully, that God's part might not be diminished either with design or by oversight. Note, We must be sure to give God his full dues out of our estates: for being but stewards of them, it is required that we be faithful, as those that must give account.

II. They are here directed how to dispose of it, when they had separated it. Let every man lay by as God prospers him and gives him success, and then let him lay out in pious uses as God gives him opportunity; and it will be easier to lay out, and the proportion will be more satisfying, when first we have laid by. This second tithe may be disposed of, 1. In works of piety, for the first two years after the year of release, i.e., to bring it up, either in kind, or the full value of it, to the place of the sanctuary, and there must spend it in holy feasting before the Lord. If they could do it with any convenience, they must bring it in kind; (v. 23.) but if not, they might turn it into money, (v. 24., 25.) and that money must be laid out in something to feast upon before the Lord. The comfortable cheerful using of what God has given us, with a hearty, and pious, religious course of action, is really nothing more than the best and nearest giving of God with it. Contentment, holy joy, and thankfulness, make every meal a religious feast. The end of this law we have, (v. 23.) That thou mayest learn to fear the Lord thy God always; it was to keep them right and firm to their religion, (1.) By acquainting them with the sanctuary, the holy things, and the solemn services that were there performed; what they read the appointment of, and what they saw. Secondly, we see the observance of it in the tabernacle; it would make a deeper impression upon them, which would keep them out of the snares of the idolatrous customs. Note, It will have a good influence upon our constancy in religion, never to forsake the assembling of ourselves together, Heb. 10. 25. By the comfort of the communion of saints, we may be kept to our communion with God. (2.) By using the meanest and poorest provision for the service of religion. Let them rejoice before the Lord, that they may learn to fear him always. The more pleasure we find in the ways of religion, the more likely we shall be to persevere in those ways. One thing they must remember in their pious entertainments, that is, to bid their Levites welcome to them. Thou shalt not forsake the Levite, (v. 27.) 4. Every third year this tithe must be disposed of at home in works of charity, v. 28., 29. Lay it up within thy own gates, and let it be given to the poor, who, knowing the provision this law had made for them, no doubt, would come to seek it; and that they might make the poor familiar to them, and not disdain their company, they are here directed to welcome them to their houses. “He that loveth not righteousness,” saith the Lord, “hath not lovingkindness.” In this charitable distribution of the second tithe, they must have an eye to the poor ministers, and add to their encouragement by entertaining them; next, to poor strangers, not only for the supply of their necessities, but to put a respect upon them, and so to invite them to turn proselytes; and next, to the fatherless and widow, who, though perhaps they might have a competent maintenance in their own proper persons, yet should be left, that they might live so plentifully and comfortably as they had done in months past, and therefore they were to countenance them, and help to make them easy by inviting them to this entertainment. God has a particular care for widows and fatherless, and he requires that we should have the same. It is his honour, and will be our’s, to help the helpless. And if we thus serve God, and do good with what we have, it is declared that the Lord our God will bless us in all the work of our hand. Note, (1.) The blessing of God is all in all to our outward prosperity; and without that blessing, the work of our hands which we do, will bring nothing to pass. (2.) The way to obtain that blessing is to be diligent and charitable. The blessing descends upon the working hand; “Expect not that God should bless thee in thy idleness and love of ease, but in all the work of thy hand.” It is the hand of the diligent, with the blessing of God upon it, that makes rich, Prov. 10. 4, 22. And it descends upon the giving hand; he that thus scatters, certainly increases, and the liberal soul will be made fat. It is an undoubted truth, though little believed, that to be charitable to the poor, and to be free and generous in the support of religion, and any good work, is the surest and safest way of thriving. What is lent to the Lord, will be repaid with abundant interest, Ezek. 44. 30.

CHAP. XV.

In this chapter, Moses gives orders, I. Concerning the release of debts, every seventh year, (v. 1., 6.) with a caution that there be no hindrance to charitable lending, v. 7., 8. II. Concerning the release of servants after seven years’ service, v. 12., 13. III. Concerning the sanctification of the firstlings of cattle to God, v. 19., 25.

1. At the end of every seven years thou shalt make a release. 2. And this is the manner of the release: Every creditor that lendeth ought unto his neighbour shall release it; he shall not exact it of his neighbour, or of his brother; because it is called the Lord’s release. 3. Of a foreigner thou mayest exact it again: but that which is thine with thy brother, thine hand shall release; 4. Save when there shall be no poor among you; for the Lord shall greatly bless thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it: 5. Only if thou carefully hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe to do all these commandments which I command thee this day. 6. For the Lord thy God blesseth thee, as he promised thee: and thou shalt lend unto many nations, but thou shalt not borrow; and thou shalt reign over many nations, but they shall not reign over thee. 7. If there be among you a poor man of one of thy brethren within any of thy gates, in thy land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not harden thy heart, nor shut thine hand from thy poor brother; 8. But thou shalt open thine hand wide unto him, and shalt surely lend him sufficient for his need, in that which he wanteth. 9. Beware that there be not a thought in thy wicked heart, saying, The seventh year, the year of release, is at hand; and thine eye be evil against thy poor brother, and thou givest him naught; and he cry unto the Lord against thee, and it be sin unto thee. 10. Thou shalt surely give him, and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest unto him: because that for this thing the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy works, and in all that thou puttest thine hand unto. 11. For the poor shall never cease out of the land: therefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt open thine hand wide unto thy brother, to thy poor, and to thy needy, in the land. Here is, I. A law for the relief of poor debtors, such (we may suppose) as were insolvent. Every seventh year was a year of release, in which the ground rested from being tilled, and servants were discharged from their services; and among other acts of grace, this was one, that they who had borrowed money, and had not been able to pay it before, should this year be released from it; and though, if they were able, they were to take the release of the debt for ever; and that seems more probable; yet under certain limitations expressed or implied. It is supposed that the debtor was an Israelite; and that he was poor, (v. 4.) that he did not borrow for trade or purchase, but for the subsistence of his family; and that now he could not pay it without reducing himself to poverty, and comfort his necessities. In the countries, which might be his temptation to revolt from God. The law is not, that the creditor shall not receive the debt, if the debtor, or his friends for him, can pay it; but he shall not exact it by a legal process. The reasons of this law are, 1. To put an honour upon the sabbatical year, because it is called the Lord's release, v. 2. That was God's year for their land, and as the weekly sabbath was God's day for themselves, their servants and cattle; and us by the resting of the ground, so by the release of their debts, God would teach them to depend upon his providence. This year of release typified the grace of the gospel, in which is proclaimed the acceptable year of the Lord, and by which we obtain the release of our debts, that is, the pardon of our sins, and we are taught to forgive injuries, as we are and hope to be forgiven of God. 2. It was to prevent the falling of any Israelite into extreme poverty; so the margin reads, v. 4. To the end there shall be no poor among you, none miserably and scandalously poor, to the reproach of their nation and religion, the reputation of which they ought to preserve. 3. God's security is here given by a divine promise, that whatever they lost by their poor debtors, it should be made up to them in the blessing of God only. We should take care to do their duty, and then God would bless them with such great remission, that they might lose by bad debts, if they generously remitted them, should not be missed out of their stock at the year's end. Not only, the Lord shall bless thee, (v. 4.) but, he doth bless thee, v. 6. It is altogether inexcusable, if, though God has given us abundance, and have not only enough, but to spare, we are rigid and unkind, and keep from our poor brethren; for our abundance should be the supply of their wants, that at least there may not be such an inequality as is between two extremes, 2 Cor. 8. 14. They must also consider that their land was God's gift to them, that all their increase was the fruit of God's blessing upon them, and therefore that they were bound in duty to him to increase all the good he had bestowed on them, and direct them. And, Lastly, If they should remit what little sums they had lent to their poor brethren, it is promised that they should be able to lend great sums to their rich neighbours, even to many nations, (v. 6.) and should be enriched by those loans. Thus the nations should become subject to them, and dependent upon them, as the borrower is servant to the lender, Prov. 22. 7. To be able to lend, and not to have need to borrow, we must look upon as a great mercy, and a good reason why we should do good with what we have, lest we provoke God to turn the scales.

II. Here is a law in favour of poor borrowers, that they might not suffer damage by the former law. Men would be apt to argue, If the case of a man be so with his debtor, that if the debt be not paid before such a year, then it is better not to lend. No, says this branch of the statute, thou shalt not think such a thought. 1. It is taken for granted that there would be poor among them, who would have occasion to borrow, (v. 7.) and that there would never cease to be some such objects of charity, (v. 11.) The poor shall never cease out of thy land; though so such as were hard to extreme poverty, yet such as would be behind-hand, and would have occasion to borrow; of such poor he here speaks, and such we have always with us; so that a charitable disposition may soon find a charitable occasion. 2. In such a case we are here commanded to lend or give, according to our ability, or the necessity of the case. Thou shalt not harden thy heart, nor shut thy hand, v. 7. If the hand be shut, it is a sign of the heart, which is a branch of charity. If we are sometimes tempted to think, when an object of charity presents itself, we may choose whether we will give any thing or nothing; little or much; whereas it is here an express precept, (v. 11.) I command thee, not only to give, but to open thy hand wide, to lend him sufficient, v. 8. Sometimes there is as much charity in prudent lending as in giving, as it obli ges the borrower to industry and honesty, and may put him on a way of helping himself. We must sometimes tempt it, that when a object of charity presents itself, we may choose whether we will give any thing or nothing; little or much; whereas it is here an express precept, (v. 11.) I command thee, not only to give, but to open thy hand wide, to lend him sufficient, v. 8. Sometimes there is as much charity in prudent lending as in giving, as it obliges the borrower to industry and honesty, and may put him on a way of helping himself. ...ing ill to his brother; and we are sure that the judgment of God is according to truth, and that which he says is sin to us, will certainly be ruin to us, if it be not repented of.

4. Here is a command to give cheerfully, whatever we give in charity, v. 10, "Thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest. Be not loth to part with thy money on so good an account, nor think it lost; grudge not a kindness to thy brother; and disburse God's providence of God, as if thou shouldst want that thyself, which thou givest in charity; but, on the contrary, let it be a pleasure and a satisfaction of soul to thee to think that thou art honouring God with thy substance, doing good, making thy brother easy, and laying up for thyself a good security for the time to come. What thou doest, do freely, for God loves a cheerful giver." 2 Cor. 9. 7. 5. Here is a picture of a recompense in this life, For this thing the Lord thy God shall bless thee. Covetous people say, "Giving undoes us;" no, giving cheerfully in charity will enrich us, it will fill the barns with plenty, (Prov. 3. 10.) and the soul with true comfort, Isa. 58. 10, 11.

12. And if thy brother, a Hebrew man, or a Hebrew woman, be sold unto thee, and serve thee six years, then in the seventh year thou shalt let him go free from thee. 13. And when thou sendest him out free from thee, thou shalt not let him go away empty: 14. Thou shalt furnish him liberally out of thy flock, and out of thy field, and out of thy wine-press: of that wherewith the Lord thy God hath blessed thee thou shalt give unto him. 15. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee: therefore I command thee this thing to-day. 16. And it shall be, if he say unto thee, I will not go away from thee, (because he loveth thee and thine house, because he is well with thee,) 17. Then thou shalt take an awl, and thrust it through his ear unto the door, and he shall be thy servant for ever: and also unto thy maid-servant thou shalt do likewise. 18. It shall not seem hard unto thee, when thou sendest him away free from thee; for he hath been worth a double hired servant to thee, in serving thee six years: and the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all that thou doest.

1. A repetition of the law that had been given concerning Hebrew servants, who either had sold themselves for servants, or were sold by their parents through extreme poverty, or were sold by the court of judgment for some crime committed. The law was, (1.) That they should serve but six years, and in the seventh should go out free, v. 12. Compare Exod. 21. 2. And if the year of jubilee happened before he served out his time, that would be his discharge. God's Israel were a free people, and must not be compelled to perpetual servitude, thus are God's spiritual Israel called unto liberty. (2.) That if, when their six years were expired, they had no mind to go out free, but would rather continue in service, as having less care, though taking more pains, than their masters; in that case, they must lay themselves under an obligation to serve for ever, that is, for life, by having their ears bored to the door-posts, v. 16, 17. Compare Exod. 21. 6. If hereby a man disgraced himself with some, as of a mean and servile spirit, that had not a due sense of the honour and pleasure of liberty; yet, we may suppose, with others he got reputation, as of a quiet contented spirit, humble, and diligent, and loving, and not given to anger.

2. Here is an instance of this law, requiring them to put some small stock into their servants' hands to set up with for themselves, when they sent them out of their service, v. 13, 14. It was to be supposed that they had nothing of their own, and that their friends had little or nothing for them, else they would have been redeemed before they were discharged by law; they had no wages for their service, and all they got by their labour was the master's, so that their liberty would do them little good, having nothing to begin the world with, therefore they are here commanded to furnish them liberally with corn and cattle; no certain measure is prescribed, that is left to the master's generosity, who, probably, would have respect to the servant's merit and necessity; but the Jewish writers say, "He could not give less than the value of thirty shekels of silver, but at which rate he pleased." The maid-servants, though they were not to have their ears bored if they were disposed to stay, yet if they went out free, they were to have a gratuity given them; for to that those words refer, (v. 17.) Unto thy maid-servant thou shalt do likewise.

The reasons for this are taken from the law of gratitude. They must do it, (1.) In gratitude to God, who had not only brought them out of Egypt, (v. 15.) but brought them out greatly enriched with the spoils of the Egyptians. Let them not send their servants out empty, for they were not sent empty out of the house of bondage. God's tender care of us, and kindness to us, obliges us to be careful of, and kind to, those that have a dependence upon us. Thus we must render according to the benefit done unto us. (2.) In gratitude to their servants, v. 18. "Grudge not to give him a little out of thine abundance, for he has been worth a double hired servant unto thee. The days of the hireling at most were but three years, (Isa. 16. 14.) but he has served thee six years, and unlike the hired servant, without any wages." Masters and landlords ought to consider what need they have of, and what ease and advantage they have by, their servants and tenants, and should not only be kind to them, but kind to them. To these reasons it is added, as before in this chapter, (v. 4, 6, 10.) The Lord thy God shall bless thee. Then we may expect family-blessings, the springs of family-prosperity, when we make conscience of our duty to our family-relations.

19. All the firstling males that come of thy herd and of thy flock thou shalt sanctify unto the Lord thy God: thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thy bullock, nor shear the firstling of thy sheep: 20. Thou shalt eat it before the Lord thy God year by year, in the place which the Lord shall choose, thou and thy household. 21. And if there be any blemish therein, as if it be lame, or blind, or have any ill blemish, thou shalt not sacrifice it unto the Lord thy God. 22. Thou shalt eat it within thy gates: the unclean and the clean person shall eat it alike, as the roebuck, and as the

18. Thou shalt not eat the blood thereof; thou shalt pour it upon the ground as water.

Here is,

1. A repetition of the law concerning the firstlings of their cattle, that if they were males, they were to be sanctified to the Lord, (v. 19.) in remembrance of, and in thankfulness for, the sparing of the first-born of Israel, when the first-born of the Egyptians, both of man and beast, were slain by the destroying angel; (Exod. 13. 1, 15.) on the eighth day it was to be given to God, (Exod. 22. 30.) and to be divided between the priest and the altar, Num. 18. 17. 18.

2. An addition to that law, for the further explanation of it, directing them to do what with the firstlings, (1.) That were females. "Thou shalt do no work with the female firstlings of the cow, nor shear those of the sheep," (v. 19.) of the learned Bishop Patrick understands it. Though the female firstlings were not so entirely sanctified to God as the males, nor so early as at eight days old, yet they were not to be converted by the owners to their own use as their other cattle, but must be offered to God as peace-offerings, or used in a religious feast, at the year's end, v. 20. Thou shalt eat it before the Lord thy God, as directed, ch. 12. 18. (2.) But what must they do with those that were blanished, ill-blanished? v. 21. Were it male or female, it must not be brought near the sanctuary, nor used; other for sacrifice or for holy feasting, for it would not be fit to honour God with, nor to typify Christ, who is a Lamb without blanishment; yet it must not be reared, but killed and eaten at their own houses as common food; (v. 22.) only they must be sure not to eat it with the blood, v. 23. The frequent repetition of which caution intimates what need the people had of it, and what stress God laid upon it. What a mercy it is that we are not under this yoke? We are not dicted as they were; we make no difference between a first calf, or lamb, and the rest that follow: let us therefore realize the gospel-meaning of this law, devoting ourselves and the first of our time and strength to God, as a kind of first-fruits of his creatures; and using all our comforts and enjoyments to his praise, and under the direction of his law, as we have them all by his gift.

CHAP. XVI.

In this chapter, we have, I. A repetition of the laws concerning the three yearly feasts; in particular, That of the passover, v. 1-8. That of pentecost, v. 9-12. That of tabernacles, v. 12-15. And the general law concerning the people's attendance on them, v. 16, 17. II. The institution of an inferior magistracy, and general rules of justice given to those that were called into office, v. 18, 19. III. A caveat against groves and images, v. 20, 21.

1. Observe the month of Abib, and keep the passover unto the Lord thy God: for in the month of Abib the Lord thy God brought thee forth out of Egypt by night. 2. Thou shalt therefore sacrifice the passover unto the Lord thy God, of the flock and the herd, in the place which the Lord shall choose to place his name there. 3. Thou shalt eat no leavened bread with it; seven days shalt thou eat unleavened bread therewith, even the bread of affliction; (for thou camest forth out of the land of Egypt in haste;) that thy mayest remember the day when thou camest forth out of the land of Egypt all the days of thy life. 4. And there shall be no leavened bread seen with thee in all thy coasts seven days; neither shall there any thing of the flesh which thou sacrificedst the first day at even, remain all night until the morning. 5. Thou mayest not sacrifice the passover within any of the gates, which the Lord thy God giveth thee: 6. But at the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place his name in, there shalt sacrifice the passover at even, at the going down of the sun, at the season that thou camest forth out of Egypt. 7. And thou shalt roast and eat it in the place which the Lord thy God shall choose: and thou shalt turn in the morning, and go unto thy tents. 8. Six days thou shalt eat unleavened bread: and on the seventh day shall be a solemn assembly to the Lord thy God: thou shalt do no work therein. 9. Seven weeks shalt thou number unto thee: begin to number the seven weeks from such time as thou beginnest to put the sickle to the corn. 10. And thou shalt keep the feast of weeks unto the Lord thy God with a tribute of a free-will-offering of thine hand, which thou shalt give unto the Lord thy God, according as the Lord thy God hath blessed thee: 11. And thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite that is within thy gates, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are among you, in the place which the Lord thy God hath chosen to place his name there. 12. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in Egypt: and thou shalt observe and do these statutes. 13. Thou shalt observe the feast of tabernacles seven days, after that thou hast gathered in thy corn and thy wine: 14. And thou shalt rejoice in thy feast, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite, the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, that are within thy gates. 15. Seven days shalt thou keep a solemn feast unto the Lord thy God in the place which the Lord shall choose: because the Lord thy God shall bless thee in all thy increase, and in all the works of thine hands, therefore thou shalt surely rejoice. 16. Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before the Lord thy God in the place which he shall choose, in the feast of unleavened bread, and in the feast of weeks, and in the feast of tabernacles: and they shall not appear before the Lord empty: 17. Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing of the Lord thy God which he hath given thee.

Much of the communion between God and his people Israel was kept up, and a face of religion preserved in the nation, by the three yearly feasts, the institution of which, and the laws concerning them, we have several times met with already; and here they are repeated.

I. The law of the passover; so great a solemnity, that it made the whole month, in the midst of which it was placed, considerable, (v. 1.) Observe the month Abib. Though one week only of that month was to be kept as a festival, yet their preparations before must be solemn, and their reflecti'ns upon it, and improvements from it, pious, so serious, as to amount to an observation of the whole month. The month of Abib, or of new fruits, as the Chaldee translates it, answers to our March, (or part of March, and part of April,) and was by a special order from God, in remembrance of the deliverance of Israel out of Egypt, made the beginning of their year, (Exod. 12. 2.) which before was reckoned to begin in September.

Though the name be passover, the passover, in remembrance of their being brought out of Egypt by night, v. 1. The Chaldee paraphrases it, "Because they came out of Egypt by daylight," there being an express order that they should not stir out of their doors till morning, Exod. 12. 22. One of them expounds it thus, "He brought thee out of Egypt, and did wonders by night." The other, "and thou shalt eat the passover by night." The laws concerning it are.

1. That they must be sure to sacrifice the passover in the place that God should choose, (v. 2.) and in no other place, v. 5. 7. The passover was itself a sacrifice; hence Christ, as our Passover, is said to be sacrificed for us, (1 Cor. 5. 7.) and many other sacrifices were offered during the seven days of the feast, (Numb. 28. 19, 20.) which are included here, for they are said to be sacrificed of the flock and the herd, whereas the passover itself was only of the flock, either a lamb or a kid; now no sacrifice was accepted but from the altar that sanctified it, it was therefore necessary that they should go up to the place of the altar; for though the paschal lamb was entirely eaten by the owners, yet it must be killed in the court, the blood sprinkled, and the inward burnt upon the altar. By coming to the place of the sacrifice, they knew to the appointed rule, which they would have been apt to vary from, and to introduce foolish inventions of their own, had they been permitted to offer these sacrifices within their own gates, from under the inspection of the priests. They were also hereby directed to have their eye up unto God in the solemnity, and the desire of their hearts to remember the remembrance of his name, being appointed to attend there where his presence was to place his name, v. 2. and 6. But when the solemnity was over, they might turn and go unto their tents, v. 7. Some think that they might, if they pleased, return the very morning after the paschal lamb was killed and eaten, the priests and Levites being sufficient to carry on the rest of the week's work; but the first day of the seven is so far from being the day of their dispersion, that it is expressly appointed for a holy convocation; (Lev. 23. 7. Numb. 28. 18.) therefore we must take it as Jonathan's paraphrase expounds it, In the morning after the end of the feast thou shalt go to thy cities. And it was the practice to keep together the whole week, 2 Chron. 35. 17.

2. That they must eat unleavened bread for seven days, and no leavened bread must be seen in all their coasts, v. 3, 4, 6. The bread they were confined to, is here called bread of affliction, because neither grateful to the taste, nor easy of digestion, and therefore proper to signify the heaviness of their spirits in their bondage, and to keep in remembrance the haste in which they came out, the case being so urgent, that they could not stay for the leavening of the bread they took with them for their march. The Jewish writers tell us, that the custom at this season of the year suggests to the family brake this unleavened bread, and gave to every one a piece of it, saying, This is (that is, this signifies, represents, or commemorates, which explains that of our Saviour, This is my body) the bread of affliction which your fathers did eat in the land of Egypt. The gospel-meaning of this feast of unleavened bread the apostle gives us, (1 Cor. 5. 7.) Christ our Passover, was sacrificed for us, and we have participated of the blessed fruits of that Sacrifice to our comfort, let us keep the feast in a holy conversation, free from the leaven of malice toward our brethren, and hypocrisy toward God, and with the unleavened bread of sincerity and love. Lastly, Observe concerning the passover, for what end it was instituted, That thou mayest remember the day when thou camest forth out of Egypt, only for the day on a bonfire, v. 8, or during the seven days of the feast, but all the days of thy life, (v. 3.) as a constant inducement to obedience. Thus we celebrate the memorial of Christ's death at certain times, that we may re-member it at all times, as a reason why we should live to him that died for us and rose again.

II. Seven weeks after the passover, the feast of pentecost was to be observed, concerning which they are here directed, 1. From whence to number their seven weeks, From the time thou hast begun to put the sickle to the corn, (v. 9.) that is, from the morrow after the first day of the feast of unleavened bread, for on that day (though it is probable the people did not begin their harvest till the feast was ended) messengers were sent to reap a sheaf of barley, which was to be offered to God as the first-fruits, Lev. 23. 10. Some think it implies a particular care which Providence would take of their land with respect to the weather, that their harvest should be always ripe and ready for the sickle just at the same time. 2. How they were to keep this feast. (1.) They must bring an offering unto God, v. 10. It is here called a tribute of a free-will offering. It was required of them as a tribute to their Sovereign Lord and Owner, under whom they lived and laboured: he would not accept of it, because it did not determine the quantum, but it was left to every man's generosity to bring what he chose, and whatever he brought he must give cheerfully; it is therefore called a free-will offering. It was a grateful acknowledgment of the goodness of God to them in the mercies of these corn-harvests now finished, and therefore must be according as God had blessed them. Where God sows plentifully, he expects to reap abundantly. (2.) They must offer a sacrifice to God, v. 11. Holy joy is the heart and soul of thankful praises, which are as the language and expression of holy joy. They must rejoice in their receivings from God, and in their returns of service and sacrifice to him; our duty must be our delight as well as our enjoyments. They must have their very servants to rejoice with them, "for remember (v. 12.) that thy God is a jealous God," and lest false accusations would be brought, it is told them they would have given thee some time and cause for rejoicing; and thy God did bring thee out to keep a feast with gladness; therefore be pleasant with thy servants, and make them easy. "And it should seem, those general words, thou shalt observe and do these statutes, are added here for a particular reason, because this feast was kept in remembrance of the giving of the law upon mount Sinai, fifty days after they came out of Egypt; now the best way of expressing our thankfulness to God for his favour to us in giving us his law, is, to observe and do according to the precepts of it.

III. They must keep the feast of tabernacles, v. 13. 15. Here is no repetition of the law concerning the sacrifices that were to be offered in great abundance at this feast, (which we had at large, Num. 29, 12, &c.) because the care of these belonged to the priests and Levites, who had not so much need of a repetition as the people had, and by which the Lord established the law, v. 14. which consisted in holy joy, was most pleasing to God, and was to be the perpetual duty of a gospel conversation, which this feast was typical of. Observe what stress is laid upon it here. Thou shalt rejoice in thy feast; (v. 14.) and because the Lord shall bless thee, thou shalt surely rejoice, v. 15. Note, 1. It is the will of God that his people should be a cheerful people. If they that were under the law, must rejoice before God, much more must we that are under the grace of the gospel, which makes it our duty, not only as here, to rejoice in our feasts, but to rejoice evermore; to rejoice in the Lord always. 2. When we rejoice in God ourselves, we should do what we can to assist others also to rejoice in him, by comforting the mourners, and supplying the necessiters, that even the stranger, the fatherless, and widow, may rejoice in the feast. Those that make God their joy, may rejoice in hope, for he is faithful that has promised.

3. We must rejoice in God, not only because of what we have received, and are receiving from him daily, but because of what he has promised, and we expect to receive yet further from him, because he shall bless thee, therefore thou shalt rejoice. That makes God their joy, may rejoice in hope, for he is faithful that has promised.

3. The law concerning the three solemn feasts are summed up, (v. 16, 17.) as often before, Exod. 23. 16, 17.—34, 23. The general commands concerning them are, 1. That all the males must then make their personal appearance before God, that by their frequent meeting to worship God, at the same place, and by the same rule, they might be kept faithful and constant to that holy religion which was established among them. 2. That none must approach to God empty-handed, but must bring some offering or other, in token of a dependence upon God, and gratitude to him. And God was not unreasonable in his demands; let every man give but as he was able, and no more was expected. The same is still the rule of charity, 1 Cor. 16. 2. They that give to their power, shall be accepted, but they that give beyond their power, are accounted worthy of double honour, (2 Cor. 8. 3.) as the poor widow that gave all she had, Luke 21. 4.

18. Judges and officers thou shalt make thee in all thy gates, which the Lord thy God giveth thee, throughout thy tribes: and they shall judge the people with just judgment. 19. Thou shalt not wrest judgment; thou shalt not respect persons, neither take a gift: for a gift doth blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous. 20. That which is altogether just shalt thou follow, that thou mayest live, and inherit the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. 21. Thou shalt not plant thee a grove of any trees near unto the altar of the Lord thy God, which thou shalt make thee. 22. Neither shalt thou set thee up any image, which the Lord thy God hateth.

1. Care taken for the due administration of justice among them, that controversies might be determined, matters in variance adjusted, the injured righted, and the injurious punished. While they were encamped in the wilderness, they had judges and officers according to their numbers, rulers of thousands and hundreds, Exod. 18. 25. When they came to Canaan, they must have them according to their towns and cities, in all their gates; for the courts of judgment sat in the gates.

Now, (1.) Here is a commission given to these inferior magistrates. "Judges, to try and pass sentence, and officers, to execute their sentences, shalt thou make thee." However the persons were pitched upon, whether by the nomination of their Sovereign, or by the election of the people, the powers were ordained of God, Rom. 13. 1. And it was a great mercy to the people thus to have justice brought near them. lest they should be more expeditious and less expensive; a blessing, which we of this nation ought to be very thankful for. Pursuant to this law, besides the great Sanhedrim that sat at the sanctuary, consisting of 70 elders, and a president, there was in the larger cities, such as had in them above 120 families, a court of 23 judges; in the smaller cities, a court of three judges. See this law revived by Jehoshaphat, 2 Chron. 19, 5, 8. (2.) Here is a command given to these magistrates to do justice in the execution of the trust reposed in them. Better not judge at all, than not judge with just judgment; according to the direction of the law, and the evidence of the fact. The judges are here cautioned not to do wrong to any, (v. 19.) nor to take any gifts, which would tempt them to do wrong. This law had been given before; (Exod. 23. 8.) and they are charged to do justice to all, (v. 20.) "That which is altogether just shalt thou follow. Adhere to the principles of justice; act by the rules of justice, countenance the demands of justice, imitate the patterns of justice, and pursue with resolution that which appears to be just. Justice, justice, shall thou follow." This is that which the magistrate is to have in his eye, on this he must be inflexibly; and to this all personal regards must be sacrificed, to do right to all, and wrong to none.

2. Care taken for the preventing of all conformity to the idolatrous customs of the heathen, v. 21, 22. They must not only not join with the idolaters in their worship, nor visit their groves, nor bow before the images which they had set up, but, (1.) They must not plant a grove, nor so much as a tree, near God's altar, lest they should look like the altars of the false gods. They made groves the places of their worship, either to make it secret, but that which is true and good, desires the light rather; or to make it solemn, but the worship of the true God has enough in itself to make it so, and needs not the advantage of such a circumstance. (2.) They must not set up any image, statue, or ear, or stone, to the image of God, for it is a thing which the Lord hates; nothing belies or reproaches him more, or tends more to corrupt and debauch the minds of men, than representing and worshipping by an image that God who is an infinite and eternal Spirit.

1. Thou shalt not sacrifice unto the Lord thy God any bullock or sheep wherein is blemish, or any evil-favouredness; for that is an abomination unto the Lord thy God. 2. If there be found among you, within any of thy gates which the Lord thy God giveth thee, man or woman, that hath wrought wickedness in the sight of the Lord thy God, in transgressing his covenant, 3. And hath gone and served other gods, and worshipped them, either the sun, or moon, or any of the host of heaven, which I have not commanded; 4. And it be told thee, and thou hast heard of it, and inquired diligently, and, behold, it be true, and the thing certain, that such abomination is wrought in Israel: 5. Then shalt thou bring forth that man or that woman, which have committed that wicked thing, unto thy gates, even that man or that woman, and shall stone them with stones, till they die. 6. At the mouth of two witnesses, or three witnesses, shall he that is worthy of death be put to death; but at the mouth of one witness he shall not be put to death. 7. The hands of the witnesses shall be first upon him to put him to death, and afterward the hands of all the people. So thou shalt put the evil away from among you.

Here is, 1. A law for preserving the honour of God's worship, by providing that no creature that had any blemish, should be offered in sacrifice to him, v. 1. This caveat we have often met with, Thou shalt not sacrifice that which has any blemish, which renders it unsightly, or any evil matter or thing, (as the following word might better be rendered,) any sickness or weakness, though not discernible at first view: it is an abomination to God. God is the best of beings, and therefore whatsoever he is served with, ought to be the best in its kind. And the Old Testament sacrifices in a special manner must be so, because they were types of Christ, who is a Lamb without blemish or spot, (1 Pet. 1. 19.) perfectly pure from all sin and all appearance of it. In the latter times of the Jewish church, when the captivity in Babylon they were cured of idolatry, yet they were charged with profaneness in the breach of this law, insomuch as they offed the blind and lame and the sick for sacrifice, Mal. 1. 8.

2. A law for the punishing of those that worshipped false gods. It was made a capital crime to seduce others to idolatry, (ch. 13.) here it is laid down no less to be seduced. If the blind thus mislead the blind, both must fall into the ditch. Thus God would possess them with a dread of that sin, which they must conclude exceeding sinful, when so many singular laws were made against it, and would deter those from it that would not otherwise be persuaded against it: and yet the law which works death, proved ineffectual. See here, (1.) What the crime was, against which this law was levelled, serving or worshipping other gods, v. 3. That which was the most ancient and plausible idolatry, is specified, worshipping the sun, moon, and stars; and if that was so detestable a thing, much more was it so to worship stocks and stones, or the representations of mean and contemptible things, with which we are commonly concerned. (2.) That is what God had not commanded. He had again and again forbidden it; but it is thus expressed, to intimate that if there had been no more against it, this had been enough, (for in the worship of God, his institution and appointment must be cur rule and warrant,) and that God never commanded his worshippers to debase themselves so far as to do homage to their fellow-creatures: had God commanded that, they would, in all probability, have complained of it as a reproach and dispensation on them; yet when he has forbidden it, they will, from a spirit of contravention, put this indignity upon themselves. (2.) That it is wickedness in the sight of God, v. 2. Be it ever so industriously concealed, he sees it, and he be it ever so ingeniously palliated, he hates it: it is a sin in itself exceedingly heinous, and the highest affront that can be offered to Almighty God. (3.) That it is an abomination of the covenant. It was on this condition that God took them to be his peculiar people, that they should serve and worship him only as their God, so that if they gave to any other the honour which was due to him alone, the covenant was void, and all the benefit of it forfeited. Other sins were transgressions of the command, but this was a transgression of the covenant. It was spiritual adultery, which breaks the marriage-bond. (4.) That it is an abomination in Israel, v. 4. Idolatry was bad enough in any, but it was particularly abominable in Israel, a people so blessed with peculiar discoveries of the will and favour of the only true and living God.

(2.) How it must be tried. Upon information given of it, or any ground of suspicion that any person whatsoever, man or woman, had served other gods, [1.] Inquiry must be made, v. 4. Though it appears not certain at first, it may afterwards upon search appear so; and if it can possibly be discovered, it must not be unpunished; if not, yet the very inquiry concerning it would possess the country with a dread of it. [2.] Evidence must be given in, v. 6. How heinous and dangerous soever the crime is, yet they must not punish any for it, unless there were good proof against them, by two witnesses at least. They must not, under pretense of honouring God, wrong an innocent man. This law, which requires two witnesses in case of life, we had before, Numb. 35. 30. it is quoted, Mat. 18. 16.

(3.) What sentence must be passed and executed. So great a punishment as death, so great a death as stoning, must be inflicted on the idolator, be it man or woman, for the infamy of the weaker sex would be no excuse. The execution must be the gate of the city, that the shame might be the greater to the criminal, and the warning the more public to all others. The hands of the witnesses, in this as in other cases, must be first upon him, that is, they must cast the first stone at him, thereby avowing their testimony, and solemnly imprecating the guilt of his blood upon themselves if their evidence was false. This custom might be of ancient institution, for there is no law witness-book in what city. The witnesses are really, and therefore it was required that they should be actually, the death of the malefactor. But they must be followed, and the execution completed, by the hands of all the people, who were thus to testify their detestation of the crime, and to put the evil away from among them, as before, ch. 13. 9.
8. If there arise a matter too hard for thee in judgment, between blood and blood, between plea and plea, and between stroke and stroke, being matters of controversy within thy gates; then shalt thou arise, and get thee up into the place which the Lord thy God shall choose; 9. And thou shalt come unto the priests the Levites, and unto the judge that shall be in those days, and inquire; and they shall show thee the sentence of judgment: 10. And thou shalt do according to the sentence, which they of that place which the Lord shall choose shall show thee; and thou shalt observe to do according to all that they inform thee.

According to the sentence of the law which they shall teach thee, and according to the judgment which they shall tell thee, thou shalt do: thou shalt not decline from the sentence which they shall show thee, to the right hand nor to the left. 12. And the man that will do presumptuously, and will not hearken unto the priest that standeth to minister there before the Lord thy God, or unto the judge, even that man shall die: and thou shalt put away the evil from Israel.

And all the people shall hear, and fear, and do no more presumptuously.

Courts of judgment were ordered to be erected in every city, (ch. 16. 18.) and they were empowered to hear and determine causes according to law, both those which we call pleas of the crown, and those between party and party; and we may suppose that ordinarily they ended the matters that were brought before them, and their sentence was definitive; but,

1. It is here taken for granted, that sometimes a case might come into their court too difficult for those inferior judges to determine, who could not be thought to be so learned in the laws as those that presided in the higher courts. So that (to speak in the language of our law) they must find a special verdict, and take time to advise before the giving of judgment; (v. 8.) If there arise a matter too hard for thee in judgment, which it would be no dishonour to the judges to own the difficulty of, suppose it between blood and blood, the blood of a person which cried, and the blood of him that was charged with the murder, which was demanded; when it was doubtful, upon the evidence, whether it was wilful or casual; or between plea and plea, the plea, that is, the bill, or declaration of the plaintiff, and the plea of the defendant; between stroke and stroke, in actions of assault and battery; in these and the like cases, though the evidence were plain, yet doubts might arise about the sense and meaning of the law, and the application of it to the particular case.

2. These difficult cases, which hitherto had been brought to Moses, according to Jethro's advice, were, after his death, to be brought to the supreme power, wherever it was lodged, whether in a judge, when there was such an extraordinary person raised up, and qualified for that great service, as Othniel, Deborah, Gideon, &c. or in the High Priest, when he was by the eminency of his gifts called of God to preside in public affairs, as Eli; or, if no singular person were marked by heaven for this honour, then in the priests and Levites, (or in the priests, who were Levites of course,) who not only attended the sanctuary, but met in council, to receive appeals from the inferior courts, who might reasonably be supposed, not only to be best qualified by their learning and experience, but to have the best assistance of the Divine Spirit for the deciding of doubts, &c. 9, 11, 12. They are not appointed to consult the Urim and Thummim, for it is supposed that that is consulted only in cases relating to the public, either to the body of the people, or the prince: but in ordinary cases, the wisdom and integrity of those that sat at the stern, must be relied on, their judgment concerning the meaning of the law must be acquiesced in, and the sentence must be passed accordingly; and though their judgment had not the divine authority of an oracle, yet beside the moral certainty it had, as the judgment of knowing, prudent, and experienced men, it had the advantage of a divine promise, implied in those words, (v. 9.) They shall show thee the sentence of judgment; it had also the support of a divine institution, by which they were made the supreme judicature of the nation.

3. The definitive sentence given by the judge, priest, or great council, must be obeyed by the parties concerned, upon pain of death, (v. 9. & 10.) Thou shalt observe to do, (as the text says,) what they shall tell thee from (v. 11.) to the right hand or to the left. Note, It is for the honour of God and the welfare of a people, that the power and authority of the higher power be supported, and the due order of government observed; that these be obeyed, who are appointed to rule, and that every soul be subject to them in all those things that fall within their commission. Though judgment be not always given him who is injured by the sentence, (as every man is apt to be partial to his own cause, yet he must needs be subject, must stand to the award, how unpleasing soever, and bear, or lose, or pay, according to it, not only for wrath, but also for conscience sake. But if an inferior judge contradict the sentence of the higher court, and will not execute the orders of it, or a private person refuse to conform himself to their sentence, the controversy must be punished with death; though the matter were not so, yet because the sentence was made, That man shall die, and all the people shall hear and fear, v. 12, 13. See here, (1.) The evil of disobedience: rebellion, and stubbornness, from a spirit of contradiction and opposition to God, or those in authority under him, from a principle of contempt, and self-willedness, are as witchcraft and idolatry. To differ in opinion from weakness and ignorance may be excused, and must be borne with; but to do presumptuously, in pride and wickedness, (as the ancient translators explain it,) this is to take up arms against the government, and is an affront to him by whom the powers that be, are ordained. (2.) The design of punishment; that others may hear and fear, and not do the like. Some would be so considerable as to infer the heinousness of the offence from the grievousness of the penalty, and therefore would destitute it; and others would so far consult their own safety, as to cross their humours by conforming to the sentence, rather than to sin against their own heads, and forfeit their lives by going contrary to it. From this law the apostle infers the sorrows of the punishment they will be thought worthy of, that trample on the authority of the Son of God, Heb. 10. 28, 29.

14. When thou art come unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, and shalt possess it, and shalt dwell therein, and shalt say, I will set a king over me, like as all the nations that are about me;
Thou shalt in any wise set him king over thee whom the Lord thy God shall choose: one from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee: thou mayest not set a stranger over thee, which is not thy brother.

16. But he shall not multiply horses to himself, nor cause the people to return to Egypt, to the end that he should multiply horses: forasmuch as the Lord hath said unto you, Ye shall henceforth return no more that way.

17. Neither shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away: neither shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold.

18. And it shall be, when he sitteth upon the throne of his kingdom, that he shall write him a copy of this law in a book out of that which is before the priests the Levites: 19. And it shall be with him, and he shall read therein all the days of his life: that he may learn to fear the Lord his God, to keep all the words of this law and these statutes, to do them: 20. That his heart be not lifted up above his brethren, and that he turn not aside from the commandment, to the right hand, or to the left: to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom, he, and his children, in the midst of Israel.

After the laws which concerned subjects, fitly follow the laws which concern kings; for they that rule others, must themselves remember well how others are commanded. Here are laws given.

I. To the electors of the empire, what rules they must go by in making their choice, v. 14, 15. 1. It is here supposed that the people would, in process of time, be desirous of a king, whose royal pomp and power would be thought to make their nation look great among their neighbours. Their having a king is neither promised as a mercy, nor commanded as a duty, (nothing could be better for them than the divine regal government under,) but it is permitted them, if they desired it: if they would but take care to have the ends of government answered, and God's laws duly observed and put in execution, they should not be tied to any one form of government, but should be welcome to have a king. Though something irregular is supposed to be the principle of the desire, that they might be like the nations, (whereas God many ways distinguishes them from the nations,) yet God would indulge them in it, because he intended to serve his own purposes by it, in making the regal government typical of the kingdom of the Messiah. 2. They are directed in their choice. If they will have a king over them, as God foresaw they would, (though it does not appear that ever the motion was made till almost 400 years after,) then they must, (1.) Ask counsel at God's mouth, and make his high blessing follow him. God's counsels are sure: for them that they had an oracle to consult in so weighty an affair, and a God to choose for them who knows infallibly what every man is, and will be. Kings are God's vicegerents, and therefore it is fit that he should have the choosing of them: God had himself been in a particular manner Israel's King, and if they set another over them, under him, it was necessary that he should nominate the person. Accordingly, when the people desired a king, they applied themselves to Samuel, a prophet of the Lord; and afterward, David, Solomon, Jeroboam, Jehu, and others, were chosen by the prophets; and the people are required for not observing this law, (Hos. 8. 4.) They have set up kings, but not by me. In all cases, God's choice, if we can but know it, should direct, determine, and over-rule, our. (2.) They must not choose a foreigner under pretence of strengthening their alliances, or of the extraordinary fitness of the person, lest a strange king should introduce strange customs or usages, contrary to those that were established by the divine law; but he must be one from among thy brethren, that he may be a type of Christ, who is bone of our bone, Heb. 2. 14.

II. Laws are here given to the prince that should be elected, for the due administration of the government.

1. He must carefully avoid every thing that would divert him from God and religion. Riches, honours, and pleasures, are the three great hinderances of the Messiah. (the lusts of the flesh, the lusts of the eye, and the pride of life,) especially to those in high stations: against these therefore the king is here warned. (1.) He must not gratify the love of honour by multiplying horses, v. 16. He that rode upon a horse, (a stately creature,) in a country where asses and mules were generally used, looked very great; and therefore though he might have horses for his own saddle and chariots, yet he must not set a great store of them in his kingdom, (v. 7.) nor have many horses for his officers and guards, when God was their King, his judges rode on asses; (Judg. 5. 10.—12. 14.) nor must he multiply horses for war, lest he should trust too much to them, Ps. 20. 7.—33. 17. Hos. 14. 3. The reason here given against his multiplying horses, is, because it would produce a greater correspondence with Egypt (which furnished Canaan with horses, 1 Kings 10. 28,) than it was fit that Israel's God-ordained, or elected, (v. 7,) who were brought thence with such a high hand. Ye shall return no more that way; for fear of being infected with the idolatries of Egypt, (Lev. 18. 3,) to which they were very prone. Note, We should take heed of that commerce or conversation, by which we are in danger of being drawn into sin. If Israel must not return to Egypt, they must not trade with Egypt; Solomon got no good by it. (2.) He must not gratify the love of pleasure by multiplying women, (v. 7.) as Solomon did to his undoing, (1 Kings 11. 1.) that his heart, being set upon them, turn not away from business, and every thing that is serious, and especially from the exercise of piety and devotion, to which nothing is a greater enemy than the indulgence of the flesh. (3.) He must not gratify the love of riches by greatly multiplying silver and gold. A competent treasure is allowed him, and he is not forbidden to be a good husband of it; but, [1.] He must not greatly multiply money so as to oppress his people by raising it, (as Solomon seems to have done, 1 Kings 12. 4,) nor so as to deceive himself, by trusting to it and setting his heart upon it, Ps. 62. 10. [2.] He must not multiply it to himself David multiplied silver and gold, but it was for the service of God, (1 Chron. 29. 4,) not for himself; for his people, not for his own family.

2. He must carefully apply himself to the law of God, and make that his rule. This must be to him better than all riches, honours, and pleasures, than many horses or many wives, better than thousands of gold and silver.

(1.) He must write himself a copy of the law out of the original, which was in the custody of the priests that attended the sanctuary, v. 18. Some think that he was to write only this book of Deuteronomy, which is an abstract of the law, and the precepts of which, being mostly moral and judicial, concerned the king, more than the laws in Leviticus.
and Numbers, which, being ceremonial, concerned chiefly the priests. Others think that he was to transcribe all the five books of Moses, which are called the law; and which were preserved together as the foundation of their religion. Now, [1.] Though the king might be presumed to have very fair copies by him from his ancestors, yet beside those, he must have one of his own: it might be presumed that their's were worn with constant use, he must have a fresh one to begin the world with. [2.] Though he had secretaries about him whom he might employ to write this copy, and who perhaps could write a better hand than he, yet he must do it himself, with his own hand, for the honour of it, that the world might think the religion below him, to inure himself to labour and study, and especially that he might thereby be obliged to take particular notice of every part of the law, and by writing it might imprint it in his mind. Note, It is of great use for each of us to write down what we observe as most affecting and edifying to us, out of the scriptures and good books, and out of the sermons of others. A prudent pen may go far toward making up the deficiencies of the memory, and the furnishing of the treasures of the good householder with things new and old. [3.] He must do this even when he sits upon the throne of his kingdom; provided that he had not done it before. When he begins to apply himself to business, he must apply himself to this in the first place. He that sits upon the throne of a kingdom, cannot but have his hands full of business; he must meditate at home, and abroad call for a large share of his time and thoughts, and yet he must write himself a copy of the law. Let not those who call themselves men of business, think that this will excuse them from making religion their business; nor let great men think it any disparagement to them, to write for themselves those great things of God's law which he hath written to them. Hos. 8, 12.

(2.) Having a Bible by him of his own writing, he must not think it enough to keep it in his cabinet, but he must read therein all the days of his life, v. 19. It is not enough to have Bibles, but we must use them, use them daily, as the duty and necessity of every day require: our souls must have their constant meals of that manna; and if well digested, it will be true nourishment and strength to them. As the soul is receiving benefit by its food spiritually, and not only eating with the mouth is the soul, by the word of God, if it meditate therein day and night, Ps. 1, 2. And we must persevere in the use of the written word of God as long as we live. Christ's scholars never learn above their Bibles, but will have a constant occasion for them, till they come to that world where knowledge and love will both be made perfect.

In his writing and reading were all nothing, if he did not reduce to practice what he wrote and read, v. 19, 20. The word of God is not designed merely to be an entertaining subject of speculation, but to be a commanding rule of conversation. Let him know,

[1.] What dominion his religion must have over him, and what influence it must have upon him. First, It must possess him with a very reverent and awe-inspiring idea of that God whom he had written to him. He must learn (and thus the most learned must be ever learning) to fear the Lord his God; and as high as he is, must remember that God is above him, and whatever fear his subjects owe to him, that, and much more, he owes to God as his King. Secondly, It must engage him to a constant observance of the law of God, and a conscientious obedience to it, as the effect of that fear. He must keep all the words of this law, (he is custos utrinque tabulæ—the keeper of both tables,) not only to take care that others do them, but to do them himself as an humble servant to the God of heaven, and a good example to his inferiors. Thirdly, It must keep him humble; how much soever he is advanced, let him keep his spirit low, and let the fear of his God prevent the contempt of his brethren: and let not his heart be lifted up above them, so as to carry himself haughtily or disdainfully toward them, and to trample upon them; let him not conceal himself better than they, because he is greater, and makes a fairer show, but let him remember that he is the minister of God to them for good, (major singularis, but minor universi—greater than any one, but less than the whole.) It must prevent his errors, either on the right hand, or on the left, (for there are no two hands,) and keep him right, in all instances, to his God and to his duty.

[2.] What advantage his religion would be to him. They that fear God and keep his commandments, will certainly fare the better for it in this world. The greatest monarch in the world may receive more benefit by religion, than by all the wealth and power of his monarchy. It will be of advantage, First, To his person. He shall prolong his days in his kingdom. We find in the history of the kings of Judah, that, generally, the best reigns were the longest, except when God shortened them for the punishment of the people; as Josiah's. Secondly, To his family; his children shall also prosper. Entail religion upon posterity, and God will entail a blessing upon it.

CH. XVIII.

In this chapter, I. The rights and revenues of the church are settled, and rules given concerning the Levites' ministration and maintenance, v. 1...8. II. The caution against the idolatrous abominable customs of the heathen is repeated, v. 9...14. III. A promise is given them of the spirit of prophecy to continue among them, and to centre at last in Christ, the Great Prophet; (v. 15...18.) wrath threatened against those that despise prophecy, (v. 19.) or counterfeit it, (v. 20.) and a rule given for the list of, v. 21...22.

1. THE priests the Levites, and all the tribe of Levi, shall have no part nor inheritance with Israel: they shall eat the offerings of the Lord made by fire, and his inheritance. 2. Therefore shall they have no inheritance among their brethren; the Lord is their inheritance, as he hath said unto them. 3. And this shall be the priest's due from the people, from them that offer a sacrifice, whether it be ox or sheep; and they shall give unto the priest the shoulder, and the two cheeks, and the maw. 4. The first-fruit also of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thy oil, and the first of the fleece of thy sheep, shalt thou give him. 5. For the Lord thy God hath chosen him out of all thy tribes, to stand to minister in the name of the Lord, him and his sons for ever. 6. And if a Levite come from any of thy gates out of all Israel, where he sojourned, and come with all the desire of his mind unto the place which the Lord shall choose; 7. Then he shall minister in the name of the Lord his God, as all his brethren the Levites do, which stand there before the Lord. 8. They shall have like portions to eat, besides that which cometh of the sale of his patrimony.
Magistracy and ministry are two divine institutions of admirable use for the support and advancement of God's church: men, laws concerning the former we had in the close of the foregoing chapter, directions are in this given concerning the latter. Land-marks are here set between the estates of the priests and those of the people.

I. Care is taken that the priests entangle not themselves with the affairs of this life, nor enrich themselves with the wealth of this world. The possess and use of the things in the sanctuary. They shall have a part, nor inheritance with Israel, that is, no share either in the spoils taken in war, or in the land that was to be divided by lot, v. 1. Their warfare and husbandry are both spiritual, and enough to fill their hands both with work and profit, and to content them. The Lord is their inheritance, v. 2. Note, Those that have God for their inheritance, according to the new covenant, should not be greedy of great things in the world; neither gripe what they have, nor grasp at more, but look upon all present things with the indifference which becomes those that believe God to be all-sufficient.

II. Care is likewise taken that they want not any of the comforts and conveniences of this life. Though God, who is a Spirit, is their Inheritance, it does not therefore follow that they must live upon the air: No, the people must provide for them. They must have their due from the people, v. 3. Their maintenance must not depend upon the generosity of the people, but they must be by law entitled to it. He that is taught in the word, ought in justice to communicate to him that teaches him; and he that has the benefit of solemn religious assemblies, to contribute to the comfortable support of those that preside in such assemblies. (1.) The priests who in their courses served at the altar, had their share of the sacrifices, namely, the peace-offerings, that were brought while they were in waiting; beside the breast and shoulder, which were appointed them before, (Lev. 7. 32. 34.) the cheeks and maw are here ordered to be given them; so far was the law from diminishing what was already granted, that it gave them an augmentation. (2.) The first-fruits which arose within such a precinct, were brought in, to be laid up in the sanctuary, for their maintenance in the country; the first of their corn and wine for food, and the first of their fleece for clothing, (v. 4.) for the priests who were employed to teach others, ought themselves to learn, having food and raiment, to be therewith content. The first-fruits were devoted to God, and he constituted the priests his receivers; and if God reckons what is, in general, given to the poor, lent to him, to be repaid with interest, much more what is, in particular, given to poor ministers. There is a good reason given for this constant charge upon their estates, (v. 5.) because the Levites were chosen of God, and his choice must be owned and countenanced, and those honoured by us, whom he honours; and because they stood to minister, and ought to be recompensed for their attendance and labour, especially since it was in the service of the Lord, by his blessing in his service, and for his praise, and this charge entailed upon their seed for ever; those who were thus engaged and thus employed, ought to have all due encouragement given them, as some of the most needful, useful members of their commonwealth.

2. The priests must not themselves stand in another's light. If a priest, that by the law was obliged to serve at the altar, only in his turn, and was paid for that, should, out of his great affection to the sanctuary, devote himself to a constant attendance there, and quit the ease and pleasure of the city in which he had his lot, for the satisfaction of serving the altar, the people, whose turn it was to attend, must admit him both to join in the work, and to share in the wages, and not grudge him either the honour of the one, or the profit of the other, though it might seem to break in upon them, v. 6. 8. Note, A hearty pious zeal to serve God and his church, though it may a little encroach upon a settled order, and there may be somewhat in it that looks irregular, yet ought to be gratified, and not discouraged. The carrying on of the sanctuary, it appears to have a hearty affection to the sanctuary, and lays clearly to be employed in the service of it, in God's name let him minister, he shall be as welcome to God, as the Levites, whose course it was to minister, and should be so to them. The settling of the courses was intended rather to secure those to the work that were not willing to do so much, than to exclude any that were willing to do more. And he that serves as a volunteer, shall have as good pay as the pressed men, beside that which comes of the sale of his patrimony. The church of Rome obliges those who leave their estates to go into a monastery, to bring the profits of their estate with them into the common stock of the monastery, for gain is their godliness; but here it is ordered that the pious devotee should reserve to himself the produce of his patrimony; for religion and the ministry were never appointed of God, however they have been abused by men, to serve a secular interest.

9. When thou art come into the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations. 10. There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, 11. Or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer. 12. For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord: and because of these abominations the Lord thy God doth drive them out from before thee. 13. Thou shalt be perfect with the Lord thy God. 14. For these nations, which thou shalt possess, hearkened unto observers of times, and unto diviners: but as for thee, the Lord thy God hath not suffered thee so to do. One would not think there had been so much need, as it seems there was, to arm the people of Israel against the infection of the idolatrous customs of the Canaanites. Was it possible that a people so blessed with divine institutions, should ever admit the brutish and barbarous in cuions of men and devils? Were they in any danger of making those their tutors and directors in religion, whom God had made their captives and tributaries? It seems they were in danger, and therefore, after many like cautions, they are here charged not to do after the abominations of those nations, v. 9.
both of God's counsels and of his providence, v. 10.

11. One would wonder that such arts and works of darkness, so senseless and absurd, so impious and profane, could be found in a country where divine revelation shone so clearly; yet we find remains of them even there where Christ's holy religion is known and professed; such are the powers and policies of the rulers of the darkness of this world. But let those that give heed to fortune-tellers, or go to wizards for the discovery of things secret, that use spells for the cure of diseases, are in any league or acquaintance with familiar spirits, or form a confe-deracy with those that are—let them know that they can have no fellowship with God, while they have fellowship with devils. It is amazing to think that there should be any pretenders of this kind in such a land, and day of light, as we live in.

II. Some reasons are given against their conformity to the customs of the Gentiles. 1. Because it would make them abominable to God. The things themselves being hateful to him, those that do them are an abomination; and miserable is that creature, that becomes odious to its Creator, v. 12. See the malignity and mischievousness of sin; that must needs be an evil thing indeed, which provokes the God of mercy to detest the work of his own hands. 2. Because those abominable practices had been the ruin of the Canaanites, which ruin they were not only the witnesses but the instruments of. It would be the most inexusable folly, as well as the most unpardonable impiety, for them to prac-tise themselves those very things, for which they had been employed so severely to chastise others. Did the land spie out the abominations of the Ca-naanites, and shall Israel lick up the vomit? 3. Because they were better taught, v. 13, 14. It is an argument like that of the apostle against christians walking as the Gentiles walked; (Eph. 4. 17, 18. 20.) Ye have not so learned Christ. It is true, these nations, whom God gave up to their own hearts' lusts, and suffered to walk in their own ways, (Acts 14. 16.) did thus corrupt themselves; but thou art not thus abandoned by the grace of God, the Lord thy God has not suffered thee to do so, thou art instructed in divine things, and hast fair warning given thee of the evil of those practices; and therefore whatever others do it is expected that thou shouldst be perfect with the Lord thy God, (1.) That is, thou shouldst give no occasion to him, to him only, and to no other, and not mix any of the superstitious customs of the heathen with his institutions.” One of the Chaldee paraphrases here takes notice of God's furnishing them with the oracle of Urin and Thummin, as a pres-ervative from all unlawful arts of divination. They were fools, who would go to consult the father of lies, when they had such a ready way of consulting the God of truth.

15. The Lord thy God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me; unto him ye shall hearken; 16. According to all that thou deirdest of the Lord thy God in Hor-rub, in the day of the assembly, saying, Let me not hear again the voice of the Lord my God, neither let me see this great fire any more, that I die not. 17. And the Lord said unto me, They have well spoken that which they have spoken. 18. I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth; and he shall speak un-to them all that I shall command him. 19. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken unto my words which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him. 20. But the prophet which shall presume to speak a word in my name which I have not commanded him to speak, or that shall speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die. 21. And if thou say in thine heart, How shall we know the word which the Lord hath not spoken? 22. When a prophet speaketh in the name of the Lord, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which the Lord hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously; thou shalt not be afraid of him.

1. The promise of the Great Prophet, with a command to receive him, and hearken unto him. Now,

1. Some think it is a promise of a succession of prophets that shall for many ages be kept up in Israel. Besides the priests and Levites, their ordi-nary ministers, whose office it was to teach Jacob God's law, they should have prophets, extraordinary ministers, to reprove them for their faults, to remind them of their duty, and to foretell things to come, judgments for warning, and deliverances for their comfort. Having these prophets, (1.) They need not use divinations, nor consult with familiar spirits, for they might inquire of God's prophets even concerning their private affairs, as Saul did when he was in quest of his father's asses, 1 Sam. 9. 6. (2.) They could not miss the way of their duty, through ignorance or mistake, nor differ in their opinions about it, having prophets among them, whom, in every difficult doubtful case, they might advise with, and appeal to. These prophets were like unto Moses in some respects, though far inferior to him, Deut. 34. 10.

2. Whether a succession of prophets be included in this promise or not, we are sure that it is prima-ryly intended as a promise of Christ, and it is the clearest promise of him that is in all the law of Mo-ses. It is expressly applied to our Lord Jesus as the Messiah promised, (Acts 3. 22.—7. 37.) and the people had an eye to this promise when they said concerning him, This is of a truth that Prophet which should come into the world; (John 6. 14.) and it was his Spirit that spake in all the other prophets, 1 Pet. 1. 11. Observe

(1.) What it is, that is here promised concerning Christ; what God promised Moses at mount Sinai, which he repeats, v. 18. He promiseth the people (v. 15.) in God's name; [1.] That there should come a Prophet, great above all the prophets, by whom God would make known himself and his will to the children of men, more fully and clearly than ever he had done before. He is the Light of the world, as prophecy was of the Jewish church, John 8. 12. He is the word by whom God speaks to us, 1. Heb. 1. 2. [2.] That God would raise him up from the midst of them. In his birth he should be one of that nation, should live among them, and be sent to them. In his resurrection he should be raised up at Jerusalem, and from thence his doctrine should go forth to all the world; thus God, having raised up his Son Christ Jesus, sent him to bless us. [3.] That he should be like unto Moses, only as much above him, as the other prophets came short of him. Moses was such a pro phet as was a law-giver to Israel, and their deliverer out of Egypt; and so was Christ, he not only teaches, but rules and saves; Moses was the founder of a new dispensation, by signs and wonders and mightiness; and Christ, by which he appointed himself a Teacher come from God. Was Moses faithful? So was Christ; Moses as a servant, but Christ as a Son. [4.] That God would put his words in his mouth, v. 18. What messages God had to send to the children of men, he would send them by him, and give him full instructions what to say and do as a prophet. Hence our Saviour says, (John 7. 16.) My doctrine is not mine originally, but that which was sent to me. So that this great promise is not performed; this Prophet is come, even Jesus, it is he that should come, and we are to look for no other.

(2.) The agreeableness of this designed dispensation to the people's avowed choice and desire at mount Sinai, v. 16, 17. There God had spoken to them in thunder and lightning, out of the midst of the fire and thick darkness: every word made their ears tingle and their hearts tremble, so that the whole congregation was ready to die with fear: in this fright, they begged hard that God would not speak to them in this manner any more, (they could not bear it, it would overwhelm and distract them,) but that he would speak to them by men, like themselves, by Moses now, and afterward by other prophets like unto him. "Well," says God, "it shall be so; they shall be spoken to by men, whose terror shall not make them afraid;" and to crown the favour beyond what they were able to ask or think, in the fulness of time, the Word itself was made flesh, and they saw his glory as of the only begotten of the Father, not, as at mount Sinai, full of majesty and terror, but full of grace and truth, John 1. 14. Thus, in answer to the request of those who were struck with amazement by the Law, God promised the incarnation of his Son, though we may suppose it far from the thoughts of them that made the request.

(3.) A charge and command given to all people to hear and believe, hear and obey, this Great Prophet here promised: Unto him ye shall hearken; (v. 15.) and whoever will not hearken to him, shall be surely and severely reckoned with for his contempt, (v. 19.) I will require it of him. God himself applied this to our Lord Jesus in the voice that came out of the excellent glory, Mat. 17. 5. Hearken, in the sight of this is written. It was said by Moses of old, Unto him ye shall hearken; and Moses and Elias then stood by and assented to it. The sentence here passed on those that hearken not to this Prophet, is repeated and ratified in the New Testament, He that believeth not the Son, the wrath of God abideth on him, John 3. 36. And how shall we escape if we turn away from him that speaketh from heaven? Heb. 12. 25. The Chaldee paraphrased it, May God destroy him, if he be not of him; which can be no other than a divine person, Christ the eternal Word, to whom the Father has committed all judgment, and by whom he will at the last day judge the world. Whoever turns a deaf ear to Jesus Christ, shall find that it is at his peril; the same that is the Prophet, is to be the Judge, John 12. 48.

II. Here is a caution against false prophets. By way of threatening against the pretenders themselves, v. 20. Whoever sets up for a prophet, and produces either a commission from a false god, as the prophets of Baal, or a false and counterfeit commission from the true God, shall he deemed and adjudged guilty of high treason against the crown and dignity of the King of kings, and that traitor shall be put to death, (v.20.) namely, by the judgment of the great Sanhedrin, which, in process of time, sat at Jerusalem; and therefore our Saviour says that a prophet could not perish but at Jerusalem, and lays the blood of the prophets at Jerusalem's door, Luke 13. 33, 34, whom therefore God himself would punish; yet there false prophets were supported, and even when Jesus was on earth of which this chapter relates, 1. To the sixth commandment, Thou shalt not kill, v. 1. 13. II. To the eighth commandment, Thou shalt not steal, v. 14. III. To the ninth commandment Thou shalt not bear false witness, v. 15. 21.

CHAP. XIX.

The laws which Moses had hitherto been repeating and urging, mostly concerned the acts of religion and devotion toward God; but here he comes more fully to prove the duties of righteousness between man and man. This chapter relates, I. To the sixth commandment, Thou shalt not kill, v. 1. 13. II. To the eighth commandment, Thou shalt not steal, v. 14. III. To the ninth commandment Thou shalt not bear false witness, v. 15. 21.
1. When the Lord thy God hath cut off the nations, whose land the Lord thy God giveth thee, and thou succeedest them, and dwellest in their cities, and in their houses; 2. Thou shalt separate three cities for thee in the midst of thy land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee to possess it. 3. Thou shalt prepare thee a way, and divide the coasts of thy land, which the Lord thy God giveth thee to inherit, into three parts, that every slayer may flee thither. 4. And this is the case of the slayer which shall flee thither, that he may live. Whoso killeth his neighbour ignorantly, whom he hateth not in time past; 5. As when a man goeth into the wood with his neighbour to new wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the axe to cut down the tree, and the head slippeth from the helve, and lighteth upon his neighbour, that he die; he shall flee unto one of those cities, and live: 6. Lest the avenger of blood pursue the slayer, while his heart is hot, and overtake him, because the way is long, and slay him; whereas he was not worthy of death, inasmuch as he hated him not in time past. 7. Wherefore I command thee, saying, Thou shalt separate three cities for thee. 8. And if the Lord thy God enlarge thy coast, as he hath sworn unto thy fathers, and give thee all the land which he promised to give unto thy fathers; 9. If thou shalt keep all these commandments to do them, which I command thee this day, to love the Lord thy God, and to walk ever in his ways; then shalt thou add three cities more for thee, besides these three; 10. That innocent blood be not shed in thy land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance, and so blood be upon thee. 11. But if any man hate his neighbour, and lie in wait for him, and rise up against him, and smite him mortally that he die, and fleeth into one of these cities: 12. Then the elders of his city shall send and fetch him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood, that he may die. 13. Thine eye shall not pity him, but thou shalt put away the guilt of innocent blood from Israel, that it may go well with thee.

It was one of the precepts given to the sons of Noah, that whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed, that is, by the avenger of blood, Gen. 9. 6. Now here we have the law settled between blood and blood, between the blood of the murdered and the blood of the murderer, and effectual provision made.

1. That the cities of refuge should be a protection to him that slew another casually, so that he should not die for that as a crime, which was not his voluntary act, but only his unhappiness. The appointment of these cities of refuge we had before,

(Exod. 21. 13.) and the law laid down concerning them at large, Numb. 35. 10, &c. It is here repeated and directed as given concerning three things.

1. The appointing of three cities in Canaan for this purpose. Moses had already appointed three on that side Jordan, which he saw the conquest of; and now he bids them, when they were settled in the other part of the country, to appoint three more, v. 1-3.

7. The country was to be divided into the three districts, as near as might be equal, and a city of refuge in the centre of each, so that every corner of the land might have one within reach. Thus Christ is not a Refuge at a distance which we must ascend to heaven, or go down to the deep for, but the word is nigh us, and Christ in the word, Rom. 10. 8. This gospel brings salvation to our door, and there it kindles for the three great purposes; and, to make the flight of the disobedient the more easy, the way must be prepared, that led to the city of refuge. Probably, they had causeways or streetways leading to those cities, and the Jews say, that the magistrates of Israel, upon one certain day in the year, sent out messengers to see that those roads were in good repair, and they were to remove stumblings or marks of blood that were broken, and where two ways met, they were to lay a stone, with a finger to point the right way, on which was engraven in great letters, Miklat, Miklat; Refuge, Refuge. In allusion to this, gospel-ministers are to show people the way to Christ, and to assist and direct them in flying by faith to him for refuge. They must be ready to remove their prejudices, and help them over their difficulties. And, blessed be God, the way of Holiness, to all that seek it faithfully, is a highway so plain, that the wayfarer men, though fools, shall not err therein.

2. The use to be made of these cities, v. 4-6. (1.) It is supposed it might so happen, that a man might be the death of his neighbour without any design upon him, (either from a sudden passion, or malice-prepense,) but purely by accident, as the slayning of an ox or sheep is now given, with which every case of this kind was to be compared, and by it adjudged. See how human life lies exposed daily, and what deaths we are often in, and what need therefore we have to be always ready, our souls being continually in our hands. How are the sons of men snared in an evil time, when it falls suddenly upon them? Eccl. 9. 12. An evil time indeed it is, when this happens not only to the slain but to the slayer. (2.) It is supposed that the relations of the person slain, should be forwards to avenge the blood; in affection to their friend, and in zeal for public justice. Though the law did not allow the avenging of any other affront or injury with death, yet the avenger of blood, the blood of a relation, shall have great allowances made for the heat of his heart, upon such a provocation as that, and his killing the man-slayer, though he was so by accident, may not be accounted murder, if he did it before he got to the city of refuge, though it is owned he was not worthy of death. Thus would God possess people with a great horror and dread of the sin of murder: if mere chance-medley did thus expose a man, surely he that wilfully does violence to the blood of any person, whether from an old grudge, or upon a sudden provocation, must flee to the pit, and let no man stay him, (Prov. 28. 17.) for the law represents the sin of murder, as more heinous and more dangerous than even this law does, (1 John 3. 15.) Ye know that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him. (3.) It is provided that if an avenger of blood should be so unreasonable as to demand satisfaction for blood shed by accident only, then the city of refuge should protect the slayer. Sins of ignorance indeed do expose us to the wrath of God.
but there is relief provided, if by faith and repentance we make use of it. Paul that had been a persecutor, obtained mercy, because he did it ignorantly; and Christ prayed for his crucifiers, Father, forgive them, for they know not what they do.

3. The appointing of three cities more for this use, in case God should hereafter enlarge their territories, and the dominion of their religion; that all those places which came under the government of the law of Moses, in the instance of avengers, might enjoy the benefit of that law in this instance, v. 8-10. Here is, (1.) An intimation of God's gracious intention to enlarge their coast, as he promised to their fathers, if they did not by their disobedience forfeit the promise, the condition of which is here carefully repeated, that, if it were not performed, the reproof might lie upon them, and not on God. He promised to give it, if thou shalt keep all these commandments; not otherwise. (2.) A direction to them to appoint three cities more in their new conquests, which, the number of intimates, should be as large as those their first conquests were; wherever the border of Israel went, this privilege must attend it, that innocent blood be not shed, v. 10. Though God is the Saviour and Preserver of all men, and has a tender regard to all lives, yet the blood of Israelites is in a particular manner precious to him, Ps. 147. 3. The learned Ainsworth observes, that the Jewish writers themselves own, that, the condition not being performed, the promise of the enlarging of their coast was never fulfilled; so that there was no occasion for ever adding these three cities of refuge; yet the holy blessed God (say they) did not command it in vain, for in the days of Moses the Prince, three other cities shall be added to these six: they expect it to be fulfilled in the letter, but will never have it as his spiritual accomplishment, for the borders of the gospel-Israel are enlarged, according to the promise, and in Christ, the Lord our Righteousness, refuge is provided for those that by faith fly unto him.

II. It is provided that the cities of refuge should be no sanctuary or shelter to a willful murderer, but even thence he should be fetched, and delivered to the avenger of blood, v. 11-13. 1. This shows that willful murder must not be pardoned by the civil magistrate; he bears the sword of justice in vain, if he suffers those to escape the edge of it, that lie under the guilt of blood, which he by office is the avenger of. During the dominion of the papacy here in our own land, before the Reformation, there were some churches, and religious houses, (as they called them,) that were made sanctuaries for the protection of all sorts of criminals that fled to them, willful murderers not excepted, so that (as Stamford says, in his Plea of the Crown, lib. 2, ch. 38.) the government follows not Moses but Romulus, and it was not till about the latter end of Henry the Eighth's time, that this privilege of sanctuary for willful murder was taken away; when in that, as in other cases, the word of God came to be regarded more than the dictates of the see of Rome. And some have thought it would be a completing of that instance of reformation, if the benefit of clergy was taken away for man-slaughter, that is, the killing of a man upon a small provocation, since this law allowed refuge only in case of that which our law calls chance-medley. 2. It may be alluded to, to show that in Jesus Christ there is no refuge for presumptuous sinners, that go on still in their transgressions. If we thus sin wilfully, sin and go on in it, there remains no sacrifice, Heb. 10. 26. Those that fled to the cities of refuge, were taken away for man-slaughter, but not those that expect to be sheltered by him in their sins. Salvation itself cannot save such, divine justice will fetch them even from the city of refuge, the protection of which they are not entitled to.

14. Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's land-mark, which they of old time have set in thine inheritance, which thou shalt inherit in the land that the Lord thy God giveth thee to possess it. 15. One witness shall not rise up against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin, in any sin that he sinneth: at the mouth of two witnesses, or at the mouth of three witnesses, shall the matter be established. 16. If a false witness rise up against any man, to testify against him that which is wrong; 17. Then both the men, between whom the controversy is, shall stand before the Lord, before the priests and the judges which shall be in those days; 18. And the judges shall make diligent inquisition: and, behold, if the witness be a false witness, and hath testified falsely against his brother; 19. Then shall ye do unto him as he had thought to have done unto his brother: so shalt thou put the evil away from among you. 20. And those which remain shall hear, and fear, and shall henceforth commit no more any such evil among you. 21. And thine eye shall not pity; but life shall go for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot.

Here is a statute for the preventing of frauds and perjuries; for the divine law takes care of men's rights and properties, and has made a hedge about them. Such a friend is it to human society, and men's civil interest.

1. A law against frauds, v. 14. 1. Here is an implicit direction given to the first planters of Canaan, to fix land-marks, according to the distribution of the land to the several tribes and families by the lot. Note, It is every man's duty to mark out his own; and that all good means should be used to prevent encroachments, and the doing and suffering of wrong. When right is settled, care must be taken that it be not afterwards unsettled; and that, if possible, no occasion of dispute may arise. 2. An express law to postery set; not to remove those land-marks which were thus fixed at first, by which a man secretly got that which was his neighbour's. This, without doubt, is a moral precept, and still binding, and to us it forbids, (1.) The invading of any man's right, and taking to ourselves that which is not our own, by any fraudulent arts or practices, as by forging, concealing, destroying, or altering, deeds and writings, which are our land-marks, to which appeals are made; or by shifting hedger, meer-stones, and boundaries. Though the land-marks were set by the hand of man, yet he was a thief and a robber in the law of God, that removed them. Let every man be content with his own lot, and just to his neighbours, and then we shall have no land-marks removed. (2.) It forbids the sowing of discord among neighbours, and doing any thing to occasion strife and law-suits; which is done (and it is very ill done) by confounding those things which should determine disputes, and decide controversies. And, it forbids breaking in upon the settled order and constitution of civil government, and the altering of ancient usages without just cause. This law supports the honour of prescriptions. Consuetudo facit jus—Custom is to be held as law.
II. A law against perjuries, which enacts two things:
1. That a single witness should never be admitted to give evidence in a criminal cause, so as that sentence should be passed up on slight testimony, v. 13. This law we had before, Numb. 32. 30, and this book, ch. 17. 6. This was enacted in favour to the prisoner, whose life and honour should not lie at the mercy of a particular person that had a pique against him; and for caution to the accuser, not to say that which he could not corroborate by the testimony of another. It is a just shame which this law put upon mankind, as false and not to be trusted; and this may be it by its sanctifier and the house of God's grace, that the record he has given concerning his Son, is confirmed both in heaven and in earth by three witnesses, 1 John 5. 7. Let God be true and every man a liar, Rom. 3. 4.
2. That a false witness should incur the same punishment which was to have been inflicted upon the person he accused, v. 16. 21. (1.) The criminal here is a false witness, who is said to rise up against a man, not only because all witnesses stood up when they gave in their evidence, but because a false witness did indeed rise up as an enemy and an assailing against him whom he accused. If two, or three, or many witnesses, concurred in a false testimony, they were all liable to be prosecuted upon this law. (2.) The person wronged, or brought into peril by the false testimony, is supposed to be the appellee, v. 17. And yet if the person were put to death upon the evidence, and afterward it appeared to be false, any other person, or the judges themselves, ex officio—by virtue of their office, might call the false witness to account. (3.) Causes of this kind, having more than ordinary difficulty in them, were to be brought before the supreme court, the priests and judges, who are said to be before the Lord, because as other judges sat in the gates of their cities, so these at the gate of the sanctuary, ch. 17. 12. (4.) There must be greater care there upon a trial, v. 18. A diligent inquisition must be made into the characters of the persons, and all the circumstances of the case, which must be compared, that the truth might be found out; which, where it is thus faithfully and impartially inquired into, Providence, it may be hoped, will particularly advance the discovery of. (5.) If it appeared that a man had knowingly and maliciously borne false witness against his neighbour, though the mischief he designed him thereby, was not effected, he shall undergo the same penalty which his evidence would have brought his neighbour under, v. 19. Nec lex est justior utra—Nor could any law be more just. If the crime he accused his neighbour of, was to be punished with death, the false witness must be put to death; if with stripes, he must be beaten; if with a pecuniary mulct, he was to be fined the same sum. And because these witnesses considered not the heinousness of the crime, and the necessity of making this provision against it, it might seem hard to punish a man so severely for a few words' speaking, especially when no mischief did actually follow, it is added, (v. 21.) Thine eye shall not pity. No man needs to be more merciful than God. The benefit that will accrue to the public from this severity, will abundantly recompense it, v. 20. They that regard not the word shall be destroyed. Such verses, concerning very punishments will be warnings to others not to attempt any such mischief, when they see how he that made the pit and digged it, is fallen into the ditch which he made.

CHAP. XX.
This chapter settles the militia, and establishes the laws and ordinances of war, I. Relating to the soldiers. 1. Those must be encouraged, that were drawn up to battle, v. 1. 2. Those must be dismissed and sent back again, whose private affairs called for their attendance at home, (v. 5. 7.) or whose weakness and timidity unfitted them for service in the field, v. 8. 9. II. Relating to the enemies they made war with. 1. They must make with the cities that were far off, v. 10. 15. 2. The destruction they must make of the people in all that land they were going, v. 16. 18. 3. The care they must take, in besieging cities, not to destroy the fruit-trees, v. 19. 20.

1. WHEN thou goest out to battle against thine enemies, and seest horses and chariots, and a people more than thou, be not afraid of them: for the Lord thy God is with thee, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt. 2. And it shall be, when ye are come nigh unto the battle, that the priest shall approach, and speak unto the people. 3. And shall say unto them, Hear, O Israel, You approach this day unto battle against your enemies: let not your hearts faint; fear not, and do not tremble, neither be ye terrified because of them: 4. For the Lord your God is he that goeth with you, to fight for you against your enemies, to save you. 5. And the officers shall speak unto the people, saying, What man is there that hath built a new house, and hath not dedicated it? let him go and return to his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man dedicate it. 6. And what man is he that hath planted a vineyard, and hath not yet eaten of it? let him also go and return unto his house, lest he die in battle, and another man eat of it. 7. And what man is there that hath betrothed a wife, and hath not taken her? let him go and return unto his house, lest he die in battle, and another man take her. 8. And the officers shall speak further unto the people, and they shall say, What man is there that is fearful and faint-hearted! let him go and return unto his house, lest his brethren's heart faint as well as his heart. 9. And it shall be, when the officers have made an end of speaking unto the people, that they shall make captains of the armies to lead the people.

Israel was at this time to be considered rather as a camp, than as a kingdom, encamped upon an enemy's country, and not yet settled in a country of their own: and, beside the interest that they now entering on in order to their settlement, even after their settlement, they could neither protect nor enlarge their coast, without hearing the alarms of war: it was therefore needful that they should have direction given them in their military affairs: and in these verses they are directed in managing, marshalling, and drawing up, their own forces. And it is observable, that the discipline of war here prescribed, is so far from having any thing in it harsh or severe, as is usual in martial law, that the intent of the whole is, on the contrary, to encourage the soldiers, and to make their service easy to them. 1. They that were disposed to fight, must be encouraged, and animated against their fears. 1. Moses here gives a general encouragement, which the leaders and commanders in the war must take to themselves, v. 1, "Be not afraid of them. Though the enemy have ever so much the advantage, (being more than thou,) and though their armies be made up, in a great measure, of horses and chariots, which thou art not allowed to meet them, yet declare that coming to a battle with thee, dread not the issue, nor doubt of success." Two things they must encourage themselves with in their wars, provided they kept close to their God and their religion, otherwise they forfeited these encouragements. (1.) The presence of God with them, "The Lord thy God is with thee, and therefore thou art not in danger; nor needest thou be afraid." See Isa. 41. 6. Thrice had their fathers had had of God's power and goodness, in bringing them out of the land of Egypt, in defence of Pharaoh and all his hosts, which was not only in general, a proof of the divine omnipotence, but to them in particular, a pledge of what God would do further for them. He that saved them from those greater enemies, would not suffer them to be run down by those that were every way less considerable, and thus to have all he had done for them, undone again.

2. This encouragement must be particularly addressed to the common soldiers by a priest appointed, and, the Jews say, anointed, for that purpose, whom they call the Anointed of the war, a very proper title for our anointed Redeemer; the Captain of our salvation. This priest, in God's name, was to animate the people; to rouse them to the service of God, and thus he was as priest to pray for them. For the best encouragements arise from the precious promises made to the prayer of faith. This priest must, (1.) Charge them not to be afraid, (v. 3.) for nothing weakens the hands so much as that which makes the heart tremble, v. 3. There is need of precept upon precept to this purpose, as there is here, Let not your hearts be tender, (so the word is,) or yielding, in the impatience of fear, but let a believing confidence in the power and promise of God harden them. Fear not, and do not make haste, (so the word is,) for he that believeth, doth not make more haste than good speed. "Do not make haste either rashly to anticipate your advantages, or basely to fly off upon every disadvantage." (2.) He must assure them of the presence of God with them, to own and plead their righteous cause, and only will give them the victory from the sea, and cause them to give them victory over them, v. 4. Note, Those have no reason to fear, that have God with them. The giving of this encouragement by a priest, one of the Lord's ministers, intimates, [1.] That it is very fit that armies should have chaplains, not only to pray for them, but to preach to them, both to reprove that which would hinder their success, and to raise their hopes of it. [2.] That 'Tis the work of God to encourage his good soldiers in their spiritual conflicts with the world and the flesh, and to assure them of a conquest, yea, more than a conquest, through Christ that loved us.

II. They that were indisposed to fight, must be discharged; whether the indisposition did arise, 1. From the circumstances of a man's outward condition. He that sold a field, or purchased a new house, and had not taken possession of it, had not dedicated it, (v. 5.) that is, made a solemn festival for the entertainment of his friends, that came to him to welcome him to his house; let him go home and take the comfort of that which God has blessed him with, till, by enjoying it for some time, he becomes less fond of it, and consequently less disturbed at the thought of it, and more willing to die, and leave it. For that is the nature of all our worldly enjoyments, that they please us best at first; after a while we see the vanity of them. Some think that this dedication of their houses was a religious act, and that they took possession of them with prayers and praises, with a solemn devoting of themselves and their portion to God; David penned the 30th Psalm, on such an occasion, as appears by the title. Note, He that has a house of his own, should dedicate it to God, by setting up and keeping up the fear and worship of God in it, that he may have a church in his house; and nothing should be suffered to divert a man from this. Or, (2.) If a man had been at a great expense to build a mean house, and, longed to have the fruit of it; rich, for 10 years, he was forbidden to do, by that law, (Lev. 19, 23, &c.) let him go home, if he has a mind, and gratify his own humour with the fruits of it, v. 6. See how indulgent God is to his people in innocent things, and how far from being a hard Master. Since we naturally covet to eat the labour of our hands, rather than an Israelite should be crossed therein, his service in war shall be dispensed with.

Or, (3.) If man had made up his mind to be married, and the marriage was not solemnized, he was at liberty to return, (v. 7.) as also to tarry at home for one year after marriage, (ch. 24. 5.) for the terror of war would be disagreeable to a man who had just welcomed the soft scene of domestic attachment. And God would not be served in his wars by pressed men that were forced into them by necessity, but by those who were perfectly volunteers, (Ps. 110. 3.) Thy people shall be willing. In running the christian race, and fighting the good fight of faith, we must lay aside every weight, and all that which would clog and divert our minds, and make us unwilling. The Jewish writers agree that this liberty to return was allowed only in those wars which they made voluntarily, (as Bishop Patrick expresses it,) not those which were made by the divine command against Amalek and the Canaanites, in which every man was bound to fight.

2. If a man's indisposition to fight arose from the weakness and timidity of his own spirit, he had leave to return from the war, v. 8. This proclamation Gideon made to his army, and it detached above two thirds of them, Judg. 7. 3. Some make the fearfulness and fruitlessness, here supposed, to arise from the terrors of an evil conscience, which would make a man afraid to look death and danger in the face. It was then thought that men of loose and profligate lives would not be good soldiers, but must needs be both cowards in the army, and curses to it, the shame and trouble of the camp; and therefore those who were conscious to themselves of notorious guilt, were shaken off. But it seems rather to be meant of a natural fearfulness. It was partly in kindness to them, that they had their discharge; (though shamed, they were censed;) but much more in kindness to the rest of the army, who were hereby freed from the incumbrance of such as were useless and unserviceable, while the danger of infection from their cowardice and flight was prevented; that is the reason here given, Let his brethren's heart fail him, as his heart, fearfulness, catching, and in just army is of most pernicious consequence. We must take heed that we fear not the fear of them that are afraid, Isa. 8. 12.

Lastly, It is here ordered, that when all the cowards were dismissed, then captains should be nominated, (v. 9.) for it was in a special manner necessary, that the leaders and commanders should be men of spirit and resolution, who should not be made, when the army was first mustered and marshalled. The soldiers of Christ have need of courage, that they may acquit themselves like men,

10. When thou comest nigh unto a city to fight against it, then proclaim peace unto it. 11. And it shall be, if it make thee answer of peace, and open unto thee, then it shall be, that all the people that is found therein shall be tributaries unto thee, and they shall serve thee. 12. And if it will make no peace with thee, but will make war against thee, then thou shalt besiege it: 13. And when the Lord thy God, hath delivered it into thine hands, thou shalt smite every male thereof with the edge of the sword: 14. But the women, and the little ones, and the cattle, and all that is in the city, even all the spoil thereof, shalt thou take unto thyself; and thou shalt eat the spoil of thine enemies, which the Lord thy God hath given thee. 15. Thus shalt thou do unto all the cities which are very far off from thee, which are not of the cities of these nations. 16. But of the cities of these people, which the Lord thy God doth give thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth: 17. But thou shalt utterly destroy them; namely, the Hittites, and the Amorites, the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, as the Lord thy God hath commanded thee: 18. That they teach you not to do after all their abominations, which they have done unto their gods; so should ye sin against the Lord your God. 19. When thou shalt besiege a city a long time, in making war against it to take it, thou shalt not destroy the trees thereof by forcing an axe against them: for thou mayest eat of them, and thou shalt not cut them down (for the tree of the field is man’s life) to employ them in the siege: 20. Only the trees which thou knowest that they be not trees for meat, thou shalt destroy and cut them down; and thou shalt build bulwarks against the city that maketh war with thee, until it be subdued.

They are here directed what method to take in dealing with the cities, (those only are mentioned, v. 10, but doubtless the armies in the field, and the nations they had occasion to deal with, are likewise intended,) upon which they made war. They must not make a descent upon any of their neighbours, till they had first given them fair notice, by a public manifesto, or remonstrance, stating the ground of their quarrel with them. In dealing with the worst of enemies, the laws of justice and honour must be observed; and as the sword must never be taken in hand without cause, so not without cause shown. War is an appeal, in which the merits of the cause must be set forth. I. Even to the proclamation of war must be subjoined a tender of peace, if they would accept of it upon reasonable terms. That is, (say the Jewish writers,) ‘upon condition that they renounce idolatry, worship the God of Israel, as proselytes of the gate that were not circumcised, joy to their new masters a yearly tribute, and submit to their government,’ on these terms the process of war should be stayed, and their conquerors, upon this submission, were to be their protectors, v. 10, 11. Some think that even the seven nations of Canaan were to have this offer of peace made to them; and the offer was no jest or mockery, though it was of the Lord to harden their hearts, that they should not accept it, Josh. 11. 20. Others think that they are excluded, (v. 16.) not only from the benefit of that law, (v. 13.) which confines military execution to the males only, but from the benefit of this also, which allows not to make war till peace was refused. And I see not how they could proclaim peace to the lands by the law were to be utterly rooted out, and to whom they were to show no mercy, ch. 7. 2. But for any other nation which they made war upon, either for the enlarging of their coast, the avenging of any wrong done, or the recovery of any right denied, they must first proclaim peace to them. Let this show, 1. God’s grace in dealing with sinners: though he might most justly and easily destroy them, yet, having no proper measure in their case, he warns them of the danger of their course, and seeth them to be reconciled; so that they who lie most obnoxious to his justice, and ready to fall as sacrifices to it, if they make him an answer of peace, and open to him, upon condition that they should be tributaries and servants to him, shall not only be saved from ruin, but incorporated with his Israel, as fellow-citizens with the saints. 2. Let it show us our duty in dealing with our brethren; if any quarrel happen, let us not only be ready to hearken to the prepossals of peace, but forward to make such proposals. We should never make use of the law, till we have first tried to accommodate matters in variance amicably, and without expense and vexation. We must be for peace, whoever are at war.

II. If the offers for peace were not accepted, then they must proceed to push on the war. And let those to whom God offers peace, know, that if they reject the offer, and take not the benefit of it within the time limited, judgment will rejoice against mercy in the execution, as much as new mercy rejoices against judgment in the reprieve. In this case here, 1. There is a promise implied, that they should be victorious. It is taken for granted, (v. 13.) that the Lord their God would deliver it to them, and to their hands, and give them the spoil of their enemies, which we undertake by a divine warrant, and prosecute by divine direction, we may expect to succeed in. If we take God’s method, we shall have his blessing. 2. They are ordered, in honour to the public justice, to put all the soldiers to the sword, for them I understand by every male, (v. 13.) all that bore arms (as all then did, that were able). But the spoil they are allowed to take to themselves, which is mentioned, v. 14., is given to the women and children. Note, A justifiable property is acquired in that which is won in lawful war; God himself owns the title, the Lord thy God gives it thee, and therefore he must be owned in it, Ps. 44. 3.

III. The nations of Canaan are excepted from the merciful provisions made by this law. Remnants might be left of the cities that were very far off, (v. 13.) and in such cities there was much danger of being infected with idolatry; nor was their country so directly and immediately in tended in the promise. But of the cities which were given to Israel for an inheritance, no remnant must be left of their inhabitants, (v. 16.) for it put a slight upon the promise, to admit Canaanites to share with them in the peculiar land of promise.
And for another reason they must be utterly destroyed, v. 17. Because since it could not be expected that they should be cured of their idolatry, if they were left with that plague-sore upon them, they would be in danger of infecting God's Israel, who were too apt to take the infection, v. 18. They will teach you to do after their abominations, to introduce their customs into the worship of the God of Israel, and to form false gods, and to worship false gods; for those that dare violate the second commandment, will not long keep to the first. Strange worshipers open the door to strange deities. Lastly, Care is here taken, that in the besieging of cities there should not be any destruction made of fruit-trees, v. 19, 20. In those times, when besiegers forced their way not, as now, with bombs and cannon-ball, but with battering rams, they had occasion to use timber-trees for the purposes of their sieges: now because, in the heat of war, men are not apt to consider, as they ought, the public good, it is expressly provided that fruit-trees should not be used as timber-trees. That reason, for the tree of the field is man's, (the word life, we supply,) all the ancient versions, the Septuagint, Targums, &c. read, For is the tree of the field a man? Or, The tree of the field is a man, that it should come against thee in the siege, or, retire from thee into the bulwark. "Do not briskly vent thy rage against the trees that can do thee no harm." But our translation seems most agreeable to the intent of the law; and it teaches us, 1. That God is a better Friend to man than he is to himself; and God's law, which we are apt to complain of as a heavy yoke, consults our interest and comfort, while our own appetites and passions, which we are indulgent of, are really enemies to our welfare. The intent of many of the divine precepts is, to restrain us from destroying that which is our life and food. 2. That armies, and their commanders, are not allowed to make what desolation they please in the countries that are the seat of war. Military rage must always be checked and ruled with reason. War, though carried on with ever so much caution, is destructive enough, and should not be made more so than is absolutely necessary. Generous spirits will show themselves tender, not only of men's lives, but of their livelihoods; for though the life is more than meat, yet it will soon be nothing without meat. 3. The Jews understand this as a prohibition of all wilful waste upon any account whatsoever. No fruit-tree is to be destroyed, unless it be barren, and cumber the ground. "Nay," they maintain, "to tear up trees, to destroy the breeze that is brought hither for the planting of trees, is an inexpressible evil, Thou shalt not destroy." Christ took care that the broken meat should be gathered up, that nothing might be lost. Every creature of God is good, and as nothing is to be refused, so nothing is to be abused. We may live to want what we carelessly waste.

CHAP. XXI.

In this chapter provision is made, I. For the putting away of the guilt of blood from the land, when that shed it, was fled from justice, v. 1-9. II. For the preserving of the honour of a virgin married, v. 10-14. III. For the securing of the right of a first-born son, though he were not a favourite, v. 15-17. IV. For the restraining and punishing of a rebellious son, v. 18-21. V. For the maintaining of the honour of human bodies, which must not be hanged in chains, but decently buried, even the bodies of the worst malefactors, v. 22, 23.

1. If one be found slain in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee to possess it, lying in the field, and it be not known who hath slain him: 2. Then thy elders and thy judges shall come forth, and they shall measure unto the cities which are round about him that is slain: 3. And it shall be, that the city which is next unto the slain man, even the elders of that city, shall take a heifer which hath not been yoked with, and which hath not drawn in the yoke: 4. And the elders of that city shall bring down the heifer unto a rough valley, which is neither eared nor sown, and shall strike off the heifer's neck there in the valley: 5. And the priests the sons of Levi shall come near, (for them the Lord thy God hath chosen to minister unto him,) and to bless in the name of the Lord,) and by their word shall every controversy and every stroke be tried. 6. And all the elders of that city, that are next unto the slain man, shall wash their hands over the heifer that is beheaded in the valley: 7. And they shall answer and say, Our hands have not shed this blood, neither have our eyes seen it. 8. Be merciful, O Lord, unto thy people Israel, whom thou hast redeemed; and lay not innocent blood unto thy people of Israel's charge. And the blood shall be forgiven them. 9. So shalt thou put away the guilt of innocent blood from among you, when thou shalt do that which is right in the sight of the Lord.

Care had been taken by some preceding laws for the vigorous and effectual prosecution of a wilful murderer, (ch. 19. 11, &c.) the putting of whom to death was the putting away of the guilt of blood from the land; but if that could not be done, the murderer not being discovered, they must not think that the land was in no danger of contracting any pollution, because it was not through any neglect of their's that the murderer was unpunished; no, a great solemnity is here provided for the putting away of the guilt, as an expression of their dread and detestation of that sin.

I. The case supposed is, that one is found slain, and it is not known who slew him, v. 1. The providence of God has sometimes wonderfully brought to light, which might have been lost in the hidden works of darkness, and by strange occurrences the sin of the guilty has found them out: insomuch that it is become a proverb, Murder will out; but it is not always so; and now and then the Devil's promises of secrecy and impunity in this world are made good; yet it is but for awhile; there is a time coming, when secret murderers will be discovered; the earth shall disclose her blood, (Isa. 26. 21.) upon the inquisition which makes for its own end an eternal coming, when they that escaped punishment from men, will lie under the righteous judgment of God. And the impunity with which so many murders and other wickednesses are committed in this world, makes it necessary that there should be a day of judgment, to require that which is just, Ecol. 3. 13.

II. Directions are given concerning what is to be done in this case. It is taken for granted that a diligent search has been made for the murderer, witnesses examined, and circumstances strictly inquired into, that if possible they might find out the guilty person; but if, after all, they could not trace it out, nor fasten the charge upon any, then, 1. The elders of the next city (that had a court of three and twenty in it) were to concern themselves about this matter. If it were doubtful which city was next, the great Sanhedrim were to send commissioners to determine that matter, by an exact measure v. 2, 3. Note, Public persons must be solicitous about the public good: and those that are in office must do their utmost care and diligence to prevent, discover, and punish, murder. Even the heathen mariners dreaded the guilt of blood, Jon. 1. 14. (3.) That we might all learn to take heed of partaking in other men’s sins, and making ourselves accessory to them ex post facto—after the fact, by countenancing the sin or sinner, and not witnessing against it in our places. We have fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, if we do not reprove rather, and bear our testimony against them; the repentance of the church of Corinth for the sin of one of their members, produced such a carefulness, such a clearing of themselves, such a holy indignation, fear and revenge, (2 Cor. 7. 11.) as were signifyed by the solemnity here appointed.

10. When thou goest forth to war against thine enemies, and the Lord thy God hath delivered them into thine hands, and thou hast taken them captive, 11. And seest among the captives a beautiful woman, and hast a desire unto her, that thou wouldst have her to thy wife; 12. Then thou shalt bring her home to thine house; and she shall shave her head, and pare her nails; 13. And she shall put the remnant of her captivity from off her, and shall remain in thine house, and bewail her father and her mother a full month: and after that thou shalt go in unto her, and be her husband, and she shall be thy wife. 14. And it shall be, if thou have no delight in her, then thou shalt let her go whither she will; but thou shalt not sell her at all for money, thou shalt not make merchandise of her, because thou hast humbled her.

By this law a soldier is allowed to marry his captive, if he pleased. For the hardness of their hearts, Moses gave them this permission, lest, if they had not liberty given them to marry such, they should have taken liberty to defile themselves with them, and by such wickedness the camp would have been troubled. The man is supposed to have a wife already, and to take this wife for a secondary wife, as the Jews called them. This indulgence of men’s inordinate desires, in which their hearts walked after their eyes, is by no means agreeable to the law of Christ, which therefore in this respect, among others, far exceeds in glory the law of Moses. The gospel permits not him that has one wife, to take another, for from the beginning it was not so: the gospel forbids looking upon a woman, though a beautiful one, to lust after her, and commands the mortifying and denying of all irregular desires, though it be as uneasy as the cutting off of a right hand; so much does our holy religion, more than that of the Jews, advance the honour, and support the dominion, of the soul over the body, the spirit over the flesh, consonant to the glorious discovery it makes of life and immortality, and the better hope.

But though military men were allowed this liberty, yet care is here taken that they should not abuse it; that is,
I. That they should not abuse themselves by doing it too hastily, though the captive was ever so desirable. "If thou wouldst have her to thy wife, (v. 10, 11.) it is true, thou needest not ask her parents' consent, for she is thy captive, and is at thy disposal. But, 1. Thou shalt have no familiar intercourse, till thou hast married her." This allowance was designed to gratify, not a filthy brutish lust, in the heat and fury of its rebellion against reason and virtue, but an honourable and generous affection to a comely and amiable person, though, in distress; therefore he may make her his wife if he will, but he must not deal with her as with a harlot. 2. "Thou shalt not marry her of a sudden, but keep her a full month in thy house," v. 12, 13. This he must do, either, (1.) That he may try to take his affection off from her; for he must know, that, though in marrying her he does not do ill, (so the law then stood,) yet, in letting her alone, he does much better. Let her therefore shave her head, that he might not be enamoured with her locks, and let her nails grow, (so the margin reads it,) to spoil the beauty of her hand.

II. It is likewise provided that they should not abuse the poor captive. 1. She must have time to bewail her father and mother, from whom she was separated, and without whose consent and blessing she is now likely to be married, and perhaps to a common soldier of Israel, though in her country quite a noble-born and bred. To force a marriage till these matters were regulated was some measure got over, and she was better reconciled to the land of her captivity, by being better acquainted with it, would be very unkind. She must not bewail her idols, but be glad to part with them; to her near and dear relations only her affection must be thus indulged. 2. If, upon second thoughts, he that had brought her to his house with a purpose to marry her, changed his mind and would not marry her, he might not make merchandise of her, or of his other prisoners, but must give her liberty to return, if she pleased, to her own country, because he had humbled her, and afflicted her, by raising expectations, and then disappointing them; (v. 14.) having made a fool of her, he might not make a prey of her. This intimates how binding the laws of justice and honour are, particularly in the pretensions of love, the church of affections, and the promises of marriage, which are to be looked upon as solemn things that have something sacred in them, and therefore are not to be jested with.

15. If a man have two wives, one beloved, and another hated, and they have borne him children, both the beloved and the hated; and if the first-born son be hers that was hated: 16. Then it shall be, when he maketh his sons to inherit that which he hath, that he may not make the son of the beloved first-born before the son of the hated, which is indeed the first-born. 17. But he shall acknowledge the son of the hated for the first-born, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath: for he is the beginning of his strength; the right of the first-born is his.

This law restrains men from disinheriting their eldest sons, out of mere caprice, and without just provocation.

1. The case here put, (v. 15.) is very instructive. (1.) It shows the great mischief of having more wives than one, which the law of Moses did not restrain, probably, in hopes that men's own experience of the great inconvenience of it in families, instead of it, because he was thus made by them a law to others. Observe the supposition, that a man have two wives, it is a thousand to one but one of them is beloved and the other hated, that is, manifestly loved less; is Leah was by Jacob, and the effect of this cannot but be strife and jealousies, envy, confusion, and every evil work, which could not but create a constant uneasiness and vexation to the husband, and involve him both in sin and sorrow. In a marriage of two, he must do much more for the children's affection and amour than was the case, and satisfaction, who adhere to God's law, than those who indulge their own lusts. (2.) It shows how Providence commonly sides with the weakest, and gives more abundant honour to that part which lacked; for the first-born son is here supposed to be her's that was hated, it was so in Jacob's family, because the Lord saw that Leah was hated, Gen. 30. 1. The great Householder wisely gives to each his dividend of comfort; if one had the honour to be the beloved wife, it often proved that the other had the honour to be the mother of the first-born.

2. The law in this case is still binding to parents; they must give their children their right without partiality. In the case supposed, the eldest son, though the son of the less beloved wife, must have his birth-right privilege, which was a double portion of the father's estate, because he was the beginning of his strength, that is, in him his family began to be strengthened, and his quiver began to be filled with the arrows of a mighty man, (Ps. 127. 4.) and therefore the right of the first-born is his, v. 16, 17. Jacob had indeed deprived Reuben of his birth-right, and given it to Joseph, but it was because Reuben had forfeited the birth-right by his sin, and not, because he was the son that was hated; now lest that which Jacob did unjustly, should be drawn into a precedent, for others to do the same thing unjustly, it is here provided that when the father makes his will, or otherwise settles his estate, the child shall not fare the worse for the mother's unhappiness in having less of her husband's love, for that was not the child's fault. Note, (1.) Parents ought to make no other difference in disposing of their estates, affecting their children, than what they see plainly God makes in dispensing his grace among them. (2.) Since it is the providence of God that makes heirs, the disposal of provision in that matter must be acquiesced in, and not opposed. No son should be abandoned by his father, till he manifestly appear to be abandoned of God, which is hard to say of any while there is life.

18. If a man have a stubborn and rebellious son, which will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother, and that, when they have chastened him, will not hearken unto them; 19. Then shall his father and his mother lay hold on him.
and bring him out unto the elders of his city, and unto the gate of his place: 20. And they shall say unto the elders of his city, This our son is stubborn and rebellious: he will not obey our voice; he is a glutton, and a drunkard. 21. And all the men of his city shall stone him with stones, that he die: so shalt thou put evil away from among you: and all Israel shall hear, and fear. 22. And if a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and he be to be put to death, and thou hang him on a tree; 23. His body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt in any wise bury him that day; (for he that is hanged is accursed of God;) that thy land be not defiled, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.

I. A law for the punishing of a rebellious son. Having in the former law provided that parents should not deprive their children of their right, it was fit that it should next be provided that children withdraw not the honour and duty which are owing to their parents, for there is no partiality in the divine law.

Observe, 1. How the criminal is here described. He is a stubborn and rebellious son, v. 18. No child was to fare the worse for the weakness of his capacity, the slovenliness of his understanding, but for his wilfulness and obstinacy. If he carry himself proudly and insolently toward his parents, contemn their authority, slight their reproofs and admonitions, disobey the express commands they give him for his own good, hate to be reformed by the correction they give him, shame their family, grieve their hearts, waste their substance, and threaten to ruin their estate by riotous living: this is a stubborn and rebellious son. He is particularly supposed (v. 20.) to be a glutton or a drunkard. This intimates either, (1.) That these were sins which his parents did in a particular manner warn him against, and therefore that these insolence and obstinacy, with the like great sin, the devil will not obey their voice. Leman said this charge from his mother, Prov. 31. 4. Note, In the education of children, great care should be taken to suppress all inclinations to drunkenness, and to keep them out of the way of temptations to it; in order hereunto they should be possessed betimes with a dread and detestation of that beastly sin, and taught betimes to deny themselves. Or, (2.) That his being a glutton and a drunkard was the cause of his insolence and obstinacy toward his parents. Note, There is nothing that draws men into all manner of wickedness, and hardens them in it, more certainly and fatally, than drunkenness does. When men take to drink, they forget the law, (Prov. 31. 5.) even that fundamental law of honouring parents.

2. How this criminal is to be proceeded against. His own father and mother are to be his prosecutors, v. 19, 20. They might not put him to death themselves, but they must complain of him to the elders of the city, and the complaint must needs be made with a sad heart, This our son is stubborn and rebellious. Note, Those that give up themselves to vice and wickedness, and will not be reclaimed, forfeit their interest in the natural affections of their nearest relations; the instruments of their being unjustly become the instruments of their destruction.

The children that forget their duty must think themselves and not blame their parents, if they are regarded with less and less affection. And how difficult sooner tender parents now find it to reconcile their sons to the just punishment of their disobedience, in the day of the revelation of the righteous judgment of God, all natural affection will be so entirely-swallowed up in divine love, that they will acquiesce even in the condemnation of those children, because God will be therein for ever glorified.

3. What judgment is to be executed upon him; he must be publicly stoned to death. He shall be stoned to death by the city, v. 21. The reasons, (1.) That the paternal authority was supported, and God, our common Father, showed himself jealous for it, being one of the first and most ancient streams derived from him that is the Fountain of all power. (2.) This law, if duly executed, would early destroy the wicked of the land, (Ps. 101. 8.) and prevent the spreading of the gangrene, by cutting off the corrupt part betimes; for those that were bad members of families, would not otherwise make good members of the commonwealth. (3.) It would strike an awe upon children, and frighten them into obedience to their parents, if they would not otherwise be brought to their duty, and kept in it. All Israel shall hear. The Jews say, "The elders that condemned him, were to send notice of it in writing all the nation over, In such a court, such a day, we stoned such a one, because he was a stubborn and rebellious son." And I have sometimes wished, that as in all our courts there is an exact record kept of the condemnation of criminals in perpetuum remi memoriam—that the memorial may never be lost, so there might be public and authentic notice given in print to the kingdom, of such condemnations, and the executions upon them, by the elders themselves, in terrors—that all may hear and fear.

I. A law for the punishing of a rebellious son. The following are the several facts that were hanged, v. 22. The hanging of them by the neck till the body was dead, was not used at all among the Jews, as we with; but of such as were stoned to death, if it were for blasphemy, or some other very execrable crime, it was usual, by order of the judges, to hang up the dead bodies upon a post, for some time, as a spectacle to the world, to express the ignomy of the crime, and to strike the greater awe and terror upon others, that they might not only hear and fear, but see and fear. Now it is here provided that whatever time of the day they were thus hung up, at sun-set they should be taken down and buried, and not left to hang out all night; sufficient (says the law) to such a man is this punishment; hitherto let it go, but no further. Let the malefactor and his crime be hid in the grave.

Now, 1. God would thus preserve the honour of human bodies and tenderness towards the worst of criminals. The time of exposing dead bodies thus, is limited, for the same reason that the number of stripes was limited by another law, lest thy brother seem vile unto thee. Punishing by death God reserves to himself; as for man, there is no more that he can do. Whether therefore the hanging of malefactors in so many places and hanging up their heads and quarters, be decent among christians that look for the resurrection of the body, may perhaps be worth considering. 2. Yet it is plain there was something ceremonial in it; by the law of Moses, the touch of a dead body was defiling, and therefore dead bodies must not be hanging up in the country, because, by the same rule, that would defile the land. But, 3. There is one reason here given which has reference to Christ. He that is hanged, is accursed of God, that is, it is the highest degree of disgrace and reproach that can be done to a man, and proclaims him under the curse of God as much as any external punishment can. They that see him thus hang between heaven and earth, will conclude him abandoned of both, and unworthy of either; and therefore let him not hang all night, for that will carry it too far. Now the apostle showing how Christ has redeemed us from the curse of the law, by being himself made a curse for us, illustrates it by comparing this brand here put on him that was hanged on a tree, with the death of Christ, Gal. 3. 13. Moses, by the Spirit, uses this phrase of being accursed of God, when he means no more than being treated most ignominiously, that it might afterward be applied to the death of Christ, and might show that in it he underwent the curse of the law for us, which is a great enhancement of his love, and a great encouragement to our faith in him. And (as the excellent Bishop Patrick well observes) this passage is applied to the death of Christ, not only because he bare our sins and was despised to shame, as these malefactors were that were accursed of God, but because he was in the evening taken down from the accursed tree and buried, (and that by the particular care of the Jews, with an eye to this law, John 19. 31.) in token that now, the guilt being removed, the law was satisfied, as it was when the malefactor had hanged till sun-set; it demanded no more. Then he ceased to be a curse, and those that are his. And Israel is declared dead and buried, when the dead body was buried, so the church is washed and cleansed by the complete satisfaction which thus Christ made.

CHAP. XXII.

The laws of this chapter provide, I. For the preservation of charity and good neighbourliness, in the care of stray cattle, where it is discovered that they had gone astray, v. 1, 2. This must be done, in pity to the very cattle, which, while they wandered, were exposed; and in civility and respect to the owner, nay, and in justice to him, for it was doing as we would be done by, which is one of the fundamental laws of equity. Note, Religion teaches us to be neighbourly, and to be ready to do all good offices, as we have opportunity, to all men. In doing this,

1. (1.) They must not mind trouble; but if they knew not who the owner was, must bring it back themselves; for if they should only send notice to the owner to come and look after it himself, some mischief might befall it ere he could reach it. (2.) They must not mind expense: but if they knew not who the owner was, they must take it home, and feed it till the owner was found. If such care must be taken of a neighbour's ox or ass going astray, much more of himself going astray from God and his duty; we should do our utmost to convert him (Jam. 3. 19.) and restore him, considering ourselves, Gal. 6. 1.

2. That lost goods should be brought to the owner, v. 3. The Jews say, "He that found the lost goods, was to give public notice of them by the common crier three or four times," according to the usage with us; if the owner could not be found, he that found the goods might convert them to his own use; but (say some learned writers in this case) he would do very well to give the value of the goods to the poor.

3. That cattle in distress should be helped, v. 4. This must be done, both in compassion to the brute-creatures, for a merciful man regardeth the life of a beast, though it be not his own, and in love and friendship to our neighbour, not knowing how soon we may have occasion for his help. If one member may say to another, "I have at present no need of thee," it cannot say, "I never shall." 5. The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment: for all that do so are abomination unto the Lord thy God. 6. If a bird's nest chance to be before thee in the way in any tree, or on the ground, whether they be young ones or eggs, and the dam sitting upon the young or upon the eggs, thou shalt not take the dam with the young: 7. But thou shalt in any wise let the dam go, and take the young to thee; that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days. 8. When thou buildest a new house, then thou shalt make a battlement for thy roof, that thou bring not blood upon thine house, if any man fall from thence. 9. Thou shalt not sow thy vineyard with divers seeds; lest the fruit of thy seed which thou hast sown, and the fruit of thy vineyard, be defiled. 10. Thou shalt not plough with an ox and an ass together. 11. Thou shalt not wear a garment of divers sorts, as of woollen and linen together. 12. Thou shalt make thee fringes upon the four quarters of thy vesture, wherein with thou coverest thyself.

Here are several laws in these verses, which seem to stoop very low, and to take cognizance of things mean and minute; men's laws commonly do not so; De minimis non curat lex—The law takes no cognizance of little things; but because
DEUTERONOMY, XXII.

God's providence extends itself to the smallest affairs, his precepts do so, that even in them we may be in the fear of the Lord, as we are under his eye and care. And yet the significance and tendency of these statutes, which seem little, are such, that, notwithstanding their minuteness, being found among the things of God's law, which he has written to the very ends of the earth, be great things.

I. The distinction of sexes by the scribes, to be kept up, for the preservation of our own and our neighbour's chastity, v. 5. Nature itself teaches that a difference be made between them in their hair, (1 Cor. 11. 14.) and by the same rule in their clothes, which therefore ought not to be confounded, either in ordinary wear, or occasionally. To befriend a lawful escape or concealment, it may be granted, be it to the Lord. Yes, even in that, he may, by his wisdom, provide, that which he has commanded, and yet prevent, all its evils. Thus, by the Lord, in the fray, is that virtue, which he himself taught his disciples not to follow, (Matt. 10. 39; Matt. 26. 11.)

II. In taking a bird's nest, the dam must be let go, v. 6, 7. The Jews say, "This is the least of all the commandments of the law of Moses," and yet the same promise is here made to the observance of it, that it is made to the keeping of the fifth commandment, which is one of the greatest, that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest prolong thy days; for as disobedience in a small matter shows a very great contempt of the law, so obedience in a small matter shows a very great regard to it. He that let go a bird out of his hand, (which was worth the feather of a bird, though it was but a nest,) purely because God bid him, in that made it to appear that he esteemed all God's precepts concerning all things to be right, and that he could deny himself rather than sin against God. But doth God take care for birds? 1 Cor. 9. 9. Yes, certainly; and perhaps to this law our Saviour alludes, Luke 12. 6. Are not five sparrows sold for two farthings; and not one of them is forgotten before God? This law, I. 1. forbids us to be cruel to the brute creatures, or to take a pleasure in destroying them. Though God has made us wiser than the fowls of heaven, and given us dominion over them, yet must we not abuse them, nor rule them with rigour. Let go the dam to breed again; destroy it not, for a blessing is in it, Isa. 65. 8. 2. It teaches us compassion to those of our own kind, and to abhor the thought of every thing that looks barbarous and cruel, and, even in the most tender and delicate sex, which always ought to be treated with the utmost respect, in consideration of the sorrows wherein they bring forth children. It is spoken of as an instance of the most inhuman cruelty, that the mother was dashed to pieces upon her children, (Hos. 10. 14.) and that the women with child were slain, (Zech. 14. 1.) It is also true of some of our own sex, that we must not take advantage against any, from their natural affection, and the tenderness of their disposition, to do them an injury. The dam could not have been taken, if her concern for her eggs or young (unlike to the ostrich) had not detained her upon the nest, when otherwise she could easily have secured herself by flight. Now, since it is a thousand pities that she should fare the worse for that which is her praise, the law takes care that she shall be let go. The remembrance of this may, perhaps, some time or other, keep us from doing a hard or unkind thing to those whom we have at our mercy.

III. In building a house, care must be taken to make it safe, that none might receive mischief by falling from it, v. 8. The roofs of their houses were flat, that they might be occupied for walks on them. If there be in these scriptures; now, lest any, through carelessness, should fall off them, they must compass them with battlements, which (the Jews say) must be three feet and a half high; if this were not done, and mischief followed, the owner, by his neglect, brought the guilt of blood upon his house. See here, 1. How precious men's lives are to God, who protects them not only by his laws, but by his law. 2. How precious, therefore, they are to the poor, and what care we should take to prevent hurt coming to any person. The Jews say, that by the equity of this law they are obliged (and so are we too) to fence, or remove every thing by which life may be endangered, as to cover draw-wells, keep bridges in repair, and the like; lest if any perish through our omission, their blood be required at our hand. Much of this we met with before, Lev. 19. 19. There appears not any thing at all of moral evil in these things, and therefore we now make no conscience of sowing wheat and rye together, ploughing with horses and oxen together, and of wearing linsy-woolsey garments; but hereby is forbidden either, 1. A conformity to some idolatrous customs of the heathen; or, 2. That which is contrary to the plainness and purity of an Israelite. They must not gratify their own vanity and curiosity by putting those things together, which the creator in infinite wisdom had made answerable; they must not be unequally yoked with unbelievers; nor mingle themselves with the unclean, as an ox with an ass. Nor must their profession and appearance in the world be motley, or parti-coloured, but all of a piece, all of a kind.

V. The law concerning fringes upon their garments, and memorandums of the commandments, which we had before, (Num. 15. 38, 39.) is here repeated, v. 12. By these they were distinguished from other people, so that it might be said, upon the first sight, There goes an Israelite; which taught them not to be ashamed of their country, or the peculiarities of their religion, how much soever they might be reviled and persecuted. It is the history of all great men and women, that they have taken up with contempt: and they were also put in mind of their precepts, upon the particular occasions to which they had reference; and perhaps the law is repeated here, because the precepts immediately foregoing seemed so minute, that they were in danger of being overlooked and forgotten. The fringes will remind you not to make your garments of linen and woollen, v. 11.

13. If any man take a wife, and go in unto her, and hate her, 14. And give occasions of speech against her, and bring up an evil name upon her, and say, I took this woman, and, when I came to her, I found her not a maid: 15. Then shall the father of the damsel, and her mother, take and bring forth the tokens of the damsel's virginity unto the elders of the city in the gate: 16. And the damsel's father shall say unto the elders, I gave my daughter unto this man to wife, and he hateth her; 17. And, lo, he hath given occasions of speech against her, saying, I found not thy daughter a maid; and yet these are the tokens of my daughter's virginity: And they shall spread the cloth before the elders of the city. 18. And the elders of that city shall take that man, and chastise him; 19. And they shall amerce him in a hundred shekels of silver, and give them unto the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin of Israel: and she shall be his wife; he may not put her away all his days. 20. But if this thing be true, and the tokens of virginity be not found for the damsel: 21. Then they shall bring out the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her city shall stone her with stones that she die; because she hath wrought folly in Israel, to play the whore in her father's house: so shalt thou put evil away from among you. 22. If a man be found lying with a woman married to a husband, and they shall both of them die, both the man that lay with the woman, and the woman: so shalt thou put away evil from among you. 23. If a damsel that is a virgin be betrothed unto a husband, and a man find her in the city, and lie with her; 24. Then ye shall bring them both out unto the gate of that city, and ye shall stone them with stones that they die; the damsel because she cried not, being in the city; and the man, because he hath humbled his neighbour's wife: so thou shalt put away evil from among you. 25. But if a man find a betrothed damsel in the field, and the man force her, and lie with her; then the man only that lay with her shall die: 26. But unto the damsel thou shalt do nothing; there is in the damsel no sin worthy of death: for as when a man riseth against his neighbour, and slayeth him, even so is this matter: 27. For he found her in the field, and the betrothed damsel cried, and there was none to save her. 28. If a man find a damsel that is a virgin, which is not betrothed, and lay hold on her, and lie with her, and they be found; 29. Then the man that lay with her shall give unto the damsel's father fifty shekels of silver, and she shall be his wife: because he hath humbled her, he may not put her away all his days. 30. A man shall not take his father's wife, nor discover his father's skirt.

These laws relate to the seventh commandment, laying a restraint, by laying a penalty, upon those fleshly lusts which war against the soul.

1. If a man, lustful after another woman, to get rid of his wife, slander her and falsely accuse her, as not having the virginity she pretended to when he married her, upon the disproof of his slander, he must be punished, v. 13. 19. What the meaning of that evidence is, by which the husband's accusation was to be proved false, the learned are not agreed, nor is it all necessary to inquire—they for whom this law was intended, no doubt, understood it: it is sufficient for us to know that this wicked husband, who had thus endeavoured to ruin the reputation of his own wife, was to be scourged, and fined, and bound up from ever divorcing the wife he had thus abused, v. 18, 19. Upon this dislike of his, he might have divorced her, if he had pleased, by the permission of the law, (ch. 24. 1.) but then he must have given her her dowry; if therefore, to save that, and to do her the greater mischief, he would thus destroy her good name, it was fit that he should be severely punished for it, and for ever after forfeit the permission to divorce her. Observe, 1. The nearer any are in relation to us, the greater sin it is to belie them, and blight their reputation. It is spoken of as a crime of the highest nature to slander their own mother's son, (Ps. 50. 20.) who is next to thyself, much more to slander thine own wife, or thine own husband, that is thyself: it is an ill bird indeed, that defiles its own nest. 2. Chastity is honour as well as virtue, and which gives occasion for the suspicion of it, is as great a reproach and disgrace as any other whatsoever: in this matter, therefore, above any thing, we should be higher than the处分 of a good name and that of others. 3. Parents must look upon themselves as concerned to vindicate the reputation of their children, for it is a branch of their own.

II. If the woman that was married as a virgin, were not found to be one, she was to be stoned to death at her father's door, v. 20, 21. If the uncleanness had been committed before she was betrothed, it would not have been punished as a capital crime; but she must die for the abuse she put upon him whom she married, being conscious to herself of her being defiled, while she made him believe her to be a chaste and modest woman. But some think that her uncleanness was punished with death, only in case it was committed after she was betrothed, supposing there were few come to maturity but what were betrothed, though not yet married. Now, 1. This gave a powerful caution to young women to flee fornication, since, however concealed before, so as not to mar their marriage, it would, very likely, be discovered after, to their perpetual infamy and utter ruin. 2. It is intimated to parents, that they must by all means possible preserve their children's chastity, by giving them good advice and admonition, setting them good examples, keeping them from bad company, staying for them, and laying them under needful restraints; because, if the children committed lewdness, the parents must have the grief and shame of the execution at their own door. That phrase of folly wrought in Israel, was used concerning this very crime in the case of Dinah, Gen. 34. 7. All sin is folly, uncleanness especially; but above all, uncleanness in Israel, by profession a holy people.

III. If any man, single or married, lay with a married woman, they were both to be put to death, v. 22. This law we had before, Lev. 20. 10. For a married man to lie with a single woman, was not a crime of so high a nature, nor was it punished with death, because not introducing a spurious brood into families, under the character of legitimate children.

IV. If a damsel were betrothed and not married, she was from under the eye of her husband, and therefore she and her chastity were taken under the special protection of the law. 1. If her chastity were violated by her own consent, she was to be put to death, and her adulterer with her, v. 23, 24. And it shall be presumed, that she consented, if it were done in the city, or in any place where, had she cried out, help might speedily have come in to prevent the injury offered her. 6. Qui taceat, consentire videtur—Silence implies consent. Note. It may be passing well with you to go to a privy signification (whatever they pretend,) who will not use the means and helps they might be furnished with to avoid and overcome it. Nay, her being found in the city, a place of company and diversion, when she should have kept under the protection of her father's house, was an evidence against her, that she had not that dread of the sin, and the danger of it, which became a marriage woman. Note. They that needlessly expose themselves to temptation, justly suffer for the same; if, ere they are aware, they be surprised and caught by it. Dinah lost her honour, to gratify her curiosity with a sight of the daughters of the land. By this law the Virgin Mary was in danger of being made a public example, that is, of being stoned to death, but that God, by an angel, cleared the matter to Joseph. 2. If she were forced, and never consented, that he committed the rape was to be put to death, but the damsel was to be acquitted, v. 25. 27. Now if it were done in the field, out of the hearing of neighbours, it shall be presumed that she cried out, but there was none to save her; and besides, her going into the field, a place of solitude, did not so much expose her. Now by this law it is intimated to us, (1.) That it is not in her own power to prevent the wickedness, nor for that which is done unto us. That is no sin, which has not more or less of the will in it. (2.) That we must presume the best concerning all persons, unless the contrary do appear; not only charity, but equity, teaches us to do so. Though none heard her cry, yet because none could hear it if she did, it shall be taken for granted that she did. This rule puts an end to judging of persons' minds and actions, believe all things, and hope all things. (3.) That our chastity should be as dear to us as our life; when that is assaulted, it is not at all improper to cry, Murder, Murder! for, as when a man rieth against his neighbour and slayeth him, even so is this matter. (4.) By way of allusion to this, see what we are here to do when Satan sets upon us with his temptations; wherever we are, let us cry aloud to heaven, Should I go exceedingly? Do sit, vix nutab (Help me, O Lord, for I suffer violence,) and there we may be sure to be heard, and answered, as Paul was, My grace is sufficient for thee. 5. If a damsel not betrothed be thus abused by violence, he that abused her, should be fined, the father should have the fine, and if he and the damsel did consent, he should be bound to marry her, and to pay her father a fee, below him, and how unpleasing soever she might after ward be to him, as Tamar was to Ammon, after he had forced her, v. 28. 29. This was to deter men from such vicious practices, which is a shame that we are necessitated to read and write of. VI. The law against a man's marrying his father's widow, or having any undue familiarity with his father's wife, is here repeated, (v. 20.) from Lev. 18. 6, and with it is added (as Bishop Patrick notes) for a short memorandum to them carefully to observe all the laws there made against incestuous marriages, this being specified, which is the most detestable of all; that is of which the apostle says, It is not so much as named among the Gentiles, 1 Cor. 5. 1.

CHAP. XXIII.

The laws of this chapter provide, I. For the preserving of the purity and honour of the families of Israel, by excluding such as would be a disgrace to them, v. 1. 8. II. For the preserving of the purity and honour of the camp of Israel when it was abroad, v. 9. 14. III. For the encouraging and entertaining of Canaanites, v. 15. 16. IV. Against whoredom, v. 17. 18. V. Against usury, v. 19. 20. VI. Against the breach of vows, v. 21. 22. VII. What liberty a man might take in his neighbour's field and vineyard, and what not, v. 24. 25.

1. He that is wounded in the stoves, or hath his privy member cut off, shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord. 2. A bastard shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord; even to his tenth generation shall he not enter into the congregation of the Lord. 3. An Ammonite or Moabitish shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord; even to their tenth generation shall they not enter into the congregation of the Lord for ever: 4. Because they met you not with bread and with water in the way, when ye came forth out of Egypt; and because they hired against thee Baalam the son of Beor, of Pethor of Mesopotamia, to curse thee. 5. Nevertheless the Lord thy God would not hearken unto Baal- am; but the Lord thy God turned the curse into a blessing unto thee, because the Lord thy God loved thee. 6. Thou shalt not seek their peace nor their prosperity all thy days for ever. 7. Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite; for he is thy brother: thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian, because thou wast a stranger in his land. 8. The children that are begotten of them shall enter into the congregation of the Lord in their third generation.

Interpreters are not agreed what is here meant by entering into the congregation of the Lord, which is here forbidden to eunuchs and to bastards, Ammonites and Moabites, for ever, but to Edomites and Egyptians, only till the third generation. 1. Some think they are hereby excluded from communicating with the people of God in their religious services; though eunuchs and bastards were owned as members of the church, yet the Ammonites and Moabites might be circumcised and presented to the Jewish religion, yet they, and their families, must lie for some time under marks of disgrace, remembering the rock where they were hewn, and must not come so near the sanctuary as others might, nor have so free a communion with Israelites. 2. Others think they are hereby excluded from bearing office in the congregation: none of these must be elders or judges, lest the honour of the magistracy, should thereby be stained. 3. Others think they are excluded only from marrying with Israelites. Therefore the learned Bishop Patrick inclines to understand it; yet we find that when this law was put in execution after the captivity, they separated from Israel, not only the strange wives, but all the mixed multitude, see Neh. 13. 1. 3. With the descendants of Anah and of the descendants of laysar of Cush, and of Cushan, (Gal. 3. 7.) it should seem, the men of Israel might marry, if they were completely proselyted to the Jewish religion; but with the men of these nations the daughters of Israel might not marry, nor could the men be naturalized, except as here excepted. It is plain, in general, that disgrace is here put, (1.) Upon bastards and eunuchs, v. 1. 2. By bastards here, the Jewish writers understand, not all that were born of fornication, or out of marriage, but all that were of those incestuous mixtures, which are forbidden, Lev. 18. And though it was not the fault of the issue, yet, to deter people from those unlawful marriages, and unlawful lusts, it was very convenient that their posterity should thus be made infamous. By this rule Jephthah, though the son of a harlot, a strange woman, (Judg. 11. 1, 2,) yet was not a bastard in the sense of the law. And as though by this law they seemed to be cast out of the vineyard as dry trees, which they complain of, (Isa. 56. 3,) yet it is there promised, (v. 5,) that if they took care of their duty to God, as far as they were admitted, by keeping his sabbaths, and choosing the things that pleased him, the want of this privilege should be made up to them with such spiritual blessings as would entitle them to every blessing.

(2.) Upon Ammonites and Moabites, the posterity of Lot, who, for his outward convenience, had separated himself from Abraham, Gen. 13. 11. And we do not find that he or his ever joined themselves again to the children of the covenant. They are here cut off to the tenth generation, that is, (as some think it is explained,) for ever. Compare Neh. 13. 1. The reason of this quarrel which Israel must have with them, so as not to seek their heaces, (v. 6,) is because the unkindness they had now lately done to the camp of Israel, notwithstanding the orders God had given not to distress or vex them, Deut. 2. 9, 19. [1] It was bad enough that they did not meet them with bread and water in the way, (v. 4,) that they did not as allies, or at least as neutral states, bring victuals into their camp, which they should have been duty bound to do. It was well that God's Israel did not need their kindness. God himself following them with bread and water. However, this omission of the Ammonites should be remembered against their nation in future ages. Note, God will certainly reckon, not only with those that oppose his people, but with those that do not help and further them, when it is in the power of their hand to do it. The charge at the great day of God's judgment, which shall be double to those that have not engaged to do good, will be more heavy to those that have done evil.

[2.] The Moabites had done worse, they hired Balaam to curse them, v. 4. It is true, God turned the curse into a blessing, (v. 5,) not only changing the word in Balaam's mouth, but making that really turn to the honour and advantage of Israel, which was designed for their ruin. But though the design was defeated, and over-ruled for good, yet it is the wisdom of God, which does, without the least provoking, God will deal with sinners, not only according to their deeds, but according to their endeavours, Ps. 28. 4.

(3.) The Edomites and Egyptians have not so deep a mark of displeasure put upon them, as the Moabites and Ammonites had. If an Edomite or an Egyptian turned proselyte, his grand-children should be looked upon as members of the congregation of the Lord to all intents and purposes, v. 7. Israelites. They are to be thought of as Israelites. We should think that the Edomites had been more injurious to the Israelites than the Ammonites, and deserved as little favour from them, (Numb. 20, 20,) and yet "Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite, as thou must an Ammonite, for he is thy brother." Note, The unkindness of near relations, though by many worse taken, yet should with us, for that reason, because of their relation, be first forgiven. And then as to the Egyptians here is a strange reason given why they must not be abhorred, "Thou wert a stranger in their land, and therefore, though hardly used there, be civil to them, for old acquaintance sake." They must not remember their bondage in Egypt, for the keeping up of any ill-will to the Egyptians, but only for the magnifying of God's power and goodness in their deliverance.

9. When the host goeth forth against thine enemies, then keep thee from every wicked thing. 10. If there be among you any man that is not clean by reason of uncleanness that chanceth him by night, then shall he go abroad out of the camp, he shall not come within the camp: 11. But it shall be, when evening cometh on, he shall wash himself with water: and when the sun is down, he shall come into the camp again. 12. Thou shalt have a place also without the camp, whither thou shalt go forth abroad: 13. And thou shalt have a paddle upon thy weapon; and it shall be, when thou wilt ease thyself abroad, thou shalt dig therewith, and shalt turn back and cover that which cometh from thee. 14 For the Lord thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp, to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee; therefore shall thy camp be holy; that he see no unclean thing in thee, and turn away from thee. Israel was now encamped, and this vast army was just entering upon action, which was likely to keep them together for a long time, and therefore it was fit to give them particular directions for the good ordering of their camp. And the charge is in one word to be clean. They must take care to keep their camp pure from moral ceremonial, and natural pollution,

1. From moral pollution; (v. 2.) When the host goes forth against thine enemies, then look upon thyself as in a special manner engaged to keep thyself from every evil thing. (1.) The soldiers themselves must take heed of sin, for sin takes off the edge of valor; guilt makes men cowards. They that put their lives in their hands, are concerned to make and keep their peace with God, and preserve the consciousness of that peace on their souls; then may they look death in the face without terror. Soldiers, in executing their commission, must keep themselves from gratifying the lusts of malice, covetousness, or uncleanness, for these are wicked things; must keep themselves from the idols, or accursed things, they found in the camps they plundered. (2.) Even they that tarried at home, the body of the people, and every particular person, must at that time especially keep from every wicked thing, lest by sin they provoke God to withdraw his presence from the host, and give victory to the enemy for the correcting of his own people. Times of war should be times of reformation, else how can we expect God should hear and answer our prayers for success?

2. From ceremonial pollution, which might befall a person, when unconscious of it, for which he was bound to wash his flesh in water, and lock upon himself as unclean until the even, Lev. 15. 16. A soldier, notwithstanding the constant service and duty he had to do in the camp, must be so far from looking upon himself as discharged from the observance of that ceremony, that more was required from him than at any other time; had he been at his own house, he needed only to wash his flesh, but being in the army, he must go abroad out of the camp, as one that was concerned to keep it pure, and ashamed of his own impurity, and of his presence at sunset; v. 10, 11. By this trouble and reproach, which even involuntary pollutions exposed men to, they were taught to keep up a very great dread of all fleshly lusts. It were well if military men would consider this.

3. From natural pollution; the camp of the Lord must have nothing offensive in it, v. 12... 14. It is strange that the divine law, or at least the solemn order and direction of Moses, should extend to a thing of this nature; but the design of it was to teach them, (1.) Modesty, and a good decorum; nature itself teaches them thus to distinguish themselves from beasts that know no shame. (2.) Cleanliness, and (though not niceness, yet) neatness, even in their camp. Impurity is offensive to the senses; God has endued us with, prejudicial to the health, a wrong to the comfort of human life, and an evidence of a careless slothful temper of mind. (3.) Purity from the pollutions of sin; if there must be this care taken to preserve the body clean and sweet, much more should we solicitous to keep the mind so. (4.) A reverence of the divine majesty. Th. is the reason here given: for the Lord thy God walketh by his ark, the special token of his presence, in the midst of thy camp; with respect to that external symbol this exter- nal purity is required, which (though not insisted on in the letter when that reason ceases, yet) teaches us to preserve inward purity of soul, in consideration of the eye of God, which is always upon us. By this expression of respect to the presence of God among them, they were taught both to fortify themselves against sin, and to encourage themselves against their enemies with the consideration of that presence. (5.) A reason one to another. The filthiness of one is noisome to many; this law of cleanliness therefore teaches us not to do that which will be justly offensive to our brethren, and grieve them. It is a law against nuisances.

15. Thou shalt not deliver unto thy master the servant which is escaped from his master unto thee: 16. He shall dwell with thee, even among you, in that place which he shall choose in one of thy gates, where it liketh him best: thou shalt not oppress him. 17. There shall be no whore of the daughters of Israel, nor a sodomite of the sons of Israel. 18. Thou shalt not bring the hire of a whore, or the price of a dog, into the house of the Lord thy God for any vow: for even both these are abomination unto the Lord thy God. 19. Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of anything that is lent upon usury. 20. Unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury; but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury: that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all that thou setteth thine hand to in the land whither thou goest to possess it. 21. When thou shalt vow a vow unto the Lord thy God, thou shalt not slack to pay it: for the Lord thy God will surely require it of thee; and it would be sin in thee. 22. But if thou shalt forbear to vow, it shall be no sin in thee. 23. That which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt keep and perform; even a free-will-offering, according as thou hast vowed unto the Lord thy God, which thou hast promised with thy mouth. 24. When thou comest into thy neighbour’s vineyard, then thou mayest eat grapes thy fill at thine own pleasure; but thou shalt not put any in thy vessel. 25. When thou comest into the standing corn of thy neighbour, then thou mayest pluck the ears with thine hand; but thou shalt not move a sickle unto thy neighbour’s standing corn.

Orders are here given about five several things, which have no relation one to another.

I. The land of Israel is here made a sanctuary, or city of refuge, for servants that were wronged in Israel, or who stood in need, and this for shelter from the neighbouring countries, v. 15, 16. We cannot suppose that they were hereby obliged to give entertainment to all the unprincipled men that ran from service; Israel needed not (as Rome at first did) to be thus peopleed. But, 1. They must not deliver up the trembling servant to his enraged master, till upon trial it appeared that the servant had wronged his master, and was justly liable to punishment. 2. They must deliver up the servant to shelter and protect the weak, provided they be not wicked. God allows his people to patronise the oppressed. The angel bid Hagar return to her mistress, and St. Paul sent Onesimus back to his master Philemon, because they had neither of them any cause to go away, nor were either of them exposed to any danger in returning. But the servant here is supposed to be a weak, defenceless mother, to the child of Israel, of whom he had heard (as Benhadad of the Kings of Israel, 1 Kings 20. 31.) that they were a merciful people, to save himself from the fury of a tyrant; and in that case to deliver him up, is to throw a lamb into the mouth of a lion. 2. If it appeared that the servant was abused, they must not only protect him, but supposing him willing to embrace their religion, they must give him all the encouragement that might be, to settle among them. Care is taken both that he should not be imposed upon in the place of his settlement—let it be that which he shall choose, and where it liketh him best; and that he should not exchange one hard master for many—thou shalt not oppress him. Thus would he soon find a comfortable difference between the land of Israel and other lands, and would choose it to be his rest for ever. Note, Proselytes and converts to the truth should be treated with particular tenderness, that they may have no temptation to return.

II. The land of Israel must be no shelter for the unclean; no whore, no sodomite, must be suffered to live among them, (v. 17, 18.) neither a whore nor a whoremonger. No houses of uncleanness must be kept either by men or women. Here is 1. A good reason intimated why the land should be no shelter for such: 2. The reason declared among them: they were Israelites. That seems to have emphasis laid upon it. For a daughter of Israel to be a whore, or a son of Israel a whoremaster, is to reproach the stock they are of, the people they belong to, and the God they worship. It is bad in any, but worse in Israelites, a holy nation, 2 Sam. 13. 12. 2. A just mark of displeasure put upon this wickedness, that the land she went thither to be her portion, be her whoring, and the price of a dog, that is, is the sodomite, pimp, or whoremaster, (so I incline to understand it, for such are called dogs, Rev. 22. 15.) the money he gets by these lewd and villanous practices, no part of it shall be brought into the house of the Lord (as was commonly done by the prostitutes among the Gentiles) for any vow. This intimates, (1.) That God did not accept any offering arising from such wickedness; (2.) that they had nothing to bring an offering of, but what they got by their wickedness, and therefore their sacrifice could not but be an abomination to the Lord, Prov. 15. 8. (2.) That they should not think, by making and paying vows, and bringing offerings to the Lord, to obtain leave to go on in this sin, as (it should seem) some that followed that trade suggested to them. selves, when their offerings were admitted, Prov. 7. 14, 15. This day have I paid my vows, therefore came I forth to meet thee. Nothing should be accepted in commutation of penance. (G.) That we cannot honour God with our substance, unless it be honestly and honestly come by. It must not only be considered what we give, but what we get it by.

III. The matter of usury is here settled, v. 19, 20. 1. They must not lend upon usury to an Israelite. They had and held their estates immediately from and under God, who, while he distinguished them from all other people, might have ordered, had he so pleased, that they should have all things for nothing, and none but them the right of selling and buying of that, and in token of their joint interest in the good land he had given them, he only appointed them, as there was occasion, to lend to one another without interest; which, among them, would be little or no loss to the lender, because their land was so divided, their estates were so little, and there was so little of merchandise among them, that it was seldom or never that they had occasion to borrow and lend. Nevertheless, the exception for the subsistence of their families, when the fruits of their ground had met with any disaster, or the like; and in such a case, for a small matter to insist upon usury, would have been very barbarous. Where the borrower gets, or hopes to get, it is just that the lender should share in the gain; but to him that borrows for his necessary food, pity must be showed, and we must lend, hoping for nothing again, if we have where we shall to do.

IV. The performance of the vows wherewith we have bound our souls, is here required; and it is a branch of the law of nature, v. 21, 23. 1. We are here left at our liberty whether we will make vows or no. If thou shalt forbear to vow, (some particular sacrifice and offering, more than was commanded by the law,) it shall be no sin to thee. God had already signified his readiness to accept a free-will-offering thus vowed, though it were but a little fine flour, (Lev. 2. 4, &c.) which was encouraged, and thereby blessed to the donor. But God has needed lest the priests, who had the largest share of those vows and voluntary offerings, should sparge upon the people, by pressing it upon them as their duty to make such vows, beyond their ability and inclination, they are here expressly told that it should not be reckoned a sin in them, if they did not make any such vows, as it would be if they omitted any of the sacrifices that God had particularly required. For (as Bishop Patrick expresses it) God would have men to be easy in his service, and all their offerings to be free and cheerful.

We are here laid under the highest obligations, when we have made a vow, to perform it, and to perform it speedily; Thou shalt not slack to pay it; lest if it be delayed beyond the first opportunity, the zeal abate, the vow be forgotten, or something happen to disable thee for the performance of that which God has particularly required. For (as Bishop Patrick expresses it) God would have men to be easy in his service, and all their offerings to be free and cheerful. 2. 1. WHEN a man hath taken a wife, and married her, and it come to pass that she find no favour in his eyes, because he hath found some uncleanness in her; then let him write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house. 2. And when she is departed out of his house, she may go and be another man's wife. 3. And if the latter husband hate her, and write her a bill of divorcement, and gave it in her hand, and sendeth her out of his house; or if the latter husband die, which took her to be his wife; 4. Her former husband, which sent her away, may not take her again to be his wife, after that she is defiled; for that is abomination before the Lord: and thou shalt not cause the land to sin, which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance.
This is that permission which the Pharisees erroneously required to be given, Matt. 19. 7. Moses commanded to give a writing of divorcement; it was not so; our Saviour told them that he only suffered because of the hardness of their hearts, lest if they had not had liberty to divorce their wives, they should have ruled them with rigour, and, it may be, have been the death of them. It is probable that divorces were in use before, they are taken for granted, (Lev. 21. 14.) and Moses thought it needful here to give some rules concerning them.

1. That a man might not divorce his wife unless he found some uncleanness in her, v. 1. It was not sufficient to say that he did not love her, or that he liked another better, but he must show cause for his dislike, something that made her disagreeable and unpleasant to him, though it might not make her so to another. This uncleanness must mean something less than adultery; for, that she was to die; and less than the suspicion of it, for in that case, he might give her the waters of jealousy; but it means either a light carriage, or a cross frivolous disposition, or some loathsome or disease; nay, some of the Jewish writers suppose that an offensive breath might be a just ground for divorce. Whatever is meant by it, doubtless it was something considerable; so that their modern doctors erred, who allowed divorces for every cause, though ever so trivial, Matth. 19. 3.

2. That it must be done, not by word of mouth, for that might be spoken hastily, but by writing, and that put in due form, and solemnly declared, before witnesses, to be his own act and deed, which was a work of time, and left room for consideration, that it might not be done rashly.

3. That the husband must give it into the hand of his wife, and send her away; which, some think, obliged him to curry her; and make provision for her, according to her quality, and such as might help to marry her again; for this there was good reason, since the cause of quarrel was not her fault, but her infidelity.

4. That being divorced, it was lawful for her to marry another husband, v. 2. The divorce had dissolved the bond of marriage as effectually as death could; so that she was as free to marry again, as if her first husband had been naturally dead.

5. That if her second husband (died or) divorced her, then still she might marry a third, but her first husband should never take her again, (v. 3, 4,) which he might have done, if she had not married another; for by that act of her own she had perfectly renounced him for ever, and, as to him, was looked upon as defiled, though not as to another person. The Jewish writers say that this was to prevent a most vile and wicked practice which the Egyptians had, of changing wives; or perhaps it was intended to prevent men's rashness in putting away their wives; for the wife that was divorced, would be apt, in revenge, to marry another immediately, and perhaps the husband that divorced her, how much sooner he thought to mend himself by another choice, would find the next worse, and some other worse divorce; and this might be what he would wish for his first wife again. "No, (says this law,) you shall not have her, you should have kept her when you had her." Note, It is best to be content with such things as we have, since changes made by discontent often prove for the worse. The uneasiness we know, is commonly better, though we are apt to think it worse, than that which we do not know. By the strictness of this law, God illustrates the riches of his grace in his willingness to be reconciled to his people that had gone a whoring from him, (Jer. 3. 1.) Thou hast played with the harlot with many lovers, yet return again to me; for his thoughts and ways are above our's.

5. When a man hath taken a new wife, he shall not go out to war, neither shall he be charged with any business: but he shall be free at home one year, and shall cherish up his wife which he hath taken. 6. No man shall take the nether or the upper millstone to pledge: for he taketh a man's life to pledge. 7. If a man be found stealing any of his brethren of the children of Israel, and maketh merchandise of him, or selleth him; then that thief shall die; and thou shalt put evil away from among you.

8. Take heed in the plague of leprosy, that thou observe diligently, and do according to all that the priests the Levites shall teach you: as I commanded them, so ye shall observe to do. 9. Remember what the Lord thy God did unto Miriam by the way, after that ye were come forth out of Egypt.

10. When thou dost lend thy brother anything, thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge. 11. Thou shalt stand abroad, and the man to whom thou dost lend shall bring out the pledge abroad unto thee. 12. And if the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge: 13. In any case thou shalt deliver him the pledge again when the sun goeth down, that he may sleep in his own raiment, and bless thee: and it shall be righteousness unto thee before the Lord thy God.

I. Provision made for the preservation and confirmation of love between new-married people, v. 5. This fitly follows upon the laws concerning divorce, which would be prevented if there were provision for each other were well settled at first. If the husband were much abroad from his wife the first year, his love to her would be in danger of cooling, and of being drawn aside to others whom he would meet with abroad; therefore his service to his country in war, embassies, or other public business that would call him from home, shall be dispensed with, that he may cheer up the wife which he has taken.

Note, 1. It is of great consequence that love be kept up between husband and wife, and that every thing be very carefully avoided, which might make them strange one to another, especially at first; for in that relation, where there is not the love that should be, there is an inlet ready to abundance of guilt and grief. 2. One of the duties of that relation, is to cheer up one another, under the cares and crosses that happen, as helpers of each other's joy, and the heart does good like a medicine.

II. A law against merchandising stolen things. 7. It was not death by the law of Moses to steal cattle or goods, but to steal a child, or a weak and simple man, or one that a man hid in his power, and to make merchandise of him, this was a capital crime, and could not be expiated, as other thefts, by restitution; so much is a man better than a sheep, Matth. 12. 12. It was a very heinous offence, for, 1. It was robbing the public of one of its members. 2. It was taking away a man's liberty, the liberty of a free-born Israelite, which was next in value
DEUTERONOMY, XXIV.

3. It was a driving man out from the inheritance of the land, to the privileges of which he was entitled, and bidding him go serve other gods, as David complains against Saul, 1 Sam. 26. 19.

11. The laws concerning it must be carefully observed. The laws concerning it we had, Lev. 13, 14. They are here said to be commanded to the forefathers and Levites, and therefore are not repeated in a disjunct to the people; but the people were here charged, in case of leprosy, to apply themselves to the priest according to the law, and to abide by his judgment, so far as it agreed with the law, and the plain matter of fact. The plague of leprosy being usually a particular mark of God's displeasure for sin; he in whom the signs of it did appear, ought not to conceal it, but carry out the sign of it, or apply himself to the physician for relief; but he must go to the priest and follow his directions. Thus they that feel their consciences under guilt and wrath, must not cover it, or endeavour to shake off their convictions, but by repentance, and prayer, and humble confession, take the appointed way to peace and pardon. 2. The particular case of Miriam, who was smitten with leprosy for quarrelling with Moses, should not be taken as an explanation of the law concerning the leprosy. Remember that, and, (1.) "Take heed of sinning after the similitude of her transgression, in despising dominions, and speaking evil of dignities, lest you thereby bring upon yourselves the same judgment." (2.) "If any of you be smitten with a leprosy, expect not that the law should be dispensal with; nor think it hard to be shut out of the camp, and to be reduced to a spectacle; there is no remedy; Miriam herself, though a prophetess, and the sister of Moses, was not exempted, but was forced to submit to this severe discipline, when she was under this divine rebuke." Thus David, Hezekiah, Peter, and other great men, when they had sinned, humbled themselves, and took to themselves the shame and grief; let us not expect to be reconciled on easier terms.

14. Thou shalt not oppress a hired servant that is poor and needy, whether he be of thy brethren, or of thy strangers that are in thy land within thy gates: 15. At his day thou shalt give him his hire, neither shall the sun go down upon it; for he is poor, and setteth his heart upon it: lest he cry against thee unto the Lord, and it be sin unto thee. 16. The fathers shall not be put to death for the children, neither shall the children be put to death for the fathers: every man shall be put to death for his own sin. 17. Thou shalt not pervert the judgment of the stranger, nor of the fatherless; nor take a widow's raiment to pledge: 18. But thou shalt remember that thou wast a bond-man in Egypt, and the Lord thy God redeemed thee thence: therefore I command thee to do this thing. 19. When thou cuttest down thine harvest in thy field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go again to fetch it: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow: that the Lord thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hands. 20. When thou beatest thine olive-tree, thou shalt not go over the boughs again: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow. 21. When thou gatherest the grapes of thy vineyard, thou shalt not glean it afterward: it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow. 22. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in Egypt; therefore I command thee to do this thing.

Here, 1. Masters are commanded to be just to their poor servants, v. 14, 15. 1. They must not oppress them, either by overloaded with them with work, giving them undue and unreasonable rebukes, or withholding from them their proper maintenance. A servant, though a stranger to the commonwealth of Israel, must not be abused, "For thou wast a bond-man in the land where thou wast a stranger, (v. 18.) and thou knowest what a grievous thing it is to be oppressed by a task-master, and therefore, in tenderness to those that are servants and strangers, and in gratitude to that God who set thee at liberty, and settled thee in a country of thy own, Thou shalt not afflict any servant or stranger, but let masters not be tyrants to their servants, for their Master is in heaven. See Job 31. 13. 2. They must be faithful and punctual in paying them their wages. "At his day thou shalt give him his hire, not only pay it him in full, without fraud, but pay it in time, without further delay. As soon as he has done his day's work, if he desire it, let him have his day's wages, (Mat. 20: 13.) and when these cease, let his wages cease. He that works by day-wages, is supposed to live from hand to mouth, and cannot have to-morrow's bread for his family, till he is paid for his day's labour. If the wages be withheld, (1.) It will be grief for the servant, for, poor man, he sets his heart upon it, or, as the word is, he lifts up his soul to it, he is earnestly desirous of it, as the reward of his work, (Job. 7. 2.) and depends upon it as the providence for the maintenance of his family. A compassionate master, though it should be somewhat inconvenient to himself, would not disappoint the expectation of a poor servant that is so fond to think of receiving his wages. But that is not the worst. (2.) It will be guilt to the master. "The injured servant will cry against thee to the Lord; since he has no one else to appeal to, he will lodge his appeal in the court of heaven, and it will be sin to thee." Or if he do not complain, the cause will speak for itself, the hire of the labourers which is kept back by fraud, will itself cry, Jam. 5. 4. It is a greater sin than most people think it is, and will be found so in the great day, to put hardships upon poor servants, labourers, and workmen, that we employ, God will do them right if men do not.

II. Magistrates and judges are commanded to be just in their administrations. 1. In those which we call Pleas of the crown, a standing rule is here given, that the fathers shall not be put to death for the children, nor the children for the fathers, v. 16. If the children make themselves obnoxious to the law, let them suffer for it, but let not the parents either suffer for them, or with them; it is grief enough to them to see their children suffer: if the parents be guilty, let them die for their own sin; but though the sons be guilty, sometimes visit the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, especially the sin of idolatry, and when he deals with nations in their national capacity, yet he does not allow men to do so. Accordingly, we find Amaziah sparing the children, even then when their fathers were put to death for killing the king, 2 Kings 14. 6. It was in an extraordinary case and not with special direction from heaven, that Saul's sons were put to death for their father's sin; yet they died rather as sacrifices than as malefactors, 2 Sam. 21. 9, 14. 2. In common pleas between party and party, great care must be taken that none whose cause was just, should fare the worse for their weakness, nor for their being destitute of friends, as strangers, fatherless, and widows, v. 17. Thou shalt not pervert their judgment, nor force them to give the pledge which is a pledge, by defrauding them of their right. Justice requires that advocates for those that cannot speak for themselves, and have no friends to speak for them.

III. The rich are commanded to be kind and charitable to the poor. Many ways they are ordered to be so, by the law of Moses. The particular instance of charity here prescribed, is, that they should not be greedy in gathering in their corn, and grapes, and olives, so as to be afraid of leaving them behind, but be willing to overlook some, and let the poor have the gleanings, v. 19.-22. 1. "Say not, 'It is all my own, and why should not I have it?' But learn a generous contempt of property in small matters. One sheaf or two forgotten, will make thee never the poorer at the year's end, and it will do somebody good, if thou have it not." 2. "Say not, 'What I give I will give, and know whom I give it to,' why should I leave it to be gathered by me not know whom, that will never thank me?" But trust God's providence with the disposal of thy charity, perhaps that direct it to the most necessitous. Or, "Thou mayest reasonably think it will come to the hands of the most industrious, that are forward to seek and gather that which this law provides for them." 3. "Say not, 'What should the poor do with grapes and olives? It is enough for them to have bread and water;' for since they have the same senses that the rich have, why should not they have some little share of the delights of sense?" Boaz ordered handfuls of corn to be left on purpose for Ruth, and God blessed him. All that is left, is not lost.

CHAP. XXV.

Here is, I. A law to moderate the scourging of malefactors, v. 1.-3. II. A law in favour of the ox that treads out the corn, v. 4. III. For the disgracing of him that refused to carry his brother's ox, v. 5. IV. For the punishment of an immodest woman, v. 11, 12. V. For just weights and measures, v. 13.-16. VI. For the destroying of Amalek, v. 17.-19.

1. If there be a controversy between men, and they come unto judgment, that the judges may judge them; then they shall justify the righteous, and condemn the wicked. 2. And it shall be, if the wicked man be worthy to be beaten, that the judge shall cause him to lie down, and to be beaten before his face, according to his fault, by a certain number. 3. Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed lest, if he should exceed, and beat him above these with many stripes, then thy brother should seem vile unto thee. 4. Thou shalt not muzzle the ox when he treadeth out the corn.
from which no person’s rank or quality did exempt him, if he were a delinquent, but with this proviso, that he should never be upbraided with it, nor should it be said to him, As my father’s disgrace upon him. The directions here given for the scourging of criminals, are, (1.) That it be done solemnly; not tumultuously through the streets, but in open court before the judge’s face, and with so much deliberation as that the stripes might be numbered. The Jews say, that while execution was in doing, the chief justice of the court read, with a loud voice, Deut. 25. 3, 5, 29. and 29. 9. and concluded with these words, Ps. 78. 38. But he, being full of compassion, forgave their iniquity. Thus it was made a sort of religious act, and so much the more likely to reform the offender himself, and to be a warning to others. (2.) That it be done in proportion to the crime, according to his fault, that some crimes might appear, as they are, more heinous than others, the criminal being beaten with many stripes, to which, perhaps, there is an allusion, Luke 12. 47, 48. (3.) That how great soever the crime was, the number of stripes should never exceed forty, v. 3. Forty save one was the common usage, as appears, 2 Cor. 11. 24. It seems, they always gave Paul as many stripes as ever they gave to any malefactor whatsoever. They abated one, either for fear of having miscounted, (though one of the judges was appointed to number the stripes,) or, because they would never go to the utmost rigour, or because the execution was usually done with a whip of three lashes, so that thirteen stripes (each one being counted for three) made up thirty-nine, but one more by that reckoning would have been forty-two. The reason given for this, is, lest thy brother should seem vile unto thee. He must still be looked upon as a brother, (2 Thess. 3. 15.) and his reputation as such was preserved by this merciful limitation of his punishment. It saves him from seeming vile to his brethren, when God himself, by his law takes this care of him. Men must not be treated as dogs; nor must those seem vile in our sight, to whom, for aught we know, God may yet give grace, to make them precious in his sight. 11. Charge the husbandmen not to hinder their cattle from eating when they were working, if meat were within their reach, v. 4. This instance of the beast that trod out the corn, (to which there is an allusion in that of the prophet, Hos. 10. 11.) is put forth to make the蠢者 understand the law very remarkable above its fellows, (and which countenances the like application of other such laws,) is, that it is twice quoted in the New Testament, to show that it is the duty of the people to give their ministers a comfortable maintenance, 1 Cor. 9. 9, 10, and 1 Tim. 5. 17, 18. It teaches us in the letter of it to make much of the brute-creatures that serve us, and to allow them not only the necessary supports for their life, but the advantages of their labour; and thus we must learn not only to be just, but kind, to all that are employed for our good, not only to maintain but to encourage them, especially those that labour among us in the word and doctrine, and so are employed for the good of our better part. 5. If brethren dwell together, and one of them die, and have no child, the wife of the deceased shall not marry without unto stranger: her husband’s brother shall go in unto her, and take her to him to wife, and perform the duty of a husband’s brother unto her. 6. And it shall be, that the first-born which she beareth shall succeed in the name of his brother which is dead, that his name be not put out of Israel. 7. And if the man like not to take his brother’s wife, then let his brother’s wife go up to the gate unto the elders, and say, My husband’s brother refuseth to raise up unto his brother a name in Israel, he will not perform the duty of my husband’s brother: 8. Then the elders of his city shall call him, and speak unto him: and if he stand to it, and say, I like not to take her; 9. Then shall his brother’s wife come unto him in the presence of the elders, and loose his shoe from off his foot, and spit in his face, and shall answer and say, So shall it be done unto that man that will not build up his brother’s house. 10. And his name shall be called in Israel, The house of him that hath his shoe loosed. 11. When men strive together one with another, and the wife of the one draweth near for to deliver her husband out of the hand of him that smiteth him, and putteth forth her hand, and taketh him by the secrets; 12. Then thou shalt cut off her hand, thine eye shall not pity her. 3. Here is, 1. The law settled concerning the marrying of a brother’s widow. It appears from the story of Judah’s family that this had been an ancient usage, (Gen. 38. 8.) for the keeping up of distinct families. The case put, is a case that often happens, of a man’s dying without issue, it may be in the prime of his time, soon after his marriage, and while his brethren were yet so young as to be unmarried. Now in this case, 1. The widow was not to marry again into any other family, unless all the relations of her husband did refuse her, that the estate she was endowed with, might not be alienated. 2. The husband’s brother, or next of kin, must marry her, partly out of respect to her, who, having forgotten her own people and her father’s house, should have all possible kindness showed her by the family into which she was married; and partly out of respect to the deceased husband, that though he was dead and gone, he might not be forgotten, nor lost out of the genealogies of his tribes; for the first-born child, which the brother or next kinsman should have by the widow, should be denominatit from him that was dead, and entered in the genealogy as his child, v. 5, 6. Under that dispensation we have reason to think men had not so clear and certain a prospect of living themselves on the other side death, as we have now, to whom life and immortality are brought to light by the gospel; and therefore they could not but be the more desirous to live in their posterity, which innocent desire was in some measure gratified by this law, an expedient being found out, that though a man had no child by his wife, yet his name should not be put out of Israel, that is, out of the pedigree, or, which was equivalent, remain there under the brand of childlessness. The Son of法人 was to take unto him contrary to this law, with a design to perplex the doctrine of the resurrection by it, (Matth. 22. 24, &c.) perhaps insinuating that there was no need of maintaining the immortality of the soul, and a future state, since the law had so well provided for the perpetuating of men’s names and families in the world. But, 3. If the brother, or next of kin, declined to do this good office to the memory of him that was gone, what must be done in that case? Why, (1.) He shall ni be compelled to do it, v. 7. If he like her not, he is at liberty to refuse her, which, some think, was not permitted in this case before this law of Moses. Affection is all in all to the comfort of that relation; that is a thing which cannot be forced, and therefore the relation should not be forced without it. (2.) Yet he shall be publicly disgraced, and not doing it. That person is concerned as to the name and honour of the deceased, was to complain to the elders of his refusal; if he persist in it, she was to pluck off his shoe, and spit in his face, in open court, (or, as the Jewish doctors moderate it, spit before his face,) thus to fasten a mark of infamy upon him, which was to remain with his family after him, v. 8-10. Note, Those justly suffer in their own reputations, who do not do what they ought in the sake of the name and honour of others. He that would not build up his brother’s house, deserved to have this blentish put upon his own, that it should be called The house of him that had his shoe loosed, in token that he deserved to go bare-foot. In the case of Ruth, we find this law executed; (Ruth 4. 7.) but because, upon the refusal of the next kinsman, there was another ready to perform the duty of a husband’s brother, it was that other that plucked off the shoe, and not the widow; Boaz, and not Ruth.

II. A law for the punishing of an inmodest woman, v. 11, 12. The woman that by the foregoing law was to complain against her husband’s brother for not marrying her, and to spit in his face before the elders, needed a good measure of assurance; but lest the confidence which that law supported should grow to an excess unbecoming the sex, here is a very severe but just law to punish impudence and immodesty. 1. The instance of it is confessedly scandalous to the highest degree. A woman could not do it, unless she were perfectly lost to all virtue and honour. 2. The occasion is such as might in part excuse it; it was to help her husband out of the hands of one that was too hard for him. Now if the doing of it in a passion, and with such a good intention, was to be so severely punished, much more when it was done wantonly and in lust. 3. The punishment was, that her hand should be cut off; and the magistrates must not pretend to be more merciful than God, Thine eye shall not pity her. Perhaps our Saviour alludes to this law, when he commands us to cut off the right hand that offends us, or is an occasion of sin to us; better put the greatest hardships that can be upon the body, than to destroy the soul for ever. Modesty is the hedge of chastity, and therefore ought to be very carefully preserved and kept up by both sexes.

13. Thou shalt not have in thy bag divers weights, a great and a small. 14. Thou shalt not have in thine house divers measures, a great and a small. 15. But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, a perfect and just measure shalt thou have; that thy days may be lengthened in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. 16. For all that do such things, and all that do unrighteously, are an abomination unto the Lord thy God. 17. Remember what Amalek did unto thee by the way, when ye were come forth out of Egypt; 18. How he met thee by the way, and smote the hindmost of thee, even all that were feeble behind thee; when thou wast faint and weary; and he feared not God. 19. Therefore it shall be, when the Lord thy God hath given thee rest from all thine enemies round about, in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance to possess it, that thou shalt blot out the remembrance of Amalek from under heaven: thou shalt not forget it.

Here is, I. A law against deceitful weights and measures: they must not only not use them, but they must not have them; not have them in the bag, not have them in the house, (v. 13, 14.) for if they had them, they would be still more disposed to use them. They must not have a great weight and measure to buy by, and a small one to sell by, for that was to cheat both ways, when either was bad enough; as we read of those that made the ephah small, in which they measured the corn they sold, and the shekel great, by which they weighed the money they received for it, Amos 8. 5. But thou shalt have a perfect and just weight, v. 15. That which is the rule of justice, must of necessity be just; if that be otherwise, it is a constant cheat. This had been taken care of before, Lev. 19. 35, 36. This law is enforced with two very good reasons. 1. That justice and equity will bring down upon us the blessing of God. The way to have our days lengthened, and to prosper, is to be just and fair in all our dealings; honesty is the best policy. 2. That fraud and injustice will expose us to the curse of God, v. 16. Not only unrighteousness itself, but all that deals righteously, are an abomination to the Lord. And miserable is that man who is abhorred by his Maker. How hateful, particularly, all the arts of deceit are to God, Solomon several times observes; (Prov. 11. 1.—20. 10, 23.) and the apostle tells us, that the Lord is the Avenger of all such as overreach and defraud in any matter, 1 Thess. 4. 6. II. A law for the rooting out of Amalek. Here is a just weight, and a just measure; that as Amalek had measured to Israel, so it should be measured to Amalek again.

1. The mischief Amalek did to Israel, must be here remembered, v. 17, 18. When it was first done, it was ordered to be recorded, (Exod. 17. 14-16.) and here the remembrance of it to be preserved, not in personal revenge, for that generation and all succeeding generations, for which purpose the Amalekites was gone, as God commanded them, not to be remembered, but that God of which they were, and their posterity, could not have any personal resentment of the injury, but in a zeal for the glory of God, (which was insulted by the Amalekites,) that throne of the Lord against which the hand of Amalek was stretched out. The carriage of the Amalekites towards Israel is here represented, (1.) As very base and disingenuous. They had no occasion at all to quarrel with Israel, but they said they would give them a just weight and measure, or declaration of war; but took them at a very disadvantage when they were just come out of the house of bondage, and, for aught that appeared to them, were only going to sacrifice to God in the wilderness. (2.) As very barbarous and cruel; for they smote them that were feeble, whom they should have succoured. The greatest cowards are commonly the most cruel; while those that have the courage of a man, will in fairness come to no such confused and very impious and profane; they feared not God. If they had had any reverence for the majesty of the God of Israel, which they saw a token of in the cloud, or any dread of his wrath, which they lately heard of the power of over Pharaoh, they durst not have made this assault upon Israel. Well, here was the ground of the quarrel; and it shows how God takes what is done against his people, as done against himself; and that he will particularly reckon with those that discourage and hinder young beginners in religion, that (as Satan's agents) set upon the weak and feeble, either to divert them, or to disquiet them, and offend his little ones.

2. This mischief must in due time be revenged,
v. 19. When their wars were finished, by which their coast, then they must make war upon Amalek,
(v. 19.) not merely to chase them, but to consume them, to blot out the remembrance of Amalek.
It was an instance of God's patience that he deferred the vengeance so long, which should have led the Amalekites to repentance; yet an instance of fearful retribution, that the posterity of Amalek, so long after, were swallowed up by the mischief done by their ancestors to the Israel of God. That all the world might see, and say, that he who toucheth them, toucheth the apple of his eye. It was near four hundred years after this, that Saul was ordered to put this sentence in execution, (1 Sam. 15.) and was rejected of God because he did not do it effectually, but spared some of that devoted nation, in contempt, not only of the particular orders he received from Samuel, but of this general command here given by Moses, which he could not be ignorant of. David afterward made some destruction of them; and the Simeonites, in Hezekiah's time, smote the rest that remained, (1 Chron. 4. 43.) for when God judges, he will overcome.

CHAP. XXVI.

With this chapter Moses concludes the particular statutes which he thought fit to give Israel in charge at this partning with them; what follows, is by way of sanction and ratification. In this chapter, I. Moses gives them a form of confession, to be made by him that offered the basket of his first-fruits, v. 1-11. II. The protestation and prayer to be made after the disposal of the third year's tithe, v. 12-15. III. He binds on all the precepts he had given them, 1. By the divine authority; "Not I, but the Lord thy God hath commanded thee to do these statutes," v. 16. 2. By the mutual covenant between God and them, v. 17.. 19.

1. A nd it shall be, when thou art come in unto the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee for an inheritance,and possessest it, and dwellest therein, 2. That thou shalt take of the first of all the fruit of the earth, which thou shalt bring of thy land that the Lord thy God giveth thee; and shalt put it in a basket, and shalt go unto the place which the Lord thy God shall choose to place his name there. 3.

And thou shalt go unto the priest that shall be in those days, and say unto him, I profess this day unto the Lord thy God, that I am come unto the country which the Lord sware unto our fathers for to give us. 4. And the priest shall take the basket out of thine hand, and set it down before the altar of the Lord thy God. 5. And thou shalt speak, and say before the Lord thy God, A Syrian ready to perish was my father; and he went down into Egypt, and sojourned there with a few, and became there a nation, great, mighty; and populous;
6. And the Egyptians evil-entreated us, and afflicted us, and laid upon us hard bondage.
7. And when we cried unto the Lord God of our fathers, the Lord heard our voice, and looked on our affliction, and our labour, and our oppression; 8. And the Lord brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand, and with an outstretched arm, and with great terribleness, and with signs, and with wonders; 9. And he hath brought us into this place, and hath given us this land, even a land that floweth with milk and honey. 10. And now, behold, I have brought the first fruits of the land, which thou, O Lord, hast given me. And thou shalt set it before the Lord thy God, and worship before the Lord thy God: 11. And thou shall rejoice in every good thing which the Lord thy God hath given unto thee, and unto thine house, thou, and the Levite; and the stranger that is among you.

Here is,

1. A good work ordered to be done, and that is, the presenting of a basket of their first-fruits to God every year, v. 1. 2. Beside the sheaf of firstfruits, which was offered for the whole land, on the morning wave, and the pomegranates, (Lev. 23.10.)
every man was to bring for himself a basket of first-fruits at the feast of pentecost, when the harvest was ended, which is therefore called the feast of first-fruits, (Exod. 34. 22.) and is said to be kept with a trito of free-will-offering, Deut. 16. 10. But the Jews say, "The first-fruits, if not brought them, might be brought any time after, between that and winter." When a man went into the field or vineyard, at the time when the fruits were ripe, he was to mark that which he observed most forward, and to lay it by for first-fruits, wheat, barley, grapes, figs, pomegranates, olives, and dates, some of each sort must be put in the same basket with leaves between them, and presented to God in the place which he should choose. Now from this law we may learn,
1. To acknowledge God as the Giver of all those good things which are the support and comfort of our present life, and therefore to serve and honor him with them. 2. To deny ourselves. What is first ripe we are most fond of; those that are nice and curious, expect to be served with each fruit at its first coming in; my soul desired the first ripe fruits, Micah 7. 1. When therefore God appointed them to lay those by for him, he taught them to prefer the glorifying of his name, before the gratifying of their own appetites and desires. 3. To give to God the first and best we have, as those that believe him to be the first and best of beings.
They that consecrate the days of their youth, and the prime of their time, to the service and honour of God, bring him their first-fruits, and with such offerings he is well pleased.

I remember the kindness of thy youth.

II. Good words put into their mouths to be said in giving of this good work, as an explication of the meaning of this ceremony, that it might be a reasonable service. The offerer must begin his acnowledgment before he delivered his basket to the priest, and then must go on with it, when the priest had set down the basket before the altar, as a present to God their great Landlord, v. 3, 4.

1. He must begin with a receipt in full for the good land which God had given them, v. 3. I profess that I have come now at last into forty years' wandering, unto the country which the Lord sware to give us. This was most proper to be said when they came first into Canaan; probably, when they had been long settled there, they varied from this form. Note, When God has made good his promises to us, he expects that we should own it, to the honour of his faithfulness; this is like giving up the bond, as Solomon does, 1 Kings 8. 36. There has not failed one word of all his good promise. And our creature-comforts are then doubly sweet, when we see them flowing from the fountain of the promise.

3. He must remember and own the mean original of that nation, which he was a member of; how great soever they were now, and he himself with them, their beginning was very small, which ought thus to be kept in mind throughout all the ages of their church by this public confession, that they might not be proud of their privileges and advantages, but might for ever be thankful to God whose grace chose them when they were so low, and raised them so high. Two things they must own for this purpose. (1.) The meanness of their common ancestor. A Syrian ready to perish was my father, v. 5. Jacob is here called an Aramite, or Syrian, because he lived twenty years in Padan-Aram; his wives were of that country, and his children were all born there, except Benjamin; and perhaps this means not only his son of Padan-Aram, but the son of Jacob who was the father of his tribe. However it be, both father and sons were more than once ready to perish, by Laban's severity, Esau's cruelty, and the famine in the land; which last was the occasion of their going down into Egypt. Laban the Syrian sought to destroy my father, so the Chaldee; had almost destroyed him, so the Arabic. (2.) The miserable condition of their nation in it. They sojourned in Egypt as strangers, they served there as slaves, (v. 6.) and that a great while: as their father was called a Syrian, they might be called Egyptians; so that their possession of Canaan being so long discontinued, they could not pretend any tenant-right to it. A poor, despised, oppressed people they were in Egypt, and therefore, though now rich and great, had no reason to be proud, or secure, or forgetful of God.

5. He must thankfully acknowledge God's great goodness, not only to himself in particular, but to Israel in general. (1.) In bringing them out of Egypt, v. 7, 8. It is spoken of here as an act of pity, he looked on our affliction; and an act of power, he brought us forth with a mighty hand. This was a great salvation, fit to be remembered upon all occasions, and particularly upon this; they need not grieve at the difficulties of first-steps, or to any thing to them they owed it, that they were not now bringing in the tale of bricks to their cruel task-masters. (2.) In settling them in Canaan, v. 9. He hath given us this land. Observe, He must not only give thanks for his own lot, but for the land in general, which was given to Israel; not only for this year's profits, but for the ground itself which produced them. They may not take God's providence for their own. They sake their ancestors, and entailed upon their posterity. Note, The comfort we have in our particular enjoyments, should lead us to be thankful for our share in public peace and plenty; and with present mercies we should bless God for the former mercies we remember, and the further mercies we expect and hope for.

4. He must offer to God his basket of first-fruits, v. 10. I have brought the first-fruits of the land, (like a pepper-corn,) as quitrent for the land which thou hast given me. Note, Whatever we give to God, it is but of his own that we give him, 1 Chron. 29. 14. And it becomes us, who receive so much from him, to study what we shall render to him. The basket he set before God; and the priests, as God's receivers, had the first-fruits, as purpurities of their place, and fees for attending. Num. 18. 12.

Lastly, The offerer is here appointed, when he has finished the service. 1. To give glory to God, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God. His first-fruits were not accepted without further acts of adoration. A humble, reverent, thankful heart, is that which God looks at and requires, and without that, all we can put in a basket, will not avail. If a man would give all the substance of his house to be excused from this, or in lieu of it, it would not be willingly contended. 2. To take the comfort of it himself and family, v. 11, Thou shalt rejoice in every good thing. It is the will of God that we should be cheerful, not only in our attendance upon his holy ordinances, but in our enjoyments of the gifts of his providence. Whatever good thing God gives us, it is his will that we should make the most comfortable use we can of it, yet still tracing the streams to the Fountain of all comfort and consolation.

12. When thou hast made an end of tithing all the tithes of thine increase the third year, which is the year of tithing, and hast given it unto the Levite, the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, that they may eat within thy gates, and be filled; 13 Then thou shalt say before the Lord thy God, I have brought away the hallowed things out of mine house, and also have given them unto the Levite, and unto the stranger, to the fatherless, and to the widow, according to all thy commandments, which thou hast commanded me: I have not transgressed thy commandments, neither have I forgotten them: 14. I have not eaten thereof in my mourning, neither have I taken away ought thereof for any unclean use, nor given aught thereof for the dead: but I have hearkened to the voice of the Lord my God, and have done according to all that thou hast commanded me. 15. Look down from thy holy habitation, from heaven, and bless thy people Israel, and the land which thou hast given us, as thou swearest unto our fathers, a land that floweth with milk and honey.

Concerning the disposal of their tithe the third year, we had the law before, ch. 14. 28, 29. The second tithe, which the other two years, was to be spent in extraordinaryities at the feasts, was to be spent, the third year, at home, in entertaining the poor. Note, because this is given from the hand of the people, the hand of God. In the people's honesty, that they would dispose of it according to the law, to the Levite, the stranger, and the fatherless, (v. 12.) it is therefore required, that when at the next feast after, they appeared before the Lord, they should there testify (as it were) upon oath, in a religious manner, that they had fully administered, and been true to their trust. They then give the tithe again, which was the purport, v. 13, 14. 1. That no hallowed things were hoarded up; "I have brought them away out of mine house, nothing now remains there but my own part." 2. That the poor, and particularly poor ministers, poor strangers, and poor widows, had had their part according to the commandment. It is fit that God, who by his providence gives us all we have, should by his law direct the using of it; and though we are not now under such particular ap propiations of our revenue as they then were, yet, in general, we are commanded to give alms of such things as we have; and then, and not otherwise, all things are clean to us. Then we may take the comfort of our enjoyments, when God has thus had his dues out of them. This is a commandment which must not be transgressed, no not with an excuse of its being forgotten. 13. That none of this tithe had been misapplied to any common use, much less to any ill use. This seems to refer to the tithe of the other two years, which was to be eaten by the owners themselves; they must profess, (1.) That they had not eaten of it in their mourning, when, by their mourning for the dead, they were commonly unclean; or they had not eaten of it grudgingly, as those that all their days eat in darkness. (2.) That they had not sacrilegiously alienated it to any common use, for it was not their own. And, lastly, That they had not given it for the dead, for the honour of their dead gods, or in hope of making it beneficial to their dead friends. Now the obliging of them to take this solemn protestation at the three years' end, would be an obligation upon them to deal faithfully, knowing that they must be called upon thus to purge themselves. It is well when we consider that all things are true, that when we come to give up our account, we may lift up our face without spot. The Jews say that this protestation of their integrity was to be made with a low voice, because it looked like a self-commemoration; but that the foregoing confession of God's goodness was to be made with a loud voice to his glory. He that durst not make this protestation, must bring his trespass-offering, Lev. 5. 15.

II. To this solemn protestation they must add a solemn prayer, (v. 15.) not particularly for themselves, but for God's people Israel; for in the common peace and prosperity every particular person prospers and has peace. We must learn from hence to be public-spirited in prayer, and to wrestle with God for blessings for the land and nation, our English Israel, and for the universal church, which we are directed to have an eye to in our prayers, as the Israel of God, Gal. 6. 16. In this prayer we are taught, 1. To look up to God as in a holy habitation, and from thence to infer that holiness becomes his house, and that he will be sanctified in those that are about him. 2. To depend upon the favour of God, and his gracious cognizance, as sufficient to make us and our people happy. 3. To reckon it wonderful condescension in God to cast an eye even upon so great and honourable a body as Israel was. It is looking down. 4. To be earnest with God for a blessing upon his people Israel and upon the land which he has given us. For how should the earth yield its increase, or, if it does, what comfort can we take in it, unless there with God, even our own God, gives us his blessing? Ps. 67. 6.

16. This day the Lord thy God hath commanded thee to do these statutes and judgments: thou shalt therefore keep and do them with all thine heart, and with all thy soul. 17. Thou hast avouched the Lord this day to be thy God, and to walk in his ways, and to keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his judgments, and to hearken unto his voice: 18. And the Lord hath avouched thee this day to be his peculiar people, as he hath promised thee, and that thou shouldest keep all his commandments: 19. And to make thee high above all nations which he hath made, in praise, and in name, and in honour: and that thou mayest be a holy people unto the Lord thy God, as he hath spoken.

Two things Moses here urges to enforce all these precepts.

I. That they were the commands of God, v. 16. They were not the dictates of his own wisdom, nor were they enacted by himself, though they might be, but infinite wisdom framed them, and the power of the King of kings made them binding to them. "The Lord thy God commands thee, therefore thou art bound in duty and gratitude to obey him, and it is at thy peril if thou disobey. They are his laws, therefore thou shalt do them, for to that end were they given thee: do them and not despise them, do them and not draw back from them; do them not carefully and hypocritically, but with thy heart and soul, thy whole heart and thy whole soul." II. That their covenant with God obliged them to keep these commands. He insists not only upon God's sovereignity over them, but his propriety in them, and the relation wherein they stood to him. The covenant is mutual, and it binds to obedience both ways.

1. That we may perform our part of the covenant, and answer the intentions of that, v. 17. "Thou hast avouched and solemnly owned and confessed the Lord Jehovah to be thy God, thy Prince and Ruler. As he is so by an incontestable right, so he is by thine own consent." They did this implicitly by their attendance on his word, had done it expressly, (Exod. 24.) and were now to do it again before they parted, ch. 24. 1. Now this obliges us, in fidelity to our word, as well as in duty to our Sovereign, to keep his statutes and his commandments. We really forswear ourselves, and perfidiously violate the most sacred engagements, if, when we have taken the Lord to be our God, we do not make conscience of obeying his commands.

2. That God's part of the covenant also may be made good, and the intentions of that answered, v. 18, 19. The Lord has avouched, not only taken, but publicly owned, thee to be his Segullah, his peculiar people, as he has promised thee; thou art, according to the true intent and meaning of the promise. Now their obedience was not only the condition of this favour, and of the continuance of it, (if they were not obedient, God would disown them, and cast them off,) but it was also the principal design of this favour. "He has avouched thee on purpose that thou shouldst keep his commandments, that thou mightest have both the best directions and the best encouragements in religion. Thus we are elected to obedience, (1 Pet. 1. 2.) chosen that we should be holy, (Eph. 1. 4.) purified, a peculiar people, that we might not only do good works, but be zealous in them, Tit. 2. 14.

Two things God is here said to design in avouching them to be his peculiar people, v. 19. To make them high, and, in order to that, to make them holy; for holiness is true honour, and the only way to everlasting honour: (1.) To make them high above all nations. The greatest honour we are capable of in this world, is, to be taken into covenant with God, and to live in his service. High in praise; for God would accept them, that is true praise, Rom. 2. 29. Their friends would admire them, Ps. 48. 2. Their enemies would envy them, Zeph. 3. 19, 20. High in name, which, some think, denotes the continuance and perpetuity of that praise, a name that shall not be cut off, and kept in the remembrance of that is, the advantages of wealth and power, which would make them great above their neighbours. See Jer. 13. 11. (2.) That they might be a holy people, separated for God, devoted to him, and employed continually in his service. This God aimed at in taking them to be his people; so that if they did not keep his commandments, they received all this grace in vain.

CHAP. XXVII.

Moses having very largely and fully set before the people their duty, both to God and one another, in general and in particular instances; having showed them plainly what is good, and what the law requires of them; and having in the close of the foregoing chapter laid them under the obligation both of the command and the covenant, he comes in this chapter to prescribe outward means, I. For the helping of their memories, that they might not forget the law as a strange thing. They must write all the words of this law upon stones,

1. This day thou art become the people of the Lord thy God, the Lord having avouched thee to be his own and only nation among all nations, and producing them in Canaan which he had long promised as thy God, (Gen. 17. 7, 8.) and which if he had failed to do in due time, he would have been ashamed to be called thy God, Heb. 11. 16. Now thou art more than ever his people, therefore obey his voice.” Privileges should be improved as engagements to duty. Should not a people be ruled by their God?

II. A particular direction to them, with great solemnity to register the words of this law, as soon as they were come into Canaan. It was to be done but once, and at their entrance into the land of promise, in token of their taking possession of it under the several provisions and conditions contained in this law. There was a solemn ratification of the covenant between God and Israel at Mount Sinai, there was an altar erected, and twelve pillars, and the book of the covenant was produced, Exod. 24. 4. 7. which at that place appointed, is a solemnity somewhat like that.

1. They must set up a monument on which they must write the words of this law. (1.) The monument itself was to be very mean; only rough unhewn stones plastered over; not polished marble or alabaster, nor brass tables, but common plaster upon stone, v. 2. It is repeated again, (v. 4.) and orders given that it be written, not very finely, to be admired by the curious, but very plainly, that he who runs, might read it, Hab. 2. 2. The word of God needs not to be set off by the art of man; nor embelished with the enticing words of man’s wisdom. But, (2.) The inscription was to be very great. All the words of this law, v. 3. and again, v. 8. Some understand it only of the covenant between God and Israel, mentioned ch. 26. 17, 18. It is best to understand this a witness, like the memorial of the covenant between Levan and Jacob, which was nothing but a heap of stones thrown hastily together, upon which they did eat together in token of friendship, (Gen. 31. 46, 47.) and that stone which Joshua set up, Josh. 24. 27. Others think that the curses of the covenant in this chapter were written upon this monument, the rather, because it was set up in a particular manner, with all authority, Moses with the elders of Israel, the rulers of each tribe, v. 1. and again, v. 9. Moses and the priests the Levites; so that the charge is given by Moses who was king in Jeshurun, and by their lords, both spiritual and temporal, in concurrence with him. Lest they should think that it was Moses only, an old and dying man, that made such ado about religion, or the priests and Levites only whose tradition it was to attend religion, and who had their maintenance out of it; the elders of Israel, whom God had placed in honour and power over them, and who were men of business in the world, and likely to be long so when Moses was gone, they commanded their people to keep God’s law. Moses having put some of his honour upon them, joins them in commission with himself, in giving this charge, as St. Paul sometimes in his epistles doth the apostles, St. Philemon and Timotheus. Note, All that have any interest in others, or power over them, should use it for the support and furtherance of religion among them. Though the supreme power of a nation provide ever so good laws for this purpose, if inferior magistrate in their places, and ministers in their’s, and masters of families in their’s, do not execute their offices, it will all be to little effect. 2. With all impartiality. They press it upon them with the utmost earnestness, (v. 9, 10.) Take heed and hearken, O Israel. It is a thing that requires and deserves the highest degree of caution and attention. They tell them of their privilege and honour, This day thou art become the people of the Lord thy God, the Lord having avouched thee to be his own and only nation among all nations, and producing them in Canaan which he had long promised as thy God, (Gen. 17. 7, 8.) and which if he had failed to do in due time, he would have been ashamed to be called thy God, Heb. 11. 16. Now thou art more than ever his people, therefore obey his voice.” Privileges should be improved as engagements to duty. Should not a people be ruled by their God?

2. They must write the words of the law clearly, and so that all might read it with ease, (v. 8.) and yet not with difficulty, (v. 10.) nor so that the word of God was to be set off by the art of man; nor embelished with the enticing words of man’s wisdom. But the inscription was to be very great. All the words of this law, v. 3. and again, v. 8. Some understand it only of the covenant between God and Israel, mentioned ch. 26. 17, 18. It is best to understand this a witness, like the memorial of the covenant between Levan and Jacob, which was nothing but a heap of stones thrown hastily together, upon which they did eat together in token of friendship, (Gen. 31. 46, 47.) and that stone which Joshua set up, Josh. 24. 27. Others think that the curses of the covenant in this chapter were written upon this monument, the rather, because it was set up in a particular manner, with all authority, Moses with the elders of Israel, the rulers of each tribe, v. 1. and again, v. 9. Moses and the priests the Levites; so that the charge is given by Moses who was king in Jeshurun, and by their lords, both spiritual and temporal, in concurrence with him. Lest they should think that it was Moses only, an old and dying man, that made such ado about religion, or the priests and Levites only whose tradition it was to attend religion, and who had their maintenance out of it; the elders of Israel, whom God had placed in honour and power over them, and who were men of business in the world, and likely to be long so when Moses was gone, they commanded their people to keep God’s law. Moses having put some of his honour upon them, joins them in commission with himself, in giving this charge, as St. Paul sometimes in his epistles doth the apostles, St. Philemon and Timotheus. Note, All that have any interest in others, or power over them, should use it for the support and furtherance of religion among them. Though the supreme power of a nation provide ever so good laws for this purpose, if inferior magistrate in their places, and ministers in their’s, and masters of families in their’s, do not execute their offices, it will all be to little effect. 2. With all impartiality. They press it upon them with the utmost earnestness, (v. 9, 10.) Take heed and hearken, O Israel. It is a thing that requires and deserves the highest degree of caution and attention. They tell them of their privilege and honour, This day thou art become the people of the Lord thy God, the Lord having avouched thee to be his own and only nation among all nations, and producing them in Canaan which he had long promised as thy God, (Gen. 17. 7, 8.) and which if he had failed to do in due time, he would have been ashamed to be called thy God, Heb. 11. 16. Now thou art more than ever his people, therefore obey his voice.” Privileges should be improved as engagements to duty. Should not a people be ruled by their God?
in all the sides of it, to contain so copious an inscription; unless we will suppose (as some do) that the ten commandments only were here written; as an ancient copy of the close rolls which were laid up in the ark. They must write this when they were gone into Canaan, and yet Moses says, (v. 3.) "Write it that thou mayest go in," that is, "that thou mayest go in with comfort, and assurance of success and settlement, otherwise, it were well for thee not to go in at all. Write it as the conditions of thine entry, and own that thou comest in upon these terms, and no other; since he which is given by just usury is more held by obedience."

2. They must also set up an altar. By the words of the law which were written upon the plaster, God spake to them; By the altar, and the sacrifices offered upon it, they spake to God; and thus was communion kept up between them and God. The word and prayer must go together. Though they might not, of their own heads, set up any altar beside that which the tribes had, yet, by the appointment of God, they might, upon a special occasion. Elijah built a temporary altar of twelve unhewn stones like this one, when he brought Israel back to this covenant which was now made, 1 Kings 18. 31, 32. Now, (1.) This altar must be made of such stones as they found ready upon the field, not new cut out of the rock, much less squared artificially; Thou shalt not lift up any iron tool upon them, v. 5. Christ spake of stones cut out of the mountain without hands, (Dan. 2. 34, 35.) and therefore refused by the builders, as having no form or comeliness, but accepted of God the Father, and made the Head of the corner. (2.) Burnt-offerings and peace-offerings must be offered upon this altar, (v. 6, 7.) that by them they might give glory to God, and obtain favour. Where the law was written, an altar was set up close by it, to signify, that we could not look with any comfort upon the law, being conscious to ourselves of the violation of it, if it were not for the great Sacrifice by which atonement is made for sin; and the altar was set up on mount Ebal, the mount on which those tribes stood, that said Amen to the curses, to intimate, that through Christ we are redeemed from the curse of the law. In the Old Testament, the words of the law are written, with the curse annexed, which would fill with horror the heart and mind. But in the New Testament (which is bound up with it) an altar erected close by it, which gives us everlasting consolation. (3.) They must eat there, and rejoice before the Lord their God, v. 7. This signified, [1.] The consent they gave to the covenant; for the parties to a covenant ratified the covenant by feasting together. They were partakers of the altar, which was God's table, as his servants and tenants, and such they acknowledge themselves; and being put in possession of this good land, bound themselves to pay the rent, and do the services, reserved by the royal grant. [2.] The comfort they took in the covenant; they had reason to rejoice in it, when they had an altar, a remedial law, so near it; it was a great favour to them, and a token for good, that God gave them his statutes; and that they were owned as the people of God, and the children of the promise, was what they had reason to rejoice in, though, when this solemnity was to be performed, they were not put in full possession of Canaan; but God has spoken in his holiness, and then I will rejoice; Gilead is mine, Manasseh is mine; all my own.

11. And Moses charged the people the same day, saying, 12. These shall stand upon mount Gerizim to bless the people, when ye are come over Jordan; Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Joseph, and Benjamin. 13. And these shall stand upon mount Ebal to curse; Reuben, Gad, and Asher, and Zebulun, Dan, and Naphtali. 14. And the Levites shall speak, and say unto all the men of Israel with a loud voice, 15. Cursed be the man that maketh any graven or molten image, an abomination unto the Lord, the work of the hands of the craftsman, and puttest it in a secret place. And all the people shall answer and say, Amen. 16. Cursed be he that setteth light by his father or his mother. And all the people shall say, Amen. 17. Cursed be he that removeth his neighbour's landmark. And all the people shall say, Amen. 18. Cursed be he that maketh the blind to wander out of the way. And all the people shall say, Amen. 19. Cursed be he that perverteth the judgment of the stranger, fatherless, and widow. And all the people shall say, Amen. 20. Cursed be he that lieth with his father's wife; be cause he uncovereth his father's skirt. And all the people shall say, Amen. 21. Cursed be he that lieth with any manner of beast. And all the people shall say, Amen. 22. Cursed be he that lieth with his sister, the daughter of his father, or the daughter of his mother. And all the people shall say, Amen. 23. Cursed be he that lieth with his mother-in-law. And all the people shall say, Amen. 24. Cursed be he that smiteth his neighbour secretly. And all the people shall say, Amen. 25. Cursed be he that taketh reward to slay an innocent person. And all the people shall say, Amen. 26. Cursed be he that confirmeth not all the words of this law to do them. And all the people shall say, Amen.

When the law was written, to be seen and read by all men, the sanctions of it were to be published, which, to complete the solemnity of their covenanting with God, they were deliberately to declare their approbation of. This they were before directed to do, (ch. 11. 29, 30.) and therefore the appointment here begins somewhat abruptly, v. 12. There were, it seems, in Canaan, that part of it which afterward fell to the lot of Ephraim, (Joshua's tribe;) two mountains that lay near together, with a valley between, one called Gerizim, and the other Ebal. On the sides of these two mountains, which faced one another, all the tribes were to be drawn up, six on one side, and six on the other, so that in the valley, at the foot of each mountain, they came pretty near together, so near as that the priest's standing betwixt them might be heard by those that were next them on both sides; then when silence was proclaimed, and attention commanded, one of the priests, or perhaps more, at some distance from each other, pronounced with a loud voice one of the curses here following, and all the people that stood on the side and foot of mount Ebal, (those that stood further off taking the signal from those that stood nearer and within hearing,) said Amen; then the contrary blessing was pronounced, "Blessed be he that doeth not so or so," and then those that stood on the side, and at the foot, of mount Gerizim, said Amen. This could not but affect them very much with the blessings and curses, the promises and threatenings, of the law, and not only acquaint all the people with them, but teach them to apply them to themselves.

1. Something is to be observed, in general, concerning this solemnity, which was to be done but once and not repeated, but would be talked of to posterity.

1. God appointed which tribes should stand upon mount Gerizim, and which on mount Ebal, (v. 12, 13,) to prevent the disputes that might have arisen, if they had been to dispose of themselves. The six tribes that were appointed for blessing, were all the children of the free women, for to such the promise belongs, Gal. 4. 31. Levi is here put among the rest, to teach ministers to apply to themselves the blessing and curse which they preach to others, and by faith to set their own Amen to it.

2. Of those tribes that were to say Amen to the blessing, it is said, They stood to bless the people, but of the other, They stood to curse, not mentioning the people, as if to suppose that any of this people would stand to curse; but those who are to stand to lay themselves under the curse. Or, perhaps, the different way of expression intimates that there was but one blessing pronounced in general upon the people of Israel, as a happy people, and that should ever be so, if they were obedient; and that blessing the tribes on mount Gerizim were to say Amen, "Happy art thou, O Israel, and mayest thou ever be so;" but then the curses come in as exceptions from the general rule; and (as we know Exegetical firmat regulam—The exception confirms the rule;) Israel is a blessed people, but if there be any particular persons even among them, that do such and such things as are mentioned, let them know that they have no part nor lot in the matter, but are under a curse. This shows how ready God is to bestow the blessing; if any fall under the curse, they may thank themselves, they bring it upon their own heads.

3. The Levites or priests, such of them as were appointed for that purpose, were to pronounce the curses as well as the blessings. They were ordained to bless; (ch. 10. 8,) the priests did it daily, Numb. 6. 23. But they must separate between the precious and the vile: they must not give that blessing promising health and life, which must declare, neither that curse, lest those who had no right to it themselves, should think to share in it by being in the crowd. Note, Ministers must preach the terrors of the law, as well as the comforts of the gospel; must not only allure people to their duty with the promises of a blessing, but awe them to it with the threatenings of a curse.

4. The curses are here expressed, but not the blessings; for the curses were under the law were under the curse; but it was an honour reserved for Christ to bless us, and so to do that for us, which the law could not do, in that it was weak. In Christ's sermon upon the mount, which was the true mount Gerizim, we have blessings only, Matth. 5. 3, &c.

5. To each of the curses the people were to say Amen. It is easy to understand the meaning of Amen to the blessings. The Jews have a saying to encourage people to say Amen to the public prayers, Whosoever answereth Amen, after him that blesseth, he is as he that blesseth. But how could they say Amen to the curses? (1.) It was a profession of their faith in the truth of them; that these, and the like curses, were not bugbears to frighten children and fools, but the real declaration of the wrath of God against the ungodliness and unrighteousness of men; not one iota of which shall fall to the ground. (2.) It was an acknowledgment of the equity of these curses; when they said Amen, they did in effect say, not only, It is certain it shall be so; but, It is just it should be so. They who do such things, deserve to fall and lie under the curse. (3.) It was such an imprecation upon themselves as strongly obliged them to have nothing to do with these evil practices upon which every man was obliged, as far as he could, to prevent his neighbour from breaking these laws, and to reprouse those that had offended, lest they should bear sin and the curse for them."

II. Let us now observe what are the particular sins against which the curses are here denounced.

1. Sins against the second commandment. This flaunting worship, the first commandment first, v. 15. They are here cursed, not only for their worship, but for seven worship images, but that make them or keep them, if they be such (or like such) as idolaters used in the service of their gods; whether it be a graven image or a molten image, it comes all to one, it is an abomination to the Lord; though it be not set up in public, but in a secret place; though it be not actually worshipped, nor is it said to be designed for worship, but has been set there with respect, and a constant temptation; he that does this, may perhaps escape punishment from men, but he cannot escape the curse of God.

2. Against the fifth commandment. The contempt of parents is a sin so heinous, that it is put next to the contempt of God himself. If a man abused his parents, either in word or deed, he fell under the sentence of the magistrate, and must be put to death, Exod. 21. 15, 17. But to set light by them in his heart, was a thing which the magistrate could not take cognizance of, and therefore it is here laid under the curse of God, who knows the heart. Those are cursed children, that carry themselves scornfully and insolently toward their parents.

3. Against the eighth commandment. The curse of God is here fastened, (1.) Upon an unjust neighbour that removes the land-marks, v. 17. See ch. 19. 14. (2.) Upon an unjust counsellor, who, when his advice is asked, maliciously directs his friend to that which he knows will be to his prejudice; which is making the blind to wander out of the way, under pretence of directing him in the way, by which nothing can be either more barbarous or more treacherous, v. 18. Those that seduce others from the training of God's children, entice them to sin, bring this curse upon themselves, which our Saviour has explained, Matth. 15. 14. The blind lead the blind, and both shall fall into the ditch. (3.) Upon an unjust judge, that perverted the judgment of the stranger, fatherless, and widow, whom he should protect and vindicate, v. 19. These are supposed to be poor and friendless, (nothing to be got by them,) and are enticed by avarice (by dissembling,) and therefore judges may be tempted to side with their adversaries against right and equity; but cursed are such judges.

4. Against the seventh commandment. Incest is a cursed sin, with a sister, a father's wife, or a mother-in-law, v. 20, 22, 23. These crimes only expose men to the sword of the magistrate, (Lev. 20. 11,) but, which is more dreadful, to the wrath of God; bestiality likewise, v. 21.
5. Against the sixth commandment. Two of the worst kinds of murder are specified; (1) Murder unseen, when a man does not set upon his neighbour as a fair adversary, giving him an opportunity to defend himself; but _smites him secretly_, (v. 24.) as by poison or otherwise, when he sees not who hurts him. See Ps. 10. 8, 9. Though such secret murders may go undiscovered, and unpunished, yet the essence of God will follow them: (2) Murder under cover of law, which is of all other the greatest affront to God, for it makes an ordinance of his, to patronise the worst of villains; and the greatest wrong to our neighbour, for it ruins his honour as well as his life; cursed therefore is he that will be hired, or bribed, either to accuse, or to convict, or to condemn, and so to stay an innocent person, v. 25. Ps. 139. 19.

6. The solemnity concludes with a general curse upon him that _confirmeth not_, or, as it might be read, that _performeth not, all the words of this law to do them_, v. 26. By our obedience to the law we set our seal to it, and so confirm it, as by our disobedience we do what lies in us to _disannul it_, Ps. 119. 126. The apostle, following all the ancient version, repeats it, that _curses_, or _that confirmeth not_, Gal. 3. 10. Lest those who were guilty of other sins not mentioned in this commendation, should think themselves safe from the curse, this last reaches all; not only those who do the evil which the law forbids, but those also who omit the good which the law requires: to this we must all _say Amen_, owning ourselves under the curse, justly to have deserved it, and that we must certainly have perished for ever under it, if Christ had not redeemed us _from the curse of the law, by being made a curse for us_.

CHAP. XXVIII.

This chapter is a very large exposition of two words in the foregoing chapter, the blessing and the curse. Those were pronounced blessed in general, that were obedient, and cursed, those cursed, that were disobedient; but because generalists are not so affecting, Moses here descends to particulars, and describes the blessing and the curse, not in their fountains, (those are out of sight, and therefore the most considerable, yet least considered, the favour of God the spring of all the blessings, and the wrath of God the spring of all the curses,) but in their streams, the sensible effects of the blessing and the curse, for they have a things, and have real effects. 1. He describes the blessings that should come upon them if they were obedient; personal, family, and especially national, for in that capacity especially they are here treated with, v. 1-14. II. He more largely describes the curses which would come upon them if they were disobedient; such as would be, 1. Their extreme vexation, v. 15-44. 2. Their utter ruin and destruction at last, v. 45-68. This chapter is much to the same purport with Lev. 26, setting before them life and death, good and evil; and the promise, in the close of that chapter, of their restoration upon their repentance, is here likewise more largely repeated, ch. 30. Thus as they had precept upon precept in the repetition of the law, so they had line upon line in the repetition of the promises and threatenings. And these are both there and here delivered, not only as sanctions of the law, but as moral, or practical, predictions of the event, what would certainly, that for a while the people of Israel would be happy in their obedience, but that at length they would be undone by their disobedience; and therefore it is said (ch. 30. 1.) that _these would be a bane to them_, both the blessing and the curse.

1. AND it shall come to pass, if thou shalt hearken diligently unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe and to do all his commandments which I command thee this day, that the Lord thy God will set thee on high above all nations of the earth: 2. And all these blessings shall come on thee, and overtake thee, if thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God. 3. Blessed shalt thou be in the city and blessed shalt thou be in the field. 4. Blessed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy ground, and the fruit of thy cattle, the increase of thy kine, and the flocks of thy sheep. 5. Blessed shall be thy basket and thy store. 6. Blessed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and blessed shalt thou be when thou goest out. 7. The Lord shall cause thine enemies that rise up against thee to be smitten before thine face: they shall come out against thee one way, and flee before thee seven ways. 8. The Lord shall command the blessing upon thee in thy storehouses, and in all that thou settest thine hand unto; and he shall bless thee in the land which the Lord thy God giveth thee. 9. The Lord shall establish thee a holy people unto himself, as he hath sworn unto thee, if thou shalt keep the commandments of the Lord thy God, and walk in his ways. 10. And all people of the earth shall see that thou art called by the name of the Lord; and they shall be afraid of thee. 11. And the Lord shall make thee plenteous in goods, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy ground, in the land which the Lord swears unto thy fathers to give thee. 12. The Lord shall open unto thee his good treasure, the heaven to give the rain unto thy land in his season, and to bless all the work of thine hand: and thou shalt lend unto many nations, and thou shalt not borrow. 13. And the Lord shall make thee the head, and not the tail; and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; if that thou hearken unto the commandments of the Lord thy God, which I command thee this day, to observe and to do them: 14. And thou shalt not go aside from any of the words which I command thee this day, to the right hand or to the left, to go after other gods to serve them.

The blessings are here put before the curses, to intimate, 1. That God is slow to anger, but swift to show mercy: he has said it, and sworn, that he would much rather we would obey and live, than sin and die. It is his delight to bless. 2. That though both the promises and the threatenings are designed to warning and hold us to our duty; yet it is better that we be assured to that which is good by a filial hope of God's favour, than that we be frightened to it by a servile fear of his wrath. That obedience please best, which comes from a principle of delight in God's goodness. Now,

1. We have here the condition upon which the blessing is promised. 1. It is upon condition that they diligently hearken to the voice of God's (v. 1, 2.) that they hear God speaking to them by his word, and use their utmost endeavour to acquaint

(1.) They observe and do all his commandments, (and in order to obedience, there is need of observance,) v. 2. They keep the commandments of God, (v. 9.) and walk in his ways. Not only do them for once, but keep them for ever; not only set out in his ways, but walk in them to the end. 3. Upon condition that they should not go aside either to the right hand or to the left, either to superstition on the one hand, or profaneness on the other; and particularly that they should not go after other gods, (v. 14.) which was the sin of all others that were round about them, and displeased with. Let them take care to keep up religion, both the form and power of it, in their families and nation, and God would not fail to bless them.

II. The particulars of this blessing.

1. It is promised that the providence of God should prosper them in all their outward concerns. These blessings are said to overtake them, v. 2. Good people, sometimes, under the sense of their own unworthiness, are ready to fly from the blessing, and to conclude that it belongs not to them; but the blessing shall find them out and follow them notwithstanding; thus in the great day, the blessing will overtake the righteous that say, Lord, when saw we thee hungry, and fed thee? Matth. 25. 37. It is promised that they should be safe and easy; a blessing should come upon them wherever they were, in the city, or in the field, v. 3. Whether their habitation was in the town or country; whether they were husbandmen or traders; whether their business called them into the city or into the field; they should be preserved from the dangers, and have the comforts, of every scene. This blessing should attend them in their journeys, going out and coming in, v. 4. Whether they should be protected, and the affair they went about, should succeed well. Observe, here, what a necessary and constant dependence we have upon God, both for the continuance and comfort of this life. We need him at every turn, in all the various moments of life; we cannot be safe if he withdraw his protection; nor easy if he suspend his favour: but if he bless us, go where we will, we shall be safe.

(2.) That their families should be built up in a numerous issue; Blessed shall be the fruit of thy body, (v. 4.) and in that the Lord shall make thee a numerous people, (v. 11.) in pursuance of the promise made to Abraham, that his seed should be as the stars of heaven for multitude, and that God would be a God to them, than which, a greater blessing, and more comprehensive, could not be entailed upon the fruit of their body. See Isa. 61. 9.

(3.) That they should be rich, and have an abundance of all the good things of life, which are promised them, not merely that they might have the pleasure of enjoying them, but (as Bishop Patrick observes out of one of the Jewish writers) that they might have wherewithal to honour God, and might be helped and encouraged to serve him cheerfully, and in a spirit of generous obedience to him. A blessing is promised, [1.] On all they had without doors, corn and cattle in the field, (v. 4, 11.) their cows and sheep particularly, which should be blessed for the owners' sake, and made blessings to them. In order to this, it is promised that God would give them rain in due season, which is called, his good treasure, (v. 12.) because with this treasure of the earth he is enriched. Ps. 62. 9. Our constant supplies we must see coming from God's good treasure, and own our obligations to him for them; if he withhold his rain, the fruits both of the ground and of the cattle soon perish. [2.] On all they had within doors, the basket and store, (v. 5.) the store-houses or barns, v. 8. When it is brought home, God will bless it, and not blow upon it as sometimes he does, Hag. 1. 6, 9. We depend upon God and his blessing; not only for our yearly corn out of the field, but for our daily bread out of our basket and store, and therefore are taught to pray for it every day.

(4.) That they should have success in all their employments, which would be a constant satisfaction to them; "The Lord shall command the blessing (and it is he only that can command it) upon thee, not only in all thou hast, but in all thou doest, and all that the hand of God sendeth thee." v. 8. This intimated that even when they were rich, they must not be idle, but must find some good employment or other to set their hand to, and God would own their industry, and bless the work of their hand; (v. 12.) for that which makes rich, and keeps so, is, the blessing of the Lord upon the hand of the diligent, Prov. 10. 4, 22.

(5.) That they should have honour among their neighbours, v. 1. The Lord thy God will set thee on high above all nations. He made them so, by taking them into covenant with himself, ch. 26. 19. And he would make them more and more so by their outward prosperity, if they would not by sin disapprove themselves. Two things should help to make them great among the nations. [1.] Their wealth, v. 12. Thou shalt lend to many nations upon interest, though (as they take it from the neighbouring nations,) "but thou shalt not have occasion to borrow." This would give them great influence with all about them: for the borrower is servant to the lender. It may be meant of trade and commerce, that they should export abundantly more than they should import, which would keep the balance on their side. [2.] Their power, v. 13. "The Lord shall make thee the head, and give law to all about them, to exact tribute, and to arbitrate all controversies." Every sheaf should bow to their's; which should make them so considerable, that all the people of the earth should be afraid of them, (v. 10.) that is, should reverence their true grandeur, and dread making them their enemies. The flourishing of religion among them, with the blessing of God upon them, would make them formidable to all their neighbours, terrible as an army with-banners.

(6.) That they should be victorious over their enemies, and prosper in all their wars. If any were so daring as to rise up against them to oppress them, or encroach upon them, it should be at their peril, they should certainly fall before them, v. 7. The forces of the enemy, though entirely drawn up to come against them one way, should be entirely routed, and flee before them seven ways, each making the best of his way.

From the whole we learn, (though it were well if men would believe it,) that religion and piety are the best friends to outward prosperity. Though temporal blessings do not take up so much room in the promises of the New Testament, as they do in the promises of the Old, yet it is enough that our Lord Jesus has given them to us, and sure we may take his word, that if we seek first the kingdom of God, and the righteousness thereof, all other things shall be added to us, as far as Infinite Wisdom sees good; and who can desire it further? Matth. 6. 33.

2. It is likewise promised that the grace of God should establish them a holy people, v. 9. Having taken them into covenant with himself, he would keep them in covenants and (providing they used the means of steadfastness,) he would give them the grace of steadfastness, that they should not depart from him. Note, Those that are sincere in holiness, God will establish in holiness; and he is of power to do it, Rom. 16. 25. He that is holy, shall be holy still; and those whom God establishes in holiness, he thereby establishes a people to himself, for as long as we keep close to God, he will never forsake us. This establishment of their religion would be the establishment of their reputation, ver. 10. All the people of the earth shall see, and even, that thou art called by the name of the Lord, that is, "that thou art a most excellent and glorious people, under the particular care and countenance of the great God. They shall be made to know that a people called by the name of Jehovah is without doubt the happiest people under the sun, even their enemies themselves being judges. The favourites of heaven are truly great, and, first or last, it will be made to appear that they are so; if not in this world, yet at that day, when those who confess Christ now, shall be confessed by him before men and angels, as those whom he delights to honour.

15. But it shall come to pass, if thou wilt not hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to observe to do all his commandments and statutes which I command thee this day, that all these curses shall come upon thee, and overtake thee.

16. Cursed shalt thou be in the "vy, and cursed shalt thou be in the field. 17. Cursed shall be thy basket and thy store. 18. Cursed shall be the fruit of thy body, and the fruit of thy land, the increase of thy vine, and the flocks of thy sheep. 19. Cursed shalt thou be when thou comest in, and cursed shalt thou be when thou goest out. 20. The Lord shall send upon thee cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in all that thou settest thine hand unto for to do, until thou be destroyed, and until thou perish quickly; because of the wickedness of thy doings, whereby thou hast forsaken me. 21. The Lord shall make the pestilence cleave unto thee, until he have consumed thee from off the land whither thou goest to possess it. 22. The Lord shall smite thee with a consumption, and with a fever, and with an inflammation, and with an extreme burning, and with the sword, and with blasting, and with mildew; and they shall pursue thee until thou perish. 23. And the heaven that is over thy head shall be brass, and the earth that is under thee shall be iron. 24. The Lord shall make the rain of thy land powder and dust: from heaven shall it come down upon thee, until thou be destroyed. 25. The Lord shall cause thee to be smitten before thine enemies: thou shalt go out one way against them, and flee seven ways before them; and shalt be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth. 26. And thy carcase shall be meat unto all fowls of the air, and unto the beasts of the earth, and no man shall fray them away. 27. The Lord will smite thee with the botch of Egypt, and with the emerods and with the scab, and with the itch, whereof thou canst not be healed. 28. The Lord shall smite thee with madness, and blindness, and astonishment of heart: 29. And thou shalt grope at noon-day, as the blind grope in darkness, and thou shalt not prosper in thy ways: and thou shalt be only oppressed and spoiled everywhere, and no man shall save thee. 30. Thou shalt betroth a wife, and another man shall lie with her: thou shalt build a house, and thou shalt not dwell therein: thou shalt plant a vineyard, and shalt not gather the grapes thereof. 31. Thine ox shall be slain before thine eyes, and thou shalt not eat thereof: thine ass shall be violently taken from before thy face, and shall not be restored to thee: thy sheep shall be given unto thine enemies, and thou shalt have none to rescue them. 32. Thy sons and thy daughters shall be given unto another people, and thine eyes shall look, and fail with longing for them all the day long: and there shall be no might in thine hand. 33. The fruit of thy land, and all thy labours, shall a nation which thou knowest not eat up; and thou shalt be openly oppressed and crushed always: 34. So that thou shalt be made for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see. 35. The Lord shall smite thee in the knees, and in the legs, with a sore botch that cannot be healed, from the sole of thy foot unto the top of thy head. 36. The Lord shall bring thee, and thy king which thou shalt set over thee, unto a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known; and there shalt thou serve other gods, wood and stone. 37. And thou shalt become an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word, among all nations whither the Lord shall lead thee. 38. Thou shalt carry much seed out into the field, and shalt gather but little in; for the locust shall consume it. 39. Thou shalt plant vineyards, and dress them, but shalt neither drink of the wine, nor gather the grapes; for the worms shall eat them. 40. Thou shalt have olive-trees throughout all thy coasts, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil; for thine olive shall cast his fruit. 41. Thou shalt beget sons and daughters, but thou shalt not enjoy them; for they shall go into captivity. 42. All thy trees and fruit of thy land shall the locust consume. 43. The stranger that is within thee shall get up above thee very high; and thou shalt come down very low. 44. He shall lead thee, and thou shalt not lend to him: he shall be the head, and thou shalt be the tail.

Having viewed the bright side of the cloud, which is toward the obedient, we have now presented to us the black and dark side, which is toward the disobedient. If we do not keep God's commandments, we not only come short of the blessing promised, but we lay ourselves under the curse, which is as comprehensive of all misery, as the blessing is of all happiness. Observe,
I. The equity of this curse. It is not a curse causeless, or for some light cause; God seeks not occasion against us, nor is he apt to quarrel with us. That which is here mentioned as bringing the curse, is, 1. Despising God; refusing to hearken to his voice, the only reason of being accounted worthy of the malice of the enemy. (Job. 23.) 2. Withdrawing from his commandments, not doing them, and thus desecrating himself. (v. 20.) God never casts us off, till we first cast him off. It intimates that their idolatry, by which they forsok the true God for false gods, would be their destroying sin, more than any other.
II. The extent and efficacy of this curse. These curses shall come upon thee from above, and shall overtake thee; though thou endeavour to escape them, it is to no purpose to attempt it, they shall find thee out, they will hunt after thee, they will catch thee, and overtake thee, and strike thee through. There is no running from God but by running to him, no fleeing from his justice but by fleeing to his mercy. See Ps. 21. 7. 8. 1. Wherefore the sin of the curse of God follows him; wherever he is, it rests upon him. He is cursed in the city, and in the field. (v. 16.) The strength of the city cannot shelter him from it, the pleasant air of the country is no fence against these pestilential steams. He is cursed, (v. 19.) when he comes in, for the curse is upon the house of the wicked, (Prov. 3. 33.) and he is cursed when he goes out, for the curse is in his hand, and he cannot get rid of it, which has entered into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones. 2. Whatever he has, is under a curse. Cursed is the ground for his sake, and all that is on it, or comes out of it, and so he is cursed from the ground, as Cain, Gen. 4. 11. The basket and store cursed, v. 17, 18. All his enjoyments being forfeited by him, are in a manner forbidden to him, as cursed things, which he has no title to. To those whose wind and constitution were defiled, every thing else is so, Tit. 1. 15. They are all imbiddered to him, he cannot take any true comfort in them, for the wrath of God mixes itself with them, and he is so far from having any secu-ritv of the continuance of them, that if his eyes be open, he may see them all condemned, and ready to be confiscated, and with them all his joys, and all his pleasure, is a curse too. It is a curse in all that he seteth his hand unto, v. 20. A constant disappointment which they are subject to, that set their hearts upon the world, and expect their happiness in it, and which cannot but be a constant vexation. This curse here is just the reverse of the blessing in the former part of the chapter. Thus whatever bliss they have, there is in it no bliss for them, but the contrary to it, in hell; (Isa. 65. 13.) My servants shall eat, but we shall be hungry.
Many particular judgments are here enumerated, which would be the fruits of the curse, and with which God would punish the people of the Jews for their apostasy and disobedience. (1.) These judgments threatened are of divers kinds, for God has many arrows in his quiver, four sore judgments, ( Ezek. 14. 21.) and many more. (2.) They are all represented as very terrible, and the descriptions of them are exceedingly lively and affecting, that men, knowing these terrors of the Lord, might, if possible, be persuaded. (3.) The threatenings of the same judgment are several times repeated, that they might make the more deep and lasting impressions; and to intimate that if they persisted in their disobedience, the judgments were not enough. They as they said, "Surely the bitterness of it is past," would return with double force; for when God judges, he will overcome. (1.) Bodily diseases are here threatened; that they should be epidemic in their land. These God sometimes makes use of for the chastisement and improvement of his own people, Lord, behold, he whom thou lovest is sick. But here they are threatened out that they might be brought upon his enemies, as tokens of his wrath, and designed for their ruin. So that according to the temper of our spirits, under sickness, accordingly it is to us a blessing or a curse. But whatever sickness may be to particular persons, it is certain that epidemic diseases raging among a people, are national judgments, and are so to be accounted. He here threatens, First, Painful dis-ases; (v. 35.) a sore botch, beginning in the legs and ankles, and spreading up to the thighs; another is a boils, (v. 20.) but he cannot; if he flee from the iron weapon, yet the bow of steel shall reach him and strike him through. There is no running from God but by running to him, no fleeing from his justice but by fleeing to his mercy. See Ps. 21. 7. 8. 1. Wherefore the sin of the curse of God follows him; wherever he is, it rests upon him. He is cursed in the city, and in the field. (v. 16.) The strength of the city cannot shelter him from it, the pleasant air of the country is no fence against these pestilential steams. He is cursed, (v. 19.) when he comes in, for the curse is upon the house of the wicked, (Prov. 3. 33.) and he is cursed when he goes out, for the curse is in his hand, and he cannot get rid of it, which has entered into his bowels like water, and like oil into his bones. 2. Whatever he has, is under a curse. Cursed is the ground for his sake, and all that is on it, or comes out of it, and so he is cursed from the ground, as Cain, Gen. 4. 11. The basket and store cursed, v. 17, 18. All his enjoyments being forfeited by him, are in a manner forbidden to him, as cursed things, which he has no title to. To those whose wind and constitution were defiled, every thing else is so, Tit. 1. 15. They are all imbiddered to him, he cannot take any true comfort in them, for the wrath of God mixes itself with them, and he is so far from having any secu-
ritv of the continuance of them, that if his eyes be open, he may see them all condemned, and ready to be confiscated, and with them all his joys, and all his pleasure, is a curse too. It is a curse in all that he seteth his hand unto, v. 20. A constant disappointment which they are subject to, that set their hearts upon the world, and expect their happiness in it, and which cannot but be a constant vexation. This curse here is just the reverse of the blessing in the former part of the chapter. Thus whatever bliss they have, there is in it no bliss for them, but the contrary to it, in hell; (Isa. 65. 13.) My servants shall eat, but we shall be hungry.
Many particular judgments are here enumerated, which would be the fruits of the curse, and with which God would punish the people of the Jews for their apostasy and disobedience. (1.) These judg-
them away; so odious would God's curse make them to all mankind.

[4.] That they should be infallible in all their counsels, so as not to discern their own interest, nor bring any thing to pass for the public good, (v. 28, 29.) The Lord shall smite thee with madness and blindness. Note, God's judgments can reach the minds of even the wiser, as well as the bodies and estates; and those are the sorest of all judgments, which make men a terror to themselves, and their own destroyers. That which they contrived to secure themselves by, should still turn to their prejudice. Thus we often find that the allies they confided in, distressed them, and strengthened them not, 2 Chron. 28. 20. The wiser will not walk in God's counsels, are justly left to be ruined by their own; and those that are wilfully blind to their duty, deserve to be made blind to their interest; and seeing they loved darkness rather than light, let them graze at noon-day as in the dark.

[5.] That they should be plundered of all their enjoyments, stripped of all the proud and impious conqueror, such as Benhadad was to Ahab, 1 Kings 20. 27. That which they take in God's counsels, are justly left to be ruined by their own; but their wives and children, v. 30, 32. Their dearest comforts, which they took most pleasure in, and promised themselves most from, should be the entertainment and triumph of their enemies. As they had dwelt in houses which they builded not, and eaten of vineyards which they planted not, (ch. 6. 10, 11.) so others should do by them. Their oxcorn, asses, and sheep, like Jacob's, should be taken away before their eyes, and they should not be able to recover them, v. 31. And all the fruit of their land and labours should be devoured and eaten up by the enemy; so that they, and their's, would want necessaries, while their enemies were revelling with that which they had laboured for.

[6.] That they should be carried captives into a far country, nay, into all the kingdoms of the earth, v. 25. Their sons and daughters, whom they promised themselves comfort in, should go into captivity, (v. 41.) and they themselves at length, and their king in whom they promised themselves safety and settlement, v. 36. This was fully accomplished, when the ten tribes first, were carried captive into Assyria, (2 Kings 17. 6.) and not long after, the two tribes into Babylon, and two of their kings, 2 Kings 21. 16. This was the characteristic, and mark of a people under God's curse, that they were to be a nation of aliens and strangers, and that, as God had set his people free from their vineyards, and given over their land, so he would do them good; a nation is often in scripture called by the name of its God, as Jer. 48. 7. They had made idolaters their associates, and now God made idolaters their oppressors.

[7.] That those who remained, should be insulted and tyrannized over by strangers, v. 43, 44. So the ten tribes were by the colonies which the king of Assyria possessed, and took possession of them, like Kings 17. 24. Or, this may be meant of the gradual encroachments which the strangers within their gates should make upon them, so as insensibly to worm them out of their estates. We read of the fulfilling of this, Hos. 7. 9. Strangers have devoured his strength; foreigners ate the bread out of the mouths of true-born Israelites, by which they were justly chastised for introducing strange gods.

[8.] That their reputation among their neighbours should be quite sunk, and they that had been a name, and a praise, should be an astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word, v. 37. Some have observed the fulfilling of this threatening in their present state; for when we would express the most perfidious and barbarous treatment, we say, None but a Jew would have done so. Thus is sin a reproach to any people.

Lastly, To complete their misery, it is threatened that they should be quite out of the possession of their minds by all these troubles; (v. 34.) Thou shalt be mad for the sight of thine eyes, that is, quite bereaved of all comfort and hope, and abandoned to utter despair. Those that walk by sight, and not by faith, are in danger of losing reason itself, when every thing about them looks frightful; and their condition is woful indeed, that are mad for the sight of their eyes.

45. Moreover, all these curses shall come upon thee, and shall pursue thee, and overtake thee, till thou be destroyed; because thou hast resolved not unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which he commanded thee: 46. And they shall be upon thee for a sign and for a wonder, and upon thy seed for ever. 47. Because thou servest not the Lord thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things; 48. Therefore shall thou serve thine enemies, which the Lord shall send against thee, in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things: and he shall put a yoke of iron upon thy neck, until he have destroyed thee. 49. The Lord shall bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, as swift as the eagle flieth; a nation whose tongue thou shalt not understand; 50. A nation of fierce countenance, which shall not regard the person of the old, nor show favour to the young; 51. And he shall eat the fruit of thy cattle, and the fruit of thy land, until thou be destroyed: which also shall not leave thee either corn, wine, or oil, or the increase of thy kine, or flocks of thy sheep, until he have destroyed thee. 52. And he shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, wherein thou trustedst, throughout all thy land: and he shall besiege thee in all thy gates throughout all thy land, which the Lord thy God hath given thee. 53. And thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and of thy daughters, which the Lord thy God hath given thee, in the siege, and in the straitness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee: 54. So that the man that is tender among you, and very delicate, his eye shall be evil toward his brother, and toward the wife of his bosom, and toward the remnant of his children which he shall leave: 55. So that he will not give to any of them of the flesh of his children.
whom he shall eat: because he hath nothing left him in the siege, and in the straitness wherewith thine enemies shall distress thee in all thy gates. 56. The tender and delicate woman among you, which would not adventure to set the sole of her foot upon the ground for delicateness and tenderness, her eye shall be evil toward the husband of her bosom, and toward her son, and toward her daughter, 57. And toward her young one that cometh out from between her feet, and toward her children which she shall bear: for she shall eat them for want of all things secretly in the siege and straitness wherewith thine enemy shall distress thee in thy gates. 58. If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law that are written in this book, that thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, THE LORD THY GOD; 59. Then the LORD will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy seed, even great plagues, and of long continuance, and sore sicknesses, and of long continuance. 60. Moreover he will bring upon thee all the diseases of Egypt, which thou wast afraid of; and they shall cleave unto thee. 61. Also every sickness, and every plague, which is not written in the book of this law, them will the LORD bring upon thee, until thou be destroyed. 62. And ye shall be left few in number, whereas ye were as the stars of heaven for multitude; because thou wouldest not obey the voice of the LORD thy God. 63. And it shall come to pass, that, as the LORD rejoiced over you to do you good, and to multiply you; so the LORD will rejoice over you to destroy you, and to bring you to naught; and ye shall be plucked off from off the land whither thou goest to possess it. 64. And the LORD shall scatter thee among all people, from one end of the earth even unto the other; and there thou shalt serve other gods, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known, even wood and stone. 65. And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but the LORD shall give thee there a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind: 66. And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have none assurance of thy life: 67. In the morning thou shalt say, Would God it were even! and at even thou shalt say, Would God it were morning! for the fear of thine heart wherewith thou shalt fear, and for the sight of thine eyes which thou shalt see. 68. And the LORD shall bring thee into Egypt again with ships, by the way whereof I spake unto thee, Thou shalt see it no more again: and there ye shall be sold unto your enemies for bondmen and bondwomen, and no man shall buy you.

One would have thought that enough had been said to possess them with a dread of that wrath of God which is revealed from heaven against the ungodliness and unrighteousness of men. But to show how deep the treasures of that wrath are, and that there is danger and trouble behind, Moses, when one would have thought that he had concluded this dismal subject, begins again, and adds to this roll of curses, many similar words; as Jeremiah did to his, Jer. 36. 32. It should seem that in the former part of his commination, Moses foretells their captivity in Babylon, and the calamities which introduced and attended that, by which, even after their return, they were brought to that low and poor condition, which is described, v. 44. That their enemies should be the head, and they the tail: but here in this latter part, he foretells their last destruction by the Romans, and their dispersion thereupon. And the present deplorable state of the Jewish nation, and of all that have incorporated themselves with them, by embracing their religion, doth so fully and exactly answer to the prediction in these verses, that it serves for an incomparable proof of the truth of prophecy, and consequently of the divine authority of the scripture. And this last destruction being here represented as more dreadful than the former, it shows that their sin, in rejecting Christ and his gospel, was more heinous and more provoking to God than idolatry itself, and left them more under the power of Satan; for their captivity in Babylon cured them effectually of their idolatry in seventy years' time; but under this last destruction now for above 1600 years, they continue incurably averse to the Lord Jesus. Observe, 1. What is here said in general of the wrath of God, which should light and lie upon them for their sins. 1. That if they would not be ruled by the commands of God, they should certainly be ruled by his curse, v. 45, 46. Because thou didst not keep his commandments, (especially that of hearing and obeying the great Prophet,) these curses shall come upon thee, as upon a people appointed to destruction, the generation of God's wrath: and they shall be for a sign and for a wonder. It is amazing to think, that a people so long the favourites of Heaven, should be so perfectly abandoned and cast off, that a people so closely incorporated, should be so universally dispersed; and yet that a people so scattered in all nations, should preserve themselves distinct, and not mix with any; but like Cain, be fugitives and vagabonds, and yet marked to be known. 2. That if they would not serve God with cheerfulness, they should be compelled to serve their enemies, (v. 47, 48.) that they might know the difference; (2 Chron. 19. 12.) which, some think, is the meaning of Ezek. 20. 24, 25. Because they despised my statutes, I gave them statutes that were not good. Observe here, (1.) It is justly expected from those to whom God gives an abundance of the good things of this life, that they should serve him. What does he maintain us for, but that we may do his work, and be some way serviceable to his glory? (2.) The more God gives us, the more cheerfully we should serve him; our abundance should be oil to the wheels of our obedience. God is a master that will be served with gladness, and delights to hear us sing at our work. (3.) If when we receive the gifts of God's bounty, we either do. not serve him at all, or serve him with reluctance, it is a righteous thing with him to make us know the hardships of want and servitude. They desire to have cause given them to complain, who complain without a cause. Tribus es, et felix—happy, and yet not easy! Blush at thy own folly and ingratitude.

3. That if they would not give glory to God by an awful obedience, he would get him honour upon them by wonderful plagues, v. 58, 59. Note, (1.) God justly expects from us that we should fear his fearful name; and which is strange, that name which is here proposed as the object of our fear, is, The Lord thy God, which is very fully here put in our Bibles, in capital letters; for nothing can sound more truly august. As nothing is more comforable, so nothing more awful, than this, that he with whom we have to do, Jehovah, a Being infinitely perfect and blessed, and the Author of all being; and that he is our God, our righteous Lord and Owner, from whom we are to receive laws, and to whom we are to give account: this is great, and greatly to be feared. (2.) We may justly expect from God, that if we do not fear his fearful name, we shall feel his fearful plagues; for one way or other God will be feared. All God's plagues are dreadful, but some more so than others. The plague which he hath chosen for the expression of his signatures of divine power and justice, so that a man, upon the first view of them, may say, Verily there is a God that judgeth in the earth.

II. How the destruction threatened is described. Moses is here upon the same melancholy subject that our Saviour is discourseing of to his disciples in his farewell sermon, (Matth. 24.) namely, The destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish nation.

Five things are here foretold, as steps to their ruin.

1. That they should be invaded by a foreign enemy; (v. 49, 50.) A nation from far, namely, the Romans, as swift as the eagle, hastening to the prey; our Saviour makes use of this similitude, in foretelling this destruction, that where the careass is, there will the eagles be gathered together, Matth. 24. 28. And Bishop Patrick observes, (to make the accomplishment the more remarkable,) that the ensign of the Roman armies was an eagle. This nation is said to be of a fierce countenance, an indication of a fierce nature, stern and severe, that would not pity the weakness and infirmity either of little children or of old people.

2. That the country should be laid waste, and all the fruits of it eaten up by this army of foreigners; which is the natural consequence of war, especially when it is made, as that by the Romans was, for the chastisement of rebels, v. 51. He shall eat the fruits of thy cattle and land, so that the inhabitants should be starved, while the invaders were fed to the full.

3. That their cities should be besieged, and that such would be the obstinacy of the besieged, and such the vigour of the besiegers, that they would be reduced to the last extremity, and even into the hands of the enemy, v. 52. No place, though ever so well fortified, no, not Jerusalem itself, though it held out long, would escape. Two of the common consequences of a long siege are here foretold. (1.) A miserable famine, which would prevail to such a degree, that, for want of food, they should kill and eat their own children, v. 53, 54. Men should do so, notwithstanding their hardness and ability to bear hunger; and though obliged by the law of nature to provide for their own families, yet should refuse to give to the wife and children that were starving, any of the child that was barbarously butchered, v. 54, 55. Nay, women, ladies of quality, notwithstanding their natural niceness about their food, and their natural affection to their children, yet, for want of food, should so far forget all humanity, as to kill and eat them, v. 56, 57. Let us observe by the way, how hard this fate must needs be to the tender and delicate women, and learn not to indulge ourselves in tenderness and delicacy, because we know not what we may be reduced to before we die; the more nice we are, the more likely we are to bear want, and the more danger we shall be in of surrendering, and religion, and natural affection itself, to the clamours of an unmortified and ungoverned appetite. This threatening was fulfilled in the letter of it, more than once, to the perpetual reproach of the Jewish nation; never was the like done either by Greek or Barbarian, but in the siege of Samaria, a woman boiled her own son, 2 Kings 6. 28, 29. And it is spoken of us commonly done among the Jews in the siege of Jerusalem by the Babylonians, Lam. 4. 10. And in the last siege by the Romans, Josephus tells us of a noble woman that killed and ate her own child, through the extremity of the famine, and when she had eaten one half secretly, (v. 57.) that she might have it to herself, the mob, smelling meat, got into the house, to whom she showed the other half, which she had kept till another time, inviting them to come to her, and presented them to them to do, that are abandoned of God! (2.) Sickness is another common effect of a strait and long siege; and that is here threatened; sore sickness, and of long continuance, v. 59. These should attend the Jews wherever they went afterward, the diseases of Egypt, leprosies, botches, and foul ulcers, v. 60. Nay, as if the particular miseries here threatened were not enough, he concludes with an account of the Lord's own interest, v. 61. The Lord will bring upon them (the Jews) sickness, and every plague. It is not written in the book of this law. Those that fall under the curse of God, will find that the one half was not told them of the weight and terror of that curse. 4. That multitudes of them should perish; so that they should become few in number, v. 62. It was a nation that God had wonderfully increased, so that they were as the stars of heaven for multitude, but, for the Lord's interest, v. 63. And he will bring upon them (the Jews) the Lord's anger, and his fierce indignation. It is computed that in the destruction of the Jewish nation by the Romans, as appears by the account Josephus gives of it, above two millions fell by the sword, at several places, beside what perished by famine and pestilence: so that the whole country was laid waste and turned into a wilderness. That is a terrible word, (v. 63.) As the Lord rejoiced over you to do you good, so he will rejoice over you to do you evil. Behold here the goodness and severity of God: mercy here shines bright in the pleasure God takes in doing good, he rejoices in it; yet justice here appears no less illustrious in the pleasure he takes in destroying the impotent; not as it is the making of his creatures miserable, but as it is the asserting of his own honour, and the securing of the ends of his government. See what a malignant mischievous thing sin is, which (as I would say) thrusts its head into the very face of God of infinite goodness to rejoice in the destruction of his own creatures, even those that had been favourites. 5. That the remnant should be scattered throughout the nations. This completes their woe, (v. 64.) The Lord shall scatter thee among all people. This is remarkably fulfilled in their present dispersion, for there are Jews to be found almost in all countries that are possessed either by Christians or Mahometans, and in such numbers, that it has been said, If they could unite in one common interest, they would be a very formidable body, and able to deal with the most powerful states and princes; but they abide under the power of this curse, and are so scattered that they are not able to incorporate. It is here foretold, that in this dispensation, (1.) They should have no religion, or none to any purpose; should have neither temple, nor altar, nor priesthood, for they should serve other gods. Some think this has been fulfilled the Jews in Popish countries, to worship the images that are used in the Roman church, to their great vexation. (2.) They should have no rest; no rest of body, The sole of thy foot shall not have rest, (v. 65.) but be continually on the remove, either in hope of gain, or fear of persecution; all wandering Jews: no rest of the mind, (which is much worse,) but a trembling heart; (v. 65.) no assurance of safety, (v. 66.) but of light and darkness, which are, in their turns, both welcome to a quiet mind, but to them both day and night would be a terror, v. 67. Such was once the condition of Job, (Job 7. 4.) but to them this should be constant and perpetual; that blindness and darkness which the apostle speaks of as having happened to Israel, and that guilt which bowed down their back a weary, (Rom. 11. 10.) must needs occasion a constant restlessness and amazement. Those are a torment to themselves, and to all about them, that fear day and night, and are always uneasy: let good people strive against it, and not give way to that fear which has torment; and let wicked people not be secured in their wickedness, for their hearts cannot endure, nor can their hands be strong, when the terror of God sets them in fear against them. They say in the morning, O that it were even, and in the evening, O that it were morning, show, [1.] A constant fret and vexation, chiding the hours for lingering, and complaining of the length of every minute. Let time be precious to us when we are in prosperity, and then it will not be so tedious to us when we are in afflictions as otherwise it would. [2.] A constant fright and terror: afraid in the morning of the fear that lieth by day, and therefore wishing the day over; but what will this do for them? When evening comes, the trembling heart is no less apprehensive of the terror by night, Ps. 91. 5. 6. Happy they, whose minds, being staid on God, are quiet from the fear of evil. Observe here, the terror arises not only from the sight of the eyes, but from the fear of the heart, not only from real dangers, but from imaginary ones; the causes of fear, which may be inferred here, do often prove to be only the creatures of the fancy. Lastly, In the close, God threatens to leave them as he found them, in a house of bondage, v. 68. The Lord shall bring thee into Egypt again, that is, into such a miserable state as they were in when they were slaves to the Egyptians, and ruled by them with rigour. God had brought them out of Egypt, and had said, They shall see it no more again; (Deut. 17. 16.) but now they should be reduced to the same state of slavery that they had been in there. To be sold to strangers would be bad enough, but much worse to be sold to their enemies. Even slaves may be valued as such, but a Jew should have so ill a name for all that is base, that when he was exposed to sale, no man should buy him, which would make it hard for him to sell, the more severe with him. Thirty Jews (they also were sold for one small piece of money, as they sold our Saviour for thirty pieces. Now, upon the whole matter, First, The accomplishment of these predictions upon the Jewish nation, shows that Moses spake by the spirit of God, who certainly foresees the ruin of sinners, and gives the warning of it, that they may prevent it by a true and constant obedience, or else be left in excusable. Secondly, Let us all from hence learn to stand in awe, and not to sin. I have heard of a wicked man, who, upon reading the threatenings of this chapter, was so enraged, that he tore the leaf out of the Bible, as Jehokiam cut Jeremiah's roll; but to what purpose is it to deface a copy, while the original remains upon record in the divine counsels, by which it is unalterably determined, that the wages of sin is death, whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear?

CHAP. XXIX.

The first words of this chapter are the contents of it; These are the words of the covenant, (v. 1.) that is, these that follow, Here is a. A revelation of God's doings in Egypt, in order to the bringing of them into this covenant, v. 2. &c. II. A solemn charge to 'em to keep the covenant, v. 9. III. An abstract of the covenant itself, v. 12, 13. IV. A specification of the persons who keep the covenant, v. 10, 11, 14, 15. V. An intimation of the great design of this covenant against idolatry, in a parenthesis, v. 16, 17. VI. A most solemn and dreadful denunciation of the breach of this covenant, against such persons as promise themselves peace in a sinful way, v. 18, 19. VII. The conclusion of this treaty, with a distinction between things secret and things revealed, v. 29.

1. THESE are the words of the covenant, which the Lord commanded Moses to make with the children of Israel in the land of Moab, besides the covenant which he made with them in Horeb. 2. And Moses called unto all Israel, and said unto them, Ye have seen all that the Lord did before your eyes in the land of Egypt unto Pharaoh, and unto all his servants, and unto all his land; 3. The great temptations which thine eyes have seen, the signs, and those great miracles: 4. Yet the Lord hath not given you a heart to perceive, and eyes to see, and ears to hear, unto this day. 5. And I have led you forty years in the wilderness: your clothes are not waxen old upon you, and thy shoe is not waxen old upon thy foot. 6. Ye have not eaten bread, neither have you drunk wine or strong drink: that ye might know that I am the Lord your God. 7. And when ye came unto this place, Sihon the king of Heshbon, and Og the king of Bashan, came out against us unto battle, and we smote them: 8. And we took their land, and gave it for an inheritance unto the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to the half tribe of Manasseh. 9. Keep therefore the words of this covenant, and do them, that ye may prosper in all that ye do.

Now that Moses had largely repeated the commands which the people were to observe as their part of the covenant, and the promises and threatenings which God would make good (according as they believed themselves) as part of the covenant: the whole is here summed up in a federal transaction. The covenant formerly made is here renewed, and Moses, who was before, is still, the mediator of it; (v. 1.) The Lord commanded Moses to make it. Moses himself, though king in Jeshurun, could not make the covenant any other wise than as God gave him instructions. It does not lie in the power of ministers to fix the terms of the covenant; they are only to dispense the seals of it. This is to be remembered in Horeb; for though the covenant was the same, yet it was a new promulgation and ratification of it. It is probable, some now living, though not of age to be mustered, were of age to consent for themselves to the covenant made at Horeb, and yet it is here renewed. Note, Those that have solemnly cov-anted with God, should take all opportunities to do it again, as those that like their choice too well to change. But the far greater part were a new generation, and therefore the covenant must be made afresh with them, and it is fit that the covenant should be renewed to the children of the covenant, as well as to the parents of the covenant; this does so; with a rehearsal of the great things God had done for them. 1. As an encouragement to them, to believe that God would indeed be to them a God, for he would not have done so much for them, if he had not designed more, to which all he had hitherto done, was but a preface (as it were) or introduction; nay, he had showed himself a God in what he had hitherto done for them, which might raise their expectations of something great, and answering the vast extent and compass of that promise, that God would be to them a God. 2. As an engagement upon them to be to him an obedient people, in consideration of what he had done for them.

For the proof of what he here advances, he appeals to their own eyes, (v. 2.) Ye have seen all the signs and miracles by which Pharaoh was plag-ged, and compelled to dismiss them, and Israel was tried (for they are called temptations) whether they would trust God to secure them from, and save them by, those plagues. (2.) Their conduct through the wilderness for forty years, v. 3, 6. There they were led, and clad, and fed, by miracles; though the paths of the wilderness were not only unknown but untrod, yet God kept them from being lost there; and (as Bishop Patrick observes) those very shoes, which by the appointment of God they put on in Egypt, at the passover, when they were ready to march, (Exod. 12. 11.) never wore out, but served them to Canaan: and though they lived not upon bread which strengthens the heart, and wine which rejoices it, but upon manna and rock-water yet they were men of strength and courage, might and courage, and able to go forth to war. By these miracles they were made to know that the Lord was God, and by these mercies that he was their God. (3.) The victory they had lately obtained over Sihon and Og, and that good land which they had taken possession of,

v. 7, 8. Both former mercies, and fresh mercies, should be improved by us as inducements to obedience and prudence.

By way of inference from these memoirs, [1.] Moses laments their stupidity, (v. 4.) Yet the Lord has not given you a heart to perceive. *This does not lay the blame of our senselessness, and sottish-ness, and unbelief, upon God, as if they had stood ready to receive his grace, and had begged for it, but he had denied them; no, but it fastens the guilt upon themselves. "The Lord, who is the Father of Spirits, a God in whom are all things, and who had always been so rich in mercy to you, no doubt, would have crowned all his other gifts with this, he would have given you a heart to perceive and eyes to see, if you had not by your own freewardness and perverseness frustrated his kind intentions, and received his grace in vain." Note, First, The hearing ear, and seeing eye, and the understanding heart, are the gift of God. All that have them, have them from him. Secondly, God gives not only food and raiment, but wealth and large possessions, to many to whom he does not give grace. Many enjoy the gifts, who have not hearts to perceive the Giver, nor the true intention and use of the gifts. Thirdly, God's readiness to do us good in other things, is a plain evidence that if we have not grace, that batch of gifts, it is our own fault and not his; he would have gathered us, and we would not. [2.] Moses charges them to be obedient, (v. 9.) Keep therefore, and do. Note, We are bound, in gratitude and interest, as well as duty and faithfulness, to keep the words of the covenant.

10. Ye stand this day all of you before the Lord your God; your captains of your tribes, your elders, and your officers, with all the men of Israel, 11. Your little ones, your wives, and thy stranger that is in thy camp, from the hewer of thy wood unto the drawer of thy water; 12. That thou shouldst enter into covenant with the Lord thy God, and into his oath, which the Lord thy God maketh with thee this day: 13. That he may establish thee today for a people unto himself, and that he may be unto thee a God, as he hath said unto thee, and as he hath sworn unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob. 14. Neither with you only do I make this covenant and this oath; 15. But with him that standeth here with us this day before the Lord our God, and also with him that is not here with us this day: 16. (For ye know how we have dwelt in the land of Egypt; and how we came through the nations which ye passed by; 17. And ye have seen their abominations, and their idols, wood and stone, silver and gold, which were among them:) 18. Lest there should be among you man, or woman, or family, or tribe, whose heart turneth away this day from the Lord our God, to go and serve the gods of these nations; lest there should be among you a root that beareth gall and wormwood; 19. And it came to pass, when he heareth the words of this curse, that he bless himself in his heart, saying, I shall have peace, though I walk in the imagination of mine heart, to add drunkenness to thirst: 20. The Lord will not spare him, but then the anger of the Lord and his jealousy shall smoke against that man, and all the curses that are written in this book shall lie upon him, and the Lord shall blot out his name from under heaven. 21. And the Lord shall separate him unto evil out of all the tribes of Israel, according to all the curses of the covenant that are written in this book of the law: 22. So that the generation to come of your children, that shall rise up after you, and the stranger that shall come from a far land, shall say, when they see the plagues of that land, and the sicknesses which the Lord hath laid upon it; 23. And that the whole land thereof is brimstone, and salt, and burning, that it is not sown, nor beareth, nor any grass groweth therein, like the overthrow of Sodom, and Gomorrah, Admah, and Zeboim, which the Lord overthrew in his anger, and in his wrath; 24. Even all nations shall say, Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this land? what meaneth the heat of this great anger? 25. Then men shall say, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the Lord God of their fathers, which he made with them when he brought them forth out of the land of Egypt: 26. For they went in and served other gods, and worshipped them, gods whom they knew not, and whom he had not given unto them: 27. And the anger of the Lord was kindled against this land, to bring upon it all the curses that are written in this book: 28. And the Lord rooted them out of their land in anger, and in wrath, and in great indignation, and cast them into another land, as it is this day. 29. The secret things belong unto the Lord our God: but those things which are revealed belong unto us, and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law.

It appears by the length of the sentences here, and by the copiousness and pungency of the expressions, that Moses, now that he was drawing near to the close of his discourse, was very warm and zealous, and very desirous to impress what he said, upon the minds of this unh thinking people. To bind them the faster to God and duty, he here, with great solemnity of expression, (to make up the want of the external ceremony that was used, Exod. 24. 4, &c.) concludes a bargain (as it were) between them and God, an everlasting covenant, which God would not forget, and they must not forget. He requires not their explicit consent, but lays the matter plainly before them, and then leaves it between God and their own consciences. Observe,

I. The parties to this covenant.

1. It is the Lord their God they are to covenant with, v. 12. To him they must give themselves, to him they must join themselves. "It is his oath; he has drawn up the covenant and settled it; he requires your consent to it; he has sworn to you, and to him you must swear to it." This requires us to be sincere and serious, humble and reverent, in our covenant-transactions with God, remembering how great a God he is, with whom we are covenanting, who has a perfect knowledge of us, and an absolute dominion over us.

2. They are all to be taken into covenant with him. They were all summoned to attend, (v. 2,) and did accordingly, and are told, (v. 10,) what was the design of their appearing before God now in a body—they were to enter into covenant with him. (1.) Even their great men; the captains of their tribes, their elders and officers, must not think it any disparagement to their honour, or any diminution of their power, to put their necks under the yoke of this covenant, and to draw in it. They must rather enter into the covenant, first, to set a good example to their inferiors. (2.) Not the men only, but the wives and children, must come into this covenant; though they were not numbered, and mustered, yet they must be joined to the Lord, v. 11. Observe, Even little ones are capable of being taken into covenant with God, and are to be admitted with their parents. Little children, so little as to be carried in arms, must be brought to Christ, and shall be blessed by him, for of such was, and is, the kingdom of God. (3.) The men of Israel only, but the stranger that was in their camp, if he would so far prostrate their religion, as to renounce all false gods, was taken into this covenant with the God of Israel, forasmuch as he also, though a stranger, was to be looked upon in this matter as a son of Abraham, Luke 19. 9. This was an early indication of favour to the Gentiles, and of the kindness God had in store for them. (4.) Not the freemen only, but the servants of wood, and drawers of water, the meanest drudge they had among them. Note, As none are too great to come under the bonds of the covenant, so none are too mean to inherit the blessings of the covenant. In Christ no difference is made between bond and free, Col. 3. 11. Art thou called, being a servant? Care not for it, 1 Cor. 7. 21. (5.) Not only those that were now present at the covenant assembly, but those also that were not here with them, were taken into covenant, v. 15. As with him that standeth here with us, (so Bishop Patrick thinks it should be rendered,) so also with him that is not here with us this day; that is, [1.] Those that tarried at home, were included; though detained either by sickness or necessary business, they must not therefore think themselves disengaged; no, every Israelite shares in this covenant blessing. They that tarry at home, divide the spoil, and therefore every Israelite must own himself bound by the consent of the representative body. They who cannot go up to the house of the Lord, must keep up a spiritu- l communion with those that do, and be present in spirit when they are absent in body. [2.] The generations that have been from the first days of the world, and all that shall arise to the end of the whole world, stand with us here this day. And so, taking this covenant as a typical dispensation of the covenant of grace, it is a noble testimony to the Mediator of that covenant, who is the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever.

II. The summary of this covenant; all the premises and all the promises of the covenant, are included in the covenant-relation between God and them, v. 13. That they should be appointed, raised up, established for a people to him, to observe and obey him, to be devoted to him, and dependent on him, and that he should be to them a God, according to the tenor of the covenant made with their fathers, to make them holy, high, and happy. Their fathers were hewers of wood, and drawers of water, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and their posterity as examples of piety, which those were to set themselves to imitate, who expected any benefit from the covenant made with them. Note, A due consideration of the relation we stand in to God as our God, and the obligation we lie under as a people to him, is enough to bring us to all the duties and all the comforts of covenant.

III. The principal design of the renewing of this covenant at this time was, to fortify them against temptations to idolatry. Though other sins will be the sinner's ruin, yet this was the sin that was likely to be their ruin. Now concerning this, he shows,

1. The danger they were in of being tempted to it, v. 16, 17. "Ye know how we have dwelt in the land of Egypt, a country addicted to idolatry; and it were well if there were not among you some remains of the infection of that idolatry; we have passed by other nations, the Edomites, Moabites, &c., and have seen their abominations, and their idols, and some among you, it may be, have liked them too well, and still hunger after them, and would rather worship an invisible god that they can see than an infinite Spirit whom they never saw. " It is to be hoped that there were those among them, who, the more they saw of these abominations and idols, the more they hated them; but there were those that were smitten with the sight of them, saw the accursed things, and coveted them.

2. The danger they were in if they yielded to the temptation to give them their fall warning; it was their peril if they forsak God to serve idols. If they would not be bound and held by the precepts of the covenant, they would find that the curses of the covenant would be strong enough to bind and hold them. (1.) Idolatry would be the ruin of particular persons and their families, v. 18.-21. Where observe,

[1.] The sinner described, v. 18. First, He is one whose heart turns away from his God; there the mischief begins, in the soul itself of unbelief, which inclines men to depart from the living God, to dead idols. Even to this sin men are tempted, when they are drawn aside by their own lusts and fancies. They that begin to turn from God, by neglecting their duty to him, are easily drawn to other gods: and they that serve other gods, do certainly turn away from the true God: for he will admit of no rivals; he will be all or nothing. Secondly, He is a root that bears gall and wormwood; he is a dangerous man, who, being himself poisoned with bad principles and inclinations, with a secret contempt of the God of Israel and his institutions, and a renunciation for the gods of the nations, endevours, by all arts possible, to corrupt and poison others, and draw them to idolatry; this is a man whose fruit is hemlock (so the word is translated, Hos. 10. 4.) and wormwood; it is very displeasing to God, and will be, to all that are seduced by him, bitterness in the latter end. This is referred to by the apostle, Heb. 12. 15. where he is in like manner cautioning us to take heed of those that would seduce us from the christian faith; they are the weeds or tares in a field, which, if left alone, will overspread the whole field. A little of this leaven will be in danger of infecting the whole lump.

[2.] His security in the sin. He promises himself from punishment, v. 19. He pretends that he is not at all conscious of the danger, yet even then, he blesses himself in his own heart, thinks himself safe from the wrath of the God of Israel, under the protection of his idol gods, and therefore says, "I shall have peace, though I be governed in my religion, not by God's institution, but by my own imagination, to add drunkardliness to inhumanity, and to make an idolathery religion that is, he is a dangerous man, who, being himself poisoned with bad principles and inclinations, with a secret contempt of the God of Israel and his institutions, and a renunciation for the gods of the nations, endevours, by all arts possible, to corrupt and poison others, and draw them to idolatry; this is a man whose fruit is hemlock (so the word is translated, Hos. 10. 4.) and wormwood; it is very displeasing to God, and will be, to all that are seduced by him, bitterness in the latter end. This is referred to by the apostle, Heb. 12. 15. where he is in like manner cautioning us to take heed of those that would seduce us from the christian faith; they are the weeds or tares in a field, which, if left alone, will overspread the whole field. A little of this leaven will be in danger of infecting the whole lump.

[3.] The reason of it is inquired into, and as signed. First, It would be inquired into by the generation to come, (v. 22.) who would find the state of their nation in all respects the reverse of what it had been; and when they read both the history and the promise, would be astonished at the change. The stronger he is, the more grossly wicked, and worse as well as particular persons, would ask, Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this land? v. 24. Great desolations are thus represented elsewhere as striking the spectators with amazement, 1 Kings 9. 8, 9. Jer. 22. 8, 9. It was time for the neighbours to tremble, when judgment thus began at the house of God, 1 Pet. 4. 17. The emphasis of the question is to be laid upon the land; the land of Sodom and Gomorrah, this land flowing with milk and honey. A thousand pieces that such a good land as this, should be made desolate; but this is not all; it is this holy land; the land of Israel, a people in covenant with God; it is Immanuel's land; a land where God was known and worshipped, and yet thus wasted. Note, 1. It is no new thing for God to bring desolating judgments upon a people that in profession are near to him, debauches the conscience, as much as any other; a sin to which men are strangely tempted themselves, even when they have lately felt the mischiefs of it, to which they are strangely fond of drawing others, Hab. 2. 15. And such an insinuating sin is 'idolatry. [3.] God's wrath is against him, and against those who are his friends, from whom he has received this sin, and for the impious affront he put upon God, in saying he should have peace, though he went on, so giving the lie to Eternal Truth, Gen. 3. 4: There is scarcely a threatening in all the book of God, that sounds more dreadful than this here. O that pre- sumptuous us sinners would read it and tremble! For it is not a mere bugbear to frighten children and fools, but a real declaration of the wrath of God against the ungodliness and unrighteousness of men v. 20, 21. First, The Lord shall not spare him. The days of his reprobation, which he abuses, will be shortened, and no mercy remembered in the midst of judgment. Secondly, The anger of the Lord, and his jealousy, which is the fiercest anger, shall smoke against him, like the smoke of a furnace.

Thirdly, The curses written shall lie upon him, not only light upon him to terrify him, but abide upon him, to sink him to the lowest hell. John 3. 36. Fourthly, His name shall be blotted out, that is, he himself shall be cut off, and his memory shall rot and perish with him. Fifthly, He shall be separated unto evil, which is the most proper notion of a curse; he shall be cut off from all happiness, and all hope of it, and marked out for misery without remedy. And (lastly,) All this according to the curses of the covenant, which are the most fearful curses, being the just revenges of abused grace.

(2.) Idolatry would be the ruin of their nation; it would bring plagues upon the land that consume at this root of bitterness, and received the infection; as far as the sin spread, the judgment should spread likewise.

[1.] The ruin is described. It begins with plagues and sicknesses, (v. 22.) to try if they will be reclaimed by lesser judgments; but if not, it ends in a total overthrow, like that of Sodom, v. 23. As that valley which had been like the garden of the Lord for fruitfulness, was turned into a lake of salt and sulphur, so should the land of Canaan be made desolate and barren, as it has been ever since the last destruction of it by the Remans. The lake of Sodom bordered close upon the land of Israel, that by it they might be warned against the iniquity of Sodom; but, not taking the warning, they were judged as like to Sodom in ruin as they had been in sin.

[2.] The reason of it is inquired into, and as signed. First, It would be inquired into by the generation to come, (v. 22.) who would find the state of their nation in all respects the reverse of what it had been; and when they read both the history and the promise, would be astonished at the change. The stronger he is, the more grossly wicked, and worse as well as particular persons, would ask, Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this land? v. 24. Great desolations are thus represented elsewhere as striking the spectators with amazement, 1 Kings 9. 8, 9. Jer. 22. 8, 9. It was time for the neighbours to tremble, when judgment thus began at the house of God, 1 Pet. 4. 17. The emphasis of the question is to be laid upon the land; the land of Sodom and Gomorrah, this land flowing with milk and honey. A thousand pieces that such a good land as this, should be made desolate; but this is not all; it is this holy land; the land of Israel, a people in covenant with God; it is Immanuel's land; a land where God was known and worshipped, and yet thus wasted. Note, 1. It is no new thing for God to bring desolating judgments upon a people that in profession are near to him,
Amos 3. 2. 3. He never does this without a good reason. 3. It concerns us to inquire into the reason, that we may give glory to God, and take warning to ourselves.

Secondly, The reason is here assigned, in answer to that inquiry. The matter would be so plain, that all men would say, It was because they forsook the covenant of the Lord God of their fathers, v. 25.

Note, God never forsakes any till they first forsake him. But this he does desert the God of their fathers are justly cast out of the inheritance of their fathers. They went and served other gods, (v. 26.) gods that they had no acquaintance with, nor lay under any obligations to, either in duty or gratitude; for God has not given the creatures to be served by us, but to serve us; nor have they done any good to us, (as some read it,) more than what God has enabled them to do; to the Creator therefore we are debtor, and not to the creatures. It was for this, that God was angry with them, (v. 27.) and rooted them out in anger, v. 28.

So, that, how dreadful soever the desolation was, the Lord was righteous in it, which is acknowledged, Dan. 4. 11, 12. "Thus (says Mr. Ainsworth) "the law of Moses leaves sinners under the curse, and rooted out of the Lord's land; but the grace of Christ toward penitent believing sinners plants them again into his land, and they shall no more be pulled up, being kept by the power of God," Amos 9. 15.

Lastly, He concludes his prophecy of the Jews' rejection, just as St. Paul concludes his discourse on the same subject, when it began to be fulfilled, (Rom. 11. 33.) How unsearchable are God's judgments, and his ways past finding out! So here, (v. 29.) Secret things belong to the Lord our God. Some make it to be called testimony. The secret things of the Lord our God are revealed to us and to our children, as far as we are concerned to know them, and he hath not dealt so with other nations: but we make it two sentences, by which, 1. We are forbidden curiously to inquire into the secret counsels of God, and to determine concerning them. A full answer is given to that question, Wherefore has the Lord done thus to this land? sufficient to justify God, and admonish us. But if any ask further, why God would be at such a vast expense of miracles to form such a people, whose apostasy and ruin he plainly foresaw? Why he did not by his Almighty grace prevent it? Or, what he intends yet to do with them? Let such know that these are questions which cannot be answered, and therefore are not fit to be asked. It is preeminently set in their hands, to discern the secrets of Governments, and to inquire into the reasons of state, which it is not for us to know. See Acts 1. 7. John 21. 22. Col. 2. 18.

2. We are directed and encouraged diligently to inquire into that which God has made known, things revealed belong to us and to our children. Note, (1.) Though God has kept much of his counsel secret, yet there is enough revealed to satisfy and satisfy some. He has hidden not his hand, but stuck out the things that relate to our salvation, and not to be ignorant of. (2.) We ought to acquaint ourselves, and our children too, with the things of God that are revealed; we are not only allowed to search into them, but are concerned to do so; they are things which we and ours are nearly interested in. They are the rules we are to live by, the grants we are to be upon; and therefore we are to learn them diligently, diligently. And to teach them diligently as we are to teach our children. (3.) All our knowledge must be in order to practice, for this is the end of all divine revelation, not to furnish us with curious subjects of speculation and discourse, with which to entertain ourselves and our friends, but that we may do all the words of this law, and be blessed in our deed.

CHAP. XXX.

One would have thought that the threatenings in the close of the foregoing chapter had made a full end of the people of Israel; and had left their cause for ever desperate; but, in this chapter, we have a plain intimation of the mercy God had in store for them in the latter days, so that mercy at length rejoices against judgment, and has the last word. Here we have, I. Exceeding great and precious promises made to them, upon their repentance and return to God, v. 1. 10. II. The righteousness of faith set before them in the plainness and easiness of the commandments that was now given them, v. 11. 14. 11. III. A fair reference of the whole matter to their choice, v. 15. 20.

1. And it shall come to pass, when all these things are come upon thee, the blessing and the curse, which I have set before thee; and thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations whither the Lord thy God hath driven thee, 2. And shalt return unto the Lord thy God, and shalt obey his voice according to all that I command thee this day, thou, and thy children, with all thine heart, and with all thy soul; 3. That then the Lord thy God will turn thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will return and gather thee from all the nations, whither the Lord thy God hath scattered thee. 4. If any of thine be driven out unto the utmost parts of heaven, from thence will the Lord thy God gather thee, and from thence will he fetch thee; 5. And the Lord thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and he will do thee good, and multiply thee above thy fathers. 6. And the Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live. 7. And the Lord thy God will put all these curses upon thine enemies, and on them that hate thee, which persecuted thee. 8. And thou shalt return and obey the voice of the Lord, and do all his commandments, which I command thee this day. 9. And the Lord thy God will make thee plenteous in every work of thine hand, in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy land, for good: for the Lord will again rejoice over thee for good, as he rejoiced over thy fathers; 10. If thou shalt hearken unto the voice of the Lord thy God, to keep his commandments and his statutes which are written in this book of the law, and if thou turn unto the Lord thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul.

Two ways these verses may be considered; either as a conditional promise, or as an absolute prediction.

I. They are chiefly to be considered as a conditional promise, and so they belong to all persons and all people, and not to Israel only; and the design of them is to assure us that the greatest sinners, if they repent and be converted, shall have their sins pardoned, and be restored to God's favour. This is the purport of the covenant of grace, it leaves room for repentance in case of misdemeanour, and promises pardon upon repentance, which the covenant of innocence did not. Now observe here, 1. How the repentance is to be made known: (1.) It begins in serious consideration, v. 1. "Thou shalt call to mind that which thou hast forgotten or not regarded." Note, Consideration is the first step toward conversion, Isa. 46. 8, Bring to mind, O ye transgressors. The prodigal son came to himself first, and then to his father. That which they should call to mind, is, the blessing and the curse. If sinners would but seriously consider the happiness they have lost by sin, and the misery they have brought themselves into, and that by repentance they may escape that misery, and recover that happiness, they would not delay to return to the Lord their God. The prodigal called to mind the blessing and the curse, when he considered his present poverty, and the plenty of bread in his father's house, Luke 15. 17. (2.) It consists in sincere conversion. The effect of the consideration of the miseries of sin is conversion. Ezek. 6. 9.—7. 16. But that which is the life and soul of repentance, and without which the most passionate expressions are but a jest, is, returning to the Lord our God, v. 2. If thou turn, (v. 10.) with all thy heart, and with all thy soul. We must return to our allegiance to God as our Lord and Ruler, our dependence upon him as our Father and Benefactor, our devotedness to him as our highest end, and our communion with him as our God in covenant. We must return to God from all that which stands in opposition to him, or competition with him. In this return to God, we must be upright—with the heart and soul, and universal with all the heart and all the soul. (3.) It is evidenced by a constant obediency to the holy will of God. If thou shalt obey his voice, (v. 2.) thou and thy children; for it is not enough that we do our duty ourselves, but we must train up and engage our children to do it. Or this comes in as the condition of the entail of the blessing upon their children, provided their children keep close to their duty. This obedience must be with an eye to God, Thou shalt obey his voice, (v. 8.) and hearken to it, v. 10. It must be sincere and cheerful and entire, with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, v. 2. It must be from a principle of love, and not love that is too must be from all the heart, and with all thy soul, v. 6. It is the heart and soul that God looks at, and requires; he will have that or nothing, and entire or not at all. And it must be universal; according to all that I command thee, v. 2. and again, v. 8. to do all his commandments. For he that allows himself in the breach of one commandment, involves himself in the guilt of contemning them all, James 2. 10. An upright heart has respect to all God's commandments, Ps. 119. 4.2. What the favour is, which is promised upon this repentance. Though they are brought to God by their trouble and distress, in the nation whither they were driven, (v. 1.) yet God will graciously accept of them notwithstanding; for on this errand afflictions are sent, to bring us to repentance. Though they are driven out to the utmost parts of heaven, yet let them hence their penitent prayer, call upon God's gracious ear. And when the favoured shall find them out, v. 4. Undique ad calum tansundem est vice—From every place there is the same way to heaven. This promise Nehemiah pleads in his prayer for dispersed Israel, Neh. 1. 9. It is here promised, (1.) That God would have compassion upon them, as proper objects of his pity, v. 3. Against sinners that go on in sin, God has in dignation, (ch. 39. 20.) but on those that repent and bow themselves, he has compassion, Jer. 31. 18, 20. True penitents may take great encouragement from the compassions and tender mercies of our God, which never fail, but overflow. (2.) That he would turn their captivity, and gather them from all the nations, which they were dispersed, (v. 3.) though ever so remote, and to the place which he first purposed to them. The Chaldee paraphrases applies this to the Messiah, explaining it thus, The word of the Lord shall gather you by the hand of Elias the great Priest, and shall bring you by the hand of the king Messiah; for this was God's covenant with him, that he should restore the preserved of Israel, Isa. 49. 6. And this was the design of his death, to gather into one the children of God that were scattered abroad, John 11. 51, 52. To him shall the gathering of the remnant be. (3.) That he would bring them into their land again, v. 5. Note, Penitent sinners are not only delivered out of their misery, but restored to true happiness in the favour of God. The land they are brought into to possess it, is, though not the same, yet in some respects better than that which our first father Adam possessed, and out of which he came into the world, Gen. 15. 18. Love of God and God; and all of them good, (v. 5.) and rejoice over them for good, v. 9. For there is joy in heaven, upon the repentance and conversion of sinners: the father of the prodigal rejoiced over him for good. That he would multiply them, v. 5. And that, when they grew numerous, every mouth might have meat, he would make them plenteous in every work of their hands, v. 9. The conversion of sinners and reformation bring national plenty, peace, and prosperity. It is promised, The Lord will make thee plenteous in the fruit of thy cattle and land, for good. Many have plenty for hurt, the prosperity of fools destroys them. Then it is for good, when with it God gives us grace to use it for his glory. (5.) That he would transfer the curses they had been under, to their enemies, v. 7. When God was gathering them in to re-establish them, they would meet with much opposition; but the same curses that had been a burthen upon them, should become a defence to them, by being turned upon their adversaries. The cup of trembling should be taken out of their hand, and put into the hand of those that afflicted them, Isa. 51. 22, 23. (6.) That he would give them his grace to change their hearts, and rule there, v. 6, The Lord thy God will circumcise thine heart, to love him. Note, [1.] The heart must be circumcised to love God. The filth of the flesh must be put away; and the foolishness of the heart, as the Chaldee paraphrase expounds it. See Col. 2. 11, 12. Rom. 2. 29. Circumcision was a seal of the covenant; the heart is then circumcised to love God, when it is strongly engaged and held by that bond to this duty. [2.] It is the work of God's grace to circumcise the hearts, and to shed abroad the love of God in the heart, and this grace is given to all that repent, and seek it carefully. Nay, that seems to be rather a promise than a precept, v. 8, Thou shalt return and obey the voice of the Lord. He that requires us to return, promises grace to enable us to return; and it is our fault, if that grace be not effectual. Herein the covenant of grace is well ordered, that whatsoever is required in the covenant, is promised, Turn you to me, saith the Lord; come, return, Prov. 11. 18. (3.) Lastly, It is observable how Moses here calls God, the Lord thy God, twelve times in those ten verses; intimating, First, That penitents may take direction and encouragement in their return to God, from their relation to him, Jer. 3. 22. "Behold, we come unto thee, for thou art the Lord our God; therefore to thee we are bond to come, whither else should we go? And therefore we hope to find favour with thee." Secondly, That those who have revolted from God, if they return to him, and do their first works, shall be restored to their former state of honour and happiness. Bring hither the first robe. In the threatenings of the former chapter, he is all along called the Lord, a God of power, and the Judge of all: but in the promises of this chapter, the Lord thy God, a God of grace, and in covenant with thee.

II. This may also be considered as a prediction of the repentance and restoration of the Jews; When all these things are come upon thee, (v. 1.) the blessing first, and after that, the curse, then the mercy in reserve shall take place. Though their hearts were wretchedly hardened, yet the grace of God could soften and change them; and then, though their case was deplorably miserable, the providence of God would redress all their grievances. Now, 1. It is certain that this was fulfilled in their return from their captivity in Babylon: It was a wonderful instance of their repentance and reformation, that Ephraim, who had been joined to idols, renounced them, and said, What have I to do any more with idols? That captivity effectually cured them of idolatry; and then God planted them again in their own land, and did them good. But, 2. Some think that it is yet further to be accomplished, that even the Jews who are now dispersed, their repentance for the sin of their fathers in crucifying Christ, their return to God through him, and their accession to the Christian church. But, alas! who shall live when God doth this?

11. For this commandment which I command thee this day, it is not hidden from thee, neither is it far off. 12. It is not in heaven, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go up for us to heaven, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? 13. Neither is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldest say, Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it unto us, that we may hear it, and do it? 14. But the word is very nigh unto thee, in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it.

Moses here urges them to obedience, from the consideration of the plainness and easiness of the command.

1. This is true of the law of Moses. They could never plead, in excuse of their disobedience, that God had enjoined them that which was either intelligible or impracticable, impossible to be known or to be done, v. 11. It is not hidden from thee. That is, 1. "It is not too high for thee; thou needest not send messengers to heaven," (v. 12.) to inquire what thou must do to please God; nor needest thou to go beyond sea, (v. 13.) as the philosophers did, that travelled through many and distant regions in pursuit of learning; no, thou art not put to that labour and expense; nor is the commandment within the reach of those only that have a great estate, or a refined genius, but it is very nigh unto thee, v. 14. It is written in thy books, made plain upon tables, so that he that runs may read it; thy priests' lips keep this knowledge, and when any difficulty arises, thou mayest ask the law at their mouth, Mal. 2. 7. It is not communicated in a strange language; but it is in thy mouth, that is, in the vulgar tongue that is commonly used by thee in which thou mayest hear it read, and talk of it familiarly among thy children. It is not wrapped up in obscure phrases or figures to puzzle and amuse thee, or in hieroglyphics, but it is in thy heart; it is delivered in such a manner, as that it is level to thy capacity, and that of the capacity of the meanest." 2. "It is not too hard or heinous to thee," so the Septuagint reads it, v. 11. "Thou needest not say, "As good attempt to climb to heaven, or flee upon the wings of the morning to the utmost part of the sea, as go about to do all the words of this law:" no, the matter is not so; it is no such intolerable yoke as some evil-minded people represent it." It was indeed a heavy yoke in comparison with that of Christ, (Acts 15. 10.) but not in comparison with the idolatrous services of the neighbouring nations. God appeals to themselves, that he had not made them to serve with an offering, nor wearied them with incense, Isa. 43. 23. Mic. 6.

3. But he speaks especially of the moral law, and its precepts; "That is very nigh thee, consonant to the law of nature, which would have been found in every man's heart, and every man's mouth, if he would but have attended to it. There is that in thee, which consents to the law that it is good, Rom. 7. 16. Thou hast therefore no reason to complain of any insuperable difficulty in the observance of it." II. This is true of the gospel of Christ, to which the apostle applies it, and makes it the language of the righteousness which is of faith, Rom. 10. 6-8. And many think that is principally intended by Moses here, for he wrote of Christ, John 5. 46. This is God's commandment written under the heart that we believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ, 1 John 3. 23. If we ask, as the blind man did, Lord, who is he? or where is he, that we may believe on him? (John 9. 36.) this scripture gives an answer. We need not go up to heaven, to fetch him thence, for he is come down from thence in his incarnation; nor down to the deep, to fetch him thence, for he is come up to him in resurrection. But the word is nigh us, and Christ in that word; so that if we believe with the heart that the promises of the incarnation and resurrection of the Messiah are fulfilled in our Lord Jesus, and receive him accordingly, and confess him with our mouth, we have then Christ with us, and we shall be saved. He is near, very near, that justifies us. The law was plain and easy, but the gospel much more so.

15. See, I have set before thee this day life and good, and death and evil; 16. In that I command thee this day to love the Lord thy God, to walk in his ways, and to keep his commandments and his statutes and his judgments, that thou mayest live and multiply: and the Lord thy God shall bless thee in the land whither thou goest to possess it. 17. But if thine heart turn away, so that thou wilt not hear, but shalt be drawn away, and worship other gods, and serve them; 18. I denounce unto you this day, that ye shall surely perish, and that ye shall not prolong your days upon the land, whither thou passest over Jordan to go to possess it. 19. I call heaven and earth to record this day against you, that I have set before you life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may live: 20. That thou mayest love the Lord thy God, and that thou mayest obey his voice, and that thou mayest cleave unto him; (for he is thy life, and the length of thy days;) that thou mayest dwell in the land which the Lord sware unto thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, to give them.

Moses here concludes with a very bright light, and a very strong fire, that, if possible, what he had been preaching of, might find entrance into the understanding and affections of his people. What could be said more moving, and more likely to make deep and lasting impressions? The manner of his treating with them is so rational, so prudent, so affectionate, and every way so apt to gain the point, that it abundantly shows him to be in earnest, and leaves them inexcusable in their disobedience.

He states the case very fairly. He appeals to themselves concerning it, whether he had not laid the matter as plain as they could wish before them.

1. Every man covets to obtain life and good, and to escape death and evil; desires happiness, and dreads misery. “Well,” says he, “I have showed you the way to obtain all the happiness you can desire, and to avoid all misery. Be obedient, and all shall be well, and nothing amiss.”

Our first parents and the forbidden fruit, in having gotten thereby the knowledge of good and evil; but they were also a rational knowledge they got, of good, by the loss of evil, and of evil, by the sense of it; yet such is the compassion of God toward man, that, instead of giving him up to his own delusion, he has favoured him by his word with such a knowledge of good and evil, as will make him for ever happy, if it be not his own fault.

2. Every man is moved and governed in his actions by hope and fear, hope of good, and fear of evil, real or apparent. “Now,” says Moses, “I have tried both ways; if you will be either drawn to obedience by the certain prospect of advantage by it, or driven to obedience by the no less certain prospect of ruin, in case you be disobedient; if you will be wroght upon either way, you will be kept close to God and your duty; but if you are not, you are utterly inexcusable.”

Let us, then, bear the conclusion of the whole matter. (1.) If they and their’s would love God and serve him, they should live and be happy, v. 16.

If they would love God, and evidence the sincerity of their love by keeping his commandments; if they would make conscience of keeping his commandments, and do it from a principle of love; then God would do them good, and they should be as happy as his love and blessing could make them. (2.) If they or their’s should at any time turn from God, desert his service, and worship other gods, that would certainly be their ruin, v. 17, 18.

Observe, It is not for every failure in the particulars of their duty, that ruin is threatened, but for apostasy and idolatry; though every violation of the command deserved the curse, yet the nation would be destroyed by that only, which is the violation of that most terrible and inexcusable. That Testament is much the same; that, in like manner, sets before us life and death, good and evil; He that believes shall be saved; he that believes not shall be damned, Mark 16. 16.

And that faith includes love and obedience. To them who, by patient continuance in well-doing, seek for glory, honour, and immortality, God will give eternal life. But to them that are contentious, and do not obey the truth, but according to ungodliness of unbelief, to worship other gods and serve them, to them will be rendered the indignation and wrath of an immortal God, the consequences of which must needs be the tribulation and anguish of an immortal soul, Rom. 2. 7. 9.

II. Having thus stated the case, he fairly puts them to their choice, with a direction to them to choose well. He appeals to heaven and earth concerning his fair and faithful dealing with them v. 19. They could not but own, that whatever was the issue, he had delivered his soul; therefore that they might deliver their’s, he bids them choose life, that is, choose to do their duty, which would be their life. Note. 1. Those shall have life, that choose it: they that choose the favour of God, and communion with him, for their folly, and proscribe their choice and they may have what they choose. 2. Those that come short of life and happiness, must thank themselves; they would have had it, if they had chosen it, when it was put to their choice: but they die because they will die; that is, because they do not like the life promised, upon the terms proposed.

In the I st verse, (1.) He shows them, in short, with what authority, is to serve God, and to love him as the Lord, a Being most amiable, addressing the God, a God in covenant with them; and as an evidence of this love, to obey his voice in every thing, and by a constancy in this love and obedience to cleave to him, and never to forsake him in affection or practice. (2.) He shows them what reason there was for this duty. In consideration, [1.] Of their dependence upon God; he is thy life, and the length of thy days. [2.] Of their obligation to him; the promise of Canaan made to their fathers, and ratified with them; and [3.] Of their expectations from him in performance of that promise; “Love God, and serve him, that thou mayest dwell in that land of promise, which thou mayest be sure He can give, and uphold to thee, who is thy life and the length of thy days.” All these are arguments to us to continue in love and obedience to the God of our mercies.

CHAP. XXXI.

In this chapter, Moses, having finished his sermon, I. Encourages both the people who were now to enter Canaan, (v. 1-6.) and Joshua who was to lead them, v. 7, 8, 23. And, II. He takes care for the keeping of these things for the days of the Israelites, and their posterity. By the book of the law, which was, (1.) Written. (2.) Delivered into the custody of the priests, v. 9, and 24. 27. (3.) Ordered to be publicly read every seventh year, v. 10. By the example which God orders Moses to prepare for their instructive and to his own, v. 11. He calls Moses and Joshua to the door of the tabernacle, v. 14, 15. (2.) He foretells the apostasy of Israel in process of time, and the judgments they would thereby bring upon themselves, v. 16-18. (3.) He prescribes the following song to be a witness against them, v. 19, 21. (4.) Moses wrote it, (v. 22.) and delivered it to Israel, with an intimation of the design of it, as he had received it from the Lord, v. 22, 30.

1. And Moses went, and spake these words unto all Israel. 2. And he said unto them, I am a hundred and twenty years old this day: I can no more go out and come in: also the Lord hath said unto me, Thou shalt not go over this Jordan.

3. The Lord thy God, he will go before thee, and will destroy these nations from before thee, and thou shalt possess them: and Joshua, he shall go over before thee, as the Lord hath said. 4. And the Lord shall do unto them as he did to Sihor and to Og, kings of the Amorites, and unto the land of them whom he destroyed. 5 And the Lord shall give them up before your face, that ye may do unto them according unto all the commandments which I have commanded you. 6 Be strong and of a good courage, fear not, nor be afraid of them: for the Lord thy God, he it is that doth go with thee; he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee. 7 And Moses called unto Joshua, and said unto him in the sight of all Israel, Be strong and of a good courage: for thou must go with this people unto the land which the Lord hath sworn unto their fathers to give them; and thou shalt cause them to inherit it. 8 And the Lord, he it is that doth go before thee; he will be with thee, he will not fail thee, neither forsake thee: fear not, neither be dismayed.

Loath to part (we say) bids oft farewell; Moses does so to the children of Israel; not because he was unwilling to leave the land of promise, but he could not leave God: he had finished what he had to say to them by way of counsel and exhortation: here he calls them together to give them a word of encouragement, especially with reference to the wars of Canaan, which they were now to engage in. It was a discouragement to them, that Moses was to be removed, at a time when he could so ill be spared: though Joshua was continued to fight for them in the valley, they would want Moses to intercede for them on the hill, as he did, Exod. 17. 10. But there is no remedy; Moses can no more go out, and come in, v. 2. Not that he was disabled by any decay either of body or mind; for his natural force was not abated; (ch. 34. 7.) but he cannot any longer discharge his offices; for 1. He is a hundred and twenty years old, and it is time for him to think of resigning his honour, and returning to his rest. He had arrived at so great an age then, when seventy or eighty was the ordinary stint, as appears by the prayer of Moses, (Ps. 90. 10.) might well think that he had accomplished a hireling his day. 2. He is under a divine sentence, Thou shalt not go over Jordan. Thus a full stop was put to his usefulness; hitherto he must go, hitherto he must serve, but no further. So God had appointed it, and Moses acquiesces; for I know not why we should any of us desire to live a day longer than while God has work for us to do; nor shall we be accountable for more time than is allotted to us. But though Moses must not go over himself, he is anxious to encourage those that must.

1. He encourages the people; and never could any general animate his soldiers upon such good grounds, as those on which Moses here encourages Israel. 1 He assures them of the constant presence of God with them; (v. 3.) The Lord thy God, that has led thee and kept thee hitherto, he will go over before thee; and they might follow boldly, who were sure that they had God for their Leader. He repeats it again, (v. 6.) with an emphasis, The Lord thy God, who is thine in covenant, he it is, He, and no less: He, and no other, that goes before thee; not only who by his promise has assured thee that he will go before thee; but by his ark, the visible token of his presence, shows thee that he does actually go before thee." And he repeats it with enlargement, "Not only he goes over before thee at first, to bring thee in, but he will continue with thee all along; with thee and thine, he will not fail thee, nor forsake thee; for he will not disappoint the expectations in any strait, nor will he ever desert thee; but he will be so to thee." This is applied by the apostle to call God's spiritual Israel, for the encouragement of their faith and hope; unto us is this gospel preached, as well as unto them. He will never fail thee, nor forsake thee, Heb. 13. 5. 2. He commends Joshua to them for a leader; Joshua, he shall go over before thee, v. 3. That whose courage had been tried in relation to their interest, they had had long experience of; and one whom God had ordained and appointed to be their leader, and therefore, no doubt, would own and bless, and make a blessing to them. See Num. 27. 18. Note, It is a great encouragement to a people, when, instead of some useful instruments that are removed, God raises up others to carry on his work. 3. He ensures their success. The greatest generals, supported with the greatest advantages, must yet own the issues of war to be doubtful and uncertain; the battle is not always to the strong, or to the bold; an ill accident unthought of may turn the scale against the highest hopes. But Moses had warrant from God to assure Israel that, notwithstanding the disadvantages they lay under, and the threats of their enemies, A coward will fight, when he is sure to be a conqueror. God undertakes to do the work, he will destroy these nations; and Israel shall do little else than divide the spoil, thou shalt possess them, v. 3. Two things might encourage their hopes of this. (1.) The victories they had already obtained over Sihon and Og, v. 4. From which they might infer both the power of God, that he could do what he had done, and the success of God, that had brought them to the place where they had begun to do. Thus must we improve our experience. (2.) The command God had given them to destroy the Canaanites, (ch. 7. 2. 12. 2.) to which he refers here, v. 5. That ye may do unto them according to all which I have commanded you; and from which they might infer, that if God had commanded them to destroy the Canaanites, no doubt, he would put it into the power of their hands to do it. Note, What God has made our duty, we have reason to expect opportunity and assistance from him for the doing of. Sc that from all this he had reason enough to bid them be strong and of a good courage, v. 6. While they had the power of God engaged for them, they had no reason to fear all the powers of Canaan engaged against them. II. He encourages Joshua, v. 7. 8. Observe, 1. Though Joshua was an experienced general, and a man of approved gallantry and resolution, who had always signalized himself in many brave actions; yet Moses saw cause to bid him be of good courage, now that he was entering upon a new scene of action; and Joshua was far from taking it as an affront, or as an implicit questioning of his courage, to be thus charged with many of the faults of pious vigilance which our enemies so wantonly take exhortations and admonitions for reproaches and reflections. Joshua himself is very well pleased to be admonished by Moses to be strong and of good courage. 2. He gives him his charge in the sight of all Israel, that they might be the more observant of him when they saw thus solemnly inaugurated, and that he might set himself the more to be an example of courage to the people. He wrote messages to this charge here given to him, as well as to themselves. 3. He gives him the same assurances of the divine presence, and consequently of a glorious success, that he had given the people. God would be with him, would not forsake him, and therefore he should certainly accomplish the glorious enterprise
III. He appointed the public reading of this law in a general assembly of all Israel every seventh year. The piuses Jews (it is very probable) read the law daily in their families, and Moses of old time was read in the synagogue every sabbath-day, Lev. 12. 25. But once in seven years, that the law might be the more magnified and made honorable, it must be read in a general assembly. Though we read the word in private, we must not think it needless to hear it read in public.

Now he here gives direction, 1. When this solemn reading of the law must be, that the time might add to the solemnity; it must be done, (1.) In the year of release. In that year the law is heard to that they might have time to attend this service. Servants who were discharged, and poor debtors who were then acquitted from their debts, must know, that, having the benefit of the law, it was justly expected they should yield obedience to it, and therefore give up themselves to be God's servants, because he had loosed their bonds. The year of release was typical of gospel-grace, wherefore it is called the anniversary of the Lord's deliverance, liberty by Christ engage us to keep his commandments, Luke 1. 74, 75. (2.) At the feast of the tabernacles in that year. In that feast they were particularly required to rejoice before God, Lev. 23. 40. Therefore then they must read the law, both to qualify their mirth and keep it in due bounds, and to sanctify their mirth, that they might make the law of God the matter of their rejoicing, and also read it with pleasure, and not as a task.

2. To whom it must be read; to all Israel, (v. 11.) men, women, and children, and the strangers, v. 12. The women and children were not obliged to go up to the other feasts, but to this only in which the law was read. Note, It is the will of God that all people should acquaint themselves with his word. It is a rule to all, and therefore should be brought to the understanding of all, as supposed, since all Israel could not possibly meet in one place, or one man's voice reach them all, that as many as the courts of the Lord's house would hold, met there, and the rest at the same time in their synagogues. The Jewish doctors say, that the hearers were bound to prepare their hearts, and to hear with fear and reverence, and with joy and trembling, as in the day when the law was given on mount Sinai, and though the law were read and written, and made the law of the people, yet they were bound to hear with great attention; for that reads, is the messenger of the congregation to cause the words of God to be heard. I wish those that hear the gospel read and preached, would consider this.

3. By whom it must be read. Thou shalt read it, (v. 11.) "Thou, O Israel," by a proper person appointed for that purpose; or, "Thou, O Joshua, that art a man known of God," to engage us to read the law himself, Josh. 8. 35. So did Josiah, 2 Chron. 34. 30. and Ezra, Neh. 8. 3. And the Jews say, that the king himself (when they had one) was the person that read in the courts of the temple; that a pulpit was set up for that purpose in the midst of the court, in which the king stood, that the book of the law was delivered him by the High Priest, that he stood up to receive it, uttered a prayer, and then read it in public. And did this read the law in public) before he read; and then, if he pleased, he might sit down and read. But if he read standing, it was thought the more commendable, as (they say) King Agrippa did. Here let me offer it as a conjecture, that Solomon is called the Preacher, in his Ecclesiastes, because he delivered the substance of that book in a discourse to the people; after his public reading of the law in the feasts of tabernacles, according to this appointment here.
4. For what end it must be thus solemnly read. (1.) That the present generation might hereby keep up their acquaintance with the laws of God, v. 12. They must hear, that they may learn, and fear God, and observe to do their duty. See here what we are to aim at in hearing the word; we must hear, that we may learn, and grow in knowledge; and every time we read the scriptures, we shall find that there is still more and more to be learned out of them. We must learn, that we may fear God, that is, that we may be duly affected with divine things; and must fear God, that we may observe and do the words of his law; for in vain do we pretend to fear him, if we do not obey him. (2.) That the rising generation might betimes be leavened with religion, (v. 13.) not only that those who know something, may thus know more; but that the children which have not known any thing, may betimes know this, how much it is their interest as well as duty to fear God.

14. And the Lord said unto Moses, Behold, thy days approach that thou must die: call Joshua, and present yourselves in the tabernacle of the congregation, that I may give him a charge. And Moses and Joshua went and presented themselves in the tabernacle of the congregation. 15. And the Lord appeared in the tabernacle in a pillar of a cloud: and the pillar of the cloud stood over the door of the tabernacle. 16. And the Lord said unto Moses, Behold, thou shalt sleep with thy fathers; and this people will rise up, and go a whoring after the gods of the strangers of the land, whither they go to be among them, and will forsake me, and break my covenant which I have made with them. 17. Then my anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I will forsake them, and I will hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall befall them; so that they will say in that day, Are not these evils come upon us, because our God is not among us? 18. And I will surely hide my face in that day, for all the evils which they shall have wrought, in that they are turned unto other gods. 19. Now therefore write ye this song for you, and teach it the children of Israel: put it in their mouths, that this song may be a witness for me against the children of Israel. 20. For when I shall have brought them into the land which I sware unto their fathers, that floweth with milk and honey; and they shall have eaten and filled themselves, and waxen fat; then will they turn unto other gods, and serve them, and provoke me, and break my covenant. 21. And it shall come to pass, when many evils and troubles are befallen them, that this song shall testify against them as a witness; for it shall not be forgotten out of the mouths of their seed: for I know their imagination which they go about, even now, before I have brought them into the land which I sware.

Here, I. Moses and Joshua are summoned to attend the Divine Majesty at the door of the tabernacle, v. 14. Moses is told again that he must shortly die; even those that are most ready and willing to die, have need to be often reminded of its approach. In consideration of this, he must come himself to meet God; for whatever improves our communion with the God of Israel, furthering the design of this great work, will also bring with him to be presented to God for a successor, and to receive his commission and charge. Moses readily obeys the summons, for he was not one of those that look with an evil eye upon their successors, but, on the contrary, rejoiced in him. II. God graciously gives them the meeting. He appeared in the tabernacle, (as the Shechinah used to appear,) in a pillar of a cloud, v. 15. This is the only time in all this book that we read of the glory of God appearing, whereas we often read of it in the three foregoing books: which perhaps signifies that, in the latter days, under the evangelical law, such visible appearances as these of the divine glory are not to be expected, but we must take heed to the more sure word of prophecy. III. He tells Moses, that, after his death, the covenant which he had taken so much pains to make between Israel and their God, would certainly be broken. 1. That Israel would forsake God, v. 16. And we may be sure that if the covenant between God and men be broken, the blame must lie on man, it is he that breaks it; we have often observed it, That God never leaves any till they first leave him. Worshipping the gods of the Canaanites, (who hath been the natives, but from henceforward were to be looked upon as the strangers of that land,) would undoubtedly be counted a deserting of God, and, like adultery, a violation of the covenant. Thus still, those are revolters from Christ, and will be so adjudged, who either make a god of their money by reigning covetousness, or a god of their belly by reigning sensuality. They that turn to other gods, (v. 18.) forsake their own mercies. This apostasy of their's is foretold to be an effect of their prosperity, (v. 20.) They shall have eaten and filled themselves; that is all they will aim at in eating, to gratify their own appetites, and then they will wax fat, grow secure and sensual; their security will take off their dread of God, and his judgments; and their sensuality will incline them to the idolatries of the heathen, which made provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts of it. Note, God has a clear and infallible foresight of all the wickedness of the wicked, and has often covenant'd with those who, he knew, would deal very treacherously, (Isa. 48. 8.) and conferred many favours on those who, he knew, would deal very ungratefully. 2. That then God would forsake Israel; and justly does he cast them off, who had not cast him out. My people shall be kindled against them, and I will forsake them. His providence would forsake them, no longer to protect and prosper them, and then they would become a prey to all their neighbours. His spirit and grace would forsake them, no longer to teach and guide them, and then they would be more and more digested, besotted, and hardened in their idolatries. Thus many evils and troubles would befall them, (v. 17, 21.) which would be such manifest indications of God's displeasure against them, that they themselves would be constrained to own it, Are not these evils come upon us, because our God is not among us? They that have sinned away their God, will find that thereby they pull all mischief upon their own heads. But that which completed their misery, was, that God would hide his face from them in that day, that day of their trouble and distress, v. 18. Whatever outward troubles we are in, if we have but the light of God’s countenance, we may be easy. But if God hide his face from us, our prayers we are undone.

IV. He directed Moses to deliver them a song, in the composition of which he should be divinely inspired, and which should remain a standing testimony for God, as faithful to them in giving them warning, and against them, as persons false to themselves in not taking warning, v. 19. The written word in general, as well as this song in particular, is a witness for God, against all those that break covenant with him. It shall be for a testimony, Matt. 24. 14. The wisdom of man has devised many ways of conveying the knowledge of good and evil, by laws, histories, prophecies, proverbs, and, among the rest, by songs; each has its advantages: and the wisdom of God has in the scripture made use of them all, that ignorant and careless men might be left excusable. 1. This song, if rightly improved, might be a means to prevent their apostasy; for in the inhaling of it, God had opened their eyes to their present condition, that before they were brought into the land of promise, v. 21. God knew very well that there were in their hearts such gross conceits of the deity, and such inclinations to idolatry, that they would be tender to the sparks of that temptation; and therefore in this song he gives them warning of their danger that way. Note, The word of God is a discover of the thoughts and intents of men’s hearts, and meets with them strangely by its reproaches and corrections, Heb. 4. 12. Compare 1 Cor. 14. 25. Ministers who preach the word, know not the imaginations men go about, but God, whose word it is, knows perfectly. 2. If this song did not prevent their apostasy, yet it might help to bring them to repentance, and to reduce them from their apostasy. When their troubles are come upon them, this song shall not be forgotten, but may serve as a glass to show them the own faces, that they may humble themselves, and return to him from whom they have revolted. Note, Those whom God has mercy in store for, he may leave to fall, yet he will provide means for their recovery. Medicines are prepared beforehand for their cure.

22. Moses therefore wrote this song the same day, and taught it the children of Israel. 23. And he gave Joshua the son of Nun a charge, and said, Be strong and of a good courage: for thou shalt bring the children of Israel into the land which I sware unto them: and I will be with thee. 24. And it came to pass, when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in a book, until they were finished, 25. That Moses commanded the Levites, which bare the ark of the covenant of the Lord, saying, 26. Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of the Lord your God, that it may be there for a witness against thee. 27. For I know thy rebellion, and thy stiff neck: behold, while I am yet alive with you this day ye have been rebellions against the Lord; and how much more after my death? 28. Gather unto me all the elders of your tribes, and your officers, that I may speak these words in their ears, and call heaven and earth to record against them. 29. For I know that after my death ye will utterly corrupt yourselves, and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you; and evil will beset thee in the latter days; because ye will do evil in the sight of the Lord, to provoke him to anger through the work of your hands. 30. And Moses spake in the ears of all the congregation of Israel the words of this song, until they were ended.

Here,

I. The charge is given to Joshua, which God had said (v. 14.) he would give him. The same in effect that Moses had given him, (v. 7.) Be strong and of a good courage, v. 23. Joshua had now heard from God so much of the wickedness of the people whom he was to have the conduct of, as could not but be a discouragement to him; "Nay," says God, "how bad soever they are, thou shalt go through thy undertaking, for I will be with thee. The sin which they should sin against thee in Canaan; if they afterward by their sin throw themselves out of it again, that will be no fault of thine, nor any dishonour to thee, therefore be of good courage."

II. The solemn delivery of the book of the law to the Levites to be deposited in the side of the ark, is here again related, (v. 24. .26.) of which before, v. 9. Only they are here directed where to treasure up this precious original, not in the ark, there only the two tables were preserved, but in another box by the side of the ark. It is probable that this was the very box that was found in the house of the Lord, (having been somewhow or other misplaced,) in the days of Josiah, (2 Chron. 34. 14.) and so perhaps the following words here, that it may be a witness against thee, may particularly point at that event which happened so long after; for the finding of this very book occasioned the public reading of it by Josiah himself, for a witness against a people who were then almost ripe for their ruin by the Babylonians.

III. The song which follows in the next chapter, is here delivered to Moses, and by him to the people. He wrote it, first, (v. 22.) as the Spirit of God indited it, and then spake it in the ears of all the congregation, (v. 30.) and taught it them, (v. 22.) that is, wrote it out copies of it, and ordered the people to learn it by heart.

It was delivered by word of mouth first, and afterward in writing, to the elders and officers, as the representatives of their respective tribes, (v. 28.) by them to be transmitted to their several families and households. It is delivered to them with a solemn appeal to heaven and earth, concerning the fair warning which was given them by it, of the fatal consequences of their apostasy from God; and with a declaration of the little joy and little hope that is in the conscience of them, though that was discouraging enough, he tells them, (v. 29.) I know that after my death ye will utterly corrupt yourselves. Many a sad thought, no doubt, it occasioned to this good man, to foresee the apostasy and ruin of a people he had taken so much pains with, in order to do them good, and make them happy; but this was his comfort, that he had done his duty, and that God would be glorified, if not in their settlement, in their dispersion. Thus our Lord Jesus, a little before his death, foretold the rise of false Christs and false prophets, (Matt. 24. 24.) notwithstanding which, and all the apostasies of the latter times, we may be confident that the gates of hell shall not prevail against the church, for the foundation of God stands sure.

CHAP. XXXII.

In this chapter we have, 1. The song which Moses, by the appointment of God, delivered to the children of Israel, for a standing admonition to them, to take heed of for-saking God. This takes up most of the chapter. In which we have, 1. The preface, v. 1, 2. 2. A high character of God, and in opposition to that, a bad character of the people of Israel, v. 3-6. 3. A rehearsal of the great things God had done for them, and in opposition to that, an account of their ill carriage toward him, v. 7-15. 4. A prediction of the wasting destroying judgments which God would bring upon them for their sins, in judgment by the mouth of the sorer of their impieties, v. 19-33. 5. A promise of the destruction of their enemies and oppressors at last, and the glorious deliverance of a remnant of Israel, v. 36-43. The whole which we shall deliver in this song to them, v. 44-47. III. The orders God gives to Moses to go up to mount Nebo and die, v. 48-52.

1. GIVE ear, O ye heavens, and I will speak; and hear, O earth, the words of my mouth. 2. My doctrine shall drop as the rain, my speech shall distill as the dew, as the small rain upon the tender herb, and as the showers upon the grass: 3. Because I will publish the name of the Lord: ascribe ye greatness unto our God. 4. He is the Rock, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth and without iniquity, just and right is he. 5. They have corrupted themselves; their sport is not the spot of his children: they are a perverse and crooked generation. 6. Do ye thus requite the Lord? O foolish people and unwise! is not he thy father that hath bought thee? Hath he not made thee, and established thee?

1. A commanding preface or introduction to this song of Moses, v. 1, 2. He begins, 1. With a solemn appeal to heaven and earth concerning the truth and importance of what he was about to say, and the justice of the divine proceedings against a rebellious and backsliding people, for he had said, (ch. 31. 28.) that he would in this song call heaven and earth to record against them. Heaven and earth would sooner hear than this perverse and unthinking people; for they revolt not from their obedience to their Creator, but continue to this day, according to his ordinances, as his servants, (Ps. 119. 89...91.) and therefore will rise up in judgment against rebellious Israel. Heaven and earth will be witnesses against sinners, witnesses of the warning given them, and of their refusal to take the warning; (see Job 20. 27.) the heaven shall reveal his iniquity, and the earth shall rise up against him. Or heaven and earth are here put for the inhabitants of both, angels and men; both shall agree to justify God in his proceedings against Israel, and to declare his righteousness, Ps. 50. 6. See Rev. 19. 1, 2. 2. He begins with a solemn application of what he was about to say to the people, v. 2. My doctrine shall drop as the rain. (1.) It shall be a beating sweeping rain to the rebellious; so one of the Chaldee paraphrases expounds the first clause. Rain is sometimes sent for judgment, witness that with which the world was deluged; and so the word of God, as to some it is reviving and refreshing; and a warning and a comfort to others, as to the wicked and killing, and a savour of death unto death. (2.) It shall be as a sweet and comfortable dew to those who are rightly prepared to receive it. Observe, [1.] The subject of this song is doctrine; he had given them a song of praise and thanksgiving, (Exod. 15.) but this is a song of instruction, for in psalms, and hymns, and spiritual songs, we are not only to give thanks to God, but to sing one another, Col. 3. 16. Hence many of David's psalms are entitled Maschil, to give instruction. [2.] This doctrine is fitly compared to rain and showers which come from above, to make the earth fruitful, and accomplish that for which they are sent, (Isa. 55. 10, 11.) and depend not upon the wisdom or will of man, Mic. 5. 7. It is a mercy to have this rain come often upon us, and our duty to accept it, and drink it in, and let this rain descend and distil as the dew, and the small rain, which descend silently and without noise. The word preached is then likely to profit, when it comes gently, and sweetly insinuates itself into the hearts and affections of the hearers. 4. He speaks their acceptance and entertainment of it, and that it might be as sweet and pleasant and welcome to them, as rain to the thirsty earth, Ps. 72. 16. And the word of God is then likely to do them good, when it is thus acceptable. 5. The learned Bishop Patrick understands it as a prayer, that his words, which were sent from heaven to them, might sink into their hearts and soften them, as the rain softens the earth, and so make them fruitful in obedience.

II. An awful declaration of the greatness and righteousness of God, v. 5, 4. He begins with this, and lays it down as his first principle, 1. To preserve the honour of God, that no reproach might be cast upon him for the sake of the wickedness of his people Israel: how wicked and corrupt soever they are who are called by his name, he is just and right and all that is good, and is not to be thought the worse of for their badness. 2. To aggravate the wickedness of Israel, who knew and worshipped such a holy God, and yet wore themselves so unholy. And, 3. To justify God in his dealings with them; we must abide by it, that God is righteous, even when his judgments are a great deep, Jer. 12. 1. Ps. 36. 6. Moses here sets himself to publish the name of the Lord, (v. 3.) that Israel, knowing what a God he is whom they had avouched for their's, might never therefore exchange him for a false god, or a dunghill god. He calls upon them therefore to ascribe greatness to him. It will be of great use to us for the preventing of sin, and the preserving of us in the way of our duty, always to keep up high and honourable thoughts of God, and to take all occasions to express them. Ascribe greatness to our God. We cannot add to his greatness, for it is infinite; but we must acknowledge it, and give him the glory of it.

Now, when Moses would set forth the greatness of God, he does it, not by explaining his eternity and immensity, or describing the brightness of his glory in the upper world, but, by showing the faithfulness of his word, the perfection of his works, and the wisdom and equity of all the administrations of his government; for in these his glory shines most clear to us, and these are the things revealed concerning him, which belong to us and our children, v. 4. (1.) He is the Rock. So he is called six times in this chapter, and the LXX all along translate it οἶχος, God. The learned Mr. Hugh Broughton reckons, that God is called the Rock eighteen times in the Old Testament, and (as he observes) with great right, (though in some places we translate it, strength,) and charges it therefore upon the Papiists, that they make St. Peter a god, when they make him the rock on which the church is built. God is the Rock, for he is in himself immutable and immovable, and he is, to all that seek him and fly to him, an impenetrable shelter, and to all that trust in him, an everlasting foundation. (2.) His works are perfect works; very good; his works of providence are so, or will be so in due time, and when the mystery of God shall be finished, the perfection of his works will appear to all the world; nothing that God does, can be mended, Eccl. 3. 14. God was now perfecting what he had promised and begun for his people Israel, and from the perfection of this work they must take occasion to give him the glory of the perfect rock; for if the foundation be not perfect, they have their flaws and defects, and are left unfinished: but as for God, his work is perfect; if he begin, he will make an end. (3.) All his ways are judgment. The ends of his ways are all righteous, and he is wise in the choice of the means in order to those ends. Judgment signifies both prudence and justice. The ways of the Lord are right, Hos. 14. 9. (4.) He is a God of truth; whose word he may take and rely upon, for he cannot lie, who is faithful to all his promises, nor shall his threatenings fall to the ground. (5.) He is without iniquity; one who never cheated any that trusted in him, never wronged any that appealed to his justice, nor ever was hard upon any that cast themselves upon his mercy. (6.) Just and right is he. As he will not wrong any by punishing them more than they deserve, he will not fail to recompense all those that serve him, or suffer for him. He is indeed just and right; for he will effectually take care that none shall lose by him. Now what a bright and amiable idea does this one verse give us of the God whom we worship; and what reason have we then to love him and fear him, to live a life of delight in him, dependence on him, and devotion to him; this is our Rock, and there is no unrighteousness in him; nor can there be, Ps. 92. 15. III. A high charge exhibited against the Israel of God, whose character was in all respects the reverse of that of the God of Israel, v. 5. 1. They have corrupted themselves. Or, It has corrupted itself; the body of the people has: the whole head sick, and the whole heart faint. God did not corrupt them, for just and right is he; but they are themselves the sole authors of their own sin and ruin; and both are included in this word, They have done wrong to themselves for evil. He is a Rock and Rock, when he is drawn away of his own lust. And they have destroyed themselves, Hos. 13. 9. If thou scordest, thou alone shalt bear the guilt and grief, Prov. 9. 12. 2. Their spot is not the spot of his children. Even God's children have their spots, while they are in this imperfect state; for if we say, we have no sin, no spot, we deceive ourselves. But this sin is Israel's. Lot of their hats, is not an infirmity which they strive against, watched and prayed against, but an evil which their hearts were fully set in them to do: For, 3. They were a herverse and crooked generation, that were actuated by a spirit of contradiction, and therefore would do what was forbidden, because it was forbidden; would set up their own humour and fancy in opposition to the will of God, were impatient of reproof, hated to be reform ed, and went on frowardly in the way of their heart. The Chaldee paraphrase reads this verse thus: They have scattered, or changed themselves, and not him, even the children that served idols; a generation that has defrauded its own works, and alienated itself. Idolaters cannot hurt God, or do any damage to his work, but to make him a stranger to this world. See Job 35. 6. No, all the Hurt they do, is to themselves and their own works. The learned Bishop Patrick gives another reading of it, Did he do him any hurt? That is, "Is God the Rock to be blamed for the evils that should befal! Israel? No, His children are their blot," that is, "All the evil that comes upon them, is the fruit of their children's wickedness; for the whole generation of them is crooked and perverse. All that are ruined, ruin themselves, they die, because they will die." IV. A pathetie expostulation with this provoking people for their ingratitude, v. 6. "Do ye thus requite the Lord? Surely you will not hereafter be so base and disingenuous in your carriage toward him as you have been." 1. He reminds them of the obligations God had laid upon them to serve him and to do his will, and to be merciful to them, had begotten them, fed them, carried them, nursed them, and borne their manners, and would they spurn at the bowels of a Father? He had bought them; had been at a vast expense of miracles to bring them out of Egypt; had given men for them, and peoples for their life, Isa. 43. 4. Is not he thy Father, thy Owner? so some, that has an incontestable prosperity in thee, and the one knoweth his owner, "He has made thee, and brought thee into being; established thee and kept thee in being; has he not done so? Can you deny the engagements you lie under to him, in consideration of the great things he has done and designed for you?" And are not our obligations, as baptized christians, equally great and strong to our Creator that made us, our Redeemer that bought us, and our Sanctifier that has established us. 2. From hence he infers the evil of deserting him and rebelling against him. For, (1.) It was base ingratitude. "Do ye thus requite the Lord? Are these the returns you make him for all his favours to you? The powers you have from him, will you employ them against him?" See Mic. 6. 3, 4. John 10. 32. This is such monstrous villany, as all the world will cry shame on: call a man ungrateful, and you can show him, who would, to whom. (2.) It was prodigious madness; O foolish people and wise, Foolish and double fools; who is bewitched you? Gal. 3. 1. "Fools, indeed, to disoblige one on whom you have such a necessary dependence! To forsake your own mercies for lying vanities!" Note, All wilful sinners, especially sinners in Israel, are the most unwise and the most ungrateful people in the world. 7. Remember the days of old, consider the years of many generations: ask thy father, and he will show thee; thy elders, and they will tell thee; 8. When the Most High divided to the nations their inheritance, when he separated the sons of Adam, he set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel. 9. For the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob is the lot of his inheritance. 10. He found him in a desert land, and in the waste howling wilderness; he led him about, he instructed him, he kept him as the apple of his eye. 11. As an eagle streith up her nest, fluttereth over her young, spreadeth abroad her wings, taketh them, beareth them on her wings; 12. So the Lord alone did lead him, and there was no strange god with him. 13. He made him ride on the high places of the earth, that he might eat the increase of the fields; and he made him to suck honey out of the rock, and oil out of the flinty rock; 14. Butter of kine, and milk of sheep, with fat of lambs, and rams of the breed of Bashan, and goats, with the fat of kidneys of wheat; and thou didst drink the pure blood of the grape.

Moses, having in general represented God to them, as their great Benefactor, whom they were bound in gratitude to observe and obey, in these verses gives particular instances of God's kindness to them, and concern for them.

I. Some instances were ancient; and for proof of them, he appeals to the records, (v. 7.) Remember the days of old, that is, "Keep in remembrance the history of those days, and of the wonderful providences of God concerning the old world, and concerning your ancestors Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, which is found constant service, extending them, and how long since things were working toward that which is now come to pass." Note, The authentic histories of ancient times are of singular use, and especially the history of the church in its infancy, both the Old Testament and the New Testament church.

II. Others were more modern; and for proof of them, he appeals to their fathers and elders that were alive, (v. 8.) Parents must diligently teach their children, not only the word of God, his laws, (ch. 6. 7.) and the meaning of his ordinances, (Exod. 12. 26, 27.) but his works also, and the methods of his providence. See Ps. 78. 3, 4, 6, 7. And the children should desire the knowledge of those things which will be of use to engage them to their duty, and to direct them in it. Those things are here enumerated, up examples of the good things of God's kindness to his people Israel, and strong obligations upon them never to forsake him.

1. The early designation of the land of Canaan for their inheritance; for herein it was a type and figure of our heavenly inheritance, that it was of old ordained and prepared in the divine counsels, v. 8. When the earth was divided among the sons of men, in the days of Peleg, after the flood, and each family had its lot, in which it must settle, and by degrees grow up into a nation, then God had Israel in his thoughts, and in his eye; for, designing this good land into which they were now going, to be in due time an inheritance for them, he ordered that the poserty of Canaan, rather than any other of the families then in being, should be planted there in the mean time, to keep possession, as it were, till Israel was ready for it; because these families were under the curse of Balaam, by which they were condemned to servitude and ruin, (Gen. 19. 15, 16.) makes up just the number of the twelve tribes of Israel. Note, (1.) The wisdom of God has appointed the bounds of men's habitation, and determined both the place and time of our living in the world, Acts 17. 26. When he gave the earth to the children of men, (Ps. 33. 16.) it was not that every man might catch as he could; no, he designed to mark their inheritance, and will have every one to know his own, and not to invade another's property. (2.) Infinite wisdom has a vast reach, and designs beforehand what is brought to pass long after; Known unto God are all his works from the beginning to the end, (Acts 15. 18.) but they are not so to us, Ex. 3. 11. (3.) The great God, in governing the world, and ordering the affairs of states and kingdoms, has a special regard to his church, and propagation of himself is evidently good in all. See 2 Chron. 16. 9. and Isa. 45. 4. The Cannanites thought they had as good and sure a title to their land as any of their neighbours had to their's; but God intended that they should only be tenants, till the Israelites, their landlords, came. Thus God serves his own purposes of kindness to his people, by those that neither knew him nor love him, who mean not so, neither doth their heart think so, Isa. 10. 7. Mic. 4. 12.

The reason given for the particular care God took for this people, so long before they were either born or thought of, (as I may say,) in our world, does yet more magnify the kindness, and make it obliging beyond expression, (v. 9.) for the Lord's portion is his people. All the world is his, he is the Owner and Possessor of heaven and earth, but his glory, which is now to be enlarged upon, is in this vineyard, his garden enclosed, he has a peculiar delight in it, it is the beloved of his soul, in it he walks, he dwells, it is his rest for ever. He has a particular concern for it, keeps it as the apple of his eye; he has particular expectations from it, as a man has from his portion; has a much greater rent of honour, glory, and worship, from that distinguished remainder, than from all the world besides. That God should be his people's Portion, ought to be accounted for, for he is their Joy and Felicity; but how they should be his portion, who neither needs them, nor can be benefited by them, must be resolved into the wondrous condescensions of free grace. Even so, Father, because it seemed good in thine eyes so to call and count them.

2. The forming of them into a people, that they might be the beholders of the happiness of an heir at age, at the time appointed of the Father. And herein also Canaan was a figure of the heavenly inheritance; for as it was from eternity proposed and designed for all God's spiritual Israel, so they are, in time, (and it is a work of time,) fitted and made meet for it, Col. 1. 12. The deliverance of Israel out of slavery, by the destruction of their oppressors, was attended with so many wonders obvious to sense, and had been so often spoken of, that it needed not to be mentioned in this song; but the gracious works God wrought upon them, would be less taken notice of than the glorious works he had wrought for them, and therefore he chooses rather to advert to them. A great deal was done to model this people, to cast them into some shape, and to fit them for the great things, designed them in the land of promise; and it is here most elegantly described.

(1.) He found him in a desert land, v. 10. This refers, no doubt, to the wilderness through which God brought them to Canaan, and in which he took so much pains with them; it is called the church in the wilderness, Acts 7. 38. There it was born, and nursed, and educated, that all might appear to be divine and from heaven, since they had there no communications with either men or beasts, neither for food or learning. But because he is said to find them there, it seems designed also to represent both the bad state and the bad character of that people, when God first began to appear for them. [1.]
Their condition was forlorn, Egypt was to them a desert land, and a waste howling wilderness, for they were bond-slaves in it, and cried by reason of their oppression, and were perfectly bewildered and at a loss for relief; there God found them, and hence he fetched them up. After their deliverance from Egypt, their condition was most promising; so ignorant were the generality of them in divine things, so stupend and unapt to receive the impressions of them, so peevish and humoursome, so froward and quarrelsome, and withal so strangely addicted to the idolatries of Egypt, that they might well be said to be found in a desert land; for one might as reasonably expect a crop of corn from a barren wilderness, as any good harvest from the streams and fountains of Egypt. Those that are renewed and sanctified by grace, should often remember what they were by nature.

(2.) He led him about and instructed him. When God had them in the wilderness, he did not bring them directly to Canaan, but made them go a great compass round, and so he instructed them; that is, [1.] By this means he took time to instruct them, and gave them commandments as they were able to receive them. Those whose business it is to instruct others, must not expect it will be done of a sudden; learners must have time to learn. [2.] By this means he tried their faith and patience, and dependence upon God, and inured them to the hardships of the wilderness, and so instructed them. Every stage had something in it that was instructive; even when he chastened them, he thereby taught them out of his love. It is said (Ps. 107. 7.) that he led them forth by the right way; and yet here, that he led them about; for God always leads his people the right way, however to us it may seem about; so that the furthest way about, proves, if not the nearest way, yet the best way home to Canaan. How God instructed them, is explained later. (Neh. 9. 13.) Thou gavest them right judgments and true laws, good statutes and commandments; and especially, (v. 20.) Thou gavest them also thy good Spirit to instruct them; and he instructs effectually. We may well imagine, how unfit that people had been for Canaan, had they not first gone through the discipline of the wilderness.

(3.) He kept him as the apple of his eye, with all the care and tenderness that could be, from the malignant influences of an open sky and air, and all the perils of an inhospitable desert. The pillar of a cloud and fire, was both a guide and a guard to them.

(4.) He did that for them, which the eagle does for her nest of young ones, v. 11, 12. The similitude was touched, Exod. 19. 4, I have you on eagle's wings; here it is enlarged upon. The eagle is observed to have a strong affection for her young, and to show it, not only as other creatures, by preserving them and making provision for them, but by educating them and teaching them to fly. For that purpose, she stirs them out of the nest where they lie dezing, flutters over them, to show them how they must use their wings, and then accustoms them to fly upon her wings till they have learned to fly upon their own. This, by the way, is an example to parents to train up their children to business, and not to indulge them in idleness and dissipation. God did this to Israel, when they were in love with slavery, and loath to leave it, God, by Moses, stirred them up to aspire after liberty, and many a time kept them from returning to the house of bondage again. He carried them out of Egypt, led them into the wilderness, and now at length had led them through it. The Lord alone did lead him, he needed not any assistance, nor did he take any to be a partner with him in the achievement; which was a good reason why they should serve the Lord only, and no other, so much as in partnership, much less in rivalry with him. There was no strange God with him to contribute to Israel's salvation, and therefore there would be none to share in Israel's homage and adoration, Ps. 81. 9.

3. The setting of them in a good land. This was done in part already, in the happy planting of the two tribes and a half, an earnest of what would speedily and certainly be done to the rest of the tribes. (1.) They were blessed with glorious victories over their enemies; (v. 13.) He made him ride on the high places of the earth; that is, he brought him up to the highest places in his service. He led him over the high places or strong holds that were kept against him; sat in ease and honour upon the fruitful hills of Canaan; in Egypt they looked mean, and were so, in poverty and disgrace; but in Canaan they looked great, and were so advanced and enriched, they rode in state, as a people whom the King of kings delighted to honour. (2.) With great plenty of all good things. Not only the ordinary increase of the field, but, which was uncommon, How he led him to the green pastures of the flinty rock. Which may refer either [1.] To their miraculous supply of fresh water out of the rock that followed them in the wilderness; which is called honey and oil, because the necessity they were reduced to, made it as sweet and acceptable as honey and oil at another time. Or, [2.] To the great abundance of honey and oil they should find in Canaan, even in the parts that were least fertile. The rocks of Canaan should yield a better increase than the fields and meadows of other countries. Other productions of Canaan are mentioned, v. 14. Such abundance, and such variety of wholesome food, (and every thing the best in its kind,) that every meal might be a feast if they pleased. Excellent bread made of the best corn, here called the kidneys of the wheat; (for a grain of wheat is not much unlike a kidney,) butter and milk in abundance; the flesh of cattle well fed; and for their drink, no worse than the pure blood of the grape. So indulgent a Father was God to them, and so kind a Benefactor. Ainsworth makes the plenty of good things in Canaan to be a figure of the fruitfulness of Christ's kingdom, and the heavenly comforts of his word and Spirit; for the children of his kingdom he has butter and milk, the sincere milk of the word, and strong meat for strong men, with the wine that makes glad the heart.

16. But Jeshurun waxed fat, and kicked; thou art waxen fat, thou art grown thick, thou art covered with fatness: then he forsook God which made him, and lightly esteemed the Rock of his salvation.

16. They provoked him to jealousy with strange gods, with abominations provoked they him to anger. 17. They sacrificed unto devils, not to God, to gods whom they knew not, to new gods that came newly up, whom your fathers feared not. 18. Of the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful, and hast forgotten God that formed thee.

We have here a description of the apostasy of Israel from God, which would shortly come to pass, and which already they had a disposition to. One would have thought that a people under so many obligations to their God, in duty, gratitude, and in interest, should never have turned from him; but alas! they turned aside quickly.
Here are two great instances of their wickedness, and each of them amounted to an apostasy from God:

1. Security and sensuality, pride and insolence, and the other common abuses of plenty and prosperity, v. 15. These people were called Joshurun, an upright people, so some; a seeing people, so others; but they soon lost the reputation both of their knowledge and of their righteousness; for, being well-fed, 1. They waxed fat, and grew thick, that is, they indulged themselves in all manner of luxury and gratifications of their appetites, as if they had had no care to maintain the body for the flesh, to fulfill the lusts of it. They grew fat, that is, they grew big and unwieldy, unmindful of business, and unfit for it; dull and stupid, careless and senseless; and this was the effect of their plenty.

Thus the prosperity of fools destroys them, Prov. 1. 32. Yet this was not the worst of it. They kicked: they grew proud and insolent, and lifted up the heel even against God himself, if God rebuked them, either by his prophets, or by his providence, they kicked against the good, as an untamed heifer, or a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke, and in their rage persecuted the prophets, and flew in the face of providence itself. And thus he forsook God that made him, (not paying due respects to his Creator, nor answering the ends of his creation,) and put an intolerable contempt upon the Rock of his salvation, as if he were not indebted to him for any past benefits, nor had any dependence upon him for the future. Those that make a God of themselves, and a god of their bellies, in pride and wantonness, and cannot bear to be told of it, certainly thereby forsake God, and show lightly he esteem him.

II. Idolatry was the great instance of their apostasy, and which the former led them to, as it made them sick of their religion, self-willed, and fond of change.

1. What sort of gods they chose and offered sacrifice to, when they forsook the God that made them, v. 16, 17. This aggravated their sin, that those very services which they should have done to the true God, they did, (1.) To strange gods, that could not pretend to have done them any kindness, or laid them under any obligation to them; gods that they had no knowledge of, nor could expect anything from. For, if we strongly apply to those who are called strange gods, because they were other than the one only true God to whom they were betrothed, and ought to have been faithful. (2.) To new gods, that came newly up; for even in religion, the antiquity of which is one of its honors, vain minds have strangely affected novelty, and in contempt of the Ancient of days, have been fond of new gods. A new god! can there be a more monstrous absurdity? When we find the god of the rest, we must ask for the good old way, Jer. 6. 16. It was true, their fathers had worshipped other gods, (Josh. 24. 2,) and perhaps it had been some little excuse if the children had returned to them; but to serve new gods whom their fathers feared not, and to like them the better for being new, was to open a door to endless idolatries. (3.) They were such as were no gods at all, but mere counterfeits and importunities, their idol-palaces, their inventions of fancies, and their images, the work of men's hands. Nay, (4.) They were devils. So far from being gods, fathers, and benefactors to mankind, they really were destroyers; so the word signifies; such as aimed to do mischief: if there were any spirits or invisible powers that possessed their idol-temples and images, they were evil spirits and malignant powers, whom yet they did not need to worship for fear they should hurt them, as they say the Indians do; for they that faithfully worship God, are out of the Devil's reach: nay, the Devil can destroy those only that sacrifice to him. How mad are idolaters, who forsake the Rock of salvation to run themselves upon the rock of perdition!

2. What a great affront this was to Jehovah their God.

(1.) It was justly interpreted a forgetting of him; (v. 18.) of the Rock that begat thee thou art unmindful. Mindfulness of God would prevent sin, but when the world is served and the flesh indulged, God is forgotten; and can any thing be more base and unworthy than to forget the God that is the Father of our being, by whom we subsist, and in whom we live and move? And see what comes of it, Isa. 17. 10, 11. Because thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the Rock of thy strength, though the strange slips be pleasant plants at first, yet the harvest at last will be a heav in the day of grief and of desperate sorrow. There is nothing got by forgetting God.

(2.) It was justly represented as an inexusable offence. They provoked him to jealousy and to anger, (v. 16.) for their idols were abominations to him. See here God's displeasure against idols, whether they be set up in the heart, or in the sanctuary. [1.] He is jealous of them, as rivals with him for the throne in the heart. [2.] He hates them, as enemies to his crown and government. [3.] He is, and will be, very angry with those that have any respect or affection for them. Those consider not what they do, that provoke God; for who knows the power of his anger?

19. And when the Lord saw it, he abhorred them, because of the provoking of his sons, and of his daughters. 20. And he said, I will hide my face from them, I will see what their end shall be: for they are a very froward generation, children in whom is no faith. 21. They have moved me to jealousy with that which is not God; they have provoked me to anger with their vanities: and I will move them to jealousy with those which are not a people; I will provoke them to anger with a foolish nation. 22. For a fire is kindled in mine anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains. 23. I will heap mischief upon them: I will spend mine arrows upon them. 24. They shall be burnt with hunger, and devoured with burning heat, and with bitter destruction: I will also send the teeth of beasts upon them, with the poison of serpents of the dust. 25. The sword without, and terror within, shall destroy both the young man and the virgin, the sucking also, with the man of gray hairs.

The method of this song follows the method of the predictions in the foregoing chapter, and therefore, after the revolt of Israel from God, described in the foregoing verses, here follow immediately the resolves of divine Justice concerning them; we deceive ourselves, if we think that God will thus be mocked by a foolish faithless people that play fast and loose with him.

I. He had delighted in them, but now he would reject them with detestation and disdain, v. 19. When the Lord saw their treachery and folly, and base ingratitude, he abhorred them, he despised them
So some read it. Sin makes us odious in the sight of the holy God; and no sinners are so loathsome to him, as those that he has called, and that have called themselves, his sons and his daughters, and yet have been provoking him.

II. He had given them the tokens of his presence with them, and his favour to them; but now he would withdraw, and hide his face from them, v. 20. His hiding his face signifies his great displeasure; they had turned the back upon God, and new God would turn his back upon them; (compare Jer. 18. 17. with Jer. 2. 27.) but here it denotes also the slowness of God's proceedings against them in a way of judgment. They begin in their apostasy with omissions of good, and so proceeded to commissions of evil. In like manner, God will first suspend his favours, and let them see what the issue of that will be, what a friend they lose when they provoke God to depart, and will try whether that will bring them to repentance. Thus we find God hiding himself, as it were, in expectation of the event, Isa. 57. 17. To justify himself in leaving them, he shows that they were such as there was no dealing with; for, 1. They were froward, and a people that could not be pleased; or, obstinate in sin, and that could not be convinced and reclaimed. 2. They were faithless, and a people that could not be trusted. When he had given them many monuments, he, covertly, said, Surely they are children that will not lie, (Isa. 63. 8.) but when they proved otherwise, children in whom is no faith, they deserved to be abandoned, and that the God of truth should have no more to do with them.

III. He had done every thing to make them easy and to please them, but now he would do that against them, which should be most vexatious to them. The people profaned him, and the land corrupts her; the people were abominable in his sight, and the land was an abomination to him, Jer. 2. 13. 1. They had provoked God with despicable deities, which were not gods at all, but vanities; creatures of their own imagination, that could not pretend either to merit, or to repay, the respects of their worshippers; the more vain and vile the gods were, after which they went a whoring, the greater was the offence to that great and good God whom they set them up in competition with, and contradiction to. This put two great evils into their idolatry, Jer. 2. 13. 2. God would therefore plague them with despicable enemies, that were worthless, weak, and inconsiderable, and not deserving the name of a people, which was a great mortification to them, and aggravated the oppressions they groaned under. The more base the people were that tyrannised over them, the more barbarous they would be; none so insolent as a beggar on horseback, and so devoid of all contempt as to Israel, who had so often triumphed over great and mighty nations, to be themselves trampled upon by the weak and foolish, and to come under the curse of Canaan who was to be a servant of servants. But God can make the weakest instrument a scourge to the strongest sinner; and they that by sin insult their mighty Creator, are justly insulted by the meanest of their fellow-creatures. This was re- membered to the Israelites in the days of the other enemies, when they were sometimes oppressed by the very Canaanites themselves, whom they had subdued, as Judges 4. 2. But the apostle applies it to the conversion of the Gentiles, who had been not a people in covenant with God, and foolish in divine things, yet were brought into the church sorely to the grief of the Jews, who, upon all occasions, showed a great indignation at it, which was both their sin and their punishment, as envy always is, Rom. 10. 19.

IV. He had planted them in a good land, and replenished them with all good things; but now he would strip the m of all their comforts, and bring them to ruin. The judgments threatened for their sins, v. 22-25. 1. The fire of God's anger shall consume them, v. 22. Are they proud of their plenty? It shall burn up the increase of the earth. Are they confident of their strength? It shall destroy the very foundations of their mountains; there is no fence against the judgments of God, when they come with commission to lay all waste. It shall burn to the lowest hell, that is, it shall bring them to the utmost depth of calamity. But the vials would be but a faint resemblance of the complete and endless misery of sinners in the other world. The damnation of hell (as our Saviour calls it) is the fire of God's anger, fastening upon the guilty conscience of a sinner, to its inexpressible and everlast- ing torment, Isa. 30. 33. 2. The arrows of God's judgments shall be spent upon them, till his quiver is quite exhausted, v. 23. The judgments of God, like arrows, fly swiftly, (Ps. 64. 7.) reaching those at a distance who flatter themselves with hopes of escaping them, Ps. 21. 8. 12. They come from an unseen hand, but wound mortally, for God never misses his mark, 1 Kings 22. 34. The particular judgments here threatened, are, (1.) Fanime; they shall be burnt, or parched, with hunger. (2.) Pestilence and other diseases, here called burning heat, Isa. 30. 28. (3.) The insults of the inferior creatures; the teeth of beasts, and the poison of serpents, v. 24. (4.) War, and the fatal consequences of it, v. 25. [1.] Perpetual frights. When the sword is without, there cannot but be terror within; (2 Cor. 7. 5.) without were fightings, within were fears; those who cast off the fear of God, are justly exposed to the fear of enemies. [2.] Universal deaths; the sword of the Lord, when it comes upon the land, will destroy them in destruction; neither the strength of the young man, nor the beauty of the virgin, nor the innocence of the suckling, nor the gravity or infirmity of the man of gray hairs, will be their security from the sword when it devours one as well as another. Such devastation does war make, especially when it is pushed on by men as ravenous as wild beasts, and as venomous as serpents, v. 24. See here what miseries sin brings; and reckon those fools that make a mock at it.

26. I said, I would scatter them into corners, I would make the remembrance of them to cease from among men; we were not afraid. We feared the wrath of the enemy, lest their adversaries should behave themselves strangely, and lest they should say, Our hand is high, and the Lord hath not done all this. For they are a nation void of counsel, neither is there any understanding in them. Oh that they were wise, that they understood this, that they would consider their latter end! 30. How should one chase a thousand, and two put ten thousand to flight, except their Rock had sold them, and the Lord had shut them up? 31. For their rock is not as our Rock, even our enemies themselves being judges. For their vine is of the vine of Sodom, and of the fields of Goromorrah: their grapes are grapes of gall, their clusters are bitter: their wine is the poison of dragons, and the cruel venom of asps. 34. Is not this laid up in store with me, and sealed up among my treasures? 35. To me belongeth vengeance, and recompense; their foot shall slide in due time: for the day of their calamity is at hand, and the things that shall come upon them make haste. 36. For the Lord shall judge his people, and repent himself for his servants, when he seeth that their power is gone, and there is none shut up or left. 37. And he shall say, Where are their gods, their rock in whom they trusted? 38. Which did eat the fat of their sacrifices, and drank the wine of their drink-offerings? let them rise up and help you, and be your protection.

After many terrible threatenings of deserved wrath and vengeance, we have here surprising intimations of mercy, undeserved mercy, which relieves against judgment, and by which it appears that God has no pleasure in the death of sinners, but would rather they should turn and live. 1. In the place of God of Israel, there will not make a full end of them, v. 26-28. It cannot be denied, but that they deserved to be utterly ruined, and that their remembrance should be made to cease from among men; so that the name of an Israelite should never be known but in history; for they were a nation void of counsel, (v. 28.) the most sottish inclement people that ever were: that would not believe the glory of God, though they saw it, nor entertain his loving kindness, though they tasted it, and lived upon it. Of them who could cast off such a God, such a law, such a covenant, for vain and dunghill-deities, it might truly be said, There is no understanding in them. 2. It had been an easy thing with God to ruin them and blot out the remembrance of them; when the greatest part of them were cut off by the sword, it was but scattering the remnants into such remote obscure corners of the earth, where they should never have been heard of more, and the thing had been done. See Ezek. 5. 12. God can destroy those that are most strongly fortified, disperse those that are most closely united, and bury those names in perpetual oblivion, that have been most celebrated. 3. Justice demanded it. I said I would scatter them. It is fit they should be cut off from the earth, that have cut themselves off from their God; why should they not be dealt with according to their deserts? 4. Wisdom considered the pride and insolence of the enemy, which would take occasion from the ruin of a people that had been so dear to God, and for whom he had done such great things, to reflect upon God, and to imagine that because they had got the better of Israel, they had carried the day against the God of Israel. The adversaries will say, Our hand is high; high indeed, when it has been too high for those whom God himself fought for; nor will they consider that the Lord has done all this, but will dream that they have done it in despite of him, as if the God of Israel were as weak and impotent, and as easily run down, as the pretended deities of other nations. 5. In consideration of this, Mercy prevails for the sparing of a remnant, and the saving of that unworthy people from utter ruin. I feared the wrath of the enemy. It is an expression after the manner of men; it is certain that God fears no man’s wrath, but he acted in this matter as if he had feared it. Those few good people in Israel, that had a concern for the honour of God’s name, fear the wrath of the enemy in this instance more than any other, as Joshua, (ch. 7. 9.) and David often; and because they feared it, God himself said to do it. He needed not Moses to plead it with him, but reminded himself of it, What will the Egyptians say? Let all those whose hearts tremble for the ark of God and his Israel, comfort themselves with this, that God will work for his own name, and will not suffer it to be profaned and polluted: how much soever we desire to be disgraced, God will never disgrace the throne of glory.

II. In concern for their welfare, he earnestly desires their conversion; and in order to that, their serious consideration of their latter end, v. 29. Observe, 1. Though God had pronounced them a foolish people, and of no understanding, yet he wishes they were wise, as Deut. 5. 29. O that there were such a heart in them! and Ps. 94. 8. Ye fools, when will ye understand a thing? when will ye cease to be wise? when will ye take your窍t? when will you learn good? and as in the latter days: it may be applied more generally. We ought to understand (1.) They have as yet no concern for their souls and the future state of the soul. To think of death as our removal from a world of sense to a world of spirits; the final period of our state of trial and probation, and our entrance upon an unchangeable state of recompense and retribution. (2.) The latter end of sin, and the future state of those that live and die in it. O that men would consider the happiness they will lose, and the misery, they will certainly plunge themselves into, if they will not repent of their sins! What will be in the end thereof, Jer. 5. 31. Jerusalem forgot this, and therefore came down wonderfully, Lam. 1. 9.

III. He calls to mind the great things he had done for them formerly, as a reason why he should not quite cast them off. This seems to be the meaning of that, (v. 30, 31.) "How should one Israelite have been too hard for a thousand Canaanites, as they have been many a time, but that God, who is greater than all gods, fought for them?" And so it corresponds with that, Isa. 63. 10, 11. When he was turned to be their enemy, as here, and fought against them for their sins, then he remembered the days of old, saying, Where is he that brought them out of the sea? So here, his arm begins to awake a sin the days of old against the wrath of the enemy, Ps. 138. 7. There was a time when the enemies of Israel were sold by their own rock, that is, their own idol-gods, who could not help them, but betray them, because Jehovah, the God of Israel, had shut them up as sheep for the slaughter. For the enemies themselves must own that their gods were a very unequal match for the God of Israel. For their vine is of the vine of Sodom, v. 32. This must be meant of the enemies of Israel, as there is no tell so easily before the sword of Israel, because they were ripe for ruin, and the measure of their iniquity was full. Yet these verses may be understood of the strange prevalency of the enemies of Israel against them, when God made use of them as the rod of his anger, Isa. 10. 5, 6. "How should one Canaanite chase a thousand Canaanites, (as it is threatened against those that trust to Egypt and to their help, Isa. 30. 17.) One thousand and shall flee at the rebuke of one, " unless Israel’s Rock had deserted them and given them up?" For otherwise, however they may impute their power to their gods, (Hab. 1. 11.) as the Philistines imputed their victory to Dagon; it is certain, the enemies’ rock could not have prevailed against the Rock of Israel; God would soon have subdued their enemies, (Ps. 51. 14.) but that the wickedness of Israel deceived them into their own hands. For their vine, that is, Israel's, is of the vine of Sodom, v. 32, 33. They were planted a choice vine, wholly a right seed, but by sin were become the degenerate plant of a strange vine, (Jer. 2. 21.) and not only transcribed the impiety of Sodom, but out-did it, Ezek. 16. 48. God called them his vineyard, his pleasant plant, Isa. 5.

7. But their fruits were, 1. Very offensive and displeasing to God, bitter as gall. 2. Very mulish, and presumptuous, like to another, like the cruel venom of asphs. Some understand this of their punishment; their sin would be bitterness in the latter end, (2 Sam. 2. 26.) it would bite like a serpent and sting like an adder, Job. 20. 14. Prov. 32. 32.

4. He resolves upon the destruction of those at last, that had been their persecutors and oppressors. When the cup of trembling goes round, the King of Babylon shall pledge it at last, Jer. 51. 22, 23. The day is coming, when the judgment that began and ungodly, 1 Pet. 4. 17, 18.

9. God will in due time bring down the church's enemies.

1. In displeasure against their wickedness, which he takes notice of, and keeps an account of, v. 34, 35. Is not this implacable fury of their's against Israel, laid up in store; and do they reckon on it for vengeance? Some understand it of the sin of Israel; especially their persecuting the prophets, which was laid up in store against them from the blood of righteous Abel, Matth. 23. 25. However, it teaches us, that the wickedness of the wicked is all laid up in store with God. (1.) He observes it, Ps. 90. 8. He knows both what the vine is, and what the greatest Israel has the judges out of the hands of the sinners, and what the actions of life. (2.) He keeps a record of it, both in his own omniscience, and in the sinner's conscience; and this is sealed up among his treasures, which denotes both safety and secrecy; these books cannot be lost; nor will they be opened till the great day. See Hos. 13. 12. (3.) He often delays the punishment of sin for a great while, it is laid up in store, till the measure be full, and the day of divine patience expired. See Job 21. 28, 29. (4.) There is no day of reckoning coming, when all the treasures of guilt and wrath will be broken up, and the sins of sinners shall surely find them out. [1.] The thing itself will certainly be done, for the Lord is a God to whom vengeance belongs, and therefore he will repay, Isa. 59. 18. This is quoted by the apostle, to show the severity of God's wrath against these that revolt from the faith of Christ, Heb. 10. 30. [2.] It will be done in due time in the best time; nay, it will be done in a short time. The day of their calamity is at hand; and though it may seem to tarry, it lingers not, it slumber not, but makes haste. In one hour shall the judgment of Babylon come.

2. He will do it in commotion to his own people, who, though they had greatly provoked him, yet stood in relation to him, and therefore was very appeased to his mercy, v. 36. The Lord shall judge his people, that is, judge for them against their enemies, plead their cause, and break the yoke of oppression under which they had long groaned, revenging himself for his servants; not changing his mind, but changing his way, and fighting for them, as he had fought against them, when he sees that their flower is gone. This plainly points at the deliverances God wrought upon Israel, the jubilee of the Jews, the deliverance of those to whom he had sold them for their sins. See Judg. 2. 11, 12. And how his soul was grieved for the misery of Israel, Judg. 10. 16. And this when they were reduced to the last extremity; God helped them when they could not help themselves; for there was none shut up or left; that is, none that dwelt either in cities or walled towns, in which they were shut up, nor any that dwelt in scattered houses in the country, in which they were left at a distance from neighbours. Note, God's time to appear for the deliverance of his people, is, when things are at the worst with them. God tries his people's faith, and stirs up prayer, by letting things go to the worst, and then magnifies his own power, and fills the faces of his enemies with shame, and the hearts of his people with so much the greater joy, by rescuing them out of extremity, as brands out of the burning.

3. He will do it in contempt, and to the reproach of the idol-gods, v. 37, 38. Where are their gods? Two ways it may be understood; (1.) That God would do that for his people, which the idols they served, could not do for them. They had forsaken God, and been very liberal in their sacrifices to idols; had brought to their altars the fat of their sacrifices, and the wine of their drink-offerings, which they supposed their deities to feed upon, and on which they feasted with them. "Now," says God, "will these gods you have made your court to, at so great an expense, help you in your distress, and spare you for all your solemn sacrifices? Go to you to the gods you have served, and let them deliver you," Judg. 10. 14. This is intended to convince them of their folly in forsaking a God that could help them, for those that could not, and so bring them to repentance, and qualify them for deliverance. When the austerity rests shall follow after her lovers, and not overtake them, pray other gods, and receive no kindness from them, then shall you know I will go and return to my first husband, Hos. 2. 7. See Isa. 16. 12. Jer. 2. 27, 28. Or, (2.) That God would do that against his enemies, which the idols they had served, could not save them from. Semacherieb and Nebuchadnezzar boldly challenged the God of Israel to deliver his worshippers, (Isa. 37. 10. Dan. 3. 13.) and he did deliver them, to the confusion of their enemies. But the God of Israel challenged Bel and Nebu to deliver their worshippers; to avoid their up and their destruction, (Isa. 47. 12, 13.) but they were so far from helping them, that they themselves, that is, their images, which was all that was of them, went into captivity, Isa. 46. 1, 2. Note, These who trust to any rock but God, will find it sand, in the day of their distress; it will fail them then, when they most need it.

39. See now that I, even I, am he, and there is no god with me: I kill, and I make alive: I wound, and I heal: neither is there any that can deliver out of my hand. 40 For I lift up my hand to heaven, and say, I live for ever. 41. If I whet my glittering sword, and mine hand take hold on judgment, I will render vengeance to mine enemies, and will reward them that hate me. 42. I will make mine arrows drunk with blood, and my sword shall devour flesh; and that with the blood of the slain and of the captives, from the beginning of revenges upon the enemy. 43. Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people; for he will avenge the blood of his servants, and will render vengeance to his adversaries, and will be merciful unto his land, and to his people.

This conclusion of the song speaks three things.
1. Glory to God, v. 39. See now upon the whole matter, that I, even I, am he. Learn this from the destruction of idolaters, and the inability of their idols to help them. The great God here demands the glory. Thus Moses concludes with that name of God, by which he was first made to know him, (Exod. 3. 14.) "I am that I am, and have been, and I am what I will be; which we know very well to be true. And I will do all that I have because that I will be, that I have promised to be, that I have threatened to be; all shall find me true to both." The Targum of Uzzielides paraphrases it thus, When the word of the Lord shall reveal himself to redeem his people, he shall say to all people, See, that I am now what I am, and have been, and I am what I will be; which we know very well to be true. And I will do all that I have because that I will be, that I have promised to be, that I have threatened to be; all shall find me true to both.

III. Comfort to his own people, v. 43. Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people. He concludes the song with words of joy; for in God's Israel there is a remnant whose end will be peace; God's people will rejoice at last, will rejoice eternally. Three things are here mentioned as matter of joy. 1. The enlarging of the church's bounds; the apostle applies the first words of this verse to the conversion of the Gentiles, Rom. 15. 10, Rejoice, O ye nations, with his people. See what the grace of God does in the conversion of souls, it brings them to rejoice with the people of God; for true religion brings us acquainted with true joy; so great a mistake are they under, that think it tends to make men melancholy. 2. The avenging of the church's controversies upon her adversaries. He will make inquisition for the blood of his servants, and it shall appear how precious it is to him, for they that spilt it, shall have blood given them to drink. 3. The mercy God has in store for his church, and for all that belong to it, he will be merciful to his land and to his people, that is, to all every where, that fear and serve him. Whatever judgments are brought upon sinners, it shall go well with the people of God; in this let Jews and Gentiles rejoice together.

44. And Moses came and spake all the words of this song in the ears of the people, he, and Hoshea the son of Nun. 45. And Moses made an end of speaking all these words to all Israel: 46. And he said unto them, Set your hearts unto all the words which I testify among you this day, which ye shall command your children to observe to do, all the words of this law. 47. For it is not a vain thing for you; because it is your life: and through this thing ye shall prolong your days in the land, whither ye go over Jordan to possess it. 48. And the Lord spake unto Moses that self-same day, saying, 49. Get thee up into this mountain Abarim, unto mount Nebo, which is in the land of Moab, that is over against Jericho; and behold the land of Canaan, which I give unto the children of Israel for a possession: 50. And die in the mount whither thou goest up, and be gathered unto thy people; as Aaron thy brother died in mount Hor, and was gathered unto his people: 51. Because ye trespassed against me among the children of Israel at the waters of Meribah-Kadesh in the wilderness of Zin; because ye sanctified me not in the midst of the children of Israel. 52. Yet thou shalt see the land before thee; but thou shalt not go thither unto the land which I give the children of Israel.

Here is, I.

The solemn delivery of this song to the children of Israel, v. 44, 45. Moses spake it to as many as could hear him, while Joshua, in another assembly, at the same time, delivered it to as many as his voice would reach. To transmit it to them from the mouth of both their governors, Moses, who was laying down the government, and Joshua, who was taking it up, they would see they were both in the same mind, and that though they changed their commander, there was no change in the divine command; Joshua, as well as Moses, would be a witness against them, if ever they forsake God.

For it was earnest charge to them to mind these and all the rest of the good words that Moses had said unto them. How earnestly does he long after them all, how very desirous that the word of God might make deep and lasting impressions upon them, how jealous over them with a godly jealousy, lest they should at any time let slip these great things; I. The duties he charges upon them, are, (1.) Carefully to attend to these themselves; "Set your hearts both on this word, and commit them to memory;" (2.) Faithfully to transmit these things to those that should come after them: "What interest you have in your children, or influence upon them, use it for this purpose; and command them, (as Abraham did, Gen. 18. 19.) to observe to do all the words of this law." They that are good themselves, cannot but desire that their children may be so likewise; and that posterity may keep up religion in their day, and the entail of it may not be cut off. 2. The arguments he uses to persuade them to make religion their business, and to persevere in it, are, (1.) The vast importance of the things yourselves which he had charged upon them, v. 57, 47, "It is not a vain thing, because it is your life. It is not an indifferent thing, but of absolute necessity; it is not a trifle, but a matter of consequence, a matter of life and death; mind it, and you are made for ever; neglect it, and you are for ever undone." O that men were but fully persuaded of this, that religion is their life, even the life of their souls! (2.) The vast advantage would be of them: "To them that take this thing to heart, ye shall prolong your days in Canaan, which is a typical promise of that eternal life, which Christ has assured us they shall enter into, that keep the commandments of God, Matt. 19. 17.

III. Orders given to Moses concerning his death. Now that this renowned witness for God has finished his testimony, he must go up to mount Nebo and die; in the prophecy of Christ's two witnesses there is a plain allusion to Moses and Elias, (Rev. 11. 6.) and perhaps their removal, being by martyrdom, is no less glorious than the removal either of Moses or Elias. Orders were given to Moses that selfsame day, v. 48. Now that he had done his work, why should he desire to live a day longer? He had indeed formerly prayed that he might go over Jordan, but now he is entirely satisfied, and, as God had hidden him, with no more of that matter. 1. God here reminds him of the sin he had been guilty of, for which he was excluded Canaan, (v. 51.) that he might the more patiently bear the rebuke because he had sinned; and that now he might renew his sorrow for that unadvised word, for it is good for the best of men to die repenting of the inimities they are conscious to themselves of. It was an omission that was thus displeasing to God; he did not send in God, as he ought to have done, before the children of Israel, he did not carry himself with a due decorum, in executing the orders he had then received. 2. He reminds him of the death of his brother Aaron, (v. 50.) to make his own the more familiar, and the less formidable. Note, It is a great encouragement to us, when we die, to think of our friends that have gone before us through that darksome valley, especially of Christ, our elder Brother and great High Priest.

3. He sends him up to a high hill from thence to take a view of the land of Canaan, and then die, v. 49, 50. The remembrance of his sin might make death terrible, but the sight God gave him of Canaan, took off the terror of it, as it was a token of God's being reconciled to him, and a plain indication to him, that though his sin shut him out of the earthly Canaan, yet he should not deprive him of that better country, which in this world can only be seen, and that with an eye of faith. Note, Those may die with comfort and ease whenever God calls for them, (notwithstanding the sins they remember against themselves,) who have a believing prospect and a well-grounded hope of eternal life beyond death.

CHAP. XXXIII.

Yet Moses has not done with the children of Israel; he seemed to have taken final leave of them in the close of the foregoing chapter, but still he has something more to say. He had preached them a farewell sermon, a very copious and pathetic discourse. After sermon he had given them the law, but has now to send them a final farewell, and to address them in the name of the Lord, and to leave them. 1. He pronounces them all blessed, in what God had done for them, and this is done slowly, methodically; in giving them his law, v. 2. 5. He pronounces a blessing upon each tribe, which is both a prayer for, and a prophecy of, their fertility. 1. Reuben, v. 6. 2. Judah, v. 7. 3. Levi, v. 8. 11. 4. Benjamin, v. 12. 5. Joseph, v. 13. 17. 6. Zebulun and Issachar, v. 18. 19. 7. Gad, v. 20. 21. 8. Dan, v. 22. 9. Naphtali, v. 23. 10. Asher, v. 24. 25. II. He pronounces them all in general blessed, upon the account of what God would be to them, and do for them, if they were obedient, v. 26. 29.

1. AND this is the blessing, wherewith Moses the man of God blessed the children of Israel before his death. 2. And he said, The Lord came from Sinai, and rose up from Seir unto them; he shined forth from mount Paran, and he came with ten thousands of saints: from his right hand went a fiery law for them. 3. Yea, he loved the people: all his saints are in thy hand: and they sat down at thy feet; every one shall receive of thy words. 4. Moses commanded us a law, even the inheritance of the congregation of thy words. 5. And he was king in Jeshurun, when the heads of the people and the tribes of Israel were gathered together.

The first verse is the title of the chapter: it is a blessing. In the foregoing chapter he had thun- dered against the Lord against him for their sin; it was a chapter, like Ezekiel's roll, full of lamentation, and mourning, and woe. Now to soften that, and that he might not seem to part in anger, he here subjoins a blessing; and leaves his peace, which should descend and rest upon all those that were the sons of peace. Thus Christ's last work on earth was to bless his disciples, (Luke 24. 50.) like Moses here, in token of parting friends. Moses blessed them, I. As a prophet; a man of God. Note. It is a very desirable thing to have an interest in the prayers of those that have an interest in heaven; it is a prophet's reward. In this blessing Moses not only expresses his good wishes to this people, but by the spirit of prophecy fore-tells things to come concerning them. 2. As a parent to Israel; for so good princes are to their subjects. Jacob upon his death-bed blessed his sons, (Gen. 49. 1.) in conformity to whose example Moses bestows kindness upon them, to show that though they had been very provoking, yet the entail of the blessing was not cut off. The doing this immediately before his death, would not only be the more likely to leave an impression upon them, but would be an indication of the great good-will of Moses to them, that he desired their happiness, though he must die and not share in it.

He begins his blessing with a lofty description of the glorious appearances of God to them in giving them the law, and the great advantage they had by it.

I. There was a visible and illustrious discovery of the divine majesty; enough to convince and for ever silence atheists and infidels, to awaken and affect those that were most stupid and careless, and make them all secret inclinations to other gods, v. 1. 1. His appearance was glorious: he shined forth like the sim when he goes forth in his strength. Even Seir and Paran, two mountains at some distance, were illuminated by the divine glory which appeared on mount Sinai, and reflected some of the rays of it; so bright was the appearance, and so much taken notice of by the adjacent countries. To this the prophet alludes, to set forth the wonders of the divine providence, Hab. 3. 3, 4. Ps. 18. 7. 9. The Jerusalem Targum has a strange gloss upon this, that, "when God came down to give the law, he offered it on mount Seir to the Edomites, but they refused it; because they found in it, Thou shalt not kill. Then he offered it on mount Paran to the Ishmaelites, but they also refused it; because they found in it, Thou shalt not steal; and then he came to mount Sinai and offered it to Israel, and they said, All that the Lord shall say, we will do." I would not have transcribed so groundless a conceit but for the antiquity of it. 2. His attendance was glorious; he came with his holy myriads, as Enoch had long since foretold he should come in the last day to judge the world, Jude 14. These were the angels, those chariots of God, in the midst of which the Lord was, on that holy place, Ps. 68. 17. They attended the divine majesty, and were employed as his ministers in the solemnities of the day. Hence the law is said to be given by the disposition of angels, Acts 7. 53. Heb. 2. 2.

II. He gave them his law, which is, 1. Called a fiery law, because it was given them out of the midst of the fire, (Deut. 4. 33.) and because it works like fire; it is exceedingly fierce, and burns up the dress of corruption; if it be rejected, it hardens, scars, torments, destroys. The spirit descended in claven tongues as of fire; for the gospel also is a fiery law. 2. It is said to go from his right hand, either because he wrote it on tables of stone; or, denoting the power and energy of the law, and the divine strength that goes along with it, that it may not remain as a gift unexpressed or unpresented. Or, it was an instance of the special kindness he had for them.

Yea, he loved the people, (v. 3.) and therefore, though it was a fiery law, yet it is said to go for them, (v. 2.) that is, in favour to them. Note, The law of God written in the heart, is a certain evidence of the love of God shed abroad there: we must reckon God's law one of the gifts of his grace. Yea, he loved the people, or laid them in his bosom; so the word signifies, which denotes not only the dearest love, but the most tender and careful protection. All his saints were in his hand. Some understand it particularly of his supporting them and preserving them alive at mount Sinai, when the terror was so great, that Moses himself quaked; they heard the voice of God and lived, ch. 4. 33. Or, it denotes the security of all his people by his law; he moulded and managed them as the potter does the clay. Or, they were in his hand to be covered and protected, used and dispensed of, as the seven stars were in the hand of Christ, Rev. 1. 16. Note, God has all his saints in his hands; and though there are ten thousands of his saints, (v. 2.) yet his hand, with which he measures the waters, is large enough, and strong enough, to hold them all, and we may be sure that none can fluck them out of his hand, John 10. 28. III. He disposed them to receive the law which he gave them; they sat down at thy feet, as scholars at the feet of their master, in token of reverence, in attendance and humble submission to what is taught; so Israel sat at the foot of mount Sinai, and promised to hear and do whatever God should say. They were forewarned of it; the dreadful thing was made known to them, namely, By the terrors of mount Sinai, which greatly humbled them for the present, Exod. 20. 19. Every one then stood ready to receive God's words, and did so again when the law was publicly read to them, as Josh. 8. 34. It is a great privilege when we have heard the words of God, to have an opportunity of hearing them again, John 17. 26, I have declared unto thee, and will declare it. So Israel not only had received the law, but should still receive it by their prayers, and other lively oracles.

The people are taught, (v. 4, 5.) in gratitude for the law of God, always to keep up an honourable remembrance both of the law itself, and of Moses by whom it was given. Two of the Chaldee paraphrasts read it, The children of Israel said, Moses commanded us a law, and the mount Sinai to call them; and as soon as a child was able to speak, his father was obliged to teach him these words; Moses commanded us a law, even the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob. 1. They are taught to speak with great respect of the law, and to call it, the inheritance of the congregation of Jacob. They looked upon it, (1.) As peculiar to them, and that by which they were distinguished from other nations, who neither had the knowledge of it, (Ps. 147. 20.) nor, if they had, were under those obligations to observe it that Israel were under: and therefore (says Bishop Patrick) "when the Jews conquered any country, they did not force any to embrace the law of Moses, but only to submit to the seven precepts of Noah." (2.) As entitled upon them; for so in-heritances are to be transmitted to their posterity. And, (3.) As their wealth and true treasure. Those that enjoy the word of God and the means of grace, have reason to say, We have a goodly heritage. He is indeed a rich man, in whom the word of Christ dwells richly. Perhaps the law is called their inheritance, because it was given them with their inheritance, and was so annexed to it, that the forsaking of the law would be a forfeiture of the inheritance. See Ps. 119. 111.

2. They are taught to speak with great respect of Moses; and they were the more obliged to keep up his name, because he had not provided for the keeping of it up in his family; his posterity was... never called the sons of Moses, as the priests were, the sons of Aaron. (1.) They must own Moses a great benefactor to their nation, in that he commanded them the law; for though it came from the hand of God, it went through the hand of Moses. (2.) He was king in Jeshurun. Having commanded them the law, as long as he lived, he took care to see it observed and put in execution; and they were very happy in having such a king, who ruled them, and went in and out before them at all times, but did in a special manner look great, when the heads of the people were gathered together in parliament, as it were, and Moses was president among them. Some understand this of God himself; he did then declare himself their King, when he gave them the law, and he continued so, as long as they were Jeshurun, an upright people, and till they rejected him, 1 Sam. 12, 12. But it seems rather to be understood of Moses. A good government is a great blessing to any people, and what they have reason to be very thankful for; and that constitution is very happy, which, as Israel's, which, as our's, divides the power between the king in Jeshurun and the heads of the tribes, when they are gathered together.

6. Let Reuben live, and not die; and let not his men be few. 7. And this is the blessing of Judah: and he said, Hear, Lord, the voice of Judah, and bring him unto his people: let his hands be sufficient for him; and be thou a help to him from his enemies.

Here is,
I. The blessing of Reuben. Though Reuben had lost the honour of his birthright, yet Moses begins with him; for we should not insult over them that are disgraced, nor desire to perpetuate marks of infamy upon any, though ever so justly fastened at first, v. 6. Moses desires and foretells, I. The preserving of this tribe, though a frontier tribe on the other side Jordan, yet, "Let it live, and not be either ruined by its neighbours, or lost among them." And perhaps he refers to those chosen men of that tribe, who, having had their lot assigned them already, left their families in it, and were now ready to go over armed before their brethren, Numb. 32, 27. "Let them be protected in this noble expedition, and their heads covered in the day of battle." II. The increase of this tribe, Let not his men be few; or, Let his men be a number, "Let it be a numerous tribe; though their otherhonours be lost, so that they shall not excel, yet let them multiply." Let Reuben live, and not die, though his men be few; so Bishop Patrick thinks it may be rendered, "Though he must not expect to flourish, (Gen. 49, 4.) yet let him not perish. All the Chaldee paraphrases refer this to the other world; Let Reuben live above the priesthood. The blessing on this, as the second death: so Onkelos. Let Reuben live in this world, and not die that death which the wicked die in the world to come: so Jonathan and the Jerusalem Targum.

II. The blessing of Judah; which is put before Levi, because our Lord sprang out of Judah, and (as Dr. Lightfoot says) because of the dignity of the king, who was above the priesthood. The blessing (v. 7) may refer, either, 1. To the whole tribe in general. Moses prays for, and prophesies the great prosperity of that tribe. That God would hear his prayers, (see an instance, 2 Chron. 13, 14, 15,) settle him in his lot, prosper him in all his affairs, and give him victory over his enemies. It is taken for granted, that the tribe of Judah would be both a ruling tribe and an active tribe. "Lord," says Moses, "hear his prayers, and give success to all his undertakings; let his hands be sufficient for him, both in husbandry and in war." The voice of prayer should always be attended with the hand of endowment, and then we may expect prosperity, Or. 2. It may refer in particular to David, as a type of Christ; that God would hear his prayers, Ps. 20, 1. (and Christ was heard always, John 11, 42.) that he would give him victory over his enemies, and success in his great undertakings. See Ps. 89, 26, &c. And that prayer that God would bring him to his people, seems to refer to Jacob's prophecies concerning Shiloh, That to him should the gathering of the people be, Gen. 49, 10.

The tribe of Simeon is omitted in the blessing, because Jacob had left it under a brand, and it had never done any thing, as Levi had done, to retrieve its honour. It was lessened in the wilderness more than any other of the tribes, and Simeon, who was so notoriously guilty in the matter of Peor, but the other day, was of that tribe. Or, because the lot of Simeon was an appanage to that of Judah, that tribe is included in the blessing of Judah. Some copies of the LXX join Simeon with Reuben, Let Reuben live and not die; and let Simeon be many in number.

8. And of Levi he said, Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with thy holy one, whom thou didst prove at Massah, and with whom thou didst strive at the waters of Meribah; 9. Who said unto his father and to his mother, I have not seen him; neither did he acknowledge his brethren, nor knew his own children: for they have observed thy word, and kept thy covenant. 10. They shall teach Jacob thy judgments, and Israel thy law: they shall put incense before thee, and whole burnt-sacrifice upon thine altar.

11. Bless, Lord, his substance, and accept the work of his hands: smite through the loins of them that rise against him, and of them that hate him, that they rise not again.

Moses is large in blessing the tribe of Levi, not so much because it was his own tribe, (for he takes no notice of his relations to it,) as because it was God's tribe. The blessing of Levi has reference, I. To the High Priest, here called God's holy one, (v. 8.) because his office was holy, in token of which, Holiness to the Lord was written upon his forehead. 1. He seems to acknowledge, that God might justly have displaced Aaron and his seed, for his sin at Meribah, Numb. 20, 12. So many understand it. It is rather probable to me, that, on the contrary, he pleads with God for the sound and faithfulness of Aaron, and his boldness in stemming the tide of the people's murmurings at the other Meribah, (Exod. 17, 7.) which might be very remarkable, and which God might have an eye to in conferring the priesthood upon him, though no mention is made of it there. All the Chaldee paraphrases agree, that it was a trial in which he was found to be perfect and faithful, and stood in the trial; therefore not that, Numb. 20, 2. He prays that the office of the High Priest might ever remain, Let thy Thummim and thy Urim be with him. It was given him for some eminent piece of service, as appears, (Mal. 2, 5.) "Lord, let it never be taken from him." Notwithstanding this blessing, the Urim and Thummim were lost in the captivity, and never restored under the second temple; but it has its full accomplishment in Jesus Christ, God's Holy One, and our great High Priest, of whom Aaron was a type: with him who had lain in the Father's bosom from eternity, the Uriam and Thummim shall remain; for he is the wonderful and everlasting Counsellor. Some translate the Thummim and Uriam appallatively; the rather because the usual order is here inverted, and here only. Thummim signifies integrity, and Uriam, illumination; Let these be with thy holy one, that is, "Lord, let the High Priest ever be both an upright man and an understanding man." A good prayer to be put up for the ministers of the gospel, that they may have clear hea ds and honest hearts; light and sincerity make a complete minister.

II. Priests and Levites, v. 9. 11.

1. He commends the zeal of this tribe for God, when they sided with Moses (and so with God) against the worshippers of the golden cleft, (Exod. 32. 26, &c.) and being employed in cutting off the ring-leaders in that wickedness, they did it impartially: the best friends they had in the world, though as dear to them as their next relations, they did not spare, if they were idolaters. Note, Our respect to God, ought to be above our regard to any creature whatsoever. And those who not only keep themselves pure from the common iniquities of the times and places in which they live, but, as they are capable, utter testimony against them, and stand up for God against the evil-doers, shall have special marks of honour put upon them. Perhaps Moses may have an eye to this when he expresseth his great regard for them in his gain-saying, Numb. 26. 11. Also to Phinehas, who executed judgment, and stayed the plague. And indeed, the office of the priests and Levites, which engaged their constant attendance, at least in their turns, at God's altar, laid them under a necessity of being frequently absent from their families, which they could not take such care of, or make such provision for, as other Israelites might. This was the constant peril, and they submitted to, that they might observe God's word, and keep the covenant of priesthood. Note, Those that are called to minister in holy things, must sit loose to the relations and interests that are dearest to them in this world, and prefer the fulfilling of their ministry before the gratifying of the best friend they have, Acts 21. 13.—20. 24. Our Lord Jesus knew not his mother and his brethren, when they would have taken him off from his work, Matt. 12. 48. 2. He confirms the commission granted this tribe to minister in holy things, which was the recompense of their zeal and fidelity, v. 10. (1.) They were to deal for God with the people. "They shall teach Jacob thy judgments, and Israel thy laws, both as preachers in their religious assemblies, reading and expounding the law, (Neh. 8. 7, 8.) and as judges, determining doubtful and difficult cases, but have the law before them," 2 Chron. 17. 8. 9. The priests' lips kept this knowledge for the use of the people, who were to ask the law at their mouth, Mal. 2. 7. Even Haggai, a prophet, consulted the priests in a case of conscience, Hag. 2. 11, &c. Note, Preaching is necessary, not only for the first planting of churches, but for the preserving and edifying of churches, when they are well planted, See Ezek. 44. 22, 23. (2.) They were to deal for the people with God, in burning incense to the praise and glory of God, and offering sacrifices to make atonement for sin, and to obtain the divine favour. This was the work of the priests, but the Levites attended and assisted in it. Those that would have benefit by their incense and offerings, must diligently and faithfully observe their instructions.

3. He prays for them, v. 11. (1.) That God would prosper them in their estates, and make that which was allotted them for their maintenance, comfortable to them. Bless, Lord, his substance. The provision made for them was very plentiful, and came to them easily; and yet they could have no joy of it unless God blessed it to them, and since God himself was their portion, a particular blessing might be expected to attend this portion. Bless, Lord, his virtue; so some read it, "Lord, increase thy graces in them, and make them more and more fit for their work." (2.) That he would accept them in their services. Accept the work of his hands, both for himself, and for the people for whom he ministers. Acceptance with God is that which we should all aim at, and be ambitious of, in all our services, whether we act as we or no, (2 Cor. 5. 9.) and it is the most valuable blessing we can desire either for ourselves or others. (3.) That he would take his part against all his enemies, smile through the foins of them that rise against him. He supposes that God's ministers would have many enemies; some would hate their persons for their faithfulness, and would endeavour to do them a mischief; others would envy them their maintenance, and endeavour sacrilegiously to deprive them of it; others would expose them in the execution of their office, and not submit to the sentence of the priests; and some would aim to overthrow the office itself. Now he prays that God would blast all such attempts, and return the mischief upon the heads of the authors. This prayer is a prophecy that God would certainly reckon with those that are enemies to his ministers, and would bring them to their end at the time and place, and in a manner and situation as he had prescribed. And this is a part of the warranty he would give for the measure he would take, and for the marks he would give; that they should never in a manner be deprived of it, but should be assisted in it. 12. And of Benjamin he said, The beloved of the Lord shall dwell in safety by him; and the LORD shall cover him all the day long, and he shall dwell between his shoulders. 13. And of Joseph he said, Blessed of the LORD be his land, for the precious things of heaven, for the dew, and for the deep that coucheth beneath, 14. And for the precious fruits brought forth by the sun, and for the precious things put forth by the moon, 15. And for the chief things of the ancient mountains, and for the precious things of the lasting hills, 16. And for the precious things of the earth and fulness thereof, and for the good will of him that dwelt in the bush: let the blessing come upon the head of Joseph, and upon the top of the head of him that was separated from his brethren. 17. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, and his horns are like the horns of unicorns: with them he shall push the people together to the ends of the earth: and they are the ten thousands of Ephraim and they are the thousands of Manasseh. Here is, I. The blessing of Benjamin, v. 12. Benjamin is put next to Levi, because the temple where the priests' work lay, was just upon the edge of the lot of this tribe; and it is put before Joseph, because of the dignity of Jerusalem (part of which was in this tribe) above Samaria, which was in the tribe of Ephraim, and because Benjamin adhered to the house of David, and to the temple of the Lord, when the rest of the tribes deserted both with Jeroboam. 1. Benjamin is here called the beloved of the Lord, as the father of this tribe was Jacob's beloved son, the son of his right hand. Note, Those are blessed indeed, that are beloved of the Lord. Saul, the first king, and Paul, the great apostle, were both of this tribe. 2. He is here assured of the divine protection; he shall dwell safely. Note, Those are safe, whom God loves, Ps. 91. 1, 3. It is here intimated, that the tribe of Judah was not to be built in the borders of this tribe. Jerusalem, the holy city, was in the lot of this tribe, (Josh. 18. 28.) and though Zion, the city of David, is supposed to belong to Judah, yet mount Moriah, on which the temple was built, was in Benjamin's lot. God is therefore said to dwell between his shoulders, because the temple stood on that mount, as the head of a man upon his shoulders. 3. And some of these tribes, being sent to the bar, was covered all the day long under the protection of the sanctuary, (Ps. 125. 2.) which is often spoken of as a place of refuge, Ps. 27. 4, 5. Neh. 6. 10. Benjamin dwelling by the temple of God, dwelt in safety by him. Note, It is a happy thing to be in the neighbourhood of the temple. This situation of Benjamin, it is likely, was the only thing that kept that tribe close with Judah to the divine institutions, when the other ten tribes more readily apostatized. These hills, indeed, so the nearer they are to the church, are so much the further from God.

II. The blessing of Joseph, including both Manasseh and Ephraim. In Jacob's blessing, (Gen. 49.) that of Joseph is the largest, and so it is here; and from thence Moses here borrows the title he gives to Joseph, (v. 13.) that he was separated from his brethren, or, as it might be read, a Nazarite among them, both in regard of his piety, wherein it appears, by many instances, he excelled them all; of his dignity in Egypt, where he was both their ruler and benefactor; his brethren separated him from them by making him a slave, but God distinguished him from them by making him a prince. Now the blessings here prayed for, and prophesied of, for this tribe, are, great plenty, and great prosperity.

1. Great plenty, v. 13-16. In general, Blessed of the Lord be his land. They were very fruitful countries that fell into the lot of Ephraim and Manasseh, yet Moses prays they might be watered with the blessing of God, which makes rich, and on which all fruitfulness depends. Now, (1.) He enumerates many particulars which he prays may contribute to the wealth and abundance of the land, and answer up to the Creator for the benefit and serviceableness of all the inferior creatures, for they are all that to us, which he makes them to be. He prays, [1.] For seasonable rains, and dews, the precious things of heaven; and so precious they are, though but pure water, that without them the fruits of the earth would all fail and be cut off. [2.] For plentiful springs, which help to make the land fruitful. Joseph was called the well beloved of them, (Gen. 42.) for he is the Father of the rain, (Job 38. 28.) and he made particularly the fountains of water, Rev. 14. 7. [3.] For the benign influences of the heavenly bodies; (v. 14.) for the precious fruits (the word signifies that which is most excellent, and the best in its kind) put forth by the quickening heat of the sun, and the cooling moisture of the moon. "Let them have the yearly fruits of the earth, the fruits of several months, according to the course of nature, in one month olives, in another dates," &c. So some understand it. [4.] For the fruitfulness even of their hills and mountains, which in other countries used to be barren, (v. 15.) let them have the chief things of the ancient mountains; and if the mountains be fruitful, the fruits on them will be first and best ripened. They are called ancient mountains, not because prior in time to other mountains, but because, like the first-born, they were superior in worth and excellency; and lasting hills, not only because as other mountains they were unmoveable, (Hab. 3. 6.) but because the fruitfulness of them should continue. [5.] For the productions of the lower grounds, v. 16. For the precious things of the earth; the spring of the field, which often signifies a useless worthless lump of matter, yet there are some precious things produced out of it, for the support and comfort of human life, Job 28. 5. Out of it cometh bread, because out of it came our bodies, and to it they must return. But what are the precious things of the earth to a soul that came from God, and must return to him? Or, what is its fulness to the fulness that is in Christ, whence we receive grace for grace? There they water, on which all are prayed for to be figures of spiritual blessings in heavenly things by Christ, the gifts, graces, and comforts, of the Spirit.

(2.) He crowns all with the good-will, or favourable acceptance, of him that dwelt in the bush, (v. 16.) that is, of God, that God who appeared to Moses in the bush that burned and was not consumed, (Exod. 3. 2.) to give him his commission and endow him with all power. But Israel, when God's glory appeared there but for a while, yet it is said to dwell there, because it continued as long as there was occasion for it: The good-will of the Shechemah in the bush; so it might be read, for Shechemah signifies that which dwelleth: and though it was but a little while a dweller in the bush, yet it continued to dwell with the people of Israel. My Dweller in the bush; so it should be interpreted: there was an appearance of the Divine Majesty to Moses only, in token of the particular interest he had in God, which he desires to improve for the good of this tribe. Many a time God had appeared to Moses, but now that he is just dying, seems to have the most pleasing remembrance of that, which was that time, when his acquaintance with the visions of the Almighty first began, and his correspondence with him, which was this first shower of love never to be forgotten. It was at the bush that God declared himself the God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, and so confirmed the promise made to his fathers, that promise which reached as far as the resurrection of the body and eternal life, as appears by our Saviour's argument from it, Luke 20. 37. So that when he prays for the good-will of him that dwelt in the bush, he has an eye to the covenant there, and there the source on which all their hopes of God's favour must be bottomed. Now he concludes this large blessing with a prayer for the favour and good-will of God. [1.] Because that is the fountain and spring-head of all these blessings; they are the gifts of God's good-will, they are so to his own people, whatever they are to others. Indeed, when Ephraim, (a descendant from Joseph) slipt down to do evil, and the lister was in Jacob's well, (Gen. 44.) the fruits of his country were so far from being the gifts of God's good-will, that they were intended but to fatten him for the slaughter, as a lamb in a large place, Hos. 4. 16, 17. [2.] Because that is the comfort and sweetness of all these blessings; when we have joy of them, when we taste God's good-will in them. [3.] Because that is better than all these, infinitely better; for if we have but the favour and good-will of God, we are happy, and may be easy in the want of all these things; and may rejoice in the God of our salvation, though the fig-tree do not blossom, and there be no fruit in the vine, Hab. 3. 17, 18.

2. Great power Joseph is here blessed with, v. 17. Here are three instances of this power foretold. (1.) His authority among his brethren. His glory is like the firstling of his bullock, or a young bull, which is a stately creature, and therefore formerly used as an emblem of royal majesty. Joshua, who was succeeded Moses, was of the tribe of Ephraim the son of Joseph, and his glory was indeed illustrious, and he was an honour to his tribe. In Ephraim was the royal city of the ten tribes afterward. And of Manasseh were Gideon, Jephthah, and Jar, who were all ornaments and blessings to their country. Some think he is compared to the firstling of the bullock, because the birthright which Rebuben lost, devolved upon Joseph's first son. (Gen. 48.) to the firstling of his bullock, because Bashan, which was in the lot of Manasseh, was famous for bulls and cows, Ps. 22. 12. Amos 4. 1. (2.) His force against his enemies and victory over them; his horns are like the horns of an unicorn, that is, "The forces he shall bring into the field, shall be very strong and formidable, and with them he shall rush the people," that is, "He shall overcome all that stand in his way." It appears from the Ephraimites' contests, both with Gideon (Jdg. 8. 1.) and with Jephthah, (Jdg. 12. 1.) that they were a warlike tribe and fierce. Yet we find the children of Ephraim, when they had forsaken the covenant of God, though they were armed, turning back in the day of battle, (Ps. 78, 9. 10.) for though here pronounced strong and bold as unicorns, when God was departed from them, the same as weak as other men. (3.) The numbers of his people, in which Ephraim, though the younger house, exceeded, Jacob having, in the foresight of the same thing, crossed hands, Gen. 48. 19. They are the ten thousands of Ephraim, and the thousands of Manasseh. Jonathan's Targum applies it to the ten thousands of Canaanites conquered by Joshua, who was of the tribe of Ephraim, and the thousands of Midianites conquered by Gideon, who was of the tribe of Manasseh. And the gloss of the Jerusalem Targum upon the former part of this verse is observable; that "as the firstlings of the bullock were never to be worked, nor could the unicorn ever be tamed, so Joseph should ever continue free, they would have continued free, if they had not by sin sold themselves."

18. And of Zebulun he said, Rejoice, Zebulun, in thy going out; and Issachar, in thy tents. 19. They shall call the people unto the mountain; there they shall offer sacrifices of righteousness; for they shall suck of the abundance of the seas, and of treasures hid in the sand. 20. And of Gad he said, Blessed be he that enlargeth God: he dwelleth as a lion, and teareth the arm with the crown of the head. 21. And he provided the first part for himself, because there, in a portion of the lawgiver, was he seated; and he came with the heads of the people, he executed the justice of the Lord, and his judgments with Israel.

Here we have,
I. The blessings of Zebulun and Issachar put together, for they were both the sons of Jacob by Leah, and by their lot in Canaan they were neighbours; it is foretold,
1. That they should both have a comfortable settlement and improvement, v. 18. Zebulun must rejoice, for he shall have cause to rejoice; and Moses prays that he may have cause in his going out, either to war, for Zebulun jeofarded their lives in the high places of the field, (Jdg. 5. 18.) or rather to sea, for Zebulun was a haven of ships, Gen. 49. 13. And Issachar must rejoice in his tents, that is, in his business at home, his husbandry, to which the men of that tribe generally confined themselves, because they saw that rest was good, and when the sea was rough, the land was pleasant; (Gen. 49. 14. 15.) Observe here, (1.) That the providence of God, as it variously appoints the bounds of men's habitations, some in the city, and some in the country, some in the sea-ports, and some in the inland towns, so it wisely disposes men's inclinations to different employments for the good of the public, as each member of the body is situated and qualified for the service of God. The genius of some men leads them to a book, of others, to the sword; some are inclined to rural affairs, others to trade, and some have a turn for mechanics; and it is well it is so; If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? 1 Cor. 12. 17. It was for the common good of Israel, that the men of Zebulun were merchants, and that the men of Issachar were husbandmen. (2.) That whatever our place and business are, it is our wisdom and duty to accommodate ourselves to it, and it is a great happiness to be well pleased with it. Let Zebulun rejoice in his going out; let him thank God for the gains, and make the best of the losses and inconveniences, of his merchandise, and not despise the meanness, or envy the quietness, of Issachar's tents; let Issachar rejoice in his tents, let him be as great and pleased with his content, and content with the small profits, of his country pursuits, not grudge that he has not Zebulun's pleasure of travelling, and profit of trading. Every business has both its conveniences and its inconveniences, and therefore whatever Providence has made our business we ought to bring our minds to; and it is really a great happiness, whatever our lot is, to be content with it. This is the gift of God, Eccl. 5. 19. 2. That the Zebulunites must have a relation to the honour of God, and the interests of religion in the nation, v. 19. They shall call the people to the mountain, that is, to the temple which Moses foresaw should be built upon a mountain. I see not why this should be confined (as it is by most interpreters) to Zebulun; if both Zebulun and Issachar receive the comforts of their respective employments, it is not impossible to suppose that they both took care to give God the glory of them? Two things they shall do for God.

(1.) They shall invite others to the service; call the people to the mountain. (1.) Zebulun shall improve his acquaintance and commerce with the neighbouring nations, to whom he goes out, for this noble purpose, to propagate religion among them, and to invite them into the service of the God of Israel. Note, Men of great business, or large conversation, should wisely and zealously endeavour to recommend the practice of serious godliness to those with whom they converse, and among whom their business lies. Such are blessed, for they are blessings. It were well if the enlargement of trade with foreign countries might be made to contribute to the spreading of the gospel. This prophecy containing Zebulun addresses thewn in the person of the coming of Christ and his apostles, which began in the land of Zebulun, (Matth. 4. 14. 15.) and they called the people to the mountain, that is, to the kingdom of the Messiah, which is called the mountain of the Lord's house, Isa. 2. 2. (2.) Issachar that tarryeth at home and dwells in tents, shall call upon his neighbour to go up to the sanctuary, at the times appointed for their solemn assemblies, because they should be more zealous and forward than their neighbours, (and it has been often observed, that though they that dwell with Zebulun dwell in the haven of ships, which are places of concourse, have commonly more of the light of religion, they that with Issachar dwell in tents in the country, have more of the life and heat of it, and may therefore with their zeal provoke those to a holy emulation that have more knowledge; (Ps. 122. 1.) or, because they were more observant of the time of the festivals, for then Zebulun was. One of the Chaldee paraphrases reads the foregoing verse, Rejoice, Issachar, in the tents of thy schools, supposing they would many of them be scholars, and would use their learning for that purpose, according to the revolutions of the year, to give notice of the times of the feasts; for almanacks were not then so common as they are now. And Onkelos more particularly, Rejoice Issachar, when thou goest to contribute the time of the solemnities at Jerusalem; for then the tribes of Israel shall be gathered to the mountain of the house of the sanctuary. So he reads the beginning of this verse; and many think this the meaning of that character of the men of Issachar in David's time, That they had understanding of the times to know what Israel ought to do, 1 Chron. 12. 32. And the character which follows, (v. 32.) of the men of Zebulun, that they were such as went forth to battle, expert in war, perhaps may explain the blessing of that tribe here. Note, Those that have not opportunity as Zebulun had of bringing into the church those that are without, may yet be very serviceable to it, by helping to quicken, encourage, and build up, those that are within. And it is good work to call people to God's ordinances, to put those in remembrance that are forgetful, and to stir up those that are slothful, who will follow now, but care not to lead.

(2.) They shall not only invite others to the service of God, but they shall abound in it themselves; there they offer sacrifices of righteousness. They shall not send others to the temple, and stay at home themselves, under pretence that they cannot leave their business; but when they stir up others to go speedily to pray before the Lord, they shall go also; as it is, Zech. 8. 21. Note, The good we exhort others to, we should ourselves be examples of. And when they come to the temple, they shall not appear before the Lord empty, but shall bring for the honour and service of God according as he has prospered them, 1 Cor. 16. 2. [1.] It is here foretold that both these tribes should grow rich, Zebulun that goes abroad, shall suck of the abundance of the seas which are full breasts to the merchant, and Issachar that trembles at the sound, shall enrich himself with treasures hid in the sand; either the fruits of the earth, or the underground treasures of metals and minerals, or, (because the word for sand here signifies properly the sand of the sea,) the rich things thrown up by the sea, for the lot of Issachar reached to the sea-side. Perhaps their success in calling the people to the mount, is intimated by their sucking of the abundance of the seas, for they were like pilots used for the bringing in of the nations to the church, (Isa. 60. 5.) The abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, and (v. 16.) Thou shalt suck the milk of the Gentiles. It is foretold, [2.] that these tribes, being thus enriched, should consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth, Mic. 4. 13. That the merchants shall return to Zion, and again have sickness and helpeness to the Lord, (Isa. 22. 18.) for they shall out of it offer sacrifices of righteousness, that is, sacrifices according to the law. Note, We must serve and honour God with what we have; and where he sows plentifully, he expects to reap accordingly. Those that suck of the abundance of the sea, and of the treasures hid in the sand, ought to offer sacrifices of righteousness proportionable.

II. The blessing of the tribe of God comes next, v. 20, 21. This was one of the tribes that was already seated on that side Jordan where Moses now was. Now, He first tells what this tribe would be, v. 20. (1.) That it would be enlarged, as at present it had a spacious allotment; and he gives God the glory both of its present and of its future extent. Blessed be he that enlargeth God. We find how this tribe was enlarged by their success in war, which it seems they carried on very religiously against the Hagarites, 1 Chron. 5. 19, 20, 22. Note, God is to have the glory of all our enlargements. (2.) That it would be a valiant and victorious tribe; if let alone, dwell secure and fearless as a lion; but, if provoked, would, like a lion, tear the arm with the crown of the head; that is, would pull in pieces all that stood in his way, both the arm, that is, the strength, and the crown of the head, that is, the policy and authority of his enemies. In David's time there were Gadites whose faces were as the faces of lions, 1 Chron. 12. 8. Some reckon Jehu to be of this tribe, because the first mention we have of him is at Ramoth-Gilead, which belonged to God, and they think this may refer to his valiant acts. He commends this tribe for what they had done, and were now doing, v. 21. (1.) They had done wisely for themselves, when they chose their lot with the first, in a country already conquered. He provided the first part for himself; though he had a concern for his brethren, yet his charity began at home, and he was willing to see himself first served, first settled. The Gadites were the first and most active movers for an allotment on that side Jordan, and therefore are still mentioned before the Reubenites in the history of that affair, Numb. 32. 2. And thus, while the other tribes had their portion assigned them by Joshua the conqueror, God and his companions had their's from Moses the lawgiver, and they were chosen by lot. But they were not left to the future of God's providence; evidence which watched over them that were left behind, while the men of war went forward with their brethren. Note, Men will praise thee when thou dost well for thyself, (when thou providest first for thyself, as Gad did,) Ps. 49. 18. And God will praise thee when thou dost well for thy soul, which is indeed thyself, and providest the first part for that. He was the first to cry for an allotment; and they were now doing honestly and bravely for their brethren; for they came with the heads of the people, before whom they went armed over Jordan, to execute the justice of the Lord upon the Canaanites, under the conduct of Joshua, to whom we afterward find they solemnly vowed obedience, Josh. 1. 12, 16. This was what they undertook to do when they had their lot assigned them, Numb. 32. 27. And when the wars of Canaan were ended, Joshua dismissed them with a blessing; Josh. 22. 7. Note, It is a blessed and honourable thing to be helpful to our brethren in their affairs; and particularly to assist in executing the justice of the Lord, by suppressing that which is provoking to him: this was it that was counted to Phinehas for righteousness.

22. And of Dan he said, Dan is a lion's whelp: he shall leap from Bashan. 23. And of Naphtali he said, O Naphtali, satisfied with favour, and full with the blessing of the Lord: possess thou the west and the south. 24. And of Asher he said, Let Asher be blessed with children; let him be acceptable to his brethren, and let him dip his foot in oil. 25. Thy shoes shall be iron and brass; and as thy days, so shall thy strength be.
DEUTERONOMY, XXXIII.

Naphtali, when he was very young, as a lion's whelp, so that in his attacks upon the Philistines he surprised them, and overpowered them by main strength, as a lion doth his prey; and one of his first exploits was the rending of a lion.

Or, 2. To a more general achievement of that tribe, when a party of them, upon information brought them of the security of Laish, which lay in the furthest part of the land of Canaan from them, surprised it, and soon made themselves master of it. See Judg. 18. 27. And the mountains of Bashan lying not far from that city, probably from thence they made their descent upon it; and therefore are here said to learn from Bashan.

II. The blessing of Naphtali, v. 23. He looks upon this tribe with wonder, and applauds it. O Naphtali, thou art happy, thou art more desirable than thy brethren! These things make up the happiness of this tribe. 1. Be thou satisfied with favour. Some understand it of the favour of men, their good-will and good word; Jacob had described this tribe to be, generally, courteous obliging people, giving good words, as the loving hind, Gen. 49. 21. Now what should they get by being so? Moses here tells them they should have an interest in the distribution of their inheritances, and be satisfied with favour. They that are loving, shall be beloved. But others understand it of the favour of God; and with good reason: for that only is the favour that is satisfying to the soul, and puts true gladness into the heart. Those are happy indeed, that have the favour of God; and those shall have it, that place their satisfaction in it, and reckon that, in having that, they have enough, and desire no more. 2. Be thou as a lion against the prey, and as a lion who trumpeth: they that are strong, shall be put to flight. They are now a numerous tribe, Numb. 26. 47. Let it be more so; Let Asher be blessed with children. Note, Children, especially children of the covenant, are blessings, not burdens. 2. Their interest in their neighbours; Let him be acceptable to his brethren. Note, It is a very desirable thing to have the love and good-will of those we live among: it is what we should pray to God for, who has all hearts in his hand; and what we should endeavour to gain by meekness and humility, and a readiness, as we have ability and opportunity, to do good to all men. 3. The riches of their land.

(1.) Above-ground; Let him dip his foot in oil, that is, "Let him have such plenty of it in his lot, that he may not only anoint his head with it, but, if he pleases, wash his feet in it," which was not commonly done; yet we find our blessed Saviour so acceptable to his brethren, that his feet were anointed with the most precious ointment, Luke 7. 46. (2.) Under-ground; Thy shoes shall be iron and brass, that is, "Thou shalt have great plenty of these metals (mines of them) in thine own ground, which by an uncommon blessing shall have both its surface and its bowels rich!" or, if they had them not as the productions of their own country, they should have them imported from abroad; for the lot of this tribe lay on the sea coast. The Chaldee paraphrasts understand it figuratively; "Thou shalt be strong and bright, as iron and brass." 4. The continuance of their strength and vigour; And thy days, so shalt thou by strength be. Many paraphrase it thus, "The strength of thine old age shall be like that of thy youth; thou shalt not feel a decay, nor be the worse for the wearing, but shalt renew thy youth; as if not thy shoes only, but thy bones, were iron and brass." The day is often in scripture put for the events of the day; and taking it so here, it is a probable that God should in some particular support them under their trials and troubles, whatsoever they may be. And so it is a promise sure to all the spiritual seed of Abraham, that God will wisely proportion their graces and comforts to the services and sufferings he calls them out to. Have they work appointed them? They shall have strength to do it. Have they burthen appointed them? They shall have strength to bear them; and never be tempted above that they are able. Faithful is he that has thus promised, and hath caused us to hope in this promise.

26. There is none like unto the God of Jeshurun, who rideth upon the heaven in thy help, and in his excellency on the sky. 27. The eternal God is thy refuge, and underneath are the everlasting arms: and he shall thrust out the enemy from before thee; and shall say, Destroy them. 28. Israel then shall dwell in safety alone: the fountain of Jacob shall be upon a land of corn and wine; also his heavens shall drop down dew. 29. Happy art thou, O Israel: who is like unto thee, O people saved by the Lord, the shield of thy help, and who is the sword of thy excellency! and thine enemies shall be found liars unto thee: and thou shalt tread upon their high places.

These are the last words of all that ever Moses, that great writer, that great dictator, either wrote himself, or was written from him, and they are therefore very remarkable; and, no doubt, we shall find them very improving. Moses, the man of God, (who had as much reason as any ever mere man had to know both,) with his last breath magnifies both the God of Israel, and the Israel of God. They are both incomparable in his eye; and we are sure that in this his judgment of both, his eye did not wax dim.

I. No God like God of Israel. None of the gods of the nations were capable of doing that for their worshippers which Jehovah did for his, (v. 26.) There is none like unto the God of Jeshurun. Note, When we are expecting that God should bless us in doing well for us, we must bless him by speaking well of him; and one of the most solemn ways of praising God, is, by acknowledging that there is none like him. Now, 1. This was the hon-our of Israel; every nation boasted of its god, but none had such a God to boast of as Israel had. 2. It was their happiness, that they were taken into covenant with such a God. Two things he takes notice of as proofs of the incontestable pre-eminence of the God of Jeshurun above all other gods. (1.) His sovereign power and authority. "The heavens," says he, "are his; and the highest and most magnificent on the skies. Riding on the heavens denotes his greatness and glory, in which he manifests himself to the upper world, and the use he makes of the influences of heaven, and the productions of the clouds, in bringing to pass his own counsels in this lower world: he manages and directs them as a man does the horse he rides on. When he has a purpose to perform, he uses the resources of heaven, and descends on them to do it; for he does it swiftly and strongly, no enemy can either anticipate or obstruct the progress of him that rides on the heavens." (2.) His boundless eternity; he is the eternal God, and his arms are everlasting, v. 27. The gods of the hea-then were but lately invented, and would shortly perish; but the God of Jeshurun is eternal, he was before all worlds, and will be when time and days shall have an end.

II. No people like the Israel of God. Having pronounced each tribe happy, in the close he pro-nounces all together very happy; so happy in all respects, that there was no nation under the sun comparable to them; (v. 29.) Happy art thou, O Israel, a people whose God is the Lord; on that account truly happy, and none like unto thee. If Israel honour God as a none-such God, he will favour them as to make them a none-such people, the envy of all their neighbours, and the joy of all their well-wishers. Who is like unto thee, O people? Behold thou art fair, my love! says Christ of his spouse. To which she presently returns, Behold thou art fair, my beloved. What one nation (no, not all the nations together) is like thy people Israel? 2 Sam. 7. 23. What is here said of the church of Israel and the honours and privileges of it, is certainly to be applied to the church of the first-born, that are written in heaven. The Chris-tian church is the God of Israel, as the apostle calls it, (Gal. 5. 16.) on which there shall be peace, and which is dignified above all societies in the world, as Israel was.

1. Never was people so well seated, and shelter-ed, v. 27, The eternal God is thy refuge! Or, as the word signifies, "thy habitation, or mansion-house, in whom thou art safe and easy, and rest, as a man in his own house." Every Israelite, in God, is as it were at home in God; the soul returns to him, and re-poses in him as its resting-place, (Ps. 116. 7.) its hid-ing-place, Ps. 32. 7. And they that make him their habitation, shall have all the comforts and benefits of a habitation in him, Ps. 91. 1. Moses had an eye to God as the habitation of Israel, when they were wandering in the wilderness, (Ps. 90. 1.) Lord thou hast been our dwelling-place in all generations. And now that they were going to settle in Canaan, they must not change their habitation; still they will need, and still they shall have, the eternal God for their dwelling-place; without him Canaan itself would be a wilderness, and a land of darkness.

2. Never was people so well supported and born up; underneath are the everlasting arms; that is, the almighty power of God is engaged for the protection and consolation of all that trust in him, in their greatest straits and distresses, and under their heavi-est burdens. The everlasting arms shall support, (1.) The interests of the church in general, that they shall not sink, or be run down; underneath the church is that Rock of ages on which it is built, and against which the gates of hell shall never prevail; Matt. 16. 18. (2.) The spirits of particular be-lievers, so that though they may be oppressed, they shall not be overwhelmed by any trouble. How low soever the people of God are at any time brought, everlasting arms are underneath them to keep the spirit from sinking, from fainting, and the faith from failing, even when they are surrounded with confusion and misfortune. The everlasting covenant, and the everlasting consolations that flow from it, are indeed everlasting arms, with which believers have been wonderfully sustained, and kept cheerful in the worst of times; divine grace is sufficient for them. 2 Cor. 12. 9.

3. Never was people so well commanded and led on to battle; "He shall thrust out the enemy from before thee by his almighty power which will make no discovery to his adversaries, and which will bear thee out, he shall say, Destroy them." They are now entering upon a land that was in the full possession of a strong and formidable people, and who being at first planters, looked upon themselves as its rightful owners; how shall Israel judge, and how shall they accomplish, the expulsion of them? (1.) God will give them a commission to destroy the Canaanites, and that will justify them, and bear them out in it, against the threatening fight that is sovereign Lord will do; all lives and all lands, not only allowed and permitted, but expressly commanded and appointed, the children of Israel both to take possession of the land of Canaan, and to put to the sword the people of Canaan, which being thus authorized, they might not only lawfully but honoura-ble do, without incurring the least stain or impu-tation of theft by the one, or murdery by the other. (2.) God will give them a command to destroy them; nay, he will in effect do it to their hands: he will thrust out the enemy from before them; for the very fear of Israel shall put them to flight. God drove out the heathen to plant his people, Ps. 44. 2. Thus believers are more than conquerors over their spiritual enemies, through Christ that loved them. The Captain of our salvation thrust out the enemy from before us, when he overcame the world, and spoiled principalities and powers on the earth, and the word of command to us is, "Destroy them; pursue the victory, and you shall divide the spoil." 4. Never was people so well secured and protec-ted, (v. 28.) Israel shall then dwell in safety alone. Those that dwell in God, and make his name their strong tower, dwell in safety; the place of their de-fence is the munities of rocks, Isa. 33. 16. They shall dwell in safety alone. (1.) Though alone, though they contract no alliances with their neighbours, nor have any reason to expect help or succour from any of them, yet they shall dwell in safety; they shall really be safe, and they shall think themselves so. (2.) Because alone, they shall dwell in safety, as long as they continue pure, and unmixed with the heathen, a singular and pe-culiar people. Their distinction from other nations, though it made them like a speckled bird, (Jer. 12. 9.) and exposed them to the ill-will of those about them, yet it was really their preservation from the mischief their neighbours wished them, as it kept them under the divine protection. All that keep close to God, shall be kept safe by him. It is promised, that in the kingdom of Christ, Israel shall dwell safely, Jer. 31. 24.

5. Never was people so well provided for; the fountain of Jacob, that is, the present generation of that people, which is as the fountain to all the streams that shall hereafter descend and be derived from it, shall now presently be fixed upon a good land. The eye of Jacob (so it might be read, for the same word signifies a fountain and an eye) is upon the land of corn and wine, that is, where they now lay encamped, they had consented there, it was just before their faces, on the other side of the river, and they would have it in their hands, and under their feet quickly. This land which they had their eye upon, was blessed both with the fatness of the earth, and the dew of heaven; it was a land of corn and wine, substantial and useful productions: also his heavens (as if the heavens were particularly done) was the same thing, and he would have it that the down dew, without which, though the soil were ever so good, the corn and wine would soon fail. Every Israelite indeed has his eye, the eye of faith, upon the better country; the heavenly Canaan, which is richly replenished with better things than corn and wine.

6. Never was people so well helped, if they were in any strait, God himself rode with the heavens for their help. 2 Cor. 7. 6. He gave them were a people saved by the Lord, v. 29. If they were in danger of any harm, or in want of any good, they had an eternal God to go to, an almighty Power to trust to: nothing could hurt those whom God helped, nor was it possible that that people should perish which was saved by the Lord. They that are added to the gospel-Israel, are such as shall be saved, Acts 2. 47.

7. Never was people so well armed; God himself was the Shield of their help, by whom they were armed defensively, and sufficiently guarded against all assailants: and he was the Sword of their excellency, by whom they were armed offensively, and made both formidable and successful in all their wars. God is called the Sword of their excellency, because, in fighting for them, he made them to excel other people; or, because in all he did for them, he justified them among them, which is called the excellency of Jacob, Ps. 47. 4. Ezek. 28. 21. Amos 6. 8. Those in whose hearts is the excellency of holiness, have God himself for their Shield and Sword, are defended by the whole armour of God; his word is their sword, and faith in it, is their shield, Eph. 6. 16, 17.

8. Never was people so well assured of victory over their enemies; They shall be found liars unto the Lord, Jer. 2. 6. They shall be forced to admit to this, for they shall tread upon their necks, (so the LXX.) which we find done, Josh. 10. 24. "Thou shalt tread down their strong holds, be they never so high; and trample upon their palaces and temples, though esteemed ever so sacred. If thine enemies be found liars, (so we read it,) and they shall tread upon their high places, if they will not hold by the bonds of leagues and treaties, they shall be broken by the force of war." Thus shall the God of peace tread Satan under the feet of all believers, and shall do it presently, Rom. 16. 20.

Now lay all this together, and then you will say, Happily art thou, O Israel! Who is like unto thee, O people! Thrice happy the people whose God is the Lord.

CHAP. XXXIV.

Having read how Moses finished his testimony, we are told here how he immediately after finished his life. This chapter could not be written by Moses himself, but was added by Joshua or Eleazar, or, as Bishop Patrick con-

1. AND Moses went up from the plains of Moab unto the mountain of Nebo, to the top of Pisgah, that is over against Jericho. And the Lord showed him all the land of Gilead unto Dan, 2. And all Naphtali, and the land of Ephram, and Manasseh, and all the land of Judah, unto the utmost sea, 3. And the south, and the plain of the valley of Jericho, the city of palm-trees, unto Zoar.

4. And the Lord said unto him, This is the land which I sware unto Abraham, unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, saying, I will give it unto thy seed: I have caused thee to see it with thine eyes, but thou shalt not go thither.

Here is,

1. Moses climbing upward toward heaven, as high as the top of Pisgah, there to die; for that was the place appointed, ch. 32. 49, 50. Israel lay encamped upon the flat grounds in the plains of Moab, and from thence he went up, according to order, to the mountain of Nebo; to the highest point or ridge of that mountain, which was called Pisgah, v. 1. Pis-

gh is an Arabic word, and signifies hill; and it seems, Moses went up alone to the top of Pisgah, alone without help; a sign that his natural force was not abated, when on the last day of his life he could walk up to the top of a high hill without such supporters as once he had when his hands were heavy, (Exod. 17. 12.) alone without company; when he had made an end of blessing Israel, we may suppose he solemnly took leave of Joshua and Eleazar, and the rest of his friends, who, probably, brought him to the foot of the hill, but then he gave them such a charge as Abraham gave to his servants at the foot of another hill; Tarry ye here while I go yonder and die: they must not see him die, because they must not know of his sepulchre. But, whether this was so or not, he went up to the top of Pisgah, 1. To show that he was willing to die: when he knew the place of his death, he was so far from avoiding it, that he cheerfully mounted a steep hill to come at it. Note, Those that through grace are well acquainted with another world, and have been much conversant with it, need not be afraid to leave this. 2. To show that he looked upon death as his ascension. The soul of man, of a good man, when he leaves the body, goes upward, (Eccl. 3. 21.) in conformity to which motion of the soul, the body of Moses shall go along with it; and that he should enter into the earth shall carry it. When God's servants are sent for out of the world, the summons runs thus, Go up and die.

II. Moses looking downward again toward this earth, to see the earthly Canaan into which he must never enter, but therein by faith looking forward to the heavenly Canaan into which he should now immediately enter. God had threatenéd to come with all the possessors of Canaan, and the threatening is fulfilled. But he had also promised that he should have a prospect of it, and the promise is here performed; The Lord showed him all that good land, v. 1.

1. If he went up alone to the top of Pisgah, yet, jected, by Samuel, who was a prophet, and wrote by divine authority what he found in the records of Joshua, and his successors the judges. We have had an account of his dying words, here we have an account of his dying work, and that is work we must all do shortly, and it had might be said of all their works. Here we have the title of the land of Canaan just before he died, v. 1. 4. II. His death and burial, v. 5. 6. III. His age, v. 7. IV. Israel's mourning for him, v. 8. V. His successor, v. 9. VI. His character, v. 10. 12.
ne was not alone, for the Father was with him, John 16. 32. If a man has any friends, he will have them about him when he dies a dying. But if, either through God’s providence, or their unkindness, it should so happen, that we should then be alone, we need fear no evil, if the great and good Shepherd be with us, Ps. 23. 4.

2. Though his sight was very good, and he had all the advantage of high ground that he could desire for the prospect, yet he could not have seen what he now saw, all Canaan from end to end, (reckoned about 160 miles,) and from side to side, (reckoned nearly 50 miles,) if his sight had not been miraculously assisted and enlarged, and therefore it is said, The Lord showed it him. Note, All the pleasant prospect we have of the better country we are beholden to the grace of God for; it is he that gives the Spirit of Wisdom as well as the Spirit of Revelation, the eye as well as the object. This sight which God here gave Moses of Canaan, probably, the Devil designed to mimic, and pretend to out-do, when in an airy phantom he showed to our Saviour, whom he had placed like Moses upon an exceeding high mountain, all the kingdoms of the world and glory of them, not gradually, as here, first one country and then another, but all in a moment of time.

3. He saw it at a distance; such a sight the Old Testament saints had of the kingdom of the Messiah, they say it afar off; thus Abraham, long before this, saw Christ’s day; and being fully persuaded, embraced it in the promise, leaving others to embrace it in the performance, Heb. 11. 13. Such a sight believers now have, through grace, of the bliss and glory of their future state. The word and ordinances are to them what mount Pisgah was to Moses, from them they have comforatable prospects of the glory to be revealed, and rejoice in hope of it.

4. He saw it, but must never enjoy it, till God sometimes takes his people away from the evil to come, so at other times he takes them away from the good to come, that is, the good which shall be enjoyed by the church in the present world. Glorious things are spoken of the kingdom of Christ in the latter days, its advancement, enlargement, and flourishing state; we foresee it, but we are not likely to see it. Those that shall come after us, we hope to enter that promised land, which is a comfort to us when we find our own carcasses falling in this wilderness. See 2 Kings 7. 2.

5. He saw all this just before his death. Sometimes God reserves the brightest discoveries of his grace to his people, to be the support of their dying moments. Canaan was Immanuel’s land, (Isa. 8. 8.) so that in viewing it he had a view of the blessings we enjoy by Christ. It was a type of heaven, (Heb. 11. 16.) which faith is the substance and evidence of. Note, Those may leave this world with a great deal of cheerfulness, that die in the faith of Christ, and in the hope of heaven, and with Canaan in their eye. Having thus seen the salvation of God, we may well say, Lord, now lettest thou thy servant depart in peace.

So Moses the servant of the Lord died there in the land of Moab, according to the word of the Lord. 6. And he buried him in a valley in the land of Moab, over against Beth-peor: but no man knoweth of his sepulchre unto this day. 7. And Moses was a hundred and twenty years old when he died: his eye was not dim, nor his natural force abated. 8. And the children of Israel wept for Moses in the plains of Moab thirty days: so the days of weeping and mourning for Moses were ended.

Here is,

I. The death of Moses, (v. 5.) Moses the servant of the Lord died. God told him he must not go over Jordan, and though at first he prayed earnestly for the reversing of the sentence, yet God’s answer to his prayer sufficed him, and now he spake no more of that matter, ch. 3. 26. Thus our blessed Saviour prayed that the cup might pass from him, yet since it might not, he acquiesced with, Father, thy will be done. Moses had reason to desire to live a while longer in the world. He was old, it is true; but he had not yet attained to the years of the life of his fathers; his father Amram lived to be 137; his grandfather Kohath 133; his great grandfather Levi 137. Exod. 6. 16. 20. And why must Moses, whose life was more serviceable than any of their’s, die at one hundred and twenty; especially since he felt not the decays of age, but was as fit for service as ever? Israel could ill spare him at this time; his conduct and his converse with God would be as great a happiness to them in the conquest of Canaan as the courage of Joshua. It bore hard upon Moses himself, when he had gone through all the fatigues of the wilderness, to be prevented from enjoying the pleasures of Canaan; when he had borne the burden and heat of the day, to resign the honour of finishing the work to another, and that not his son, but his servant, who must enter into his labours; we must suppose that this was not pleasant to flesh and blood. But the man Moses was very meek; God will have it so, and he cheerfully submits. 1. He is here called the servant of the Lord, not only as a good man, all the saints are God’s servants; but as a useful man, eminently useful, who had served God’s counsels in bringing Israel out of Egypt, and leading them through the wilderness. It was more his honour than his servant. 2. He was called a servant in Jeshurun. 2. Yet he dies. Neither his piety nor his usefulness would exempt him from the stroke of death. God’s servants must die that they may rest from their labours; receive their recompense and make room for others. When God’s servants are removed, and must serve him no longer on earth, they go to serve him better, to serve him day and night in his temple. 3. He dies in the land of Moab, she of Canaan, when his life and his work were in an unsettled condition and not entered into their rest. In the heavenly Canaan there will be no more death. 4. He dies according to the word of the Lord. At the mouth of the Lord, so the word is. The Jews say, “with a kiss from the mouth of God.” No doubt he died very easily, (it was an ἀνίκανον—delightful death,) there were no bands in his death; and he had in his death a most pleasant sense of the love of God to him: let that he died in the mouth of the Lord, means no more but that he died in compliance with the will of God. Note, The servants of the Lord, when they have done all their other work, must die at last, in obedience to their Master, and be freely willing to go home whenever he sends for them, Acts 21. 13.

I. His burial, v. 6. It is a groundless conceit of some of the Jews, that Moses was translated to heaven as Elijah was, for it is expressly said he died and was buried; yet, probably, he was raised to meet Elias, to grace the solemnity of Christ’s transfiguration. 1. God himself lifted him, namely, by the ministry of angels, which made this funeral, though very private, yet very magnificent. Note, God takes care of the dead body of his servants; as their death is precious, so is their dust, not a grain of it shall be lost, but the covenant with it shall be remembered. When Moses was dead, God buried his; when Christ was dead, God raised him, for the law, as Moses was to have an end, but not the gospel of Christ; believers are dead to the law that they might be married to another, even to him who is raised from the dead, Rom. 7. 4. It should seem Michael, that is, Christ, (as some think,) had the burying of Moses, for by him the Mosaic ordinances were abolished and taken out of the way, nailed to his cross, and buried in his grave, Col. 2. 14. 2. He was buried in a valley over against Beth-peor. It easily appears that if Michael had buried him, they had conveyed him over Jordan and buried him with the patriarchs in the cave of Machpelah! But we must learn not to be over-solicitous about the place of our burial; if the soul be at rest with God, the matter is not great where the body rests. One of the Chaldee paraphrases says, “He was buried over against Beth-peor, that whenever Baal-peor boasted of the Israelites being joined to the gods of Moab, over against his temple might be a check to him.” 3. The particular place was not known, lest the children of Israel, who were so very prone to idolatry, should have enshrined and worshipped the dead body of Moses, that great founder and benefactor of their nation. It is true, we read not, among all the instances of their idolatry, that they worshipped relics, the reason of which perhaps was, because they so very much revered and loved him, and so could not for shame worship any other. Some of the Jewish writers say, that the body of Moses was concealed, that necromancers, who inquired of the dead, might not disquiet him, as the witch of Endor did Samuel, to bring him up; God would not have the name and memory of his servant Moses thus abused. Many think this was the context: between Michael and the Devil against Moses, mentioned Jude 9. The Devil would make the place known that it might be a snare to the people, and Michael would not let him. Those therefore who are for giving divine honour to the relics of departed saints, side with the Devil against Michael our prince. III. His age, v. 7. His life was prolonged, 1. To old age. He was one hundred and twenty years old, which though far short of the prospect of the body, transcended the years of most of his contemporaries, for the ordinary age of man had been lately reduced to seventy, Ps. 90. 10. The years of the life of Moses were three fortes; the first forty he lived a courtier, at ease and in honour in Pharaoh’s court; the second forty he lived a poor desolate shepherd in Midian; the third forty he lived a king in Jeshurun, in honour and power, but encumbered with a great deal of care and toil; so changeable is the world we live in, and allayed with such mixture; the world before us is unmix’d, and unchangeable. 2. To a good old age. His eye was not dim, (as Isaac’s, Gen. 27. 1. and Jacob’s, Gen. 48. 10.) nor was his natural force abated; there was no decay either of the strength of his body or of the vigour and activity of his mind, but he could still speak and write and walk as well as ever; his understanding was clear, and his memory as strong, as ever. “His visage was not wrinkled,” say some of the Jewish writers; “he had lost never a tooth,” say others; and many of them expound it of the shining of his face, (Exod. 34. 30.) that continued to the last. This was the general reward of his services; and it was in particular the effect of his extraordinary meekness, for that is a grace which is, as much as any other, health to the soul and marrow to the bones. Of the moral law which was given by Moses, though the condemning power be vacated to true believers, yet the commands are still binding, and will be to the end of the world; the eye of them is not waxen dim, for they shall discern the thoughts and intents of the heart, nor is their natural force or obligation abated, but still we are under the law to Christ. IV. The solemn mourning that there was for him, v. 8. It is a debt owing to the surviving honour of deceased worthies, to follow them with our tears, as those who loved and valued them, are sensible of our loss of them, and are truly humbled for those sins which have provoke’d God to deprive us of them; for penitential tears very fitly mix with them. Observe, 1. Who the mourners were, the children of Israel: they all conformed to the ceremony, whatever it was; though some of them perhaps, who were ill-affected to his government, were but mock-mourners. Yet we may suppose there were those among them, who had formerly quarreled with him and his government, and perhaps had been of those who spake of stoning him, who now were sensible of their loss, and heartily lamented him when he was removed from them, though they knew not how to value him when he was with them. Thus they who had murmured, were made to learn doctrine, Isa. 29. 24. Note, The loss of good men, especially good governors, is to be much lamented and laid to heart: those are stupid, who do not consider it. 2. How long they mourned, thirty days; so long the formality lasted, and we may wonder at no more, for this seemed the right time, and the mourning continued much longer. Yet the ending of the days of weeping and mourning for Moses is an intimation, that how great soever our losses have been, we must not abandon ourselves to perpetual grief; we must suffer the wound at least to heal up in time. If we hope to go to heaven rejoicing, why should we resolve to go to the grave mournful? The ceremonial law of Moses is dead and buried in the grave of Christ; but the Jews have not yet ended the days of their mourning for it. 9. And Joshua the son of Nun was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him: and the children of Israel hearkened unto him, and did as the Lord commanded Moses. 10. And there arose not a prophet since in Israel like unto Moses, whom the Lord knew face to face, 11. In all the signs and the wonders which the Lord sent him to do in the land of Egypt to Pharaoh, and to all his servants, and to all his land, 12. And in all that mighty hand, and in all the great terror which Moses showed in the sight of all Israel.

We have here a very honourable encomium passed both on Moses and Joshua; each has his praise, and should have. It is ungrateful so to magnify our living friends, as to forget the merits of those that are gone, to whose memories there is a debt of honour due: all the respects must not be paid to the rising sun; and, if the other hand be unjust so to cry up the merits of those that are gone, as to despise the benefit we have in those that survive and succeed them. Let God be glorified in both, as here. I. Joshua is praised as a man admirably qualified for the work to which he was called, v. 9. Moses brought Israel to the borders of Canaan, and then died and left them, to signify that the law made nothing perfect, Heb. 7. 19. It brings men into a wilderness of conviction, but not into the Canaan of rest and settled peace. It is an honour reserved for Joshua, (our Lord Jesus, of whom Joshua was a type,) to do that for us, which the law could not do in that it was weak through the flesh, Rom. 8. 3. Through him we enter into rest; the spiritual rest of conscience and eternal rest in heaven. Three things concurred to clear Joshua's call to this great undertaking. 1. God fitted him for it. He was full of the spirit of wisdom; and so he had need, who had such a peevish people to rule, and such a politic people to conquer. Conduct is as requisite in a general, as courage. Herein Joshua was a type of Christ, in whom are hid the treasures of wisdom. 2. Moses, by the divine appointment, had ordained him to it: He had laid his hands upon him; so substituting him to be his successor, and praying to God to qualify him for the service to which he called him; and this comes in as a reason why God gave him a more than ordinary spirit of wisdom, because his designation to the government was God's own act; those whom God employs, he will in some measure make fit for the employment; and because this was the thing that Moses had asked of God for him, when he laid his hands on him. When the bodily presence of Christ withdrew from his church, he prayed the Father to send another Comforter, and obtained what he prayed for. 3. The people cheerfully owned him and submitted to him. Note, An interest in the affections of people is a great advantage, and a great encouragement to those that are called to public trusts of what kind soever. It was also a great mercy to the people, that when Moses was dead, they were not as sheep having no shepherd, but had one ready among them, in whom they did unanimously, and might with the highest satisfaction, acquiesce.

II. Moses is praised, (v. 10-12.) and with good reason.

1. He was indeed a very great man, especially upon two accounts, (1.) His intimacy with the God of nature; God knew him face to face, and so he knew God. See Numb. 12. 8. He saw more of the glory of God than any (at least) of the Old Testament saints ever did. He had more free and frequent access to God, and was spoken to, not in dreams and visions and slumberings on the bed, but when he was awake and standing before the cherubims. Other prophets, when God appeared and spoke to them, were struck with terror; (Dan. 7. 8.) but Moses, whenever he received a divine revelation, kept his temper. (2.) His interest and power in the kingdom of nature; the miracles of judgment he wrought in Egypt before Pharaoh, and the miracles of mercy he wrought in the wilderness before Israel, served to demonstrate that he was a particular favourite of Heaven, and had an extraordinary commission to act as he did on this earth. Never was there any man whom Israel had more reason to love, or whom the enemies of Israel had more reason to fear. Observe, The historian calls the miracles Moses wrought, signs and wonders, done with a mighty hand, and great terror; which may refer to the terrors of mount Sinai, by which God fully ratified Moses's commission, and demonstrated it beyond exception to be divine, and this in the sight of all Israel.

2. He was greater than any other of the prophets of the Old Testament: though they were men of great interest in heaven and great influence upon earth, yet they were none of them to be compared with this great man; none of them either evidenced or executed a commission from heaven so as Moses did. This seems to have been written long after, yet then there had not risen any prophet like unto Moses, nor did there arise any such betwixt that and the sealing up of the vision and prophecy. By Moses God gave the law, and moulded and formed the Jewish church; by the other prophets he only sent particular reproofs, directions, and predictions. The last of the prophets concludes with a charge to remember the law of Moses; Mal. 4. 4. Christ himself often appealed to the writings of Moses, and vouch'd him for a witness, as one that saw his day at a distance and spake of him. But as far as the other prophets came short of him, our Lord Jesus went beyond him; his doctrine more excellent, his miracles more illustrious, and his communion with his Father more intimate, for he had lain in his bosom from eternity, and by him God does now in these last days speak to us. The history of Moses leaves him buried in the plains of Moab, and concludes with the period of his government; but the history of our Saviour leaves him sitting at the right hand of the Majesty on high, and we are assured that of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end. The apostle, in his epistle to the Hebrews, largely proves the pre-eminence of Christ above Moses, as a good reason why we that are christians, should be obedient, faithful, and constant, to that holy religion which we make profession of. God, by his grace, make us all so!
